Ver. 16. A firmament on the earth, &c. This may be understood of the Church of Christ, ever firm and visible: and of the flourishing condition of its congregation. Ch.—The strength or staff of bread shall not fail. Ps. 104:16. Is. 3:1. C.—Prot. “there shall be a handful of corn in the,” &c. H.—Thus moderns follow the Rabbins, who greatly exaggerate the abundance which will take place under the Messias, as expecting that wheat will then grow as high as cedars. The country was indeed very luxuriant and populous in the reign of Solomon. But the fathers explain this of the Church, founded on Christ, the rock, and enriched with all virtues, (C.) and the most efficacious sacraments, particularly with the holy Eucharist, to which S. Jerom may allude: “there shall be memorable wheat,” &c. H.—By these hyperbolical allegories, the abundance enjoyed in the Church was denoted. M.

Ver. 17. Continueth. Prot. marg. “shall be as a son, to continue his father's name for ever.” The Messias is the eternal son of God. Heb. yinnin, (Keri.) might be rendered H. filiabitur, (Mont.) if this word were Latin. The ancient Jews considered this as one of the titles of the Messias. Chal. “before the sun was, his name was prepared.” Bert.—This is the third time that the glory of Christ is pronounced eternal, v. 5 and 7. H.—He is for ever blessed: but we cannot think of Solomon, without remembering his almost incredible fall. C.—Blessed. This was spoken only of the Messias, (Bert.) who is the cause of salvation to all the elect. None are saved who do not continue in Him, (M.) by faith and good works.

Ver. 18. The God. Hebrew repeats this word, (H.) as the Sept. of S. Jerom did. Ep. ad Sun. C.—Alone. Miracles can be wrought only by God's power. W.

Ver. 19. So be it. Heb. "And amen." See Ps. 40. H.—This glory of God was David's most ardent wish. W.—It is suspected that the collector of the psalms added these two verses, (Muis.) as all the books end alike. C.

Ver. 20. Are ended. By this it appears that this psalm, though placed here, was in order of time the last of those which David composed, (Ch.) as he died soon after. M.—The subject which he has here treated, (H.) concentrated all his thoughts and desires. Euseb.—"The prayers of David, son of Jesse, have been summed up." Theodot. and V. Edit. H.—It is probable that the collections of the psalms were made at different times; (Bert.) and though many were found after this second book was completed, it was not judged expedient to make any alteration. The Syr. and Arab. pass over this sentence entirely, (C.) which might be added by Esdras. W.—The following psalms have the name of Asaph, &c. in the titles. Flamin.—Yet it is certain that David composed some at least, which are place after this. See Ps. 109. &c. H.—The true David ceaseth not to sing new canticles in his Church. S. Aug. W.

PSALM 72. (QUAM BONUS ISRAEL DEUS.)

The temptation of the weak upon seeing the prosperity of the wicked, is overcome by the consideration of the justice of God, who will quickly render to every one according to his works.

Ver. 1. Asaph. See Ps. 49. We shall not undertake to decide whether he composed or only sung this psalm; (Bert.) or whether he lived under David or Josaphat, or rather during the captivity. Those who attribute all the psalms to David, get rid of many such inquires: but they are involved in other difficulties, (C.) which are not insurmountable. H.—How. Heb. "Surely," as if an answer was given to what had long troubled the author. Bert.—God is more excellent and beneficent (H.) than any tongue can express. W.

Ver. 2. Slipt. I had almost yielded to temptation (M.) by denying Providence, (H.) and following the broad road. W.—Upon more mature reflection, (H.) I am perfectly convinced that God is not indifferent about those who serve him, though he may have treated Israel with severity. C.

Ver. 3. Zeal. I was grieved, (M.) or even inclined to imitate the wicked; (see Matt. 3:14. Ps. 36. Jer. 12 and 21:7) though the whole book is intended to clear up this difficulty respecting the treatment of the good and bad in this life.

Ver. 4. Regard. They are not restrained by the thoughts of death, (H.) which they banish (W.) as much as possible. Prot. "There are no bands ("of pain." Munst.) in," &c. H.—Stripes. They quickly remove their light afflictions. W.—"And their halls are strong." S. Jer.—"Their strength is firm;" (Prot.) "fat." Marg. H.—Sept. follow another derivation, which is equally accurate. Bert.—The wicked die with content and ease, in an advanced age, falling off like ripe apples, without being torn violently away or bound. They look not on all sides to see if there be no escaping. M.—Having enjoyed all the luxuries of life unto satiety, they are resigned to die, little suspecting what will follow. H.—They are like victims fattened for slaughter. Prov. 7:22. S. Aug.—A noted English deist had the assurance to say on his death-bed, and to have place on his tomb-stone, Dubius, sed non improbus vixi: securus morior, haud perturbatus! H.

Ver. 5. Other men, who follow a more virtuous course (W.) than themselves. Their prosperity encourages their pride, and they indulge in every excess. W.

Ver. 7. Fatness. Abundance, and temporal prosperity, which have encouraged them in their iniquity; and made them give themselves up to their irregular affections. Ch.—This sense is better than the modern Heb. affords. Bert.—"Their eyes stand out with fatness." Prot. H.—Into. Heb. "the thoughts of the heart," or their utmost expectations; (H.) or "they have executed the devices of their heart;" which come to the same. Bert.—They have done what mischief they could. W.

Ver. 8. High. With impudence; (M.) boldly despising others, (W.) from their exalted station. Bert.—They even dare to contend with the Almighty. H.

Ver. 9. Earth. Attacking men as well as God. Bert.

Ver. 10. Return here; or hither. The weak among the servants of God will be apt often to return to this thought, and will be shocked when they consider the full days, that is, the long and prosperous life of the wicked; and will be tempted to make the reflections against Providence which are set down in the following verses. Ch.—Prot. "his people return hither, and waters of a full cup are wrung out for them."

S. Jerom saw nothing of waters. "And who among them shall be found full?" He also reads my people (H.) better. It is difficult to understand the present Heb.: whereas the Sept. is plain; as they found imi, days, instead of ume, "and who," or "the waters." Bert.—We may explain this of the sentiments which the captives should entertain (C.) at their return. Theod.—Asaph, seeing the impiety of the Babylonians, concluded that they would surely be punished, and Israel, being converted, would be put again in possession of their delightful country. C.—The prosperity of the former will cause some to fall away, and their days will be full of misery, (W.) or they will ponder whole days on these things. Bert.

Ver. 11. They. The weak, (W. Bert.) under this perplexity, or the wicked, said. C.

Ver. 13. And I said, is added by the Sept. to connect the sentence. Bert.—Heb. "truly in vain."—Innocent. Keeping company with them, and avoiding evil. Ps. 25:6.

Ver. 14. Mornings. Every day, (M.) or it comes quickly upon me. H.

Ver. 15. If I said, &c. That is, if I should indulge such thoughts as these. Ch.—I should. Heb. "the generation of thy children will say, that I have prevaricated." Pagn.—Or, "I should offend against the," &c. Prot. H.—I should not be in unison with Abraham. S. Aug.—I seem to declare them reprobates, and thy providence unjust. C.—It was not thus that they thought and acted, when they were under trials; (H.) or God chastiseth every son whom he receiveth. W.—The psalmist begins thus to enter into himself, and to correct his mistake. Bert.

Ver. 17. Sanctuary. The Church, which teaches all truth; or heaven, (M.) or the holy Scriptures, (Lyran.) or rather the counsels of God, which were disclosed to him, (v. 24) when he was sensible that the question was not to be answered satisfactorily by human reason. C.—The last judgment will explain all. H.—In this life, we cannot know the particular causes why the just are afflicted. W.—None but the high priest could enter into the Mosaic sanctuary. C.—Religion alone, or the future world, can unfold these mysteries. There we shall learn, that the just require to be purified, and the sinner's conversion is expected to be the fruit of his reprieve, and of his temporal felicity, (Bert.) to which he may perhaps have had some title, for the few good works which he may have done. H.

Ver. 18. Thou hast put it to them. In punishment of their deceits, or for deceiving them, thou hast brought evils upon them in their last end, which in their prosperity they never apprehended. Ch.—Sept. &c. add, “thou hast placed evils.” S. Amb. reads, “goods.” C.—Dolos, seems to form part of both sentences, “for deceits thou hast put deceits.” (Bert.—With the perverse, thou wilt be perverted. Ps. 17:27. Prot. “surely thou didst set them in slippery places, thou callest them down into destruction;” (H.) or, “when they were lifted up.” Do the rich think, that their prosperity may be an effect of God’s indignation? C.—We are here informed, in general, that evils are prepared to punish sins. W.—The wicked have risen by their crimes to such a slippery situation. M.

Ver. 20. City. In heaven. C.—Heb. also, “when thou shalt awake,” (Chal. Houbig. Bert.) and come to judge, after waiting a long time. C.—Image. The splendour of worldlings is a mere phantom. Death will shew its vanity. H.—Their felicity is only imaginary. W. Job 20:8. Is. 29. Ps. 75:6. C.—Thou the wicked may live to a great age, (v. 4. H.) yet all time is short. M.

Ver. 21. Changed. S. Jer. “are like a fire smoking.” I was indignant, (v. 3. H.) and almost consumed with afflictions, and heavy laden. But I depend on my protector. W.

Ver. 22. Nothing. In point of knowledge. Heb. Bahar means, “a foolish man.” Bert.—Knew not, the solution of this difficulty, which thou hast explained. C.

Ver. 23. With thee. I endeavoured to fathom these things by my weak reason; but thou wast graciously pleased to bear with me, (Euseb.) as I was always convinced, indeed, that thy conduct could not be unjust. I am willing to be led like a beast. C.—I still feared thee amid all my perplexities, and therefore thou hast delivered me from this temptation. Bert.—I am now filled with sentiments of my own past ignorance, and take thee for a guide. H.

Ver. 24. By thy will. Heb. and Sept. “into thy council.” Thou hast hindered me from yielding to my doubts, and hast revealed thy truths to me. C.—And. Heb. “afterwards.”—Glory. Syr. and Houbig. supply thy glory. Bert.

Ver. 25. Earth? I no longer envy the prosperity of the wicked, (C.) seeing that it is all a dream, and a snare, v. 18, 20. H.—Nothing can now give me content, but thyself. C.—This is all we should desire, both for soul and body, as our true inheritance. The wicked, on the contrary, use their free-will to offend God, who destroys, or sentences them to eternal fire. W.

Ver. 26. Away. I am ready to die for love, and gratitude. H.—I esteem not myself, if I am deprived of Thee. We must love God with a most chaste, and disinterested affection, if we desire to enjoy him, (Bert.)

GOD ALONE. Boudon.

Ver. 27. Disloyal. The adherence to any creature is resented by God, as a fornication. Bert.

Ver. 28. Praises. Lit. “tidings.” Predicationes. H.—The ancient psalters read laudes, praises.—In the gates, &c. was not in the most correct Sept. &c. being taken from Ps. 9:15. C.

PSALM 73

PSALM 73. (UT QUID DEUS.)

A prayer of the Church under grievous persecutions.

Ver. 1. Understanding. Ps. 31. H.—We behold here the destruction of the tabernacle by the Philistines, (Grot.) or rather of the temple, by Nabuzardan, (4 K. 25:8. Jer. 52:12) though some understand the profanation of Epiphanes, or the final ruin by the Romans. In the latter destruction, the Jews were no longer God’s inheritance, and he would never have inspired the prophet to pray for what would not be granted. C.—This psalm may be used by the just, under affliction; and why, He knew it, was on account of sin; but wishes to move God to mercy, and to put an end to the distress of his people. Bert.—In long persecutions, the weak begin to fear that God has abandoned them. W.—He acts externally as if He had. M.

Ver. 2. Mount. S. Aug. reads montem, (C.) as the Heb. may also signify. “This Mount Sion, thou hast dwelt in it.” Mont. H.—What injury has it done? C.—The more enlightened are fully persuaded, that God will still preserve his Church. W.

Ver. 3. Hands. Heb. “feet,” (Mont. H.) or “strokes,” phehamec. Bert.—“The elevation of thy feet (thy foot-stool, or temple, C.) is destroyed unto the end;” (S. Jer.) or “for victory,” as Sym. renders netsach. The Chaldees have boasted of their victory over thee, and violated thy most holy places. H.—This is what fills me with grief. Bert.—But thou wilt punish them. The captives saw the overthrow of their empire. C.—God’s former wonders give reason to hope, that he will not fail to assist his Church, which he delivered from the hand of Pharaoh, and by Christ’s death, from the devil’s power. W.

Ver. 4. Made. Heb. “have roared,” sending forth shouts of war, where thy praises alone ought to be heard. C.—Ensigns. They have fixed their colours for signs and trophies, both on the gates, and on the highest top of the temple; and they knew not, that is, they regarded not the sanctity of the place. This psalm manifestly foretells the time of the Machabees, and the profanation of the temple by Antiochus; (Ch. 1 Mac. 1. M.) or rather it seems to refer to the destruction under Nabuchodonosor; (Bert.) as under the former the temple was not burnt: (v. 7. C.) yet the doors were. 1 Mac. 4. M.—For signs. Lit. “yea, their signs,” signa sua signa. H.

Ver. 5. Going out. Sept. “coming in.” Both designate the same gates, (H.) or the ends of roads and streets. Matt. 22. M.—Top. The doors of the temple were very lofty. The idolatrous ensigns were fixed there, as on an eminence, to give notice of an invasion, (Is. 11:12) while the soldiers plundered all, before they set fire to the city and temple. 4 K. 25:9. C.—Prot. “a man was famous according as he had lifted up axes upon the thick trees.” The text is very obscure, insomuch that S. Jerom’s version is unintelligible. Bert.—Yet it may signify, “they have placed their ensigns for a trophy, manifest upon the entrance aloft; their hatchets in the wood of trees; and now its sculptures together they have defaced with axe and hatchets, dolatoriis.” Not content with these excesses, they at last set fire to the fabric, (H.) which was easily reduced to ashes, as there was so much wood about it, and in the very walls. C.—S. Chrys. contemplates the like havoc, which is made by sin. Bert.—In false religions, some external shew, festivals, and altars, are opposed to the true ones. W.

Ver. 7. Name. That temple, which was the only one consecrated to thee. H.—All persecutors seek to destroy the places of true worship. W.

Ver. 8. Together. And the infidel nations in that army. Ps. 136:7. C.—Days. So the enemies of religion are always affected. The servants of God ought to be more zealous to preserve the remains of ancient piety. Prot. translates, synagogues, (H. Aquila, Sym.) which Sigonius asserts were hardly known in the days of the Machabees, though they are clearly mentioned, (Est. 4:16) and must have existed at all times. Acts 15:21. Matt. 4:13. C.—Houbig. has “let all the congregations of God cease.” Heb. lit. “they have burnt,” (Bert.) or ended. C.—Yet S. Jer. thinks that the Sept. read with the VI. edit. κατακαυσωμεν, “let us burn,” (Bert.) and Grabe has also substituted κ for π, as that brings the Sept. nearer to the sense of the Heb. (H.) and is supported by some copies, (C.) though it seems less accurate, if we speak of days. Bert. Mohed, denoted, “a set time, or meeting.” Parkhurst.

Ver. 9. Our. Some copies of the Sept. read “their,” as if the enemy still spoke. But the people of God rather complain, that they are not so favoured with prodigies, as they had been formerly, and that the prophets did not publicly encourage them, (Bert.) or declare how long these miseries would continue; as the Hebrew may intimate. C.—Prot. “neither is there among us any that knoweth how long.” H.—Yet neglecting the points, our version is accurate, and any one, or God, may be understood, (Bert.) as taking no cognizance of his people. H.—It is natural for those in distress to exaggerate; for they know that many wonders were wrought, and that prophets were sent to instruct the captives. But they were not so common, nor the prophets so popular, or complaisant, as they could have wished: nor could they be so easily consulted at Babylon, Daniel being generally at Susa, or at court, and Ezechiel in higher Mesopotamia. C.—They could not appear at the head of the people, to harangue in their defence, like Aaron. Ex. 7:1. Dan. 3:38. Bert.—The weak, therefore, complain, that they have no prophet to console (W.) them with miracles. M.—But the more perfect answer, that God both hath and will relieve his people, v. 12. W.

Ver. 11. Ever. Why dost thou delay to heap favours on us, and destruction on thy adversaries? We are most grieved at the injury done to thy name. C.

Ver. 12. Ages. He is eternal, and hath long ago made choice of us. M.—Earth. Publicly rescuing his people from Egypt, (Kimchi) and shewing his power over all the earth. C.—The Fathers understand this of Jesus Christ, who died on Calvary, (C.) near Jerusalem, (H.) which some assert, is the middle of the earth, though others more properly attribute this situation to the promised land, which was nearly the centre of the world, (Amama) then known to the Jews, as there were 60 degrees to the Ganges, and as many westward to the extremity of Spain. Kimchi places it in the midst of the seven climates, (in Ps. 16:3) and many others have explained this literally, as if Jerusalem was really the central point of the world, (S. Jer. in Ezec. v. 5. and xxxviii. 12. S. Hil. &c.) in which sense Josephus styles it the navel. C.—As the world is nearly round, any place may be said to be in the middle. Some have erroneously supposed, that Jerusalem was exactly under the line, (see de Locis. iii. in ven. Bede’s works) though it be about the 32 degree of N. lat. H.—Its situation was at least very commodious for having access to the different parts of the ancient world. S. Jer. in Ezec. xxxviii. C.—The middle of the earth may here also relate to Egypt, where God formerly displayed his power, (Bert.) or to the wilderness, as the sequel seems to indicate. The latter formed a part of the promised land, (H.) which was pitched upon to be the theatre of the true religion, and of the sufferings of Christ, as they were to be made known to all the world. T.

Ver. 13. The sea firm. By making the waters of the Red Sea stand like firm walls, whilst Israel passed through; and destroying the Egyptians, called here dragons, from their cruelty, in the same waters, with their king; casting up their bodies on the shore, to be stript by the Ethiopians, inhabiting in those days the coast of Arabia. Ch.—Isaias 27:1 styles Pharaoh a dragon. See Job 40:20. C. Ezech. 29:3.—Leviathan denotes a whale, or crocodile, and was an emblem of the devil, and of all tyrants, particularly of antichrist. Bert.

Ver. 14. Ethiopians. Or to enrich the Arabs. M.—Heb. Tsiim, is understood of sailors, and “fishermen, &c. Ps. 71:9. Some nations of Ethiopia are said to be cannibals; but they were too distant from the Red Sea. The Ichthyophagi or Troglodytes on the western banks, might despoil the dead, (C.) and procure food, (H.) unless this be a description of a great fish, slain by the power of the Almighty, and really eaten. C.—Many explain these people, to mean wild beasts, which devoured the carcasses. Euseb. Muis.

Ver. 15. Ethan rivers. That is, rivers which run with strong streams. This was verified in the Jordan. Jos. 3 and in the Arnon. Num. 21:14. Ch.—Though the latter point is not so clear, God might divide the torrents, or rivers, at the station Ethan, as the Sept. here read. Bert.—Habacuc (3:9) speaks of rivers. But in poetry, the plural is often used for the singular, and the passage of the Jordan may be meant. C.—God had frequently supplied water from the rock, and gave a passage on dry land, through that river. M. W.—Ethan means, “rapid,” as the Jordan does also. H.

Ver. 16. Morning. Aurora. Heb. “the light,” which existed before the sun. Bert.—Yet most understand the moon, (C.) or, in general, “the luminaries.” S. Jer. H.

Ver. 17. Spring. Heb. “and winter,” under which two the Jews comprised all the seasons, (Gen. 8:22) as the Africans and Danes are said to do still. C.—Yet choreph is used for youth, “the spring” of life. Job 29:4. Bert.

Ver. 18. This. “Congregation.” Theod.—Sept. add, “thy creature.” Heb. is feminine. But it is used instead of our neuter. C.—Consider this insolent language; the enemy, &c. v. 22. H.

Ver. 19. To thee. S. Jer. “the soul intrusted in thy law.” H.—Heb. has now torec, which is rendered, “thy turtle dove.” But the Sept. have read d, instead of r, better; (C.) and Houbigant rejects with disdain the present Heb. though that figurative expression would have the same meaning. Bert.

Ver. 20. The obscure of the earth. Mean and ignoble wretches have been filled, that is, enriched, with houses of iniquity, that is, with our estates and possessions, which they have unjustly acquired. Ch.—Or the captives may thus complain, that they are forced to live among infidels, in constant danger of transgressing the law, (C.) while their children are brought up in sin, (Bert.) and ignorance. H.—Infidels are full of all sorts of iniquity, which they hide in their conscience. W.—Injustice is often the method of becoming rich. H.

Ver. 21. Humble. Heb. “the contrite,” whether of Israel, or of any other nation. Is. 66:2. Bert.—The rich and presumptuous think not of thanking God. M.

Ver. 23. Enemies. Sept. and S. Aug. read, “servants,” and the ancient psalters, “supplicants,” (C.) which seems to be a mistake of transcribers, (Bert.) as it is contrary to the Heb. Chal. and Syr. C.—The sense of both would be good. Erasmus reads κεττων, quærentium, in his edit. of S. Jerom. H.—They blaspheme all holy things, and are hardened in wickedness. W.—Such are the times in which we live. 1 Tim. 6:20. Bert.

PSALM 74

PSALM 74. (CONFITEBIMUR TIBI.)

There is a just judgment to come: therefore let the wicked take care.

Ver. 1. Corrupt not. ‘Tis believed to have been the beginning of some ode or hymn, to the tune of which this psalm was to be sung. S. Aug. and other Fathers, take it to be an admonition of the Spirit of God, not to faint, or fail in our hope; but to persevere with constancy in good: because God will not fail in his due time, to render to every man according to his works. Ch.—Sym. has, “concerning incorruption,” (H.) whence some have explained the psalm of the general resurrection. Euseb.—The Chaldee refers it to David, praying that the angel would cease to destroy, (2 K. 24) while others suppose that he forbids Abisai to hurt Saul. 1 K. 26:9. S. Jer.—This and similar difficult terms might resemble the anthems of Church music. Geneb. Bert. Ps. 56.—The psalm is a sequel to the former, (C.) or a moral instruction, given by the Son of God, (v. 3) after the author had admonished us to attend, and place ourselves in his presence. It is not necessary to suppose that it is written in the form of a dialogue. Bert.

Ver. 2. Praise. The repetition shews the certainty of the event. Christ and his apostles, who sit as judges, praise the ways of Providence. W.—Heb. is more obscure. C.

Ver. 3. When I shall take time. In proper times: particularly at the last day, when the earth shall melt away at the presence of the great judge: the same who originally laid the foundations of it, and, as it were, established its pillars. Ch. W.—This is God's answer to the longer prayer of Asaph, in the preceding psalm, which is here concluded. C.—A time. Heb. Mohed, "congregation." Sym.—When I shall have delivered my people. Theod.—Justices. With the utmost rigour I will punish Babylon. C.—No mere creature knows the time of the general judgment, as Christ, the sovereign judge, does. W.—Then the just themselves will tremble. H.

Ver. 4. Melted. Sym. and Houbig. "is strengthened." H.—After the last fire the earth shall remain, though changed in quality. W. 2 Pet. 3:10.—God destroys and establishes kingdoms. C.

Ver. 5. Wickedly. This is an epitome of Christian doctrine. W.—God had severely punished Nabuchodonosor, Baltassar, and the priests of Bel. Yet the people would not attend to these salutary admonitions.—Horn. By pride, (W.) which is the origin of all evil, (H.) and an offence pardoned by God with the greatest difficulty.

Ver. 6. God. Heb. tsauuar means, "neck." But the Sept. have not seen the a, and translate against God. Lit. "the rock," which is one of his titles; (Bert.) and this seems preferable to "speak not with a stiff neck;" (C.) or "with the old neck;" (S. Jer.) though this sense is not contemptible, as the sinner's wonted pride rises against God. H.

Ver. 7. Hills. Heb. harim, may also be considered as the nom. case; "not from the south are there heights" to which they may flee for succour. H.—Yet most of the ancients agree with us; though is there "refuge," must then be supplied. Bert.—None would be able to screen the Babylonians. Jer. 25:15, 26.—Take the cup of the wine of his fury ... The king of Sesac (Babylon) shall drink after them. H.—The cup is so great that all shall taste, and the last will have the most bitter portion. C.

Ver. 9. Drink. The just themselves shall suffer something. But their part will be comparatively the clear wine, while sinners shall have the drugs. Many suppose that God holds in his hand two cups, which he mixes according to each one's deserts. So the Sept. Syr. S. Aug. &c. seem to intimate. Jupiter is thus represented with two barrels of goods and evils near his throne. Iliad xxiv.—But most interpreters suppose that only one chalice is here specified, filled with red wine, the sediment being reserved for sinners, though it was usually thrown away at feasts. Wine was mixed with water in those hot countries. C.—Yet here the mixture is of a different nature. H.—Fire, (Psalm 10:7. M.) gall, brimstone, &c. compose the bitter chalice of the damned, who will never arrive at the term of their inexpressible misery. In this life, sinners are frequently punished: but their sufferings do not end here. They shall experience a variety of torments in heat and cold. Job 24. W. Apoc. 14:10. Is. 51:17. Ezec. 23:34.)

Ver. 10. Declare. Sept. “rejoice;” as S. Aug. &c. read, contrary to the Heb. C.—Jacob. Christ did all for the glory of his Father. Bert.

Ver. 11. Just. Zorobabel, (Theod.) the figure of the Messias. The Jews were shortly after set at liberty by Cyrus, who was the scourge of their oppressors. C.—The virtuous, who use well their free-will, are thus rewarded. W.

PSALM 75

PSALM 75. (NOTUS IN JUDÆA.)

God is known in his Church: and exerts his power in protecting it. It alludes to the slaughter of the Assyrians, in the days of King Ezechias.

Ver. 1. Assyrians. Sept. “against the Assyrian,” Sennacherib, 4 K. 19:35. H.—David composed this after his victory over the Ammonites, and Ezechias used it when he was delivered from the Assyrians. Grot.—This part of the title is of no great authority, as it is not found in Heb. &c. Bert.—The psalm seems to speak of the victories of all the just; (M.) and instances one memorable example in the defeat of the Assyrians. W.—The Church triumphs over her persecutors. S. Aug.

Ver. 2. Judea. Heb. “Juda.” H.—This shews that the psalm was composed after the separation of the tribes, (C.) though not invincibly; as the names of Juda and Israel were used in David's time. H.—The divine worship was almost confined to the promised land till the birth of Christ; whose gospel has diffused light throughout the world. S. Aug. C. &c.—See Jer. 50:23. Bert.—A Christian is the true Juda, or "Confessor." M.—God was known to some philosophers, but not by such special benefits. W.

Ver. 3. Peace. Heb. Shalem.—Abode. Heb. "tent or hut," an expression which shews, how much the finest structure of the East was beneath God's majesty. C.—He suffered the rest of the world to follow their own inventions, and false gods, reserving Israel for his Church. W.

Ver. 4. There. In that favoured country. The army of Sennacherib perished on its road to Pelusium. 4 K. 20.—Powers. Heb. "sparks," (C.) or "burning arrows." Mont. Ps. 120:4. and 119:4. H.—All the opponents of the Church, or Sion, must perish. W.

Ver. 5. Hills. Of Juda, which are styled eternal, on account of their stability. Deut. 33:15. Heb. seems to be incorrect. C.—"Thou art a light magnificently from (H.) or more than, (Bert.) the mountains of the captivity." S. Jer.—Or, "of prey." Prot.—"Thou art more terrible ... than the richest mountains." Theod.—Yet this comparison hardly suits in this place, (C.) and Houbigant prefers the Vulg. and Sept. who may have read terem, "before," or saraph, "of the seraph," (alluding to God's seat upon the ark) instead of tareph, "prey." Bert.—God grants victory to his people, and enlightens them with the true faith. W.

Ver. 6. Troubled. Heb. "plundered," or "stupified." Bert.—The haughty and blasphemous Sennacherib, Rabsaces, &c. were full of dismay, when the destroying angel slew 185,000 (C.) in the dead of the night.

"What dire astonishment, ye men

Of Media, sunk you to despair?" Hymn on War, p. 52. H.

—Sleep in death. Job 27:19.—Of riches, with which they are possessed, as with a fever, (Seneca, ep. cxix.) and of which they dream. Is. 29:8. C.—Yet the most opulent must die, and are foolish in clinging to riches, since they can carry nothing away. M.—Hands. Heb. "the men of the army have not found their hands." Bert.—They could not use their arms against a spirit. H.—Christ has enlightened the mountains, his apostles; and fools despise their instructions, as the Athenians did S. Paul's, being too much attached to the world. S. Aug. Bert.—Though they may be troubled, they will not open their eyes to be convinced. Hence, they have no oil of good works, when they awake in eternity. W.

Ver. 7. Mounted. Heb. "the chariot and horse." C.—But the riders are meant. Bert.—Rabsaces had boasted, that Ezechias could not find men to mount 2,000 horses, if he should give them to him. 4 K. 18:23. C.—But God chastised his vain boasting. H.—While he defends his people, their enemies seem to slumber. W.

Ver. 8. And. Heb. “thou, and who shall subsist before thee in the moment of thy wrath?” Houbigant rejects the second thou. Bert.—From. From the time that thy wrath shall break out. Ch.—Ex tunc, often relates to a distant period. We have long known the effects of thy indignation. C. Heb. 10:31.—At the first notice of thy will the enemy is dejected, and fears thy potent anger. W.

Ver. 9. Heard. Some edit. of the Sept. read, “thou hast darted judgment.” S. Aug.—Still. All were filled with astonishment, and Sennacherib was glad to escape in the most private manner. C.—Persecutors will all be terrified when the signs of judgment begin to appear in heaven, when are here represented as past, on account of their certainty. W.—The divine power will be again displayed. M.

Ver. 10. God. After the signs of dissolution, the Son of God shall come to judge. Bert.—The earth is now full of bustle: but then all shall be silent. S. Aug.—Meek. Ezechias had given large sums to preserve peace. 4 K. 18:14. C.—Judgment will take place for the sake of the just. W.

Ver. 11. To thee. The enemy shall repress his resentment, when he beholds the fall of Sennacherib. T.—The people who had been delivered, express their constant sentiments of gratitude. They revolve in mind the wonders of God, (H.) both in time and in eternity, and keep holidays in memory of such benefits. Bert.—Heb. “for the wrath of man shall confess to thee, thou shalt be girded with the remains of wrath.” S. Jer.—The fury of the enemy shall only cause thy power to shine forth in his destruction. H.—Petau unites both these ideas, in his beautiful Greek verses, though it must be confessed, this passage is very obscure, both in the original and versions. Bert.—Men shall meditate on these benefits, and praise God with gladness, being moved to make vows, even of things left to their discretion, which they must perform. W.

Ver. 12. God. Victims of thanksgiving, as was customary after a victory. Psalm 21. 26. 49 and 14. He speaks to the people who had been spared, particularly to the priests, though it may be understood also of foreign nations, who complied with this invitation. 2 Par. 32:22. C.—Vows, and their completion, ought not to be separated, even though the thing vowed may have been before a matter of choice, as virginity, &c. S. Aug. Bert.—What says Luther? H.

Ver. 13. Away. Heb. “he will cut off,” (Mont.) like grapes: which means rather to destroy, than to bereave of counsel. Is. 19:13. This might be written after Sennacherib was slain. 4 K. 19:37. C.—God is terrible, and will demand an account even of princes, respecting vows and other good works. Great discretion is therefore requisite. W.

PSALM 76

PSALM 76. (VOCE MEA.)

The faithful have recourse to God in trouble of mind, with confidence in his mercy and power.

Ver. 1. Idithun. Heb. “upon Idithun,” was not formerly in the text. S. Jer.—It may be the name of an instrument, (Bellar.) or tune, (Muis.) or this master of music and Asaph might sing alternately. There is nothing certain; (M.) though some would hence conclude, that Asaph was the author. The occasion of the psalm is also unknown, and may be applied to all the afflicted servants of God, (Bert.) or to the captives. C.

Ver. 2. To God. These repetitions denote fervour, (C.) and that God alone must be the object of our desire. S. Aug.

Ver. 3. Deceived, in my expectations, as I prayed with mind and body continually. W.—Good works are a strong recommendation. “They cry, though we be silent.” Many have recourse to the great for assistance, and few to God. Yet in isto invenio omnia. S. Jer.—Heb. is variously translated, and may have been altered. “My hand fell in the night, and ceased not.” Sym. and S. Jer. come near to the Vulg. C.—They have, “and does not cease,” which would be the case, if the person were deceived or rejected. Bert.—Prot. “my sore ran,” &c. H.—But this seems rather violent. C.—Comforted. By any worldly advantages. M.—Joy can come from God alone. Bert.

Ver. 4. Delighted. Heb. “cried out,” which many explain through sorrow. But the Sept. seem rather to take it in a different sense, as well as the swooning, which might proceed from ecstatic joy (Bert.) at the thought of God. The alternate sorrows and joys of the just are well described. They are seldom allowed to continue long in the same state. Prot. “I complained, and my spirit was overwhelmed. Selah.” S. Jer. “I spoke within myself,” exercising myself in meditation. H.—I was sometimes in such distress, that nothing seemed capable of giving me any comfort. But I relied on God, and was in an ecstasy. W.

Ver. 5. My eyes. Sept. Vat. Arab. and S. Aug. read, “my enemies,” but our Vulg. follows the edition of Ald. and Comp. (Bert.) very frequently, which here agree better with the Heb. “I hindered my eyes from looking up;” (S. Jer. Sym.) or, “thou hast kept the watches of my eyes," (Aquila) hindering me from sleeping; (H.) so that I did not watch three hours only, like the sentinels, but all night. C.—The sudden address to God seems incorrect. Bert.—I rose before the usual time, yet did not utter my sentiments, (W.) being quite oppressed both with grief and joy. H.—I durst not speak, as I was convinced that thy judgments were right. M.

Ver. 6. Of old. And the favours which had been heaped on the nation. C.—Years. Both past and future times; (H.) yea, eternity itself, the great occupation of life. S. Aug. Bert.

Ver. 7. Heart. Sept. have read differently from the present. Bert.—Heb. "I recollected my canticle in the night, and communed with my own heart, and my spirit sought to the bottom;" or, "I swept, (or directed, scopebam) my spirit," (S. Jer.) from all things unbecoming. Sept. Εσκαλλων. "I dug and harrowed" it by earnest meditation, to extract the weeds, and make it fit to receive the divine seed, (S. Jer. hic. and ep. ad Sun.) and to bring forth fruit; (H.) or I swept to discover the precious jewel (Bert.) of salvation. H.—Scopebam, is not deemed a good Latin word; but seems to be derived from σκοπεω, "I consider or direct my aim;" though some think it means rather, "I swept." Is. 14:23. Hugo reads scopabam. C.—I diligently examined my conscience, (W.) and left nothing unturned, like the woman in the gospel who sought the groat. M.—Heb. yechapes, may also mean, "my spirit is set free," to say what might seem too bold, Will God, &c. C.

Ver. 9. Ever. Heb. adds, "is his word ineffectual?" which the Vat. Sept. neglects, (Bert.) though gamar omer be thus rendered in other editions. "Has he completely fulfilled his word," which may be the true sense, consumabitur verbum. S. Jer. H.—"Will he execute this threat from generation?" &c. C.—God will never abandon his Church, (W.) though he may chastise his people. H.

Ver. 10. Mercies? Turning the waters another way, (Muis. C.) or going against his natural inclination. Vincit illum misericordia sua. S. Jer.

Ver. 11. Begun. By God's grace, I now perceive that my thoughts were wrong. W.—I see that we are chastised on account of our sins; (Theod.) but now I hope for better things. T. Genéb.—Heb. may have this (Bert.) and many other meanings. C.—Prot. "I said this is my infirmity. But I will remember the years of right," &c. De Dieu, "To pray, this is mine; to change the right hand, is of the most High." C.—All comfort and every good resolution must come from him. Challothi is derived from eél, by the Sept. and from chala, (H.) "he is sick," by others. Who will assert that the former are not the most ancient and learned interpreters? The sequel shews that the psalmist begins to entertain better hopes. Bert.—Now have I begun to follow wisdom, and to amend my life. S. Anthony advised all to make this resolution every morning. T.

Ver. 12. Beginning. In favour of Israel, or rather of all the just from Abel. H.

Ver. 13. Inventions. Prot. “doings,” (H.) or the secrets of Providence, (C.) and his “affections.” S. Aug.—The just find an interest in all his works, (Bert.) as the work together for their salvation. Rom. 8:28. H.

Ver. 14. Holy “place,” or person. S. Jer.—Thy ways are inscrutable, (Muis.) but always holy. Geneb.—Heb. “in sanctity.” M.

Ver. 16. Arm. Christ, (S. Jer.) or power. Deut. 5:15.—Joseph, who was in Egypt, while the rest of the family dwelt in Chanaan. Bert.

Ver. 17. Afraid. S. Jer. “in labour.” H.—Troubled. The dry land appearing, to let the Israelites pass. Bert. Ps. 113:3.—S. Jerom and the Jews understand this of the storm of Sinai. But most people suppose that the catastrophe at the Red Sea is described, when Moses insinuates, that a dreadful tempest overwhelmed the Egyptians, as it is here specified. See Joseph. ii. 7. C.

Ver. 18. Waters. S. Jer. “the clouds poured out waters,” mayim, Sept. may have read hamim, “sounds,” and omit clouds, which come again in this verse. Bert.

Ver. 19. Wheel. Prot. H. Heb. “a whirlwind,” (C.) or “wheel,” (Pagn.) in the air. H.—The noise of thunder is something similar to a wheel, rattling on the pavement. H.—Salmoneus foolishly tried to imitate it with his chariot. Apoll. Bib. i.—Trembled. The preaching of the apostles was attended with success. H. Fathers. C.—Earthquakes were felt, and men were under a general alarm. M.

Ver. 20. Known. The waters resumed their usual course. Heb. 3:15. The wheels of the enemy might be discerned long after. C.

Ver. 21. Hand. By the ministry (W.) of those, who acted in God’s place, in the desert. H.

PSALM 77

PSALM 77. (ATTENDITE.)

God’s great benefits to the people of Israel, notwithstanding their ingratitude.

Ver. 1. Asaph. David composed this, to declare the rights of Juda to the throne, in preference to the tribe of Ephraim, (Lyran.) which had kept possession of the ark a long time; which was henceforth to be on Mount Sion. H.—It seems to relate to the times of Asa, who reunited several of the other tribes to his dominion, (2 Par. 15:8. C.) and contains a moral instruction, delivered in the person of Christ, (v. 2. Euseb. Bert.) and submitted to the attentive consideration of the faithful. W.—Law. Given to Moses, (Bert.) and sanctioned by the divine authority. H.—The law, and the people were not David's, but God's, in whose name he speaks. S. Greg. in Job ii. W.

Ver. 2. Propositions. Deep and mysterious sayings. By this it appears, that the historical facts of ancient times, commemorated in this psalm, were deep and mysterious; as being figures of great truths appertaining to the time of the New Testament. Ch.—S. Matthew, 13:35. has, things hidden from the foundation of the world. Heb. minni kedem, “from of old.” S. Jer. “ancient riddles.” H.—Mashal and chidoth, “parables and enigmas.” frequently denote things very plain, but spoken in a sententious poetic style. Num. 23:7. C.—The facts, &c. of the Old Testament, prefigured the mysteries of the New. W.

Ver. 3. Fathers. Christ might thus speak as man, and he enforces tradition in the strongest terms. Bert.—Only some things were written. W.—The most ancient and universal mode of instruction, was by word of mouth. H.

Ver. 5. Testimony. The tabernacle, (Euseb.) or the law which notifies his will. C. M.—He also thrice required the Israelites to perpetuate the memory of what he had done for them, by instructing their children. Deut. 4:9 and 6:7 and 11:19. Both the written and the unwritten word must be carefully preserved. 2 Thes. 2:14. God had freely chosen Abraham, and given him the law of circumcision; as he directed his posterity by the mouth of Moses. W.

Ver. 7. That, &c. This was the end of all the laws and monuments of religion, (C.) to increase our confidence, (W.) gratitude, and observance of our duty. H.

Ver. 8. Fathers. Some were virtuous, like Moses, Josue, Samuel, &c. v. 3 and 5. Bert.—But the majority proved faithless. H.—To God. Or did not confide in him, or know that without God's grace, no good can be done. S. Aug. Bert.—Abraham instructed his house, (Gen. 18) and David his subjects, that they might avoid bad example. The same advice regards Christians, 1 Cor. 10. W.

Ver. 9. Battle. Many of this tribe were cut off by the men of Geth, (1 Par. 7:21. Chal. Geier.) as they fought without God's command. Num. 14. W.—They did not defend the ark against the Philistines, though they seemed more bound to do so than the rest, since it was brought from their city, Silo, and they also set the others a pattern of infidelity; (1 K. 4. Abenezra.) whence they are singled out likewise by Osee. Bert.—The famous victory of Abia against Jeroboam may be also designated. 2 Par. 13. C.—This had not yet taken place, no more than (H.) their captivity, under Salmanazar, which is enigmatically foretold. After this reproach, the whole body of the Israelites is condemned. v. 10. Bert.

Ver. 12. Taneos. Heb. Tsohan, (H.) which means, “spreading,” either because the plagues spread from this capital, or because it was in a plain, (Bert.) or very extensive, (H.) on the eastern branch of the Nile, in the Delta. C.—Here Moses wrought his wonders. W.

Ver. 13. Vessel. Lit. “bottle,” like walls on either side.

Ver. 14. By day. Lit. “of the day.” H.—But this is the real import of the Greek. The same cloud (C.) was both luminous and obscure. When the light side was turned towards Israel, the Egyptians were in darkness. H.—The eternal Son of God guided this pillar, and the Israelites tempted him, (v. 18 and 1 Cor. 10. Ex. 13:21. Bert.) forgetting their baptism or initiation in the service of God. H.

Ver. 15. Deep. Water was so abundant, and followed them in streams. 1 Cor. 10:4. C.—The first miraculous grant of water was at Horeb, the second at Cades. v. 20. Bert.

Ver. 18. Desires. Lit. “souls,” as if they were dying for hunger, though they had plenty of manna. Num. 11:4. C.

Ver. 19. Ill. Heb. “against,” (Num. 11. C.) still distrusting in God's power. M.

Ver. 20. Bread. Including all sorts of food. W.—Table. Heb. “flesh.” It is true we have water and manna, but we want something more solid and agreeable. C.

Ver. 21. Angry. This is the sense of the Heb. Distulit means, “he deferred” (H.) to put his threats, (Bert.) or promises, in execution. M.—The destroyer punished those who gave way to murmuring,. 1 Cor. 10. Num. 11:1. C.—Their incredulity was punished (W.) for nearly forty years, and all the guilty who were twenty years old at the first numbering, were cut off in the desert. H.

Ver. 23. And. Or “though he had.” Bert. has mandavit. “He commanded,” would be better rendered, this order being given before the complaints. God had supplied them abundantly with manna from the clouds, as from his granaries. C.—Therefore they ought to have trusted in his power and goodness. M.

Ver. 25. Angels. Heb. also, “of the strong ones.” Aquila.—Such is the blessed Eucharist, of which manna was only a figure, John 6. The angels prepared this food. C.—It was an effect of the divine bounty, not of the power of Moses. Jo. 11:32. How it could be inferior (Bert.) to the bread which Christ would give, was a riddle to the Jews, as it must be still to all who do not admit the real presence. If both were figures, surely manna was better than common bread. H.

Ver. 26. West wind. Lit. Africum, which blows “from Africa,” in this direction, with respect to Jerusalem. H.—The same wind may be styled the south wind. Heb. Kadim, “strong, eastern,” &c. Bert.—These quails came from the banks of the southern ocean, or from the Red Sea, as the Israelites were still in Arabia, when they were furnished with them a second time, (Num. 11:31) for a whole month, (C.) though there were about three million people. Bert.—God changed the wind, so as to bring them into the camp. Ex. 16. W.—It was before blowing from the south-east. M.

Ver. 31. Israel. S. Jerom applies this to those who receive unworthily, particularly if they be priests. 1 Cor. 11:29. C.—God selected the most guilty (Bert.) having allowed them to feast for a whole month. W.—Then he brought down by death, or “hindered,” as it were, “by shackles,” (Sept.) the most valiant. H.

Ver. 32. Still. Notwithstanding this instance of God’s severity, they fell shortly after into greater sins, and would have stoned Moses, &c. despairing of ever taking possession of the promised land, which highly displeased God, so that he swore, that none of the rebels should enter it. Many were also slain in the sedition of Core, (Num. 13:17) and the rest did not live about thirty-eight years. C.—Thus about 600,000 perished, (W.) having done nothing worthy of praise. M.

Ver. 34. Morning. Those who were spared pretended to repent. H.—Afflictions are the source of much good. But the Israelites are blamed for their inconstancy and deceit. C.—They came with apparent earnestness (H.) to offer the morning sacrifice (W.) under affliction. M.

Ver. 38. Their and them, is supplied also by Prot. H.—Heb. “he ... will forgive sin,” &c. This seems more beautiful. Bert.

Ver. 39. Flesh. The inferior appetite wars against the spirit. Gal. 5:17. Matt. 26:41. H.—Not, in the ordinary course. This does not contradict the faith of the resurrection, which is elsewhere clearly expressed. S. Jer. C.—Man may go astray, but cannot be converted by his own efforts. Prov. 2:19. S. Aug. Bert.—God will never abandon the whole Church. The Jews here mark the middle of the psalter, and the 1263d verse, (W.) or the division of the book. H.

Ver. 40. How often. It would be difficult to specify. God mentions ten times. Num. 14:22. W.

Ver. 41. Grieved. Heb. “set bounds to,” or “marked,” holding up to scorn. Heb. 6:6. Genebrard thinks we might translate, “crucified,” hithvu, as this is the root of Thau, which formerly resembled a cross. C.—This would surely be one of the most striking enigmas. S. Jerom agrees with us. Bert.—“They pushed on,” concitaverunt, as God’s wrath must be greatly excited by setting limits to his power and goodness. H.

Ver. 42. Not. How could they so soon forget these prodigies? We might ask, how came Adam to pay so little attention to God’s command? How do many act contrary to their better knowledge? Upon occasion of this forgetfulness, the psalmist repeats many of the chief miracles recorded. Ex. 7 and 13. Bert.

Ver. 43. Signs. The turning the rod into a serpent. The rest of the signs were also plagues. W.

Ver. 44. Showers. Heb. “floods.” H.—Many have asserted that it does not rain in Egypt: but pretty heavy showers fall, even above Cairo, (Vansleb. C.) though seldom. W.

Ver. 45. Flies. Cænomyiam. Many copies of the Sept. have kynomiam, “the dog-fly,” which S. Jerom, (C.) and S. Aug. properly correct. Bert. Ex. 8:24.

Ver. 46. Blast. Heb. also “the bruchus,” (H.) a sort of locust, which does great damage in the East. C.—Chasil may signify both. Bert.—Ovid speaks of the blast:

Interea crescat scabræ rubiginis expers. Fast. 1.

Ver. 47. Vineyards. Herodotus (i. 77.) says, the Egyptians use “ale, because they have no vines.” But he is contradicted by Athenæus, &c.—Trees. Heb. shikmoth, is supposed to mean sycamore trees. C.

Ver. 48. Fire. S. Jer. “who gave their pastures to the hail, and their cattle to the birds.” Reshaphim is also rendered “coals,” by Pagnin. It may denote the thunderbolts. H.

Ver. 49. Angels. Heb. “messengers of evil,” (T.) as the Sept. may also signify the good angels. Amama.—He ordered Moses and Aaron to denounce his judgments, which he executed either by the devils, (Origen. W.) or by the blessed spirits. S. Amb. Ex. 12:29. Wisd. 18:14. —Hence from the effect, (Bellar.) they may have the appellation of evil. Theod. C.—The other plagues are thus briefly mentioned. M. W.

Ver. 51. Labour. “The first-born,” (S. Jer. Gen. 49:3. Prov. 5:9) and their best effects. C.—This was the tenth plague. Cham was the father of Misraim, who peopled Egypt. W.

Ver. 53. Not, after they saw the Egyptians destroyed, whom they had feared greatly before. In the desert they enjoyed rest, while their enemies were in the utmost confusion, (Bert.) having lost their king. H.

Ver. 54. Mountain. Heb. “term.” ὄρος, with the soft spirit, means a mountain, (Bert.) and the Vulg. has taken it in this sense in both places, as the Greek accents and spirits are not of greater antiquity or consequence than the Heb. vowel points. H.—The land of Chanaan was very different from that of Egypt, being full of mountains. Deut. 3:25. Ezech. 36:2. But Sion may be here meant.—Line. Thus were lands measured. Jos. 13:8 and 17:5. C.—God had made a particular choice of this hilly country for his people, (W.) and for the chief seat of religion. M.

Ver. 57. The covenant, is omitted in many Greek and Latin copies, as well as in Heb. S. Jer. ad Sun.—Yet it is found in the Vatican edition, (C.) as well as in the Alex. ἡ συνθησαυ. H.—Bow, which hits not the mark. It alludes to the faithless Israelites, (C.) particularly to Ephraim, v. 9. Os. 7:6. Jer. 9:3. The bow of Jonathan was not such, 2 K. 1:22. C.—A bad bow misses the aim, or breaking, wounds the person who uses it. M.—These people hurt themselves by their treachery. W.

Ver. 58. Hills. The high places, in which they imitated the pagans, and which brought on their ruin. Lev. 26:30. With so much difficulty are people taught to serve God in spirit and truth. They foolishly imagined that they would be nearer the gods. Bert.—Things. Prot. “images.” They have not forgotten to insert this word as usual, to make the ignorant believe that all images are forbidden! H.

Ver. 59. Heard. So he did the crimes of Sodom. Gen. 18:20. C.—Reduced. Heb. “abhorred exceedingly several in Israel.” H.—The people were not exterminated; but greatly reduced in the time of the judges. W.

Ver. 60. Silo. Where it had remained about 350 years, (Bert.) before the ark was removed, never to be replaced there. H.—The tabernacle was afterwards at Nob, and at Gabaon; whence it was probably removed to the treasury of the temple, (C.) and was hidden by Jeremias, 2 Mac. 1. Jos. 17:1. Bert.—God gave his oracles more particularly where the ark, (W.) or the tabernacle, was found. H.

Ver. 61. Their. Heb. “his.” Houb.—The ark was an earnest of God’s protection, (H.) and the glory of Israel, 1 K. 4:21.

Ver. 62. Sword. So that they could not escape.—Despised. Heb. hithhabar, is rendered distulit by S. Jerom, (v. 21. 59. C.) or non distulit, “he did not delay” to punish, as Erasmus reads.

Ver. 63. Fire of God’s indignation, (M. W.) or of war.—Lamented. S. Jer. “its virgins no one bewailed.” H.—He seems to have read eullu, with the Sept. Others translate, (Bert.) “did not mourn,” though they were now deprived of the hopes of marriage, (C.) or “the virgins were not praised” in the canticles used at the marriage-feast, (Chal. &c.) non epithalamio celebratæ sunt, (Mont.) or “married.” Pagnin. H.—There was no time to bewail the death of the young men, or the captivity of the women. C.—Each one was too solicitous for his own safety. H.

Ver. 64. Priests. Ophni and Phinees, (1 K. 4:11. C.) the origin of this calamity, (H.) and the high priest himself broke his neck. W.—Mourn, plorabantur, intimates rather that the people did not mourn for him. But the Heb. has this meaning also, fleverunt, (Mont.) sunt fletæ. S. Jer. H.—The widow of Phinees died on hearing the sad news; and Eusebius seems to think that grief killed Ophni’s widow likewise. C.

Ver. 65. Surfeited. S. Jerom, Chal. &c. agree in this sense. But Heb. may admit another, not quite so harsh, (C.) “like a hero who shouts for (Mont.) or sing after wine,” (H.) διαλαλων εξ οινου, “rendered talkative by wine.” Sym.—God allowed the Philistines to prosper for a time; but, at last, he covered them with ignominy. H.—We must reflect that the Oriental languages are bolder in their expressions than ours, and that this is simply a comparison, not more astonishing than that used by our Saviour, when he says that he will come like a thief in the night. Bert.—If the Spirit of God had not consecrated such comparisons, no one durst have used them. S. Aug.—God rose to punish the infidels, and to preserve his Church. W.—The psalmist speaks of him as of a man invigorated by wine, and filled all with confusion. M.

Ver. 66. Parts. As they were fleeing, (Bert.) or with emerods. Chal. &c. C. 1 K. 5:10.

Ver. 67. Ephraim. Who had been preferred before his elder brother, and yet proved the most inclined to idolatry, v. 9. H.—This tribe was deprived first of the ark, and then of the tabernacle, which were its greatest glory, and this strongly indicated the divine displeasure. C.

Ver. 68. Sion. The ark was removed from Cariathiarim, in the tribe of Juda, to the house of Obedom, for three months, and afterwards to the palace or tabernacle on Sion, (H.) which God had probably chosen for its fixed abode, towards the beginning of David's reign. C.

Ver. 69. As of unicorns. That is, firm and strong, like the horn of the unicorn. This is one of the chief of the propositions of this psalm, foreshewing the firm establishment of the one, true, and everlasting sanctuary of God, in his Church. Ch. M.—It was preserved before Christ, and will remain till the end of time. W.—The temple was not built by David: but the spot was consecrated for it, (2 K. 24) and the ark was placed on Sion; which was the land which he had founded for ever for this purpose. Heb. ramim, means “unicorns, (Chal. S. Jer.) heights, (Mont.) palaces,” (Pagn.) &c. Santificium and sanctuarium, have the same import. H.—In the land. Heb. “as the land.” Sept. have read b for c, as well; (Bert.) and it is observable that Montanus translates the latter, though the former occur in the Heb. text below, edit. 1632: so easily may these letter be confounded! H.—The temple was to have the same stability as the earth, and was but one, like the horn of the unicorn, which is most solid and beautiful. C.—Yet this could not be understood of the material temple, which was the most magnificent structure in the world. It was fulfilled in the Church of Jesus Christ, who is also the true David, v. 72. H.—The crowning of David, who was his figure, was a great blessing to Israel. W.

Ver. 70. Young. Heb. also, “giving milk.” David was actually with his father's flocks, when he was sent for by Samuel. Saul was also engaged in the pursuits of a country life when he was chosen king: and it would indeed have been difficult to find people of another description among the Israelites, as all followed some business. Croesus observed that he first of his race (Gyges) obtained his liberty and the throne at the same time, as he had kept the flocks of the preceding king. Xenoph. vii.

Ver. 72. Skilfulness. Lit. “intelligences.” Plural words are used to express the greatness of the thing. David was very upright and intelligent. H.—This enhances the ingratitude of Ephraim, &c. who divided the kingdom. C.—Yet David had fallen into some grievous mistakes, so that this can only belong strictly to Jesus Christ, who is the good shepherd, without sin. Bert.—He has here detailed what may serve to illustrate the law and the gospel, and may fill us either with confidence or with alarm. H.—We are astonished at the repeated infidelities of the Israelites. But if three million Christians were placed in the same circumstances, would they behave better? Bert.

PSALM 78

PSALM 78. (DEUS VENERUNT GENTES.)

The Church in time of persecution prayeth for relief. It seems to belong to the time of the Machabees.

Ver. 1. Asaph, who might live during the captivity. C.—If the ancient (H.) Asaph, or David, composed this psalm, it must be considered a prediction of the ruin caused by Nabuchodonosor, or by Epiphanes. Bert. T. v.—The author of 1 Mac. (7:17) accommodates it to the sufferings of those (C.) whom Alcimus destroyed; or rather the prophet had them also in view as well as Christian martyrs. H.—He cannot speak of the last ruin of Jerusalem, since it would have been improper to pray for its restoration. S. Aug.—Fruit. A mean village, (M.) as Isaias (1:8) had threatened. Heb. “a heap of stones,” (S. Jer.) in the field. Mic. 1:6. Such was the condition of Jerusalem under Nabuchodonosor (C.) and Epiphanes. 1 Mac. 1. Bert.—Catholics have been persecuted in every country, and forced to use mean houses for divine worship. W.

Ver. 2. Saints. The Assideans, who were the most esteemed for piety, 1 Mac. 2:42. In the worst of times, there were always some pious Israelites, and the generality of them were less wicked than their enemies, who exercised a horrid barbarity in refusing them burial, after destroying vast numbers. 2 Par. 36:17. C.—This was done at least under Epiphanes. 1 Mac. 7:16. H.—Persecutors have hung the bodies of martyrs on poles to be the food of birds, (W.) as the missionary priests were treated in England not long ago. Heb. is here rather inaccurate, (H.) “to the wild beast of the earth itself,” (Mont.) lechaitho arets, being put forth léith, earts, (Houbig.) as Prot. themselves translate. H.

Ver. 4. Us. The Idumeans, &c. are hence blamed by the prophets. Ezech. 25:12. Abd. 10. C.—Christ and his disciples have been treated with scorn, (Bert.) being styled Galileans, Papists, &c. W.

Ver. 5. Zeal, or jealousy, as God has the greatest affection for his people, and resents their infidelity as a kind of adultery. C.—Sin is the source of misery. W.

Ver. 6. Name. Their ignorance was of course culpable. Bert.—This prayer is prophetic, (S. Aug.) or insinuates that those infidels were still more deserving of punishment. Bert.—By destroying Israel, the number of God's worshippers would be lessened. C.—Yet this consideration would not hinder God from chastising them; and it is not absolutely true that pagans are always more guilty. Those who know the will of their master, and do it not, shall suffer many stripes. Having the true faith, they may, however, (H.) be sooner converted. W.

Ver. 7. They have devoured. So Pagnin ventured to translate the Heb. But Montanus substitutes the singular, though it be evidently incorrect, (H.) and contrary to all the ancient versions and the parallel passage, (Jer. 10:25) as well as to MS. 3. Lambeth 435, &c. (Kennicott) v being lost at the end of acol. Houbig.—Place. Heb. also, "beauty," the ark or temple. C.

Ver. 8. Former iniquities, which we and our fathers have committed. The Hebrews generally pray for the remission of their parent's faults. Lam. 5:7. Bar. 3:5. Dan. 9:5. C.—But here the penitents' own transgressions may be meant. Bert.—God is ready to pardon such. W.

Ver. 9. Help. The necessity of grace, and the co-operation of free-will, are here plainly asserted. S. Aug.

Ver. 10. Their God. Let him rescue his people. Cicero (pro Flacco) speaking of the Jewish nation, says, "How dear it was to the immortal gods, appears from its being overcome, enslaved," &c.—Shed. He speaks not of revenge; (C.) but in order that chastisement may open the eyes of the infidels, that they may be converted. Euseb.—Let none suspect that thou disregardest thy people. The event will evince the contrary. W.

Ver. 11. Put. Chal. "consigned." C.—Protect the successors of the martyrs. W.

Ver. 12. Bosom. Punish them severely C. in this world. S. Jer.—Many of the surrounding nations were subdued by Nabuchodonosor, five years after he had conquered the Jews. Joseph. x. 10. Jer. 49:7. &c.

PSALM 79

PSALM 79. (QUI REGIS ISRAEL.)

A prayer for the Church in tribulation, commemorating God's former favours.

Ver. 1. Testimony, or instruction, (C.) and proof of the psalmist's faith. H.—Psalm. Vat. Sept. S. Aug. &c. add, “for (or against) the Assyrian:” whence some have inferred that it relates to the captivity of Israel. But as Benjamin is also mentioned, it seems rather to speak of the captives of Babylon, (C.) or of all Jews and Christians in distress. Bert.—The faithful pray for the coming of the Messias, v. 2. 4. 16. H.—Fathers. C.

Ver. 2. Joseph. He mentions these two as persons dear to God. All the tribes were equally led away captives, and the distinction of kingdoms was not regarded. C.—All Israel is denoted by Joseph, who composed two tribes, having a double portion; (W. M.) and ruling in Egypt. Bell.

Ver. 3. Manasses. These three tribes followed the ark in the desert, (Num. 2:18) and might better see the majesty shining over it. W. C.—Let all be united once more in the divine service. Muis.—Samaria, and Jerusalem in part, were in the tribes of Ephraim and Benjamin, (M.) and Manasses occupied both sides of the Jordan. H.

Ver. 4. Saved. This chorus occurs three (W.) or four times. C.—With God's grace, we shall be able to act virtuously. S. Jer.—Thou canst easily rescue us from our misery. Be pleased to send us the Messias, thy substantial image, 2 Cor. 4:4 and Col. 1:15. If thou assist us, we may co-operate to obtain salvation. W.

Ver. 6. Measure. Heb. shalish, “three-fold.” S. Jer.—The capacity of this measure is not determined. It might be the seah, or the third part of an epha, which would be very abundant, speaking of tears; though small to contain the earth. Is. 40:12. C.—Penitents must eat little. S. Jer.—Yet their sorrow must be moderated by hope. Euseb. See Ose. 9:4. C.—God punishes so as not to destroy us. W.

Ver. 7. At us. See Ps. 78:4. H.—Such was the condition of Jeremias, 15:10. C.—Heb. “have scoffed among themselves.” Chal. and S. Jerom agree with us. Scorn is more difficult to bear than poverty. Hence to comfort himself, the psalmist repeats, O God, &c. Bert.

Ver. 9. Vineyard. Thy Church and people. W. Is. 5:1. Os. 10:1. Matt. 20:2.

Ver. 10. Sight. Heb. "Thou didst dig before it," (Mont.) making the ground ready. C.—The cloud went before the Israelites. W.—Land of promise. H.

Ver. 11. God. The highest cedars were surpassed by the branches, or even by the smallest shoots (arbusta) of this vine. H.—Most powerful nations were forced to submit to David. Theod.—The Israelites were exceedingly multiplied, (W.) and enjoyed the fruits of the country. Mic. 4:4. C.

Ver. 12. River Euphrates, from the Mediterranean, Red, and Indian seas. H. Deut. 11:24.

Ver. 13. It? Thou hast withdrawn thy protection. The temple is destroyed, and all plunder with impunity, because thy vineyard has not rendered good fruit. Jer. 2:21.

Ver. 14. Singular. The wild boar, which does not go with other beasts. Nabuchodonosor is here designated, (C.) or Salmanasar, and all persecutors, (Bert.) particularly the devil, who goes about like a roaring lion, and stirs up his agents to disturb the world. Hence the enemy becomes more cruel than any wild beast. W.

Ver. 16. And look down upon "the Messiah," (Chal.) the true vine. Jo. 15:1. Matt. 21:33. C.—Of man, is not in Heb. only, v. 18. H.—Some perfection was wanting in the Church of the Old Testament.

Ver. 17. Things set on fire, &c. So this vineyard of thine, almost consumed already, must perish if thou continue thy rebukes. Ch.—Things, would imply that incensa is in the neuter plural. But this is not the case in Sept. or Heb. Bert.—S. Jerom has succensam, "Look down upon the vine or root, (17) burn up and without any branches. Let them perish at," &c. who have thus treated it. H.

Ver. 18. The man of thy right hand. Christ, (Ch.) where he sits, (C.) being as man in the highest place of heaven. Matt. 26:64 and 12:32. H.—Who else could redeem Israel? C.—Zorobabel was only a figure of Him. H.—Christ's birth was miraculous, (M.) and he was appointed by the right hand of God to do great things; and, as man, is moved to take compassion on the distresses of his people. Bert.

Ver. 19. From thee. This is our fixed determination for the future. H.—Will call. Heb. "Shall be called by thy name," (S. Jer. H.) thy people. Sym. C.—But the Vulg. is equally correct, invocabimus. Mont. Prot. H.

PSALM 80

PSALM 80. (EXULTATE DEO.)

An invitation to a solemn praising of God.

Ver. 1. For the wine-presses, &c. torcularibus. It either signifies a musical instrument, or that this psalm was to be sung at the feast of the tabernacles after the gathering in of the vintage, (Ch.) or on the feast of trumpets, on the 1st of Tisri. Lev. 23:24. Euseb. Pin. C. See Ps. 8.—From the grape some good wine is extracted, and the rest is thrown away: so in this psalm we find the just rejoice, while the wicked complain, during the persecutions of the Church. S. Aug.—Some Latin copies add, “on the 5th day of the week;” and Genebrard supposes that these additions are owing to the Jewish traditions, (C.) as they might sing this psalm on Thursday. H.—We need not attempt to ascribe this piece to any particular time, though some have thought that it regards the captives, the translation of the ark, or the vocation of the Gentiles, &c. C.—It is very beautiful. Bert.

Ver. 4. New moon of Tisri. Lev. 23:24.—Noted. Heb. “in the obscure, in the day of our solemnity.” C.—Prot. “in the time appointed, on our solemn feast-day.” Cose may denote “obscure or appointed;” (S. Jer.) “in the middle of the month;” (H.) which alludes to the feast of tabernacles, when the Jews dwelt under the shade of tents, made of branches. This was esteemed “the most holy and greatest” of their festivals. Joseph. viii. 2. Num. 29:12. Prov. 7:20. C.—It may also be explained of the new moon of Tisri, (M.) when the people were admonished of the beginning of the civil year, or of the three great festivals to be then celebrated, perhaps H. in memory of the world’s creation, at that season. Bert.—How carefully ought we not, therefore, to celebrate the Christian holidays, which are instituted to excite our gratitude for greater benefits! H.—The days of the new moons (Num. 28:11) were consecrated, to acknowledge God’s constant providence; and that of Tisri in particular, (ib. C. 29:1) to thank him for the preservation of Isaac. Gen. 22:18. W.—But the Lord’s day reminds us not only of the world’s creation, but also of its redemption, &c. Rom. 4:25. Bert.

Ver. 5. Jacob. It is a duty which we owe to God, in obedience to his command. Heb. may be, (H.) “a decree for the princes (gods) of Jacob.” C.—Prot. “a law of,” &c.

Ver. 6. Joseph. Who represents all the family of Israel, as he took care of it. C. Ps. 79:2. W.—Not. The Israelites heard the voice of God at Sinai, (S. Jer. &c. C.) and for the last time, where forced to hear the insults of the Egyptians at their heels; (H.) whose language was barbarous to them, (Ps. 113:1. M.) and not well understood by all, as they had very little society together. Joseph spoke to his brethren by an interpreter. H.—Some explain this of Joseph himself, when he first came into Egypt, (Chal. Bos.) or of the Israelites, at their arrival there. Vat.—But this agrees not with the Vulg. or Heb. (H.) the latter of which is very confused and incorrect, though it be adopted (C.) by S. Jerom: “I heard a tongue which I knew not, I withdrew,” &c. (H.) or, making a small alteration, “God hast established this festival in Joseph, when He appeared in the land of Egypt to rescue his people: then said the Lord, I made him hear a language which he knew not, that I was the protector of my people, I will remove,” &c. C.—The authors of the Pin. disc. take this liberty, which would make the sense pretty clear. But the Heb. means, “I heard,” &c. Some not being able to understand this, have substituted, “He heard,” with the German version. Bert.—The ancient Greek interpreters seem to have read the same, as no variation is noticed. C.—If, however, we must explain the Heb. of S. Jerom, we must suppose that, “I knew not, means I condemned, as it often does; and God certainly reprobated the harsh language of the Egyptian task-masters, and came to deliver his people from oppression. Ex. 2:25 and 3:8 and 5:14. H.

Ver. 7. Baskets. Heb. “brazen.” Mont.—“His hands shall pass from the pots.” Prot.—Dud, means also, “basket.” H.—The Hebrews were thus forced to carry mortar, (M.) straw, &c. W.

Ver. 8. In the secret place of tempest. Heb. of thunder. When thou soughtest to hide thyself from the tempest: or, when I came down to Mount Sinai, hidden from the eyes in a storm of thunder; (Ch. Ex. 19:16) or when I afflicted Egypt, (ib. 9:23) and Pharaoh’s army. Ps. 76:19.—Contradiction, at Mara, or rather at Cades, where Moses betrayed some distrust. Ex. 25:24. and Num. 20:12. C.—After so many benefits, they still contradicted God, and would not serve him. W.

Ver. 9. Testify. Instruct, or call heaven to witness our covenant. C.—Man has free will, and may choose whether he will obey or not. W.

Ver. 10. New God. Who must of course be false. H.—Heb. “strange.” Ex. 20:2. Jer. 23:23. C.—An express law on this head was a great benefit, (W.) as most people had gone astray. H.

Ver. 11. Fill it. I will grant all thy just requests, if thou be faithful. Euseb. C. W.—God uses the title of Jehovah, “the Eternal self-existent Being.” Bert.

Ver. 13. Inventions. Ancient psalters read, “wills.” This is the greatest (C.) of God’s judgments. Rom. 1:24. M.—He sometimes permits a person to go on, that he may be disgusted with sin. Ut saturati vitiis vel sic agant pœnitentiam. S. Jer.—We ought all to dread this root of bitterness, (Heb. 12:15) which may cause us to resist God’s grace, and to be abandoned by him, as the Israelites seemed to be, before their ruin came on. Bert.

Ver. 15. Soon. Forsitan, “perhaps,” (H.) does not here imply a doubt, (M.) but rather the ease and liberty (W.) with which God could have rescued his people (Heb.) “in a moment.” C. Bert.

Ver. 16. Enemies. The faithless Israelites, (C.) or infidel nations. Bos. &c.—Ever. Impenitent sinners shall suffer for ever. Ch.—The Jews will scarcely be converted at last. M.—For a long time God bore with their infidelities, and heaped favours upon them. H.

Ver. 17. And. Or “though.” This increases their ingratitude.—Filled. Heb. “I will fill thee;” which reading few admit. S. Jerom agrees with us. Bert.—Prot. (16.) “the haters of the Lord should have submitted (marginal note, lied) to him; but their time should have endured for ever. (17) He should have fed them, (v rather signifies “him,” H.) also with the finest of wheat, and with honey out of the rock, should I have satisfied thee.” This sudden change seems rather abrupt, though God may have spoken either in the first or third person, from v. 6 H.—Rock. He fed them in the desert with manna, and the water seemed most delicious, as they were thirsty; unless he speaks of real honey. M.—The promised land was very fruitful; but all this prefigured the favours which God bestows upon his servants, in the blessed Eucharist, 1 Cor. 10:4. C.—How many, like Judas, partake of them, and prove faithless! S. Aug.

PSALM 81. (DEUS STETIT.)

An exhortation to judges and men in power.

Ver. 1. Asaph. Josaphat gave the like instructions to his judges, 2 Par. 19:6. Kimchi. C.—God rejected the Jews in the preceding psalm, and here the reason is assigned. Theodoret.—Congregation, or church of the Jews, who were gathered together like cattle, and sought after temporal advantages (S. Aug. in Ps. lxxii. 23) alone. Catec. Trid.

Symb.—This is not exactly true of all, (Heb. 11:14) though it might be of the people in general, who seldom raised their thoughts to spiritual delights. H.—Of gods. Heb. “of God,” who presides in his own council, and gives authority to others. Amama.—Yet Syr. has, “the angels;” Chal. “the just;” Prot. “the mighty;” and Aquila, “the powerful ones.” H.—Gods here are put for judges, who act in God’s name. Deut. 1:17. Ex. 22:28. To decide affairs of consequence, the priests and other judges met in the temple; and the Romans did the like, each senator offering incense and wine to the god who was honoured in that place. Suet. in Aug. xxxv. C.—All magistrates ought to be equally careful in what they determine, as if they heard God present giving them the following instructions. W.—Judgeth gods, or “God, our Saviour, is judged.” Houbig.—This bringeth on the reprobation of the Jews, v. 5. &c. Bert.

Ver. 2. Wicked. Contrary to the law. Deut. 1:17. Lev. 19:15.

Ver. 3. Do justice. This is the sense of justify, “justify,” as the poor must not be screened from justice, any more than the rich. H.—They are in greater danger of being neglected. Is. 1:23. Jer. 5:28. H.

Ver. 5. Moved. The ignorance, inapplication, and injustice of those in power overturn the state, which is supported by justice. Prov. 14:34. They draw down God’s curse upon the land, (S. Jer. C.) and expose it to all the miseries of anarchy. This regards pastors also. Bert.—By gross ignorance judges walk in darkness, and throw all into confusion.

Ver. 6. Gods. The people look upon you as such, and treat you with respect. But entertain not sentiments of pride on that account. C.—If judges, even those whom God condemns, may be styled gods without blasphemy, how much more might Jesus Christ, who was holy and did the works of God? He uses this argument to make the fury of the people abate: but then he continues to prove that he was God in a very different and proper sense, insomuch that the Jews, clearly perceiving his meaning, which Socinians would now mistake, took up stones to throw at him. Jo. 10:34. H.—If he had not been God, He would surely have told them plainly, as S. Paul did when people would have offered sacrifice to him, and as S. John Baptist confessed that he was not the Christ. The sons of Seth, priests, the just, and all the Israelites, were styled sons of God, as well as the angels and judges. Gen. 6:2. Ps. 28:1. Wisd. 5:5. Job 1:6. But no individual is called the Son, except Jesus Christ the true God. Bert.—This passage may be understood of all the faithful, (S. Aug.) particularly of bishops: and Constantine the Great was hence deterred from judging them (S. Greg. i. dec. Grat. p. 2. c. 11. q. 1.) or the clergy; (S. Melchiades. c. 12.

q. 1.) though this name seems inaccurate, as he died before (Glossa) the council of Nice. Amama restrains the text to men in power. H.—Their elevated station makes their ignorance and misconduct less excusable. M.

Ver. 7. Men. Heb. Adam, or “like a man” (Mont. H.) of the meanest rank.—Princes. Among men, (C.) or like Lucifer, the first of the rebel angels. Euseb. S. Just. dial.—Most tyrants come to a miserable end. M.—At death, judges themselves are brought to the bar, and their case is then more terrible, as the mighty in guilt shall suffer more. Wisd. 6. W.—They are forced to taste of death; while Jesus Christ was master of it. Jo. 10:17. 28. This comparison evinces Christ’s divinity. But Socinians blind themselves by looking at the sun, and attempting to fathom all by the weak light of reason. Bert.

Ver. 8. Nations. Those whom thou hast appointed judges, prevaricate. Gen. 18:25. C.—Come, therefore, thyself, Lord Jesus, (Apoc. 22:20) to whom all nations were promised for an inheritance. Bert. Ps. 2:7.—His appearance at the last day is described in the 49th psalm; and most of the Fathers here discover a clear prediction of the conversion of the Gentiles. C.

PSALM 82

PSALM 82. (DEUS QUIS SIMILIS.)

A prayer against the enemies of God’s Church.

Ver. 1. Asaph. This psalm alludes to the wars of David, (2 K. 8. Bert.) against Ammon, (Bos.) or of the Jews returned from captivity, (2 Esd. 4. Ezech. 38. Theod.) or of the Machabees; (1 Mac. 5 and 2 Mac. 10. Bell.) or rather of Josaphat. 2 Par. 20. Kimchi. Hammond. C.—All in danger are taught to have recourse to God. Bert.

Ver. 2. To thee? Heb. “be not silent to thyself.” Pagn.—But domi also implies “like;” (Bell.) and there would otherwise be a sort of tautology. Bert.—Christ on earth was like other men: but when he shall come to judgment, none will be comparable to Him. S. Aug.—Amama says this exposition is groundless: but others are of a contrary opinion. H.—The ancient Greek interpreters seem not to have varied from the Sept. though S. Jerom adopts the present Heb. “be not silent. Hold,” &c. which may express the utmost fervour and want of protection. Thy own cause is now at stake: the enemy wishes to destroy religion. C.

Ver. 3. Noise. Like the boisterous ocean. H.—Head. To revolt, 4 K. 3:9 and 2 Par. 20.

Ver. 4. Saints. Heb. “hidden ones;” (Prot. H.) the people under God’s protection, (M. Bert.) or the treasures of the temple. C.

Ver. 5. Nation. That there may be no more of this religion, or Catholics. W.—Israel delighted most in being styled the chosen nation of God. Bert.

Ver. 7. Agarenes descended from Agar, though they took the name of Saracens, as if they had sprung from Sara, (W.) or they dwelt at Agra, otherwise called Petra, in Arabia; or on the east of Galaad, 1 Par. 5:10. C.

Ver. 9. Assyrian, or “Assur,” sprung from Dedan, (Gen. 25:3) and dwelt near the Ammonites. C.—Come. Heb. “an arm to,” &c. H.—All infidels conspire against Catholics, (W.) and are will to forget their private quarrels. H.

Ver. 10. Madian: 120,000 of whom were defeated by Gedeon with 300 men, (H. Judg. 7) as Sisara was routed by Debora, at Cisson, and slain by Jahel. ib. 4. C.

Ver. 11. Endor. Near this place the Madianites fell upon one another. —All their princes of Madian, (C.) or treat all the princes of the people, who now attack us, like them. M.—Both senses are good. Bert.

Ver. 15. Mountains. The prayer or prediction was not in vain. The enemies of Josaphat, (2 Par. 20:11. 24. C.) and of David, &c. were destroyed. H.—The trees on the mountains, (M.) or the mountain itself, might burn like Etna and Vesuvius. Geneb.—The destruction of the wicked is thus described. W.

Ver. 16. Tempest. During the night, a tempest probably arose, which threw the enemy into confusion, who supposing that the Israelites had broken into the camp, fell upon each other in the dark. C.—S. Paul reminds us of God’s indignation, which Christians as well as Jews ought to dread. Heb. 12:25. 29. Deut. 4:24. Bert.

Ver. 17. Name. This was the desire of the prophet; (S. Jer. C. Bert.) and for this end, God sends afflictions. The impenitent must perish for ever, v. 18. W.

Ver. 19. Lord. He who is. Ex. 3:14 and 6:3. W.—The name of the Lord is Himself. Bert.

PSALM 83

PSALM 83. (QUAM DILECTA.)

The soul aspireth after heaven: rejoicing, in the mean time, in being in the communion of God's Church upon earth.

Ver. 1. Core. See Ps. 8. 41 and 80. H.—The Corites were musicians, as well as porters in the temple, 1 Par. 26. They here represent the faithful upon earth, (S. Aug. W.) who sigh after the heavenly Sion. David was animated with these sentiments, more than with the desire of revisiting Jerusalem, during the revolt of his son. Bert.—This psalm might have been written by him under the persecution of Saul, (Grot.) or it may refer to the captives. Theod. C.—Yet, at those times, the tabernacle was not subsisting on Sion, as it seem to have been when this beautiful piece was composed. Bert.—The Jews are said to recite it every night, in hopes of seeing Jerusalem rebuilt, and it might very well be used by all Israelites, when they went to celebrate the three great festivals. C.

Ver. 3. Fainteth. The eager desire of heaven sometimes deprives people of external satisfaction, and the body partakes of the inward joy. W.—Living. The idols of Babylon have no life. Euseb.

Ver. 4. Turtle. Moderns prefer to render “swallows,” without reason. Bochart.—Thy altars. They can rest in the ruins of the temple; (Kimchi. Muis.) but in that supposition, the altars were destroyed. H.—It seems rather that this is an exclamation, (Bert.) which the enraptured psalmist is unable to conclude, giving us to understand that he desired his asylum and place of rest to be near God's altars, (H.) with the angels above. Is. 6. W.—The faithful soul seeks to dwell in heaven, and in the mean time keeps in the Catholic Church, laying up store of good works. For, out of it, whatever good pagans and heretics may seem to do, by feeding the hungry, &c. as these things are not laid in the next, they will be trodden under foot, conculcabuntur. S. Aug. W.

Ver. 6. In his heart, he disposed to ascend by steps, &c. ascensiones in corde suo disposuit. As by steps men ascends toward the eternal temple by certain steps of virtue disposed or ordered within the heart. And this whilst he lives as yet in the body, in this vale of tears, the place which man hath set: that is, which he hath brought himself to: being cast out of paradise for his sin. Ch.—There is no standing still. “As the saint daily advances, so the sinner daily decreases.” S. Jer. C.—Heb. of these three following verses is variously rendered. The Sept. are the most ancient, and very exact. Bert.—Heart. “The more you love, the higher will you ascend." S. Aug.—Heb. "the paths are in his heart. Passing in the vale of tears, they shall place (or deem) it a fountain. The teacher shall be clothed with benediction. They shall go from strength to strength: they shall appear before God in Sion." S. Jer. H.—Three words occasion the difference: abri, "passing," means also, "disposing." Sept. have only used it as a singular, to agree with man, Main, "a fountain," may have been read maun, "for the place."—Al, means, "the God," and "to." Bert.—Amama says the points are different. But we have often shewn the futility of that objection; which might regulate the versions of the Masorets, but could have no influence on those who lived many ages before their invention. They are neglected here by the authors of Prin. disc. "the God almighty shall appear in Sion." H.

Ver. 7. Tears. Prot. "Baca." Marg. "of mulberry-trees," near Jerusalem. Judg. 2:5. 1 K. 5:2–3. H.—It was perhaps used proverbially for any dry place. The Lord had promised to relieve the captives with water. Is. 35:5. &c. C.—Place. The temple or tabernacle, (H.) which the Lord hath appointed. C.

Ver. 8. Blessing. Abundance of water, and other necessities, (2 Cor. 9:6) as well as (H.) spiritual graces, which help those who continue in the true Church to arrive at the vision of God. W.—Virtue, or "company," in which manner the Israelites went to the temple. C.—God. And not merely the temple, &c. as here on earth. M.

Ver. 10. Christ. Chal. "the Messiah," (Bert.) through whom we address all our petitions. W.—Protect thy people, (S. Jer.) and raise up the throne of David. C.

Ver. 11. Thousands elsewhere, (C.) among sinners. He is so much affected, as to leave the sentence imperfect, v. 4. But the meaning is clear. Temporal must yield to eternal happiness. Eternity is all as one point: it has no division of time, which has a thousand parts. H.—Heaven is represented as a palace, (Bert.) in which the blessed enjoy perpetual felicity. H.—With respect to future rewards, one day in the Church is better than thousands out of it. W. v. 4.—Abject. Prot. "door-keeper." Marg. "on the threshold." H.—This was the office of the Corites, (C.) and they prefer it before the finest occupations among sinners. Heb. "the tents of wickedness." H.—The poorest condition in the Catholic Church, is better than the highest dignities which the wicked can bestow. W.—Indeed poverty, and attention to God's service, is the most secure road to heaven, and gives even present content to those who are actuated by the divine spirit. H.

Ver. 12. Truth. He is merciful, and always performs what he has promised: (M.) whereas sinners are noted for cruelty and deceit. Heb. “the Lord God is a sun and shield.” H.—This sense is very good. But Theodotion agrees with the Sept. who have read differently, unless they have substituted the thing signified for the figure. Bert.—Glory, in the next world, (W.) or even in this. He will restore us to happiness, and cause even our persecutors to esteem us. C.—Donator est indulgentiæ, debitor coronæ ... promittendo. S. Aug.

Ver. 13. Innocence. After the remission of sin. W.

PSALM 84

PSALM 84. (BENEDIXISTI DOMINE.)

The coming of Christ, to bring peace and salvation to man.

Ver. 1. Psalm. It resembles the 66th, and seems to have been sung when the first-fruits were brought to the temple. Most people explain it of the captives delivered, (Theod. Du Pin) and of Christ's redemption. Euseb. S. Aug. C.—David foresaw the afflictions and captivity of his people; and was aware of the miseries of mankind, to be removed by the Messias alone. Bert.

Ver. 2. Blessed. Heb. “taken into favour,” or “hast rendered fruitful.” Judea. C.—God had bestowed many benefits upon his people, rescuing them from the Egyptian bondage, and not punishing them as much as they deserved. W.—Others explain it of the captivity at Babylon, or under the devil. M.—David speaks of the former event by the prophetic spirit, and the latter misfortune was always deplorable, and to be terminated only by the Messias. Bert.—The redemption of man was prefigured by the liberation of the Jews. D.

Ver. 5. Convert. Bring back the remnant of thy people, dispersed through the world. Only a few returned under Cyrus; the rest came back by degrees principally during the reigns of Hystaspes and Alexander the Great. C. Diss.—While we continue unconverted, we are objects of God's wrath. Bert. Lam. 5:21.—Our Saviour. Sept. “of our salvations.” S. Jer. “our Jesus.” H.—Saviour of mankind, mitigate thy wrath against us. W.

Ver. 6. Ever. The Pythagoreans settled their differences before sunset. Plut.—“Cherish not, mortals, an immortal wrath.” Arist. Rhet. ii. 21. H.—As long, O God, as we see not our brethren restored, we shall think that thou art not perfectly reconciled us. C.

Ver. 7. Turn, conversus. The ancient psalters read convertens. “Converting, O God, thou wilt bring us to life,” free us from captivity, and redeem us from sin by Jesus Christ, the conqueror of death. C.—Before their conversion sinners lie dead in guilt. W.—O God, thou wilt again restore us to life. D.

Ver. 8. Salvation. By Cyrus, or rather by the Messias, whose time drew near. C.

Ver. 9. Hear. Hitherto the prophet had been distracted by the thought of his people’s misery. S. Aug.—In me, is not expressed in Heb.—Heart. Some of the ancients add, “to him.” C.—The Sept. seem to have had a copy different from the present Heb. “But let them not turn again to folly;” (Prot. H.) though the sense is much the same. They may have read lobom lie, “their heart to God,” (Bert.) or lobsle, (C.) “the heart, Sela;” instead of lecisla, “to folly.” H.—Those Israelites who had given away to idolatry, were little inclined to return to their own country, at the invitation of Cyrus. Though Christ came to save all, only men of good will obtained his peace. Lu. 2:4. Jo. 1:5. C.—There is no peace for the wicked. Is. 48:22. Phil. 4:9. Bert.—The redemption of the world was here revealed. W. M.

Ver. 10. Land. After the captivity, Judea flourished by degrees. But the glory of the second temple consisted in the presence of the Messias. Agg. ii. 8. C.—Those who were moved with godly fear, embraced the gospel, in order to be saved, while many rejected it through their own fault. W.

Ver. 11. Kissed. Or, “embraced,” like friends, as the ancient psalters read. The people practised these virtues after the captivity, and more particularly in the Church of Christ. C.—At the time appointed, He reconciled sinners to his Father, having satisfied his justice, (Bert.) and displayed his own mercy. M.—Thus justice is strictly observed, and peace made between God and man. W.—The justice of the Father and the mercy of the Son kiss each other. D. H.

Ver. 12. Earth. Good men preserve a clear conscience. W.—Virtues of every description (M.) are become common among God’s people, (C.) particularly Christians, though our Saviour may here be styled justice. M.—He was born of a pure virgin. S. Jer. Lyran.—Jam redit et virgo; redeunt saturnia regna. Virg. Ec. 4. H.

Ver. 13. Fruit. By imitation, (C.) “we may give birth to Jesus Christ,” says S. Jerom. God bestows grace, and so men yield fruit. W.

Ver. 14. Him. The holy Baptist shall prepare the way of the Lord. Lyr.

Muis.—Heb. “each one’s justice,” &c. Sym.—After the captivity religion shall reign. If we wish to enter heaven, we must follow virtue. C.

PSALM 85

PSALM 85. (INCLINA DOMINE.)

A prayer for God’s grace to assist us to the end.

Ver. 1. David. He might compose this psalm under any affliction, though prayer is always necessary (Bert.) for any person. W.—Others apply it to Ezechias, (Theodoret) the captives, or the Church. C.—Jesus Christ prays during his passion, and foretells his resurrection, and the vocation of the Gentiles. S. Aug.—Needy. Heb. “mild or afflicted.” Humility is requisite to pray well, as those who think themselves rich, ask not with fervour. C.—God “inclines his ear if thou dost not lift up thy neck.” S. Aug.

Ver. 2. I am holy. I am by my office and profession dedicated to thy service, (Ch.) as a Levite, (C.) or a member of the true Church. H.—He may also speak in the person of Christ, who prays for us and in us. D.—Syr. and Arab. read, “thou art good.” C.—Our necessities, firm purposes of leading a virtuous life, and confidence in God, move him to shew mercy. W.

Ver. 4. Soul. I ardently desire to serve in thy temple. Jer. 22:27. A holy importunity, (Lu. 18:2. Tert. Apol. 39. C.) and fervour in prayer, (H.) with perseverance, attention, and a sense of God’s infinite perfections, are requisite. W.

Ver. 7. Heard me. This gives me confidence that thou wilt do it again. H.—Thou art not like senseless idols. C.

Ver. 8. Gods, which have been set up by men; or among angels, &c. (C.) capable of working miracles by an independent power. H.

Ver. 9. Name. This was partly verified after the captivity, and fully when the gospel was preached. C.—The Gentiles came by faith, and glorified God by good works. Matt. 5:17. W.

Ver. 10. Alone. Sept. Vat. Arab. &c. add, “the great.” C. Acts 17:24.

Ver. 11. Truth. Let me see the justice of thy conduct in suffering the wicked to prosper, (Ps. 72:17) or let me invariably observe thy holy law, which alone can give me true content.—Rejoice. Hebrew, as we read at present, “likewise fear,” (C.) “unite,” (Mont.) or “let my heart be one,” solitary, disengaged from all, unicum, (S. Jer.) “to fear,” &c. C.—This sense is very good. But yached, means also rejoice. Bert.—Our joy must be mixed with fear. D.

Ver. 13. Hell of the damned, (W.) according to the Fathers: or out of captivity and dangers. Bert.—If it be understood of Christ, it must refer to limbo. Bell. M.—It seems equivalent to the lower pit. Ps. 87:7. H.—The Jews admit seven regions in hell, (Geneb.) and our theologians four: 1. Of the damned; 2. of unbaptized infants; 3. of purgatory; and 4. of the saints in Abraham’s bosom. S. Aug. mentions the first and last here: but he speaks clearly of purgatory in other places. De Gen. con. Manch. ii. 17. in Ps. vi. C.—David was rescued from the most imminent dangers, and Christ came out of limbo, (Ps. 15:10. D.) by his own power. H.

Ver. 14. Eyes. The Babylonians oppress us most unjustly. C.

Ver. 15. True. This title is also applied to Christ, who, of course, is God; since every man is liable to mistake. Rom. 3:4. Apoc. 19:1. God authorized Moses and the prophets to address Him, as the psalmist does. Ex. 34:6. Joel 2:13. Bert.

Ver. 16. Command. Heb. “strength,” (H.) to resist the enemy. M.—Order me as thou pleasest: I am entirely devoted to thee from my very birth. Ps. 115:16. Restore the throne of David. C.—The prophets frequently thus turn to the Church, the kingdom of the Messiah, who was born of the handmaid of the Lord. W.

Ver. 17. Good. Mark me for thy slave, (C.) which will be the highest honour. H.—Give me such a sign as the angel did when he was going to destroy the first-born of Egypt. S. Athan.—By some prodigy convince our oppressors that there is a God. C. Bert.—The resurrection, prefigured by Jonas, was the great proof of Christ and his Church; and this serves either for the conversion or for the condemnation of mankind. See S. Aug. W.

Quod precor eveniet, sunt certa oracula vatum, Nam Deus optanti prospera signa dedit. Ovid. 2 de Ponto 1.

—Comforted. S. Cyprian was in sorrow while suffering, but was comforted when crowned. “All the martyrs, with Christ, pray for us.” S. Aug. D.

PSALM 86

PSALM 86. (FUNDAMENTA EJUS.)

The glory of the Church of Christ.

Ver. 1. Mountains. So far the Jews extend the title, supposing that the subject of this canticle was concerning Sion, Moria, &c. Others think that, thereof, refers to a part of the psalm which has been lost, (C.) or to the temple or city which occupied the prophet's thoughts; or it is sufficiently explained by the word Sion, which follows, as the relative sometimes comes first. D. See Prov. 14:3.—This psalm might be composed (Bert.) by some of the Corites, during, or after the captivity, when Jerusalem received strangers within her walls, as a figure of the Christian Church; (Is. 2:2. Zac. 8:20. C.) or David (Bert.) might write it when he had removed the ark to Sion, which was to be the seat of the true religion. Ferrand.—Mountains. The apostles and prophets; (Eph. 2:20. Ch.) on which the Church is founded. H.—The city was styled holy, from the temple built on Moria. Several other mountains were included within its walls. C.

Ver. 2. Jacob. Jerusalem belonged to some of his children. Hence the psalmist clearly speaks of something better, even of the Church of Christ, (Bert.) which God has chosen for his spouse, having abandoned the synagogue, (Apoc. 21:9. C.) which was only intended to be a pedagogue. H.

Ver. 4. Rahab. Egypt, &c. To this Sion, which is the Church of God, many shall resort from all nations. Ch.—Christ gives his apostles command to preach to all. Matt. 28. Lu. 24:27. W.—Some have supposed that Rahab, who received the spies, is here put, to signify the Chanaanites. But her name is written Réb; and the word before us is Rahab, (H.) signifying “pride,” (M.) or Egypt; particularly the Delta, which is still called Rib. C.—Me. I will receive into my Church not only the Jews, but also the most abandoned nations. H.—Foreigners. Philistines. Ps. 82:8. M.—Were. Heb. “this man was born there.” H.—In Christ there is no distinction of nations. Rom. 10:12. The Jews will never shew us the completion of this prophecy any where but in the Church. C.—It is spoken of as past, to denote the certainty of the event. W.

Ver. 5. Shall not Sion say, &c. The meaning is, that Sion, viz. the Church, shall not only be able to commemorate this or that particular person of renown born in her, but also to glory in great multitudes of people and princes, of her communion; who have been foretold in the writings of the prophets, and registered in the writings of the apostles. Ch.—We might also translate, “shall it not be said of Sion?” W.—Some may have read dicetur, instead of dicet. “Shall not a man say to Sion, yea, a man is born in her?” H.—Sept. have, “mother,” μητηρ, which S. Jerom says should be μητι, shall not. Other nations may have produced some great men. But Sion has given birth to the Man God, who was brought into the world in its vicinity, and preached and rose again there. Bert.—She has had many heroes, and has been founded by the Highest. M.—Christ, both God and man, is the builder of his Church, and people, in admiration, recount how many great personages have embraced her communion. W.—The baptist, a man sent by God, announced the Messias; who, according to his humanity, was born of a virgin, among the people of Sion; while, by his divine nature, He was the most High. Carthus. Bell. See Amama.—Sion, or Jerusalem, shall be the mother of an infinite multitude, (Is. 49:18) the metropolis of Judea. Sept. Arab. &c. read, “mother,” in this sense. People deemed it an honour to be born there. C.—Christ “became man for our sakes, being God before us. How do we know this? The Lord has told us in the writings of peoples.” S. Aug. D.

Ver. 6. Writings. He alone can number the inhabitants: or He will enroll all nations as citizens of Sion. C.—The New Testament explains the vocation of the Gentiles, and the incarnation of Christ. Bert.—The Scriptures are the books of all mankind, as well as of princes. All are equally interested in their contents, and ought to become acquainted with them. Heb. “the Lord has numbered, writing down peoples: He was born in it for ever.” S. Jer.—This refers to Jesus Christ, whose birth is also specified in the preceding verse, (Bert.) as ennobling Sion, far more than that of Home, Alexander, or Cæsar could do any of the pagan cities, Egypt, &c. v. 4. H.—The mystery of the incarnation will shine forth at the last day, as well as the glory of the elect. But these things are already consigned in part to all nations, in the writings of the apostles, (Bert.) and in ecclesiastical history. M.—Princes, is not here in Heb. Bert.

Ver. 7. The dwelling, &c. Heb. “the singers, like people dancing, (for joy) all my fountains are in thee.” S. Jerom reads, “strong ones,” and (H.) others, “my thoughts,” instead of “fountains;” which shews that they have read differently. Vesharim, may signify and princes, taken from the line above, though of this we ought to have some proofs from MSS. &c. Bert.—The authority of the Sept. may perhaps suffice, (H.) as they have read more correctly māuni, “habitation,” rather than mahyanai, as we have at present. Bert.—If we adopt this sense, (H.) the fountains may denote the nations which shall spring from Sion. Ps. 67:27. Hammond.—All the inhabitants shall be filled with joy in the heavenly Jerusalem. Apoc. 17:15. C.—This short, but difficult psalm, allegorically describes the mystery of Christ, and of the Church. Bert.—Catholics may taste pure delights, having peace of conscience, &c. But the blessed enjoy the most perfect content in the Church triumphant. W. M.

PSALM 87. (DOMINE DEUS SALUTIS.)

A prayer of one under grievous affliction: it agrees to Christ in his passion, and allude to his death and burial.

Ver. 1. Maheleth. A musical instrument, or chorus of musicians, to answer one another, (Ch.) in doleful music. W.—See Ps. 41 and 52. M.—Heb. may imply, “on infirmity, (Mont.) or sorrow,” from ele. Bert.—The subject is very mournful, and relates to the captives, and to Christ’s suffering. C.—Understanding. Or a psalm of instruction, composed by Eman, the Ezrahite, or by David, in his name. Ch.—We read of Eman, a descendant of Juda by Zara, (1 Par. 2:6. C.) and if he composed this piece, as the Jews and Lightfoot improbably suppose, it must be the most ancient (C.) writing extant. H.—There was a son of Joel, and a seer of king David, of the same name. 1 Par. 6:33 and 25:1. But they are not styled Ezrahites. This person was probably the brother of Ethan, the Ezrahite, who might be young under David, and a man of consummate wisdom under his successor. 3 K. 4:31. The psalm may express the sentiments of David, or of any other under tribulation, as well as those of Jesus Christ, (Bert.) who speaks herein, (Houbigant) and who expects that we should answer him by an imitation of his virtues. S. Aug. W.—The Ezrahite. Heb. haezrachi. H.—Sept. &c. read incorrectly, “Israelite,” (C.) and some copies have “Aitham,” or Ethan, as in the following psalm, instead of Eman. H.

Ver. 2. Thee. The psalm 21st is nearly similar to this. My prayer is continual. C.

Ver. 3. Prayer. It represented as a person prostrated before God. Homer (Iliad ix.) says, that “supplications are the daughters of Jupiter, lame ... with the eyes downcast, and following after injuries,” which admirably shews the conditions requisite for prayer. C.

Ver. 4. Hell. The grave, or captivity. C.—Our Saviour said, My soul is sorrowful unto death. David, Jeremias, or the captives, were not reduced to this extremity. Bert.

Ver. 5. Pit. Like a slave confined every night in prison. Ex. 12:29.

Ver. 6. Free. Heb. also “separated” from society. 4 K. 15:5 and 2 Par. 26:21. C.—Christ, after enduring the greatest miseries was still free. He could resign his life, and take it up again. Jo. 10:18. H.—The Fathers adopt this explanation, which is very striking. C.—Hand. Thou actest as if thou hadst forgotten the corpse in the dust, till the time of the resurrection. S. Aug. Bert.—In the mean while, those who formerly made such a noise in the world, are effaced from the book of life, or from God’s register. He is often represented as a great monarch, keeping an account of his troops. C.—He cannot forget any of his creatures, (Bert.) though he may not restore them to life as yet. M.—Christ possessed infinite power among the dead, (W.) who are free from the cares of this world. M.

Ver. 7. They. Heb. “thou hast.”—Shadow. Heb. “in the depths,” seem to have read a, v, and m, in those two places, which are now wanting. Houbig.—The Chal. has, the shadow of death, as well as the Vulg. All this regards Jesus Christ, though it may be applied to any in distress. Bert.—The wicked endeavour to kill the soul by sin, as well as the body. W.—Great difficulties entangle the psalmist: Christ descends into hell. M.

Ver. 8. Waves. Of afflictions. Christ bore our iniquities. H.

Ver. 9. Delivered up, to prison. Bert.—The disciples abandoned our Saviour; S. Peter, with a curse, denied that he ever knew him, (Mar. 14:71. H.) and Judas betrayed him. It is not so easy to explain this of the captives in general, though it might refer to the psalmist. C.—At Babylon, the Israelites were not imprisoned, but left to multiply. Jer. 29:5. Bert.

Ver. 10. Poverty. Or “affliction.” Sym.—To thee, for aid, (Ps. 27:2) or to implore pardon for sinners. Thus Jesus prayed for us on the cross, (C.) with his hands stretched out ready to receive the penitent. H.—Sept. have read rupaim ikimu for ropaim ikumu, “shall the dead arise?” Amama.

Ver. 11. Physicians. S. Jer. “will the giants rise again?” H.—These were heroes of great renown. C.—But they were consigned to hell, whence there was no redemption. Job 25:5. Prov. 9.—The author insinuates that if the true adorers be cut off, God’s external glory will be diminished. H.—This argument is often pressed. Is. 38. Ps. 113.—Rephaim (H.) denotes physicians, as well as giants. Gen. 50:2 and 2

Par. 17:12. The Thalmud sentences “the best of them to hell.” Amama.—Their power does not extend to the dead. Bert.—The psalmist prays to be preserved from death, not expecting to be raised again miraculously. W.—Yet Christ contemplates his future glorious resurrection. H.

Ver. 13. Of, &c. Sept. “forgotten land.” Securos latites & longa oblivia potant. Æn. vi. C.—When dead, I shall not be able to sound forth thy praises before men: much less shall those do it, who are confined to the regions of darkness. W.

Ver. 15. Prayer. Some copies of the Sept. read “soul,” with the Heb. &c. C.—Why dost thou neglect to grant my request, which I urge with all the earnestness of my soul? H.—This may relate to Jesus in the garden. C.—His prayer prevents, or is presented early, (M.) and with the truest fervour to the Lord, who moves us to pray. H.

Ver. 16. Exalted. On the cross, or arrived at the years of manhood, (Bert. W.) I have experienced the greatest contradictions. David was brought up in poverty, like our Saviour, and the exaltation of both attested with great trials. Bert.—The life of Christ was a continual martyrdom. M.—He had all his sufferings in view from his first conception.

Ver. 17. Troubled me. The enemy has laid waste the country. This agrees with Christ in his agony. C.—Unhappy the sinner, upon whom the wrath of God remains, (Jo. 3:36) and does not merely come; lit. pass, transierunt. Bert.

Ver. 19. Misery. Heb. “darkness.” Thou hast permitted my friends to abandon me, and hast exposed me to disgrace. C.—They were afraid lest they might be involved in my calamities, (M.) if they appeared in my defence, (H.) or seemed to know me. D.

PSALM 88. (MISERICORDIAS DOMINI.)

The perpetuity of the Church of Christ, in consequence of the promises of God: which notwithstanding, God permits her to suffer sometimes most grievous afflictions.

Ver. 1. Ezrahite. Sept. &c. “Israelite,” as in the former psalm. The Jews think that Ethan or Eman lived during the Egyptian bondage. But this psalm was rather composed by one of the captives at Babylon who bewails the destruction of the kingdom of Juda, under Sedecias. After he had detailed the promises of God, (v. 39. C.) David might write it in the person (H.) of Ethan, or Idithun. 1 Par. 25 and 3 Kings. 4:31. W.—Most of the Fathers explain it of Christ's kingdom. See Ps. 131:11. Jer. 33:17. C.—The sceptre or administration of affairs was to continue in the tribe of Juda till his coming, as it really did, though kings were not always at the head of the people. Bert.

Ver. 2. The. Sept. and Houbig. "Thy mercies, Lord."—Truth. Notwithstanding our distress, I know thou wilt perform thy promises. C.

Ver. 3. For thou. Heb. "I." Yet S. Jerom agrees with the Sept. (Bert.) though he is quoted by Calmet as conformable with Aquila, &c. Dixi.—Heaven and earth shall pass away sooner than God's word. H.—If we do not see how his promises are accompanied we must confess our ignorance, or throw the blame on the sins of the nation: but never call in question the divine mercy. C.—Truth. I will perform what I have promised to thee. M.—The apostles, represented by the heavens, have, by their preaching, established by the Church for ever. W.—In them, is not in the Sept. S. Aug. &c. C.—Houbigant would remove Dixisti, "for thou," &c. to v. 4. H.

Ver. 4. Elect. Abraham, and the whole body of the people to whom the Messias had been promised. David was assured that he should spring from his family, v. 52. C.

Ver. 5. Generation. David's posterity occupied the throne for a long time, (H.) and subsisted till the coming of Christ; so that if any conqueror of that family had then appeared, the Jews would not have hesitated to admit, that this prediction was fulfilled. It is there misfortune to understand the text in this sense, whereas God spoke of the spiritual kingdom of his Son, which is to be perpetual. They can never answer the argument which the Fathers urged in the 4th century, and which has attained fresh strength from the longer duration of misery under which the royal family of David has been depressed. It is plain, that it has enjoyed no power from many ages, and as God's word is invariable, He could not have promised an everlasting earthly dominion. Bert.—The temporal kingdom of David decayed at the captivity, and is now wholly destroyed. But Christ was of this family, and established the Church, his spiritual kingdom, which shall continue unto the end. W.—His ministers exercise a power, which is founded on truth and justice. See 2 K. 7:9. C.

Ver. 6. Saints. These alone, (H.) the heavens or angels, worthily proclaim thy praises. H.—Preachers announce the same in the Church, (S. Aug.) “the communion of saints,” as none are found out of her society. H.

Ver. 7. Sons. Angels (C.) to God the Son. None is like him. S. Jer.—Lucifer fell by aiming at it. I will be like to the Most High. Is. 14:14.

Ver. 8. About. God eclipses every created beauty. H.—The angels themselves tremble before him. C.

Ver. 9. Truth. He often praises this attribute, as if to excuse himself for asking, why God had debased the throne of David? C.—God cannot be divested of this perfection. D.

Ver. 10. Power. Heb. “pride.” Thou canst raise a storm, or restore a calm. C.

Ver. 11. Proud one. Heb. Rahab, Egypt or Pharaoh, Ps. 86:4. Is. 51:9. C. He alludes to the plagues inflicted on the Egyptians, &c. W.

Ver. 13. Sea. Heb. “the right,” (C.) which here denotes the south, (Ps. 106:3. M.) as Hermon may do the east, (D.) with reference to Thabor, which lies to the west, though this seems unusual. C. Bert.—The north, &c. more probably refers to the limits of the promised land, from Libanus to the Indian or Mediterranean sea; and from Hermon, on the north-eastern part, to Thabor, on the west. H.—These two mountains were particularly fertile, and seemed to rejoice. Bert.—They “shall praise thy name,” εὐφησοῦσι. Sym. H.

Ver. 14. Might. Others can make no resistance with all their armies.

Ver. 15. Preparation. Heb. “basis.”—Face. Like guards. M.—He extols the mercy, and still more the fidelity of God. C.—Whether he punished, or reward, all tends to promote his glory, and is perfectly just. W.

Ver. 16. Jubilation. Heb. “how to sound the trumpet,” which was the office of priests. They marched near the ark, as it were under the eyes of God. C.—Those who consider, and adore the ways of Providence, are blessed, (W.) and secure. M.

Ver. 18. Horn. Power and kingdom. W.—He speaks like a virtuous Levite, who acknowledges that all good came from the Lord. H.—He cannot speak of temporal blessings alone. Bert.

Ver. 19. Israel. The Lord our king, (1 K. 8:7) will protect us, (H.) or He will defend our King David, and his posterity, as he then promised to him, v. 5. 20. These verses may be thus connected, as the psalmist had been led to praise the wonderful works of God, and now returns to his promises. Bert.

Ver. 20. Then, may relate to a distant time, when God chose Israel. M.—Saints. Heb. “merciful ones.” Samuel, or Nathan, Sept. Arab. &c. have “sons.” The rest read “saints.” S. Jer.—People. As Moses had written. Deut. 17:15. C.—This regards David, as a figure of the Messias, (Lu. 1:32. Ezec. 34:23. Bert.) in whom it was more fully verified, 2 K. 5. Acts 13:22. W.

Ver. 21. Oil. Sept. Vat. has, “mercy,” and is followed by S. Jerom in Ezec. xlv. 3. C.—But is a mistake, ελεει being put for ελαιω. Bert.

Ver. 23. Him. The Jews contributed to the glory of Christ, and the redemption of mankind. The enemies of David fell before his feet. C.

Ver. 26. Rivers. Of his kingdom there shall be no end. Lu. 1:33. Zac. 9:10. H.—Every nation shall adore him. David extended his conquests over all Arabia, and from the Pelusium to the Euphrates. C.—In this sense, the text may be applied to him, though it belongs more to Christ. M.

Ver. 27. Father. We never find that David used this title; (D.) but Christ did frequently, insomuch that the Jews were convinced, that he claimed the divine nature: though, as man, he called God his support. Bert. Is. 63:16.

Ver. 28. First-born. Or favourite. Ex. 4:22 and Jer. 31:9. What king could be preferred to David for piety, riches, &c.? Yet he was only a feeble type of our Saviour, who surpasses all kings, as much as the reality does a shadow. C. Col. 1:15. Rom. 8:29. Apoc. 1:5. Bert.—High. Heb. helyon, which is one of the titles of God, and belongs to Christ, (H.) who is King of kings, and heir of all. Heb. 1. M.

Ver. 30. Heaven. This can only be verified in Christ, who rules over all, and gives power to his Church unto the end. The family of David has been confounded with the rest of the nation for nearly 2,000 years. C.—The temporal dominion of those princes has ceased in Jechonias, (D.) like that of other monarchs; so that God had in view a different throne, (Bert. v. 5) and the Messias, who would render the kingdom of David perpetual, (M.) in a spiritual sense. H.

Ver. 31. And if. God foresaw the prevarications of the Israelites and Christians: But he speaks this to shew their free-will, and that he would treat them as children, (Bert.) and not with the utmost severity, (C.) unless they proved obstinate. 2 K. 7:14. H.—Some shall always continue faithful, and shall be glorified, while the bad shall be cast away. S. Aug.—Christ will never lose his Church. W.

Ver. 34. From him. David. Many ancient psalters read, “from them.” C.—God, by degrees, punished the Jews, by depriving them of their kings; though the family of David was preserved, and some share of power remained till Christ’s coming. Bert.

Ver. 36. Holiness. Or by myself, having nothing greater. Heb. 6:13. C.—I will not. Lit. “if I lie,” which is a Heb. idiom, (Bert.) implying as much. W.—I have sworn irrecoverably, once for all. M.

Ver. 38. Witness. Which may refer to the throne, or to the sun, (C.) or to the rainbow. Bert. D.—As long as the stars subsist, so long shall his throne be established. C.—The Church shines like the sun, and is easily known. Bert.—God, (Euseb.) or Christ, attests the promises. S. Jer. Is. 55:4. Apoc. 1:5.—The rainbow was assigned as a memorial, that the world should no more be drowned. Gen. 9. The other covenants made God have no less stability. H.—Christian souls may shine in virtue, like the sun, or full moon, (W.) particularly (H.) after the resurrection, when they will be perfect, and not liable to change. S. Aug.

Ver. 39. Rejected. In all kingdoms, there are some interruptions, and God did not fail in his promises. He still maintained the sceptre in Juda, though not with the same splendour at all times. Bert.—Angry. Or Lit. “hast deferred.” Distulisti. H.—The Israelites ardently wished for the coming of the Messias. The psalmist here contrasts the present forlorn condition of the people with the preceding promises; and bewails the fate of Sedecias, who was slain at a distance from home. Distulisti. See Ps. 77:21 and 62. C.—Thou hast been angry with thy Christ, (king Sedecias) and even with our Redeemer, in some sense, (C.) as He was treated thus, in consequence of the sins of mankind. Euseb. &c.—The promises were not fulfilled in David, that we may look farther. Solomon seemed to answer all his expectations. But he fell, and God had not him but Christ in view. The kingdom and sacrifices of the Jews are no more. Christ was not taken from them, but deferred. Some Jews and many Gentiles believed in him, v. 47. &c. S. Aug. W.—Anointed. Thou hast despised us, and delayed the coming of the Messias. We cannot accuse the psalmist of impatience, as a late commentator has done, his words being dictated by the Holy Ghost. He expostulates with love and confidence, (Bert.) and comforts himself with the thought, that the coming of the Messias is only delayed. W.

Ver. 40. Overthrown the covenant, &c. All this seems to relate to the time of the captivity of Babylon, in which, for the sins of the people and their princes, God seemed to have set aside for a while the covenant he made with David. Ch.—Yet he did not in effect, v. 39. H.—Sanctuary. The temple, (Theod.) or according to the Heb. “the diadem,” by which the king was “set apart” from the common people, and rendered sacred. Ps. 131:18. Bert.—The psalmist speaks in the person of the weak, who complained, (W.) that the kingdom was a prey to invaders, and the Church oppressed by infidels. W. T.

Ver. 41. Fear. All this forts can afford no refuge. The country is like an abandoned vineyard. The Assyrians and Chaldees have ruined it, and the neighbouring nations of Samaria and Edom take possession of it. C.—Thou ledest on their armies, and renderest our efforts useless. M.—This conduct of God proceeded from mercy. This severe chastisement awakened his people, who after the captivity were more tractable. Chal. Bert. C.

Ver. 45. Cease. The priests are absent; and he cannot be purified in the temple.—Purification may here denote the royal ornaments. Pagn. C. M.

Ver. 46. Time. Heb. &c. “youth.” S. Jer. H.—Joachim was only seventeen years old when he came to the throne, which he occupied three months. Amama.—The four last kings of Juda reigned but a short while, and most of them came to an untimely end. Instead of χρόνου, the Rom. Sept. S. Aug. &c. read θρόνου, “of his throne,” or reign. C.—The Vulg. seems more natural, as the throne of David had subsisted above 400 years, so that it was not overturned in “its youth,” or commencement, though the number of ages, promised to it, seemed now to be abridged. Bert.

Ver. 47. How long. Here the third part, or the prayer of the psalmist, begins. C.—Away. Another interrogation might then commence, “shall it be unto the end?” H.—In this prayer he foretells that God will regard our weakness, and preserve his Church. W.

Ver. 48. Remember what. Heb. ani, “I.” As this seems odd, Houbigant substitutes, adni, “Lord.” Bert.—Substance is. That Christ will assume our nature, (S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xvii. 9. 11.) or “how long I shall live.” Mont.—Even the world “passes” like a shadow. 1 Cor. 7. Amama.—“Be mindful of me from the depth: else why hast thou in vain created the sons of men?” S. Jer. H.—In vain. To spend their days in misery? or rather, “are not all created subject to vanity?” If thou do not succour us, we shall presently perish, and who will glorify thy name on earth? Ps. 143:4. C.—Will thy providence take no care of us? Bert.—If the Messiah come not, we cannot be saved, and we shall appear to have been created in vain. M.

Ver. 50. David. He was a man according to thy own heart, and thy promises to him were absolute. Ethan speaks not of the other kings, or of the people, who might have justly irritated the Lord. He excuses their failings, by the consideration of their mortal and frail nature, v. 49. C.

Ver. 51. Nations. Who continually insult us, and blaspheme thy name. H.—This fills me with the most poignant grief. C.—Which, &c. Aquila and S. Jer. “For I have carried in my bosom all the iniquities of peoples.” If we should read kul, “voice,” for col, “all,” which seems useless before rabim, “many,” (H.) we might translate, “I bore in my bosom the discourse of many peoples.” C.

Ver. 52. Wherewith. Or “because,” quod. H.—Change. Heb. also, “the supplanting or retardment.” Why does not your Messiah come? How are your kings fallen! though God had promised them an eternal kingdom! Boast no more of his power or veracity. This impious language disturbs me. C.—They deride the ignominious life of the Messiah. Euseb.—Sedecias had “exchanged” the promised crown for irons, which was a cutting reproach. Bert.—Christ appeared to have left his people. W.—Infidels objected, that David’s piety was ill requited by God, and that the anointed had made a bad exchange; ανταλλαγμα. Matt. 16:26. M.

Ver. 53. So be it. Some suppose, that these words were added by the collector of the psalms into five books. C.—Here the third ends. H.—The psalmist loses not hope, under adversity. Bert.—He begins and finishes with God’s praises. C.—We beg that all may praise thee, O Lord. W.—This is the only reply which he makes to the sarcasms of infidels, being convinced of God’s providence. C.

PSALM 89. (DOMINE REFUGIUM.)

A prayer for the mercy of God; recounting the shortness and miseries of the days of man.

Ver. 1. God. This characterizes the Jewish legislator. Bert. Deut. 33:1. D.—David composed it in his name, (M.) or it bears some analogy with his writings. S. Jerom maintains, that he was the author of the nine following psalms, (C.) which have no title in Heb. T.—But S. Aug. thinks they would then have formed a part of the pentateuch. C.

—The life of man was longer in the days of Moses than seventy or eighty years. Bell. v. 10.—Moses cannot be the author of the 94th and 95th psalms. W.—In the 98:6. Samuel is mentioned, and it is not necessary to have recourse to the prophetic spirit. One of the descendants of Moses, during the captivity, may have been the author, (C.) or David may have predicted that event. H.

Ver. 2. Formed. Heb. “brought forth.” Job 38:8. C.—Here Origen improperly concluded the sentence. S. Jer. Ep. ad Cypr.—God, is not in Sept. Syr. or ancient Latin psalters. C.—Al signifies both God, and not, and seems to be twice explained in the Vulg. as Heb. omits not, v. 3. H.—The sentence would be very striking, if God were left out, as it is done by Houbigant. The eternity of matter is refuted by this text. Bert. W.—God’s eternity is contrasted with man’s short life. C.—New gods must of course be false. M.—Plato asserted, that “the creator of all must be unbegotten and eternal.” Plut. Conviv. viii.

Ver. 3. Turn not man away, &c. Suffer him not quite to perish from thee, since thou art pleased to call upon him to be converted to thee. Ch.—God wills not the death of the sinner. W.—Give him grace not to yield to his base passions. S. Aug.—Heb. “thou humblest man,” (H.) that he may enter into himself. C.

Ver. 4. For, & This thought naturally tends to convert the sinner.—Watch. Consisting of three hours, (Bert.) which were of unequal length, according to the seasons. C.—A thousand years seem not so long to God. H.—What then must be the short life of man? See Job 7:8. C.—None ever lived one thousand years. Yet what would that be, compared with eternity? W.

Ver. 5. Their years be. Heb. “thou strikest, (C.) or inundatest them: they are a dream.” But our version is accurate. Bert.

Ver. 6. Fall. Heb. “it is cut down and dries.” The heat of the climate caused the flowers to decay very soon. Is. 40:6. Man’s youth touches on old age. C.—The present moment is all we can call our own. Bert.—“A young man may die soon: an old man cannot live long,” says an English proverb. W.

Ver. 8. Life. Lit. “age.” Thou clearly discernest all our proceedings. H.—Man is condemned for Adam’s sin. The Israelites who were fit for arms, and gave way to murmuring, were sentenced to die in the desert. He may allude to this event. Bert.—Heb. may signify also, “our hidden things,” or “youth,” (C.) or “mistakes,” (Houbig.) or “negligences.” S. Jer.—From these we should always pray to be delivered. Ps. 24:7. H.—Sin occasions the shortness of life, (W.) as man was created to be immortal. H.—Before the deluge, men lived indeed longer. M.

Ver. 9. As a spider. As frail and weak as a spider's web; and miserable withal, whilst, like a spider, we spend our bowels in weaving webs to catch flies. Ch.—Meditabuntur is here used in a passive sense. T.—Heb. “we have spent our years like one speaking a word.” S. Jer.—When he has done, the sound is no more: so their memory has perished with a sound. Ps. 9:8. H.—Heb. Chal. &c. do not mention the spider: Yet it seems to have been originally in the text, as it is recognized by the Syr. Sept. and the other Greek interpreters, and makes the sense more complete. C.—The transcribers might more easily omit than the Sept. &c. could insert this word. Bert.

Ver. 10. In them. Years, (C.) “in the world.” Chal. “together.” Sym. years. This was the usual term of man's life in David's time, (H.) and about the captivity, when this was written. Many lived above one hundred years when Moses wrote. C.—Yet this proves nothing, as there are still instances of equal longevity, though it is true, that people in general seldom live above seventy, or eighty, or if they do, their days ar a burden to them. The same might be the case under Moses. He probably alludes to those warriors, who were cut off in the wilderness, few of whom would survive 80. Bert.—The author of Ecclesiasticus, (18:8) gives one hundred, for the utmost limits of life. The pagan sages speak in the same style as the psalmist. C.—Strong. Sept. “in dominion.” But here it means in a vigorous constitution. Bell.—Princes lived no longer than others. Heb. and Vulg. may be “the prime, or most of them,” as even a great part of the time before seventy, as well as after, (H.) is usually spent in misery. Gen. 47:9. C.—Mildness. God's mildness corrects us: in as much as he deals kindly with us, in shortening the days of this miserable life; and so weaning our affections from all its transitory enjoyments, and teaching us true wisdom. Ch.—Heb. “we pass quickly and fly away, (S. Jer.) like birds of passage, (C.) or “it is cut down soon,” (Mont.) “in silence,” (Drusius) tacitisque senescimus annis. H.—S. Jerom wonders, that the Sept. should have translated as they have done: But they are followed by Theodotion, and the Sext. edit. who may have had different copies, equally good. Bert.—Corrected (corripiemur) or “hurried away,” Geneb.—But this is not the sense of the Sept. Amama.—“We grow tired.” Houbig.—It is a mercy of God to shorten men's lives, (M.) as many would sin more, if they had a probability of continuing upon earth. W.

Ver. 11. Anger? God must punish actual sin severely, since he thus condemns mankind on account of original sin. W.

Ver. 12. Thy right hand. Your Messias, to liberate and instruct us. S. Aug.—“Make us know how to number our days thus, and we shall come to thee with a wise heart.” S. Jer. Eccli. 7:40. H.—Sept. have read iminoc for yamenu, “our days.” Amama.—Make us truly wise, (Sa.) or acquainted with teachers of truth. Bellar. M.

Ver. 14. We are. Heb. “Fill us.” Mont.—But the psalmist feels interiorly, that his petition has been granted. Bert.—The prospect of a glorious immortality fills us with hope in proportion to our sufferings for the truth. W.

Ver. 17. Yea, the work. Each in particular. Sept. Rom. &c. omit this sentence, which Houbigant improperly deems useless. Bert.—Charity must direct all. S. Aug. W.

PSALM 90

PSALM 90. (QUI HABITAT.)

The just is secure under the protection of God.

Ver. 1. David. Sept. add, “it has no title in Heb.” and hence the Jews refer it to the preceding author, with S. Jer. &c. But this rule is very uncertain. C. Bert.—Some suppose that Moses composed it when he led the Israelites out of Egypt, or in the wilderness; while others think that it is the work of David under some imminent danger. The Fathers apply it to Jesus Christ. Yet it may be considered simply as a moral instruction, (C.) superior in elegance to any Greek or Latin poem. Muis—Aid. Heb. “secret place.” Of heaven. Is not in Heb. shaddai, which means, (H.) “the almighty self-sufficient, or destroying God.” C.—We must keep close to God by mental prayer, if we would enjoy the divine protection. S. Greg. Mor. vii. 7. Bert.

Ver. 3. Delivered me. Heb. and Sept. “shall deliver thee.” Yet the Alex. copy has me. H.—The psalmist addresses his own soul. Bert.—Word, verbo: we sometimes find “sword,” printed by mistake. Heb. dabar, signifies “word, thing, pestilence, &c.” H.—The devil employs human respect to draw many into his nets. S. Aug. Bert.—Neither subtle craft, nor the cruelty of tyrants will disturb those who trust in Providence. W.

Ver. 4. With. Sept. “upon.” S. Aug. “between,” as the Lord carried Israel. Deut. 32:11. C.—Heb. “he will cover thee with his feathers,” (H.) like an eagle. M.

Ver. 5. Shield. God's fidelity, or word, affords the best protection. Prov. 30:5. C.—Having the spirit of faith, a man is secure. But he whose heart is hardened, (Bert.) is covered with the buckler of God's affliction, (Lam. 3:64. H.) abuses every thing, and seems bewitched with self-love. Gal. 1. Bert.—Night. Devils, spectres, &c. (Cant. 3:7. C.) and treacherous insinuations, that people are not bound to confess the truth, in time of danger. W.

Ver. 6. Day. Neither open attacks, nor unforeseen accidents prevail. C.—Business. Heb. dabar, "thing," v. 3. "the pestilence." S. Jer. H.—The Hebrews suppose, that one angel presides over death in the daytime, and another during the night; or that various demons send maladies at these different times.—Invasion. Sept. and old Italic, have, "ruin."—S. Jer. after Aquila, "from the bite of him who rageth, δαμονιζοντος, at noon. Keteb, (H.) according to the ancient tradition of the Jews, denotes one of the bolder devils, who attacks in open day, and seeks no aid from nocturnal craft. Geneb. The psalmist may allude to those popular notions, (Theod. S. Jer.) which were prevalent among the pagans. Theocrit. Idyl. i. Lucan iii. C.—Thou shalt fear no danger of the day or night, (Bellar.) nor any which disturbs the life of man. Scalig. ep. i. p. 95.—This author mistakes, when he supposes that Keteb is rendered devil. Amama.—He might also ask how the Chal. Aquila, and Symmachus came to discover, that the devil is here mentioned, as well as the Sept.? Bert.—These seem to have read ussod, "and the devil," instead of issud, "from destruction which ravages," (Amama) vastabit. Mont. H.—But allowing that the Sept. &c. are accurate what is meant by this devil? S. Peter seems to explain the idea, when he exhorts us to sobriety. 1 Pet. 5:8. Bert.—Violent temptations of sloth, (S. Athan.) or impurity, (Theod.) or the persecutions against the faithful, may be meant. Four different sorts of attacks seem to be designated. 1. Such as assult the ignorant with the fears of the night, tempting them to secure their temporal estates, while they think not of eternal woe impending. 2. Others are attacked with the arrows in the day, and threatened with death, which they know they ought rather to endure, than abandon their faith. 3. The business, &c. imitates some grievous but latent temptation, as when the faithful are persuaded to take some unlawful oath. 4. But the greatest and most manifest attack, is styled, invasion, &c. when persecutors assail those who adhere to the true faith with a succession of torments, and subtle arguments, which have been the occasion of the fall of many, who had resisted the former attacks. Yet none of these yield, but by their own fault, trusting in themselves, and not in God. S. Aug. W.—Noon day. Grotius explains this of the heat of the sun, which is very dangerous to travellers in Palestine. C.

Ver. 7. Fall. Or “attack, ... but shall not come nigh to thee.” Euseb. C.—How great soever may be the number of thy adversaries, they shall not be able to do thee any harm. They shall at thy feet, and their dart shall not reach thee. H.—More forsake God in prosperity, than under adversity. W.

Ver. 9. Because. Saying, Thou, &c. W. v. 1. C.—High. Heb. helyon is a title of God, (C.) not the adjective to refuge, (Bert.) as Chal. Aquila, &c. have taken it. “Thou hast placed thy dwelling most high.” So that there, &c. v. 10. It is evident that the following promises relate not to the Lord, (C.) but to the just man. Prot. “because thou hast made the Lord, which is my refuge, even the most high thy habitation.” This transposition is not authorized by the text. H.

Ver. 10. Scourge. Aquila has Αφη, “the leprosy,” (C.) or any stroke of distress. H.—What the saints have suffered were not real evils, and they will be amply rewarded in heaven. They never complain, having God with them, (C. v. 15. H.) and his holy angels. M.

Ver. 11. Angels. Many seem to be assigned to the just, to whom S. Hil. &c. would restrain this privilege. But it is more generally believed, that each person has an angel guardian. This was the opinion even of the pagans. Porphy. Ap. ii. S. Clem. Strom. v. C.—To keep. Instead of this, the tempter substituted and, (Matt. 4:6) finding it would not answer his purpose, (H.) and shed that the question was about walking, and not about precipitating oneself. S. Bern. ser. xv. p. 90.—To attempt such unusual courses, is the way of Lucifer, (W.) and tempting God, as our Saviour replied. Bert.—From the father of lies, heretics have learnt how to curtail and misapply the holy Scriptures. H.—God has highly favoured man, by intrusting him to the care of these sublime ministers of his court, (S. Bern.) and surely it is lawful for us to implore their assistance, as we may apply to our fellow-creatures for redress in our temporal necessities. To refuse to do so, on the plea that we expect all immediately from God, would be going contrary to his appointment. Else why has God given them for our guardians, since He could have done all without them? In vain is it objected, that this invocation is a religious worship. It may be so styled, because they are blessed, and help us to obtain salvation. But we only honour in the the gifts of God. Bert.—They protect us by his ordinance, (W.) and the very form of praying, shews in what light we regard them. Who durst say to God, pray for us? M.

Ver. 12. Stone. He alludes to nurses. C.—All these expressions are metaphorical, to shew the assistance given by angels, to remove the obstacles which impede our progress towards heaven.

Ver. 13. Asp. Which kills in eight hours time at farthest, making the blood congeal.—Basilisk. “The little king” of serpents. What is related of it seems fabulous. Pliny viii. 21. Solin xxx. C.—Yet there might be some species known by this name, possessing fascinating qualities like the rattle-snake. Bert.—The sight of it alone could not destroy a man; otherwise how could any account of it have been given? Heb. ssel means a lion in Job, (Bert.) and phethen, “an asp,” (C.) or basilisk. Bochart—Dragon. Crocodile. C.—The most noxious animals, both of sea and land, shall prove quite harmless to the true servants of God, when he intends to prove the truth of his religion, as he did in the cases of Daniel, and of the disciples of Christ. Mar. 16. If they be suffered to kill the saints here, it is in order that they may be glorified in heaven, ver. 15. H.—The devil is styled an asp, &c. Bert.—He sometimes attacks the Church, by craft, and at other times by open violence. But she remains secure, (S. Aug.) and her children can only be preserved by continuing in her bosom. To know which is the true Church; “see, says S. Greg. (Mor. xx. 29.) which are the most recent sects.” Bert.—Methodists may now wrest this honour from the rest of Protestants. H.

Ver. 14. Because. God speaks the rest. W.—Known. In practice. C.

Ver. 15. Tribulation. The just are not exempt from it.—Glorify him, with eternal salvation.

Ver. 16. Days. Eternity alone can satisfy the heart.—Salvation. Or Jesus, who promised to manifest himself. Jo. 14:21. 25. Bert.—Abraham saw him afar off; Simeon at hand. Jo. 8:56. Lu. 2:30. God insures the just a long life in this world, and an eternal one in the next. C.—That life is long enough which ends in happiness. H.

PSALM 91. (BONUM EST CONFITERI.)

God is to be praised for his wondrous works.

Ver. 1. Day. The Jews say, that Adam sung this at his creation, (Chal.) or that it refers to the reign of the Messias, which shall last one thousand years after this world is ended. Kimchi.—Others think it is a thanksgiving after the defeat of Sennacherib, (Ven. Bede.) or Absalom. Ferrand.—It might be sung by the sons of Moses, who expected to be shortly delivered from Babylon, (C.) or by the people on the sabbath, (Bert.) though many of the Fathers think, that this word denotes “the repose of the life to come.” The occasion or author of this psalm cannot be clearly ascertained. C.—When we enjoy rest from labour, we ought particularly to praise God’s works. W.

Ver. 2. Praise. Lit. “to confess,” (H.) as we must be free from sin before we can worthily proclaim God’s praises. Euseb. S. Jer.—But here to confess means to praise, (C.) or give thanks. W.

Ver. 3. Night. Of adversity, and at all times, (Bert.) as well as in prosperity. W.—Morning and evening prayer must not be neglected. H.—These times were particularly pointed out. Ps. 54:18.

Ver. 4. Strings, upon. Heb. “on the hasor, and on the nabel, on the higaion with the cinnor.” Yet the ten stringed instrument seems to have been the same with the psaltery, or nobol. H.—Bellarmin thinks and is redundant, and was not in the copies of the Sept. or it is only explanatory, as we know that the psaltery had ten strings. Ps. 32:2 and 143:9. M.—The matter is of small consequence. Bert.—Eusebius seems to insinuate, that instruments were not used in the Church of his time. C.—The observance of the commandments, and mortification, signified by the harp are requisite. W.

Ver. 5. Rejoice. Admiring thy providence, (C.) or the Messias. “What are all things compared with thee, O Lord!” S. Aug. Conf. x. 4.

Ver. 6. Deep. We cannot easily explain thy ways, (M.) in exalting some, and depressing thy people. C. Rom. 11:33.

Ver. 7. Things. Pretended sages hence take occasion to blaspheme whatsoever things they know not. Jude 10. The wise adore God in silence, (H.) and confess, that the misery of the just here proves a future life, while the wicked prosper, to be more tormented. Euseb.—Carnal men, who think only of present things, see not this. M.

Ver. 8. Appear. Heb. “flourish.” Still they are but as grass, (H.) short-lived, and of small utility. The just resembles the palm-tree, v. 13. C.

Ver. 10. Enemies. The Babylonians, (C.) or all the wicked at the last day. Bert.—This shews God’s power, and insures the exaltation of the just. M.

Ver. 11. Mercy. Heb. and some copies of the Sept. have “oil,” an emblem of mercy. Prov. 21:20. Bert.—“I shall be anointed with fresh oil.” Prot.—“My old age shall be like a verdant olive.” Houbig. Sym.—Those who have a good conscience, expect final happiness. W.

Ver. 12. Me. I shall live to hear of the vengeance which God will take. Ps. 111:9. C.—The just pray for sinners here; but must approve of God's judgment. Bert.

Ver. 13. Palm-tree. Sept. φοινίξ, means also a "Phœnician, or the Phoenix" bird, of which the ancients have said so much, Job 29:18. (C.) and of which Tertullian, (de Res. xiii.) and S. Ambrose, (de fid. Res.) seem to understand this passage. Amama.—But it must be explained in the sense of the Vulg. as the Heb. Tamar evinceth. This tree, and the cedar, were the most famous in those countries; the former for its fruit, and the latter for buildings and duration. The palm-tree will shoot forth again, after it has been cut down or burnt, (Pliny xiii. 14.) so the just will rise up from oppression. C.

Ver. 14. Courts. In the Church triumphant, as well as in the militant. W.—The piety of the faithful induces strangers to embrace the truth. Bert.

Ver. 15. Well treated. Or affected. W.—Bene patientes, ευπαθουντες, "flourishing," (Grot.) tranquil, (S. Aug.) or in a prosperous condition. Bert.—Erasmus, to shew the utility of consulting the originals, informs us, what a multiplicity of authors he consulted in vain, to know the import of this word. Amama.—"They shall be fat and covered with leaves," (S. Jer.) alluding to the aforesaid comparison.

Ver. 16. In him. The general judgment will set this in the clearest light. At present, the ways of Providence may be mysterious, v. 6. H.

PSALM 92. (DOMINUS REGNAVIT.)

The glory and stability of the kingdom; that is, of the Church of Christ.

Ver. 1. Founded. Sept. "inhabited." This title occurs not in Hebrew (Theodoret) nor are the copies of the Sept. uniform, which shews that it is a later insertion, intimating perhaps, that it was sung on Friday, when the works of creation were completed, (Bert.) and the world redeemed. W.—It seems to refer to the translation of the ark, (Muis. 1 Par. 16:30) and the establishment of the Church, the house of God, though the universe may be so styled, (Bert.) or it speaks of the return from captivity, (Ven. Bede) as well as the preceding and following psalms.—Himself. As if to perform some great work, the liberation of his people from the captivity of Babylon, and of the devil, (C.) or to create the world. Bert.—Established. “Weighed.” Houbig.—Moved, or disturbed in the order established by him. H.—This does not prove that the earth moves not on its own axis daily, and round the sun every year. Bert.—The Church shall not fail, (M.) which Christ has redeemed by his own blood, and with great power. In it He reigns, and will draw all to himself. Jo. 12:31. W.

Ver. 2. Of old. Lit. “that time,” ex tunc, (W.) alluding to some distant period. Is. 16:13. C.—God’s throne is established over creatures, as soon as they exist. H.—Yet he is eternal, (M.) as Christ is likewise. At his ascension, He placed his sacred humanity on the throne. C.—His kingdom, the Church, continues for ever. W.

Ver. 3. Floods. The apostles, (Euseb. S. Aug.) or persecutors. W.—Waves. This sentence is not in the Rom. Sept. &c. C.—But it is in the Alex. and Aldine editions. Storms and tides fill all with awe and astonishment. C.—The motion of waters, when they were first confined to their channels, and the persecutions of the Church, and rebellions against God, are described. M.

Ver. 4. On high. In heaven, more to be admired than all the phenomena of nature, and more powerful than all the vast armies of the Babylonians. Is. 40:15. C.—The conversion of many nations, (Apoc. 17:5) is the work and glory of God, (H.) and his preserving the Church in the midst of the most violent attacks, shews his power. W.

Ver. 5. Credible. S. Jer. “faithful.”—Prot. “very sure.” H.—A person must shut his eyes not to see the prophecies fulfilled concerning Christ, and his Church. Euseb.—The majesty of God should strike us with a holy fear, and teach us to observe his commandments, and to behave with the utmost respect in his house, (C.) which is the whole world, or the society of the faithful. Bert.—Articles of faith are perfectly credible to those whose hearts are moved by grace, (W.) though they cannot be understood. H.—All the members of the Church should carefully approve themselves to God, who is her spouse, (W.) and protector, (M.) to the end of the world. W.—Days. Since thy power and fidelity are so great, suffer not thy temple to be any longer in ruins, or profaned. C.

PSALM 93. (DEUS ULTIONUM.)

God shall judge and punish the oppressors of his people.

Ver. 1. Himself. This intimates, that he was inspired to write.—Week. Wednesday, on which day Judas sold our Saviour, and his punishment is here foretold. W.—“The title is not in Heb.” and has been added since the times of the Sept. Theod.—It refers to the persecutions of David, (Jans.) or to the captives, (C.) or it contains an important instruction on Providence, and on the judgment which Christ will pronounce. Bert.—Freely. Heb. “Lord God of vengeance, God of vengeance, shine forth.” H.—This agrees better with the sequel. To appear or act freely have the same meaning. Bert.—God executes judgment publicly, and without restraint. M.—To Him revenge belongs. Deut. 32:35. Rom. 12:20. Nah. 2. H.—It is time to punish the haughty Babylon. C.—God more usually take the title of merciful. But he is equally just, and will respect no dignity or power, but the merits of each one. W.

Ver. 6. Fatherless. Sept. places this after widow, and have here the stranger, or “proselyte,” (H.) including those who were circumcised, or had only renounced idolatry.—Jeremias and Ezechiel describe the cruelty of the Chaldees. C.—Similar acts of impious rage are but too visible in all ages. H.

Ver. 7. Of Jacob. A wretched people in captivity. This is spoken insultingly, he knows not, or cannot hinder, their distress, Ps. 13:1 and 72:6. C.—The insolence and cruelty of infidels are reprobated.

Ver. 8. Fools. Who talk in this manner, (H.) whether you really believe, that God is thus ignorant and inactive; or you only act as if you did. Bert.—There are but few of the former description. But very many, even among Christians, act as if they admitted no Providence. W.

Ver. 9. Consider? He does not say, “hath he not eyes?” lest any might attribute members to God. S. Jer.

“In evil works, mankind thou mayst deceive,
Thy hidden thoughts the gods above perceive.” Theognis.
Ου λησεις δε Θεους ουδε λογιζομενος.

—Thales being asked, if the actions of men were unknown to the gods, replied, “not even their thoughts.” Val. Max. vii. 2. H.—It seems those whom the psalmist attacks, denied the interference of God in human affairs, though they allowed that he created all. H.—Hence he justly stigmatizes them as fools, and inconsistent. Bert.—It is impossible that God should be ignorant of our actions, since he knows our most secret thoughts. W.

Ver. 13. Rest from the evil days. That thou mayst mitigate the sorrows to which he is exposed, during the short and evil days of his mortality; (Ch.) or mayst protect him, while the wicked are overwhelmed. C.—The pious bear afflictions with greater resignation, (M.) meditating on the law and the holy Scriptures, where the ways of Providence are justified.

Ver. 15. Until justice be turned into judgment, &c. By being put in execution: which will be agreeable to all the upright in heart. Ch.—They will be round the tribunal, and sit as judges with Christ. Heb. ci had, “For to,” may have been originally ad ci, “Until.” H.—This does not imply that the just will not be protected afterwards. Cyrus was a figure of the Messias, and all his counsellors, or the Jews, attached themselves to him, when he punished the Babylonians. Is. 41:2 and 53:11. C.—The Church will never be rejected by a just God, whose judgments must take place, and be pleasing to the righteous. W.

Ver. 17. Almost. Or shortly, as the Heb. means, (Bert.) “within very little.” W.—Hell. Heb. “silence,” which is often put for the grave. 1 K. 2:9. C.

Ver. 18. Me. I was no sooner in danger, than I was relieved. C.—Feeding and complaining of my misery, I obtained thy aid. W.

Ver. 19. Sorrows. Heb. “afflicting thoughts.” Bert.—Soul. Our future joy will bear proportion with the sufferings which we endure for the sake of justice, 1 Cor. 11:13, and 2 Cor. 1:3. H.

Ver. 20. Doth the seat of iniquity stick to thee? &c. That is, wilt thou, O God, who are always just, admit of the seat of iniquity; that is, of injustice, or unjust judges, to have any partnership with thee? Thou, who framest, or makest labour in commandment; that is, thou who oblige us to labour with all diligence to keep thy commandments; (Ch.) as faith alone is not sufficient, (W.) and who art pleased that we should find therein some difficulty or repugnance of nature, that we may be the more entitled to consolation, v. 19. H.—Commandment, or “instruction.” S. Aug. observes, that the sufferings of this life are for our instruction, to admonish us of future punishments and rewards. This idea is very luminous. Bert.—Christ was first to suffer, and so to enter into his glory. Lu. 24:26. H.—Nemo dormiens coronatur. S. Jer.—Yet the yoke of Christ is really sweet. The devil tempts us to look upon it as insupportable. S. Bern.—Framest, fingis.—Sept. S. Aug. &c. Fingit, which may refer to the seat, or to unjust judges, who tyrannize over others, as the Babylonians did, (C.) and as the Jews conspired against the soul of the just. “Should the tribunal of perversity have any commerce with thee, which, under the name of law, forms impious machinations?” Houbigant.

Ver. 22. Help. Heb. “rock.” Bert.—Sufferings force us to have recourse to God, whom few remember in the days of prosperity. S. Aug.

Ver. 23. Will destroy them. Heb. yatsmithem, occurs twice, to denote the certainty of the event, though the Sept. &c. omit the repetition. H.—Cyrus overturned the cruel empire of Babylon. C.—The wicked at the last day shall seek to hide themselves, and will for ever be removed from the sight of the just, ἀφανιεῖ αὐτοὺς. We may say of each of them, it had been better if he had never been born. Matt. 26:24. H.—The retribution of the good and bad is eternal. W.

PSALM 94. (VENITE EXULTEMUS.)

An invitation to adore and serve God, and to hear his voice.

Ver. 1. Himself, as David wrote it by inspiration. W.—Sept. Comp. “It is without a title in Heb.” S. Paul (Heb. 4:7) quotes it as the work of David. But this is only done incidentally, and it may have been written by the descendants of Moses, (Ps. 89. C.) as the apostle only says, in David, (H.) referring to the psalter, which the common opinion attributed to him. C.—This opinion, it must be owned, acquires hereby great authority, (H.) as an inspired writer could not mistake; and Calmet himself, on the epistle to the Heb. doubts not but as the drift of the apostle requires, he attributed this psalm to David. Bert. T. vi.—It might be used in the removal of the ark (Muis.) and contains an exhortation to the Jews to return to the service of God, under king Josias, (Theod.) or after the captivity, (C.) or at the preaching of the gospel. Euseb.—The Church adopts the version of the Roman psalter in her office books, as they were corrected by S. Pius V. and this psalm was considered as a hymn at the beginning of matins, though the Vulg. is retained in other parts. C.—The variations are not material. H.—But this shews that the Church does not condemn every deviation from the Vulgate. Bell. Diss.—Saviour. S. Jer. “to the rock, our Jesus.” H.—He who created us, has also been our Saviour. W.

Ver. 2. Come. Earlier than usual, (M.) before the day be far spent; præoccupemus, to shew our diligence in prayer, (H.) and to obtain God’s favour, as Amam was first at the palace of Assuerus. Est. 6:4.—This sentence has probably determined the Church to place it at the beginning of matins. C.—Let not others get before us in performing this duty. H.—We cannot prevent God's grace by an good works, since without it we can do nothing (W.) as we ought. Con. Trid.—Thanksgiving. S. Jer. lit. "in confession." H.—The same word, ἐξομολογήσει, is used for sacramental confession; (Bert.) and this, or at least contrition, (H.) ought to go before our expressions of praise. Eccli. 15:9. Theod. S. Jer.—The prophet exhorts us both to lament and to praise. S. Aug. Bert.—Psalms and music. W.

Ver. 3. Gods. Sept. Comp. "the earth." But the best editions agree with us, and God must be acknowledged superior to all angels, &c. Some copies of the Sept. S. Aug. &c. add, "for the Lord will not cast off his people," (C.) which seems to be taken from Ps. 93:14. Bert.

Ver. 4. Ends. Heb. "depths."—Are his. This is grandeur, that "he beholds," as in the Rom. psalter. Bert. Is. 40:15 and 45:18.—Virgil (Geor. 4.) says:

*Deum, namque ire per omnes
Terrasque et tractusque maris, cœlumque profundum.*

Ver. 5. Formed. Like a potter, plasmaverunt, (S. Jer. C.) or "have laid the foundations of the dry land." S. Aug. Brev. Rom. H.

Ver. 6. And weep. Heb. also, "bend the knee;" though this sense would seem less proper, after he had mentioned prostration. Tears of contrition and tenderness may accompany our canticles. Bert.—Kneeling in prayer is a posture pleasing ot God. Phil. 2. W.

Ver. 7. The Lord is not in the Heb. or Sept. Bert.—The people. Rom. Psal. and Syriac, "his people, and the sheep of his pasture, taken from Ps. 99:3. C.—God is the only shepherd, who creates his sheep. Bert.—He feedeth us, and it is most just that we should adore him. W.

Ver. 8. To-day. S. Paul beautifully illustrates this passage, Heb. 4. H.—He follows not the present Heb. punctuation, which would join half this verse with the preceding.—His. God speaks of the Messias according to the apostle, who intimates that to-day comprises all the life of man. Heb. 7:13. Bert.—Harden not. Man is the author of his own obduracy, (Theod.) which God only permits. S. Aug. C.—We have free will, and may resist God's grace, as we may also consent to it, and thus co-operate to our first justification. Trid. Ses. vi. 5. W.—The captives (C.) and first Christians were exhorted not to imitate the depravity of the ancient Jews. H.—Though a man may have frequently resisted the Holy Ghost, he may still repent. W.

Ver. 9. Provocation, (irritatione.) Rom. Brev. exacerbatione. Heb.

meriba, “contradiction,” (S. Jer. H.) at Raphidim; (Ex. 17:7) unless this be styled temptation, (Massa) and the former provocation was that at Cades, Num. 20:13. C.—The Israelites murmured frequently. But that rebellion which too place at the return of the spies, and which causes God to swear that the guilty should never enter the land of promise, seems to be chiefly meant. Num. 14. Bert.—They murmured on account of the desire of what and flesh-meat, though they were abundantly supplied with manna, which answered every purpose. Thus some require to communicate under both kinds, as if one did not contain as much as both. W.—Proved me; to know by experience if I were so powerful as to work miracles; and I condescended to gratify them, (C.) or I have done it already. M.

Ver. 10. Offended. Heb. and Sept. “disgusted.” Rom. Psal. S. Aug. &c. “I was very near to;” (C.) ready to punish, and eye-witness of their infidelity. S. Paul reads προσωχθισα, infensus fui, “I was against, or disgusted with,” and seems to refer the forty years to the Jews, who saw God’s works. H.—But there is a variation in the Greek copies, as some omit, For which cause; and Heb. 3:10 and 3:17, intimates, that the indignation of God was roused for forty years, at intervals, as often as the people rebelled. Bert.—The apostle also plainly shews, that this psalm was written long after that period, and consequently not by Moses, as the Jews would now assert. He limiteth a certain day, saying in David: To-day, after so long a time, &c. Heb. 4:7. W.—Always. Heb. “a people of those who err in the heart are they.” Mont. H.

Ver. 11. So. Psalter Rom. and Milan, “to whom.” Both occur in S. Paul, and answer the Heb. asher, (Bert.) quibus. S. Jer.—Not. Lit. “if they shall.” The Israelites were excluded from a settled abode in Chanaan, on account of their repeated transgressions, particularly at Cades; (Num. 14) and Christians, who do not continue faithful to the law of Jesus Christ, can never expect to enter heaven. Heb. 3 and 4. W.—David made the like observation to his subjects; and clearly speaks of the heavenly repose to which the virtuous alone are entitled. H.—S. Paul takes great pains to inculcate this truth, and shews that the return from captivity could not answer the import of the promises made by David in God’s name. Bert. H.

PSALM 95. (CANTATE DOMINO.)

An exhortation to praise God for the coming of Christ and his kingdom.

Ver. 1. When the house was built, &c. Alluding to that time, and then ordered to be sung; but principally relating to the building of the Church of Christ, after our redemption from the captivity of satan. Ch.—Captivity. The greater canticle of David, (1 Par. 16) was probably divided, on that occasion, (C.) into three. This forms the second part, from v. 13; as the psalm 104 to v. 16, does the first. The three last verses of David's canticle, (v. 34) occur Ps. 105:1. 47. But in reality, there are so many variations, that it seems most probable, (H.) that he revised that work, and left us the three psalms in their present form. This perhaps relates to the establishment of the Church, though it might be also sung at the return from Babylon. Bert.—Modern Jews understand it of their future re-union under the Messias. Kimchi. C.—The rebuilding of the temple is foretold, as a figure of man's redemption. W.—New canticle. As the blessed do, (Apoc. 5:9 and 15:4) and those who receive the Messias. Is. 42:10. Bert.—Love sings the new canticle. S. Aug.—Earth. And not Judea alone, v. 7. Bert.

Ver. 2. Lord ... his name. As v. 7 and 8. The plural and singular denote the Trinity. W.—Shew forth. Sept. "evangelize," bene nuntiate. S. Aug.—"Tell the glad tidings" of salvation incessantly. This preaching shall continue for ever. H.

Ver. 5. Devils. Heb. elilim, "diminutive gods, (H.) nothings, (C.) vain things." Mont. 1 Par.—We have idols, as Prot. read here. These were in fact, either devils, or vain imaginations of men. S. Paul says, we know that an idol is nothing in the world. 1 Cor. 8:4. They cannot claim self-existence, and if the true God were not to support those creatures, the sun, &c. which have been the objects of adoration, they would presently cease to be. H.—This most plausible species of idolatry is therefore refuted, since the Lord made the heavens. C.—The Creator alone can be considered as God; the devils prompt the people to adore other things. W.—It would appear but a small praise for the Lord to be feared above all gods, (H.) if they were "nothing." Hence the Sept. have used the word devils, to signify, that these potent, but maleficent beings, which the pagans adored, were infinitely beneath God, and worse than nothing. Bert.

Ver. 6. Before him. At his disposal; whereas the idols can bestow nothing. C.—Sanctuary, or "sanctification." W. 1 Par. in his place. H.

Ver. 7. Kindreds; patriæ, or families, as it is expressed. 1 Par. 16. H.

Ver. 8. Sacrifices. Heb. mincha, "the oblation" of flour, &c. (H.) which denotes the blessed Eucharist, and the spiritual sacrifices of prayer, &c. M.—Victims shall cease, but the pure oblation shall continue among the Gentiles. Mal. 1:11. Bert.—Courts. This shews that their conversion is predicted, since they could not otherwise come thither. C.

Ver. 9. Moved. Heb. “in labour,” (Is. 26:17. Theod. C.) or “fear ye before him all the earth.” Houbig.—In Par. the sentences are in a different order. H.

Ver. 10. Reigned. S. Bernard says, “the kingdom of Jesus is in the wood.” D.—S. Justin (dial.) accuses the Jews of retrenching ἀπο τοῦ ξύλου, “from the wood,” which all the Latin Fathers, except S. Jerom, acknowledge in their copies. That ancient author, being born among the Samaritans, could hardly be so ignorant of the Hebrew text, and his antagonist does not attempt to refute the charge; so that it seems probable, that they were in the original, (Bert.) and since erased by the Jews, from the Sept. who added them, (W.) by the spirit of prophecy. Tournemine.—But how came Christians to permit this to be done in their Heb. Greek, and Latin copies? The words in question may have been, therefore, a marginal gloss, which had crept into the text. Faber, Justiniani, &c.—They do not occur in the parallel passage, (1 Par.) nor in the Vulg. though they be retained in the Rom. breviary. C.—Lindan objects this perfidy of the Jews to the Reformers, not reflecting, that he thus condemns the Vulg. Genebrard is of opinion, that “the Sept. were inspired to add these words, which some half-learned critics have thought proper to expunge with an impiety which is now but too common.” The Popes have not, however, thought that the cross stood in need of this support. Amama.—The Chaldee and Syriac, as well as all the copies of the Sept. extant, and the Arab. and Ethiop. versions taken from it, and all the Greek interpreters and Fathers, (except S. Justin) with S. Jerom, both in his versions from the Heb. and Sept. omit these words, which are found in the Rom. Gothic, and other psalters. Origen’s Hexapla seem to have most enabled the Greeks to discern the interpolation, which the Latins retained longer, not having such easy access to that work. Whatever may be the decision on this important matter, it is certain that the reign of Christ was propagated from the wood, in a wonderful manner, as he there began to draw all to himself, and the prophet seems evidently to allude to the times when Christ proclaimed, the kingdom of God is at hand, and when the conversion of the Gentiles, and the institution of the blessed Eucharist (v. 8) would fill all the world with rapture. H.—The positive testimony of S. Justin, and the Italic version used by the Latin Fathers, (Bert.) Tertullian, S. Aug. &c. (W.) seems of more weight to prove the authenticity of the words, than the simple omission in the copies of Origen, and S. Jerom, &c. to evince the contrary. Bert.—Corrected. Evil morals and idolatry, (M.) rather than the physical order of the globe. Ps. 92:1. Bert.—Heb. “he hath balanced,” (Houbig.) or established. H.—The Christian faith shall not be abolished, (M.) or corrected. H.—“Faith is not to be reformed.” Tert.—Justice. Ancient psalter add, “and the Gentiles in his wrath,” v. 13. Ps. 98:8.

Ver. 11. Fulness. Its raging billows, (C.) fishes, (M.) those who live upon the water. H.—Let all testify their joy. Every thing is animated by the psalmist. C.

Ver. 13. Judge. Or “rule,” as he invites all to rejoice. C.—But this will be done by all nature, when God shall punish the wicked. H.—He now judges by his ministers, and will pass sentence at the last day. W.—This verse is added, instead of the last there in 1 Par. 16 which occur in Ps. 105. H.

PSALM 96. (DOMINUS REGNAVIT.)

All are invited to rejoice at the glorious coming and reign of Christ.

Ver. 1. Same. Huic. The title is the same as usual in the Sept. M.—It occurs not in Heb. The psalm may refer to David’s establishment on the throne, after the death of Saul, or Absalom, or to the return from captivity, and to the first and second coming of Christ. C.—This last seems to be the most literal sense. Bert.—To him. Christ’s body on the third day, and many souls were restored to life.—Islands. We have great reason to rejoice in being educated in the true faith, and we may hope that the Catholic religion will once more flourish in these isles. W.—The Son of man shall have dominion over all. Dan. 7:14. His Church is persecuted, as the waves beat against an island. Euseb.

Ver. 2. Clouds. We could not bear the blaze of the divine majesty. Ps. 17:12. Christ veiled himself in our human nature, (Theod.) in the womb of the blessed Virgin. S. Jer. C.—God gave the law with terror; and so he will come to judge with integrity. W.

Ver. 3. A fire. Preceding the last judgment. 2 Pet. 3:12. Dan. 7:10. Wisd. 5:22. M.

Ver. 5. All. Which is conformable to the Heb. &c. though the Vulg. terra, means, “all the earth” melted. H.

Ver. 6. Heavens. Apostles. Ps. 18. The judge appears publicly. C.

Ver. 7. Idols. Heb. Elilim. Ps. 95:5. H.—Angels. Heb. Elohim, means also, all who have power. Chal. “idols.” S. Paul, (Heb. 1:6) quotes this in the third person; Let all the angels, (C.) or rather he alludes to the Sept. (Deut. 32:43) which clearly speaks of the Messias, and may therefore have been altered in the Heb. text, which S. Jerom translated. The psalmist expresses the same idea as Moses had done. Bert.—Both those who adore idols of their own imagination, and their graven things, are condemned. W.

Ver. 9. Gods. Princes or angels, elohim, v. 7. H.

Ver. 11. Light. Prosperity. The Babylonians are punished. C.

Ver. 12. Holiness. Or sanctuary. Praise for ever his adorable name, (C.) since he is holiness itself, and sanctifies others. W.

PSALM 97

PSALM 97. (CANTATE DOMINO.)

All are again invited to praise the Lord, for the victories of Christ.

Ver. 1. David. His name occurs not in Heb. though the psalm is worthy of him. Bert.—It may refer to the return from captivity, as a figure of the world’s redemption.—Things. In rescuing his people from slavery, and in the incarnation. C.—For him. Or alone. M.—Christ raised himself by his own power. C. Is. 62:5.—He redeemed mankind for his own glory, sibi. Bert.

Ver. 2. Salvation. Cyrus, or the Messias, whose gospel is preached every where, (C.) and who has saved the world. W.

Ver. 3. Israel. The prophets foretold the liberation of the Jew, and of mankind. The blessed Virgin seems to allude to this passage. Lu. 1:55. C.—Some Jews were converted. Rom. 11. W.

Ver. 6. Cornet. This was a crooked horn; the trumpets were of metal. Num. 10:2. C.

Ver. 8. Hands. These strong oriental expressions hardly suit our language. C.—They contain a metaphor, and denote the inhabitants of the world, (H.) or those rivers, which spring from Jesus Christ, and mountains, which are raised to heaven by his grace, to praise the Redeemer. S. Aug.—Then the just are exhorted to lift up their heads. M.

PSALM 98

PSALM 98. (DOMINUS REGNAVIT.)

The reign of the Lord in Sion: that is, of Christ in his Church.

Ver. 1. Himself. There is no title in Heb. Hence many have attributed it to Moses, with the preceding psalms. But the name of Samuel destroys this pretension, and most people suppose that David wrote it at the removal of the ark. C.—Others refer it to the return from captivity, (Theod.) or to the dedication of the second temple, (C.) and the reign of the Messias. Bert.—Angry. Though many enemies rage, and the whole earth be stirred up to oppose the reign of Christ, he shall still prevail. Ch. Ps. 2.—His will shall be done, (W.) for He sitteth on the Cherubim. H.—Ferrand infers from this expression, that the psalm cannot regard the times after the captivity, as the ark existed no more. But this is not clear; and, at any rate, this idea might still be retained, as God is represented on a chariot drawn by Cherubim. Ezech. 10:1. Dan. 3:55. C.

Ver. 4. Loveth judgment. Requireth discretion. Ch.—Heb. “the king’s strength loveth judgment.” He does nothing unjustly, as the enemy is forced to confess. C.—This is the highest glory of a king. Theod.—God requires that we should honour him, by correcting our fault. S. Aug.—Directions. Most right and just laws to direct men. Ch.—Jacob. There God principally instructed mankind, and punished the perverse. Other nations he seemed to have left to themselves. H.

Ver. 5. Adore his foot-stool. The ark of the covenant was called, in the Old Testament, God’s foot-stool: over which he was understood to sit, on his propitiatory, or mercy-seat, as on a throne, between the wings of the Cherubim, in the sanctuary: to which the children of Israel paid a great veneration. But as this psalm evidently relates to Christ, and the New Testament, where the ark has no place, the holy Fathers understand this text of the worship paid by the Church to the body and blood of Christ in the sacred mysteries: in as much as the humanity of Christ is, as it were, the foot-stool of the divinity. So S. Ambrose, l. 3. de Spiritu Sancto, c. 12. and S. Augustin upon this psalm. Ch.—The last mentioned holy Doctor inculcates the obligation of adoring Jesus Christ in the blessed Eucharist, and refutes the Capharnaïtes, &c. Jo. 6. W.—The Jews adored God, shewing a relative honour, by prostrating themselves before the ark, in the same manner as Catholics do before holy images. Bert.—It is. Sept. and some psalters, “he is holy.” C.—Heb. is ambiguous. Bert.—“I discover how I may adore the foot-stool, ... without impiety. Christ took flesh of Mary, ... and give it us to eat for our salvation. But none eats that flesh, till he have first adored it." S. Aug.

Ver. 6. Moses and Aaron among his priests. By this it is evident, that Moses also was a priest, and indeed the chief priest, in as much as he consecrated Aaron, and offered sacrifice for him. Lev. 8. So that his pre-eminence over Aaron makes nothing for lay church headship. Ch. W.—Samuel is only mentioned as a Levite. See 1 K. 25:1. C.

Ver. 7. Cloud. As he did to Samuel in the night. Bert.—Them. By their example, the psalmist insinuates, that priests in the new law shall pray for the people. W.

Ver. 8. All their inventions. That is, all the enterprizes of their enemies against them, as in the case of Core, Dathan, and Abiron. Ch.—Num. 16. W. Syr. "injuries." The failings of these great men were punished in mercy. C.—Thou hast made them harmless in all their works. Houbig.

Ver. 9. Mountain. On Sion, or in the Catholic Church. Bert.—"Those who do not adore on this mountain, are not heard unto eternal life." S. Aug.

PSALM 99

PSALM 99. (JUBILATE DEO.)

All are invited to rejoice in God, the Creator of all.

Ver. 1. Praise. Theodoret reads, “A psalm of David for confession, with a title in Heb.” But now that text and the Sept. agree with us. The psalm refers to the same events as the preceding. C.

Ver. 2. Earth. Both Jews and Gentiles, (W.) converted to the faith of Christ. H.—Gladness. God loves a cheerful giver. M.—He hears our prayers in all places. Yet appoints the temple more peculiarly for that duty. W.

Ver. 3. Not. S. Jerom seems to have read lu for lo, and translates, “and we are his,” which Houbigant follows. But the Vulg. gives a very necessary instruction, as some might perhaps forget that God preserves their life every instant, (Bert.) and some have foolishly imagined, that the collection of things might give existence, or be eternal. Bert.

Ver. 5. Truth. This is commonly joined with mercy. C.—God faithfully executes what he has promised (W.) for the liberation of his people, and the conversion of the Gentiles. C.

PSALM 100

PSALM 100. (MISERICORDIAM & JUDICIUM.)

The prophet exhorteth all, by his example, to follow mercy and justice.

Ver. 1. Himself. He describes the conduct which he was resolved to follow in ruling, (C.) or alluding to the pious king Josias. Theod. 4 K. 20:2. The sentiments are not confined to rulers alone, (Bert.) though this psalm might be styled, “the mirror of princes.” Muis.—Mercy and judgment. The chief qualifications of a king. C.—Whether I am treated with clemency or with rigour, I will praise thee. Chal.—No one should presume, since there is judgment, nor despair, since mercy goes before. S. Jer. S. Aug.—I will sing, and I will understand. Piety is one of the best means to acquire the intelligence of these heavenly hymns, and of the whole scripture. H.—We might translate the Heb. (C.) and Vulg. Mercy and judgment I will sing, to thee, Lord, will I sing psalms. H.

Ver. 2. I will understand, &c. That is, I will apply my mind, I will do my endeavour, to know and to follow the perfect way of thy commandments: not trusting in my own strength, but relying on thy coming to me by thy grace. Ch.—I will watch over my conduct.—When thou. So S. Jer. and Houbigant read, though Sept. have “when wilt thou come to me?” Bert.—He is impatient of having the ark: but is well apprized that God will not dwell in a polluted soul, or in a wicked city: therefore he promises to remove such obstacles.—I walked. Or “will walk.” All the other verbs should be in the future; (C.) though that is of no consequence. Bert.—David had studied to regulate his interior and his family before, as much as he did afterwards. H.—His fall was most likely (Bert.) subsequent to this event. 1 K. 6:11. H.—He acknowledges that he had done what he here mentions, by God’s assistance. W.

Ver. 3. Thing. Or Heb. “word of Belial.” I will neither suffer an evil word or action to pass without reproof. C.

Ver. 4. Know. I looked upon them with such contempt, (Euseb.) or I highly disapproved of their conduct, (S. Aug.) and would have no society with them. C.—David was, in a manner, forced to tolerate Joab; but he shewed sufficiently his displeasure, and ordered his successor to punish him, as soon as it could be done with safety to the state. M.

Ver. 5. Persecute. Or abhor (W.) with a perfect hatred. We must shew our displeasure if we hear detraction, (H.) that we may not partake in the crime. S. Jer.—The court is most likely to be infected with this vice, as people are continually endeavouring to supplant their rivals. C.—Secret thoughts of resentment must be stifled in their birth. Euseb.—Heart. Heb. “wide heart,” which is sometimes taken in a good sense. 3 K. 4:29. But here it denotes the ambitious and misers. Prov. 28:25. C.

Ver. 6. Faithful. A prince cannot do every thing himself. But he ought to make choice of the most virtuous and skilful ministers. C.

Ver. 7. Prosper. Heb. “shall not be pleasing,” (S. Jer. H.) or “maintain himself.” C.

Ver. 8. Morning. Without delay, (W. Jer. 21:12. H.) and with a mind composed. S. Isid. Pelus i. ep. 321.—The Jews explain this of the judgment of zeal, by which a person might kill a notorious criminal, without any trail, (C.) in imitation of Phinees and Mattathias. 1 Mac. 2:24. H.—God alone will punish all malefactors at the last day. S. Aug.—The Fathers admonish us to resist temptations at the beginning. C.

*Principiis obsta; sero medicina paratur
Cum mala per longas convaluere moras.* Ovid.

PSALM 101

PSALM 101. (DOMINE EXAUDI.)

A prayer for one in affliction: the fifth penitential psalm.

Ver. 1. Poor. Heb. “afflicted.” This may refer to some of the captives, who were returning, (v. 14. C.) or to Jesus Christ, (S. Aug.) to whom S. Paul applies v. 26. 28 and whose redemption was prefigured by the former event. C.—David might have both in view. H.—Yet most believe that the psalm was written by Daniel, or Jeremias, &c. C.—It may have two literal senses, like many others. Bert.

Ver. 2. Cry. Fervent petition, though only in the heart. Ex. 14:15.

Ver. 3. Turn not. We first abandon God, but must humbly beg for grace. W.

Ver. 4. Fire. Cremium denotes any combustible matter. Colum. xii. 19. S. Jer. C.—While in mortal sin, our best actions, alms, &c. avail nothing. 1 Cor. 13. W.

Ver. 5. Bread. Through excessive sorrow, (H.) I am fainting in captivity. C.—The human race is relieved by the bread of life, the holy Eucharist. S. Aug. Bert.—Sinners have no relish for spiritual food. W.

Ver. 6. Flesh, or “skin.” S. Jer.—The necessary moisture is consumed. Euseb. W.

Ver. 7. A pelican, &c. I am become, through grief, like birds that affect solitude and darkness. Ch.—Kaath comes from a root that signifies to vomit (H.) as this bird lives chiefly on shell-fish, which it swallows, and when the heat of its stomach has caused the shells to open, it throws them up again, and eats the fish. Bochart. Parkhurst in ka. H.—It seems to be the onocratalus, which resembles the heron. What many of the ancients have related concerning its giving life again to its young, by its blood, &c. must be accounted fabulous. The Fathers have not expressed these facts as certain, (C.) though they have beautifully accommodated them to the tenderness and grace, which Christ has shewn to lost man. See Euseb. and S. Aug. H.—Raven. Owl, or rather another species of pelican, so called from having a bag under its chap, “to inclose” fish, &c. Parkhurst in cose.—With its prey it retires to solitary places. So the distressed love solitude and silence. H.

Ver. 8. Sparrow. Heb. Tsippor means any “quick moving” bird, &c. (Idem.) and as the sparrow is not a solitary bird, it may here signify the owl. Bochart. C.—But these etymological reasons are not very certain, nor important. H.—We may adhere to the Sept. as many interpreters do. Bert.—The sparrow having lost its mate, mourns in or near its nest. W.

Ver. 9. Against me. To kill me, (Acts 23:12) or to prove my guilt. C.—They are my sworn enemies, (W.) who formerly seemed my friends. H.

Ver. 10. For. Or “therefore.”—Weeping. These figurative expressions denote excessive grief. Ps. 79:6. C.—Meat and drink gave me no more satisfaction than ashes. W.—Rolling on the ground, through grief, my food was spoiled. M.

Ver. 13. Memorial. Thou wilt be remembered by us with gratitude for all eternity, (H.) or wilt thou punish for ever such short-lived creatures? C.—S. Paul understands this of Jesus Christ, (Heb. 1:11. Bert.) or he rather refers to v. 26. H.—The hope of the Messias gives me comfort. W.

Ver. 14. Come. Pointed out; (Jer. 29:10. C.) or David wishes to repair the ravages caused by Absalom, or foretells the return from captivity, (H.) and the grace granted to the Church, and to every faithful soul. W.

Ver. 15. Thereof. They had a great regard for the very soil. 4 K. 5:17. C.—Heb. “dust,” as it was then uncultivated. Bert.—Esdras, &c. repaired the ruins of Sion, as Christ and his apostles established the Church. M.

Ver. 16. Glory. The conversion of nations is often predicted as about to take place after the captivity; yet not so fully, till the time of Christ. C.—His glory is so manifest, that all kings know it, although, they be not converted. W.

Ver. 17. Seen. Dwelling with us. Jo. 1. H.—Jerusalem had attained its ancient splendour before the coming of the Messias. C.

Ver. 18. Humble. Patriarchs, priests, and all true penitents. W.

Ver. 19. Generation. Lit. “in another,” by the subsequent writers of the Old and New Testaments. H.—Let all posterity become acquainted with this psalm, and know under what obligations we have been to the Lord.—Created. The Jews after the captivity, and, in a higher sense, (C.) Christians, the new creature. 2 Cor. 5:17. C. W.—This interpretation seems much the better, as kings and nations were converted only by the Messias, and his apostles. Bert.

Ver. 22. That. The faithful in the Church endeavour to serve Christ. W.

Ver. 23. Kings. This did not take place till the gospel was preached, (C.) though some kings offered sacrifice before, yet without being converted. See Zac. 2:10. H.

Ver. 24. He answered him in the way of his strength. That is, the people mentioned in the foregoing verse, or the penitent, in whose person this psalm is delivered, answered the Lord in the way of his strength: that is, according to the best of his power and strength; inquiring after the fewness of his days: to know if he should live long enough to see the happy restoration of Sion, &c. Ch.—The sense of the Vulg. is as good as that of the present Heb. “he hath weakened (afflicted. Mont.) my strength, in the way; He hath shortened my days. I said, my God, make me not depart in the midst,” &c.—The captives, or those who were set free, address God, though the psalmist himself may express what prayers he had poured forth in his bonds. C.—The variation of the Sept. and Heb. originates in the points; and the text has, his force, very properly, though the Jews would substitute “my.” Bert.—The stability of the Church is hence proved by S. Aug. H.

Ver. 25. Days. Allow me time to grow in virtue. W. If I be cut off in my youth, I may not be prepared. M.

Ver. 27. Perish. Or be changed in their qualities, (W.) as well as all other things, like a garment. This does not convey the idea of annihilation; and the Fathers are divided on this subject. 2 Pet. 3:10. Apoc. 21:23. C.

Ver. 28. Fail. This regards Christ, (Heb. 1) who has established his Church, (C.) to be perpetual (W.) in this world, (H.) and triumphant in eternity, ver. 29. C.—The psalm must therefore be understood literally of Him; unless it may have two senses, which those to whom S. Paul wrote must have known, otherwise it would not prove Christ’s divinity. The Socinians are greatly puzzled how to evade this argument. Bert.

PSALM 102. (BENEDIC ANIMA.)

Thanksgiving to God for his mercies.

Ver. 1. Himself. All agree that David wrote this psalm as a model of resignation. The occasion is not known. Bert.—It may express the sentiments of the captives, (C.) or of converts to Christianity, (Euseb.) and is written with inimitable sweetness.

Ver. 3. Diseases. He had described captivity as an illness. Ps. 101. C.—God graciously forgives sin, and removes bad habits. He preserves us from falling, and grants us the victory, with all our reasonable requests. W.

Ver. 5. Eagle's. Which get fresh feathers every year, like other birds. Is. 40:31. C.—The eagle retains its vigour for a long time, (H.) though many fabulous accounts have been given of its renovation. Bert.—The new birth in baptism, (Theod.) or by faith, (Euseb.) or the resurrection of Christ are thus insinuated, (S. Leo, ser. i.) as well as (H.) our resurrection and state of grace. The one is necessarily connected with the other, and both senses are good. W.

Ver. 6. Mercies. Heb. “Justice” in protecting the innocent.

Ver. 9. Ever. He executes his threats, but soon pardons us. C.—Heb. “he will not plead always, nor watch to surprise us for ever;” (C.) or “retain” his anger. Bert.—He is inclined to pity us, and only inflicts a temporal punishment on the penitent, as Christ has paid their ransom. W.

Ver. 10. Iniquities. Which deserved eternal reprobation.

Ver. 11. Earth. There is no proportion between God's mercy and our crimes. C.—Sins are perfectly washed away, (W.) and not barely covered, as the east cannot be the west. Bert.—Sin remitted “sets for ever.” S. Aug.

Ver. 14. He remembereth. Rom. Sept. and psalter, &c. “Remember.” Other copies agree with us. C.—God compassionates the frailty of those who fear him. Origen falsely inferred from v. 9 that the devils and the damned would one day be saved. But this is contrary to Scripture. v. 17. Matt. 25. Apoc. 20. &c. W.

Ver. 16. In him. Or “over it;” the flower. Or the spirit of God's indignation will overwhelm him. The soul of man departs, and cannot naturally be reunited with the body, though it greatly desire that union. C.—The longest life is but like the duration of a flower, (Is. 40:6. H.) and the splendour of the noblest families is not better in the sight of God. S. Aug.

Ver. 17. Justice. In protecting the oppressed, (C.) and rendering to every one according to his deserts abundantly. H.—God never punishes more than a person's crimes have merited. Ex. 20:5 and 34:6. C.

Ver. 19. All. When Christ shall sit in judgment, (Bert.) and the wicked be suffered no longer to disturb the order of things, and the joy of the elect. H.

Ver. 20. His angels. You who have executed the orders of God for our delivery, help us to return him thanks. C.—Hearkening. Lit. “to hear,” (H.) or that all may learn to obey God's mandates when they perceive how carefully the angels put them in execution. Bert.

Ver. 21. Hosts. Sun, &c. which never deviate from their regular course.

Ver. 22. Soul. In vain should we behold all nature praising God, if we neglected that duty. Bert.—All the works of the Most High praise him, being under his dominion. W.

PSALM 103

PSALM 103. (BENEDIC ANIMA.)

God is to be praised for his mighty works, and wonderful providence.

Ver. 1. Himself. Sept. Comp. adds, “a psalm of the creation,” (H.) as this is the subject; but there is no title in the original. Bert. The psalm contains “a divine and natural philosophy,” (Euseb.) respecting the creation and providence. Plato has written something similar in his Timæus, (C.) though this comparison is indecent. Bert.—The imitation is no disparagement, however, to this divine word, and we may surely notice the concord between the inspired and profane writers. H.—This psalm seems to be a continuation of the preceding one. C.—Great. Lit. “magnified,” in the same sense as we say, hallowed be thy name, praying that God may be honoured by all his creatures; (H.) though He cannot increase in holiness, &c. S. Aug.—We become acquainted with his greatness, by considering his works. C.—Praise.

Lit. "confession," (H.) Heb. "glory." C.—Thou art entitled to all praise. W.

Ver. 2. Light. In this manner he always appeared. 1 Tim. 6:16. Ex. 3:2. C.—Christ only once assumed such a glorious form at this transfiguration, because he came to instruct our mind and heart. Bert.—Stretchest. Heb. and Sept. have the verbs in the third person, till v. 6 as the Vulg. has here extendens. But S. Jerom and others agree with us, though S. Paul quotes according to the Heb. 5:4. H.—Pavilion. The idea of the heavens resting like a tent upon the earth was very prevalent. Job 9:8. Is. 40:22.

Ver. 3. Water. The Fathers are not agreed about the nature or situation of these waters. Some take them to be angels. S. Jer. Gen. 1:7.—Others suppose that the waters in the clouds, (C.) or the crystalline substance in the region of the stars are designated. W.—These waters are represented as the roof of God's palace. Euseb.—Winds. With surprising velocity, his providence being every where. Theod.—The psalmist accommodates himself to our capacity, to shew that God does all with the utmost ease. W.

Ver. 4. Fire. The elements execute his will, (C.) or rather, as the apostle, and Chal. &c. intimate, the angels do this (Bert.) with zeal and activity, (Heb. 1:7. H.) and ease. W.—Some would attribute to the angels some sort of light bodies, and Grotius attempted to revive this opinion, which never could prevail over the contrary one, which is universally received. C.

Ver. 5. Ever. The established order shall subsist, though the earth may move. Ps. 101:27. Bert.—It is fixed by its own gravity in the centre. W.

Ver. 6. The deep. Heb. "thou hast covered it with the abyss." This proves that there was no pre-existent matter, otherwise God would not have begun with the plunging his work in the abyss, and in confusion. But he chose to bring this beautiful world out of a state of disorder in the space of six days, as Moses and the psalmist relate. Bert.—At first, all was created, covered with the waters. Gen. 1.

Ver. 7. Fear. Heb. "retire precipitately" to their beds, at thy counsel, (H.) on the third day. C.—Some think that a storm or the deluge are here described, (S. Chrys.) which is less probable. Bert. C.—The waters would naturally cover the earth; but are confined to their proper channels by God. W.

Ver. 8–9. The ... descend. This should be within a parenthesis, (Bert.)

as the sequel speaks of the waters. H.—Earth. This seemed miraculous to those who supposed that the earth was flat. S. Amb. Hex. iii. 22. Job 7:12. Amos 5:8. C.—Providence points out the place for every thing. H.—

Jussit et extendi campos, &c. Ovid, Met. i.

—God derogated from this law, which he had appointed for the waters, when he brought them again to overwhelm the guilty earth. H.

Ver. 10. Pass, to supply the wants of all creatures. Springs and rain afford the necessary moisture.

Ver. 11. Except, waiting for one another, as all cannot drink at the fountains at the same time. The Chal. has the same idea, though the Heb. is explained, “shall break” (Houbig. “shall satisfy”) their thirst. Bert.)

Ver. 13. Rooms, with rain, v. 3. C.—Earth, or its inhabitants. T.

Ver. 14. Service. Cattle, or beasts of burden, are thus fed for man’s service, though he may also eat legumes, &c. C.—Bring. God gives the increase. 1 Cor. 3:7. H.

Ver. 15. Oil. This was an article of food, (Bert.) and deemed almost as requisite for anointing the body, as bread and wine to support nature. Pliny xiv. 22. Hence it was prohibited in days of fasting. C.—These three things are put for all sorts of food. W.

Ver. 16. Field. Heb. “of Jehova.” Houbigant would substitute ssodi, “field,” (H.) as this name of God is never used to denote “high” trees, &c. Bert.—God provides for the wants of all the creation, even of those things which seem less necessary to us. C.

Ver. 17. Sparrows, or “birds” (Ps. 101:8. H.) in general. Bert.—Highest; or, literally, “the tribe of the heron is their leader,” (H.) first making their nests. Sept. seem to have read better than the present Heb. “the stork, the fir-trees are its house.” Bert.

Ver. 18. Irchins. S. Aug. reads also, “hares.” These desert places are not useless. C.

Ver. 19. Seasons and festivals, which it points out: mohadim. H.—During the night wild beasts seek their prey, as men and cattle may labour in the day-time. The sun, &c. were made for man’s use, (C.) and not to be adored. Euseb.—These bodies move with the same regularity as if they had intelligence. Heracleot.

Ver. 21. God, like all other creatures. Ps. 144:15 and 146:9. C.

Ver. 24. Riches. Lit. “possession.” H.—Heb. “The fulness of the earth is thy possession.” Sept. and ancient psal. “creature;” κτισεως. The other interpreters read κτησεως, (C.) which the Vulg. adopts. H.—The world derided Jesus Christ, the wisdom of God, and Creator of all. S. Aug.

Ver. 25. Arms. Man acts thus to denote something very extensive. H.—The sea is frequently put for the same purpose. Job 11:9. Lam. 2:13. Arms is omitted in the Sept. and the ancient psalters.—Creeping. Fishes, (Gen. 1:20. C.) and all animals without feet (W.) in the waters. H.—Nothing multiplies so fast as fishes. Arist. Anim. ix. 17. W.

Ver. 26. Go. The sea, which seems to be placed as a barrier, tends, by means of navigation, to the general convenience of nations. C.—Dragon. Leviathan, a huge fish, (Job 40:20. W.) which Bochart takes to be the crocodile; though that monster is found rather in rivers. Bert.—It designates here all whales, and other great fishes which play in the sea without experiencing any fear like mortals. Some translate “to play with it,” (C.) as αὐτῷ cannot agree with Θαλασσα. Bert.—The prodigious size of these fishes costs God nothing. C.—The whole creation is but a plaything for him, ludens in orbe terrarum. Prov. 8:31. H.—Some Jews impiously pretend that God plays three hours a day with the leviathan, and that he only created two; one of which he killed to make a feast for the elect, and the other causes the tides, by turning itself, &c. See 4 Esdras, written at least in the second century. S. Jer. Muis. C.—Though this monster be too strong for man, it cannot defend itself out of water; (W.) and even in its own element man gains the victory by his skill. H.

Ver. 28. All, is not in Heb. Sept. C.—But the sense is the same. H.

Ver. 30. Thy. Chal. adds, “holy;” and the Fathers explain it of a spiritual renovation, or of the resurrection of the body. Bert.—Animals are still preserved by Providence. Euseb. C.

Ver. 31. Works. Seeing that they are good. Gen. 1:31. May all continue to answer the end for which they were created. C.

Ver. 32. Smoke. Exod. 19:18 and 20:18. God is terrible as well as clement. C.

Ver. 35. No more. So S. Paul pronounced sentence on those who did not love the Lord Jesus, (1 Cor. 16:22) yet without any animosity. Bert.—The saints thus pray for the conversion of all, (S. Athan.) or express the approbation of God’s sentence against the damned. W.

PSALM 104. (CONFITEMINI DOMINO.)

A thanksgiving to God, for his benefits to his people Israel.

Ver. 1. Alleluia. This word occurs at the end of the preceding psalm in Heb. and means, "Praise ye the Lord," though it is also used as an exclamation of joy; for which reason it is left untranslated. See Apoc. 20. S. Aug. ep. ad Casulan. C.—It implies that we must praise God with all our power; and Catholic writers retain this (W.) and similar words in the original. H.—The first 15 verses of this psalm nearly agree with that which was composed by David, when the ark was to be removed from the house of Obededon. 1 Par. 16:8. 22. H.—But the last part seems to have been added by him, or by another afterwards, with some small alterations. Bert.—It was perhaps adapted to the dedication of the second temple, with the two following psalms. C.—Gentiles. Their conversion is thus insinuated. C.—The apostles preached to all. Euseb.—How much more ought we not to celebrate the mysteries of Christ? W.

Ver. 3. Glory. 2 Cor. 10:17. Euseb.—Lit. "be praised," (H.) knowing to what an honor you have been raised, (Deut. 30:7. Jer. 9:23) and live accordingly.

Ver. 4. Evermore. Be assiduous to obtain is favour, and present yourselves in his holy temple as often as you are able. C.

Ver. 6. His servant. Or "servants." Sept. Vulg. is ambiguous. Heb. declared for servant here; but, his chosen, is certainly plural, and refers to all the people, and 1 Par. 16:13 we read, seed of Israel, his servants. H.

Ver. 8. Generations. Or from the call of Abraham. But this was to be understood if the Israelites continued faithful, (Deut. 28) or the promise regards the spiritual children of Abraham, who are blessed for ever, (Bert.) and continue to the end of the world. H.

Ver. 11. Lot. Lit. "line," with which land was measured. C.—The descendants of the patriarchs would never have lost this inheritance if they had observed the law. The promise was therefore conditional; though it was absolute, in as much as all were to be blessed in their seed: as they had begun to be, when Jerusalem was destroyed by Titus.

Ver. 12. Very few. Heb. "as it were reduced to nothing," to avoid a tautology. Bert.—But this version is not necessary. H.—Jacob at this time was not married, (Bert.) and his parents had no part of the land. This manifests the power of God, and the faith of the patriarchs, (C.) who doubted not but that he would realize what he had promises. H.

Ver. 13. People. This seems to be a fresh obstacle to their possession of Chanaan. C.

Ver. 15. Prophets. The word anointed is thus explained, as the patriarchs were not kings over any but their own families, though they were equal in riches to many kings. They foresaw future events, and offered sacrifice to God, as priests, in which sense also they may be styled anointed. No visible unction, but the divine appointment, might be requisite. God protected them in a wonderful manner, and selected them for his peculiar people. C. Heb. 11:8.

Ver. 16. And. The psalmist continues to mention the favours of God, till the Israelites entered the promised land, which the author of 1 Par. 16 passes over. H.—Bread. In time of famine, people are not strengthened with their food. Euseb. Ezech. 4:16 and 5:16.—God permitted, (W.) or caused the famine to rage.

Ver. 17. He sent. Drawing good from the malice of Joseph's brethren, (H.) in which he had no hand. Bert.—Who could have thought that this event would have tended to Joseph's exaltation, and to the safety of his father's house?

Ver. 18. Fetters. Heb. cebel, (H.) "a chain, or the stocks." The meaning is not ascertained. C.—Soul. Lu. 2:35. He was in great distress, (H.) and in danger of perishing. Theod.

Ver. 19. His word. By which he foretold his own glory, or what should befall the king's two officers, which brought him into notice. Gen. 37:9 and 40:22. His word, may also refer to God's decree. C.—Inflamed him. He received the gift of prophecy, (H.) and being inflamed with the love of God, resisted the solicitations of Putiphar's wife.

Ver. 22. Instruct. Heb. "bind" by precepts or chains, (Bert.) as he had all power.—Wisdom. Joseph was considered as the oracle of Egypt, and the prime minister. C.—We cannot doubt but he would strive to undeceive the people with regard to many superstitions. Theod. S. Aug.

Ver. 23. Cham. Who resided there, and was worshipped under the name of Jupiter Ammon. Bochart, Phaleg. iv. 1. C.—Misraim was his son, and peopled the land. Gen. 10:13. W.

Ver. 24. Exceedingly. In 215 years, 600,000 warriors sprung from seventy people, (C.) or from seventy-five, as Sept. and S. Stephen read, comprising eight wives, Jacob, and sixty-six of his descendants. Seventy might naturally produce two million and a half in such a space of time. But the Hebrews had been cruelly oppressed. God's blessing enabled them to increase as they did. Bert.

Ver. 25. He turned their heart, &c. Not that God (who is never the author of sin) moved the Egyptians to hate and persecute his people; but that the Egyptians took occasion of hating and envying them, from the sight of the benefits which God bestowed upon them. Ch. S. Aug.—He permitted the malice of the Egyptians, (Theod.) and employed them to chastise his people, who had adored idols. Euseb. Acts 7:43. Felix, Prot. &c. translate the Heb. "their heart was turned." Bert.—The perversity of the Egyptians came from themselves, though it was turned to a good account. W.

Ver. 27. He gave. Heb. "they placed in them the words of their signs." C. Houbig.—But the Chal. and S. Jerom are conformable to the Sept. Bert.

Ver. 28. Grieved not his words. That is, he was not wanting to fulfil his words: or he did not grieve Moses and Aaron, the carriers of his words: or he did not grieve his words, that is, his sons, the children of Israel, who enjoyed light whilst the Egyptians were oppressed with darkness. Ch.—He performed what he had threatened without reluctance. W.—We may also translate, "he added no threat (H.) before this ninth plague was inflicted." Heb. "and they did not irritate (or transgress) his word." The envoys of God were obedient to him. The copies of the Sept. are not uniform; (C.) some omit the negation, which would give a very good sense; though it must be allowed to be inaccurate, unless the Heb. be read with an interrogation, "did they not resist his word?" alluding to the Egyptians. Bert.—Almost all the ancients have the plural exacerbaverunt, except S. Jerom, in his commentary. C.

Ver. 29. Blood. In reality, so that the fishes were killed. S. Athan.

Ver. 30. Land. Including the rivers. Ex. 7:1 and 8:3.—Kings, or noblemen. Bert.

Ver. 31. Flies. This was revealed to David, or known by tradition, as it is not recorded by Moses. W.—Some copies of the Sept. have, "the dog-fly," cinifes (Ex. 8:16) gnats, (H.) which are very common and tormenting in Egypt. The Jews understand lice. Joseph and the Chal. C.

Ver. 32. Rain. Which fall in Egypt, though less frequently. C. Wisd. 16:17.

Ver. 34. Bruchus. An insect of the locust kind, (Ch.) or a worm which spoils corn, &c. W.

Ver. 36. Labour. This explains the first part of the verse. Gen. 49:3. Ps. 77:51. H.—The fifth and sixth plagues are not specified. W.

Ver. 37. Gold. Which the Egyptians gave to get quit of them, (Ex. 11:1) and that with joy, (v. 38) though they might at first only intend to lend. S. Aug. Bert.—Feeble. This refutes the notion which the enemies of the Jews had propagated, saying that they were banished on account of the leprosy. They felt none of the inconveniences which fell on the Egyptians, and God removed every obstacle which might retard their flight. C.—According to the course of nature, out of two million and a half, 150 people die daily. Bert.

Ver. 40. Asked. Chal. and ancient psalters add, “for meat.” Heb. “he (Moses or all the people) asked, and the quail came,” at Sin. Ex. 16:13.

Ver. 41. Rivers. The waters from the rock were so abundant. C. Ex. 17:6. Bert.

Ver. 44. People. Whose crimes have deserved death. Num. 33:51. Deut. 7:5. C.

Ver. 45. His justifications. That is, his commandments: which here, and in many other places of the Scripture, are called justifications, because the keeping of them make men just. The Protestants render it by the word statutes, in favour of their doctrine, which does not allow good works to justify. Ch.—The design of God in granting Chanaan to the Israelites, was to encourage them to preserve the true religion. C.

PSALM 105

PSALM 105. (CONFITEMINI DOMINO.)

A confession of the manifold sins and ingratitude of the Israelites.

Ver. 1. Alleluia. The word is repeated in some copies. S. Jer.—But Heb. has only one at the end of the preceding psalm: of which this appears to be a sequel. As in the former, God’s favours were specified, so here the ingratitude of his people is acknowledge. C.—It may refer to the Jews during, (Euseb. Vatab.) or after the captivity, (C.) and to all in the state of sin. S. Jer. Bert.—The 47th and 48th verses agree with the three last, which were sung at the translation of the ark. 1 Par. 16:34. H.—Hence that canticle now makes a part of our Ps. 104. 95 and 105 with various alterations made by the prophet. Bert.—Give glory. Lit. “confess” (H.) your sins, to obtain mercy, (S. Chrys.) or rather praise God, (Theod.) who is the source of all good. W.—This was the usual prayer of the Israelites, in ceremonies of thanksgiving. 2 Par. 5:13. C.

Ver. 2. Powers. See Eccli. 43:29. No one can sufficiently praise God’s power or mercy. Bert.

Ver. 3. Times. He only who perseveres to the end shall be crowned. Matt. 24:13. Ezec. 33. H.—Such as these can alone worthily sound forth God’s praises, (Bert.) being so happy as to preserve their innocence, or at least to repent. W.

Ver. 4. Us. Heb. “me.” But Aquila, Syr. &c. agree with the Sept. Some of the Jews were already returned, and pray for the liberation of their brethren. C.—The Fathers explain it of Christian converts. S. Chrys.—People. According to thy gracious promises, that we may enjoy the blessings of thy elect. W.

Ver. 6. Sinned. Here commences the confession of sins. The just man first accuses himself. Prov. 18:17. C.—The same prayer is repeated, Judith 7:19 and Dan. 9:5 as it might be applicable to the captives. Bert.—We have injured ourselves, our neighbours, and our God. W.

Ver. 7. Going up. Or proceeding. The banks of the sea were more elevated than the country from which the Israelites came, (C.) and the land of Chanaan was still higher. See Ps. 106:23. Gen. 12:9. H.—Sea even. Is not in the Sept. C.

Ver. 8. Known. Is. 63:12. He might justly (W.) have abandoned them to the Egyptians. Ex. 14:11.

Ver. 9. Rebuked. Commanding with power.—Nah. 1:4. C.—Wilderness. Or plain country. H.

Ver. 10. Redeemed. What price was given? This is a figure of baptism, in which the fruits of Christ’s blood are applied to our souls. All sins are there destroyed, as the Egyptians were in the Sea. S. Aug. Ser. xlii. de Temp. W.

Ver. 11. Left. Manetho and Lorin assert, that Pharaon reigned afterwards. But this is contrary to the Scripture. All who came to attack Israel perished. C.—They supposed that the waters were enchanted. S. Iræn. iv. 48.

Ver. 12. Words. And Moses his servant. Ex. 14:31 and 15:1.

Ver. 13. Counsel. Three days after the passage of the sea, God laid injunctions upon the at Mara, which they would not observe. Ex. 15:22. C.—They coveted unnecessary things. W.

Ver. 14. Desire. Or they greedily sought for flesh meat, (H.) at Sin, or Pharan. Ex. 16:13. Num. 11:31. Chronological order is not observed. C.

Ver. 15. Fulness. Or disgust: πλεσμονη. Sept. probably read zore, (as Num. 11:20) instead of razon. Heb. “leanness,” (C.) which is a natural consequence of immoderate repletion. H.

Ver. 16. Holy one. By his function (W.) of priest. Core wished to take his place, as the rest did to supplant Moses in the civil government. Num. 16. C.

Ver. 17. Adiron. With Core, though his children were preserved. C.—God presently resented the injury done to his ministers. Euseb.

Ver. 18. Wicked. Two hundred and fifty accomplices, (Num. 15:35. C.) and fourteen thousand seven hundred murmurers. M.

Ver. 19. Graven. Heb. “molten.” The image must first be graven. Bert. Ex. 32:3.

Ver. 20. Grass. This enhances their folly. God is often styled the glory of his people. C.—Osee (10:5) contemptuously calls the golden calf, the glory of Samaria. H.—This idolatry was truly blameable, (Rom. 1:23) and not the veneration paid by Catholics to the images of Christ, &c. W.—Those who pretend that the Hebrews meant to adore the true God, and not the idol Apis, are here clearly refuted; they forgot God, &c. Acts 7:40. Bert.

Ver. 23. Breach. Like a valiant captain, (C.) or pastor. H.—God complains of those who neglected this duty. Ezec. 13:5 and 22:30. The psalmist alluded to the conduct of Moses, after the people had adored the calf, (Ex. 32:10) or when they had joined with Core. Num. 16:44. C.—The intercession of the saints is useful, (S. Aug.) still more after their victories. S. Jer. ad Vig. ii. 2 Mac. 15:14. Bert.—God spared the people for the sake of Moses. W.

Ver. 24. Word. Which Moses, Josue, &c. announced. Num. 13 and 12:2–9. C.

Ver. 26. Over them. Swearing C. to destroy them, (H. Ezech. 20:23) and scatter them, as they now experienced. Lev. 26:31 and Deut. 28:36. 64.

Ver. 28. Dead idols, without life, (Ch.) particularly Adonis (C.) whose death is bewailed by the poets, &c. H.—Idols kill their votaries. W.

Ver. 29. Multiplied. All who had murmured perished, or this may relate to the 24,000. Num. 25:9. C.—Ezech. 20:23. S. Paul (1 Cor. 10:8) speaks of those 23,000 slain by the Levites. The Heb. which has only 3,000 must be inaccurate. Temporal chastisements were intended to prefigure those which are eternal, as the Jews knew that such rewards and punishments were to be considered (Matt. 19:16. Bert.) as the spiritual sense of the law. Grot. Jur. ii. 20, 39.

Ver. 31. Evermore. Phinees thus by his pious zeal, merited (W.) God's favour, and the high priesthood (Num. 25:13. C.) for his posterity, for 900 years, though the latter promise seems to have been conditional. Bert.

Ver. 33. He distinguished with his lips. Moses, by occasion of the people's rebellion and incredulity, was guilty of distinguishing with his lips; when, instead of speaking to the rock, as God had commanded, he said to the people, with a certain hesitation in his faith, Hear ye rebellious and incredulous: Can we from this rock bring out water for you? Num. 20:10. Ch.—For thus doubting of God's will, he was temporarily punished,. Deut. 1:37. W.—The death of his sister, and the ingratitude and rebellion of the people disturbed him. Theod. See Is. 63:10. Houbigant follows the Arab. "he delayed or hesitated." Yebatte means, "he spoke rashly." Some refer this, (Bert.) to God. "He reproached ... that they," &c. (M.) which is not necessary, (Bert.) or he sentenced Moses to die. Kimchi.

Ver. 34. Them. Commanding no idolatrous government to be left in the land, nor any Chanaanite to be permitted to live, who should make opposition. The law of extermination must probably be thus restricted. The Jews neglected these ordinances, and hence became so often infected with idolatry, (Bert.) even to the end of the republic, when many still adored the sun. Joseph. Bel. ii. 8. Ex. 23:32. Jos. 13:13.

Ver. 38. Chanaan. These unnatural sacrifices were perhaps practised under the judges, or at least under the kings. W.—Some pretend that the children were only made to pass over or between fires. But this is refuted by facts. Lev. 18:21 and 4 K. 16:3. Jer. 7:30—Polluted. Infecta:

εφονοκτανηθη is used by Sept. in this sense, though it signifies also, “was slain;” interfecta, as most Latin Bibles and Fathers read, before the correction of Clem. VIII. The former expression is more natural and conformable to the Heb. C.

Ver. 39. And was. Heb. “and they were defiled.” S. Jer.—Inventions. Idols of their imaginations, (H.) and lusts. C.

Ver. 45. Repented. Ceased to punish, (Euseb.) when the people repented. S. Jer.—God then regarded them in mercy, having given them grace to repent. W.

Ver. 46. Mercies. He inspired their enemies with pity for them. Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerxes shewed them favour. Ps. 83:12. C.

Ver. 47. Save. These verses, which may be well recited in times of schism, (W.) occur, 1 Par. 16 being probably inserted by Esdras, or some other prophet. But here they are in their proper place, as many of the Israelites are still in captivity. C.—yet as this is only a system, we may rather suppose, that David wrote this conclusion. He had to encounter various nations, who might have made captives; and he may beg that all may be united in the same faith, and avoid the society of the wicked. Bert.

Ver. 48. So be it. The second Amen occurs not in Heb. But Alleluia is placed instead, which the Vulg. makes the title of the next psalm. H.—This conclusion of the fourth book seems to be added by the collector. Ps. 40. C.—Yet this is uncertain. H.

PSALM 106

PSALM 106. (CONFITEMINI DOMINO.)

All are invited to give thanks to God for his perpetual providence over men.

Ver. 1. Alleluia. S. Aug. repeats this word. But it occurs in the Heb. &c. at the end of the preceding psalm, of which this is a continuation, shewing how God pardoned his people, and delivered them from captivity, (C.) and mankind from sin. H. Fathers Bert.—Glory. Lit. “confess” your sins, thay you may praise God, (Ps. 105. H.) and adore his mercy and providence. W.

Ver. 2. Countries. The Jews from Babylon, and all who were redeemed by Christ. C.—He was promised immediately after the fall. W.

Ver. 3. Sea. Heb. miyam, for which we should read imim “the right,” denoting the south. C.—But the sea, or ocean, is properly used in the same sense. Bert.—The Ammonites, Philistines, Syrians, and Idumeans, from these four quarters, often reduced the Israelites to servitude, under the judges. Houbig.—From all parts, the Jews of the ten tribes returned in the reigns of Darius and Alexander. C. Diss.—But the texts which are applied to this event speak rather of the conversion of the Gentiles, which the prophet has here in view. Bert.—None are excluded from the benefits of this redemption, but by their own fault. W.

Ver. 4. Habitation. So were the Jews distressed at Babylon, (C.) as many are forced to wander in the world, and all are involved in sin. W.

Ver. 5. Hungry. As both Jews and Gentiles were for the word of God, (Amos 8:11) when Christ appeared. H.—Their wants cried aloud, (S. Aug.) though they sought him not. Isai. 65:1. Bert.—Those who call upon God are relieved by him, in the manner which is most for their welfare. W.

Ver. 8. Mercies. We are unworthy to open our mouths. This chorus is repeated, (v. 15. 21. 31) by the people, after the Levites had sung the intermediate sentences. C.—The v. 6. 9. 13. 19 are of the same nature, and refer to different sorts of calamities. Bert.—All the benefits of God, proceeding from his mercy, and not from man’s deserts, praise him. W.

Ver. 10. Darkness. This second allegory represents the condition of the captives, and of mankind, before Christ’s coming. C.—The former enjoyed some liberty, Jer. 29:5.—But the latter were most miserable, (Matt. 9:15. Lu. 4:18) and of these the words are most naturally explained. Bert.

Ver. 11. Exasperated. Heb. “changed, or frustrated.” This is the source of all misery, (C.) as calamities are commonly inflicted on account of sin. W.

Ver. 12. Labours. There were slaves of various descriptions: some were confined to hard labour, and chained down at night. C.

Ver. 14. Bonds. Of their passions. See S. Aug. Conf. viii. 11. H.

Ver. 17. Iniquity. Making them alter their conduct. Hebrew seems less correct: “they are foolish on account of their way, and they,” &c. Illness is sent to punish sin. Job 33:19. Matt. 9:2. Jo. 5:14. C.

Ver. 20. Word. Jesus Christ, according to the prophetic sense, adopted by the Fathers, (S. Atha. or. 3. &c.) though it literally implies, that at God's command the sick were healed. Matt. 8:7.—This allegory again represents the state of captivity. C.

Ver. 22. Praise. Instead of victims. Ps. 26. &c.

Ver. 23. Down to the sea, &c. Captivity is here compared to a tempest. C.—The apostles carry the tidings of salvation to all places. Persecutions are raised; but God grants peace to his Church under Constantine. Euseb.

Ver. 24. Deep. The fury of tempests. Various nations, and the treasures of the deep. M.

Ver. 26. Heavens. So Virgil says:

*Tollimur in cælum curvato gurgite & iidem
Subductâ ad Manes imos descendimus undâ.* Æn. iii.

Ver. 27. Up. They knew not how to proceed. Ambiguis ars stupet ipsa malis. C.

Ver. 29. Breeze. Heb. "silence, or calm."

Ver. 30. For. Even to Jerusalem. C.

Ver. 31. Men. We must thank God for having enabled us to repent, v. 8. W.

Ver. 33. Wilderness. God caused his people to pass through the Red Sea, and the Jordan, to possess the fruitful country of Chanaan, part of which had been cursed for the crimes of the Sodomites. H.—He has punished Babylon, (Jer. 25:12) made a straight road from his people, (Is. 35:8) and enabled them to cultivate their country again, v. 41. C.—The synagogue has been abandoned, and the Church chosen. Bert.—The power of God is displayed, who caused the land of promise to be more fertile for his people, which is now very barren. W.

Ver. 34. Barrenness. Or "saltness." H.—He alludes to the environs of Sodom. Gen. 13:10 and 19:24. W.

Ver. 37. Of birth. A plentiful crop, facient fruges germina. S. Jer. C.—Abundance of fruit shall grow in some places, while others are punished on account of sin. W.

Ver. 40. Princes. Jochonias was humbled, (H.) and exalted, with Daniel, &c. 4 K. 25:27. Others explain it of Nabuchodonosor and Baltasar, who were reduced to the state of ignominy and death. C.—The Jews experienced the greatest miseries at the last siege of Jerusalem. Bert.

Ver. 41. Sheep. The Gentiles took the place of the obstinate Jews. S. Aug.

Ver. 42. Mouth. The psalmist saw Babylon before its ruin, (C.) at least in spirit. God's judgment strengthen virtue, and repress the wicked. H. The propagation of the gospel put to silence the oracles of the pagans. Bert.

Ver. 43. Lord. This is the part of wisdom, and deserves our serious consideration, (H.) as Osee (14:10) and our Saviour admonish. Matt. 11:15 and 13:9. Mar. 4:9. &c.

PSALM 107

PSALM 107. (PARATUM COR MEUS.)

The prophet praiseth God for benefits received.

Ver. 1. Himself. By repeating here what occurs in Ps. 56 and 59. David teaches us to excite our fervour by such sentiments as have formerly made an impression upon us. Bert.—He spoke before of his own victories: now he considers those of Christ, and of his Church, (Geneb.) as well as the state of the captives. Theod. C.

Ver. 2. My heart, &c. Is not repeated in Heb. But it is, Ps. 56:8.

Ver. 3. Arise, my glory. Is found also in this psalm, though not here in Heb. &c. S. Jerom (ad Sun.) thinks some copyist has inserted it. C.—But it seems to be here in its proper place. Bert.

Ver. 4. Nations. David made various conquests, which prefigured those of Christ, to whom the rest of the psalm belongs. S. Aug.

Ver. 7. That. See Ps. 59:7. W.

Ver. 8. Holiness. Or holy one, sancto: (H.) meaning Jeremias 25:11 who foretold the end of the captivity, (C.) or David himself, and the Messias, his son, in whom he will rejoice. H.

PSALM 108

PSALM 108. (DEUS LAUDEM MEAM.)

David, in the person of Christ, prayeth against his persecutors; more especially the traitor Judas; foretelling and approving his just punishment for his obstinacy in sin and final impenitence.

Ver. 1. David. S. Peter attributes it to him, and gives us the key to this psalm, by applying (v. 8) to the traitor Judas. Acts 1:16, 20. Bert. T. vii.—Our Saviour seems to allude to it, when he styles Judas, the son of perdition. Jo. 17:8. It may also have a reference to Doeg, or Achitophel, who were his forerunners. Ven. Bede thinks it was composed by the Machabees, against apostates. The Church used it in the deposition of bishops, and against usurpers of ecclesiastical goods: (Grot.) and, in times of ignorance, some thought hereby to discover thieves. The style is very vehement, (C.) containing the sentence pronounced by the sovereign judge against the reprobate. H.

Ver. 2. Praise. Heb. “God of my praise,” (C.) whom I always adore, under every dispensation of Providence. H.—Yet the original may agree with the Vulg. and Christ desires to be glorified, (Jo. 12:23 and 17:5. Bert.) and styles his passion, his praise. Theod.—David appeals to God’s judgment. C.—Man. The Pharisees, &c. endeavoured to entangle Christ. Matt. 22. W.

Ver. 3. Cause. Or provocation. H.—So Catiline gratuito potius malus quam crudelis erat. Sallust.—The sanctity of Jesus Christ could not be overwhelmed, or hidden, (H.) even with the torrent of abuse thrown upon him.

Ver. 4. Detracted. Heb. and Sept. “calumniated,” as v. 20 and 29. C.—Prayer. Jesus Christ prayed for his enemies, (Lu. 23:34. Flam.) and did many good works for the benefit of all. Jo. 10:32. Acts 10:38. David had also signalized himself in the defence of his country, and yet was banished. He shews that he was animated with the perfect spirit of the gospel, though the law permitted retaliation. Ex. 21:24. C.

Ver. 6. Set thou the sinner over him, &c. Give to the devil, that arch-sinner, power over him: let him enter into him, and possess him. The imprecations contained in the thirty verses of this psalm, are opposed to the thirty pieces of silver for which Judas betrayed our Lord: and are to be taken as prophetic denunciations of the evils that should befall the traitor, and his accomplices, the Jews; and not properly as curses. Ch.—The devil entered into Judas, (Jo. 13:2. C.) who hung himself in despair. W.—The Jews were abandoned over to cruel masters, as Doeg and Achitophel presently perished. Ps. 51:5. It was customary at trials, for a satan, or “adversary,” to be stationed at the right hand of the accused. Zac. 3:1. C.

Ver. 7. Prayer. Or may his supplication to judges for pardon irritate them, (C.) and let it not move God to mercy any more than a sin. M.—God rejects such prayers as are destitute of the proper conditions, as he did those of Antiochus, (S. Aug. C.) and they are a fresh sin. Bert.—Yet the prayer of a sinner is not so, when he acts sincerely. H.

Ver. 8. Bishopric. Επισκοπην, “inspection or pre-eminence” of any kind. Judas lost his spiritual office, and the Jews all dominion in a very short time. S. Peter quotes this passage, and only the Socinians will assert that he does not adhere to the literal sense. Bert.—The apostleship (W.) was given to S. Matthias. C.—The priesthood of Aaron was forced to give place to that of Melchisedech. M.

Ver. 9. Wisdom. Judas was married, (S. Aug.) and stole for his family; (Lyrar.) though as the Scripture is silent, S. Chrys. believes the contrary. M.—The synagogue being rejected, the Jews are in a manner orphans. C.—The posterity of persecutors prosper not long. W.—All sorts of imprecations are used that some may fall upon the guilty. Geneb. M.

Ver. 10. Out. Heb. “seek.” S. Jer. “be sought after,” which implies that the are rejected. Houbig.—The being reduced to beg, is terrible to one who has been brought up in a better manner.—Dwellings. Sept. (M.) and S. Jer. “ruins.” The Jews were forbidden to weep over the ruins of Jerusalem, and are become vagabonds. C.

Ver. 11. Usurer. The Romans forced the miserable Jews to pay taxes, and Domitian banished them from Rome, to live in a wood, where their furniture was only a basket and some hay, and their wives came to beg.

Cophino fænoque relicto

Arcanam Judæa tremens mendicat in aurem. Juv. Sat. xi. 540. C.

—At the last siege, some of their bodies were ripped open, to discover the gold which they might have swallowed. Joseph. Bel. vi. 15. See Deut. 24:10. M.

Ver. 13. In one. Heb. “another.” Let none remember them. The ruin of Jerusalem took place within forty years time. C.—Arch-heretics are not long followed; their disciples make fresh discoveries. W.

Ver. 14. Out. As children derive great advantages from the piety of their parents, so they also feel the punishment of their crimes, when they imitate them. Deut. 24:16. Ezech. 18:20. If they share in the afflictions of their family, and are free from sin, this must be considered as a trial, and they will be amply rewarded in a future world. God is the arbiter of the life and death of all. External miseries may afflict both the just and sinners; but the motive for their being sent is very different. The Jews prayed, Let his blood be upon us, and upon our children; (Matt. 27:25) and they became chargeable with all the crimes of their ancestors. Matt. 23:35. C.

Ver. 15. They. Iniquities, (H.) or may the sinners be “against the Lord,” and He against them. Lev. 26:21. C.

Ver. 16. Mercy. Therefore he, the chief, and each of his adherents, can expect to find no mercy. Jam. 2:13. H.—By the most crying injustice, the Jews put to death, the man of sorrows, (C.) who had been pleased to assume our nature, and had not where to lay his head. Lu. 9:58. M.

Ver. 18. Bones. This strikingly describes the malediction of a person who has swallowed iniquity like water. Job 15:16. Prov. 4:17. The Jews had spoken ill of Christ, and of his disciples. Matt. 27:25. Jo. 9:17. C.—Let all who delight in cursing, attend to this sentence. W.—They like those things, which bring both temporal and eternal misery. M.

Ver. 20. Work. They effect their own ruin. H.—The Jews pretended to act for the glory of God, being influenced with a zeal with knowledge. Some translate, “let such be the recompense;” which is not amiss. Bert.

Ver. 21. With me. Many ancient psalters supply, “thy mercy,” with the Arab. C.—Grace must always accompany our endeavours. 1 Cor. 15:10. Bert.

Ver. 22. Within me. In the garden. Christ did penance for sin all his life. He wept over Jerusalem. Lu. 19:41. H.

Ver. 23. Locusts. David was forced to wander about. Christ continually sought after the lost sheep, (C.) and was hurried to different tribunals. M.—S. Jerom applies this to the Jews, and S. Aug. to Christians under persecution. C.

Ver. 24. For oil, propter oleum. The meaning is, my flesh is changed, being perfectly emaciated, and dried up, as having lost all its oil, or fatness. Ch.—Or, “on account of the privation of perfumes,” (Bert.) which the Jews looked upon as necessary. David and Jesus Christ were exposed to many inconveniences.

Ver. 25. Heads, and saying, Vah, &c. (Matt. 27:40) as Semei insulted David, (2 K. 16:5. C.) though he is not said to have shaken his head, for which reason the prophecy may rather relate solely to Christ. Bert.—“To pay our ransom, he was crucified; to be crucified, he was despised; and to be despised, he appeared in a state of abjection.” S. Aug.—These three steps were requisite, as the Jews would never have dared to lay hands on him, if he had appeared in glory. Bert.

Ver. 27. It. My suffering, (Bert.) or deliverance. C.—Jesus Christ prays for a glorious resurrection, and that his enemies may be covered with all possible confusion. W.

Ver. 29. Cloak. Ἀπλούς, means the outward robe. Heb. mehil. H. Gal. 3:13.—“The cross of Jesus Christ shall be the glory of believers, and the confusion of infidels.” S. Leo, ser. xviii. de pas.—A salutary and inward shame may be of great advantage. H.—Christ prays that his enemies may feel such a sorrow, and be converted. S. Jerom—“He speaks not against, but in favour of, the Jews.” S. Aug. C.

Ver. 30. Many. In the Catholic Church, (H.) till the end of the world. C.

Ver. 31. My. Heb. “his soul from the judges,” Pilate and the Jews, (C.) particularly the Sanhedrim. How many still continue to persecute Christ, and do not tremble! Bert.

PSALM 109

PSALM 109. (DIXIT DOMINUS.)

Christ's exultation, and everlasting priesthood.

Ver. 1. David. It is of faith that he wrote this psalm on the Messias. The Jews, in our Saviour's time, were convinced of it, (Matt. 22:42) so that their posterity (Bert.) in vain attempts to explain it of Abraham, David, Solomon, Ezechias, Zorobabel. S. Chrys.—Even some of the candidly own that it can relate to no other, (Thalmud.) and Christians are universally of this belief. C.—Lord. Heb. Jehova, (H.) the Father. M.—To my Lord. Heb. Ladoni, (H.) the Son incarnate, (M.) Lord of all, though the son of David. W.—Who else could be David's superior? as Christ argues. H.—The title Adonoi is given to God, (v. 5. &c. C.) as my is never united with the ineffable name.—Hand. In equal power (Bert.) as God, and in the highest dignity as man, after the ascension. C.—This thought should encourage us to suffer patiently, (Col. 3:1) as Christ was to suffer, and thus to enter into his glory. The saints did not strive to divide him. But we would suffer nothing, and yet be glorified at the hour of our death! Bert.—Until. This word does not always mark the term of a thing. When all shall be subdued, then Christ will continue to it with greater majesty, (1 Cor. 15:25. C.) for ever. W. Heb. 10:13.—Footstool. As was customary with conquerors. Jos. 10:24.

Ver. 2. Sion. Whence the empire of Christ extended over all the earth. Is. 2:3. Lu. 24:47. C.—In spite of opposition, he reigns in the Church, and will one day make all submit. Bert.—On Whitsunday the new law was promulgated, to continue unto the end of time. W.

Ver. 3. Principality. Christ says, All power is given to me. Matt. 28 and this he will display (H.) in the day of judgment. S. Chrys.—Ἀρχή is used in this sense by Xenophon, &c. (C.) as principium is by Suetonius, (in Aug.) yet it may also signify, This is the “origin,” or source of thy authority, from the womb,” &c. S. Chrys. Bert.—The consubstantiality of the Son is hence manifest, and this ensures every perfection. H.—The Father and the Son are both principals. S. Jer.—Christ was in the beginning, (Jo. 1) and the very beginning. His eternal birth is here mentioned, though some have explained it of his temporal nativity, which took place before the rising of the day-star. C.—This, however, would seem a trivial circumstance, (Bert.) whereas the birth of Christ before the whole creation is of great consequence.—Saints. Or “holy places,” sanctorum. Heb. “In the beauties (behadre. H.) S. Jer. has read berri, in the mountains, (C.) of holiness, (Mont.) or of the sanctuary.” Christ will come to judge surrounded by his angels, (C.) and saints. H. S. Aug.—I begot thee. This expresses the sense more clearly (H.) than the Heb. tibi ros emissio (Heb. tal.) nativitatis tuæ. S. Jerom’s version must be deemed inaccurate, and the Heb. points, (Bert.) which render the modern versions so very different from ours, may be safely rejected. H. See Muis. Geneb. C.—Robertson mentions fourteen different translations of this text, and many more might be given. H.—But ours is clear, and beautiful. C.—Prot. “Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, in the beauties of holiness, from (Marg. more than) the womb of the morning: thou hast the dew of thy youth.” H.—Thy offspring shall be very numerous, (Is. 48:1 and 14:8) and people shall willingly join thy banners, or rather come to offer victims in the sanctuary. C.—The eternal birth of Christ, (Mic. 5:2) from his father’s substance, establishes his principality, so that he rises triumphant, &c. W.—The present Heb. text seems to be purposely rendered obscure, or unintelligible by the Jews, both in this verse, and in the following. D.

Ver. 4. Repent. Not that He can ever do so, or give way to error: but the sacred writer expresses himself thus, to give us the greatest security. C.—The order. Heb. dibrathi, “my order,” Melchisedech. The i has been perhaps designedly inserted, to render the argumentation in the epistle to the Hebrews of no weight, “as the force of the text sinks into just nothing.” Kennicott.—Prot. and Pagnin here abandon the Heb. But Montanus corrects the latter, and substitutes “upon my word,” which is more honest, as he deemed the Heb. text unerring, though here it be not so unquestionably, as the Almighty would thus address Melchisedech, unless that title be here given to Christ. S. Jerom takes no notice of my, no more than the apostle, &c. H.—This instance “may perhaps put all serious Christians upon deliberating—whether they should any longer maintain the absolute integrity of the present Hebrew text.” See Ps. 15:10. Kennicott, Dis. i. p. 219.—Melchisedech. Christ is declared king and priest for ever, (W.) like Melchisedech, who united in his person both dignities, and presided not over a particular people, nor stood in need of any stated place. His succession is not recorded, and his sacrifice consisted of bread and wine; in all which respects he differed from the Levitical priest, and prefigured Christ, who is immolated under the same species throughout the world. Mal. 1:11. M.—We read in Scripture of three orders of priesthood: 1st, of kings, 2d, of the first-born, and 3d, of Aaron. Melchisedech, in quality of king, exercised the priestly office, as both functions were formerly united: and hence the word Cohen signifies both a temporal and spiritual prince. This light of nations ensured to his order a perpetual duration, whilst that of Aaron was to have an end. Thus Christ offered to his Father from all eternity the sacrifice of his obedience, and future sufferings; and in time, he presented that of his own life, which he continues to offer in the Catholic Church, (C.) by priests who are only his ministers. 1 Cor. 6. W.—The apostle does not specify the oblation of bread and wine, as it was unnecessary, the sacrifice of Christ on the cross having put an end to the sacrifices of the old law, which could only be offered by the children of Aaron, from whom he did not spring. This was enough for his purpose. But as Melchisedech offered bread and wine, Christ must also have done the same, to be of his order. S. Cyprian, and the other Fathers, with great unanimity observe, that the sacrifice of Melchisedech was a figure of that of Jesus Christ, in bread and wine; and of course (Bert.) our sacred mysteries must contain the substance. H.—By their application, Christ still pacifies his Father in behalf of sinners: so that the effects of his priesthood do not cease, as those of all the priests in the Old Testament did by their death. W.

Ver. 5. The Lord. He speaks to God the Father concerning the Messias, (M.) or God assisted the sacred humanity. S. Chrys.—In the Godhead the persons are equal. The Father is at the right of the Son, as He is at his Father's. v. i. S. Aug. C.—Yet it seems more probable, that the discourse is addressed to the first person. Bert.

Ver. 6. Ruins. Heb. and Sept. “with dead bodies,” (C.) or he will fill up the places of the fallen angels. Jans.—Implevit valles. S. Jer.—Christ was placed for the fall and for the resurrection of many.—Of many. Heb. “the head in an extensive territory.” We might render the Vulg. “he shall crush the heads of many in the land.” H.—Rebellious kings, with their populous kingdoms shall be destroyed. W.—The power of the devil, and of all his agents, shall be crushed, though they may fill the greater part of the world, (H.) in terra quam multi occupant. Bert.

Ver. 7. Way. By the torrent Cedron, the passion of Christ is insinuated. Houbig.—During life, he and his faithful servants shall be exposed to many sufferings, for which they will be amply rewarded. W. Phil. 2:9. —A torrent often denotes affliction. Ps. 17:5. Is. 30:28. Yet here it may signify, that Christ will supply every thing requisite to establish his Church. To find water for an army was of the greatest consequence. Jer. 31:9. Ps. 77:20 and 4 K. 3:9. C.—Like a valiant conqueror, Christ seeks for no delicacies. Muis. C.—Those who come nearest to this divine pattern, will obtain the highest place in heaven. Bert.

PSALM 110. (CONFITEBOR TIBI DOMINE.)

God is to be praised for his graces, and benefits to his Church.

Ver. 1. Alleluia. This psalm consists of praise, and is alphabetical, (Bert.) the sixteen first letters being found at the head of each hemistic, to v. 8; and in the 9th and 10th, we find the six last Heb. letters, which is also the case in the following psalm. H.—In some Latin copies, we also find the same title in both, as they may relate to the captives. C.—The Church thanks God for the institution of the Eucharist, &c. S. Aug. Euseb.—Praise. Lit. “confess to.” H.—Congregation. Where there are few or many together, (C.) in private for my own sake, and in public for edification. W.

Ver. 2. Sought out. Exquisite, or designed for our benefit. He saw that all was good, (Gen. 1:31) though He could have made them better. C.

Ver. 3. Is praise. Or worthy of praise, and magnificent. W.

Ver. 4. Remembrance. He has delivered us from captivity, as he did our ancestors from the Egyptians bondage. Is. 63:11. C.

Ver. 5. Food. Manna in the desert, and what is necessary for us who were in distress in Babylon. Ps. 106:5. In the spiritual sense, (C.) He has given us Jesus Christ, (S. Aug.) or the holy Eucharist. W.—S. Chrysostom understands the word of God, (C.) which profits those only who fear the Lord, (Bert.) and serve him with love. H.—Covenant. God has not acted contrary to the covenant with Abraham, in proposing the gospel, which was all along foretold, as S. Paul shews. Bert.—He will for ever protect his Church, and shew forth the powerful operation of his death, and all his mysteries. W.

Ver. 7. Gentiles. Under Josue, or rather in the days of the gospel. Bert. 1 Pet. 1:3.—Judgment. He will perform his promises, and chastise the guilty. C.

Ver. 8. Equity. Here we have the conditions of a just law. Bert.—Those who keep God's commandments are justified. W.

Ver. 9. Redemption. Under Moses, Cyrus, and Jesus Christ, of whose redemption the former were figures. C.—Christ redeemed man, in order that he might be able to observe the law. W.—Terrible. Holy to the just, and terrible to sinners. S. Jer.—Most are lost by too much security. S. Chrys. hom. xix.—The Hebrews treat the name of God with a respect, which might appear superstitious, (C.) as they will not blot it out, or lean upon the book where it is written, &c. Schikard, Jus. ii. Theor. v. 6.—The Turks have nearly the same regard for the Koran, which should make Christians ashamed of their irreverence and want of faith.

Ver. 10. Fear. Heb. “is the chief part of wisdom.” Jan.—This fear intimates the virtue of religion, to which the Israelites gave the preference over prudence, &c. Joseph. con. App. 2.—This distinguished them from other nations. Deut. 4:8. C.—Fear is the beginning, charity the end of wisdom. Euseb.—Beginning with fear, we ascend to true wisdom, which are the first and last of the gifts of the Holy Ghost. W.—Do it. Act conformably to this fear. H.—Speculative wisdom is good, but not sufficient. Rom. 11:13. S. Chrys. &c.—Many read ea, “those things,” with the Heb. while the Sept. have eam, this wisdom. But Houbigant adheres to the Vulg. Bert.—His. God's, (S. Chrys.) though some would refer ejus to intellectus. Bert.—He shall be praised for ever who has been so well informed as to adopt the fear or wisdom of the Lord for his guide. H.

PSALM 111. (BEATUS VIR.)

The good man is happy.

Ver. 1. Of the returning, &c. This is in the Greek and Latin, but not in the Hebrew. It signifies, that his psalm was proper to be sung at the time of the return of the people from their captivity: to inculcate to them, how happy they might be, if they would be constant in the service of God. Ch.—Yet all Greek copies have not this title, (H.) but only Alleluia, with the Heb. Syr. &c.—It might be composed by Aggæus, &c. as it relates to the captivity, (v. 4) and to the overthrow of Babylon, (v. 10. C.) or David might thus describe the happiness of the virtuous, (Bert.) and give the captives to understand, that sin was the source of all temporal as well as spiritual miseries. W.—Delight. We must love God for his own sake. S. Chrys.—Those who sincerely fear God, will take great delight in keeping his commandments. W.

Ver. 2. Earth. Temporal rewards were proposed to the carnal Jews; but the more enlightened knew what was to be most desired. They sought after the riches, mentioned by the apostle. 1 Cor. 1:5. 1 Tim. 6:18. C.—The just and their seed shall prosper, (W.) at least in the next world. H.

Ver. 3. Justice. Or mercy shall be for ever remembered by en, and rewarded by God. C.

Ver. 4. Darkness. Christ appeared when the world was most corrupt. S. Aug.—God rescued his people from captivity.—He is. S. Aug. and S. Chrys. add, “The Lord God is,” &c. in which sense this is commonly explained, (C.) though it may also refer to the just man. H.

Ver. 5. Acceptable. Lit. “joyful.” Χρηστος, “beneficent.” H.—Give, and it shall be given to you. M.—Judgment. And by liberal alms, prepared for the great accounting day. S. Chrys.—He will say nothing indiscreetly, nor throw pearls before swine; (Matt. 7:6. S. Jer.) neither will he condemn others rashly, (C.) but give prudent advice to the afflicted. W.

Ver. 7. Hearing. Though detraction may assail him, he shall not fear, (C.) since God is the judge. H.—He shall have no cause to apprehend being condemned, (S. Jer.) nor be disturbed about “news,” because his goods are in a place of safety, (S. Chrys. &c.) where thieves cannot steal. H.

Ver. 8. Until. Not that he will be disturbed afterwards, (Ps. 109:1. C.) when his enemies shall be punished. H.—The captives saw the fall of Babylon. C.

Ver. 9. Poor. We must know whom we ought to relieve. Though we may be allowed to retain what is necessary, (2 Cor. 8:13 and 9:11) yet the saints have often very laudably stripped themselves, to clothe others, abandoning perishable goods, that they might obtain heaven. C.—Justice. Works of mercy are so called, because they concur to man's justification. W.—Horn. Power, &c. Cyrus, and the best of his successors, honoured the Jews. C.—The liberality of the just towards the indigent, is far more glorious than that which prompts the vain to give shews, &c. S. Chrys.—The praise of the latter is presently at an end. Bert.

Ver. 10. The wicked. The devil, enraged to see the converts to Christianity, (S. Athan.) or the Jews, (S. Chrys.) instigated by him. H.—All the damned shall rapine at the happiness of the elect, (S. Aug.) as the Babylonians did, when they beheld the prosperity of those who had been captives. C.

PSALM 112

PSALM 112. (LAUDATE PUERI.)

God is to be praised, for his regard to the poor and humble.

Ver. 1. Alleluia. The Jews style this, and the five following psalms, “the great Alleluia,” which they sing after eating the paschal lamb. Eusebius adds, “a psalm of Aggæus and Zacharias,” as it seems to speak of the captives, who return thanks for their deliverance; (Is. 45:6. &c. C.) or David has left this model of thanksgiving for all. Bert.—Children. Heb. “slaves.” M.—The Greek and Latin may signify both. H.—He addresses the Levites, who were addicted to God's service, or the new converts, who were become docile like little children, (1 Peter 2:2. Ps. 8:3. C.) and in a word, (H.) all God's servants. W.

Ver. 3. Same. All the day long, (C.) or rather in all places. Muis. Mal. 1:10. S. Chrys.

Ver. 6. Earth. Providence watches over all. Ps. 137:6. H.—With respect to God, even those who are in heaven are low. W.

Ver. 7. Poor. Jesus Christ and his servants, as well as Joseph, Mardochai, &c. 1 K. 2:8. Lu. 1:51. C.

Ver. 9. Children. Anna and Elizabeth, who were naturally barren, were blessed with what they so eagerly desired, by the divine power. H.—It may be understood of the Gentile world, after it had embraced the faith, (S. Jer. Gal. 4:17. S. Chrys.) or of the captives, (Is. 56:1 and 49:21. Ps. 67:7. C.) though Isaias may also refer to the Church. H.—Joseph was wonderfully advanced in glory, and Sara, Rebecca, &c. were made fruitful.

PSALM 113

PSALM 113. (IN EXITU ISRAEL.)

God hath shewn his power in delivering his people: idols are vain. (The Hebrews divide this into two psalms.)

Ver. 1. Alleluia. This word is placed at the end of the preceding psalm in Heb. though it seems to have been there originally, (H.) as v. 2 we find his, with reference to “the Lord,” who has not been otherwise mentioned before. Houbig.—The psalm may be joined with the former to v. 9, when the Heb. begins a fresh one, relating to the captives, with the two which follow. C.—The division is of no great importance, (Bert.) and we cannot easily decide whether it be here necessary. H.—The Heb. copies have not been always uniform, no more than the Greek in this place. C.—Barbarous. Cruel, (Bert.) or which spoke a language unknown to them. Sym. and Aquila.—Barbarus his ego sum, quia non intelligor ulli. Ovid de Pont. 1 Cor. 14:11.—The Greeks styled all others barbarians, (Fest.) as the Egyptians did. Herod. ii.—Joseph at first did not understand the language of the latter, (Ps. 80:6) and spoke to his brethren by an interpreter. Gen. 42:22. Lohez, denotes one who speaks an unknown tongue, which Chal. expresses by the word borbra, “a stranger, or desert.” C.—Infidels, and those who persecute the true religion, are styled barbarous, though otherwise the Egyptians were very polite and learned. W.

Ver. 2. Judea. Heb. “Juda,” though the sense of the Vulg. is very good, (Bert.) as that country which had been so abandoned, became holy, when God’s people dwelt there. S. Chrys.—After the departure from Egypt, the Israelites were more known as God’s inheritance, over whom he reigned. W. Ex. 19:6.—Hence He complains, when they asked for a king, (1 K. 8:7) though the throne is still called the Lord’s. 1 Par. 29:23. The distinction of Juda and Israel insinuates that the kingdom had been divided. C.—But this had taken place for a time, after the death of Saul. H.

Ver. 3. Saw. He speaks in a poetical manner. All creatures obey God's will. W.

Ver. 4. Skipped. Through joy, exultaverunt, (H.) or rather through fear, v. 7. C.—There was an earthquake, not specified by Moses; or the psalmist speaks of what took place at Ar, (Num. 21:15. W.) unless he alludes to the waters of the Jordan, rising up like mountains. M.

Ver. 8. Waters. They are mentioned twice, as referring to different miracles. Ex. 17:6 and Num. 20:8. Inanimate things are introduced, giving this reply; or the psalmist gives it himself. Bert.—He uses the figure prosopopeia, as if senseless things could understand. W.

Ver. 9. or Hebrew Psalm 115. Ver. 1. Not. Some Jews here commence the 115th psalm. H.—But S. Augustin shews, that this part is well connected with the preceding, the true God being known by his works, while idols are senseless, and therefore can have no pretensions to divine worship. W.—It seems that the psalmist would not break off so abruptly, without praising God for his wondrous works, and the Fathers are silent about the present division of the Heb. (Bert.) though Eusebius and S. Athanasius had occasion to examine the text, as some Gr. copies end here, and others at v. 12, the idols, &c.—Glory. We claim no share in these miracles; or we confess our unworthiness, but do thou deliver us. C.—Thou hast done these wonders to fulfil thy gracious promises, and to prevent blasphemy. W.

Ver. 11. or Hebrew Psalm 115. Ver. 3. Heaven. Sept. add, “and on earth,” which S. Augustin joins with the following words, he, &c. We cannot indeed point God out, as we might do idols. But then what sore of gods are they? C.—Viler than insects. Theod.

Ver. 12. or Hebrew Psalm 115. Ver. 4. Men. All Catholics agree, that idolatry is the “giving of divine honour to any creature.” S. Justin, (con. Gent.) S. Aug. in the ten first books of the City of God, and other Fathers, refute all the species of idolatry. The Platonists adored the angels, or devils, intelligentias separatas. Others worshipped dead or living men renowned for their achievements, like Jupiter and Hercules; while some paid the same sovereign respect to animals, or even to inanimate things, both in themselves and in their images. The psalmist here derides the most gross species of idols, which are made by men, and are incapable of any vital action, being thus beneath the very beasts. Yet some were so absurd as to confide in them, (v. 16. W. or v. 8. H.) and thereby neglected the light of reason, becoming slaves of the devils, who were either the objects of adoration, as in the compacts made by sorcerers, or at least seduced mankind to pay such worship to creatures. Hence all the gods of the Gentiles are styled devils. Ps. 95:5. W.—How unjustly do heretics apply these words to the holy images used in the Church! though they must know (H.) that Catholics do not consider them as gods, no more than the saints and angels, whom they reverence only as the friends of God: treating their pictures with a relative honour, and endeavouring thus to excite themselves to the pursuit of virtue, by the memory of what they had done. Bert.

Ver. 15. or Hebrew Psalm 115. Ver. 7. Throat. Rom. and Milan Psal. add, neither is there any breath in their mouths, which occurs, (Ps. 134:17) instead of this sentence. H.—Juvenal (Sat. 13.) laughs at the silence of Jupiter’s statue. C.

Ver. 16. or Hebrew Psalm 115. Ver. 8. Let. Zeal prompts him to make this imprecation, (C.) or prophecy. Heb. they “are or shall be.” The pagans (H.) could not well find fault with this wish, (M.) as it would be a great honour to resemble real gods. Yet none of their statuaries would be willing to become such statues, or be charged with the wicked conduct of Jupiter, &c. S. Chrys. Bert.—The psalmist justly conforms his will to God’s decree; and still would rejoice if he should give the idolaters grace to repent. W.

Ver. 17. or Hebrew Psalm 115. Ver. 9. The house, is not now in Hebrew. But it occurs in the parallel passage, (Ps. 134) where the imperative is used, as the Hebrew is here pointed. C.—“Israel trusts ... house of Aaron, trust ye in the Lord,” (Mont.) which is much in favour of this text, though S. Jerom, &c. agree with the Sept. C.—Houbigant rejects the Heb. reading, and the house of Israel occurs, v. 12. Bert.—All the people, the priests, and converts from paganism, are invited to praise the Lord. S. Chrys. Acts 2:5 and 10:2 and 13:16. C.—The Church always comprised two distinct orders, the clergy and the laity. M.

Ver. 20. or Hebrew Psalm 115. Ver. 12. Hath. Heb. “will be,” which seems better. Let him bless us. C.—Both versions are true. Bert. Eph. 1:3.

Ver. 24. or Hebrew Psalm 115. Ver. 16. Of heaven. Or the highest heaven, in which God displays his glory, though he fill every place. H.—His benefits to man claim a return of gratitude, and we are not dispensed from shewing our adoration, as deists would hence unreasonably infer. Bert.—Worldly men say this in their hearts, abandoning their pretensions to heaven. W.

Ver. 25. or Hebrew Psalm 115. Ver. 17. The dead. People who are thus affected, give no praise to God, when they die, but descend into hell. W.—Criminals are therefore said to be dead, while the saints only sleep. S. Chrys.—Hell. Heb. “silence,” or the tomb, (Bert.) where none can sound God’s praises, (H.) though the soul in a state of separation may adore him. Bert. See Ps. 6:6 and 29:10.

Ver. 26. or Hebrew Psalm 115. Ver. 18. Live. In the state of justice, and aspiring to God’s kingdom. While we use this world only as the means to ascend thither, we shall praise him for evermore. W.

PSALM 114

PSALM 114. (DILEXI.)

The prayer of a just man in affliction, with a lively confidence in God.

Ver. 1. Alleluia occurs in Heb. at the end of the foregoing psalm, (H.) with which this and the following have an intimate connexion, alluding to the liberation of the captives. Hammond discovers some Chaldeisms, which confirms the supposition that it was composed about that time. C.—Yet this does not deter Muis, &c. from ascribing the psalm to David, reigning in peace, (H.) though others think he alludes to some of his persecutions, and it certainly appears to be of the same nature with the 55th, which was written after his escape from Achis. C.—The sentiments of our Saviour, or of his Church under persecution, (S. Aug.) or those of a saint entering into glory, are here expressed. S. Jerom.—The faithful sigh after their heavenly country. Bert.—Christ speaks here as in the 21st psalm. Houbigant.—Prayer. He always hears me, which prompts me to love. W.—Because. Heb. ci maybe rendered “therefore,” as in the next psalm, 5:1. Lu. 7:47. C.

Ver. 2. Days. All my life. W.—Faith, hope, and charity, (S. Aug.) as well as gratitude, are here commended. Bert.—Love and confidence are necessary conditions of prayer; and increase the more it is employed. C.

Ver. 3. Sorrows. Heb. “bands.”—Perils. Heb. “the straitness of the grave, (C.) the fortifications of hell.” S. Jer. H.—I am like one buried after the manner of the Egyptians, who bound up the dead, and laid them in small holes cut out of a rock. David uses similar expressions to denote the dangers to which he had been exposed, 1 K. 21:12. Ps. 17:6. C.—They may be applicable to all the just. Bert.—When I offended, death and hell, which are due to sin, threatened me unawares; affliction opened my eyes, and I thereupon prayed to thee. W.

Ver. 6. Little ones. In their mother's womb, and infancy. S. Chrys.—Heb. “the simple.” Bert.—He delights to protect those who have no dependence on any other. C.—Humbled. Or afflicted, (W.) and “brought low.” S. Jer.

Ver. 7. Rest. The peace of the soul, which must precede eternal happiness.—Bountiful to. Heb. “rewarded.” The Chaldee termination i, occurs twice in this verse, whence some would prove that it was written after the captivity. This argument is weak, as such things have been observed in the books which were certainly written before. It would only follow, that Esdras might make such alterations, (Bert.) or they may be attributed to some negligent transcriber. H.

Ver. 8. He. Heb. “thou hast.” Yet S. Jerom and the Chal. read like the Vulg. Bert.

Ver. 9. Living. In Judea, which is opposed to Babylon, the region of tears and of death, v. 8. Ps. 55:13. In a spiritual sense, the Fathers understand heaven, where the blessed cannot forfeit their felicity. C.—I will strive to please God among the faithful, who live in grace and glory. W.—Christ here promises the propagation of the gospel. Houbig. 2 Cor. 5:8. Bert.

PSALM 115

PSALM 115. (CREDIDI.)

This, in the Hebrew, is joined with the foregoing psalm, and continues to express the faith and gratitude of the psalmist.

Ver. 1. or Hebrew Psalm 116. Ver. 10. Alleluia is not in Heb. There seems no necessity to join this psalm with the preceding, as the subject is not so much alike as that of many others, which are distinct pieces. S. Paul quotes two passages in their literal sense, (Bert.) as applicable to all who thirst after a future life. It may relate also (H.) to the captives returning, (S. Chrys. C.) to Ezechias, (Ven. Bede) or to the Machabees. Theodoret.—Exceedingly. We must not be deterred from professing our faith by any danger. S. Aug. 2 Cor. 4:13.—I never ceased to publish that I trusted entirely in thy promises, that we should be delivered (C.) in due time. H.—I believed that God would help me, and, as I ought to do, make profession of my faith, under the greatest tribulations. W.—With the mouth confession is made unto salvation. H.—I confess that there is a future world, (v. 9) though I do not see it, but remain in distress. M.

Ver. 2. or Hebrew Psalm 116. Ver. 11. Excess. Sept. “ecstasy.” Enlightened from above. If he had spoken thus by his own spirit, any one might have replied, that no dependance could be placed in what he said. We are all liable to mistake. S. Jer.—Many explain it of David’s “flight” before Absalom. Heb. “in my precipitation,” (C.) or “astonishment.” S. Jer.—Liar. Weak and inconstant of his own corrupt nature, (H.) though not always guilty of lying. C.—S. Paul contrasts this natural weakness with the veracity of God, (Bert.) and the preaching of his apostles. Rom. 3:4 and 2 Cor. 1:17. H.—In the midst of my afflictions, I professed that all man’s help is vain, and I had recourse to God. W.

Ver. 3. or Hebrew Psalm 116. Ver. 12. To me. I have deserved chastisement; how, therefore, shall I express my gratitude for God’s innumerable benefits? W.

Ver. 4. or Hebrew Psalm 116. Ver. 13. Chalice. I will submit to any afflictions, (S. Aug.) seeing they procure such an ample reward. I will unite my sufferings with those of Jesus Christ, (H.) and accept the great benefit of his blood, shed for mankind. W.—Chaldee seems to have had this in view, calicem redemptionis levabo mundo venturo, and Houbigant explains it of Christ, who prayed that the chalice might be taken from him, (Bert.) but presently resigned himself to God’s will. It may also H. imply, the cup of thanksgiving, which was used in pacific sacrifices. Ps. 21:27. Our Saviour followed this custom, when he instituted the blessed Eucharist, as (C.) the Jews do on solemn occasions. Leo. iii. 7. and ix. 2. The pagans had something very similar. Homer speaks of the “free bowl, or cup of liberty,” (Iliad 2.) and Athenæus (i. 23. and ii. 2. and xv. 5.) of “the cup of Jupiter, the Saviour,” in which, after tasting a little wine, water was mingled, with invocations of Jupiter, and all drank what they pleased. C.—The custom of drinking healths might originate in the same jovial humour. H.

Ver. 5. or Hebrew Psalm 116. Ver. 14. Pay. Heb. adds, “now or surely.” Bert.—Vows. Voluntarily, (W.) which I could not do at Babylon. Ps. 65:13. S. Aug. and the ancient psalters omit this, perhaps supposing it to be taken from v. 18.

Ver. 6. or Hebrew Psalm 116. Ver. 15. Precious. I am ready even to make a sacrifice of my life, if God’s glory should require it; for he esteems the death of the saints. W. Bert.—He will not easily abandon them to destruction in this world, as the Heb. implies, (T. C.) though this meaning is not certain, nor verified by facts; the just being often slain by the wicked. Bert.—God rewards the sufferings of his servants; (C.) the psalmist will not therefore be deterred from paying his vows by the fear of death. M.

Ver. 7. or Hebrew Psalm 116. Ver. 16. Handmaid. To be blessed, we must be in a state of grace, and children of the Church. W.—Out of it, death itself endured for Christ would profit nothing, (S. Aug.) but only be “a punishment of perfidy.” S. Cyp.—No worship can please God, unless we be joined in communion with her, as the Fathers observe. Bert.—The psalmist glories in being a servant of God for ever. C.—Bonds. Of slavery, (C.) and sin. W. 1 Cor. 7:22.

Ver. 8. or Hebrew Psalm 116. Ver. 17. Praise. Or thanksgiving. Ps. 26:6. Lev. 7:12. C.—Lord. There is but one, as there is but one faith. Without the latter, it is in vain to call upon God. Eph. 4:4. Bert.—“Whosoever eats the lamb out of this house, (the Church) is profane.” S. Jer. ep. 57. ad Dam.

PSALM 116. (LAUDATE DOMINUM.)

All nations are called upon to praise God for his mercy and truth.

Ver. 1. Alleluia. This word is found at the end of the last psalm, in Heb. H.—The captives invite all to thank God for their delivery, which was a most striking figure of the world’s redemption, in which sense the apostle (Rom. 15:11) quotes this psalm, with the holy Fathers, though Ven. Bede puts it in the mouth of Ezechias, after the retrogradation of the sun. Kimchi allows that it regards the times of the Messias. C.—Praise him. S. Paul reads, magnify him, as the Heb. means, “extol” by your praises. Bert.—All are invited to praise, as the redemption is sufficient, (W.) and designed for all the posterity of Adam.

Ver. 2. Remaineth is not in Heb. Mercy and truth confirm us. H.—The psalmist acknowledges that he also stands in need of them, and S. John assures us, that grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. Bert.—No promise had been made to the Gentiles (W.) by the law; though they were all included in the original promise. Gen. 3:15. H.—God hath withdrawn them from idolatry, to impart to them his mercies. C.

PSALM 117

PSALM 117. (CONFITEMINI DOMINO.)

The psalmist praiseth God for his delivery from evils; putteth his whole trust in him; and foretelleth the coming of Christ.

Ver. 1. Alleluia is borrowed from the end of the former psalm in Heb. Our Saviour and the apostles determine us to explain this solely of the Messiah, though should would also see another literal sense, applicable to the victories of David, or of the captives, at their return, over God or Cambyses. Bert.—This supposition seems very probable, 2 Esd. 6:16. Yet the Jews saw that some passages belonged to the Messiah, and were accustomed to use v. 26 in praying for his manifestation. This psalm is very pompous, and in the dramatic style, (C.) though this is not certain. Bert.—Praise. Or “confess,” and praise God for his great mercies. W.

Ver. 2. That he is good, is not here in Heb. The Sept. insert the words in the two next verses. The people, priests, and all who fear God among the Gentiles must praise him (Ps. 113:11. C.) particularly now under the new law, since they have received greater benefits. W.—Our Saviour seems to allude to this passage, observing that God alone is good, (Lu. 18:28) to intimate that the man who gave him that title, must also acknowledge his divinity. S. Aug. Bert.

Ver. 5. Trouble. Both spiritual and temporal. W.—Enlarge me, or set me at liberty in a spacious place. C.

Ver. 7. My helper. Heb. “to me among the helpers,” (Mont.) or most powerful, (Houbig.) and the mover of all, who lend assistance. Jesus Christ prayed with tears, and was heard for his reverence. Heb. 5:7. We must expect afflictions, (Job 33) and must have recourse to God.

Ver. 9. Princes. For vain is the salvation of man. Ps. 59:13. Jer. 17:5. C.—So neither can man hurt those whom God protects. Rom. 8:31. H.

Ver. 10. Revenged. Heb. “I have broken them,” (C.) or “will render to them.” Houbig.—This may relate to David, Nehemias, Christ, and his martyrs. C.—The Church, or any just man in the midst of enemies, confidently hopes for victory. W.—None shall prevail against Christ and his Church. Bert.

Ver. 12. Bees. Sept. add, “do a honeycomb.” But this is not in the original.—Burned. Heb. “were extinguished.” The Sept. and Chal. seem to have read better, as it would then be useless to add, as is the former ver. “but ... I will destroy them;” and therefore Prot. and Duport here put, “for,” &c. (Bert.) though the ci be still used. H.—The rage of the enemy is well described by the similitudes of bees and fire. C.—Christ was attacked with mortal hatred by the Jews. S. Aug.—The fury of the multitude was fierce, but short-lived, as in God I have overcome them all. W.

Ver. 13. Fall. I was very near falling. Heb. “pushing thou hast pushed me that,” &c. M.—“My sin has strongly pushed me.” Chal. C.—Those who stick to the Heb. suppose, that the psalmist addressed the chief of his enemies. But a letter or two may have been added, as S. Jerom, Felix, &c. admit not the second person. Houbigant prefers, “they have pushed me.” Bert.—By God’s grace I was prevented from yielding to the force of temptation. W.

Ver. 15. Just. Such were the Jews by their vocation, though many answered very ill the designs of God. C.—Christians thank God for their redemption, and confessors are full of joy in their prisons and torments. Acts 16:25. Bert.

Ver. 16. Me is not in Heb. All salvation is from God. Bert.—Right hand, repeated thrice, insinuates the blessed Trinity, as the word Lord is applied to Christ, who effected man’s redemption with singular efficacy. W.

Ver. 17. Live. The captives were dying daily, so that this rather belongs to the Church of Christ. Bert. John 8:51.

Ver. 18. Chastised me, severely. H.—Sept. may also signify, “has instructed me,” (C.) by means of tribulation. H.—God chastiseth as a parent, that his children may not perish eternally. W.

Ver. 19. Justice. Of the temple, where the undefiled Israelites alone can enter, (Ps. 14:1) or the land of Judea. Is. 26. The Fathers explain it of the Church, and of heaven, to which none can be admitted, who have not departed in the communion of saints, (S. Chrys. S. Aug.) having walked in the narrow path. Euseb.—Christ styles himself the way, (H.) and the gate. Bert. Apoc. 22:14.—Formerly penitents were not allowed to be present during all the Mass; and heretics, &c. are cut off from the bosom of the Church. C.—The just here beg for instruction, which they promise to follow. W.

Ver. 22. Corner. This was a sort of proverb, and is applied to David, Zorobabel, or the Jewish nation; but they can only be considered as figures of Christ, in whom this prediction was fulfilled, when he established his Church, and made one people of those who were before divided. Is. 28:16. Matt. 21:42. Acts 4:11. C.—He was rejected by most of the Jews; yet he chose some of them, who, with the Gentiles, formed his Church. H.—This all Christians now confess. W.—The Pharisees pretended to build for the glory of God, when they opposed the designs of Christ, which, nevertheless, succeeded. They could not object to his application of this text, as they would have done, if it had been already verified in David, &c. Bert.—He has laid the foundation. We must be living stones, if we would co-operate in this heavenly building. 1 Pet. 2:5.

Ver. 24. Day. Of grace. W.—The Church often repeats this during the paschal time, though God is equally the author of all days. H. See Eph. 4:30. Jo. 8:56.

Ver. 25. Save me. The person is not expressed in Sept. Or, (C.) Heb. hoshiha na, “salvifica nunc.” Mont.—Na means likewise, “I beg.” H.—Quæso, Domine, salvum fac, obsecro: Quæso, Domine, fac prospere agere, obsecro. This formed the acclamations of the Jewish children, Hosanna, Matt. 21:9. The branches which were carried at the feast of tabernacles, were also styled Hosannas. C.—When Christ entered Jerusalem, the children sung his praises, holding palms. W.

Ver. 26. We. The Levites, (C.) or Christ and his ministers pronounce this blessing, (W.) or the psalmist gives it, after having expressed his thanks for the graces brought by the Messias. Bert.

Ver. 27. Us. Christ, who comes in the name of the Lord, “is himself God,” our instructor. S. Aug. Tit. 2:11. Bert.—Day. The feast of tabernacles, for which this psalm was probably composed. The Jews dwelt under tents. C. Lev. 23:40 and 2 Esd. 7:15.—Altar. Heb. “Bind a festival with cords unto the horns,” &c. To make sense, the Chal. inserts, bind the lamb for the festival. But this Houbigant ridicules, and he believes that the solemn entrance of Jesus Christ into Jerusalem is here foretold. Scarcely any prediction in the Old Testament is more clearly verified in the new. Matt. 21:8. Heb. Bahabothim certainly means, “in ramis opacis,” and S. Jerom translates, “frequent the solemnity in shady boughs.” Bert.—The victims were never tied to the altar, but slain in the porch of the northern gate. Ezech. 40:39. C.

Ver. 28. I will, &c. This might be in the copies of the Sept. It occurs v. 26. (Bert.) though it was here retrenched in the Hexapla. C.

Ver. 29. For ever. Praise is our first and last duty. v. 1. W.

PSALM 118

PSALM 118. (BEATI IMACULATI.)

Of the excellence of virtue, consisting in the love and observance of the commandments of God.

Ver. 1. Alleluia. There is no title in Heb. But (H.) this psalm contains the praises of the Lord, and of his holy law, under fourteen different names, (W.) of way, testimony, &c. repeated in every verse, except the 122d, (Muis.) with surprising variety, so as to avoid tautology, and to give a most perfect system of moral doctrine. It is written according to the order of the Heb. alphabet, (H.) that we may learn it from our infancy. S. Hil.—Eight verses begin with each of the twenty-two letters. S. Jerom (ad Paulam Urb. & Proem. in Lam.) moralizes on the signification of these letters, which he renders, 1. Aleph, &c. “the doctrine—2. of the house; 3. the plenitude, 4. of the tables (or holy scripture)—5. This 6. and 7. this 8. of life—9. a good 10. beginning—11. the hand 12. of discipline (or the heart)—13. from them 14. everlasting 15. help—16. the fountain (or eye) 17. of the mouth 18. of justice—19. the calling 20. of the head 21. of teeth 22. the signs.” By thus connecting the letters, he forms sentences to shew that the holy Scriptures bring us to the knowledge of the Church, and of Christ, &c. See W. Thus every thing serves to excite the devotion of the saints, though the proud may deride their ingenuity. The sacred writers have certainly found some pleasure and utility in writing so frequently in the alphabetical order, though we may not perceive the advantages of it. H.—David is supposed to have written this psalm for the instruction of Solomon in his youth, (Bert.) though others believe that he composed it while he himself was young, and persecuted by Saul. Muis. Bossuet, &c.—It seems very probable, that David wrote it for the consolation of the captives. C. Dan. 9:2.—Origen and Ven. Bede refer it to those times; though it seems in reality to appertain to all who desire to live piously, (H.) and it is only a conjecture that any other but David was the author, to whom it is generally attributed. Its excellency cannot be denied, and the Church has adopted it for her daily office, dividing it into eleven psalms. Bert.—S. Aug. has written thirty-two, and S. Amb. twenty-two sermons on the contents; and S. Basil observes, that David has here composed in one psalm the sum of all that he has written in the rest. Among other points of morality and doctrine, we may remark, that the psalmist insists on the necessity of God’s grace, and the co-operation of free will, (W.) and overturns the Prot. system of justification. D.—The Israelites might recite this psalm on their journey, three times a-year, to the temple, as the fifteen gradual canticles which follow, were to be sung on the steps leading to the house of God. Bellar. M.—Lord. Such only are happy here, (W.) or hereafter. H.—All aim at happiness, but only the virtuous take the proper means to attain it. S. Aug.—The way may here designate this life, (W.) or the law, (S. Aug.) or Jesus Christ. Jo. 14:6. S. Amb. The psalmist evidently presupposes, that some can and do keep the law. W.

Ver. 2. His testimonies. The commandments of God are called his testimonies, because they testify his holy will unto us. Note here, that in almost every verse of this psalm, (which in number are 176) the word and law of God, and the love and observance of it, are perpetually inculcated, under a variety of denominations, all signifying the same thing. Ch.—We must search the law, not out of curiosity, but to practise it; (H.) otherwise we shall become more guilty. W. Jam. 4:17.

Ver. 3. Ways. They may, however, repent. The just are subject to fall. 1 Jo. 1:8. But venial faults are not incompatible with justice. C.—Heb. “They also do no iniquity: they walk in his ways.” Prot. Bert.

Ver. 4. Diligently. Nimis. Lit. “too much.” But this is a Heb. idiom, to imply the greatest diligence. H.—Some would refer it to “God’s strong injunction;” which is not necessary. The psalmist henceforward speaks to God. Bert.

Ver. 5. O! that. Conscious of his own insufficiently, he prays for grace to be justified. W.—Moses acknowledged, that man could not observe the law, without Christ. Deut. 30:11. Rom. 10:6.

Ver. 6. All. At the day of judgment, it will not suffice to have observed only some of the commandments. See S. Jer. S. Amb. &c. who all seem to follow Origen. C.—The breach of any law brings confusion. W.

Ver. 7. Justice. That all thy ordinances are most equitable, (W.) and when I shall have faithfully put them in practice. Eccli. 15:9. Theod.

Ver. 8. Utterly. Heb. nimis, as v. 4. H.—It may be advantageous to us to be left awhile, that we may know our own weakness. S. Greg. Mor. xx. 21. W.—He does not beg never to be tempted, or in tribulation; (H.) but only that he may not yield to sin. S. Hil.—He may always at least have recourse to prayer. 1 Thes. 5:17.—The neglect of this duty occasions so many falls. Bert.

Ver. 9. Correct. Sym. “illustrate.” C.—The observance of the law is the only method to preserve innocence, or to regain it. H.—The Holy Ghost gives this direction to youth, and to all who are exposed to the dangers of pleasure, (W.) as David might do to his son, 2 K. 2:3. Bert.

—In the same sense as we pray, Lead us not into temptation.

Ver. 10. Let. Lit. “do not cast me off.” H.—God rejects none but the negligent. S. Hil. S. Amb. &c.—The just, or the Church in general, here confess (W.) that perseverance is a gift of God. H.—Deprived of grace, we should fall, no less than if God “made us err,” as the Heb. strictly implies. Bert.

Ver. 11. Heart. To guard against the temptations of vanity. C.—Christians formerly concealed the mysteries of religion with the utmost care. S. Hil. and S. Amb.—Moses had given the letter of the law only, insinuating, that it must be kept with all the heart, as David here more fully explains. Bert.

Ver. 12. Justifications. He considers himself as placed at the feet of his divine Master. C.—Though just, he wished to increase in virtue. Apoc. 22. W.

Ver. 13. Mouth. I have concealed them in my heart. Now I am not ashamed to publish them. C.

Ver. 14. Riches. I give thy law the preference. Ps. 18:9. C.

Ver. 17. Give. Heb. “avenge.” Ps. 12:6 and 137:9. Draw me from this state of oppression, (C.) or rather, give me abundant grace, (Bert.) and eternal life. S. Hil.—I cannot fulfil the law, without thy grace. W.—Enliven me. So the Sept. of Aldus reads, though the Roman and Heb. have, “I shall live.” Deut. 30:19. Bert.

Ver. 18. Law. In rewarding, punishing, &c. This thou wilt enable me to perceive, (W.) as thy law is too much above my comprehension. C.

Ver. 19. Earth. At Babylon, or in the world, which is a pilgrimage, (C.) and I am unacquainted with the roads. M.—The latter sense is much better. 2 Cor. 5:6 and Heb. 11:10. Bert.

Ver. 20. Coveted. Heb. “burns, (Aquila; Houbig.) or is bruised, (Bert.) and faints through the desire of thy laws,” (C.) or “judgments.” S. Jer.—If I have but a short time to live, I ardently seek for instruction, (W.) and wish to advance daily in virtue. C.—His humility makes him fear, lest his desire should not be sincere. Bert.

Ver. 21. Cursed. Becoming victims of hell. Matt. 24. Bert. Deut. 27:26. M.

Ver. 23. Princes. Thus Daniel, (6:5) was treated. C.—All who would live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution. 2 Tim. 3:12. H.—The servant of God will adhere to his duty, though his adversaries may be very powerful. W.

Ver. 24. Counsel. Heb. “the princes of my counsel.” (Houbig.) in opposition to those who endeavoured to make him fall, v. 23. H.—The laws of God afford the best advice. An ancient king observed, that the dead were the best counsellors, as they will not flatter, &c. C.—In every trial, we must reflect on the rewards and punishments held out. W.

Ver. 25. Pavement. Heb. “dust,” (Bert.) weighed down by concupiscence, (S. Aug.) and infected by the union with the body. S. Amb.—The just, in great distress, beg to be delivered, conformably to God’s promise. W. Wisd. 9:15. Rom. 7:24.

Ver. 26. Ways. Or sins, (Theod.) or miserable condition, v. 25. C.

Ver. 28. Slumbered. Ενυσταξεν, for which Origen, thinking it a mistake of copyists, substituted εσταξεν, “has melted,” (C.) or “distilled,” (Aquila, &c. Heracleot.) as more conformable to the original, though the sense is much the same. Loss of blood often causes people to slumber. Bert.—S. Hil. would not abandon the Sept. C.—Heaviness, being such anxiety, as to be almost distracted. W.—Chal. “has been in an agony.” Sleep is often put for death. C.—My soul perishes through grief. Houbig.—Hence the three apostles slept. Lu. 22. H.—Ακηδία, or torpor of mind, hinders the persecution of any business. M.

Ver. 29. Iniquity. Heb. “lying.” Let me not imitate the wicked. H.—Remit the punishment of my sins, (Ps. 106:17. C.) also original sin, and its effects. S. Hill.—Protect me from falling. W.

Ver. 32. Heart. Man runs, but God must impart grace. W.—An enlarged heart sometimes denotes the capacity of understanding. 3 K. 4:29. C.—But it is a singular mercy of God to make us love his commands. S. Aug.

Ver. 33. Always. Heb. hekeb, means also, “for the reward,” (Pagn. H. v. 112) or step by step. S. Jer. C.—Make me love thy commandments. W.

Ver. 34. Heart. Enable me to keep and to understand thy law, v. 1. 2. W.—We must observe what we know, that we may receive greater lights. H.

Ver. 35. Desired. Free-will concurs with grace. W.

Ver. 36. Covetousness. Either of money, or any unlawful object. 1 Tim. 6:10. H. The word is very comprehensive. Bert.—Batsah is rendered mammon by the Chal. C.

Ver. 37. Vanity. Idols, worldly prosperity, &c. (Ps. 36:1. 7. C.) shews, (S. Amb.) and all dangerous objects. H.—We must pray that God will take away the occasions of sin, and help us to advance in virtue. W.

Ver. 39. Reproach. Hidden sins of thought, (S. Amb.) or the sarcasms of the Babylonians. C.—Sin is odious, because it is contrary to God's law, which is most delightful. W.—The saints have been often ridiculed. Jer. 20:7. Acts 26:24. H.

Ver. 40. Quicken. The just prays for greater perfection, and for perseverance. W.

Ver. 41. Salvation. The Messias, foretold by the prophets, (Gen. 49. Rom. 3:23. Tit. 2:13. Bert.) or grace, freely promised to all who ask for it. W.

Ver. 42. In any thing. Lit. "the word" that I, &c. Thus he stops their mouths, by professing his confidence in God. H.—The Babylonians insultingly ask, Where is their God? If thou free me from captivity, I may reply that my hopes were not vain. C.—This answer I will give boldly, if I obtain thy grace, which will strengthen my weakness. W.

Ver. 43. Mouth. Let those who preach the truth, live up to it. S. Hil. and S. Amb.—Though the psalmist may be under some fear, he prays that he may not omit to make open profession of his faith. W.—God never hinders his servants from doing this, though he sometimes suffers them to fall. But the Church will never cease to proclaim the truth. She will not give up one article of faith, though all heretics would thus embrace every other part of her doctrine. She will never open her bosom to those who would alter one point, nor say that such can enter heaven. Bert.

Ver. 44. Ever. Heb. "and after." The sanction of the law will remain after this world is at an end. These expressions relate to the Church. Bert.

Ver. 45. Large. The Jews could not practise the law out of their country, (C.) as to the ceremonial part. H.—He hopes to be soon set at liberty. The verb should be explained in the future, as S. Jerom has them, (C.) though this is immaterial. Bert.—David had already observed this line of conduct, which he resolved always to pursue, (H.) or he speaks in the person of all confessors, as he had not to be tried by any kings. Bert.—Those who suffer for the faith, receive great joy. W.

Ver. 46. Of thy, (de, &c.) but the true reading is, in testimoniis, “conformably to,” &c. as in the Heb. Sept. and Vulg. H. Bert.—Ashamed. Thus many even of the female sex have professed their faith boldly, with S. Agnes, S. Catharine, S. Winefrid, &c. answering the reproachful objections that were put to them, as if it were dishonourable to be a Christian, Catholic or Papist. No. These are most glorious titles, importing the true service of Christ, in unity with the Catholic Church, and under the Vicar of Jesus Christ, the Pope. W.—But as Prot. mean an undue attachment to the Pope by the last title, we shew, that in that sense it is unjustly and illiberally applied to us, (H.) and no gentlemen or scholar would not make use of it. Nightingale.—See N.G.’s letters to J. Slack, Whitby, 1813. H.—Daniel spoke with great freedom to Nabuchodonosor, &c. c. 2:27 and 5:17 and 6:22.

Ver. 48. Hands. To pray, labour, or rather to swear an eternal fidelity. C.—Confessors rejoice in meditation on God’s words, which they shew forth in all their actions. W.

Ver. 49. Mindful. He does not intimate that God can forget, but shews his fervour, (S. Aug.) and begs that he may be worthy to receive the effects of God’s promises. S. Hil.—Though his decrees be most certain, means must be employed, which the just pray may not be wanting. W.

Ver. 50. This hope, hæc, though some would suppose it is put for hoc. Bert.—“This is my consolation in my distress.” S. Jer. H.—Word. The expectation of thy promises has given me courage. W.

Ver. 51. Did. Heb. “greatly derided me.” H.—But I continued to observe thy law (C.) with patience, notwithstanding their provocations. W.

Ver. 52. Of old. Upon the rebel angels, and sinful men, whom thou wilt punish for ever. This encourages me to adhere to the cause of virtue. W.—In many dangers our ancestors have been protected by God. Is his arm shortened, or are we no longer his people? C. 1 Pet. 4:12.

Ver. 53. Fainting. So much was the psalmist grieved at the sight of sinners! Bert.—He would have died through zeal, if he had not seen God’s justice. W.—Apostates particularly filled him with horror. C.

Ver. 54. Song. Here on earth I am comforted with singing the praises of thy law, which makes the observers just. W.—The captives would not give holy things to dogs: but, among themselves, they sung canticles. Ps. 136. C. Col. 3:16. 1 Par. 29:15. Heb. 11:16.—These pious exercises were opposed to the scandalous discourses of sinners. Bert.

Ver. 55. Night. Of tribulation, (W.) and captivity. C.

Ver. 56. This. Hæc facta est mihi. The feminine is put for the neuter, (C.) which the Heb. have not. Bert.—We may also understand, This night of calamity, v. 55. H.

Ver. 57. Portion. With the just tending to perfection, I desire no other inheritance. W.—“He who possesses God, has all things.” S. Amb.

Ver. 59. My ways. Many read, “thy ways.” Sept. Arab.—But this is the true sense of the Heb. &c. The consciousness of having adhered to thy commands, makes me hope that thou wilt not abandon me. C.—I have bewailed my past transgressions, and am resolved henceforward to live piously. S. Amb.—I have reflected on my former actions, and taken up this firm determination, trusting in thy mercy, v. 58. W.

Ver. 60. And am. Heb. “and delay not.” For cursed is he who does the work of God negligently, (Sept.) or with deceit. Jer. 48:10. C.

Ver. 61. Cords. Temptations of the devil, (S. Aug.) and of the wicked, who strive by force, or by caresses, to ensnare the virtuous, v. 110. C.

Ver. 62. Midnight. Under tribulation, (S. Aug.) or to avoid the malice of those who pried into my conduct. I was so delighted with thy law, that I meditated on it both in the day-time, and at night. C.—This pious custom was observed by S. Paul, (Acts 16) as it is still by many religious orders, v. 164. W.

Ver. 63. Partaker. Heb. “a friend.” I do not fear to approve of their conduct, (C.) and condole with them. S. Hil.—The true living members of Christ enjoy the great benefit of partaking in the prayers and good works of the whole Church militant and triumphant, in the communion of saints. W.—See S. Aug. Conf. iv. 4.

Ver. 66. Goodness to others (M.) in want. W.—Discipline, or patience under chastisement. S. Aug. Theod.—Heb. “wisdom,” or discernment how to act, and knowledge of what regards thy law and revealed truths. Bert.

Ver. 67. Humbled. S. Jer. “before I heard, I was ignorant.” He speaks of the gift of prophecy: or “before I was afflicted, I went astray.” C.—Therefore, chastisements are very salutary. Bert. v. 71 and Jer. 10:24 and 31:19. C.—Before, I often fell; but sorrow has made me understand. W.

Ver. 68. Goodness, or sweetness, denoting the unction of grace. S. Aug.

Ver. 69. Iniquity. Heb. “the proud have forged lies against me,” (H.) which was verified in Daniel, (C.) and David, &c. H.

Ver. 70. Curdled. Grown hard, like milk that is curdled and turned to cheese. Ch.—Heb. “like fat.” They have no compassion or wisdom. Is. 6:10. C.—Without the points, cheleb means also milk. Bert.—The wicked combine together for my ruin: but I will still be faithful. W.

Ver. 71. Humbled me. “It is good for the proud to fall into some open sin, (C.) whence they may be displeased at themselves.” S. Aug.—A patient thanks his physician for having used a necessary severity. Theod. C.

Ver. 72. Silver, above all the world. W.

Ver. 73. Hands. Power (Bert.) and love. Theodoret—We may confidently pray to our Creator for light, (W.) and that he may perfect his work. M.

Ver. 74. See me advance in virtue. W.—The angels rejoice at the conversion of a sinner, (Lu. 15:10) as the Church does at her children’s progress. S. Jer.—All the just will be glad to see me delivered. C.

Ver. 75. Truth. Though we may not discern the particular causes of our suffering, we must be convinced that they are right. W.—Sinners are afflicted that they may amend, and the just for their advancement. C.

Ver. 76. Mercy. Jesus Christ, according to S. Jerom.

Ver. 78. Ashamed. Lit. “confounded,” not accomplishing their wicked designs. C.—Thus may they be induced to entertain that shame for sin which bringeth life, (H.) and cease to offend. Theod.—Let them be converted: though it be also (H.) lawful to desire that obstinate sinners may undergo just punishment. W.—The saints pray thus out of zeal for their good. It may also be a prediction, as the Heb. word (Bert.) yebshu is in the future. H.—Done. Heb. “falsely perverted,” (Mont.) in desire; (C.) or “having wished to pervert me without cause.” Pagn.—But to pervert, means also to treat ill; and hivvethuni has that sense here, (H.) according to the best authors. Bert.

Ver. 79. Turn to me. Let the wicked (W.) among those who adore the true God, enter into themselves, that we may form a holy league to support each other. H.—May we all obtain our liberty, (C.) or may they imitate my constancy. S. Amb.

Ver. 81. Salvation. All the saints sighed after our Saviour's coming, (Matt. 13:17) as they still do, 2 Tim. 4:8. W.—The deliverance from Babylon was a figure of redemption. The next verse is of the same import. C.

Ver. 83. Like a bottle in the frost. In the Hebrew, like a bottle in the smoke. That is, I am become, through my sufferings in this mortal pilgrimage, as a leathern bottle, shrunk up because of being exposed to the frost or smoke. Ch.—So the bodies of the just are exposed to mortification, that they may become like new bottles, capable of containing the new wine of the gospel doctrine. Matt. 9:17. W.—Goats' skins, with the hair inward, are still used in some places to contain liquors. C.—They were hung over the smoke, to make the wine old, or fit for drinking sooner. Colum. i. 6.

*Amphoræ fumum bibere institutæ,
Consule Tullo.* Hor. 3. Od. 8. C.

Ver. 84. Servant. The just may lawfully desire the term of their sufferings, with submission to God's will, (W.) and to be freed from the power of persecutors, (Heb. "the proud." Bert.) and from exile, after their enemies are punished. Ps. 38:5. C.

Ver. 85. Fables. Idle tales, not agreeable to God's law. W.—Such were the theology and histories of the pagans. C.—Such are still the false maxims of the world, and many books designed to corrupt the morals of the age. H.—The Jews confined themselves to their own divine books. Heb. Chal. &c. "The proud have dug pits for me, which is not conformable to thy law," (C.) but forbidden expressly. H.—The Sept. seem to have followed a better reading. C.—Houbigant rejects the word pits, and in effect, we may understand the Heb. in the sense of the Vulg. "They have prepared (or told me) vain discourses." Bert.

Ver. 86. Help me. He does not pray to be exempted from trials, but that he may have grace to gain the victory. S. Hil.

Ver. 87. Earth. Babylon; (C.) though this is never styled simply the earth. It refers to all the enemies of salvation, particularly to our own passions. Bert.

Ver. 89. In heaven. In the faithful angels, (S. Aug.) or Jesus Christ. Bellanger.—The promises seem not to have their effect here; but they will in heaven. Bert.—The word of God is as unchangeable as heaven. C.—The psalmist praises God's works, which observe the order established by him. W.—How then can we doubt but his law and promises shall be accomplished? H.

Ver. 90. All. Lit. “unto generation and generation,” which the fathers explain of the true faith, which has subsisted in the synagogue and in the Church of Christ alone. S. Hil. S. Amb. &c. C.—Those who did not belong to the former, in the first ages of the world, might still form a part of the latter, like Job, &c. Without faith it is, and always was, impossible to please God. Heb. 11:6.

Ver. 91. Serve thee. Except man, (W.) and angels who rebel; and yet they also are forced to serve as victims of justice, if they have refused to accept of mercy. H.

Ver. 92. Abjection. Man cannot rise from sin without grace, and attention to the law. W.—This supports him under the punishment of sin. H.—Meditation alleviates his grief, which might otherwise have proved mortal. Bert.

Ver. 95. Understand. Or “shall understand.” I am already able to encounter my enemies. Phil. 2:15. C.

Ver. 96. Perfection, of a worldly nature. H.—All have their limits. But God’s law bindeth for ever, as the rewards and punishments are eternal. W.—Broad. Charity, which extends both to God and our neighbour. S. Aug.—The law is above my comprehension, though I am able to discern its superiority over all created things. Some understand Jesus Christ, the end of the law; or martyrdom, the height of charity; or extreme distress, by the word perfection. Bert.—Lit. “consummation.” H.—I have been exposed to the greatest misery: but thy law has set me at large. Soph. 1:18. C.

Ver. 97. Loved. Constraint takes away all merit. S. Hil.—Son, give me thy heart. Prov. 23:26. H.—The just man wonders that he should feel such love, as he knows it is not his own growth, but a gift of God. W.

Ver. 98. Enemies of salvation, (Bert.) or the Babylonians, whom Daniel far surpassed; thou we would not absolutely assert that it refers to him. Dan. 1:19 and 13:1. Ezech. 28:3. C.—David was no less enlightened (Bert.) by the prophetic spirit above his earthly instructor, how aged soever. H.

Ver. 99. Teachers. Who do not follow the rules of virtue. The ancients, (v. 100) of the same description, must yield the palm to those who are less advanced in years, but more observant of God’s law. W.

Ver. 101. Every. We cannot follow both the broad and the narrow path. Theod. Jam. 2:10.

Ver. 103. Honey. S. Amb. &c. add, “and the honeycomb.” Ps. 18:11. Homer (Il. A.) compares the speech of Nestor with honey. C.—See Prov. 16:24. Ezech. 3:3. Apoc. 10:10.

Ver. 104. Hated. We must come to the practice of the law, (C.) and hate sin. W.—Iniquity. Heb. “lying.” But every sin is contrary to truth. Bert.

Ver. 105. Thy word. Jesus Christ, (S. Hil.) who enlightens every man. Jo. 1.—Lamp, (2 Pet. 1:19. Prov. 6:23) while sin is the light of the wicked. Prov. 21:4 and 24:20. Bert.—The law of God, proposed by his prophets and pastors, in the ordinary method of instruction. W.

Ver. 106. Sworn. By the ceremony of circumcision, &c. as we now engage by vows in baptism, to observe all the commandments. W.—Those who receive not the sacrament, are still under a strict obligation to obey the truth; as all were created only for this purpose. H.—The psalmist means thus to express his firm determination to do all that God should require of him, (S. Aug.) and renews the solemn covenant entered into with the Deity by his ancestors. C. Jos. 24.

Ver. 107. Quicken. This petition, with the praise of the law, is the subject of this psalm. C.—All the godly must suffer, 2 Tim. 3:12. W.

Ver. 108. Free offerings of praise and thanks, (S. Aug.) or the works of supererogation, (S. Hil. Theod. &c.) which are not commanded, though acceptable to God, (W.) and undertaken for the sake of greater perfection. C.—The evangelical counsels of voluntary poverty, &c. are of this nature. Still we acknowledge that we are useless servants, (Lu. 17:10) with regard to God. We can give him nothing, which he has not first given us. Our piety will redound to our own advantage. H.—The psalmist may allude to his solemn engagement, (v. 106. C.) which he made with perfect freedom and willingness, though it was not a matter of choice. Bert.

Ver. 109. My hands. In danger of being thrown by, or of falling, (W.) ready to appear before God’s tribunal. I watch over myself, and strive to keep my soul tranquil. The prophet might have all this in view. Bert.—Most of the fathers read, “in thy hands,” under God’s protection. This is denied by S. Jer. (ad Sun.) though the commentary which goes under his name, and was written in the same age, has thy. The other reading is, however, more correct. The Greeks made use of a similar expression, to shew the danger of losing a treasure. Athen. xiii. 4. C.—Such is our soul, which we must fear to lose. S. Greg. Mor.

vii. 6. Bert.

Ver. 110. Snare, v. 67. In such dangers, I still remain faithful. C.

Ver. 111. Inheritance. I will strive to imitate the faith of Abraham, &c. H.—I will stick to the law as to my portion, through pure love.

Ver. 112. Inclined. He had said, (v. 36.) incline, as the work proceeds from grace and free-will. S. Aug.—Reward. S. Jer. “for the eternal reward.” All agree, that the Heb. may have this sense. He is influenced by hope, though the motive of charity is place first. Whether both motives can produce the same act, is an useless inquiry. The Scriptures frequently propose reward, the second, though less excellent motive. Matt. 5:12. Gen. 15:1. Rom. 8:18. Bert.—This text evidently shews, that the keeping of the commandments merits a reward, for which we may labour. W.—Prot. evade this, by reading, “always, even unto the end;” because hekeb is ambiguous, and means also, the end. H.—“As if the Sept. were not sufficient to determine the same ... But ... they are resolved to take their liberty, though contrary to S. Jerom, and the ancient Fathers.” Ward’s Errat. p. 75.—God authorizes us to aim at the reward, though he would not have this to be they only motive, v. 33. C.

Ver. 113. Unjust. Inasmuch as they oppose thy law. Bert.—So Christ orders us to hate our parents, when they are an obstacle to our salvation. We must love their persons and welfare, (S. Aug.) but hate their iniquity. W.—Heb. “the turbulent.” S. Jer. “vain thoughts,” and inconstant men. The meaning of sehaphim is not well ascertained. C.—But the psalmist might have all these senses (H.) in view, as they are all good; and hence we may admire the copiousness of the Hebrew language. Bert.

Ver. 114. Helper. Heb. “asylum and buckler.” We must keep in his presence, (H.) and avoid the society of the wicked, if we would search the law, v. 115. W.

Ver. 116. Live. S. Aug. (tr. 124. in Joan.) beautifully describes the life of the just here and in heaven. Bert.—We may thus pray for grace, and spiritual life with confidence, if we be resolved to keep the commandments. Yet we must not fail to entreat God not to suffer us to be confounded, which will not be the case, if we entertain hope, and charity be poured on our hearts. Rom. 5:5. W.

Ver. 119. Prevaricators. For though they be not acquainted with revelation, (H.) they have the natural law written in their hearts by God. Rom. 2:12. S. Aug.—There is no such thing as the philosophic sin, (Bert.) which abstracts from every offence of the Deity, though it be allowed to be contrary to reason. H.—Sept. seem to have read differently éssbothi, “I have,” &c. instead of hishbatta, “thou hast destroyed.” Sigim, scorias, may have been sugim in their copies, though both may be derived from sug, “he departed.” Bert.—“Thou hast accounted as dross, or froth,” &c. S. Jer.—Calmet says, that S. Jerom and Heb. read in the first person, which is inaccurate. Bert.—The just entertain the same sentiments of the wicked as God does. W.

Ver. 120. Afraid. Servile fear is therefore profitable, though perfect charity expel it, and move us to do well for the love of God. 1 Jo. 4. W.—Yet fear sometimes returns, that the just may not give way to presumption. C.

Ver. 121. Justice. This he declares out of zeal, praying to be freed from calumniators, (W.) particularly the devil. Apoc. 12:9. The Babylonians probably laid falsehoods to the charge of the Jews, in order to oppress them, as they frequently accused Daniel.

Ver. 122. Uphold. Heb. “answer for,” (S. Jer.) as a bondsman.—Unto good. Thus the law is insinuated, though it is not here expressed. Bert.—In attacking the devil, who is so experienced, we must take God with us, or we shall surely be overcome. S. Aug. tr. 4. in Joan.

Ver. 123. Salvation. The Messiah, (S. Hil. v. 41) or liberty. v. 82. I have been fatigued with looking up to heaven for aid, like a woman who looks for the return of her husband to port. C.

Ver. 124. Mercy. When we have been most diligent, there still remains much to be done, and in many things we offend. S. Amb.

Ver. 126. To do. Our best, since so many prove rebellious, (Heb. 4:11. Eccli. 5:8. Bert.) or we stand in the utmost need of the Messiah, since even the Jews give erroneous explanations of the law. S. Amb.—Heb. &c. “it is time for the Lord to act,” by punishing the guilty; or, “to act for the Lord,” faciendi Domino, by striving to repair the injuries done to his name and worship. C.

Ver. 127. Topaz. Heb. paz, which denotes “the purest gold” of Phison. Gen. 2:11. C.—The topaz was discovered only in the reign of Ptolemy, father of Philadelphus. S. Hil. Pliny xxvii. 8.—Yet S. Jerom and others have the topaz, (Bert.) which S. Amb. represents as the finest of precious stones. C.—The more the law is despised by the wicked, the more are the just in love with it. W.

Ver. 128. Directed. In my steps. Bert.—Pagn. “I judged all, yea all thy precepts to be right.” H.—The hatred of the wicked made the love of the beauty of the law increase in my breast. W.

Ver. 129. Wonderful. Under the letter, I discovered many mysteries, which makes me study them diligently. C.—God’s works and laws deserve our most serious attention. W.

Ver. 130. Declaration. By God’s ministers renders them intelligible, though so wonderful in themselves. Heb. styles this “the door of opening.” Bert.—The Scriptures are full of difficulties, and Daniel (9:2) made them his study. Since the coming of Christ, the mysteries and prophecies have been more developed. But those who refuse to acknowledge him, grope at mid-day. Matt. 11:25 and 18:5 and 1 Cor. 14:20. C.—The first entrance into the knowledge of holy Scripture illuminates the understanding of the humble, whence they proceed to know more. W.

Ver. 131. Panted. Like one afflicted with the asthma, (Bert.) or most eager to obtain something. W.—He asked and obtained the holy Spirit, (S. Aug.) enabling him to understand the law, (H.) and to comply with it. See Ezech. 3:2. Ps. 80:11. C.

Ver. 132. Judgment. Or custom, (C.) as thou art wont to treat such. W.—Let us not be looked upon as criminals. C.—The just are persuaded, that God will not reject the humble, (Bert.) according to the opinion (sententiam) of, &c. Chal.

Ver. 134. Calumnies. That they may not cause me to abandon virtue. S. Aug.—A person must be well grounded not to yield on such occasions, when he is exposed to ridicule, &c. v. 122. C.—Even the psalmist dreaded this situation. Bert.

Ver. 135. Shine. (v. 133.) Let me never go astray. Bert.—But shew me favour. W.

Ver. 136. Law. This shews that David composed this psalm, as he fell by seeing Bethsabée.—They. Men. Duport. Sept. “I.” But this is unnecessary. The eyes and all our senses lead to our ruin. Rom. 7:18. 24. Bert.—True repentance requires lamentation, as well as a firm purpose of amendment, (W.) commissa diluere & abluta non interare. S. Jer.

Ver. 137. Right. He therefore makes people just indeed, and does not barely impute justice to them. W.

Ver. 138. Truth. Thy laws are just and true in all respects, though we may not be able to discern it always. Rom. 9:20 and 11:33. Bert.—God punishes the wicked in his justice, and rewards the just in his truth, or according to his promises. Theod.

Ver. 139. My. Sept. “thy zeal.” The just are animated with the zeal of God, like S. Paul. The enemies here mentioned were the Israelites, who attacked David, and not the Babylonians, who never knew God’s law, or apostate captives, since we do not find that they attempted to injure Daniel, &c. Bert.—Many, however, both at Ninive and Babylon prevaricated. Tob. 1:12. C.

Ver. 140. Refined. Lit. “fire.” H.—Pure as any thing which has passed through the fire. W.—“It consumes sin, and enlightens the penitent.” S. Jer.

Ver. 141. Young. The Fathers explain this of David, who was preferred before his brothers; and of the Gentiles, who were chosen by Jesus Christ. W.—It may refer to Daniel, who was enabled to prophesy very soon, or to the disciples, for whom this psalm was composed, (C.) whether Solomon, or any of the faithful. Bert.—The just are often judged to be ignorant by the worldly wise; but they follow the law, the true wisdom. W.

Ver. 143. Trouble. Such is the portion of the just. Rom. 5:3.—Mediation. Heb. “joy.” Sym. C.—The sense is the same. Sept. generally give the former meaning, as they render by seeking what moderns would restrain to signify observing. v. 145. &c. Bert.

Ver. 144. Live. In justice, as thy law enjoins. W.—Christ is the life. Bert.

Ver. 145. Cried. With requisite fervour, (W.) and attention. S. Aug.

Ver. 147. The. Lit. “in maturity.” Some think that we should read immaturity, αωπτα, (S. Aug.) “in the dead of the night.” The psalmist not only rose at midnight, but before sun-rise to meditate. H.—Kimchi says, he only indulged sleep the first three hours. But others believe, that he arose in the third and last watch. v. 148. C.—He got up before the ordinary time, and prayed with earnestness. W.—S. Amb. encourages people to come early to the church, to offer the first-fruits of their hearts, and voice to God; (C.) and S. Aug. informs us, that such was the practice of S. Monica. Conf. ix. 7. You are not in a higher station than the holy king who said, I rose, &c. v. 22. S. Chrys. ser. 42. ad pop. Bert.

Ver. 148. Morning. Both night and morning, I prevented the usual hours of prayer. W.—To thee, is not in Heb. “my eyes prevented the watches.” H.

Ver. 149. Judgment. Or wanted mercy. W.

Ver. 150. Law. There is no medium between faith and infidelity. If we do not observe the law, we sin. Not to advance is to go back. C.—Shall we hesitate whether to follow the narrow or the broad road? Bert.

Ver. 151. Near. To reward or punish. We wander from thee, yet there is no place between. S. Aug. x. 26. 27. Bert.—God is ever ready to hear our just requests. W.—His law may be easily known. Deut. 30:11. C.

Ver. 152. Ever. God's law is always the same in substance. W.—That of Moses receives its perfection in Christianity. C.—Though after this life we can no longer observe them, the reward of our past virtue will remain for ever. Bert.

Ver. 153. Humiliation. Or "humility," as S. Aug. understands it of that virtue. C.

Ver. 155. Sinners. Such cannot expect to be liberated. C.—Yet, as the captivity was fixed for seventy years, and many who were almost ignorant of the law, and had married strange wives, returned, this verse overturns that system, and shews that eternal salvation is meant. Bert.

Ver. 157. Many. the Babylonians on one hand, and false brethren on the other, attack me: but I am grieved most to see God offended. C.—All the earth is stained with the blood of martyrs, whom the Church honours with festivals, and whose intercession heals many sick. S. Aug.

Ver. 158. Transgressors. Sept. "fools," αἰνετοῦντας. If ο were placed before ε, the exact meaning of the Heb. would be preserved, though the wicked are often styled fools. H.—The prevaricating Jews are here designated. v. 136. C.

Ver. 159. Behold. A person may profess his innocence without arrogance.

Ver. 160. Truth. Hence all such commandments are immutable. W.—The threats of God have been put in execution, and we cannot doubt but the promised liberation will soon take place. C.

Ver. 161. Princes. Of darkness, or the chiefs of the Philistines, &c. Bert.—Daniel was much exposed to the fury of the Babylonian princes, but he was more afraid of the terrors of the law, (Lev. 26) than of all that they could do against him. C.—Thus the martyrs despised the threats of tyrants. S. Aug.—Cause. The powerful men of this world have no just reason to persecute the just, nor can they make them abandon virtue. W.—S. Basil answered Valens with great intrepidity, shewing how little he apprehended what the emperor could take from him, as we read in S. Greg. Naz. (or. 20.) who says, (or. 6.) let us fear only one thing, which is, to fear any person more than God. Bert.

Ver. 162. Spoil. Having just mentioned fear; lest any should think that he entertained any secret dislike for the law; he adds, that it gives him more content than the greatest treasures or conquests can the miser or the hero. v. 14. 72 and 127. C.—He rejoiceth thus in keeping the commandments, how difficult soever they may be. W.

Ver. 163. Iniquity. Heb. “lying.” The Babylonians have attempted to draw me over to their false religion; but I perceived its vanity, (C.) and stick closer to the truth, (H. v. 85) and to thy holy law. C.

Ver. 164. Seven. Often, (W.) as the word signifies, Prov. 24:16. & Vat.—Yet here it may determine the precise number, as the Church seems to have taken it, by instituting the seven canonical hours of the day, and matins and lauds for the night, in imitation of the psalmist. Bert. v. 147—R. Solomon understands it literally, prescribing prayer twice before the reading of the decalogue, and once after in the morning; and in the afternoon, twice before and after the same lecture. The Church has enjoined matins to be said at night, lauds in the morning, prime, tierce, sext, none, vespers and complin, in the course of the day. S. Ben. reg. 8. and 16. C.—This ecclesiastical office consists of hymns, psalms, &c. S. Isid.—Against it some have risen up, particularly against that part which was said in the night, pretending that God had made the night for rest; and hence they were called nuctazontes, or “drowsy” heretics. S. Isid. Of. i. 22.—S. Jerom styles *Vigilantius Dormitanti*us, for the same reason; as if it were better to sleep than to watch. Wycliff (Wald. iii. Tit. 3:21.) and Luther have oppugned the same holy practice, though it be so conformable to Scripture and to the fathers. S. Bas. reg. fus. 37. S. Greg. dial. iii. 14. Ven. Bede. Hist. iv. 7. &c.—S. Clement, as many suppose, (W.) or at least some author before the fourth century, (H.) explains the reason why we should pray at these set times; but cautions us not to join with heretics, neither in the Church nor at home. Const. Apost. 8:40.—For what society is there between light and darkness? 2 Cor. 6. S. Cyprian, (or. Dom.) S. Jerom, (ep. ad Eust.) and S. Aug. (ser. 55. de Temp.) mention several of these hours, and exhort the faithful to be diligent in attending these public prayers. W.

Ver. 165. Peace, in their own conscience, (W.) and prosperity, without fear of danger. Not even death can disturb those who belong to God. Rom. 8:38. C.—But all things work together for their good. ib. 28. H.—The perfect are not moved to imitate bad example, and the weak are not excused for so doing, as they ought to be constant. W.—The virtuous man is neither scandalized at the law, though he may not understand it perfectly nor at the fall of those who had been most eminent for sanctity. S. Aug.

Ver. 166. Loved. Heb. &c. “performed.” C.—The difference is but small. Bert.—He is actuated by real charity. W.

Ver. 168. Sight, whom I would not offend. W.—The presence of God ought to deter us most effectually from sin. H. Tit. 2:13.

Ver. 169. Supplication. Heb. “cry.” Eusebius reads αἰτωμα, “dignity,” which S. Amb. thinks has been substituted for αἰτωσις, “prayer;” though all our copies of the Sept. have δεησις, (C.) a word of the same import. H.

Ver. 171. A hymn. Heb. also, “praise.” H.—Like a spring sending forth a copious stream. C.

Ver. 173. Save me. Though a person be endued with grace, he requireth more grace to resist temptations. W.—Actual grace is requisite. H.

Ver. 175. Live in grace and glory. To serve God, it was not requisite that one should be at Jerusalem. Daniel, Tobias, &c. were saints elsewhere. Bert.—Yet it was more easy to worship God in his temple, where every thing moved to piety; (H.) and this the psalmist desires, deeming it a new life. C.

Ver. 176. Lost. I am in captivity. C.—All men have been involved in sin, and Christ came to save them; but only such as keep the law will obtain salvation. W.—The conclusion contains a confession of misery in the name of all, and an allusion to Christ, the good shepherd. The prophet admits that notwithstanding his love of the law, he may have still many ways transgressed; and that without faith in the Messiah, he could not belong to his fold, or escape the many dangers of the world, 1 Cor. 4:4 and 9:27. Bert.—Seek. S. Hilary and some Greek copies have read incorrectly “quicken.” C.

PSALM 119. (AD DOMINUM.)

Ver. 1. A gradual canticle. The following psalms, in number fifteen, are called gradual psalms or canticles, from the word gradus, signifying steps, ascensions, or degrees; either because they were appointed to be sung on the fifteen steps, by which the people ascended to the temple; or that in the singing of them the voice was to be raised by certain steps or ascensions: or that they were to be sung by the people returning from their captivity, and ascending to Jerusalem, which was seated amongst mountains. The holy Fathers, in a mystical sense, understand these steps, or ascensions, of the degrees by which Christians spiritually ascend to virtue and perfection; and to the true temple of God in the heavenly Jerusalem. Ch.—Both these last interpretations seem more plausible and literal, as given by S. Chrysostom, &c. Bert.—The allusion to the steps of the temple (Ezec. 40) is very uncertain, as well as the raising of the voice in higher notes during each psalm. C.—They might be sung on a pulpit, 2 Esd. 9:4. and 2 Par. 20:19. M.—The authors seem to have lived at the close of the captivity, (C.) though David might well compose these canticles during some of his trials, or foreseeing this event. Bert.—They contain a consoling assurance of mankind's redemption, prefigured by the liberation of the Jews, and also that the power and fury of persecutors shall cease. W.—Shir, hamahaloth, may denote a very excellent canticle. Jun. Muis. H.—Trouble. No time is more proper for prayer. S. Chrys. C.—Heard. I am encouraged by past experience to hope for redress. W.

Ver. 2. Tongue. From the Babylonians, who seek to delude me, (C.) and from detraction, which is most dangerous. W.

Ver. 3. Added. This is an usual form of denouncing vengeance. Ruth 1:17. The Babylonians are threatened with God's judgments, v. 4. Some place these words in the mouth of God, answering the captives. How shall you be screened from the shafts of detraction? Fear not. The sharp, &c. C.—What punishment is great enough for this sin? W.

Ver. 4. Waste. Heb. "of juniper" or thorn trees. Job 30:4. The former is said to retain its heat a long time, and the latter is easily inflamed. Ps. 117:12. Such fiery weapons have been often used. Ps. 7:14 and 75:3.

Spiculaque et multâ crinitum missile flammâ. Stat. Theb. v.

—How will God punish detraction? He will hurl his darts against the guilty. Hab. 3:11. C.—This is their reward, (Bert.) and what they deserve. W.—Charity and good example will best counteract their baneful influence. S. Aug.

Ver. 5. Is prolonged. Heb. “is Meshec.” H.—But Houbigant rejects this as a place unknown; and the word may have the former signification, given by the Sept. and S. Jerom. C. Bert.—Moses speaks of Meshec, (Gen. 10:2) or of the mountains separating Chalcis from Armenia, where the Jews might be dispersed, (4 K. 17:23 and 1 Esd. 2:59. and 8:15) as well as in Cedar, or Arabia Petrea, (Is. 42:11) where the Saracens afterwards inhabited, according to S. Jerom. (Loc. Heb.) C.—Inhabitants. Heb. “tents,” in which the people chiefly dwelt. Bert.—From Cedar, the son of Ismael, sprung Mahomet, whose tyranny has been long felt. Cedar denotes the “darkness” of sin and error. The Jews bewailed their absence from the temple, and Christians their being unable to meet for the divine worship, and their banishment W. from heaven. S. Chrys.

Ver. 7. Peaceable. Heb. “I spoke peaceable, and they warlike things. S. Jer.—Lit. “I was peace, and when I spoke, they flew to war.” H.—Cause. This is easily understood from the context, (Bert.) though not expressed in the original. H.

PSALM 120

PSALM 120. (LEVAVI OCULOS.)

God is the keeper of his servants.

Ver. 1. Canticle. David wrote this during his flight from Absalom; (Grot.) and de Muis judges from the martial air, that it was composed in the midst of danger. It relates to the captives, (Orig. C.) and to all in the pilgrimage of this world. Bert.—Mountains. Jerusalem, and heaven, whence all our help must come. God most readily hears the prayers which are poured forth in places appointed by him. W.—Jerusalem was situated among mountains, and the Jews turned towards it in prayer. Dan. 6:10. They did not depend on human aid. Jer. 3:22.

Ver. 3. May. Heb. “he will not.” Many have read in the second person, both in the Heb. and Sept. “Suffer not thy,” &c. Aquila, S. Aug. &c. C.

Ver. 4. Israel. The Church militant. W.—These figurative expressions shew that God will never cease to protect his people. Bert.

Ver. 5. Hand. Always ready. Ps. 90:4 and 15:8. H.

Ver. 6. Night. Neither prosperity nor adversity shall hurt thee, (S. Jer.) or the Church. W.—Cold is said to burn or parch up. Gen. 31:40. Justin (2) writes of the Scythians, Quaquam continuis frigoribus urantur, as the effects of extreme heat and cold are similar. The Jews were protected from both at their return; (Is. 4:6 and 49:10. C.) though we may doubt of this explanation, as the text is applied to those in heaven. Apoc. 7:16. Bert.

Ver. 7. Keepeth. Heb. also, “shall or may.” The words of a prophet are always true, and the tenses are varied at pleasure by S. Jerom, &c. Bert.—Soul, or spiritual life. W. 1 Pet. 1:4.

Ver. 8. Coming in. Heb. has, “going out,” first. Bert.—Yet Pagnin agrees with us. H.—This expression denotes all the occurrences of life. Deut. 28:6. C.—We may discover a beautiful progression in this psalm; God protects us from each and from every danger. Bert.—He is not like earthly friends, who have not always the will or the power to do it. S. Chrys.

PSALM 121. (LÆTATUS SUM IN HIS.)

The desire and hope of the just for the coming of the kingdom of God, and the peace of his Church.

Ver. 1. Canticle. Hebr. Chal. and Syr. add, “of David,” (C.) who saw in spirit the glory of the temple under Solomon, or the return of the captives, and the felicity of souls in heaven. Bert.—See Ps. 41.—What is said of the earthly Jerusalem, is beautifully applied to heaven by S. Aug. &c. The captive Levites might write this psalm. C.—Lord. Many prophets assured the Jews of their speedy deliverance, as preachers still set before the people the joys of heaven; all which filled the psalmist with rapture. W.—The motive for this joy is disinterested and edifying. The captives had begged for redress in the former psalms. C.—Before they had been chastised, they profane the temple. S. Chrys.

Ver. 2. Were. Heb. also, “shall,” &c. Yet many of the Levites had officiated in the temple, 1 Esd. 3:12.—Courts, or gates, where justice was administered. C.—We may better (H.) rejoice in the Church, (W.) and in the prospect of heaven. H.—“At the news, it seemed as if our feet had been,” &c. Bert.

Ver. 3. Together. Well built and inhabited. The Jews throughout the world considered it as their most dear country. C.—The participation of spiritual graces (Ps. 118:63. &c.) is a great comfort to Catholics, (W.) who look upon the chair of S. Peter at Rome as the centre of unity. H.—David established order in Jerusalem, when he had made the conquest, and various families contributed to the rebuilding of it. Bert.—All the tribes were united under the dominion of David. Houbig.

Ver. 4. The. This was the testimony, (H.) or ordinance of the Lord, (C.) which Israel had solemnly engaged to perform. H.—All were obliged to repair thither thrice in the year; (Ex. 23:17. M.) and this contributed most to the splendour of the city. C.—Houbigant would translate “the congregations of Israel;” or juxta may be understood, “according to the testimony.” Bert.—The tribes shall be all united, (C.) and come to Jerusalem, as all mankind should embrace the true faith in the Catholic Church. W.

Ver. 5. Upon. Or “over.” H.—The Jews made their sanhedrim superior to the kings, as the Chal. here insinuates. But the text rather means that both the ecclesiastical and civil courts shall be re-established, and bring an immense concourse of people to the city. C.—The Church is empowered to pass sentence, (W.) and the apostles shall judge both men and angels. H.

Ver. 6. Pray. Sept. “ask Jerusalem for,” &c. (H.) as if she were to give it. C.—And may there be abundance. Heb. “those who love thee shall be at rest.” H.—Christ encourages us to ask; as Catholics exhort each other to pray for the Church. W.

Ver. 7. Strength. Fortifications, (Bert.) or army.—Towers, or “palaces.” Heb. Jer. 31:23. C.—He insists so much on the blessing of peace, because he foresaw that Jerusalem would one day neglect it. Lu. 19:42. Charity dwells in the towers or saints, (Bert.) and makes us resemble God. S. Chrys. de Laud. S. Paul. iii.

Ver. 8. I. Heb. adds, “I will now;” (Mont.) or rather, “I have now spoken.” Bert.—I was forbidden to beg for the peace of Chanaan. Deut. 7:3. But Jeremias (29:7) exhorts the captives to desire this blessing for the city, to which they were going, as it would redound to their own advantage. C.—Christ leaves his peace to his apostles, and to their successors; and in heaven, all good thing are prepared for the elect. W.

PSALM 122

PSALM 122. (AD TE LEVAVI.)

A prayer in affliction, with confidence in God.

Ver. 1. Canticle. Heb. adds, “of David.” H.—Syriac also attributes to him, though Zorobabel, &c. might recite it at their return. It may also refer to the captives groaning under oppression, (C.) and to every Christian, who must live in expectation of a better country. S. Aug. Berthier. T. viii.

Ver. 2. Masters. Expecting liberty, or rather food; though it may also imply that they are ready to run at the first sign, which they observe with attention. Thus Menelaus had his eyes on Agamemnon. Homer. C.—As servants, and particularly handmaids, are very attentive, and hope to receive sustenance, so we ought to pray with all earnestness to God for what is necessary. W.—All must come from Him.—Until. Or “waiting for his having mercy on us.” We shall not cease to look up to Him afterwards. Bert.—“Take care not to turn thine eyes away from mine.” Terent. Adelph. ii. 1.

Ver. 4. A reproach. Heb. “with the reproach of those at ease,” &c. (H.) or “let reproach fall upon,” &c. We are treated with too much scorn. Lam. 3:30. C.—Yet God will not permit his friends to be overcome, but encourages them to hope for speedy redress, when their sufferings are great. W.

PSALM 123. (NISI QUIA DOMINUS.)

The Church giveth glory to God for her deliverance from the hands of her enemies.

Ver. 1. Canticle. Heb. &c. with some Lat. copies add, “of David,” (C.) who might write it after being delivered from some danger. It may also be applicable to the martyrs, and to all who have been freed from temptation. Bert.—The captives might compose it in thanksgiving for the leave to return, (C.) or when they had been delivered from the assaults of the neighbouring nations. Orig. C.

Ver. 3. Perhaps. This word is here affirmative. Heb. “Then.” Sept. “Surely.” C.—He modestly leaves it to others to judge what would have been the event if God had not sent help. The weak would have been destroyed, as soon as if they had been a prey to wild beasts, as Jonas was swallowed up. W.—See Prov. 1:12. M.

Ver. 5. Insupportable. Without bottom, or beyond our strength, ανυποστατον. C.—Heb. “Then the swelling waters it had passed over our soul.” Mont. C.—S. Jerom has, “perhaps they,” &c. which is more correct. See Ps. 68:3. H.—A torrent implies sudden great troubles. W.

Ver. 7. Sparrow. Heb. “bird.” This comparison shew at once the dangers to which the Jews had been exposed, and their miraculous deliverance. C.—Man may deceive others: but they cannot impose on God. W.—Grace preserves the soul from the most imminent dangers of temptation, sin, &c. Bert.—We must therefore fly; but who will give us wings except God? S. Amb.

PSALM 124

PSALM 124. (QUI CONFIDUNT.)

The just are always under God's protection.

Ver. 1. Canticle of thanksgiving, relating to the times of the Messias, (Abenezra) or to the Jews, who overcame the attempts of the nations at their return, 2 Esd. 4. and 6. Ven. Bede, &c. C.—It exhorts all to confide in God. Bert.—Trust. The Jews complied not with this condition, and are become vagabonds; but the faithful inherit this promise, (Heb. 10:19. Bert.) which is verified in the Catholic Church. S. Aug.—To be secure, like Sion, which is defended by other mountains, we must belong to her society. W.—The situation of Jerusalem was very advantageous. It was difficult to bring any cavalry against it, except by the way of Idumea. A handful of men might defend the passes leading to the north, as we see in the history of the Machabees.

Ver. 2. About it. Coming from Joppe, travellers cannot see the city till they are very near it, though with respect to Judea, it is very elevated. Hence Josephus styles it “the navel of the land.” Bel. iii. 2. or 4.—The construction of the Vulg. is very natural. C.—For the promise regards the inhabitants, rather than the place, as Heb. would insinuate.—Lord. Zac. 2:5. Heresiarchs have in vain risen up against the Church, though they were able men, like mountains. S. Aug.

Ver. 3. Rod. Sceptre, or violent dominion. Is. 10:5.—That, Or “therefore.” Interp. in S. Chrys. God always concludes his threats with promises of pardon to the penitent, 1 Cor. 10:13. C.—He tries his servants for their good, and will not abandon them. W.—The captivity lasted only 70 years: the ten persecutions of the Christian Church were terminated in 300 years; and though the wicked should even put the just to death, then their rod remains no longer upon them. If the virtuous were always suffering, the temptation might be too strong. But those who are sincere, at last emerge from the cloud, and force their enemies to applaud their conduct. Bert.

Ver. 4. Heart. This God will certainly perform. W.—He asks not for himself alone, and leaves all to the divine disposal. H.

Ver. 5. Bonds, obligationes. “Knots,” as σπαραγγαλίας, also means, (Bert.) rather than duties. Bell.—Some suspect that obligationes was put originally, as Heb. means “crooked ways,” (C.) “embarrassments.” Aquila.—He may allude to the dark machinations of false brethren, who endeavoured to thwart the pious designs of Nehemias. 6:14. Apostles shall be treated like infidels, (C.) or rather worse, as we shall be if we act not up to the lights, (H.) and graces which we have received. C.—Those who enter into any covenant, &c. to uphold a false religion, though they may despise it in their hearts, must expect to be punished, while the Church shall have peace. W.—Israel. S. Paul adds, of God, to shew who may be entitled to this blessing. Bert.—Heretics can neither give nor receive this peace. S. Aug.

PSALM 125. (IN CONVERTENDO.)

The people of God rejoice at their delivery from captivity.

Ver. 1. Sion. It cannot be doubted but this regards the captives of Babylon: but still David might compose it, as he was a prophet; and herein the redemption of mankind may also be described. Bert.—The captives pray for the return of the rest of their brethren. C.—Comforted. Heb. “dreaming.” C.—They could hardly believe their own eyes, like S. Peter. Acts 12:9. This extraordinary joy is felt by devout souls, when freed from sin. W.—The Greek cities which the Romans declared free, could scarcely believe that they had understood the herald. Majus gaudium fuit, &c. Livy xxxiii.—Thus were the Jews affected. C. Ps. 13:2.—Chal. “we were like convalescents,” which comes nearer to the sense of the Sept. Bert.

Ver. 2. Shall. Or “did;” (C.) though the future is here well employed. Bert.—The prophet uses both tenses, shewing the certainty of the event. W.—It would require some time before the Gentiles would become sufficiently acquainted with the concerns of the Jews. Bert.—As soon as they did, they expressed their admiration, while the former were careful not to imitate the conduct of those who murmured at leaving Egypt. S. Chrys.

Ver. 4. South. As the Egyptians hope for the overflowing of the Nile; (Hammond) or as the south wind melts the snow, so as to make the Jordan overflow its banks. Theod.—The return of our brethren will be as agreeable to us as water to a thirsty soil. Chal. Muis.—make them come quickly, and in great numbers. Is. 60:3 and 66:12. C.—Esdras brought back some, and Nehemias others, from Babylon. Bert.—The ten tribes returned from Assyria later, and by degrees, (C. Diss.) if at all. Those who arrived first at Jerusalem pray for the rest. Bert.—The prophet foreseeing this event, desireth its perfect and speedy accomplishment, (W.) though it were scarcely to be expected, no more than (H.) a copious torrent in the south. W.

Ver. 5. Joy. This was the case of the martyrs, &c. (Lu. 6:21. Jo. 16:20) as well as of the captives. Jer. 31:9. Is. 66:10. Bar. 5:6. C.—Tribulation commonly attends the virtuous in this life. Their reward is reserved for the next. S. Aug. W.—Sowing, we know not whether we shall ever reap. H.—This is a sort of proverb, which is applied to the captives. Bert.

Ver. 6. They. Heb. “he,” which must be taken distributively for all. Bert.

PSALM 126

PSALM 126. (NISI DOMINUS.)

Nothing can be done without God's grace and blessing.

Ver. 1. Of. Or “for” Solomon. This word is not in the Sept. Bert.—Some suppose that David put the psalm into his hands, to teach him that all depends on God. Muis.—He was to undertake various important works during his reign, (H.) particularly the temple, at the dedication of which this might be sung. W.—The chiefs of the captives might also appropriate it to their use, (Bert.) when they were rebuilding the temple, 2 Esd. 4. and 6. C.—It seems to refer to the times of the Messias. Bert.—House, or temple, and grant children. Ex. 1:21. Gen. 30:2. Without God's assistance, all your endeavours to rebuild the temple and city will prove fruitless.—It. Nehemias had ordered the citizens to watch the attempts of Sanaballat. C.—But still depended more on Providence than on his own industry. H.—David, Solomon, Esdras, &c. may have held this language. Bert.—Yet inactivity is not encouraged. We must labour, and still expect success from God alone. S. Chrys. Eph. 2:16.—God must be the principal agent, (W.) and all the glory must be given to Him. H.

Ver. 2. Light. That is, your early rising, your labour and worldly solicitude, will be vain, that is, will avail you nothing, without the light, grace, and blessing of God. Ch.—Nehemias divided the people into companies, to prevent their being too much fatigued. C.—Without light it is impossible for man to work. Jo. 9:4. H.—The labours of those who live by the robbery of the distressed, are vain. Chal.—Rise ye, is not in Heb. H.—Sitten. Allow yourselves proper time for rest, after your labours and sorrows: for his beloved, whom he favours with his grace, shall sleep and rest under his wing, and yet abound with offspring, and all blessings. Ch.—Sorrow. S. Jer. “of idols.” This worship of God is odious.—Beloved. Solomon. Houb.—Yet some explain the Heb. in the plural, as it is applicable to all the people. The Jews were under great alarms: but were encouraged to hope that God would protect them, and give them a numerous progeny; though, as the country was probably never so well peopled as under Solomon, this may rather refer to the elect, who after the sleep of death (Bert.) shall behold those whom Christ shall acknowledge for his children, (

H.) and obtain an eternal reward. S. Hil.—Whatever people may think they have done well, without God's grace, is all useless, and they must begin again; whereas those who are guided by it, perform all with as much ease as they would sleep, and yet merit a reward, which is promised in heaven to the true children who are born to God in the Catholic Church. W.

Ver. 4. As arrows, &c. The offspring which God shall give his servants, that have been shaken and tossed about, (as the children of Israel were in their captivity) shall be like arrows in the hand of the mighty, which shall prosper and do great execution. Ch.—The patient sufferer will obtain a glorious recompense. W.—Children defend their parents.—Of them, &c. Heb. “of youth.” S. Jer.—Such may be able to assist their aged parents, whereas those who are born in their old age must frequently be left orphans, (H.) and distressed. C.—Yet the Heb. may well admit the sense of the Vulg. as children will be more animated to revenge the wrongs of those, from whom they have received their life. The Jews are here represented in the state of persecution. Bert.

Ver. 5. Desire. Who has as many children as he could wish. Heb. “his quiver.” They are like arrows for his defence. C.—The Sept. may have put the thing signified instead of the figure; or ashpatho may not be confined to the formal sense.—He shall. Heb. “they,” father and son: yet the Chal. &c. retain he.—The children of Christ, and of his martyrs, who have been persecuted, are declared to be very powerful protectors; (Bert.) while such as imitate them, (H.) shall easily answer the objections which shall be put to them at the day of judgment, and be happy. W.—Gate. The enemies' envoys were not admitted into the city. 4 K. 18:17. Orig. &c.—In law-suits, children will prove excellent assistants. C. Eccli. 30:4.

PSALM 127. (BEATI OMNES.)

The fear of God is the way to happiness.

Ver. 1. Canticle. Being a sequel to the former, (C.) and similar to the 111th, as both promise felicity to the captives at their return, if they prove faithful, 2 Esd. 9:38. Ferrand.—It is a sort of epithalamium. Moller.—Both temporal and spiritual blessings are set before us. Bert.—Ways. Many saints have not received temporal rewards; and this confirms our faith that there is a world to come. C.—In effect, no temporal advantages are here specified, as they are below. Bert.

Ver. 2. Hands. The idle are not entitled to blessings, which God will bestow on the industrious who fear him, preserving them from evils. Lev. 26:16 and Deut. 28:30. C. 2 Cor. 3:10.—Some have explained καρπων, “fruits:” though it here means hands. Bert.

Ver. 3. Sides. Against which vines were planted. C.—The married people who fear God, shall commonly have a numerous posterity; or their souls shall produce many good works in the Church, which springs from our Saviour’s side. Children denote such good works. W.—Plants. Ps. 143:12. Hom. Odys. vi. 163.

Ver. 5. Sion. Where he displayed his bounty. C.—Jerusalem. In heaven. 1 Cor. 15:19. Bert.—Mayst thou live happily in the holy city, after thy long captivity. C.

Ver. 6. Israel. This is best secured by a well-regulated and numerous people. Bert.—The good works, performed on earth, will be rewarded in heaven. W.—We shall rejoice in the spiritual children, whom we shall have begotten. M.

PSALM 128

PSALM 128. (SÆPE EXPUGNAVERUNT.)

The Church of God is invincible: her persecutors come to nothing.

Ver. 1. Canticle. In which David, (H.) or the Jews, at their return, after they had got the better of their enemies, render thanks to God. S. Chrys. C.—It may suit the Church, Jesus Christ, and every person: as none can escape trouble. Bert.—Fought against. Heb. “afflicted.”—Expugnaverunt might seem to imply that they had obtained the victory. But this was not the case, at least eventually, though the people of God might sometimes be oppressed, and yield to sin. H.—Youth. Since the Israelites left Egypt. Os. 2:15. Jer. 2:2. C.—From the beginning, the just Abel, Seth, Abraham, &c. have been persecuted. W.

Ver. 2. But. Or “for,” etenim. On this account they repeated their attacks. H.—But the psalmist testifies that they will not succeed. W.

Ver. 3. Back. Heb. “labourers have laboured on my neck,” (S. Jer.) or “back.” They have made me bear the yoke, or have ploughed up my back. This proverbial expression shews the cruelty of the Babylonians,

(C.) and of the enemies of Christ, (Is. 50:6) and the martyrs. Theod.—Heb. charash, means also to work like a blacksmith. Gen. 4:22. Bert.—The Church bears patiently all crosses. Sinners build on her, or even on God's back, when they go on in their wicked ways, presuming that they will be saved at last by the sacraments, &c. W.

Ver. 4. Necks. Heb. “collars,” (Theodot.) “snares,” (Sym.) or “bands,” with which they have oppressed us. Cyrus abandoned the Babylonians to be slaves of those Persians who had taken them, and made them till the land, &c. Zenoph. vii. C.

Ver. 5. Back. By a sincere conversion. C.—God will cover the presumptuous with eternal confusion, so that none shall bless them, v. 8. W.

Ver. 6. Houses. Which were flat, so that grass might grow, but the heat of the climate would not suffer it to come to perfection.—Up. S. Jer.—Chal. “flourish,” as some copies of the Sept. read. Yet Hammond, &c. declare for our version. The precise import of the Heb. is not known. The same comparison occurs, (4 K. 19:26. C.) and Plautus says, Qualis solstitialis herba paulisper fui, &c. Pseud. i. H.

Ver. 8. Upon you. Chal. adds, “and they did not reply.”—We, &c. H.—The custom of blessing reapers continued in the days of S. Aug. Ruth ii. 4. C.—The wicked render themselves incapable of deriving benefit from the good wishes of others. Bert.

PSALM 129

PSALM 129. (DE PROFUNDIS.)

A prayer of a sinner trusting in the mercies of God. The 6th penitential psalm.

Ver. 1. Canticle. David might compose it after his sin, though it might suit the captives, and all sinners, as well as the souls in purgatory. Bert.—It has long been recited in their behalf. W.—Depths of the prison of expiation, or from this vale of misery, (Bert.) captivity, (C.) and from the bottom of my heart. S. Chrys.

Ver. 3. Mark. Heb. “observe or keep.”—It. Heb. “who shall stand upright, (C.) or make opposition.” H.—We all stand in need of mercy, as none can stand before the rigours of divine justice. W.

*Si quoties homines peccant, sua fulmina mittat
Jupiter, exiguo tempore inermis erit.* Trist. ii. H.

Ver. 4. Law. That promises of pardon contained therein. W.—Heb. is now different from what the ancient interpreters read. C.—“Therefore shalt thou be feared.” Mont. H.—Sym. and Theodotion agree with us.

Ver. 5. Word. And promises that the captivity should end, (C.) and sin be remitted. H.

Ver. 6. From. Or Heb. “more than the morning watch; yea, more than the morning watch.” I expect my deliverance with greater eagerness than sentinels do the return of morning. All the day and night long I am filled with these sentiments. C.—The hope of penitents resembles the watches of the day, which are more comfortable than those of the night. W.

Ver. 7. Redemption. Our Saviour affords the greatest consolation. W.—He will save the people. Matt. 1:21 and 1 Jo. 2:2. Bert.

PSALM 130

PSALM 130. (DOMINE NON EST.)

The prophet's humility.

Ver. 1. Of David, is not in Sept. But he probably composed this psalm to exculpate himself from the accusation of pride. Bert.—It may agree with Esther, Nehemias, &c. 2 Esd. 5:15. C.—David proposes his own humility to the imitation of others, without any evil intention. W.—Sometimes the saints may speak their own praises, as S. Paul, did, particularly when they are inspired. Bert.—Above me. This deportment is admirable in the great. C.—We must neither undertake nor pry into things above our ability. M.

Ver. 2. So reward, &c. The meaning is, that according to his disposition with regard to humility, so he expected a reward in his soul to return to him, and stick as close to him as the child just weaned, which would willingly never be separated from the mother. Ch.—If I was not humble, may my soul be treated like an infant, &c. Heb. “If I did not render (or humble and silence) my soul, like an infant weaned from his mother, let my soul be to me as a weaned child.” I willingly submit to all thy rigours, if I did not adore thy ways in silence and in humiliation. C.—The text may be differently rendered. Bert.—As children come willingly to their mother, so the child of God approaches to Him, though he may not always find the same sweetness; and he expects that he will be rewarded accordingly. W.—Gemul means, “a weaned infant, or a reward.” D.

Ver. 3. Israel. This occurs in the preceding psalm. C.—David encourages all to hope by his own experience. W.

PSALM 131

PSALM 131. (MEMENTO DOMINE.)

A prayer for the fulfilling of the promise made to David.

Ver. 1. David. Jesus Christ, (S. Hil. &c.) or the pious king David, when he intended to build the temple. Solomon adopts some of the verses at his dedication, (v. 8. 2 Par. 6:41. H.) and some have attributed the psalm to him, to the captives, or to some prophet in the time of the Machabees, though the prophets then, in fact, appeared no longer. Bert. See Ps. 43. 73. 76. 88 and 98.—The Jews allow, that some verses regard the Messias, of whom the whole may be explained in a spiritual, (C.) or even in the second literal sense. Bert.—It is usual for David, Moses, &c. to speak of themselves in the third person. W.—Meekness. Heb. also, “humility,” (C.) or “affliction,” (S. Jer.) as the prophet might have all this in view. David gave abundant proofs of his humility (2 K. 7:2. 13. Bert.) and moderation, and was greatly afflicted all his life. H.—Blessed are the meek. Mat. 5. Christ has set before us his own example.

Ver. 2. Jacob. Probably after he had removed the ark to Sion. Bert.—What is omitted in one place, is thus explained elsewhere. C.—David had a most earnest desire to build the temple; and though the honour was reserved for his son, he prepared the materials. W.—He acknowledges that without God, he cannot perform his vow. Bert.—We have engaged to be the temples of God. S. Aug.

Ver. 3. If. He expresses his vow in the form of an imprecation, without expressing the penalty, as he submits to the rigour of God’s justice, if he proves faithless. C.—He vows to take no rest, till he might, if it so pleased God, find a place to build a temple. W.—This he discovered; yet was not permitted to execute his pious designs. How does his fervour confound our neglect of salvation! H.—Self-love shuts the door of our heart against Christ. S. Aug.

Ver. 5. Temples. This seems to have been in the copies of the Sept. and Theodotion. It is not correct to say that the former added it by inspiration, as they were only interpreters. Bert.—It was marked as an addition in the Hexapla. C.

Ver. 6. Heard of it in Ephrata. When I was young, and lived in Bethlehem, otherwise called Ephrata, I heard of God's tabernacle and ark, and had a devout desire of seeking it; and accordingly I found it, at Cariathiarim, the city of the woods: where it was, till it was removed to Jerusalem. See 1 Par. 13. Ch.—Or it was revealed to David, that the temple should be built in that part of Jerusalem, which looked towards Bethlehem, and is surrounded with woods. All the plan was laid before him. 1 Par. 28. W.—But it is not probable that Jerusalem should be thus described, and there is no proof that the threshing-floor of Ornan was woody. It seems rather, that the psalmist alludes to the ark first at Silo, secondly in the country of Ephraim, or the Ephratheans, (Ps. 77:60. 67 and Judg. 12:5) for 328 years, and afterwards at Cariathiarim, for other 70. The captives may also recount its different stations, and pray that it may be restored; though it seems never to have been placed in the second temple.—It, (eam) the tabernacle, which in Heb. is fem. C.—Yet as the text has tabernacles, or “dwellings,” mishcanoth, (v. 5) and as the Mosaical tabernacle was kept at Silo or Gabaon, and was not with the ark at Cariathiarim, we may perhaps suppose, that the psalmist alludes to the ark, (H.) or to the thing indefinitely, (Bert.) where the glory of the Lord was displayed. S. Jer. and Houbigant have “him,” the God of Jacob. H.—The Fathers explain it of Jesus Christ, (Theod.) who was born at Bethlehem, (W.) and was prefigured by the temple, (C.) styled “the fields of wood.” Heb. sede yahar, to intimate the great extend and quantity of wood used in it; though (H.) Cariathiarim, “the city of the woods,” may be meant. C.

Ver. 7. Stood. If David did this out of devotion, why may not Christians visit the places sanctified by the presence of our Saviour? W.—God had not chosen to have a temple before the time of Solomon. 2 K. 7:6. C.

Ver. 8. Sanctified. Heb. “ark of thy strength,” which title proceeds from the sanctity of God, who resides there. 1 K. 6:20. Our heart ought to be his resting place. Is. 66:2. Bert.—Leaving Silo, &c. come into thy temple, with the ark where thou sanctifiest thy people. He contemplates a higher mystery, the coming of the Messiah, and his glorious resurrection. W.—The same words were repeated, when the ark was removed in the desert, and by Solomon, as they might be also by the captives. C.

Ver. 9. Justice. And all virtues, (Bert.) of which their robes were emblematical.—Saints. Levites. Chal. C.—Let both priests and Levites perform well their sacred functions, (W.) and may all the faithful act up to their vocation. Bert.—Rejoice. Heb. “sing,” which was the office of the Levites. C.—Yet the original term is more comprehensive, and denotes all the emotions of joy. H.

Ver. 10. Sake. What confidence are we not taught to place in the merits of the saints! The captives remind God of the virtues of David and Solomon, and use their expressions to move him to shew mercy, and to restore the temple to its ancient splendour; (C.) or rather, (H.) the consideration of David’s being a man according to God’s own heart, to whom various promises had been made for the establishment of his seed, is adduced to move the Lord to send the Messias speedily. W.—The future obstinacy of many Jews in rejecting him, was foreseen and deprecated. S. Aug.—Anointed. Do not cover me with confusion, (C.) or delay the promised Redeemer. H.

Ver. 11. Make. Lit. “deceive him.” Heb. “will not turn from it,” the truth. Bert.—Thy. S. Cyprian and S. Hil. read, “my throne,” which belonged to the Lord. 1 Par. 29:23. C.—But it might also be styled David’s, as the promises were made to him. H.—Christ was born of the virgin’s womb, without having any man for his father. S. Aug.—This promise actually was fulfilled in Solomon, and in Christ, who would infallibly possess the throne. 2 K. 7 and Acts 2. But Christ reigns over all. Bert. Lu. 1:32.—S. Peter hence proves our Saviour’s resurrection, (W.) and power in the Church. H.—After the captivity, the royal power was not enjoyed by the family of David: which ought to have persuaded the Jews to acknowledge Christ and his eternal spiritual kingdom.

Ver. 12. If. The promises made to the carnal posterity of David were conditional, and seem to imply, that they would forfeit them. S. Hil.—But those regarding the Messias are absolute. C.—Yet heaven is only promised to his children in the Church, if they observe God’s commandments. Rom. 8:17. W.—The kings of Juda seem not to have believed these threats; and many Christians live as if heaven required no conditions on their part. God knew what would be the event; but he speaks thus to testify their free-will, and his desire to preserve the temporal throne of David, at least till the coming of the Messias, if the Jews had proven faithful. Bert.

Ver. 14. This. God is introduced speaking to the end. H.—Chosen. Heb. “desired.” This relates to his spouse, the Church. C.—He dwelleth in this Sion for ever. W.—It was the figure of the Christian Church, as this is of heaven. Heb. 12:22. Bert.

Ver. 15. Widow. Whose name is often joined with orphans, and the poor, as the Heb. Tsedah may imply one “desolate.” 1 Tim. 5:5. Bert.—The Greek copies vary: some have widow, and others, “prey,” which is most commonly given as the sense of the Heb. H.—The poor priests and Levites, who had no land, shall be abundantly supplied. C.—The Church, though deprived of Christ’s visible presence, is replenished with many blessings, and her humble children are relieved with the holy Sacraments. W.

Ver. 16. Salvation. To instruct others. Bert.—The Church hath always had some virtuous priests and laics. W.

Ver. 17. There. Lit. “thither,” (H.) Illuc, as Christ came from heaven. Bert.—Horn. Power and glory. This regards Solomon, and the Messias. Heb. “I will make to bud,” &c. alluding to Christ’s miraculous birth. Is. 4:2. C.—Lamp. S. John the Baptist, (Jo. 5:35. S. Athan.) or Christ himself, (Lu. 2:32. Apoc. 21:23) though it may also be understood of David’s son and successor. C.—Yet this lamp was too dreadfully extinguished. Bert.—Christ protects his Church, which is placed for the instruction of all. W.

Ver. 18. My. Heb. “his diadem,” (S. Ser.) or “consecration.” The glory of David was great, as a figure of Christ, to whom this more properly belongs. He is the king of ages, without sin, &c. C.

PSALM 132

PSALM 132. (ECCE QUAM BONUM.)

The happiness of brotherly love and concord.

Ver. 1. “Of David,” as we read in Heb. and the Alex. Sept. being composed by him, when all Israel acknowledged his dominion, (Bert.) after his third anointing. Houbig.—Others explain it of the captives returned, and particularly of the sacred ministers resolving to perform their duties with unanimity. C.—Esdras might propose the example “of David,” for the imitation of others. W.

Ver. 2–3. Precious. Is expressed in Heb. The name of Aaron would sufficiently denote that it was of this nature. Bert. See Ex. 30:23.—Moses poured it on his head, with such profusion that it ran upon all his beard, and even be the skirt, or neck, as the Sept. insinuate, though the Heb. means “the mouth,” or orifice, through which the head entered, (C.) as the robes resembled our sacred vestments. H.—The union of priests is no less sweet. C.—Of this we need no other proof than to behold the advantages of concord in every community, and especially in the Church of God. The unction of Aaron denoted grace and unity descending from the head of the Church, to other priests, and to the meanest of the faithful; (W.) or that which Heb. “of Hermon descending on the mountains of Sion,” Tsion. H.—There is a hill written Ssion at the foot of Hermon. Deut. 4:48. Eccli. 24:17. It is not probable that dew should flow 50 leagues across the Jordan. C.—Unity is equally desirable, as moisture to a thirsty soil. H.—Sion may here denote and “dry” mountain. Muis.—There was also a Hermon in the tribe of Issachar, and the dews in that country resembled showers of rain. Such copiousness would be very refreshing, like fraternal concord. The enemies of Christianity observed how the disciples loved each other, being of one heart and soul, (Bert.) as thier divine master had taught them to be thus distinguished. H.—As the snow or dew which descends from Hermon, causes fruitfulness, so does concord promote piety. W.—There, in concord, or in the temple. C.—The holy Spirit came upon the disciples when they were together. Acts 2 and 4:32. W.—Life everlasting. Jonathan was not preserved from dying young, though he was so faithful to his friend, and the possession (Bert.) of temporal prosperity cannot satisfy the heart.

PSALM 133

PSALM 133. (ECCE NUNC BENEDICITE.)

An exhortation to praise God continually.

Ver. 1. Canticle. David composed it for the Levites going on duty, (H.) or Solomon for the dedication of the temple. The people might use it on the last day of the three great festivals; or the Levites are exhorted to watch carefully. They may excite each other, (v. 2. C.) as all Christians should do. 1 Pet. 2:9. Bert.—In the courts, &c. seems to be taken from Ps. 134:2. (C.) as it is not in Heb. S. Hil.—The court of the people was divided for the men and women, and perhaps there was a separate place for the priests, and for the Levites, in the court of allotted to them, where the latter kept watch. C.

Ver. 2. Lift up. This posture was very natural, and expressive. 1 Tim. 2:8. H.—Agatharcides testifies, that the Jews did no servile work on the sabbath, but “stretched for their hands to pray in the temple, till the evening.” Joseph. con. App. 1.

Ver. 3. Thee. “A Levite on guard answers the cantor,” (Houbig.) or the priests say this to the people, when they were departing home. Num. 6:23. C.—Earth. All things were made to praise God. W.

PSALM 134

PSALM 134. (LAUDATE NOMEN.)

An exhortation to praise God: the vanity of idols.

Ver. 1. Alleluia. The psalm turns on God’s praises, and might be composed by David, after he had settled the order of the Levites, though it may suit all people. Bert.—The latter part agrees with Ps. 93 and Jer. 10 which might lead us to conclude that it was composed after the captivity perhaps for the dedication of the second temple. The next psalm is a repetition of this, with the chorus interspersed. C.

Ver. 2. Courts. Both clergy and laity praise God for his favours and power. W.

Ver. 3. Sweet. Occupation, and very useful. Ps. 146:1. C.

Ver. 4. Possession. Heb. “jewel,” “property.” Chal. “well-beloved.” See Deut. 3:28. Eccli. 17:14. C.—The first patriarchs corresponded with God’s goodness: but their descendants were for the most part ungrateful: so that Christians have now entered into their place, and must praise God. Bert.

Ver. 5. Gods. Whatever is so esteemed by men. S. Chrys.—He then proceeds to shew the vanity of such false gods. C.

Ver. 7. Earth. The Mediterranean sea is so called. Lu. 12:54.—Rain. Indicating, or causing rain. H.—The most incompatible things are united. Theod.—The sinner melts into tears at the sight of God’s judgments. S. Aug.—Stores, which are his will and decrees. Theod. Jer. 51:16.

Ver. 14. Entreated. Deut. 32:36. “Have pity,” (Bert.) or revenge.

Ver. 20. Fear. It was important to distinguish the priests from the people. C.

PSALM 135

PSALM 135. (CONFITEMINI DOMINO.)

God is to be praised for his wonderful works.

Ver. 1. Alleluia, in Heb. is at the end of the last psalm. H.—It is omitted entirely in S. Aug. &c. Origen thinks that the captives sung this psalm at their return, as it greatly resembles the 106th, 134th, &c. C.—We read, (2 Par. 7:6) the priests stood in their offices, and the Levites, with the instruments of music of the Lord, which king David made to praise the Lord, “because his mercy endureth for ever,” &c. This chorus is found only in this psalm, which seems therefore to have been sung at the dedication of the temple. Bert.—The first part of the verse was sung by the priests, or cantors, (H.) and the second was repeated perhaps by the people, (C.) or by other musicians, as we now answer at the litanies, and often repeat the Rosary, Glory, &c. (W.) which surely may be done without any superstition, though Leigh, in his Βαπτολογεω, and Casaubon (Exer. 14.) be pleased to ridicule the Jesus psalter, on this account.—Praise. Lit. “confess” (H.) your sins, and praise God. S. Hil.—For ever. Or is unbounded. His heart overflows at this thought. Bert.

Ver. 2. Gods. Angels, kings, (Theod.) or idols. S. Aug.—God is over all. C.

Ver. 3. Lord. By these three repetitions the blessed Trinity is insinuated, (W.) as some of the Fathers have remarked, though the argument is not convincing. Bert.

Ver. 4. Wonders. If saints or others work miracles, it is only by God’s permission. Theod.—None can do any thing against his will. H.—Only He can perform true miracles, above the course of nature. W.—They prove the divinity. C.

Ver. 5. Understanding. Or Son, who is the uncreated Wisdom, (S. Aug.) or to lead us to the knowledge of him. All has been made by the divine power and wisdom. Cajetan, &c. would assert the heavens to be intelligent, or governed by angels. Gen. 1:14. Orig. Prin. 1. &c.—But this opinion is generally rejected.

Ver. 6. Waters. On which it was supposed to rest like a vessel. C.

Ver. 7. Lights. The stars, (S. Jer.) or the sun and moon. v. 8. Gen. 1:16. C.—All are great lights, though the moon be comparatively small. Bert.

Ver. 10. First-born. Justice was exercised on them, and mercy on Israel. C.

Ver. 13. Parts. Two, not twelve, as the Rabbins pretend, (Bert.) and as Origen, &c. seem to allow. Ex. 14:22.

Ver. 16. Desert. This was very astonishing, as they were not incommoded by the heat, or destitute of food and clothes for forty years, (C.) except when God tried them for their improvement, or for their sins.

Ver. 23. Affliction. Lit. “humility,” (H.) when we entered into ourselves under the judges, or during the captivity. C.

Ver. 25. Food. Heb. “bread,” which denotes all sorts of eatables. Bert.—The particular and general favours of God proceed from his mercy.

Ver. 26. Give, &c. This verse is marked as superfluous in the most correct psalters, being a repetition of v. 3 and unknown to the Heb. Sept. &c. though it is found in the Arab. S. Aug. C.

PSALM 136

PSALM 136. (SUPER FLUMINA.)

The lamentation of the people of God, in their captivity, in Babylon.

Ver. 1. For Jeremias. For the time of Jeremias, and the captivity of Babylon. Ch.—Or “of” (Jeremiæ. H.) Jeremias; on which subject he composed his Lamentations, as the Sept. thus insinuate. W.—The title may be a later insertion, and is not the same in all the Greek or Latin copies. It is wholly omitted in Heb. &c. Theodoret blames those who have written the name of Jeremias, as he was never at Babylon. C.—He might send the psalm to the captives, (Grot.) though it were written by David, (Gerer.) who was a prophet. See Ps. 78. Bert.—The captives express their sentiments at Babylon, (Bossuet) or at their return; (C.) and thus, under the figure of the earthly Jerusalem, (Bert.) aspire to heaven. S. Aug.—Rivers. Euphrates, &c. The Jews retired to such places to pray. Philo, con. Flac. Acts 16:13. H.—Sion, and all the ceremonies of religion. W.

Ver. 2. Willow. With which the Euphrates was lined. Is. 15:7. It passed through the city, which was adored with trees, and contained extensive tracts of land for cultivation. C.—Babylon may also include all the territory. Bert.—Instruments. Heb. Kinnor means properly the ancient lyre, but here it is put for all instruments of music. C.—In grief, music was laid aside. Is. 24:8. Ezech. 26:13. Apoc. 18:21. Yet Christians may unite spiritual canticles with holy compunction. Col. 3:16. We must not expose the word of truth to the ridicule of infidels. Bert.

Ver. 3. Sion. The Levites were trained to singing from their infancy, at the expense of the nation. Under David, there were 288 masters, and 8,000 Levites who played on music. 1 Par. 15. The Babylonians wished to hear them, (C.) or (W.) spoke insultingly, (Theod.) as the pagans asked what good Christ had done? S. Aug.

Ver. 4. Land. they were oppressed with grief, (Eccli. 22:6) and unwilling to expose sacred things to profanation, though there was no prohibition for them to sing out of Judea, for their mutual comfort. C.—They excuse themselves on both accounts.

Ver. 5. Forgotten. May all that is most dear to us perish, if we do not serve God, (W.) and seek to procure the welfare of Jerusalem. H.—Yet they knew that the joy of their earthly abode in that city could not satisfy their desires. They allude, therefore, ultimately to heaven. Bert.

Ver. 7. Day. When Jerusalem was taken, or when it shall be re-established. H.—The Idumeans incited the Babylonians to destroy it entirely, and even cut in pieces such as had escaped. Abdias. 5:11. Jer. 12:6.—But Nabuchodonosor punished them five years afterwards, and Hircanus forced them to receive circumcision. Joseph. x. 11. and xiii. 18. C.—Isaias (21:11) denounced their ruin, as the psalmist does here. W.—S. Chrysostom thinks that the latter expresses the vindictive sentiments of the Jews: but he rather desires that God's cause should be maintained in the manner in which He should judge best. The illusions of our own imagination and vanity are most dangerous and domestic enemies, as the Edomites sprung from the same stock as Israel. Bert.

Ver. 8. Daughter. Citizens.—Miserable “plunderer,” (Sym.) or “ruined,” (Aquila) or “which shalt be given up to plunder.” Theod.—Cyrus reduced the city to a state of abjection, and it has since experienced other miseries, (C.) so that its situation is now unknown. H.—Isaias (13) foretold this destruction. W.

Ver. 9. Dash thy little ones, &c. In the spiritual sense, we dash the little ones of Babylon against the rock, when we mortify our passions, and stifle the first motions of them, by a speedy recourse to the rock, which is Christ. Ch. S. Aug. S. Greg. Ps. 50. W.—We do not read that Cyrus treated Babylon with this rigour; but such practices were then customary, (Ose. 14:1. Iliad xxii.) and Darius cruelly punished the revolted city. Herod. iii. 159. C.—God will reward those who execute his decrees (H.) against Babylon. W.—The psalmist contrasts the felicity of the conqueror, with the misery of the citizens, without approving of his conduct. Bert.

PSALM 137

PSALM 137. (CONFITEBOR TIBI.)

Thanksgiving to God, for his benefits.

Ver. 1. David. It contains a form of thanksgiving for him, or for any other. W. Bert.—Some Greek copies add, “of Aggeus and Zacharias.” But this is of small authority, though they might sing this psalm (C.) when the Jews had been delivered from all their enemies, (Origen) under Darius, who married Esther. It might also be used by Ezechias, after his recovery, (C.) or by David, when he found himself at rest, (Muis) and had the Messias in view. Bert.—Praise. Lit. “confess,” (H.) by repentance, (S. Jer.) and praise. S. Hil.—For, &c. This sentence is placed after angels, in Sept. and is not at all in Heb. Bert. Chal. Syr. &c. C.—It seems probable that the Sept. found this reason for praise in their copies.—Angels. Some would translate “judges, gods,” &c. But the psalmist would rather pray before the angels, who would attend in the temple, and present his petitions. Bert. Apoc. 5 and 8. Const. Apost. viii. 4.—Their presence ought to fill us with awe, (Lu. 12:8 and 1 Tim. 5:21) and with confidence, if our prayer comes from the heart. H.—Such God will hear, and the angels will present. Tob. 12. Acts 10 and 1 Cor. 11:10. Ps. 24:10.

Ver. 2. Towards. Thus the Jews acted, when they were at a distance from the temple, and in captivity. W.—Truth. Which thou hast displayed in my regard.—Holy. Sept. may have perhaps written Λογτον, “Word,” agreeably to the Heb. though our version seems more easy. Bert.—S. Jerom (ad Sun.) explains it of Jesus Christ, the Word, whose name is so exalted, (Phil. 2:9. C.) as well as the divine majesty. W.—The holy doctor translates, “thou hast magnified thy word above every name.” But thy is joined with name in Heb. Others would supply, “thy name and thy word.” Bert.—Strength. Sept. &c. add, “thy.” C.—All virtue comes from God. H.—If my prayer be granted, as formerly, I shall advance in virtue. S. Chrys. Eph. 3:14.

Ver. 4. Mouth. All kingdoms shall sooner or later, become acquainted with the gospel. W.—The predictions of Jeremias, &c. had been communicated to the neighbouring princes, (C.) and all might know that God had executed his threats and promises. H.—Yet none of them embraced the true religion, even after the captivity, so that this relates to Christ. Bert.

Ver. 5. Ways. Of Providence, (C.) and mercy, &c. Ps. 24:10. Bert.—Some have read, “canticles,” ὠδαίς, being substituted for ὁδοίς. H.

Ver. 6. The high, &c. The proud and haughty, who exalt themselves, God knoweth afar off; that is, he despiseth the, and setteth them at a distance from him; whilst he stoopeth down to favour and embrace the low and humble. Ch.—He treats the proud as strangers to him. W.—If kings would sing in the ways of the Lord, they also must love, and be humble. S. Aug.—God knows all things before they happen, (S. Chrys.) and both high and low are equally open to his eye. Ps. 112:5 and 138:2 and 8. C.

Ver. 7. Wilt quicken me. And not otherwise. S. Aug.—There is no going to heaven without crosses. H.—Wrath. Most furious and cruel enemies. C.

Ver. 8. Repay. Taking me under his protection, (S. Chrys.) he will punish my oppressors; or he has done it already. C.—Hands. Rescue me from the oppression of my temporal and spiritual enemies. Bert.

PSALM 138

PSALM 138. (DOMINE PROBASTI.)

God's special providence over his servants.

Ver. 1. David. Some Greek copies add, “a psalm or alleluia of Zacharias in the dispersion,” when the Israelites were at Babylon. But Theodoret greatly disapproves of those additions, and explains this psalm of king Josias, while others refer it to David, though it may have no reference to any historical fact, being designed to praise the knowledge of God. C.—It is the most beautiful and sublime piece in all the psalter. Abenezra.—Proved me. God makes trial of his servants, to let them know themselves, as all thing are open to him. W.—Me. Houbigant supplies the omission in Heb. “hast known.”—Up. Or all the occurrences of my life. Lam. 3:63. H.—The expression is similar to that of coming in and going out. Acts 1:21. This may be explained of Christ, whose sufferings and resurrection were foreseen. C.—God sounds the very heart. Jer. 17:9. Rom. 8:27. Bert.

Ver. 3. Off. Before they were formed. S. Chrys.—Line. Or the measure of my life and actions. C.—Heb. “my lying down,” alluding to hares, &c. which are followed to their resting places. Houbig.—Some read, “my direction,” (S. Hil. &c.) or “limit.” S. Aug. C.—The utmost extent of my intention, and the words yet unuttered, are not unknown to thee. W.

Ver. 4. No speech, &c. viz. unknown to thee: or when there is no speech in my tongue, yet my whole interior and my most secret thoughts are known to thee. Ch.—Sept. Vat. “no evil speech.” Ald. “no deceit.” Bert.

Ver. 5. Last. Heb. “what are behind and before:” or, joining it with the sequel, “thou hast formed behind,” &c. which seems not so noble. Bert.—See Job 10:18.—Chal. “thou hast afflicted me before and behind, and hast stricken me with thy hand.” Hence the Rabbins have ridiculously inferred that God reduced the extraordinary size of Adam after his sin to 100 cubits! The sense of the Chal. may be adopted, though the hand upon me, in Heb. may also signify the divine protection Ps. 79:18.

Ver. 6. To me. Lit. “from me,” ex me. Heb. “above me,” (H.) or “more than I,” (Houbig.) which seems little. “The knowledge which thou hast of me is admirable.” Bert.—To consider attentively the workmanship of man, we shall be filled with astonishment, (M.) as the Jews explain this passage, (C.) and as the Vulg. seems to intimate. H.—The formation of the body, and its union with the soul, are truly astonishing. This gives the highest idea of the divine wisdom. H.—By experience we are convinced that his knowledge surpasses our comprehension. W.

Ver. 7. Face? or anger. S. Aug. Chal. C. Is. 30:28. M.—The power of God extends every where. Wisd. 1:7. C.—The third divine person is truly God, and immense. S. Jer.—As God’s knowledge comprehends every thing, so his presence reaches to all. W.

Ver. 8. Descend. Heb. “make my bed the grave or hell.” Job 17:13. The living and the dead are equally in God’s power. C.

Ver. 9. In the morning. Shachar is so rendered by S. Jer. H.—Some would understand “the black eagle,” (Lyran.) or the east, (Orig.) or aurora. The poets assign wings to the sun, &c. Mal. 4:2. C.

Ver. 11. Cover. Lit. “tread me under foot,” conculcabunt. H.—Heb.

“shall cover or be my aurora.” C.—Pleasures of the most secret kind. All is naked before God. H.—The prophet speaks in the name of all who are curious, that darkness itself cannot hide any thing from him. W.—He seems also to represent one who seeks to avoid being seen in his pleasures. Bert.—Heb. “around me.” But it also has the former meaning, and shews that if we seek to indulge ourselves in darkness, it will be all in vain. M.

Ver. 12. Thereof. Alluding to day and night. Bert.

Ver. 13. Reins, and interior. Theod.—Nothing seems more hidden than a man’s entrails, or a child in his mother’s womb, who is formed by God, v. 16. 2 Machabees 7:22. W.—Protected. Heb. “covered,” which may also mean formed. Bert.

Ver. 14. Magnified. Chal. and S. Jer. “hast magnified me.” Heb. seems less correct, “I have been terribly magnified,” though the sense is much the same. Bert.—I have been stricken with awe and astonishment at thy works. C.

Ver. 15. Bone. Heb. “substance.”—And my. Heb. “and curiously wrought.” Prot. H.—Sept. have read rather differently, and give a very good sense; “and is my substance in?” &c. Most explain this also of the embryo. But it seems rather to refer to the corpse in the grave. Ps. 62:10. C. Bert.

Ver. 16. My imperfect being, &c. viz. When I was as yet but an embryo, in my mother’s womb; and even then, in the book of thy knowledge, all the parts and members of my body were exactly set down; which by succession of days were formed, and brought to perfection; and no one of them but what was fashioned by thee. Ch.—Or none shall return from the grave, nemo in eis. Bert.—No man can form the body. Job 10:8. W.—None of these days, (H.) or men, shall escape thee, (C.) or “live for ever.” Syr.—The embryo is formed successively, but nothing yet appears of what it shall be. Petau.—Prot. “in thy book all my members (marg. all of them) were written, which in continuance were fashioned, (marg. or what days they should be fashioned) when as yet there was none of them.” H.—Imperfect. Chal. “body.” Syriac “reward.”—Book here alludes to the list of the living, kept by God, (Ex. 32:32) or to the decree of predestination. Phil. 4:3. C.—Our first and last state are both horrible, (H.) so that hardly any vestiges of man can be discovered. Bert.—We shall find ourselves entire only in eternity, if we have spent our days well. H.

Ver. 17. Friends. Many pervert this passage, translating “thoughts,” because the word may have that sense in Chal. (W.) though the paraphrase agree with us; (C.) and all confess that our version is accurate. The other may also be admitted. While the dead seem to have no longer any existence, the saints are still with God, and the psalmist hopes to rise with them. Bert.—Principality. S. Jer. and Theod. “poor,” who are generally employed by God in his greatest works, that no flesh may glory in his sight. Though the elect be comparatively few, yet they cannot be numbered (H. Apoc. 7:9) by man. W.

Ver. 18. I rose up, &c. I have taken a resolution to rise up from sloth and sleep; and to be still with thee, whose friends are so honourable and so happy. Ch.—I hope to persevere in thy service. W.—With thee. At my rising, I am still employed in the same manner, and cannot find out the number of thy servants or thoughts. H.

Ver. 19. If. Heb. “surely.” Houbig.—From me. How long shall I be forced to live among the enemies of the Lord? C.—Since he will reward the good, and punish the wicked eternally, I renounce the society of the latter. W.—He specifies murderers, as he had described the wonderful formation of man. M.

Ver. 20. Because you say in thought, &c. Depart from me, ye wicked, who plot against the servants of God, and think to cast them out of the cities of their habitation; as if they had received them in vain, and to no purpose. Ch.—Thy cities. Sixtus V. &c. read “their.” C.—Schismatics, and all innovators, endeavour to withdraw all their dependencies from the truth; (S. Aug.) and infidels wish to prevent the propagation of the gospel. Bert.—The enemies of Nehemias, &c. may be here meant, 2 Esd. 4:2. C.—Depart from me, all you who would represent the felicity of heaven to be a dream. W.

Ver. 22. Hatred. Christ commands, “Love your enemies;” not those who hate God. S. Aug.—We must love in them what God loves, and detest what he condemns. Theod.—The Jews abuse this passage, thinking they might hate those who were not of their nation. C.—The example of the prophet might have rectified them. Bert.—Fervent zeal against God’s enemies is commendable.

Ver. 23. Paths. No one knowing, without a special revelation, whether he be worthy of love or hatred, (Eccli. 9) the just submit to God’s examination.

Ver. 24. Way. If I be in sin, pardon me, and prepare me for heaven. W.—Or I refuse not to be punished, if I imitate sinners. C.—This interpretation seems less accurate. Bert.

PSALM 139

PSALM 139. (ERIPER ME DOMINE.)

A prayer to be delivered from the wicked.

Ver. 1. David. He, (C.) Ezechias, (Ven. Bede) the captives, (Bossuet) or Jesus Christ and his servants under persecution, speak in this psalm. Holy Fathers. See Ps. 55. C.

Ver. 2. Man. Saul, (C.) Judas, (S. Hil.) or self-love, the old man, who is our most dangerous enemy. Bert.

Ver. 3. Battles. And formed plots to destroy the just. W.

Ver. 4. Serpent. So Plautus says, “A double-tongued and wicked man is like a creeping beast,” in Persa. H.

Ver. 6. Side. The enemies of David calumniated him, and strove to make him follow idols. 1 K. 26:19.

Ver. 8. Battle. Against Goliath, or against the attempts of Saul, &c. C.—Prayer and divine grace are necessary, to guard us from sin. W.

Ver. 9. Desire. If I yield to my passions, (S. Aug.) or after I have expressed my request, contrary to my desire, &c. Heb. “Grant not the desire of the sinner, complete not his thought. They will be elated.” Some supply, “lest they be.” The ancients seem not to have read in the same manner. Bert.—Abandon not my soul, which is all my care, (Ps. 21:21) to the sinner. C.

Ver. 10. Head. Heb. also, “poison,” (Bert.) or “sum” of their mischievous devices. W.—Labour, or punishment. C.—Their subtle persuasions shall turn to their ruin. W.

Ver. 11. Fire of hell, (W. Chal.) as well as temporal afflictions, from lightning, &c. Ps. 17:9. H.—Some have ridiculed the belief of hell. But the universality of this opinion is a strong proof of it, as it is also confirmed by revelation. Bert.

Ver. 12. Tongue. This member is very dangerous. Pet. Bless. 119. Jam. 3:6.—The just man is not styled “a man of tongue,” but “of heart;” for which reason Christ exhorted his disciples not to make long speeches in prayer. Matt. 6:7. Bert.—Into. Lit. “in;” though (H.) it should be into, conformably to the Sept. Bert.

Raro antecedentem scelestum

Ver. 13. I know. Heb. “thou knowest.” But some copies read more accurately. Houbig.—Poor. Thus, in the end, was Lazarus treated. W.

Ver. 14. Countenance in glory, when thou shalt appear. 1 Jo. 3:2. H.—The shall dwell under thy special protection in the tabernacle. C.

PSALM 140

PSALM 140. (DOMINE CLAMAVI.)

A prayer against sinful words, and deceitful flatterers.

Ver. 1. David. When persecuted by Saul. C.—It is very difficult, and was used in the evening service in the oriental churches, (S. Chrys.) as it is on Friday in the Rom. Breviary. The psalm may be applicable to all in distress, (Bert.) who are members of Christ. S. Aug.—Hearken. Heb. “hasten to me, hear my voice,” &c. H.—god approves such cries. C.

Ver. 2. As. May be understood. “My prayer is an evening sacrifice,” or equally acceptable. H.—Sacrifice. Heb. “offering,” which may be the same with the incense, or the evening holocaust. C.—The Church prays that her petitions may ascend to the throne of God, and be accepted. The morning sacrifice was rather more solemn. But the evening one is here specified, in allusion to Christ’s, at the last supper, and on the cross, (W.) which was consummated in the evening. S. Aug. T.—It may denote a perfect worship. S. Chrys. Bert.

Ver. 3. And. Heb. “keep guard at the door of my lips,” (Mont.) or “on the poverty of,” &c. (S. Jer.) that I may not speak too much, or imprudently; as I shall do, if left to myself. H.—Houbigant rejects this version, which is very expressive. Bert. Eccli. 28:28.—Heb. dal is rendered “elevation,” (Chal.) and may here stand for “a door.” Nature has included the tongue within a double restraint of the teeth and lips, to counteract its too great volubility. Theod.—David prays that he may not be unguarded in his speech. He always spoke to Saul with the greatest respect. 1 K. 24:18. C.—The lips must be like a door, neither always open, when we ought to be silent, nor always shut, when we should confess our sins. W.

Ver. 4. Sins. Such excuses are always vain. S. Jer.—God does not incline any to sin, as the Manichee elect pretended. S. Aug.—The pride of the human heart would throw the blame of sin on any but itself. H.—Sometimes, fate, predestination, &c. are charged with it. Our first parents excused themselves; but David candidly confessed his sins, and was presently pardoned. Bert.—Choicest. Heb. also, “I will not eat of their most delicious meats.” I will have no society with libertines, (Bert.) nor with those who teach false doctrine. 2 Jo. 10 and Tit. 3:10.

Ver. 5. In mercy. Prov. 27:16 and Ezech. 19:8. H.—Let not the oil of the sinner, &c. That is, the flattery, or deceitful praise. Ch.—This is pernicious; while the reprehension of the just may do us good. W.—Sinner. Heb. “of poison, or of the head, (vass) break, or fatten, (S. Jer.) or be broken upon my head.” The vessel was usually broken. Mar. 14:3. Bert.—Prot. “Let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness, and let him reprove me, it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break,” &c. H.—Or “he shall not,” &c. as his only aim tends to my advantage. Many other senses may be given. C.—For my prayer, &c. So far from coveting their praises, who are never well pleased but with things that are evil; I shall continually pray to be preserved from such things as they are delighted with. Ch.—Against. Lit. “in or concerning their desirable things.” H.—I pray to God that I may be preserved from their malice, in which they take delight, (M.) and that they may cease to run on to their ruin. H.—The Church still prays for sinners, though as yet they delight in their criminal pursuits, (W.) in order that a wholesome bitterness may wean them from such things. S. Chrys.—My prayer shall subsist amid their pleasures. Bert.

Ver. 6. Their judges, &c. Their rulers, or chiefs, quickly vanish and perish, like ships dashed against the rocks, and swallowed up by the waves. Let them then hear my words, for they are powerful and will prevail; or, as it is in the Hebrew, for they are sweet. Ch.—The Israelites were long governed by judges, and the supreme magistrates at Carthage had the same title. C.—Sept. “their strong ones” have or shall become victims of the divine justice. H.—They shall know that the prayers of the Church are effectual, and obtain the grace of constancy for her children, whom she instructs in the doctrines of peace, which cannot injure the commonwealth. W.—Prevailed. Or, “been able” to hear. Israel submitted to David, after Saul’s death. Bert.

Ver. 7. As when the thickness, &c. If this is to be connected with what goes before, it declares the efficacy of those powerful words, capable to break up the thick and hard earth, of the hearts of man. But if it is to be connected with the following words, our bones are scattered, &c. it means, that the malice of our enemies has, as it were, scattered our bones near the confines of death and hell; as the husbandman, plowing up or digging the earth, scatters and breaks the clods. Ch.—These are made small, that they may bear fruit, which is the effect of persecution upon the faithful. S. Aug. W.—Heb. “like the labourer breaking up the earth, so our,” &c. C.—Houbigant would read, “their,” (Bert.) with the Arab, and many Greek copies. David alludes to his distress, (C.) while his people were still divided into parties, (H.) whose union he foretells. Bert.—Dry bones point out the state of the captives. Ezech. 37:11. C.—Some persecutors rage against the bones and relics of the saints, which they would willingly hurl into hell. But the Church places her confidence in God. W.

Ver. 10. His. “Own,” (Prot.) the devil’s, (S. Hil.) or God’s net. S. Chrys. &c.—Saul twice fell into David’s power. C.—Alone. Singularly protected by the Almighty, until I pass all their nets and snares. Ch.—Though alone, I fear no danger. H.—I will have no connection with the wicked in this life, (S. Chrys.) which is beset with snares. C.—Heb. “I will be a witness till I pass.” Houbig.—Yachad means, “together,” &c. Bert.—Sinners shall at last be entrapped; but the Church shall be for ever protected. W.

PSALM 141. (VOCE MEA.)

A prayer of David in extremity of danger.

Ver. 1. Cave. Of Engaddi, (Bossuet. C.) or Odollam. Bellar. Bert.—Here David was a figure of Christ, praying in the garden, &c. S. Hil.—The psalm may relate to the captives, (S. Chrys.) or to martyrs, (S. Aug.) and to all under trial. David might recite it in the cave. Bert.—Voice. He did not speak aloud, for fear of being detected. W.—But the fervent prayer of the just, “is a cry to God.” S. Hil. Ex. 14:15. C.

Ver. 3. Pour out. Explaining all the sentiments of my heart. Ps. 61:9. C.—This is never perfectly done with earthly friends. 1 Pet. 5:7. Bert.

Ver. 4. Knewest. With approbation, (Ps. 1:6. H.) my department towards Saul, and also the dangers to which I was exposed, and the means of escaping.—They. Ancient psalters add, “the proud,” from Ps. 136:6. C.—The devil and his agents attack the just at all times. S. Jer.—When I was reduced to such distress that I could not help myself, thou didst approve of my conduct, and deliver me. W.

Ver. 5. Hand. For succour. Ps. 15:8. So was David situated at Engaddi, as our Saviour was, when he was abandoned by his disciples. C.—

None would appear to be acquainted with those in distress. H.

Ver. 6. Living. On the earth, (Bert.) or land of Judea, (S. Chrys.) in this life, (C.) or in the next. In all, God is our only protector, and reward. Ps. 15:5. Bert.

Ver. 7. Low. Sym. “languid. S. Jer. “infirm.” H.

Ver. 8. Prison. Or the cave. C.—As David was never in prison, this is more applicable to Christ, seized by his enemies, and consigned to the tomb. Houbig.—Name. God expects it from us. Ps. 49:15. The motive of David in praying to be delivered, was most disinterested, as he had in view God’s glory, and the gratification of his just servants, who would join with him in returning thanks, and promoting the divine worship.—Wait. Heb. “will crown.” Sym. S. Jer. H.—But Aquila adopts the Chal. and Syr. sense of the word, with the Sept. (C.) and this may very well be the meaning, as David and his friends did not pretend to reign till the death of Saul. Bert.—He wished to be at liberty in the country where God’s worship was observed, (W.) and determined to promote religion with all his power; as, under Saul, the good were under great restraints, and the priests were even slain. H.—All this happened to David, as the figure of Christ. He had then a clear understanding of what the latter would have to endure from the Jews, and how he would pray to his Father. In the first part, he complains of Judas, and in the second, he desires to be set free from hell, because the faith of all the saints depended on his resurrection. Ven. Bede. W.

PSALM 142. (DOMINE EXAUDI.)

The psalmist in tribulation calleth upon God for his delivery. The seventh penitential psalm.

Ver. 1. Absalom is not specified in Rom. Sept. &c. (C.) though it be in other copies. H.—The latter part of the title has been added by the Greeks. S. Hil.—If David composed the psalm, on occasion of his son’s revolt, he considered it as a punishment of his former transgression. The Fathers explain it of Jesus Christ, who suffered for our sins. Bert.—It might also relate to the captives, (Ferrand) or to the same event as the preceding psalm, (Bossuet) though there is no reason for abandoning the title. C.—Justice. Or mercy. S. Chrys.—Absalom had no just cause of complaint, (H.) and God had promised to protect David on the throne.

Ver. 2. Justified. Compared with thee, (C.) and without mercy. God is bound by his promise to hear the penitent. W.—David and S. Paul had been assured of the remission of their sins, yet never ceased to beg for pardon. Bert.

Ver. 3. Of old. Lit. “of an age,” (H.) who are quite forgotten. Lam. 3:6. C.—The devil had violently tempted me, by means of temporal and spiritual calamities. W.—The greatest darkness is that of the heart. Ephes. 4:17. H.

Ver. 4. Troubled. David knew not what course to take. 1 K. 15:25. 31. Our Saviour was in the greatest agony. C.

Ver. 5. Of old. What God had done formerly for me and others. W.—The sacred records of 3,000 years tended to raise the hopes of David. Bert.

Ver. 6. Water. We can add nothing to this idea. C.—Man can do no good without God’s grace, which David implores with his hands stretched out, both to mortify himself, and to denote fervour. W.

Ver. 7. Pit. Or “lake,” meaning (H.) the grave. C.—If man be left to himself, he will presently yield to sin, from which he will not be delivered without God’s grace.

Ver. 8. Morning. At the first assault of temptation, (W.) or speedily. David might address this prayer to God during the night, after he left Jerusalem. He was only relieved the next day, when his troops had crossed the Jordan,. 2 K. 17:12.—To thee. With the most ardent desire. Jer. 22:27. This might suit the captives, v. 5. 11. C.

Ver. 9. Fled. Heb. “To thee I have hidden myself,” (Mont.) or “am protected.” S. Jer.—But the Sept. seem to have read better, ésithi. “I have hoped.” Chal.

Ver. 10. Spirit. I look for a favourable wind, like one at sea, in danger of suffering shipwreck, and I apply to God, to the Holy Ghost the Comforter.—Right. Even (C.) and not like this country, full of precipices. In Judea the right worship was observed. H.—The penitent may rest assured, that God will free him from all perils, (W.) and bring him (Heb.) “into the land of rectitude,” which is heaven. The Holy Ghost is here represented as a distinct person. Bert.

Ver. 12. Mercy. Towards me. Justice required that the rebels should be punished, as they were, even contrary to David’s intention. 1 K.

PSALM 143

PSALM 143. (BENEDICTUS DOMINUS.)

*The prophet praiseth God, and prayeth to be delivered from his enemies.
No worldly happiness is to be compared with that of serving God.*

Ver. 1. Goliath. Heb. has simply, “of David.” H.—S. Hilary thinks that the Sept. added the rest by inspiration, (C.) because this was David’s first exploit in war. W.—But others pay no deference to this part of the title. The Chaldee, however, seems to allude to the same victory, (v. 10) and the Syriac to that which David obtained over Asaph, brother of Goliath. 1 Par. 20:5. C.—David prays that he may overcome the Philistines, and give thanks in Ps. 17. Ferrand.—These two psalms are very much alike, and this seems to have been written after the rebels were discomfited, while the 17th expresses the sentiments of the prophet, towards the end of his life, for all his victories. C.—Zorobabel after the defeat of God, (Ezec. 38. Orig.) or the Machabees; (Greek paraphrast.) or Jesus Christ might adopt these sentiments. Holy Fathers.—Kimchi and Goan refer the psalm to the Messias. C.—God. Heb. “rock.”—Fingers. Which chose the five pebbles. He was to exert himself, and yet to acknowledge that all success came from God. Bert. —He had not been trained to war, when he overcame Goliath. W.

Ver. 2. Mercy. “All the titles of God remind us of his benefits.” S. Jer. —My people. After the defeat of the rebels, (C.) and the death of Isboeth. Bert.—Heb. may also be “peoples,” as Ps. 17. (Syr. &c.) including them, and the various nations that were subdued by David. C.—Conquerors are generally in confusion, while those who keep their passions under are free. 2 Cor. 3:17. Bert.

Ver. 3. To him. Heb. “thou dost acknowledge him.” S. Jer. H.—In the transport of gratitude, he reflects on his own weakness. Job 7:17. Rom. 8:31. C.—Before Christ, all mankind were undeserving of revelation. W.

Ver. 4. Vanity. Heb. hebel, “nothing, a vapour,” &c. Eccle. 1:1. Jam. 4:15. H.—Our lives resemble a shadow, which is the less distinct, the more it increases. Bert.—As it cannot subsist of itself, so neither can man without God. W.

Ver. 5. Mountains. The proud, (Orig.) spirits. S. Hil.—Come to my assistance, as thou didst appear on Sinai. Ex. 19:16. Ps. 17:8. C.—This is a poetical description of God's aid.

Ver. 7. Waters. Of tribulation. W.—Children. My rebellious subjects, (H.) who lead bad lives in the true Church. W.—Foreign nations continued faithful, while Israel rose up against their sovereign.

Ver. 8. Iniquity. Heb. “lying.” The have sworn fidelity, and have prevaricated. C.—They adhere not to their engagements of keeping God's law. W.

Ver. 9. New. More excellent. Bert.—Psaltery. Heb. “on the Nebel of ten strings,” (H.) the chief instrument, fit for a new canticle of thanksgiving. W.

Ver. 10. Kings. Their power cannot protect them. H.—Hast. Several read, “wilt redeem.”—Malicious. Heb. “his servant from the evil sword” (Mont.) of Goliath, (Chal.) or of Saul, (Bert.) and all his other enemies. H.—He represents himself in the midst of danger, from the rebels. C.

Ver. 11. Children. Both Jews and Christians who live ill, are like strangers, who frame to themselves a temporal felicity, making riches and pleasures their god. W.

Ver. 12. Whose. Heb. “our.” This makes quite a different sense from the ancient versions, which refer what follows to the rebels, who had no cause to complain of David's government, v. 14. C.—S. Jerom, however, agrees with the Heb. “that our sons may be,” &c. Prot. asher means “whose (v. 11.) and that.” H.—If we supply, they said, the text and versions will give the same sense, (Geneb. Bert.) as it is inserted v. 15. H.—Decked. Heb. “our daughters, like corner-stones cut like a temple,” (Mont.) or “palace.” Prot.

Ver. 13. That. The partitions are too small; or fresh fruit come before the old ones are consumed. Lev. 26:10. C.—Fruitful. Heb. “our sheep (or small cattle, pecudes) producing a thousand, bringing forth ten thousand, in our streets.” Pagn.

Ver. 14. Fat. Heb. “our bulls (oxen or cows) are burdened.” &c.—Of wall. Sym. “nor burying nor mourning in their places.” The other interpreters cited by Theodoret, have also “their.” C.—Passage. Of the enemy. H.

Ver. 15. They. Heb. “happy the people, to which such things belong; happy,” &c. S. Jer. H.—This text speaks all along of the temporal blessings attending the virtuous. C.—But the Sept. being convinced that these were rather the sentiments of David's enemies, give it this turn, (Bert.) and shew, that real happiness consists rather in the possession of God, as the psalmist intimates, by the concluding sentence. H.—Worldlings are satisfied with temporal advantages. Ps. 72:4.—But the saints take God for their reward. C.—The devil promises riches, that he may kill, and Christ promises poverty, to save us. S. Jer.—True happiness consists in preferring God before all. W.

PSALM 144

PSALM 144. (EXALTABO TE DEUS.)

A psalm of praise, to the infinite majesty of God.

Ver. 1. Praise. The remaining seven psalms relate to the praises of God, to intimate that this occupation ought to be our glory, both in time and in eternity, as all were created for that purpose. Ven. Bede.—This is the seventh of the alphabetical psalms, the four last of which are only recognized by S. Jer. as perfect. See Ps. 24. 33. 36. 110. 111 and 118. Yet here the ver. 14 which should commence with N, is wanting in Heb. though it was probably there at first, as it is in the Greek and Latin, (W.) as well as in the Syr. and Arabic. C.—Hence it appears, that our versions ought not always to be corrected by the Heb. which might be rendered more perfect by a collation with them. W.—The Jews assert, that whoever reads this psalm thrice-a-day, may be sure of obtaining heaven, provided, says Kimchi, that his heart accompany his words. The new baptized used to recite it in thanksgiving, for having received the body and blood of Christ. S. Chrys.—Ferrand supposes that his psalm was composed after the captivity. But there seems to be no ground for this supposition, and the author had probably no particular event in view. C.—My king. On whom I entirely depend. Bert.—And ever. S. Jer. “and after,” (H.) both in time and in eternity. Christ is styled king, to whom the nations were promised; (Ps. 2) and David gives the highest honour to the blessed Trinity. W.—David still praises God by the mouths of the faithful, as also in heaven.

Ver. 3. End. Heb. “finding out,” because he is infinite. Bert. Job 5:9.

Ver. 4. And. Heb. “to generation.” The vocation of the Gentiles is insinuated. C.

Ver. 5. And shall. Heb. “and I shall relate the words of thy wonders,”

(S. Jer.) or “shall meditate on,” &c. Pagn. H.—Yet our version is more followed. C.

Ver. 6. Acts. Miracles which strike people with awe, (W.) such as those which overwhelmed the Egyptians, &c. Theod. C.—And shall. Heb. “and shalt,” &c. But Chal. (S. Jer.) read more naturally with the Sept.

Ver. 7. Justice. Or mercy. S. Chrys. C.—They shall approve of thy judgments. H.

Ver. 8. Patient. Heb. “slow to anger,” which is more expressive. Bert.

Ver. 9. Works. The people of Israel (v. 10. Ps. 89:17. Ferrand) and all mankind, who are all invited to embrace the true faith, and the mercy of God. C.—The effects of mercy shine forth above all his other works, in the redemption, and in the recalling of sinners, when they have gone astray. W.—This sense is good, but not literal. His mercy extends to all. Bert.—Yet he punishes the reprobate for ever, chastising their works. S. Aug.

Ver. 10. Works. They shew his power, and excite us to praise him. S. Jer.

Ver. 12. Thy. Heb. “his.” But the Sept. read more correctly, with the Chal. &c.—Men. The Gentiles, to whom the saints, (Bert.) or converted Jews preached. H.

Ver. 13. Ages. The kingdom of God in his Church is very magnificent, but not so much as in heaven. W.—The. Heb. Chal. Aquila, S. Jer. &c. omit this verse, which is necessary to complete the alphabet. It probably commenced with Namon, “Faithful.” C.—The Sept. could not insert it by inspiration, as they were only interpreters. Bert.—It was consequently in their Heb. copies. Houbig.

Ver. 14. Lifteth. Heb. “upholdeth all who are falling.” H.—No one can stand or rise without God. Bert.—He is ready to lift up every one. W.

Ver. 15. Hope. For sustenance. Ps. 122:2. Matt. 6:26.

Ver. 16. Blessing. Abundantly (C.) “satisfieth the desire” (Prot. H.) even of brute beasts, giving to all what is requisite. W.

Ver. 17. Just. Before, his fidelity was notices, v. 13. H.

Ver. 18. Truth. Observing his commandments. Matt. 7:21. Theod.

Ver. 19. Will. He will obey their voice; (Jos. 10:14) or rather he will grant their requests (C.) of eternal happiness. Bert.

Ver. 21. Flesh. Every human being, though even the least favoured, must praise God, as all have received much from him. H.

PSALM 145

PSALM 145. (LAUDA ANIMA.)

We are not to trust in men, but in God alone.

Ver. 1. Of, &c. This addition of the Sept. intimates that these prophets would thus exhort the people to trust in Providence, and to prefer his service before worldly cares. See Ps. 136. W.—They might compose this psalm after Cyrus had revoked the permission to build the temple, (v. 2 and 1 Esd. 1:3. and 4:4) as the following psalms seem all to have been sung at the dedication of the walls. C.—This might be the case, but the titles afford but a slender proof, and David might write this to excite himself and people to confide in God.—In my. Heb. begins here the second verse, with the answer of the soul to the prophet's invitation. It is immortal, and promises always to praise the Lord. Bert.

Ver. 3. Children. Heb. “sons of Adam.” the greatest prince is of the same frail condition as other men. He is not always willing, nor able to save. He must die, and all his project cease. H.—If we could have depended on any, Cyrus seemed to be the person. Yet he has been deceived, and now forbids the building of a temple. We must, however, be grateful for the liberty which we enjoy by the goodness of God. C.—In one Son of man (Christ) we may trust; not because he is the Son of man, but because he is the Son of God. S. Aug. W.

Ver. 4. Forth. From the body, which shall be consigned to the earth from which it was taken. Eccle. 12:7.—And he. Man, (C.) or each of the princes, (H.) with respect to the body. W.—It does not refer to the spirit, which in Heb. is feminine. C.—It is the want of faith, which causes people to confide in great ones, rather than in Providence. S. Aug.—Thoughts. Projects of ambition, &c. C.

Ver. 7. Truth. Houb. “his truth,” and promises. H.—The disposition of Cyrus towards the Jews had changed, in consequence of some false insinuations of their enemies.—Wrong. The Babylonians have been, and the Samaritans will be, punished.—Fettered. We may hope to be freed from the dominion of the Persians. C.

Ver. 8. Enlighteneth. Heb. “openeth the eyes.” Sept. “gives wisdom to the blind.” Many of these favours seem to be understood in a spiritual sense, and allude to the times of Christ, when these miracles were performed. Bert. Is. 35:5. Matt. 11:5. C.

Ver. 9. Strangers. He charges his people to be compassionate towards such. Ex. 22:21. Jam. 1:27. Bert.—We have been captives. Ps. 112:9.—Sinners, who have calumniated us, v. 7. C.

Ver. 10. Sion. Figure of the true Church. God is now more attached to Sion than to any other place. Bert.—He lives for ever, and therefore alone deserves our confidence. C.—Generation. Heb. adds, “Alleluia,” which we have in the next title, as the psalm also begins with the same word. H.

PSALM 146

PSALM 146. (LAUDATE DOMINUM.)

An exhortation to praise God for his benefits.

Ver. 1. Alleluia. In some editions of the Sept. (H.) and in Syr. Arab. &c. the same inscription occurs, as in the former psalms. Many ascribe this to the same authors, and to the same occasion. Heb. and Chal. have no title. Yet the psalm seems to be a thanksgiving (C.) for the permission to build the temple and walls of Jerusalem, (Orig.) which had been neglected, till God visited the people with a famine, v. 8. 2 Esd. 5:1. Agg. 1:6. Bossuet—Zorobabel, &c. urge the people to build. Syr. C.—Still David might compose this psalm, as he was a prophet, (Bert.) and he may allude to the beginning of his reign, when the people were all united. Jans.—Good. Agreeable and advantageous for us.—Praise. This consists in purity of life, rather than in the sweetest accents. C.

Ver. 2. Jerusalem. After the captivity, (W.) or at the beginning of David's reign, when he had taken Sion, and Israel acknowledged his dominion. 2 K. 5. It may also allude to the Church, (Jo. 11:51) and to heaven. Heb. 12:22. Apoc. 21. Bert.

Ver. 3. Bruises. God delivered the captives, after chastising them. Deut. 32:39. C.—He gives life to the penitent, as Christ healed the sick, &c. Is. 61:1. Bert.

Ver. 4. Stars. Which to man are innumerable. Though some have counted 1022 with Ptolemy, yet the discovery of telescopes has shewn that many more are discernible, (C.) and none would dare at present to fix their number. Bert.—Cicero (Of. i.) treats this as a thing impossible. See Gen. 15:5. C.—Ptolemy could only ascertain the number of the more notorious. W.—Kimchi admits 1098 created to shine, besides innumerable others, which have influence over plants, &c. God has the most perfect knowledge of all. They are like his soldiers, whom he knows by name, (Is. 40:25) as the good shepherd does his sheep. Jo. 10:3. C.—We read that Cyrus knew the name of all his officers, (Cyrop. v.) and that Adrian, and Scipio, the Asiatic, could even name all the soldiers in their armies.

Ver. 5. Power. God the Son. Earthly monarchs are forced to depend on others for the execution of their orders. But God is infinite. C.—

Number. He knows innumerable things: (W.) or rather, (H.) the divine wisdom hath no parts. Jer. 10:6. Bert.

Ver. 6. Ground. As he has done to the Egyptians, &c. C.

Ver. 7. Praise. Lit. “confession,” (H.) including both compunction and praise. Bert.

Ver. 8. Clouds. This is represented as something wonderful, (Job 5:9 and 37:6) though conformable to the laws of nature. The preservation of things is like a new creation. C.—And the herb, &c. Herbam, (Ps. 103:14. H.) is now wanting in Heb. as it was in the days of S. Jer. and the Chal. though the Sept. Aquila, &c. read it, and it is not probable that they would borrow it from another psalm. Bert.—Their copies must therefore have varied. H.—The herb, may denote corn, and all vegetables for food. These productions evince the goodness and wisdom of God, (Bert.) as well as his power. W.

Ver. 9. Young. Lit. “the sons of ravens,” which may denote those birds in general, as well as their young. God provides for all. Many fables have been recounted concerning ravens, as if they neglected or forgot their young ones; and the Hebrews seem to have entertained some of these opinions, to which the sacred writers conform themselves., Job 38:41. C.—S. Luke (12:24) specifies ravens, though S. Matthew (6:26) has the birds, when relating the same speech.—Upon him, must be understood in Hebrew. See Ps. 103:21. (Bert.) Joel 1:20. C.—If God take such care of the neglected ravens, how much more will he provide for his servants? S. Chrys. W.

PSALM 147. (LAUDA JERUSALEM.)

The Church is called upon to praise God for his peculiar graces and favours to his people. In the Hebrew, this psalm is joined to the foregoing.

Ver. 1. or Hebrew Psalm 147. Ver. 12. Alleluia. This word is not in Heb. H.—Many with the Sept. add, “of Aggæus and Zacharias.” C.—The psalm has the same object in view as the preceding. Bert.—The Fathers explain it of the Church, and of heaven. C.—Sion. This place was highly favoured before the captivity, and rebuilt afterwards so as to enjoy many blessings. But all this was only a figure of the privileges belong to the Church, and to the heavenly Sion, the true vision of peace. W.—The earthly Jerusalem was too often faithless; (Gal. 4:26.

Heb. 12:22) so that the psalmist cannot have it alone in view. Bert.

Ver. 2. or Hebrew Psalm 147. Ver. 13. Within thee. Jerusalem was better fortified than (H.) other cities. But the Church is built upon a rock, and enriched with many graces, while heaven is free from all danger, and its inhabitants secure. W.—Nehemias re-peopled the city, which he had surrounded with walls, (C.) despising the sarcasms of his enemies. 2 Esd. 7:4.

Ver. 3. or Hebrew Psalm 147. Ver. 14. Peace. To obtain this, the peace of Jesus Christ must triumph in our hearts. Col. 3:15. H.—Borders. People perceiving that Assuerus favoured the Jews, durst no longer attack them. 2 Esd. 6:16. C.—They enjoyed peace and plenty. In the Church we have remission of sin in baptism and penance, and the spiritual food of Christ's body and blood in the blessed Eucharist, with the graces of the other sacraments. In heaven peace and joy subsist for ever. W.—Fat. The best (H.) of all sorts of fruit. Theod.—The Fathers understand the blessed Eucharist, or the holy Scriptures. S. Aug. &c. C.

Ver. 4. or Hebrew Psalm 147. Ver. 15. Speech. Rain, (Kimchi) Jesus Christ, (S. Aug.) or the gospel, (S. Hil. S. Jer.) which was presently propagated over all the earth. Rom. 10:18. W.—God's commands are instantly obeyed. H.—No sooner did he speak to Saul, but he was converted. Acts 9:4. Heb. 4:12. Bert.

Ver. 5. or Hebrew Psalm 147. Ver. 16. Like wool. Because it is white, and light, and covereth the earth as a fleece, which keeps it warm, and makes it fruitful. On which account also, in the following words, mists (or as it is in the Hebrew, hoar frosts) are compared to ashes, which give a fruitfulness to the ground. Ch.—Trees and fruits are preserved by the snow resting upon them. Vota arborum frugumque ... nives ... insidere. Pliny xvii. 2.—Mists are succeeded by clear weather. By penance and austerity sins are remitted, and devils expelled. Is. 1:18. W.

Ver. 6. or Hebrew Psalm 147. Ver. 17. His chrystal. Some understand it of hail, which is as it were ice, divided into bits, or morsels. Ch. Eccli. 43:22. C.—In summer and winter God sends proper moisture for the earth. T.—The most hardened are sometimes converted: but this must be the effect of grace. W.—Cold. If it were to continue, all would perish. He therefore sends the warm (C.) “south wind.” Syr.

Ver. 7. or Hebrew Psalm 147. Ver. 18. Wind. “Spirit.” The blessed Trinity (S. Jer.) grants compunction. Bert.—By preaching and grace conversions are wrought.

Ver. 8. or Hebrew Psalm 147. Ver. 19. Jacob. These spiritual blessings pertain only to the true Church. W.

Ver. 9. or Hebrew Psalm 147. Ver. 20. Them. He hath not announced his decrees to them. This glory was reserved for Israel. Deut. 4:7. C.—The written law was granted to the latter. Yet God had sufficiently manifested his will to all mankind, so that they must also appear before his tribunal. S. Chrys. Bert.—Alleluia. Considering that all were in the mass of sin, and that God justly let many perish; those whom he justifies are more bound to praise him; and therefore the prophet concludes this and the following psalms with Alleluia. W.—Christians, and particularly Catholics, are most concerned, since many have rebelled against the light of faith, (Bert.) and abuse the gift of the holy Scriptures. H.

PSALM 148

PSALM 148. (LAUDATE DOMINUM DE CÆLIS.)

All creatures are invited to praise their Creator.

Ver. 1. Alleluia. Sept. Syr. &c. add, “of Aggæus and Zacharias,” as it seems to have been composed after the captivity, v. 13. C.—But why might not David thus invite all to praise God? He descends from the highest creatures to those on earth. Bert.—Heavens. All ye blessed spirits, preach God for the excellence of your nature, and for your numbers. W.

Ver. 2. Hosts. Stars, (C.) or rather angels. S. Chrys. Matt. 26:52.—The three children made the same invitation to them, rejoicing in this holy communion. Bert.

Ver. 3. And light. Heb. “of light,” meaning the planets. Kimchi.—The harmony of these things invites us to praise the Lord. Origen and S. Hilary seem to represent them as intelligent. But (C.) when God is praised on their account ... they all praise him. S. Aug.—Irrational things shew forth the excellence of their Creator. W.

Ver. 4. Of heavens. The highest and most excellent, (C.) though not the abode of the angels, which had been specified before.—Heavens, in the clouds. It is not necessary to allow these waters to be above the stars. Bert.

Ver. 5. He spoke, and they were made, is not in Heb. or Chal. being taken from Ps. 32:9. (C.) or lost in the original. Bert.

Ver. 6. Away. The heavenly bodies observe the most constant order. H.—They are not liable to change, like sublunary things, (C.) though God may suspend the laws which he has established. Bert.

Ver. 7. Earth. All ye inhabitants. H.—He then addresses whales, and all in the seas.

Ver. 8. Word. For the punishment of the wicked, (C.) and to strike the saints with awe. H.

Ver. 9. Mountains. Thales, Origen, &c. have attributed souls to waters, &c. But this cannot be proved from this poetical personification. C.

Ver. 11. Kings, &c. God is to be praised for the diversity of states, whereby the whole community is preserved.

Ver. 13. Alone. God, and not any idol, has disposed all things. W.

Ver. 14. Earth. All contribute towards the divine praise. Yet they cannot afford as much as God deserves.—Horn. Glory, (C.) or the Messias; though this cannot easily be proved to be the literal sense. Bert.—People. Establishing his Church. W.—Saints. Israelites, (Bert.) particularly the sacred ministers. Deut. 4:7. C.—To him. By free-will, assisted by God's grace. W. Heb. 11:6. Jam. 4:8. Bert.

PSALM 149

PSALM 149. (CANTATE DOMINO.)

The Church is particularly bound to praise God.

Ver. 1. Alleluia. Theodoret repeats this word here and in the following psalm. The author of this psalm is unknown. It was sung after the captivity, to thank God for the favours and peace granted to his people, and to foretell the conquests gained under the Machabees, and more fully under the Messias. Orig.—The Jews still looked for them in vain. Why do thy not open their eyes, to see all accomplished by the propagation of the gospel? Muis refers the psalm to the beginning of David's reign over Israel, when the people entertained the strongest expectations of victory; and this opinion is very plausible, though we prefer that of the Fathers. C.—The prophet undoubtedly invites the faithful to praise God. Bert.—New, and excellent; (C.) nova carmina, (Virg. Ec. 3.) is explained magna miranda, by Servius. This psalm deserves the title, as it speaks of the new covenant. S. Chrys.—Saints of Israel, dedicated to God's service. Ex. 22:31. C.—Though all creatures are bound to praise the Lord, he accepts only praises of those who live in the Church. W.

Ver. 2. In him. Heb. "them." The plural is used out of respect, (Rabbins, C.) or rather to insinuate the blessed Trinity, as in Gen. 1. Job 35:10. Is. 54:5. Bert.—King David, or the Lord, who was the true king of Israel. 1 K. 8:7.

Ver. 3. Choir. A musical instrument, though it imply also a dance, &c.

Ver. 4. Unto. Heb. "in Jesus," (S. Jer.) or "he will adorn the neck with salvation," as with a precious robe. Ps. 131:9. 16.—The captives shall be restored to glory. C.

Ver. 5. Beds. In eternal rest. W.—The prosperity of the Israelites but feebly represents the happiness of the elect. C.

Ver. 6. Hands. He seems to allude to the regulation of Nehemias, (2 Esd. 4:17. H.) or to the Machabees, who were priests and soldiers. They shall proclaim God's praises, and defend the nation. In the spiritual sense, Catholics employ the two-edged sword of the Old and New Testament against heretics, and exercise the power of Christ in excommunicating the wicked. S. Jer.—Our Saviour enables the saints to judge at the last day. Matt. 19:28. C.—This chiefly regards such as have left all things, like the apostles, and those who embrace a monastic life. Matt. 4:20 and 19:27. Acts 4:34 and 1 Cor. 6:3.—They shall judge whether people have made good or bad use of their possessions. S. Aug. Ven. Bede.—All the blessed will approve of God's sentence; and their example in overcoming difficulties, will evince the baseness of the wicked, who have yielded to less temptations. W.

Ver. 8. Iron. These poetical expressions denote victory. The Machabees made great conquests, and the Jews expect greater under the Messias. But this has been verified in the conversion of nations to Christ. Is. 49:23 and 60:14. C.—The victories of the Machabees were of short duration. Bert.

Ver. 9. Written. In God's decrees. W. Job 31:35. Dan. 7:10. C.—This judicial power is part of the glory of the saints. W. 1 Cor. 6:2. Wisd. 3:7. H.—All shall judge the wicked who have imitated the disinterestedness of the apostles. C.

PSALM 150

PSALM 150. (LAUDATE DOMINUM IN SANCTIS.)

An exhortation to praise God with all sorts of instruments.

Ver. 1. Alleluia. This invitation is addressed to the sacred ministers, as the people and all creatures had been already exhorted to praise God. C.—This psalm was sung when the first-fruits were brought to the temple. Selden, Syn. 3.—The Lord. Heb. el, “God.” H.—Places. Heb. “his sanctuary,” (H.) or heaven. C.—All both in heaven and earth sound forth his praises.

Ver. 2. Acts. Ye, for whom miracles have been wrought, praise him as much as you are able, though you cannot do it sufficiently. W.

Ver. 3. Trumpet. This instrument was reserved for priests. Num. 10:2. The nine others might be used by Levites. C.—The precise signification of them is not known. Bert.

Ver. 4. Choir ... Strings. Unity and mortification are requisite to make our praises acceptable, as strings are made of the bowels of beasts. W.

Ver. 5. Spirit. Wind instrument, (M.) or man, who is bound to praise God, even more than the angels, as Christ has assumed his nature, and will bring him to sing with them Alleluia. W.—Let “all that breathes” praise, (Bert.) including every living creature, (C.) as well as the celestial spirits. H.—Alleluia is not in Sept. Syr. &c. But it is in the Heb. and no word could answer better for a conclusion of the psalms, which are almost wholly employed in the divine praises. This ought to be our occupation both on earth, and in heaven. Amen. C.—Pope Damasus, A.D. 380, ordered the Glory, &c. to be added to each of the psalms, as it has been since observed. W.—An apocryphal psalm, concerning David encountering Goliath, occurs in many Greek and Latin copies; but it is of no authority. C.

PROVERBS

THE BOOK OF PROVERBS

INTRODUCTION

This book is so called, because it consists of wise and weighty sentences, regulating the morals of men; and directing them to wisdom and virtue. And these sentences are also called Parables, because great truths are often couched in them under certain figures and similitudes. Ch.—Wisdom is introduced speaking in the nine first chapters. Then to ch. 25 more particular precepts are given. W.—Ezechias caused to be collected (H.) what comes in the five next chapters, and in the two last. Some other, or rather Solomon himself, under (W.) different titles, gives us Agur's and his mother's instructions, and his own commendations of a valiant woman, (H.) which is prophetic of the Catholic Church. He also wrote the two next works, besides many other things, which have been lost. This is the first of those five, which are called “sapiential,” giving instructions how to direct our lives, by the dictates of sound reason. W.—It is the most important of Solomon's works, though collected by different authors. C.—T. Paine treats Solomon as a witty jester. But his jests are of a very serious nature, and no one had before heard of his wit. Watson.

PROVERBS 1

Ver. 1. Israel. The dignity of the author, and the importance of the subject, invite us to read. S. Bas.—Solomon is the first whose name is placed at the head of any work in Scripture. C.

Ver. 2. To know. This is the design of these parables. C.—They tend to instruct both the unexperienced and the wise. v. 5. There are three sorts of wisdom: the divine, which is God himself; (c. 3:16) the supernatural, which is his gift, to lead us into all virtue; and the worldly, which is mixed with error, &c. W. Wisd. 7:25.

Ver. 4. Subtily. Discretion to the innocent. C.

Ver. 5. Wiser. “Tamdiu audiendum & discendum est, quamdiu nescias, & si proverbio credimus, quamdiu vivas,” says Seneca, ep. 77.—Governments. And be fit to govern others, (W.) as well as himself. C.

Ver. 6. Sayings. This science was much esteemed. 3 K. 10:1. Eccli. 39:2.

Ver. 7. Fear. Thus we arrive at charity. S. Aug. in ep. Jo. ix. Job

28:28. &c. This fear includes religion, but not barren speculations. C.
—It implies a desire to act, and not simply to understand.

Ver. 8. Mother. The first precept is to learn of our elders, and the second to resist evil counsels. v. 10. W.—Our parents have the greatest influence over us. Solomon presupposes that they are virtuous and well informed. C.

Ver. 10. Entice. Heb. “deceive.” C.—Pessimum inimicorum genus laudantes. Tacit. in vit. Agric.

Ver. 12. Pit. Grave, or hell, like Dathan. Num. 16. This shews the greatest rage. Job 31:31.

Ver. 17. Wings. If thou attend, therefore, to my instructions, their arts will be vain. Ven. Bede.—They unjustly seek to deceive the pious. C.—Watchfulness will be the best protection against them. W.

Ver. 19. Possessors. Of money. C.—While they attempt to invade another’s property, they ruin themselves, and come to the gallows. H.

Ver. 20. Streets. In every place we may learn wisdom. “The wise learn more from fools, than fools do from the wise,” as Cato well observed. C.

Ver. 22. Fools. Heb. “and scorers delight in their scorning.” Prot.—Such are the pests of society. H.—They turn piety to ridicule, and will talk about things which they do not understand, like our esprits forts, (C.) or pretended philosophers. H.

Ver. 26. Mock. God is too much above us to act thus; but he will treat us as an enraged enemy. C.—In hell, the damned will cry in vain. v. 28. They had sufficient graces offered while they were alive. W.

Ver. 28. Find me. Because their repentance was false, like that of Antiochus. 2 Mac. 9:13 and Ps. 11:4. C.

Ver. 30. Despised. Lit. “distracted,” (H.) supposing my threats would not be put in execution. Heb. “they abhorred.” C.

Ver. 32. Turning. Heb. “the ease of the simple,” who have given way to deceit. C.—Them. The objects of their eager desires, prove their ruin. Ezech. 16:49.

Ver. 33. Evils. Both the just and the wicked, (v. 31. H.) shall be treated according to their deserts. 2 Cor. 5:10. W.—Even in this world, the just enjoy the peace of a good conscience. M.

PROVERBS 2

Ver. 1. If. This proves free will. To become truly wise, we must desire it with the same avidity as a miser seeks for riches. W.—We must also pray, (v. 3) with humility (v. 2) to God, the giver of wisdom. v. 6. Every science which has not Him for the beginning and end, is vain and dangerous. C.

Ver. 7. Salvation. Prot. “sound wisdom.” Tushiya (H.) often occurs in this book, and is very comprehensive, (C.) denoting the substance (H.) of goodness, virtue, &c. Job 5:12.

Ver. 8. Justice. In his servants. C.—God gives them grace to follow virtue, (H.) and protects them from every danger. C.

Ver. 12. Things. The danger of such company for young people is very great, as the heart is misled by the understanding, (C.) if it do not itself shew the way to error. H.—We all possess a fund of corruption. C.

Ver. 14. Evil. These signs prove whom we ought to shun. S. Aug. depicts his own conduct before his conversion in the darkest colours. C.

Ver. 16. Strange. Idolatress, (Grot.) or rather the abandoned woman, whether married or not. C.—This description, as well as the former, guards us against heretics, who leave the right way of the Catholic Church, (v. 13) and devise perverse doctrines of rebellion against princes, &c. as if faith alone were sufficient. By this faith, Prot. do not mean any article which all must believe, but only that each one must be convinced that he himself is just, and will be saved. Like the strange woman, they preach a comfortable doctrine, and use sweet speeches. Rom. 16:18. Their conversion is a very difficult matter, (v. 19) because they are condemned by their own judgment, (Tit. 3:11) and will not admit of the ordinary means of instruction in the Church. W.

Ver. 17. Youth. Her husband, whom she married young when love is more lasting. This increases her guilt. It may also signify her father, or preceptor.

Ver. 18. God. The law forbids adultery, and all impurities. Deut. 23:17. Lev. 20:10. Both the parties, guilty of adultery, were punished with death. C.

Ver. 19. Life. A sincere conversion is so rare among people once addicted to impurity, (H.) which resembles a deep pit. C.—This illness is hardly removed. M.

Ver. 21. Earth. Happily. This was the wish of the carnal Jews. But the more enlightened raise their thoughts to heaven.

PROVERBS 3

Ver. 1. My son. God speaks, or the master instructs his disciple. v. 21. C.—We must remember and love instruction, and reduce it to practice. W.

Ver. 2. Peace. These prefigured more substantial blessings. C.

Ver. 3. Truth. Be kind and faithful to all. Gen. 24:27. Ps. 24:10.

Ver. 4. Good. Sept. “forecast good before the Lord and men.” S. Paul seems to allude to this version, Rom. 12:17 and 2 Cor. 8:22. H.

Ver. 5. All. God will have nothing by halves.—Lean not. By pride. 2 Cor. 12:13. All must be referred to God. C.—In him we may safely trust. W.

Ver. 8. Bones. Thou shalt enjoy perfect health.

Ver. 9. Fruits. Sept. add, “of justice;” to intimate that no presents will be acceptable, which have been unjustly acquired.

Ver. 11. Him. Correction is rather a proof of love than of anger. Ps. 3:9. C.—God thus shews that he approves of his servants; and therefore his other promises, which seem of a temporal nature, must be understood with reference to the next life. W.

Ver. 12. And as. Sept. “but he scourgeth every son whom he receiveth,” as S. Paul quotes this passage. Heb. 12:6. The verb is now wanting in Heb. or ceab; “as a father” may signify “scourgeth, in piel, (M.) with i prefixed. C.

Ver. 15. Riches. Heb. peninim, (H.) “pearls.” Job 28:18. C.

Ver. 16. Glory. Her hands are full, and she grants favours with profusion, (H.) as with both hands, promising eternal life. W.

Ver. 18. Life. Like that planted in paradise. Gen. 2:9.

Ver. 19. Wisdom. Hitherto he had spoken of that virtue. Now he treats of the uncreated wisdom, (C.) which is God the Son. M. Jans. S. Greg. Mor. xii. 4.

Ver. 20. Out. The higher and lower waters being divided, (C.) or the channels formed to receive the waters. Piscat.—It may also speak of the deluge. Ven. Bede.—With. Heb. “have distilled dew.” This is so copious, as to resemble rain in Palestine. Judg. 6:37 and 2 K. 17:12.

Ver. 22. Mouth. There have been wise and virtuous men afflicted, v. 11. But they have borne all with patience, and have merited a more glorious reward than what this earth could afford. C.

Ver. 27. Able. Prot. “withhold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thine hand to do it.” Relieve the distressed. H.—They have a title to that wealth, since those who possess it are bound to relieve the indigent. C.—Sept. “refrain not from doing good,” &c. H.

Ver. 28. Present. Alms in season are doubly valuable. W.—Antigonus acquired the title of Δωσων, “about to give,” as he never gave, (Plutarch) but only promised.

Ver. 30. Cause. We may defend ourselves; but herein great discretion is necessary. C.—Cum pari contendere anceps est: cum superiore furiosum; cum inferiore sordidum. Senec. Prov.

Ver. 31. Ways. Of injustice. Seek not to attain his prosperity by the same means. C.

Ver. 33. Want. Heb. “a curse.”—Shall be. Heb. “he blesseth.” H.

Ver. 34. Scorners. Lit. “he will delude the scorners.” H.—He will treat them as they would treat others. Ps. 17:27. C.—Sept. “the Lord resisteth the proud,” &c. So the apostles quote this passage. 1 Pet. 5:5. Jam. 4:6. H.

Ver. 35. Disgrace. They are seen by more, and their fall is more dangerous. C.—“A fool extols what is ignominious.” Pagn. H.

PROVERBS 4

Ver. 1. Father. He shews the greatest respect for his parents, v. 3. C.

Ver. 3. As. This is not expressed. H.—But Solomon was not the only son of Bethsabee, as S. Luke (3:23) specifies Nathan, his brother. See 2

K. 12:24. Sept. have “beloved in,” &c.

Ver. 4. He. Heb. is masculine. C.—As David instructed his son, so the latter teaches all how they may learn wisdom. W.

Ver. 7. Beginning. The first part of wisdom is to desire it. For nothing hindereth from being just, but that justice is not desired. S. Aug. in Ps. 118:20. W.—“Wisdom is the principal part; therefore get,” &c. Prot. H.—It is the one thing necessary. C.—The pearl, to acquire which we must part with every thing else, if required. Matt. 13:46. M.

Ver. 17. Wickedness. Acquired thereby, or they make sin their food. C. 26:6.

Ver. 18. Day. They are children of light, (Jo. 12:35) and give edification, always advancing in virtue. M.

Ver. 19. Fall. They are unconcerned about sin, and neither avoid it, nor strive to repent. C.

Ver. 22. Flesh. All may derive benefit from their consideration. H.

Ver. 23. From it. As the heart is the principal part of the body, so the will is the chief power of the soul, from which good or evil proceeds. W.—A clean heart gives life, a corrupt one, death. Mat. 15:11. 19.

Ver. 24. From thee. Neither detract, nor give any countenance to detractors.

Ver. 25. Steps. Be attentive to thy own affairs. Prov. 17:24.

Ver. 26. Straight. Heb. “ponder.” Examine what thou takest in hand, and walk not at random. Heb. 12:13.

Ver. 27. For, &c. What follows is not in Heb. or the Complut. (C.) Sept. But it is in the Roman, &c. (H.) and in the new edition of S. Jerom, as it was explained by Ven. Bede. Lyran and Cajetan reject it. C.

PROVERBS 5

Ver. 2. Thoughts. Or wisdom; and act with discretion.—Mind, &c. is omitted in Heb. and S. Jer. C.—By woman all concupiscence, or the inducement to sin, is commonly understood. We must not think of such things. W.

Ver. 4. Sword. “It is a crime even to hearken.” S. Amb. de Abrah. ii. 11. She seeks thy ruin. v. 5 c. 2:16.

Ver. 6. They. Heb. “if perhaps thou ponder the path of life.” Pagn. H.—Or “she ponders not,” &c. She walks inconsiderately, and consults only her passions. c. 7:10. C.—No one can depend on her love. M.

Ver. 9. Strangers. The world, the flesh, and the devil are such; cruelly devising our ruin. W.

Ver. 10. Strength. Or children. v. 16. Gen. 49:3. C.

Ver. 11. Body. He alludes to a shameful disease, the just punishment of intemperance. Eccli. 19:3.

Ver. 14. Evil. Infirm and worn out, having lost my reputation, &c. C.—Though I lived among the faithful, I was under no restraint. M.

Ver. 15. Well. Live comfortably on your own property, (Cajet.) with your own wife.

Ver. 16. Waters. Mayst thou have a numerous offspring, (v. 10) and be liberal. Many copies of the Sept. &c. have a negation, with Aquila, “let not thy,” &c. (C.) though it may be read with and interrogation, “are the waters of thy fountain to be?” &c. De Dieu.—By not means. Origen (in Num. 12) acknowledges both readings. C.—Good instructions must be given to those who are well disposed, but not to scoffers, or obstinate infidels. W.—Husbands are exhorted to be content with their own wives, (v. 15. 20) so that the negative particle seems to be here wanting, as it is, c. 6:17 in MS. 60, (Kennicott) and c. 14:33. Sept. &c. Capellus.

Ver. 17. Thee. Stick to thy own wife. In a moral sense, let those who instruct others, take care not to neglect themselves.

Ver. 18. Vein. Thou shalt have a numerous progeny. Ps. 67:28. Is. 48:1. C.

Ver. 19. Love. This is spoken by way of permission, and to withdraw people from unlawful connections. Eccle. 2:1 and 1 Cor. 7:29. C.

Ver. 22. Ropes. “Evil habits unrestrained induce a necessity,” (S. Aug. Conf. viii. 5.) though not absolute. H.—The libertine thinks he can get free as soon as he pleases; not being aware of the chains which he is forging for himself. C.—Sin requires punishment. M.

PROVERBS 6

Ver. 1. Hand. Agreements were made by shaking hands, Is. 62:8. Xen. Anab. iii.—Stranger. Sept. “enemy.” He will presently be such, or thy friend’s creditor will soon lay hold on thee. By standing surety for another, we expose ourselves to be ruined by his negligence. C.—The Persians had a horror chiefly of lying and debts. Herod. i. 138.—All sureties are not condemned, but only such as are inconsiderate. M.—A diligent compliance with engagements is commended. W.

Ver. 3. Make. Heb. “humble thyself, and made sure thy friend,” (Prot.) entreating (H.) and forcing him to pay his debts. The Fathers apply this to pastors, who have undertaken to direct others. Their soul is at stake. S. Greg. C.

Ver. 8. Harvest. The economy and diligence of this littel republic is admirable. Pliny, xxx. 11.—Some copies of the Sept. add with S. Amb. (Hex. v. [1]. &c. C.) “or go to the bee, and behold what a worker it is, and how beautiful is its work; whose labours kings and private people use for health. But it is desirable and glorious to all; and though it be weak in strength, by the love of wisdom it has got forward” (H.) in esteem. C.—Nature has given the form of a monarchy in bees, and of a democracy in the regulations of the ant. Tournemine.

Ver. 11. A traveller. Sept. add, “wicked,” and Heb. gives the idea of a robber. M.—But, &c. This is not in Heb. Complut. or S. Jerom. C.

Ver. 12. Apostate. Heb. “of Belial, without restraint of religion and law. C.—Deut. 13:13. M.—Every one who sins through malice and particularly heretics, employ all their members to pervert others. W.—Mouth. No reliance can be had on his promises. C.

Ver. 13. Finger. These signs imply haughtiness, &c. Ps. 34:19. Is. 58:9. The posture indicates the interior sentiments, (S. Amb. off. i. 18.) insomuch, that S. Ambrose would not receive among the clergy one whose gestures were too light. The Persians still speak by signs. C.

Ver. 16. Detesteth. This expression does not always mean that the last is worse than the former. M.—All the six sins are damnable, but the seventh is here, most so, being against charity and unity, and the devil’s sin. W.—Lying seems to be reprobated by three different terms. C.

Ver. 23. Instruction. Given for our improvement, (H.) with charity. See Deut. 6:6. Ps. 18:9.

Ver. 24. Stranger. This is often inculcated, because nothing is more dangerous in youth, nor more contrary to the study of wisdom.

Ver. 26. Woman. Who is married, exposes her lover to the danger of death. She chooses the most accomplished men, while the harlot receives the first comer. C.

Ver. 27. Burn. No one can deal with an adulteress without guilt. M.—All probable occasions of sin must be shunned. W.

Ver. 29. Clean. Or be left unpunished. No crime disturbs the order of society so much, nor is pardoned with more difficulty.

Ver. 30. The fault is not so great, &c. The sin of theft is not so great, as to be compared with adultery: especially when a person pressed with hunger (which is the case here spoken of) steals to satisfy nature. Moreover the damage done by theft may much more easily be repaired, then the wrong done by adultery. But this does not hinder but that theft also is a mortal sin, forbidden by one of the ten commandments. Ch.—Heb. “they will not despise a thief, when he hath stolen to fill his soul, when he is hunger.” Mont. H.—This was commonly supposed to be his motive, and he was only condemned to make restitution, without any further disgrace. C. 19:24. Ex. 22:1. But what necessity could the adulterer plead? Both he and the woman must suffer death. Lev. 20:10.

Ver. 31. Seven-fold. Or as much as may be required. The law never subjected the thief to restore above five-fold. If he had not enough, his person might be sold. C.

Ver. 32. Folly. Lit. “want,” inopiam. Heb. “is faint-hearted, corrupting his own soul, he will do that.” H.

Ver. 35. Gifts. “A husband would rather hear that his wife had been slain, than that she had been defiled.” S. Jer. in Amos vi.

PROVERBS 7

Ver. 1. Words. As dangerous temptations always threaten, the same instructions are frequently inculcated. W.

Ver. 5. Thine. But another’s. v. 19. Give thy heart to wisdom, that it may be guarded against impure love.

Ver. 6. Lattice. No glass was used, on account of the great heat. C.

Ver. 7. Ones. Not in age, but prudence. M.

Ver. 10. Attire. Covered with a veil, (Gen. 38:15) though different from that of honest women. C.—The wanton are commonly the most gaudy; nullarum fere pretiosior cultus est quam quarum pudor vilis est. S. Cyp. de Habitu.—Prepared, &c. Heb. “guarded,” (C.) or “subtle of heart.” Prot. “who makes the hearts of youths take flight.” Sept. Cant. 6:4. H.

Ver. 11. Not ... quiet. Is not in Heb. C.—“She is loud and stubborn, her feet abide not in her house.” Prot. H.—Chaste women are guarded in their speech, and keep at home. M.

Ver. 14. Prosperity. Or thy welfare, (Corn. a Lap. T.) so great is my love for thee. M.—Vows. And therefore I have a feast prepared. People might carry home the greatest part of the victim to eat, if they were clean. Lev. 7:29. C.

Ver. 16. Cords. For greater ease, instead of boards, (M.) or the curtains are hung with precious cords from Egypt. C.

Ver. 17. Aloes. Of Syria, (Jo. 19:39) different from ours. Num. 34:6. C.

Ver. 18. Inebriated. Prot. “take our fill of love until the morning: let us solace ourselves with loves.” H.—This passion is a sort of intoxication. M.

Ver. 19. My. Lit. “the man.” H.—She speaks thus out of contempt. C.

Ver. 20. The day. Sept. “after many days.” Heb. “at the day concealed,” or when the people will dwell under tents, (Chal. C.) or “at the new moon,” when it does not appear. Piscat.—He will not return for a long time, so that we need apprehend no danger from him. M.

Ver. 22. Lamb. Prot. “fool to the correction of the stocks,” (H.) or “like a shackle (ābs.) for the chastisement of a fool.” Mont.—Interpreters have read different words. C.—Sinners who have given way to temptations, are as inconsiderate as oxen, or birds which hasten to their own ruin. W.

Ver. 26. Her. Solomon gave a melancholy proof of this, as well as David, and Amnon. C.

Ver. 27. Death. There can be no precaution too great. c. 2:18. C.

PROVERBS 8

Ver. 1. Voice. Men are wanting to themselves: they cannot plead ignorance. C.—Wisdom stands on high in the Catholic Church inviting all to virtue and happiness. W.—Some explain this of the light which is communicated to men; but the Fathers apply it to Jesus Christ, some of the expressions regarding his divinity, and others his human nature. Eccli. 24.

Ver. 3. Doors. Amid disputants, whose eagerness ought to convince us of the preference due to wisdom over all terrestrial concerns. v. 10.

Ver. 10. Money. They are generally incompatible.

Ver. 12. Thoughts. All good comes from God, the eternal wisdom, (C.) which speaks here. W.

Ver. 15. Things. Power and knowledge are the gift of the Almighty. Rom. 12:1. A prince who resembles God the most, is his best present. Pliny in Trajan.

Ver. 18. Glorious. Lit. “proud.” H.—But here it only means great. Is. 9:15 and 61:6. Riches too commonly nourish pride, and it is very rare to see them joined with justice. C.

Ver. 19. Stone. So the Sept. translate paz, (H.) which designates a more pure sort of gold. Gen. 2:11. C.

Ver. 21. Enrich. Heb. “grant what is (real goods) an inheritance to them,” &c.—Treasures. Sept. add, “with goods. If I announce to you daily occurrences, I will admonish you to number the things of the world,” (H.) and all past events. C.

Ver. 22. Possessed. As Christ was with God, equal to him in eternity. Jo. 1. Sept. “created,” which many of the Fathers explain of the word incarnate, (see Corn. a Lapide. Bossuet) or he hath “placed me,” (S. Athan. iii. con. Arian. Euseb.) a pattern of all virtues. The Sept. generally render kana, “possessed,” as Aquila does here. C.

Ver. 23. Up. Heb. “anointed.” Sept. “he founded.” Christ was appointed to be the foundation, on which we must be built. S. Athan. iii. Orat.

Ver. 24. Conceived. Having yet manifested none of my works. Since the creation, wisdom only seeks to communicate itself to us. C.

Ver. 26. Poles. Heb. “head or height of the dust of the world.” H.—I subsisted with the chaos, before things appeared in their present form. C.—The poles denote the north and south, or the four quarters of the world. M.

Ver. 28. Sky. Prot. “clouds.” Pagn. “the air.” Vulg. æthera. Sept. “the clouds above.” H.—Moses assigns the higher and lower waters the same origin. Gen. 1:7.

Ver. 29. Pass. This is often remarked. Ps. 41:8.—Earth. See Job 38:8. C.

Ver. 30. Forming. Heb. “one nursed,” (C.) or nursing, nutritius. Pagn. —He was not an idle spectator.—Playing. With ease and surprising variety. C.

Ver. 31. Men. God saw that all was good, but delighted most in his own image. M.—He prefers man before all other corporeal creatures. W.—To him alone below he has granted understanding, and a soul capable of virtue. The Son has also assumed our nature. Bar. 3:37.

Ver. 35. Lord. Wisdom, or Jesus Christ, is our salvation, happiness, and life. Sept. “and the will is prepared by the Lord.” S. Aug. often quotes this to prove the necessity of preventing grace. Ep. ccxvii. and clxxxvi. C.

Ver. 36. Death. Not in itself, (H.) but by adhering to such things as bring death. M.

PROVERBS 9

Ver. 1. House. The sacred humanity, (S. Ignat. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xvii. 20.) or the Church. S. Greg. Mor. xxxiii. 15.—Here we may receive all instruction, the seven sacraments, and the gifts of the Holy Ghost. Pleasure had mentioned here attractions: now those of true wisdom are set before us. C.—God sent his pastors at all times, to invite people to embrace the latter. They are all included in the number seven, both before and under the law, as well as in the gospel, where S. Paul styles SS. Peter, James, and John, pillars. Gal. 2. This is the literal sense, on which the mystical is grounded, and both are intended by the Holy Ghost, intimating that the uncreated wisdom took flesh of the blessed Virgin, prepared the table of bread and wine, as Priest according to the order of Melchisedec, and chose the weak of this world to confound the strong, as S. Aug. explain this passage. Sup. and q. 51. W.

Ver. 2. Victims. Moses ordered the blood to be poured out at the door of the tabernacle, and a part given to the priests, after which the rest might be taken away. The like was probably done at Jerusalem. Lev. 17:4. These victims are contrasted with those of pleasure. c. 7:14.—Mingled. It was not customary for any but barbarians and the gods to take pure wine. Some mixed two, others three, five, or even twenty parts of water. But the scholiast of Aristophanes says, the best method was to have three parts water, and two of wine. Mercury complains that his wine was half water. Arist. Plut. v. Sun. i.—The Fathers often apply this text to the feast of Jesus Christ in the blessed Eucharist. C.—S. Cyprian (ep. iii.) citeth the whole passage of Christ's sacrifice in the forms of bread and wine. W.

Ver. 3. Maids. Sept. "servant men," the pastors of the church, inviting all to piety in so public a manner, that none can plead ignorance. S. Greg. C.—To invite. Prot. "she crieth upon the highest places of the city." H.—Christ enjoins his apostles to preach on the roofs. Matt. 10:37.

Ver. 4. One. Simple, but not inconstant, like children. 1 Cor. 14:20. Pleasure addresses the same, (c. 7:7) but for their destruction. C.

Ver. 7. Scorners. This is the reason why wisdom speaks only to the simple. The conceited would only laugh at her instructions. These scoffers represent heretics and libertines. c. 1:22. C.—Where there is no hope of amendment, prudence and charity require us to be silent, as our rebukes would only procure us enmity, and make the sinner worse. W.—Of such S. John was afraid, and therefore ceased from writing. 3 Jo. 9. Yet S. Paul commands public reprehension. 1 Tim. 5:20. M.—When there is any prospect of good, all, particularly superiors, are bound to correct. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. i. 9.; and S. Bas. reg. fus. 158. W.

Ver. 9. Occasion. This word is found in Sept. Syr. and Arab. We might supply instruction, (C.) with Prot.

Ver. 10. Prudence. Or "prudence is the science of the saints," (H.) directing what to choose on all occasions to obtain heaven. C.—The knowledge contained in the holy Scriptures, and possessed by the saints, is superior to all other sciences. M.

Ver. 13. And full. Prot. "she is simple and knoweth nothing." Sept. "is in want of a piece of bread." They have several verses before this, which are here omitted. H.—Wisdom and pleasure are opposed to each other. C.

Ver. 17. Pleasant. Impure pleasures are more delightful (C.) to sensual men. H.—The prohibition increases appetite. M.

Ver. 18. Giants. Who lived when all flesh had corrupted its ways, (Gen. 6:12) and were sentenced to hell. Job 26:5. Is. 14:9. C.

PROVERBS 10

Solomon. This title is not found in Sixtus V. or Sept. Hitherto the preface extends, shewing the advantages of wisdom. C.—The subsequent chapters more properly contain the parables, and are written with great elegance, so as to oppose vice to virtue. See Bain. S. Jer. &c. W.

Ver. 1. Mother. A virtuous child cannot be indifferent to the joy of his parents.

Ver. 2. Wickedness. Riches ill acquired, or tending to corrupt the heart. Lu. 16:9.

Ver. 3. Famine. Ps. 36:25. The prophets and Lazarus rejoice in suffering.

Ver. 4. Poverty. Even of those who had plenty. This is true in a spiritual sense likewise. C.—The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence. H.—Otiositas mater nugarum, noverca virtutum. S. Bern. consid. ii.—He, &c. This is not in Heb. Greek, S. Jer. or in several Latin copies. C.—We find it in the Sept. C. 9:13.—Away. He derives no benefits from lies. M.

Ver. 5. He. Sept. “a son well educated shall be wise, and shall have the unwise for his servant. An intelligent son has been saved from the heat. But the wicked son is destroyed by the wind in time of harvest.” H.—A good part of this is not in the original; yet it is received by the Greeks.

Ver. 6. Wicked. Or, as the Heb. seems to indicate, “the wicked covereth iniquity, by an hypocritical exterior,” (C.) or, “the injury” (Mont.) done to another, (chamas. H.) “unseasonable, or infinite mourning,” πενθος αωρον. Sept.

Ver. 7. Rot. Heb. “stink.” His reputation shall be lost. Gen. 34:20. C.

Ver. 8. Lips. He will not bear correction. M.—But suffers the punishment of his own unguarded speeches; or rather the man who hath foolish lips, shall be beaten, v. 13. C.

Ver. 9. Sincerely. Or Simply, Heb. “in uprightness,” (H.) or innocence. M.—Manifest. The hypocrite shall be at last detected.

Ver. 10. Sorrow. Sept. add, “to men as well as to himself.” C.—“But he who chides boldly shall make peace,” (H.) or “work safety,” as the Syr. and Arab. also read, instead of Heb. “a prating fool shall fall.” “When a man connives at his friend’s failings, ... the offender is encouraged to sin on, and to heap up matter for very sorrowful reflections; but the man, who with an honest freedom, prudently reproves him, most effectually contrives his honour and safety.” The consequences of a virtuous and a vicious friendship, seem to be also expressed in the next verse. Thus the latter hemistic generally illustrates the first. But here, part of v. 8 may be improperly inserted. The two parts of the verses in Proverbs, &c. being arranged in distinct columns, has occasioned sometimes a part, and sometimes a whole verse, to be omitted, as the transcriber might mistake the line. Kennicott.

Ver. 11. Life. Or a never-failing spring, fons perennis, as we should speak in Latin. C. 13:14. Apoc. 7:17.

Ver. 12. Sins. Sept. “all who contend.” Charity pardons all. 1 Pet. 4:8.

Ver. 13. Sense. Lit. “a heart.” But the Hebrews use this expression in a different sense from what we do, and thus designate a fool. Ose. 7:11.

Ver. 14. Confusion. He speaks inconsiderately, and involves himself in continual dangers, while the wise are cautious in their speech.

Ver. 15. Poverty. Diffidence hinders the advancement of the poor, as presumption is too common among the rich. A happy mediocrity is best. v. 16.

Ver. 16. Life. In abundance he is not puffed up; but the wicked make use of their fruit or revenue to do evil. Their works are bad, unless they turn to God by at least an initial love of justice.

Ver. 18. Foolish. We must neither dissemble our resentment, through hypocrisy, nor manifest it without reason. C.

Ver. 19. Sin. A prolix discourse on subjects of importance is not reprehended. S. Aug. Retrac. 1.—But it is very difficult to speak much, without going against some virtue. C.

Ver. 21. Understanding. Lit. “hear.” H. v. 13.

Ver. 23. Man. He is enabled to see the evil of sin, and to avoid it. Job 15:16.

Ver. 26. Him. He spoils all their projects, (C.) and becomes a nuisance.

Ver. 29. Evil. conscience upbraids them, and punishment is before their eyes. H. Magna vis est conscientiae. Cic. pro Mil.

Ver. 30. Earth. This the Jews frequently experienced. The more enlightened understood, that such promises regarded also eternity. C.

PROVERBS 11

Ver. 1. Balance. Both in commerce, (Deut. 25:13. C.) and in passing sentence on others. Ven. Bede.

Ver. 2. Wisdom. God resists the proud. c. 16:18 and 18:12 and Jam. 4:6.

Ver. 7. Solicitous. Or ambitious. Heb. “the potent,” or Sept. “the impious.”

Ver. 8. For him. As comparatively nothing worth to his master. C. 21:18. Is. 43:3

Ver. 11. Overthrown. Ten just men would have saved Sodom. Achan alone threw all Israel into confusion. C.

Ver. 12. Mean. Lit. “indigent” of sense. H.—We must put up with some faults, as none are without. Hor. i. Sat. 3. C.

Ver. 13. Walketh. Sept. “the double-tongued,” dissembler, or great talker. C.

Ver. 15. That is. Heb. “that hateth those who make agreements is secure.” Mont.

Ver. 16. Gracious. Virtuous and beautiful, as God hath granted beauty also for good purposes. This and virtue tend to the advancement of women, while men can use their strength to acquire riches. C.—Glory. Sept. Syr. and Arab. add, “of her husband. But she that hateth righteousness is a throne of disgrace. The slothful, though rich, shall come to poverty; but the laborious shall retain their riches.” Two hemistics seem to be lost in Heb. Kennicott.—Most of the additions in the Sept. are only glosses, or useless repetitions, (C.) though they seem not to be so in this place. H.

Ver. 17. Kindred. Heb. “flesh.” Gen. 29:14. The miser is cruel even to himself.

Ver. 21. In hand. At rest, or making agreements. God will punish the race of the wicked.

Ver. 22. Foolish. Beauty, without prudence, leads to ruin, as ornaments are ill bestowed on swine. The women in the east sometimes wore rings in their noses, (Gen. 24:22. C.) or hanging down upon them. Is. 3:21. M.

Ver. 24. Others. Moderation is always requisite. Heb. “there is one withholding from rectitude, yet for a defect,” (Mont.) being too saving, he is a loser. H.—Avarice does not always increase riches. C.

Ver. 25. Himself. He shall receive abundantly. 2 Cor. 9:6. The beneficent shall be amply rewarded both in this world and in the next.

Ver. 26. Corn. In times of scarcity. See Amos 8:7.

Ver. 29. House. By his profligacy, or law-suits, shall be impoverished, (v. 17. C.) or if he act with violence, he will make his house empty. Eccli. 4:35. M.

Ver. 30. Life. Producing excellent fruits of virtue and edification.

Ver. 31. Receive. Punishment, for almost inevitable faults, or be treated according to his deserts. Sept. Syr. and Arab. “if the just be hardly saved, where shall the impious and the sinner appear?” 1 Pet. 4:18. C.—Afflictions attend the just in this life. Shall the wicked escape? M.

PROVERBS 12

Ver. 1. Knowledge. It is a great kindness to shew us our faults. But God’s grace is necessary to make us reap benefit from correction, (C.) as self-love recoils at it.

Ver. 2. But. Heb. “and he will condemn the man of devices,” (Mont. H.) or, “the man of thoughts doth wickedly,” (C.) as he trusts in them, rather than in God. M.

Ver. 4. Diligent. Heb. “strong or virtuous,” (H.) including all the perfections of the sex, and in particular those of economy and chastity. C. 14:1 and 31:10.

Ver. 7. Turn. In a moment the wicked is not to be found. C. 10:25 and Ps. 36:35.

Ver. 8. Learning. We apply to those things which we love, and those who study sacred (C.) or useful sciences, shall receive praise.

Ver. 9. Glorious. Or a boaster, (H.) as many noblemen are, who are involved in debt. Eccli. 10:30. M.—It is better to have a sufficiency, than to be of noble parentage; and starving through a stupid idea, that work would be disgraceful.

Ver. 10. Beasts. Those who treat them with cruelty, would do the like with men. God gives regulations to let brute beasts have rest. Lev. 22:28. C. S. Chrys. in Rom. xxix.

Ver. 11. Idleness. Heb. “the idle.” Their company is seducing.—He that, &c. This occurs in the Sept. but not in the Heb. or the new edit. of S. Jerom. C.—Wine. Or “in taverns.”—Holds. Soldiers have thus been often surprised. M.—“Drunkenness is an incitement to lust and madness, the poison of wisdom.” S. Amb.

Ver. 12. Men. They wish to supplant one another.

Ver. 13. Lips. Liars often become the victims of their own deceit.

Ver. 16. Wise. It is more difficult to repress, than to avoid anger. S. Amb.—To dissemble, so as to seek an opportunity of revenge, is not commended.

Ver. 17. That. Heb. “the truth announceth justice.” We easily give credit to an honest man. C.

Ver. 18. Promiseth. Sept. “there are, who speaking, wound with the sword; but,” &c. Heb. bote (H.) means also, making a foolish promise, which causes remorse. M.—This was the case with Herod, when he was pleased with Herodias. Matt. 14:8. C.—Heb. “speaketh like the piercings of the sword,” (Prot. H.) as detractors, and those who disseminate impious and scandalous maxims do.

Ver. 19. Frameth. He studies how to escape detection. Heb. “a lying tongue is but for a moment;” it is presently discovered.

Ver. 20. Deceit. Or uneasiness. C.—Honi soit qui mal y pense: “let him be covered with shame who thinks evil in it,” seems nearly the same import. H.

Ver. 21. Sad. Even if he fall into sin, he will not lose all hope. C.—The accidents accompanying this life will not overwhelm him. S. Chrys.—Heb. “no evil shall befall the just.” If he be afflicted here, he will be amply rewarded hereafter. Sept. “the just will not be pleased with any injustice.”

Ver. 23. Cautious. Versutus is taken in a good, as well as in a bad sense. The wise are reserved in speaking. Prov. 16:14. C.

Ver. 25. Grief. Sept. “a fearful speech troubleth the heart of a (just) man.” Grabe. H.

Ver. 26. Just. A true friend will make any sacrifice. C.—“I am convinced that friendship can subsist only among the good,” says Cicero. Heb. “the just hath more, (C. Prot.) or is more excellent than his neighbour.” Sept. “the intelligent just is his own friend; (but the sentences of the impious are contrary to equity. Evils shall pursue sinners) but the way,” &c. Grabe. H.

Ver. 27. Gain. Heb. and Sept. “his prey,” (C.) or what “he took in hunting.” Prot. H.

Ver. 28. Bye-way. Of vice. Heb. “and a way which leadeth to death,” or “its paths conduct to death.” C.

PROVERBS 13

Ver. 1. Doctrine. Or he gives proof of his good education, (C.) and excites even his father to advance in piety. Ven. Bede.—Sept. “is obedient to his father; but the disobedient son is in destruction.” H.

Ver. 2. Mouth. In reward of his good speeches. C.—Sept. “of justice the good man eateth; but the souls of the lawless perish before the time.” C. 12:13.

Ver. 3. Hath. Heb. “who openeth his lips inconsiderately, is lost. Judg. 11:35. H.

Ver. 4. Willeth not. Heb. “hath not.” He only desires riches, or to be converted, and will not labour. C. 21:25. Eccli. 5:8.

Ver. 5. Confounded. The detractor is like swine, stirring up dirt. S. Chrys. 32. ad Pop.—The liar is not believed, even when he speaks the truth. Aristot.

Ver. 6. Sinner. Sym. “draweth on sin.” Virtue is the best safeguard.

Ver. 7. Riches. Such was S. Paul. 2 Cor. 6:10. Some affect to be rich, while others are never satisfied. Semper avarus eget. Lazarus was very rich in God’s sight.

Ver. 8. Reprehension. Or is not able to defend himself, like the rich. C.—He is not exposed so much to great revolutions. Bayn.

Ver. 9. Out. They are hated as well as their offspring. C.

Ver. 10. Contentions. As none will yield. M.—Heb. “only by pride cometh contention.” Prot.—“Pride is the mother of all sects.” S. Aug.

Ver. 11. Haste. Heb. “by vanity,” and injustice. Those who become rich on a sudden fall under suspicion, as a Roman objected to Sylla, who had inherited nothing. Plut.—By little. Heb. “he that gathereth by labour, (Sept. piety) shall increase.” Prot. H.

Ver. 12. Hope. Sept. “(the just shews mercy and lends) better is he who begins heartily to assist, than he who promises and leads to hope. For a bad (Grabe substitutes good) desire is a tree of life.”—Soul. Prot. “maketh the heart sick.” H.—The pain increases in proportion to our eager desire. Calvin maintains, that the souls of the blessed are not yet in heaven, but hope: and of course he would establish a sort of purgatory for them. H.

Ver. 13. Come. To defend what he has asserted, or to pass for a liar. Heb. “shall be destroyed by it.” Mont. H.—Those who despise God’s order shall perish.—Deceitful, &c. This is not in Heb. nor in some of the Lat. edit. C.—Sept. “to the deceitful son nothing shall be good. But the ways of the wise servant shall prosper, and his paths shall be made straight.” C. 14:15. H.

Ver. 14. That. Sept. “but the fool is slain in the snare.” H.

Ver. 15. Grace. God assists those who strive to be well instructed. C.

Ver. 17. Of the. Heb. “a wicked ambassador.” A king generally chooses people like himself. M.—Sept. have read melec. “A rash king shall,” &c.

Ver. 18. To him. Heb. “destroy discipline,” so that the most wretched are often noted for immorality. Sept. “instruction takes away poverty,” as “the whole earth supports the man that has a trade,” τεχνιον, according to the Greek proverb. C.

Ver. 19. That is. Sept. “of the pious, but the works of the impious are far from knowledge.” H.

Ver. 20. Become. Sept. “be known.” A person’s disposition may be seen by the company which he frequents.

Ver. 22. Heirs. This was more observable under the old law: yet we often seem the distress to which the unjust are exposed. De male quæsitis non gaudet tertius hæres. C.

Ver. 23. Fathers. Heirs often lose their property by their misconduct. Heb. and (H.) Chal. read, “of the poor,” who till their land better than those who have too large farms. M.—Nature requires but little. C.—Sept. “the just shall spend many years in affluence: but the unjust are cut off at once.” H.

Ver. 24. Betimes. God has always treated his friends in this manner, to preserve them from sin, or to increase their reward. C.

PROVERBS 14

Ver. 1. House. Giving her children a proper education, and taking care of her house. C. 12:4 and Tit. 2:5. C.

Ver. 2. And, is not in Heb.—Is. Heb. “but the perverse in his ways despiseth him;” (H.) shewing by his conduct that he cares not for the Lord. C.—Sept. “he shall be dishonoured, that,” &c.

Ver. 3. Pride. He chastiseth with haughtiness, and is ever quarrelling.

Ver. 4. Empty. As the land has not bee cultivated. H.—Strength, or number of oxen. C.—“The virtue of the preachers is manifested where there are many converted to produce fruit.” S. Greg. vii. ep. viii.

Ver. 6. Not. Because they seek it ill, like the pagan sages. Sept. “thou shalt seek wisdom among the wicked, and shalt not find it,” &c.

Ver. 7. Prudence. Thou wilt presently perceive his weakness. Heb. “abandon a,” &c. He is not capable of hearing reason: keep at a distance.

Ver. 8. Way. This science of the saints is the only true wisdom.—Erreth. They are inconstant. Heb. “is deceit.” They are bent on it.

Ver. 9. Sin. C. 10:23. Heb. “excuse sin,” (C.) or “mock at sin,” (H.)

committed by others. M.—Grace, or good-will. They are agreeable to all. C.

Ver. 10. Stranger. Such cannot well comfort the afflicted. A man is alone acquainted with the affections of his own heart. Sept. “he mixeth not insult” (Sym.) “with strangers.”

Ver. 12. Death. How many, under the garb of piety, follow their passions! How many are misled by their singularity, or by unskilful directors! C.—We must suspect our own judgment. M.—If any Turks, Jews, or heretics, lead a moral good life, it seemeth both to themselves and to other ignorant people that they are in the right way to salvation; but their error in faith leadeth them to eternal damnation. W.—The persecutors thought they did God a service by putting the apostles to death. Will they be excused? H.

Ver. 13. Laughter. Sept. “with his counsels,” enjoying the content of a good conscience, and a heavenly reward; while the wicked, with all his self-approbation, shall be punished.

Ver. 14. Above him, Sept. “with content sorrow is not mixed.” H.—Joy. Such is the condition of earthly things. Pind. Pyth. viii.

Ver. 15. Innocent. Good and unsuspecting; (Jos. 9:14 and 1 Cor. 13:7) or rather credulous. 1 Jo. 4:1. C.—Sept. “the man who is not bad.”—Steps. Sept. “repenteth.” H.—No, &c. This occurs (C. 13:13) in several copies: but here it is omitted in Heb. &c.

Ver. 17. Folly. Wrath betrays us into great extravagances.—Hateful. Heb. also, “hateth” folly. Sept. “the prudent beareth much.” Job 5:2. C.

Ver. 20. Many. “Riches make friends, poverty tries them.” Syrus.—False friends resemble swallows, which retire at the approach of winter. Cic. ad Heren. iv.

Ver. 21. He ... mercy, is not found in Heb. Greek, or Lat. MSS. C.

Ver. 22. Truth. Those who are kind and faithful. H. C. 3:3.—Sept. add, (C.) as a second version, (Grabe) “the workers of evils understand not mercy and truth: but kind and faithful actions are with those who do good.”

Ver. 24. Imprudence. This they always betray, while the wise use their riches to assist their fellow-creatures, and receive a crown of glory. H.

Ver. 28. King. Who formerly was styled “a shepherd,” to remind him of the care with which he ought to seek the welfare of his subjects. C.

Ver. 30. Bones. As a sound heart preserves the rest of the body, so a good intention often excuses from mortal sin, when the error is not gross. But envy corrupts the works which seem good, and which cannot bear a strict examination. S. Greg. Mor. v. 34. W.—Envy ruins the health. Menan. ap. Grot.—Sept. “a too sensible heart is the,” &c. This is beautiful; but not quite conformable to the Heb.

Ver. 31. Him. God takes the poor under his special protection, (Matt. 25:40) and is the distributor of all riches. What would the rich do without the poor? C.

Ver. 33. And. Prot. “but that which is in the midst of fools is made known.” H.—A vessel full of gold makes no noise, while that which contains only a few pieces sounds much. Munster. Corn. a Lap.—Thus the fool makes a parade of all that he knows. C.—Sept. “but in the heart of fools, it is not known.” H.—Aquila and Theodotion have the negation, (C.) as well as the Syr. and Arab. See c. 5:16. Kennicott.

Ver. 34. Miserable. This sentence ought to be engraven in all public places. Heb. “and mercy the sinful people,” whom God spares on account of their alms-deeds, (Dan. 4:24) or “sin is the shame of peoples.” C.—Montanus renders chesed mercy, and Pagnin “ignominy.” The former is scarcely intelligible, et misericordia populorum peccatum, unless sin be here taken for a sin-offering, (H.) as it is by Vatab. Grot. &c. C.

Ver. 35. Nothing. Lit. “useless,” which often means bad. H.—A servant who does not discharge his duty is such. Heb. “he that causeth to blush,” and has no economy. C.—Sept. “He removes shame by his good management. Anger destroys the prudent; but a mild,” &c. H.

PROVERBS 15

Ver. 1. Fury. This was seen in Nabal and Roboam, while Gideon and Abigail shewed the good effects of a mild answer. Jud. 8:1 and 1 K. 10:25 and 3 K. 12:11.

Ver. 2. Knowledge. It requires to be proposed in a proper manner.

Ver. 4. Life. This comparison was become proverbial for something very excellent. Immoderate. Heb. “perverse.” C.—Evil discourse kills the souls both of those who speak, and of those who pay attention to it. H.

Ver. 5. In abundant, &c. Is omitted in Heb. Chal. and many Greek and Latin copies. The same idea is expressed in the following verse.

Ver. 7. Unlike. The wise, or themselves. Heb. and Sept. “inconstant.”

Ver. 8. Wicked. Still unconverted. Eccli. 34:23. When they repent, and offer sacrifice with sincerity, they will obtain mercy. The Donatists abused this text, to prove that baptism conferred by wicked ministers was unavailing. But S. Aug. shewed them, that Christ was the principal agent, and conferred grace, even though the minister might draw down judgments on his own head. Con. Parm. ii. 6.—Even pagans confessed, that sacrifices, without virtue, could afford no benefit. “God was more pleased with the prayers of the Lacedemonians, than with all the sacrifices of the Greeks,” say the idolatrous priests in Plato, Alcib. ii. Seneca de Ben. i. 5.

Ver. 10. Instruction. Heb. “a heavy punishment.” H.—The mind which gives way to vice, must have embraced some false doctrine.

Ver. 11. Before. Naked. The state of the damned is known to God. C. 9:18. C.

Ver. 13. Down. Compunction is salutary, but worldly grief blameable. C. 25:20 and 2 Cor. 7:10. S. Greg. past. ii. 10.

Ver. 15. Feast. Those who repine at their condition are miserable; while the poor may be delivered from many cares. C.—

O vitæ tuta facultas

Pauperis angustique laris. Luc. Phar. v.

—Under affliction every thing displeases; but all delights the cheerful temper.

Ver. 16. Content. Sept. “fear.” Heb. “with trouble,” which is preferable. 1 Tim. 6:6.

Ver. 17. Calf. Or feast after sacrifice. 1 K. 17:19. Lu. 15:23.

Ver. 19. Thorns. All seems to them impossible. C.—In agriculture, however, (H.) “in domestic affairs, negligence is attended with more labour than diligence.” Colum. 12:2.

Ver. 21. Fool. He thinks himself the most happy of mortals. C.—Sept. “the ways of the fools are senseless.” H.

Ver. 22. Counsel. Heb. “secrecy.”—Established. We put in execution without fear, what has been resolved maturely. C.

Ver. 24. Above. Lit. “upon the learned.” H.—One path leads to the realms above. C.—The wise must be intent on God. M.

Ver. 26. Shall by, &c. is not added in Heb. &c. nor in several Latin MSS.

Ver. 27. Troubleth. With all sorts of temporal misfortunes. A judge who receives bribes, is accursed. Ex. 23:8.—By, &c. is not here in Heb. but c. 16:6. S. Cyprian (3 Test.) found it in his copy.—Faith, or fidelity and truth, as it is elsewhere expressed. C. 3:3. These virtues move God to pardon.

Ver. 28. Studieth. And speaks deliberately. Sept. Rom. is more embarrassed in the rest of this, and the nine first verses of the following chapter, than the Complut. edition.

Ver. 30. Fat. And contributes to health. By less noble motives, the mind is gradually raised to the more excellent.

Ver. 33. Lesson. Or “what teacheth.” Humility, or docility, as those who acknowledge no master will never be wise. Matt. 23:12. C.

PROVERBS 16

Ver. 1. It is the part of man, &c. That is, a man should prepare in his heart and soul what he is to say; but after all, it must be the Lord that must govern his tongue, to speak to the purpose. Not that we can think any thing of good without God’s grace: but after that we have (with God’s grace) thought and prepared within our souls what we would speak; if God does not govern our tongue, we shall not succeed in what we speak. Ch.—He well put into our mouths what we have to say to persecutors. Lu. 21:14. He often causes us to utter the reverse of what we intended, as Balaam did. Num. 23. M.—The fairest prospects miscarry without God’s blessing. The enemies of grace would infer from this text, that the beginning of salvation depends on free-will. But S. Aug. (con. 2. epist. Pelag. ii. 8.) has solidly refuted them, and Solomon does not mean that man acts alone. C. 8:35. Sept. Jo. 15:5 and 2 Cor. 3:5. “Man,” says S. Aug. “does no good things, which God does not cause him to perform.” C.—The Scripture cannot contradict itself. A fresh grace is requisite to execute what God has enabled us to devise, v. 9. W.

Ver. 2. Open. Or approved. M.—Heb. “pure in his own eyes.” He sees not his own defects. C. 21:2. Job 28:23. C.

Ver. 3. Open. Heb. “roll on,” and refer all to God’s glory. M. Ps. 36:5.

Ver. 4. Day. His obduracy is of his own choice, and must serve to set the divine justice in the clearest light. Eccli. 32:14. Ex. 9:16. Others hence infer that predestination is gratuitous, and reprobation in consequence of sin. It seems rather that temporal goods and evils are here meant. C.

Ver. 5. Hand. And he seems to be very quiet. C. 11:21. Sept. “but he who putteth his hand in hands unjustly, to make a contract, is,” &c.—The, &c. is taken from the Rom. Sept. and occurs before. C. 15:27.

Ver. 6. Mercy to the distressed. C. 3:3 and 14:22.

Ver. 7. Peace. Thus Jacob, Joseph, Daniel, &c. were admired by their former enemies.

Ver. 10. Judgment. Or “let it not err,” as people look upon the decisions of kings as so many oracles. We ought to act in this manner, as long as they are not visibly unjust. God gave a principal spirit (Ps. 50:14) to Saul, David, Solomon, and to the judges whom he appointed, 1 K. 10:9. Deut. 34:9. Judg. 3:10. C.—Solomon was thus enabled to decide difficult cases. M. Job 29:7.

Ver. 11. Bag. Many read sæculi, “of the world.” So Ven. Bede, &c. All God’s appointments are perfectly just. C. 11:21. It was the custom for people to carry balances to weigh money, before it was coined. C.

Ver. 13. Loved. Yet none are more exposed to flattery and deceit than kings. Senec. ep. xxi.

Ver. 15. Life. A mild government resembles a serene sky. Sen. Clem. Job 29:23.

Ver. 16. Get. Sept. “the nests of wisdom ... and the nests of prudence;” or Churches of Christ, or places of education, may be intended. C.

Ver. 18. Fall. Our first parents had given way to pride, before they sinned publicly. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xiv. 13.

Ver. 21. Shall. Heb. “adds learning,” both to himself and to others. Those who are wise and eloquent, must be preferred before those who have only the former qualification. C.

Ver. 23. Heart. Or knowledge. H.—Wisdom gives beauty to eloquence.

Ver. 26. Mouth. The want of food. Eccle. 6:7.

Ver. 27. Diggeth. Earnestly pursues.—Fire. Jam. 3:16. C.

Ver. 28. Words. Prot. “a whisperer separateth chief friends.”

Ver. 30. Lips. These motions indicate fury and pensiveness.

Ver. 31. Justice. To the just longevity is promised. C.

Ver. 32. Valiant. Sept. Alex. adds, “and a prudent man than a great farmer.” Γεωργίου. H.—Cities. To govern the passions is more difficult. S. Greg. Past. iii. p. Adm. x. S. Tho. ii. 2. q. 128. a. 6.

Latius regnes avidum domando

Spiritum, quam si Lybiam, &c. Hor. ii. Od. 2.

Ver. 33. Lord. So the apostles had recourse to them, (Acts 1:26) as the Cophts and Nestorians still do when there is a dispute about the election of a patriarch. Renaudot iv. Perpet. i. 7. and 9.—This mode may settle disputes. C. 18:18. But we must not have recourse to it, except where the Church permits, lest we become the dupes of an idle curiosity. C.—Nothing happens by chance. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. v. 9.—Sept. “all things come into the breast of the unjust; but all just things proceed from the Lord.” H.

PROVERBS 17

Ver. 1. Victims. Of which part was used for a feast. C. 7:14. C.—Sept. add, “of many goods, and unjust victims.” H.

Ver. 2. Brethren. Partaking with them, (Abenezra. T. M.) or rather acting as his master’s executor; which evinces the advantages of wisdom, so as to raise a slave above those whom his station requires him to serve. Such was Joseph, who was tried.

Ver. 4. Lips. They mutually deceive one another, as well as others.

Ver. 6. Fathers. Whose virtues they are bound to imitate.

Ver. 7. Eloquent. Sept. “faithful.” They cannot be expected from them.

Ver. 8. Expecteth heavenly things. Sept. “instruction is the reward of good deeds to those who use it.”

Ver. 9. Friends. Detractors cause dissensions, and even wars.

Ver. 10. Fools. “A word is enough for the wise.” Nobilis equus umbra virgæ regitur, ignavus ne calcari quidem. Q. Curt.

Ver. 11. Angel. Messenger of death, (M.) which is sometimes inflicted by good, at others by bad, angels of death, or satan. 2 Cor. 12:7. Ps. 77:49.

Ver. 12. Fool. Heb. “fool in his folly.” The danger is not greater in meeting (C.) a female bear, though it be the most terrible. Arist. Anim. ix. 1.

Ver. 14. Water. It is scarcely possible to prevent the bad effects of detraction. Frequent quarrels have also risen on account of springs. Gen. 26:20.—Judgment. And gives up the cause, as being much more prudent. Mat. 5:25. 40.

Ver. 15. God. We ought to suspend our judgment, or incline to the more favourable side. Matt. 7:1. Rom. 2:1.

Ver. 16. He, &c. is not here in Heb. though it be equivalently (v. 19) where the Sept. are silent. C.

Ver. 17. Distress. Like the real friend. C. 18:24.

Ver. 18. Hands. Through joy, or as a mark of his consent.

Ver. 19. Door. Sixtus V. reads, “mouth:” as some explain the door to mean. A large door supposes that the house is elevated, and thus exposed to danger from winds, &c.

Ver. 24. Earth. Wandering and insatiable, and deeming the acquisition of wisdom too difficult.

Ver. 26. No good. But very criminal. See Jer. 7:31.

Ver. 27. Precious and reserved spirit. This is a mark of wisdom. C.

PROVERBS 18

Ver. 1. Reproach. True friendship resembles charity, and bears all things. 1 Cor. 13:4. Heb. now reads Thave, “desire;” instead of Thuane, occasion, or “pretext,” which must have been in the copies of the Sept. and Vulg. C.—Prot. “through desire, a man having separated himself, seeketh and intermeddleth with all wisdom.” The solitary seeks heaven. H.

Ver. 2. Heart. Conformable to his passions. C.—Heb. “unless to lay open his heart.” He wishes to appear wise, and to justify his wicked designs. H.

Ver. 3. Contemneth both God and man. Lu. 18:4. Heb. “is contemned” in his turn. C.—He is like a man abandoned by the physician. Op. Imp. in Matt. Hom. 40.

Ver. 4. Man, who is just and wise. His advice deserves attention. C. 20:5.

Ver. 6. Quarrels. Heb. “blows.” Sept. “death;” (v. 7) which are the usual consequences of quarrels.

Ver. 8. Tongued. Heb. “calumniator.” He pretends to wish well to those of whom he speaks, or else to guard the company against deceit. C.—“If the devil be upon the detractor’s tongue, he is in the ears of those who pay attention to him.” S. Fran. de Sales.—Fear, &c. is in the Sept. above. The Vulg. retains both this and the new version of S. Jerom.

Ver. 9. Brother. Like him, as both end in poverty. C. 10:4 and 12:11.

Ver. 10. Name. Essence, or protection of God. The rich depends on his own wealth.

Ver. 13. Heareth the end of the question. C. 1:5.

Ver. 14. Infirmity of the flesh. Matt. 26:41.—That is. Theodot. “is wounded, who shall support?”

Ver. 16. Princes. He easily finds access by showing submission. C.

Placatur donis Jupiter ipse suis. Ovid.

Ver. 17. Him. To see that he act with sincerity.

Ver. 18. Lot. C. 16:33. Sept. “silence.” C.—But Grabe substitutes “lot.” H.

Ver. 19. Judgments of many are more deserving of credit. Heb. “a brother offended, is like a strong place, and their quarrels,” &c. The are not easily reconciled. Civil wars are most terrible. C.

Ver. 20. Satisfied. Those who are guarded in their words get employment. H. C. 12:14.

Ver. 21. Love it, and speak well or ill, shall receive accordingly. Matt. 12:37.

Ver. 22. Good wife. Good is not in Heb. but should be understood, as it is expressed in Sept. of Complut. (C.) and Alex. H.—He that, &c. occurs not in Heb. Sixtus V. &c. But it is found in Sept. and Arabic. The Syriac omits the last sentence.—Wicked. S. Aug. had frequently asserted that a divorce was only of counsel: but this he retracted, when he reflected on this text. Ret. i. 19.—The Hebrews, Athenians, and Romans, followed the same practice with adulteresses. Selden, Ux. iii. 16. Dem. in Neæram, &c.—Hermas (past. i. 4.) prescribes that the penitent shall be received again, but not often. In case of divorce, the fathers still permit not a second marriage, that the parties may be reconciled. They enjoin the husband to put away only such as are incorrigible. S. Aug. Adul. ii. 3. C.

Ver. 24. Brother. The ties of nature are not so strong as those of friendship. C.—Heb. “a man that hath friends must shew himself friendly; and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.” Prot. H.—Ut ameris ama. Mart.

PROVERBS 19

Ver. 1. Rich, is not in Heb. Sept. Compl. or S. Jerom. C.—But as there is not antithesis between a poor man and a fool, it ought to be inserted, as it is in the Syriac, which reads, “than he who is perverse in his ways, though he be rich.” The MS. 2 confirms “ways.” Kennicott.

Ver. 2. Soul. Wholesome and spiritual. Heb. “the soul or life is not good.”—Stumble. “The more I make haste, the less I advance,” said Plato; (Rep. 7.) and Augustus often repeated; Sat cito, si sat benè. Sueton.

Ver. 3. Fretteth. Lit. “burneth.” Sept. “blameth.” Heb. “his heart rageth against the Lord.” H.—Thus Adam tacitly laid the blame on him, as all those who excuse themselves on account of their temper, habits, stars, the violence of temptation, &c. C.

Ver. 7. Only. Heb. has lo, and the marg. lu, with the Vulg. C.—The former word intimates that the words have no solidity, and the latter that they shall be his only portion who is so foolish as to trust in them. Sequens dicta non ipsa; (Mont.) or ei ipsa, if we follow the margin. H.

Ver. 8. Mind. Heb. “heart,” intelligence. C. 15:32.—Loveth. This does not contradict the gospel; (Jo. 12:25) as those who refrain from what the soul would crave to its own detriment, truly love it.

Ver. 10. Fool. He would eat them, so as to prejudice his health.—Princes. C. 30:21. Such are commonly insolent, and should attend to Ausonius. Fortunam reverenter habe.

Ver. 11. Wrongs. The wise man is not vindictive or punctilious.

Ver. 12. Anger. Is not their dominion enough? Having none to admonish them, they do not perceive their excesses.

Ver. 13. Through. It cannot be endured long. C.—Dos est uxoria lites. Ovid. Art. 1.—“Quarrels are a wife’s dowry.”

Ver. 14. Properly. Sept. “fitted by.” H.—Hence the Fathers dissuade marrying with infidels. S. Amb. in Lu. xvi.—All good comes from God.

Ver. 15. Hunger. Both temporal and eternal. C.—Non progredi, regredi est. S. Bernard says, “Not to advance, is to go back.”

Ver. 16. Neglecteth. Heb. “contemneth.” In the law of Moses, many transgressions are punished with death, but here that of the soul is meant. C.

Ver. 17. Lendeth. To receive interest, fœneratur. H.—Such usury is lawful, and God will abundantly reward acts of mercy. C.—He engages his word for the poor. S. Aug. in Ps. xxxvi.

Ver. 18. Killing. Prot. “crying;” or by his complaint be not deterred. H.—Chal. agrees with us. The law permitted parents to sell their children, and to have them stoned to death, if they declared them disobedient, (Deut. 21:18. C.) and riotous, v. 20. Timely chastisement may prevent such extremities. H.—S. Paul dissuades unnecessary severity. Col. 3:21.

Ver. 19. Thing. A child neglected will continue to steal, or to offend; (

C.) while too much harshness will do no good, but tend to the damage of all parties. H.—Anger is productive of the worst effects.

Ver. 21. Firm. Ignorance and weakness cause men to change.

Ver. 22. Merciful. Heb. 2:17. Non ignara mali miseris succurrere disco. Æn. 4.—Heb. “the desire of a man is his mercy,” (Mont. H.) or “shame,” (R. Levi) as it leads to sin. Gen. 6:5. All wish to be esteemed merciful.—Man of quality. Heb. meish, “proe viro.” Mont.—“Rich man.” Sept. H.

Ver. 23. Life. Both temporal and eternal. C. 10:27. C.—With evil. Lit. “the worst,” pessima. H.—Sixtus V. “by the most wicked one.” The devil shall have no power over him.

Ver. 24. Arm-pit. Or Heb. tsallachath, “in the pot,” out of which he eats; which shews his negligence.—Mouth, to eat. This hyperbole indicates that he is too lazy to take the necessary sustenance. C. 26:15. C.—Sept. “in his breast unjustly. Neither will he bring them to his mouth.” H.—He will bestow nothing, and shall reap no benefit from his avarice. S. Bern.—He will not practise what he teaches. S. Greg. Mor. xii. 10.

Ver. 25. Wicked. Heb. “scoffer.” Chastisements have always some good effect either on the sufferer, or on the spectators, who will be cautioned not to imitate what is wrong.

Ver. 26. Infamous. Heb. “a son of confusion and reproach;” a spendthrift.

Ver. 27. Not. Heb. seems to say the reverse. C.—But we may read it with an interrogation. “Wilt thou cease?” &c. Or the instruction here meant is of a dangerous nature. Prot. “that causeth to err from the words of knowledge.” Sept. “a son who neglects to keep the instruction of his father, shall muse on bad sayings.” H.

Ver. 29. Hammers, (Sym.) “punishments.” Sept. See Judg. 5:25. C.

PROVERBS 20

Ver. 1. A luxurious thing. Heb. “a scoffer.” Chal. “renders one a scoffer.”—Drunkenness. Heb. ssocor, any strong drink, particularly palm-wine. Intemperance places the strongest obstacles in the way of wisdom. It causes a person to mock at all sacred things, and to be quarrelsome. C. 23:29. Eph. 5:18.

Ver. 3. Reproaches. It is better not to commence a lawsuit, even when we are in the right. C. 17:11. C.—Plena victoria est ad clamantem tacere. Val. Max.

Ver. 5. Out. So David discovered the meaning of the Thecuite, 2 K. 14:18. A wise politician carefully examines everything in a foreign court.

Ver. 6. Faithful. Few continue steady to their engagements or friends, whom they will assist to a certain point. In God these two virtues always go together. Ps. 84:11. But they are rarely found in men. C.

Ver. 8. Look. It is the duty of kings to administer justice.

Ver. 9. Sin. Prot. “my sin?” We know not when it is remitted. H.—Without a special revelation, no one can be secure, 1 Jo. 1:8. Eccle. 9:1. Bayn. S. Aug. in Ps. cxlix.

Ver. 10. Measures. In commerce, (C.) as well as in judging. S. Greg. in Ezech. 4.

Ver. 11. Right. We may form some judgment of his future conduct, from the inclinations which he manifests in his infancy.

*Naturam expellas furca, tamen ipsa recurret,
Et mala perrumpet furtim fastidia victrix.* Hor.

Ver. 12. Both. Consequently he will know all our actions. Ps. 93:9. We must refer all to him, as he gives us the means of learning. C.

Ver. 13. Sleep. Sept. “back-biting, that thou mayst not be taken off.” H.

Ver. 14. Buyer. This is the common practice; yet it is not without exceptions. S. Aug. (Trin. xiii. 3.) observes, that the mountebank having promised to tell what every person had in his heart, many came to the theatre, when he told them that they all wished to by cheap, and to sell dear. They all applauded the remark. C.—Sept. is here defective. H.

Ver. 16. Strangers. For whom he has bound himself foolishly. C. 6:1. All who have the care of others, must answer for them. C.

Ver. 17. Lying. Deceit, and unlawful pleasures. C. 9:17. But God mingles disgust with them, and will punish the guilty, at least hereafter. Worldly enjoyments seem sweet, but they are full of gravel, and hurtful.

Ver. 18. Governments. Or prudence, else the best designs may prove abortive.

Ver. 19. Lips. And speaketh much. These people are unworthy of our friendship.

Ver. 20. Lamp. Prosperity, or children.

Ver. 21. Blessing. It is morally impossible that they should have been acquired justly. C. 13:11 and 21:5.

Ver. 22. Evil. And revenge myself. This belongs to the Lord. Deut. 32:35. Man would be too favourable to himself, and would also pronounce his own condemnation, as he is also a sinner.

Ver. 24. Way? Jer. 10:23. Independently of God, who can do any good? C.

Ver. 25. Ones. Heb. “the saint or holy thing.” H.—Chal. “to make a vow for the sanctuary, and afterwards repent;” having acted inconsiderately at first. To attack the persons or relics of the saints, or to plunder what is consecrated to pious uses, will bring on destruction; so also to make vows, and then seek to evade them, will not pass unpunished. C.

Ver. 26. Wheel. Or triumphal arch, fornicem. Ven. Bede. Jans.—He will make his enemies lie prostrate under his chariot-wheels, 2 K. 12:31.

Ver. 27. Lamp. The breath of life, (Gen. 2:7) and the light of man. 1 Cor. 2:11.

Ver. 28. Clemency. Such a king need not fear rebellion. C.

Ver. 29. Hairs, and experience. They have a greater contempt of death and pleasures. S. Amb. Hex. i. 8.

Ver. 30. Evils. The wicked shall derive benefit from correction.—Belly. They shall feel the remorse of conscience, as Chal. seems to indicate. C.—A serious illness often causes people to repent. M.

PROVERBS 21

Ver. 1. It. Though it be free, and may resist grace or embrace virtue.

Is. 45:22. Jer. 3:14 and 7:3. Jos. 24:23. C.—Yet God knows how to turn the heart even of a king, so as to preserve his liberty, with the same ease as a gardener brings the streams of water to his plants. M.

Ver. 3. Mercy. Sept. “justice and truth.” H. See Os. 6:6. M.

Ver. 4. Heart. Or when it is proud, it causes the eyes to appear so too. C.—Lamp. Prot. “ploughing of the wicked is sin.” When it is done with a bad motive, out of pride. Heb. “the haughtiness of the eyes, and the enlarging of the heart, are the labour (“tillage.” Mont. “thought.” Pagn.) of the wicked; yea, sin.” H.—Those things are their employment, and their sin. C.—Sept. and Vulg. may also mean, “sin is the lamp and exultation of the wicked.” H.

Ver. 5. Sluggard. Heb. “hasty man,” as the slothful is ironically styled. He would see his desires accomplished without labouring; and will never stick to work. This levity is most injurious to his advancement.

Ver. 6. Death. Their injustice shall be punished.

Ver. 8. Strange. Unknown, impure way. Lev. 10:1. Deut. 17:15. C.

Ver. 9. Top, (domatis) as the roofs in Palestine were flat. S. Jer. ad Sun.—Any inconvenience had better be endured, than to live with the quarrelsome. M.

Ver. 10. Neighbour. Sym. “he has no idea of friendship.” Sept. “he shall not be treated with mercy by any man.” H.

Ver. 11. Knowledge. These are the effects of chastisements and good company.

Ver. 12. Evil. He tries every expedient to save him.—That. Sept. “he despises.” Sym. “throws down.”

Ver. 14. Bosom. In private. C.—They put all valuable things in the bosom. H.

Ver. 15. To do judgment. Or to see it done, while the wicked depend only on the corruption of their judges.

Ver. 16. Giants, in hell. C. 15:11. Job 26:5. Ezech. 22:21.

Ver. 17. Rich. Economy is constantly recommended. C.—Those who squandered away their goods, were fined by the Areopagites. Athen. iv. 19.

Ver. 18. Righteous. Many are deterred from wickedness by the punishment of malefactors, whose injuries are frequently irreparable.

God abandoned Pharaoh and Aman to save his people. He treated them as victims of wrath. Is. 43:3.

Ver. 20. Treasure of provisions. Temporal blessings were promised as a figure of more lasting ones, which are set before Christians.

Ver. 22. Thereof. Nothing can resist. Matt. 12:29. Eccle. 9:16. C.

Ver. 23. Mouth, from eating too much. Lyran.

Ver. 24. Ignorant. Heb. “a scoffer.” Sept. “pestilent.” H.—Such a one is always actuated by pride, when he attempts to turn good advice and religion to ridicule.

Ver. 25. At all. Hence his desires of riches and wisdom prove fruitless. C. 13:4.

Ver. 27. Wickedness. Heb. “with an evil thought.” Mont. Eccli. 34:24. H.

Ver. 28. Obedient. Attentive, faithful witness, shall speak with triumph, or he who obeys the law, shall gain the victory over the devil, &c. Phil. 2:8.

Ver. 29. Face. Never blushing, or yielding to good advice.

Ver. 31. Battle. It was kept for no other purpose by the eastern nations, who used oxen to till the land; asses and camels to carry burdens. Job 39:18. Ps. 19:8 and 32:17. C.

PROVERBS 22

Ver. 1. Good. Heb. “a name,” or reputation. H.—It is preferable to riches, but not to be compared with virtue, which is the only solid good; and even to be placed above riches, it must be well grounded. C. —Favour with all. H.

Ver. 2. Another. They stand in need of one another. S. Chrys. hom. xxxiv. in 1 Cor.—They are equal in God’s sight, who only values real virtue. He disposes of riches, so that the poor may one day become rich. C.

Ver. 4. Fruit. Lit. “the end of modesty, (H.) or moderation, which must accompany every virtue.

Ver. 5. Perverse. They are always in danger and in trouble.

Ver. 6. It is a proverb, is added by S. Jerom, to make the sentence more striking.—It. He is like a tender plant, (C.) or wax, or a new vessel.

Quo semel est imbuta recens servabit odorem
Testa diu. Hor. ep. i. ad Lol.

—“Shall wool regain its whiteness after it has been dyed purple?” S. Jer. ad Lætam.—Heb. “initiate a young,” &c. Proportion your lessons to his capacity, and make him relish them.

Ver. 7. Servant. He might be sold, &c. Ex. 22:3. Matt. 18:25. Gell. xx. 1. Plato (Leg. viii.) would have nothing sold on credit. These laws appear to be severe; but they are founded on wisdom, as nothing impoverishes more than the facility of borrowing.

Ver. 8. Consumed. Or beaten with the flail of God’s anger.

Ver. 9. Is. Heb. “has a good eye,” in opposition to the evil, or malicious one. Matt. 20:15.—He, &c. is not in Heb. or in the Lat. edit. of Comp. and S. Jer.

Ver. 11. He. Sept. “the Lord loveth pious hearts. All the irreproachable are acceptable to him. The king feeds with lips,” by his just ordinances. H.—Kings hate duplicity; but require that the truth should be disclosed to them in a suitable manner.

Ver. 13. Streets. Vain excuses of sloth!

Ver. 14. It. Debauchery resembles hell. C. 23:23. C.—Facilis descensus Averni, &c. Æn. vi.

Ver. 15. Folly. Ignorance and innate corruption are corrected by a good education.

Ver. 17. Incline. Thus Solomon concludes his discourse, (c. 24:23) in the same manner as he began it, to chap. 10. Some commence the third book of Proverbs in this place; others, c. 25. C.

Ver. 18. Lips. Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.

Ver. 20. Ways. Repeatedly. Boss. T. 2 Cor. 12:8. Amos 1:11. C.—Prot. “have not I written to thee excellent things in counsels and knowledge?” “Shalishim,” perfect, (Pagn.) or “three things,” (Mont.) means also (H.) such as might suit princes and great officers. C.

Ver. 21. Sent. Sept. “are sent to thee.” Thou mayst become a teacher, (H.) or give satisfaction to thy parents, who have sent thee to my school. C.

Ver. 22. Gate. Where judges passed sentence. M.

Ver. 25. Soul. By imitating him, or by falling a victim to his rage.

Ver. 26. Hands. Engaging to stand bond. H. c. 6:1.—Such a one might be required to pay the debt. C. 20:16.

Ver. 28. Set. The pagans made a god of Terminus, to prevent disputes. Ovid. Fast. ii.—If it be unlawful to disturb land-marks, how much more so is it to give way to novelty in religion? Deut. 19:14. C.—Solomon is addressing those who follow the true faith. Else the conduct of infidel ancestors should not deter any from embracing the truth. H.

Ver. 29. Obscure. By industry he shall raise himself to notice. H.—Kings employ those who are most active. C.

PROVERBS 23

Ver. 1. Sit. Saul sat at table, and the custom of lying down was adopted only a little while before the captivity. It was recent among the Romans. C.—Soliti patres considerare mensis. Æn. vii. 170.

Ver. 2. Throat. Restrain intemperance and talkativeness. Eccli. 31:12. Sept. “stretch forth thy hand, knowing that thou must prepare the like; but if thou be more insatiable, (3.) desire not his meats, for he has them of deceitful life.” They cannot afford real happiness, (H.) and to vie with the rich would only reduce them to poverty. Eccli. 13:2. S. Aug. (tr. xlvii. in Joan.) explains this text of the blessed Eucharist, observing, that we must give our life for our brethren, as Christ did for us. Before communion, we must slay the old man, and subdue our passions. C.—Power. Prot. “if thou be a man given to appetite.” The situation of a courtier is very critical. H.—Those who eat with the kings of Persia, were nicely observed by an eunuch, lest they should cast their eyes on any of his concubines. Lucian. de Merced.

Ver. 3. Deceit. Poison. He wishes to discover thy secret.

Ver. 4. Prudence. Be more solicitous for this, than to acquire riches. C.—Yet this wisdom must be sober. Rom. 12:3. 1 Tim. 6:9. Sept. “being poor, do not stretch forth thyself to the rich, but prudently retire. v. 2. H.

Ver. 5. Riches. Sept. "to him, the rich man, he no where appears. He has prepared," &c. H.—Like. Heb. "as the eagle, it will fly," &c. H.—We must therefore fix our hearts on more durable goods.

Ver. 6. Man. Heb. "eat not bread of an evil eye," the envious, or rather the sordid miser.

Ver. 7. Like. Prot. "as he thinketh is his heart, so is he: eat," &c. H.—He is still convinced that his guests will ruin him: or "like one guarding, or trembling for his soul." Sept. "swallowing a hair, he saith," &c. He is afraid of expense, and would allow himself as little as possible.—Diviner. Such endeavour to speak what may come to pass, but are full of anxiety; so the miser's words are contrary to his real sentiments, (C.) as the diviner knows that he is imposing on mankind. H.

Ver. 8. Words. Thou wilt be disgusted, and repine. Eccli. 31:25.

Ver. 10. Ones. Heb. and Sept. "ancient boundaries."

Ver. 11. Kinsman. Heb. Gaal, "tutor, defendant, or redeemer," the Lord (H.) himself. Lev. 25:25.

Ver. 16. Reins. Inmost affections.

Ver. 18. Thou. Prot. "surely there is an end." Marg. "reward." H.—The testimony of a good conscience affords the greatest comfort in death. Sept. "if thou observe these things, thou shalt have posterity." Heb. "hopes."

Ver. 20. Eat. Such feasts tend to corrupt the morals, and to misspend time.

Ver. 21. Rags. At death the insolent shall be exposed to shame.

Ver. 23. Sell. Acquire as much wisdom as possible, and keep it with care. C.—Sept. "do not drive wisdom from thee."

Ver. 27. Pit. It is difficult to overcome this passion, when once it has got possession of the heart. We must therefore watch over it, and consecrate it in variably to wisdom. v. 26.

Ver. 28. Him. Prot. "increaseth the transgressors among men," (H.) and like a harpy, kills all whom she can entrap.

Ver. 29. Whose father. S. Jerom has read ab avi, instead of abo, (C.) which is an interjection, (Boch.) alas! or it means, "trouble." Sept. "drunkenness," (Chal. C.) or "sorrow." Prot.—Falls. Sept. "hath sorrows." Heb. "babbling," (Prot. H.) or discontents of mind. C.—Cause. Drunkards often fall upon their best friends, as Alexander did on Clytus. M.

Ver. 31. Yellow. Or bright, as it is said there is only one red wine in Palestine.—Pleasantly. Heb. "it goeth right," and is excellent. C.

Ver. 32. Basilisk, (regulus). Heb. Tsiphoni, (H.) as asp. Cerastes, &c. Ps. 90:13.

Ver. 33. Women. Wine excites to lust. C. See c. 20:1.—Shall. Sept. "shall these." H.

Ver. 34. When. Sept. "in a great wave." Never is reason more wanted, nor less able to perform her duty.

Ver. 35. Drew. Chal. "plundered." Sept. "mocked at me."—Again. This is the woeful effect of drunkenness, that men are not deterred from it, though they be sensible of its dreadful consequences. M.

PROVERBS 24

Ver. 1. Like. Be not allured by their prosperity to imitate them. Ps. 36:1.

Ver. 3. Wisdom and virtue, and not by injustice can the house be established.

Ver. 5. Valiant, as well as a good economist. v. 4. C.

Ver. 6. Counsels. "Consult many what ought to be done, but only a few of the most faithful, or rather thyself alone, what thou art about to do." Veget. 3:9 and 27.

Ver. 7. High. Thus the fool excuses himself. But wisdom condescends to our weakness, if we be truly in earnest. Deut. 32:12. Mouth. To defend himself, or to give advice. C.

Ver. 9. Of a fool. In as much as he is wicked. Though he may have some pious thoughts, he attends not to them. H.—He thinks how he may commit evil, and renders himself hateful. C.—Heb. "a wicked thought is the sin of folly." Sept. "the fool dieth in sins."—Detractor. Heb. "scoffer." H.

Ver. 10. Diminished. This is the sad consequences of too much dejection. Eph. 4:19. Despairing, they abandon themselves to impurities. H.

Ver. 11. Deliver. The Jews often put people to death without any formal trial, pretending zeal, as they did S. Stephen, &c. Our Saviour rescued the adulteress from such a situation, as Daniel had done Susanna. Yet this text may regard poor debtors. Ps. 71:4. C.—Christian bishops used all their influence to preserve the lives of those who did not deserve death. S. Amb. in Ps. 118. Ser. viii. Off. i. 36. and ep. xxv. and xxvi.

Ver. 12. I have. Heb. “behold, we know not this man.” Pagn. H.—He is a stranger. But all mankind are brethren, and have a charge to assist one another, even though they be enemies. Eccli. 17:12. Ex. 23:4. C.—Keeper. Heb. notser, “preserver.” As thou hast received many good things from God, shew mercy to thy neighbour.

Ver. 13. Honey. Of wisdom, which is most delicious. M.

Ver. 14. Thou shalt. Heb. “yea, it is the last.” Mont.—“Then there shall be a reward.” Prot.—Thou shalt enjoy old age, or have posterity. C.

Ver. 16. Fall into smaller sins, (S. Greg. vi. in 2 Reg. xv. &c.) or into disgrace, as yippol (H.) rather intimates. Vat. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xi. 31.—Both significations agree with the context. See Job 5:27. Matt. 18:21. C.—He who is not subject to mortal sin, may still be exposed to many failings, and venial sins, which do not deprive him of the title of just; whereas the wicked consents to mortal sin, from which he riseth not so easily. Hence the wise man admonishes us not to lie in wait, or calumniously seek impiety in the house or soul of the just. W.

Ver. 18. From. To punish thee. C.—Thus will thy thirst of vengeance be disappointed. H.—The Hebrews believed that there was no evil, which was not caused by sin; and this was true in some sense. But still God often afflicts his servants, (v. 16,) as the whole book of Job tends to prove. C.

Ver. 19. Contend. Or Heb. “associate.”—Like. v. 1. Ps. 36:1.

Ver. 20. Come. Prot. “no reward,” (H.) prosperity, &c. as designated also by the lamp. v. 14. C.

Ver. 21. Detractors. Or those who speak ill of God or the king. C.—Prot. “that are given to change,” (H.) and relapses.

Ver. 23. These. Sept. have an addition, and then our C. 30 to v. 15 after which follows the remainder of this chap. and then the ten first verses of the 31st. H.—Solomon here resumes the sententious style. C. 22:17. C.

Ver. 26. Lips. And be deemed a friend. M.

Ver. 27. House, and support thy family. Before building, great deliberation is requisite. Lu. 14:28. Those who attempt to instruct others, must first set good example.

Ver. 28. Cause, and necessity. Sept. “be not a false witness against thy fellow-citizen.”

Ver. 29. Work. Revenge is often reprobated, though the law allowed of retaliation, which the more virtuous did not insist upon.

Ver. 30. Man. Those who neglected their land were despised. C.—The ancient Romans esteemed agriculture as a most laudible and profitable employment. Cato. Rust. i. Cic. Off. i.

Ver. 32. Which. Sept. “at last I repented: I looked forward to receive instruction.”

Ver. 33. Said I, is not in Heb. C. 6:10. C.—Sept. “I will slumber a while,” to rest. Sept. “I will enfold my breast in my hands a little.” H.

PROVERBS 25

Ver. 1. These. Solomon wrote 3,000, and we have only 915 verses extant. C.—The rest perhaps shewed his genius, but were less useful. Tostat. in 3 K. iv. 9.—Men. Isaias, Sobna, &c. C.—Out of other records, (M.) or “translated” into a language better understood. Carthus. Bayn.

Ver. 2. Speech. The Scriptures will denounce the truth to them, and shew them how to reign with justice. We must adore the mysteries of God; but are allowed to examine the secret designs of princes.

Ver. 3. Unsearchable. Their counsellors must not betray their secrets. Tob. 12:7. The greatest enterprises depend on secrecy.

Ver. 5. Justice. The wicked in a kingdom resemble rust on silver. C.

Ver. 6. Glorious, or a boaster. H.—We must not seek the first places. Lu. 14:10.

Vive sine invidiâ, mollesque inglorius annos
Exige; amicitias et tibi junge pares. Ovid. Trist. iii. 4.

Ver. 8. Not. Sept. “repent when thy friend may reproach thee.” H.—Friend. A word spoken in haste may expose him to ridicule.

Ver. 9. Stranger. It sometimes happens that friends fall out; but if either disclose the secret of the other, he will be deemed infamous. C. Jos. con. Ap. 2.—S. Ambrose says of his brother Satyrus, “though we had all things in common, yet the secret of our friends was not so.”

Ver. 10. Grace, &c. is no in Heb. Compl. S. Jerom, &c. But it is in the Sept. “favour and friendship may give liberty; which keep thou for thyself, that thou mayst not be exposed to great shame. But guard thy ways unchangeably.” H.—Avoid quarrels.

Ver. 11. Time, (Symmachus) “on its wheels,” (Heb.) flowing smoothly, (C.) or “according to his two faces, is apples of gold in network of silver. The Scriptures have a double sense. The exterior one leads to that sense which is interior, and more excellent. Maimonid. Parkhurst, p. 366.—Gold, oranges.—Beds. On such the kings of Parthia slept, and these metals were very common under Solomon, 3 K. 10:27. Est. 1:6. C.—Mont. renders masciioth “transparent cases.” Prot. “pictures of silver.”

Ver. 12. Bright. Heb. chali cathem, “an ornament of fine gold,” (Mont. Prot. H.) may probably denote a collar or ring. The eastern nations wore rings fixed at the top of the ears, and under the nose. Some were so large that they put their meat through them. The Scripture often alludes to these customs, which are so different from ours. Cant. 7:1.

Ver. 13. Harvest. In June and July, when the heat was most intense, people of quality had snow from Libanus to mix with what they drank. Jer. 18:14. C.

Ver. 15. Hardness. Heb. and Sept. “bones.” H.

Ver. 16. Up. We must moderate the sensual appetite, (M.) and even the study of wisdom, which is compared to honey. C. 24:13. Rom. 12:3. Eccle. 7:17. C.—We must not be too familiar, v. 17. Ven. Bede. Cajet.

Ver. 17. Having. Heb. “being tired of thee.” No man is so perfect, but he will manifest some defect, and become importunate. C.

Nulli te facias nimis sodalem. Mart.

Ver. 20. And. Prot. “as he that taketh away a, &c. and as vinegar ... to a heavy heart.” H.—The former sentence may be joined with the preceding, as it is improper to deprive a person of his garment, no less than to trust in the faithless; though some would suppose (C.) that this conduct, as well as the mixing of vinegar with nitre, is no less absurd than to attempt to relieve by music those who are extremely afflicted. Eccli. 22:6. T.—But Solomon does not speak of such, but only of those who are “heavy;” and we know that music has wonderful efficacy in relieving them, (1 K. 16:17) in like manner as this mixture serves to cleanse the skin and garments, (Jer. 2:22. C.) and to purify the ears, when they are deafish. Pliny xxxi. 10. Vales. lx. —As a, &c. is not in Heb. S. Jer. &c. C.—The Chal. has the latter part, (H.) “grief tries the heart, as fire does silver. As the worm eats wood, so folly,” &c. C.

Ver. 22. Coals of charity; (S. Chrys. in Rom. xii. 20) or, if he prove obstinate, his punishment will be the greater. Geier.—The former sense is more received. C.

Ver. 23. Rain; (Sym. Prot.) or marginal note, “bringeth forth rain.” H. —But S. Jerom, who live in the country, knew that this wind was rather dry; and therefore he has abandoned the Sept. raiseth the clouds.” Job 37:9. Joel 2:20. Eccli. 18:23. The countries north of Palestine were not calculated to produce vapours and rain, which came rather from the south. C.—Tongue. If the hearers would shew their displeasure, detractors would soon be reduced to silence. S. Jer. ad. Rust. S. Bern.

Ver. 24. It is. C. 21:9. Sixtus V. does not insert this verse here.

Ver. 25. Tidings. Heb. and Sept. The Vulg. seems rather to speak of a “good messenger.” Homer said that a good messenger honoured the business most. Pind. Pyth. viii. C.

Ver. 26. Falling into disgrace, or sin, occasions the wicked to exult, as if there were no God or religion. C.

Ver. 27. Majesty, viz. of God. For to search into that incomprehensible Majesty, and to pretend to sound the depths of the wisdom of God, is exposing our weak understanding to be blinded with an excess of light and glory, which hit cannot comprehend. Ch.—When the Church proposes to us any mystery, we have only to believe. Heb. “but it is glorious to sound their glory,” and see where the wicked end, that we may not envy them. C. 3:31. Ps. 36:7. C.—Prot. “so for men to search their own glory, is not glory,” but a sin. H.—“It is not good to eat too much honey,” (Chal.) or to sound the glorious words of God and wisdom, or the mysteries of religion. Sept. “But it is right to reverence glorious speeches,” (C.) with esteem and humility. Cat. Græc.

Ver. 28. Speaking. He lays himself open to every attack. C. 29:11.

Ver. 1. Glory and power. A fool in a high office will endanger himself and the public; (C.) while the virtuous, seeing that merit is not regarded, will not push themselves forward. Æschines.

Ver. 2. As a bird, &c. The meaning is, that a curse uttered without cause shall do no harm to the person that is cursed, but will return upon him that curseth; as whithersoever a bird flies, it returns to its own nest. Ch.—Come. Chal. “shall not come in vain,” if it be just, like that of Noe, Josue, &c. Heb. “shall not come” (C.) to the person against whom it is uttered, though God will not hold the curser guiltless, as the Vulg. intimates. H. Curses, anathemas, &c. vented without reason, do not injure any but those who denounce them. Yet out of respect for ecclesiastical authority, those who are under censures, must abstain from their functions till they be absolved. C.

Ver. 3. Snaffle. “Bit,” or muzzle, (camus) to prevent the animal from biting. H.—Sept. Arab. &c. “a goad for an ass.” But metheg denotes a bridle. (Mont. H.) asses being there very large, and commonly used for riding. C. 13:13. C.

Ver. 4. Answer not a fool, &c. Viz. so as to imitate him; but only so as to reprove his folly. Ch.—If thou answer at all, (v. 5) do it to the purpose, and to prevent others from taking scandal, (C.) as well as to humble the wicked, for his good. H.

Ver. 6. Iniquity. He is exposed to shame, (Sept.) and must condemn his own folly. C.

Ver. 7. Fair. Heb. “unequal legs,” or “lifted up,” so, &c. H.

Ver. 8. Mercury. The god of travellers, who were wont to throw a stone at the foot of his statue, as the Indians (Vincent. Bellor. xxiv.) and Arabs did. Mahomet would not disturb this superstitious custom. The Rabbins style these statues Mercolis. But Sept. &c. give another sense, “as he that bindeth a stone (C.) in the boss of a ring, σφενδονη, (M.) or in a sling,” can do no good, but only endanger himself or others, “so,” &c. Yet margema is never used elsewhere for a sling, and it means undoubtedly “a heap of stones,” (C.) as Mont. substitutes instead of “the sling,” in Pagn. “As a small piece of precious stone in a heap of stones is lost, so,” &c. Pole. Syn. Parkhurst in rogom. H.—Honour, or an office, in which he may do harm. C.

Ver. 9. If. Heb. “as a thorn goeth up into the,” &c. Prot. H.—If he attempt to handle or to extract one, he will wound himself the more, as the fool would render truth and wisdom contemptible. C.—Parable. Sept. “but slavery in the hands of fools” groweth up. H.

Ver. 10. Anger, and prevent lawsuits. Heb. is variously read and translated. C.—Prot. “the great God, that formed all things, both rewardeth the fool and rewardeth the transgressors.” Marg. “a great man giveth all, and he hireth the fool,” &c. Sept. “all the flesh of fools is exposed to many storms, for their excess is punished.” H.

Ver. 11. Dog. This is the only animal which is known to do so. S. Peter uses this comparison to deter any from renouncing the faith; as the Fathers do, to shew the misery attending a relapse. Sept. here add, “there is a confusion,” &c. taken from Eccli. 4:25. C.

Ver. 12. Fool. The ignorant may be convinced that he wants instruction. C.—But “none are worse than the half-learned.” Quintil. i. Jo. 5:21.

Ver. 14. Bed, which he will scarcely leave, though avarice push him forward. S. Aug. ser. xxii. or clxiv.

Ver. 16. Seven, or many wise men, who used to speak in a sententious manner. C.—So seven is used, v. 25.

Ver. 17. Anger. Heb. “passeth by, and meddleth with a quarrel not of him” pertaining. H.—Such expose themselves foolishly to danger. Great discretion is requisite to reconcile those at variance.

Ver. 19. Jest. He will not escape, no more than the person who had committed murder involuntarily, if he were not in a city of refuge. Num. 35:22.

Ver. 20. Faileth. Heb. Sym. C. “aboundeth, the fire is bright, or flourisheth.” Sept. H.

Ver. 23. Dross. Hence the proud will be detested, and appear contemptible.

Ver. 24. Lips. He will speak of what he hates much.

Ver. 26. Deceitfully. Heb. “in desolation.” He will cringe, but when he finds an opportunity, he will discover his evil designs. C.

Ver. 27. Him. “Bad advice is worst to him who gives it.” Varro. Rust.

PROVERBS 27

Ver. 2. Lips. All hate affectation and vanity. Jo. 5:41.

Ver. 3. Both. He is insupportable to himself and to others. Eccli. 22:17.

Ver. 4. And who. Sept. “but envy (zeal) beareth nothing.” The more we yield to the envious, the more he is offended at our good behaviour.

Ver. 5. Love. Which can be of no service to us, while reproof may cause us to amend.

Ver. 6. Enemy. Joab slew Amasa, while he kissed him. 2 K. 20:9. Matt. 26:48. True friendship is not attentive to outward appearances.

Ver. 8. Place, or vocation, like the prodigal son, Lu. 15. The Israelites were much attached to their own country, where they might practise the true religion. C.

Ver. 9. And. Sept. add, “wine and incense ... but accidents tear the soul.” H.

Ver. 10. Affliction. He will be less compassionate than a tried friend.—Better, &c. This daily experience evinces. “Those who purchase land, should consider if there be plenty of water, and a neighbour.” Pliny xviii. 5.—The Persians honour most those who live nearest to them. Herod. i. 134.

Ver. 11. Thou. Heb. Complut. and Sixtus V. “I may,” &c. Sept. “and cast reproaches from thee.”

Ver. 14. In the night. Or “early in the morning,” de nocte, as the Heb. implies.—Curseth. His importunity will be equally displeasing. H.—Flattery is dangerous, (C.) and unworthy of a free man. Cic. de Amic.

Ver. 16. Hand. As it will flow away, such as woman is commonly incorrigible. C.

Ver. 17. Sharpeneth. Or instructeth. Fungar vice cotis. Hor. Art.

Ver. 18. Glorified. He who serves his master well shall be promoted.

Ver. 19. Are. Heb. “to men.” Our hearts have all something similar. C.—Sept. “as faces are not like each other, so neither are the hearts of men.” They have all come peculiarity. H.—But this agrees not with the original.

Ver. 20. Destruction. Heb. abaddo, or abadon. C. 15:11. Apoc. 9:11. People die, and are plunged in hell daily.—Eyes. Avarice and ambition. Eccli. 14:9.

Ver. 21. Praiseth. If he be not puffed up, or if all agree in his praises, we may conclude that they are well founded.—The, &c. is not in Heb. Comp. S. Jer. or Chal. and destroys the connection.

Ver. 22. Mortar. Such were used by those who could not afford handmills. C.

Ver. 23. Flocks. Jo. 10:3. Eccli. 7:24. This may be applied to pastors.

Ver. 24. Generation. Thou wilt be cited as an example of prudence, if thou hast forseen the change of thy affairs, and provided for it. In the east it was not unusual to see a general of an army reduced to the meanest condition, and economy is necessary for all.

Ver. 26. Field. If thou wishest to purchase, or to pay the workmen.

Ver. 27. Milk. We cannot but admire such frugality. Sept. are rather different. C. v. 25, “Be careful of the grass of thy field ... that thou mayst have lambs for thy clothing. Honour the field, that there may be lambs for thee. 27 Son, thou hast from me solid instructions for thy life, and for that of thy servants.” H.

PROVERBS 28

Ver. 1. Pursueth. “A crime is its own punishment.” Senec. ep. 93. Lev. 26:36.—Dread. Of any thing terrestrial, as long as the object of his love is not attacked. Rom. 8:35.

Ver. 2. Princes. Who each contend for the sovereign power. C.

Ver. 8. Poor. It seldom happens that the unjust leave their riches to their children. C. 13:22. Job 27:16.

Ver. 9. His. Sept. “he rendereth his prayer abominable.”

Ver. 13. Mercy. This is true repentance, which enjoins, “not only to bewail past sins, but also to amend.” S. Amb. ii. Pen. v.—Sacramental confession was not required of the Jews, but they confessed their sins, when they laid their hands on the victim, &c. Lev. 4 and 5. C.

Ver. 16. Prudence. Sept. “riches.” Poverty is a great temptation to people in authority, more than avarice itself. C.

Ver. 20. Innocent. Unpunished, if he employ fraud, v. 22 c. 13:21.

Ver. 21. Forsaketh. Heb. “oppresseth (Sept. selleth) a man.” C.—Neither small nor great bribes must be taken. Justinian.

Ver. 22. Poverty. Sept. “the merciful shall have power over him.” v. 8. H.

Ver. 28. Men. Sept. “the just groan,” and all are under “apprehensions.” C.

PROVERBS 29

Ver. 8. Corrupt. Heb. “scoffers,” who provoke both God and men.

Ver. 9. Rest; or bring him to hear reason. C.—Sept. “a wise man shall rule nations; but the wicked being angry, is laughed at, and does not frighten.”

Ver. 10. Soul. they wish to protect the upright. Ps. 141:5.

Ver. 13. Enlightener. Sept. “visitor,” with punishment, as they seem to speak of palliated usury, which cannot escape God. See C. 22:2.

Ver. 18. Prophecy, by the urim, or by the mouth of prophets, who were in great power and estimation. 3 K. 1:24 and 12:23. and 2 Par. 25:6 and 28:8. C.—Sept. “There shall be none to explain the law to the impious nation.” H.—When pastors are wanting, all goes to ruin. 1 Cor. 11:4. Ven. Bede. C.

Ver. 20. Amendment. S. Jerom (as Evag.) says, after Thucydides: “Ignorance produces confidence, and learning fear.”

Ver. 24. Soul, and exposeth himself to death, though this was only inflicted for stealing a man. Ex. 21:16. The night-thief might also be killed in the fact. Ex. 22:2. But if the person who had stolen denied it on oath, he was put to death for perjury. Lev. 5:1.

Ver. 25. Fall. Human respects will not long preserve him from sin. C.

—Sept. have a double version: “Those who fear and are ashamed of men, shall be thrown down. But he who confideth in the Lord, shall rejoice. Impiety overturneth man, while he who trusteth in the Lord shall be saved.” Grabe. H.

PROVERBS 30

Ver. 1. Gatherer, &c. or, as it is in the Latin, Congregans, the son of Vomens. The Latin interpreter has given us in this place the signification of the Hebrew names, instead of the names themselves, which are in the Hebrew, Agur, the son of Jakeh. But whether this Agur be the same person as Solomon, as many think, or a different person, whose doctrine was adopted by Solomon, and inserted among his parables or proverbs, is uncertain. Ch.—Vomiter may denote David, who delivered many excellent canticles; Eruclavit cor, Ps. 44. De Dieu translates, “The words of him who is recollected the son of obedience.” The author styles himself foolish, and asks for neither beggary nor riches, (v. 2, 8) which seems not to agree with Solomon; though there can be no doubt but this chapter is inspired. C.—In effect, that great king might form this petition, being mindful of the instability of human greatness, and confess that of himself he was foolish.—Vision. Heb. massa (H.) generally implies something disagreeable, but here it is put for a collection of moral sentences.—With, &c. Heb. also, “to Ithiel, even unto Ithiel and Ucal,” (Prot. H.) friends of Agur, (C.) or his children, (M.) or rather Solomon speaks to all the faithful. We never find Agur mentioned as a canonical writer; and if he were, he would have been placed after Solomon. W.

Ver. 2. With me. He speaks of what he could claim of his own, abstracting from the prophetic light. C.—In his humility, he supposeth that others are more perfect. The wisest know best their own defects. W.

Ver. 4. Descended. How then could I acquire such a sublime science? Deut. 30:11. C.—Christ alone could impart it, (Jo. 3:13. H.) who is the perfect wisdom. W.—Hands. Sept. “breast.” H.—It is no less difficult to fathom the designs of Providence. Some understand the “spirit” of prophecy to be here meant.—Son. Sept. “children.” But many Greek copies, and all the interpreters, have Son, which the Fathers explain of the second person of the blessed Trinity, specified C. 8:22. C.

Ver. 5. Is fire-tried; that is, most pure, like gold purified by fire. Ch. Ps. 17:31. Jer. 23:29.—It cannot deceive.

Ver. 6. And not any thing contrary. Deut. 4:2 and 12:32.—Liar. Our Saviour condemned the false explanations of the Pharisees, as his Church does those of all heretics.

Ver. 8. Words, which are so opposite to thine. v. 5.—Riches. The former often prompts men to deceive, the latter to grow proud and forget God.

Ver. 10. Accuse. Sept. “deliver not” to an idolater. Deut. 23:15. Rabbins—Servant. Add not to his affliction. W.—We must suppose that the accusation is frivolous or false. Lyran.—A servant may do a person much injury: but this ought not to deter the other from performing what justice and charity require.

Ver. 15. The horse-leech: concupiscence, which hath two daughters that are never satisfied, viz. lust and avarice. Ch.

Ver. 16. Womb. Sept. “the love of a woman,” (H.) a harlot, or rather Heb. “a barren woman.”—Enough. The more fuel, the brighter the flame. These four similitudes may denote cruelty, lust, avarice, and prodigality; (C.) or the first and last may be understood (H.) of envy and ambition. W.

Ver. 17. Labour. Sept. &c. “old age.” Heb. “the obedience or admonition.” Those who curse their parents, were sentenced to death. Lev. 20:6.

Ver. 19. Youth. Heb. “a virgin.” The “conception of a mighty man (the Messias. H.) in a virgin,” is fitly compared to the flight of an eagle in the air, which leaves no trace behind, and is the most difficult to comprehend. See Jer. 31:22. Univ. Hist. iii. p. 144, note. Is. 7:14. Parkhurst in álm. H.—Some of the Jews have admitted this explanation. A. Lap.—Others understand that the marks of virginity are equivocal; (Bossuet, &c.) or, if we stick to the Vulg. and Sept. the difference betwixt a child and a young man is extremely great, and almost incomprehensible. C.—Young people who follow their carnal appetite, can no more give an account of their actions than of the course of an eagle, &c. W.—His wanderings are manifold. The Heb. seems to contain a prophecy of Christ’s conception.

Ver. 23. Mistress, and is married to her master. She will generally prove insolent; like slaves on the throne, Regnabit sanguine multo ad regnum quisquis venit ab exilio. Suet. Tib. 59. C.

Ver. 27. Bands, like an army. When one rises or falls, all do the like. They are so numerous in the East, as to darken the sun and spread destruction. Joel 1 and 2. C.

Ver. 28. The stellio. A kind of house lizard, marked with spots like stars, from whence it has its name. Ch.—Heb. semamith. H.—It probably provides food against the stormy season, like ants. Bochart. C.—Others understand “the spider,” (Kimchi) or “monkey.” Vat. &c.

Ver. 30. Meeteth. If he retreat, he looks back with disdain, till the woods conceal the turpitude of his flight. Pliny viii. 16.

Ver. 31. Loins. It rules, and is even terrible to lions. Pliny x. 21.—The terms of the original are found nowhere else, and some understand the horse, the bee, and a soldier in arms. C.—Whom. Heb. “and Alkum with him.” Mont.—But we know no animal or king of this name;; and it may imply, “in the midst of his court,” or “assembly.” Chal. Some Latin copies read, Et Rex, nec est qui resistat ei, (Sext. V.) which is more conformable to the Heb. (C.) and is here translated, though the Vulg. read, Nec est rex qui, &c. These four emblems (H.) denote fortitude, chastity, order, and justice.

Ver. 32. Mouth. Fools ought not to govern. W.—Many might have been deemed wise, if they had continued in a lower station. C.—Heb. “If thou hast acted foolishly in raising thyself, and if thou hast entertained evil thoughts, put thy hand to thy mouth.” H.—Chal. “put not thy,” &c. Give not way to pride, or to insolent language. C.

Ver. 33. And. Heb. “For he who presseth milk.” C.—Prot. “Surely the churning of milk bringeth for butter,” &c. H.—Strife. Moderation is necessary, (C.) in all actions. W.

PROVERBS 31

Ver. 1. Lamuel. This name signifies, God with him; and is supposed to be one of the names of Solomon. Ch.—Grotius would explain it of Ezechias. But why should we abandon the tradition of both Jews and Christians?—Mother; Bethsabée, who it seems was inspired, unless she received these maxims from Nathan. Solomon always speaks of her with the utmost respect, as a prudent mother may have the greatest influence over the tender minds of her children. C. 1:8 and 23:25.

Ver. 2. Vows. She seems unable to express her concern for him when he first mounted the throne, and shewed her the greatest reverence. 3 K. 2:19.

Ver. 3. Women. This would destroy thy health, and tend to impoverish the kingdom.—Kings, by injustice and ambition. C.

Ver. 4. Give. Sept. "Do all with counsel. By advice drink wine. Lords are inclined to anger; let them not drink wine." H.—Solomon took this advice. Eccle. 2:3.

Ver. 5. Poor. Solon condemned to death, at Athens, the prince who should get drunk; and the Areopagites excluded from their assembly a judge who had dined in a tavern. Laert. 1. Athen. xiii. 2.

Ver. 6. Drink. Heb. shecar, particularly palm-wine.—Are sad. Heb. "perish," being sentenced to die; (Mark 15:23. Amos 2:8) or, who grieve and mourn for one deceased. On such occasions no food was prepared in the house, but the friends supplied what was necessary, and went to eat and drink with the afflicted. Eccle. 7:3.

Ver. 7. More. Not that intoxication is permitted even to them.

Ver. 8. Pass through life, or the country. C.—Sept. "Open thy mouth and judge righteously. Render justice to the poor and weak." H.—Doctrine is best received by those who are more ready to hear than to speak. W.

Ver. 10. Who. The following verses are in alphabetical order. They contain a grand eulogy of Bethsabée, who repented, or of a perfect matron. C.—Such are rare, though they may be found. W.—Valiant; industrious.—Price. Formerly people bought their wives. C.—Is. Heb. "is far above riches (Prot. H.) or pearls." Lam. 4:7.

Ver. 11. Spoils, taken in war. His wife will supply all necessities. v. 21.

Ver. 13. Hands, with skill and industry, (C.) or "willingness." Heb. M.—Ladies of the highest quality formerly employed themselves in this manner, like Penelope. Alexander, Augustus, and Charlemagne wore garments, which their sisters or wives had wrought. Curt. 5. Suet. 64. Eginhard.

Ver. 14. Bread; all that is used for meat and drink. Sept. "riches." Grabe, "livelihood:" Blou. H.

Ver. 15. Night, or early in the morning, as soon as the night was over; de nocte. Heb. "while it is yet night." H.—Extreme vigilance is required of those who direct others. "The master must be first up, and last in bed." Cato v.

Ver. 16. Considered. This conduct is suggested by prudence. C.—Cato (Rust. 2.) says, "Do not go only once round the field," &c.

Ver. 17. Arm; working, and making others obey.

Ver. 18. Night, during a great part of which she will work.

Ver. 19. Strong things, “becoming” (Sept.) her station. C.—Spindle. She purposes and begins well, trusting in God for perfection and a reward. W.

Ver. 21. Domestics. Heb. “house is clothed in purple,” which may be understood of the domestics, though it seems more probably to refer to her husband and children.

Ver. 22. Tapestry, for the beds and floor.—Linens, or cotton; byssus. Ex. 25:4.

Ver. 23. Gates. Chal. “provinces.” The rich were chosen for judges. C.

Ver. 24. The Chanaanite, the merchant; for Chanaanite, in Hebrew, signifies a merchant. Ch.—The Phœnicians travelled into all countries. Traffic was not then deemed a discredit, even to kings.—Girdles were worn both by men and women, and were very costly, insomuch that (C.) the kings of Persia assigned cities to furnish their wives with them. Athen. i. in Antylla.—They who practise and teach the law may be said to buy and sell. W.

Ver. 25. Clothing: it is very beautiful, or wisdom and virtue surround her.—Day. She fears not death, (C.) or future distress of hunger, &c. Jans.

Ver. 26. Tongue. She is ever bent on doing good. H.—Very different from many of her sex, who are taken up with vanity and complaints. C.

Ver. 27. Idle, out of a sense of duty, and not though avarice.

Ver. 28. Her. They were best able to judge of her merit.

Ver. 30. Lord. Hitherto natural qualifications appear: but to these the Christian matron must add sincere piety: and thus Solomon completes the character of his mother, (C.) who had given him such excellent instructions, or of any accomplished woman. Outward beauty soon (H.) decays; but the fear of God is more deserving of praise. W.

Ver. 31. Gates, before all the judges (H.) and people. M.—Good works shall be rewarded at God’s tribunal, (W.) when the vain worldly beauty shall be covered with confusion. H.—This idea of a perfect woman is best verified in the Catholic Church, (S. Aug. Ven. Bede) though the blessed Virgin, &c. may also be designated. ECCLESIASTES

ECCLESIASTES

INTRODUCTION

This Book is called Ecclesiastes, or the preacher, (in Hebrew, Coheleth) because in it Solomon, as an excellent preacher, setteth forth the vanity of the things of this world, to withdraw the hearts and affections of men from such empty toys. Ch.—Coheleth is a feminine noun, to indicate the elegance of the discourse. It is very difficult to discriminate the objections of free-thinkers from the real sentiments of the author. It is most generally supposed that Solomon wrote this after his repentance; but this is very uncertain. S. Jerom (in C. 12:12) informs us that the collectors of the sacred books had some scruple about admitting this; and Luther speaks of it with great disrespect: (Coll. conviv.) but the Church has always maintained its authority. See Conc. v. Act. 4. Philast. 132. C.—It refutes the false notions of worldlings, concerning felicity; and shews that it consists in the service of God and fruition. W.

ECCLESIASTES 1

Ver. 1. Jerusalem. This clearly designates Solomon. See v. 12. C. 12:8.

Ver. 2. Vanities. Most vain and despicable, (C.) and frustrating the expectations of men. M.—S. Aug. reads vanitantum, and infers that this vanity of sublunary things is an effect of man's sin. Yet he afterwards discovered that he had read incorrectly. Ret. i. 7.

Ver. 3. Labour. People fight for a mere point; for such is the earth compared with the universe. Sen. q. Nat. Hoc est punctum, &c. Matt. 16:26.

Ver. 4. Ever. Its substance remains, though the form be changed. C.—At the end of time, it will be purified to continue for ever. W.

Ver. 5. Place daily. Its annual motion is then mentioned. C.

Ver. 6. Spirit. The sun, (S. Jer.) which is like the soul of the world, and which some have falsely asserted to be animated; or rather (C.) the wind is meant, as one rises in different parts of the world when another falls. Pliny ii. 27. M.

Ver. 7. Again. The sea furnishes vapours, &c. Homer (Il. φ.) expresses himself in the same manner.

Ver. 8. Hearing. In all sciences there are many difficulties. If a man had arrived at perfect knowledge, his researches would cease.

Ver. 10. New. Such vicissitudes have occurred before, though we must not infer that the world is eternal; or that there have been many others before this, as Origen would suppose. Prin. iii. 5. &c. C.—Men's souls, which are created daily, are nevertheless of the same sort as Adam's was; and creatures proceed from others of the same species, which have been from the beginning. S. Tho. p. 1. q. 73. W.—Natural and moral things continue much the same. M.

Ver. 11. Things. Otherwise we should read of similar events to those which we behold. The same cause naturally produces the same effect.

Ver. 12. Israel. This was the case with none of Solomon's descendants. C.

Ver. 14. Vexation. Heb. also, “food of wind;” (Sym.) or “choice of the spirit.” Sept. People are eager to become learned, and yet find no satisfaction. H.—All natural things are insufficient to procure felicity. W.

O Curas hominum! O quantum est in rebus inane! Persius.

Ver. 15. Perverse. Habitual and obstinate sinners. C.—Fools, who follow the broad road. H.—Heb. and Sept. “the defect cannot be numbered.” We know not to what a height the soul of man might have risen, if he had continued faithful.

Ver. 16. Learned. Solomon was blessed both with a natural genius, which he improved by study, and also he had the gift of supernatural wisdom. Yet he declares that all is vanity and pain.

Ver. 17. Errors. Sept. “parables and science.” But to discern the mistakes of men is a part of wisdom, (C.) and Grabe substitutes “wanderings,” instead of “parables,” after Theodot. as Heb. ealluth (H.) means “errors,” (C.) or “follies.” Mont.

Ver. 18. Labour. He is bound to do more for heaven, as he is convinced of his own defects, and of the strict judgments of God. Wisdom is not true happiness, but the means to obtain it. W.—The more a person knows, the more he is convinced of his own ignorance, (C.) and filled with grief, that wisdom should be so much concealed. S. Jer.—Those who are learned, feel indignant that their disciples should be so dull. M.

ECCLESIASTES 2

Ver. 1. Delights. He speaks in the name of libertines, (S. Greg. Dial. iv. 4.) or after his conversion. C.—The worldling might object that since wisdom affords not content, it is best to try pleasure. But this meets not with the approbation of the wise, as all terrestrial joy is short, and can yield no more than a passing consolation. W.

Ver. 2. Why. Heb. “What doth that?” Sept. “Why dost thou so?” Immoderate laughter is a sign of folly. Eccli. 21:23. C.—“Even spiritual joy is a temptation.” S. Jer.

Ver. 3. Wine, and to lead a temperate life. C.—Prot. “to give myself unto wine, (yet acquainting mine heart with wisdom) and to lay hold on folly,” &c. H.—I wished to indulge myself in pleasure, yet so as not to lose the reputation of wisdom. C. 5:9. H.

Ver. 4. Works; palaces, towns, and particularly the temple. Many, like Solomon, will refrain from wine, and still yield to other excesses.

Ver. 5. Orchards. Heb. “paradises,” in which fruit-trees were planted. C.

Ver. 7. Family of slaves, “born in my house,” (Prot.) distinct from those whom I got for money. H.—There were generally procured from foreign nations, as the Hebrews obtained their liberty on the sabbatic year.—Sheep. David had the like; but Solomon had also horses. 3 K. 10:21.

Ver. 8. Silver, which became, in consequence, of little value.—Singing. At the court of Persia, people sung all night, and during the feasts. Athen. xii. and 14.—Cups and vessels; (Aq. and Sym.) or, “men and women to,” &c. (Sept.) or, “a field and fields;” (C.) or, Prot. “as musical instruments, and that of all sorts." Heb. shidda beshiddoth. H.

Ver. 9. Wisdom, not that which was supernatural, and could not be found amid such delights. v. 3. Jam. 3:17. I knew that all this was vanity. C.

Video meliora proboque, Deteriora sequor. Ovid. H.

Ver. 10. Labour. Heb. "and this was my portion of all my labour." I perceived that I could not thus obtain content. C.—"Thou (O God) hast made us for thyself, and our hearts are restless till they repose in thee." S. Aug. Conf. i. 1. M.—Aurelius makes the same confession as Solomon, respecting the insatiable nature of his own heart, and the emptiness of pleasure, &c.

Ver. 12. What. Heb. "For what man shall come after the king?" Sept. "after counsel?" Many other versions may be given of this obscure text. Solomon stopt at human wisdom, without consulting the divine; or he asks who shall have greater facility to acquire knowledge than himself, or equal his works? C.—Man's wisdom compared with God's is contemptible; though it be preferable to folly. M.

Ver. 14. Darkness and ignorance. He knows not whither he is going. Prov. 4:19 and 17:24. Wisdom is to be preferred before wealth, &c. C.—Consideration directs a person to do good.—Alike. Thus worldlings speak, who reflect not on the life to come. W.—In many respects all resemble one another, though their sentence be very different. M.

Ver. 15. Vanity. This inference was false, (v. 16) or my labouring for wisdom was to no purpose. C.—Sept. "I then spoke more in my heart, (for the fool speaks out of his abundance) since this also is vanity." H.

Ver. 16. Unlearned. He answers, (Jans.) or rather continues the objections. Geier. C.

Ver. 17. Life. Heb. "I hated life," as all is attended with anxiety. Rom. 7:24.

Ver. 19. Solicitous. We naturally desire to have our plans perfected. Solomon had, perhaps, a presentiment of Roboam's misconduct. Eccli. 47:27.

Ver. 20. Off, in a sort of despair; suggested by worldly wisdom. Religion alone can impart steady principles. C.—Prot. "I went about, to cause my heart to despair of all the labour which I took under the sun;" in the transactions of the world. H.

Ver. 21. Wisdom. The writings of the wise are often perverted by perverse heretics. S. Jer.—Idle heirs dissipate the possessions, which had been accumulated with such industry. C.—Riches tend to encourage the profligacy of the heir. M.

Ver. 24. Drink, using with moderation the things which we have acquired, rather than to be solicitous for more, (W.) which may fall into the hands of an idle heir, who is appointed by God, v. 26. This may also be the plea of libertines, (C.) who would use freely what he has given. S. Aug. con. Jul. iv. 3.

Ver. 26. Pleased God, though he may not be his relation. Prov. 26:16. Job 13:22. C.

ECCLESIASTES 3

Ver. 1. Heaven, in this world, where alone things change. S. Jer.—Nothing is here perpetual, but to be used in a proper manner. W.—The heart must not be attached to any thing created. C.—Pleasure had been condemned and approved. C. 2. He shews that all must have its time. M.

Ver. 5. Stones, with a sling, or to render a field useless. 4 K. 3:25. Is. 5:2.—Embraces. Countenance was sometimes prescribed for married people. Lev. 20:18 and 1 Cor. 7. S. Jer. S. Aug. Ench. 78. C.—Hatred often succeeds love. v. 8 and 2 K. 13:14. H.

Ver. 9. Labour? What advantage does he derive from any of these things? C. 1:3. C.

Ver. 11. Consideration. Lit. “dispute.” Heb. and Sept. “heart.” H.—Pagn. “He has implanted the desire of immortality in their hearts.”—End. If we could discover the properties of each thing, we should be in raptures; (C.) but as we cannot, this increases our vexation. M.

Ver. 12. Well; virtuously: or, perhaps, as literally, to enjoy himself. v. 13. C.—Thus thinks the man of pleasure. Is. 22:13. S. Jer.

Ver. 13. God. He gives peace and plenty; and still more, the grace to use these things, so as to obtain heaven. C.

Ver. 14. Feared. The order of the seasons, &c. teaches men to adore Providence. S. Jer.—He has arranged every thing, how mutable soever. S. Aug. Conf. i. 6.

Ver. 15. Past. He causes plants to spring forth afresh. Heb. Sept. &c. “But will God seek after the oppressed?” Here commences another objection. C.

Ver. 17. And then. Prot. “for there is a time there (v. 1) for every purpose, and for every work.” At the day of judgment all will receive their due. H.

Ver. 18. Beasts. Another doubt; or suggestion of infidels. S. Greg. Dial. iv. 4.

Ver. 19. Man hath nothing more, &c. viz. as to the life of the body. Ch.

Ver. 21. Who knoweth, &c. viz. experimentally; since no one in this life can see a spirit. But as to the spirits of the beasts, which is merely animal, and becomes extinct by the death of the beast, who can tell the manner it acts so as to give life and motion, and by death to descend downward, that is, to be no more? Ch.—Few are able to prove that the soul of man is immortal rather than that of beasts, since the bodies of both are subject to the like inconveniences. The objection is answered C. 12:7. C.—The difficulty of answering is intimated by “Who?” &c. Ps. 14:1. M.

Ver. 22. After him. He knows not who shall be his heir, or how soon he may die. None returns from the other world to inform him of what is there transacted. Thus the libertine encourages himself. C.

ECCLESIASTES 4

Ver. 1. Any. God suffereth the innocent to be oppressed for a time, that they may merit a greater reward. Ps. 72.

Ver. 3. Born. It is better to have no existence than to be in eternal misery. Matt. 26:24. But the affliction of the just procureth glory for them. W.—The pagan sages observed, that it was “best for mortals not to be born; and if they were, to die very soon.” Chalcid. and Theognis. —But they considered only temporal inconveniences. Religion has in view the danger of sin, and the desire of eternal happiness. Rom. 7:24.

Ver. 4. Industries, or Heb. “righteous actions.” If one be poor, he is in distress; if rich, he is exposed to envy; so that all is vanity. C.

Ver. 5. Flesh, which he will not labour to sustain; (H.) or he repines at his own past misconduct, and at the affluence of others.

Ver. 6. Mind. These are the words of the slothful, (C.) or of truth. H. Prov. 17:1.—The indolent will not observe moderation in the application of this sentence. M.

Ver. 8. Things? He acts as if he were to live for ever, or feared to be starved.

Ver. 9. Therefore is not in Heb. &c. The miser had better have some society. It is advantageous; though to refrain from its comforts, out of piety, is not blamed. The solitary must be “an angel or a devil.” C.—Society. Besides the advantages of friendship, this implies that a person must have Jesus Christ with him, that he may rise from sin and death by his assistance. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 10. Fall into sickness, poverty, or sin. The saints have withdrawn people from the dangers of the world into monasteries, where they may fight together against the devil.

Ver. 12. Cord. True charity increaseth in strength as it does in number, (S. Jer. W.) though friendship may not admit of more than two persons. H.—Some explain this triple cord of the blessed Trinity, or of the three monastic vows, the theological virtues, or the parts of penance, &c.

Ver. 13. Foolish. Great wisdom and prudence is required of kings; who, like others, are exposed to many vicissitudes.

Ver. 14. Prison. The exaltation of Joseph, Mardochai, and Daniel, was remarkable. C.—Si fortuna volet, fies de Rhetore Consul. Juv. Sat. vii.

Ver. 15. Second heir. M.—“They adore the rising (Papinius) more than the setting sun; (Plut. Pomp.) and a person is no sooner on the throne than his successor begins to be courted: (v. 16) so inconstant are mortals! C.

Ver. 16. In him. Many are perfectly unacquainted with the king, who finds so many admirers about his person, and even of these the greatest part begin to be presently disgusted, and wish for another change.

Ver. 17. Keep. Here many begin the fifth chap. as Solomon alters his style, and gives many important instructions. C.—For. Heb. “rather than that fools should offer sacrifice, since they know not that they are doing wrong.” Mont.—Do not imitate hypocrites, (H.) who have the appearance of sanctity, while they despise God’s orders. Jer. 7:2. C.

ECCLESIASTES 5

Ver. 1. Few. As none can arrive at the perfect knowledge of God, they should be reserved in speaking of Him. W.—De Deo etiam vera loqui periculosum. Cic. de Nat.—In prayer, (C.) we must not pretend to give him any information, like the heathens. Matt. 6:7. H.

Ver. 2. Folly. Under anxiety a person is naturally disturbed with dreams, in which some true ideas may present themselves; in like manner, as a great talker will say some things respecting God, which may not be reprehensible, though the greatest part of his discourse will be nothing to the purpose. This is another abuse. All must speak of God and religion, though few are able to do it, with propriety! C.

Ver. 3. Pay it. Deut. 23. Vows must be fulfilled. W.—God requires that we should keep the commandments; (Lu. 10:28) and if we engage ourselves to perform some work of supererogation, he expects that we should be faithful. To vow is of counsel; but to comply with it is of precept. An abuse too common among the Jews is here condemned. C.

Ver. 5. Sin by making a vow, above thy strength, (Chal. Pineda) or by speaking what may excite the passions. Thaum.; Bossuet—Angel guardian assigned to each one, (W.) or the priest, who took cognizance of vows. C.—Providence, or “foresight” in me to avoid the evil. Heb. and Sept. “it is an error,” (H.) or sin of ignorance, for which certain victims were specified. Lev. 5:4. The neglect of vows could not be thus expiated. C.—Use no allurements to lust. M.

Ver. 6. Number. Those who observe dreams, are filled with apprehension. The Jews were very subject to this superstition. C.—As dreams are vain, so are many words or excuses to evade a vow. Jun. Grot.—Such pretences must not be made. S. Jer. M.

Ver. 7. These. God will bring the wicked to judgment, (C.) and shew for what design he left them in power. H.

Ver. 8. Him. An appeal may be made to the king or to God. Reges in ipsos imperium est Jovis. Hor. iii. ode 1.—Heb. “the king serves, (Mont.) or is served by the field.” Prot. H.—All have a mutual dependence on each other, and thus the vanity of men and the order of Providence appear. C.

Ver. 9. Money. Avarice is like a dropsy, (C.) or poison, infecting all the person. Sallust.—The miser is the slave, and not the possessor, of his riches, (S. Chrys.) like Tantalus, who could not drink, though in the midst of waters. Hor. i. Sat. 1.—Nescis quo valeat nummus, quem præbeat usum.

Ver. 10. Them. He shews the vanity of the great.

Ver. 11. Sleep. Is not the health and content of the poor to be preferred?

Ver. 12. Owner. When they are taken away, they bring greater sorrow, (C.) and even when present, they fill the mind with anxiety. H.

Ver. 13. Affliction. Heb. “by an evil affair,” or accident. C.—Who. Heb. “and there is nothing in his hand.” H.—As temporal riches prove detrimental to their owners, so do false philosophy and heresy to those who follow them. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 14. Labour. All must die in this manner. But it is most afflicting that he was formerly rich, and must leave his son indigent. C.

Ver. 16. Sorrow. The person whose riches have been taken away, had made a bad use of them, (C.) living like a miser. It would be more rational to indulge in the pleasures which they afford, though this is also vain. C. 3:14.

Ver. 19. Delight, while he observes due moderation. His life passes away sweetly. C.

ECCLESIASTES 6

Ver. 2. Thereof. “Di tibi divitias dederunt artemque fruendi.” Hor. i. Ep. 4.—The proper use of riches is rare. C.—Misery. Riches do not make people happy. W.

Ver. 3. Than he, since the latter has injured no one, nor experienced any evil in the world, (C.) by his own fault; (M.) whereas the miser has both hurt himself and others, and has neglected to make himself friends of the mammon of iniquity.

Ver. 4. He. The infant, though some explain it of the miser. C.

Ver. 7. Mouth. We are always providing food. S. Jer.—The rich are wholly bent on pleasure; or the poor cannot get a sufficiency.

Ver. 8. Life. The wise poor shall be blessed. Heb. “the poor knowing how to walk before the living,” (H.) in society (C.) among the saints. H.

Ver. 9. Know. Enjoyment has the advantage over hope. Heb. "better is the sight of the eyes than the going of the soul," which denotes her desires. C.—Presumption. Heb. "vexation." H.

Ver. 10. He, &c. This is plainly spoken of Christ, whose name was given before he was born; (S. Jer. W.) or men resemble each other in all ages, (C. 1:9. C.) being proud, fragile, &c.

Ver. 11. Disputing. Are we better acquainted with nature than former ages? This is another subject of confusion. C.

ECCLESIASTES 7

Ver. 1. Above him. We are intent on things which regard us not, while we neglect the important concerns of heaven. Hebrew may be joined with the preceding. C.—Prot. (11.) "seeing there are many thing which increase vanity, what is man the better? 12) for who knoweth?" &c. H.—Some strive to obtain riches or honours, which will prove fatal to them. C.—None can perfectly know the nature of things either present or future. W.

Ver. 2. Name. "It is necessary for the sake of others," (S. Aug. de B. Vid. xxii.) particularly for those who have to direct souls. S. Greg. in Ezec. C.—In this second part is shewn that felicity is procured by a good life. W.—Death. Speaking of the just, for death is the beginning of sorrows to the wicked. C.—Some nations mourned on the birth-day of their children. Val. Max. ii. 6. Eurip in Ctes.

Ver. 3. Come. While at birth-day feasts (Gen. 40:20. Matt. 14:6) people give themselves up to joy, and cherish the idea of living long. C.

Ver. 4. Anger. That is, correction, or just wrath and zeal against evil, (Ch.) is preferable to a misguided complaisance. Prov. 27:6. C.—Anger, when rightly used, helps us to correct our faults. W.

Ver. 5. Mourning. They submit willingly to correction, (S. Jer.) or think seriously on the dangers of sin and God's judgments.

Ver. 6. Wise man. Much prudence is requisite to correct with fruit, and to persuade the sinner that he is under a mistake. C.

Ver. 7. Laughter. It is loud and soon over. Eccli. 21:23. Lu. 24:25. C.

Ver. 8. Oppression. Lit. "calumny." The most perfect can hardly bear it. Heb. "oppression (or calumny of others. C.) will make the wise insane, and a present will ruin the heart." Mont.—Avarice blinds us. H.—Deut. 16:19 "a corrupt judge examines ill the truth."

Ver. 9. Speech. Heb. "thing." The best projects often are seen to fail.—Beginning, as the auditor is on longer kept in suspense.—Presumptuous. Rashness must not be confounded with courage. C.—Hasty and immoderate anger is hurtful. W.

Ver. 10. Bosom, as in its proper place. The wise may feel its impressions, but he immediately makes resistance.

Ver. 11. Foolish. Men endeavour to excuse themselves by the manners of the age. But there have always been both good and evil. C. 1:10. C.—Corruption was prevalent in former times as well as now. M.

Ver. 12. With. Heb. also, "above, or much as riches." C.—These are impediments in the hands of the reprobate, while they promote virtue in the good." S. Amb. Lu. viii. n. 85.—The man who has only wisdom, cannot do as much good as those who are also rich. C.—The moderate use of riches helps the servants of God, while they do not set their hearts upon them. W.—The sun, to men on earth.

Ver. 13. Them. Money may procure necessities for the body; (H.) but wisdom gives a long and happy life. Prov. 4:10. Bar. 3:28. C.

Ver. 14. Despised. God never neglects first. Trid. Ses. vi. 11.—He detests sin, and at last abandons the obstinate, though he never fails to offer sufficient graces. A person who is of an unhealthy constitution, or involved in sin, cannot be cured by man alone. Yet we must not cease to preach, &c. while we expect all from God, who gives the increase. 1 Cor. 3:7.

Ver. 15. Complaint. Prosperity and adversity succeed each other, that we may be neither elated nor dejected too much. S. Bern. ep. xxxvi.—If we enjoy the advantages of nature, we must be thankful; if we feel pain, we must cheerfully submit to God's will. H.

Ver. 16. Vanity, during this miserable life.—Wickedness. This seemed more incongruous under the old law, when long life was promised to the just, (C. Ps. 72:3. Ex. 20:12) though it chiefly regarded heaven. H.

Ver. 17. Over just, viz. By an excessive rigour in censuring the ways of God in bearing with the wicked. Ch.—Give not way to scruples, (S. Bern.) nor to self-conceit. Alcuin.—Become. Heb. "perish," being oppressed with majesty. Lorin. T. C.

Ver. 18. Overmuch. No sin can be tolerated. C.—But as all offend in many things, (v. 21. H.) they are encouraged to rise again with diligence and sorrow.

Ver. 19. From him. Who is otherwise withdrawn, &c. Heb. “take hold of this, and not neglect that: for he who feareth God, will walk with all them.” He will avoid all extremes both of virtue and vice. C.—Prot. and Mont. “he shall come forth of them all,” and advance towards heaven. H.

Ver. 20. City. It has the advantage over more strength. C. 9:16.

Ver. 21. Not. 1 Jo. 1:8. Crates said it was “impossible to find one who falls not.” Laert. vi. H.—We must not flatter ourselves with impeccability, v. 18. C.—See Seneca. Clem. i. 6. Peccavimus omnes, &c. and de Ira. i. 28. M.

Ver. 23. Thy. We must be satisfied with a good conscience, as we cannot control the thoughts and words of all. S. Amb. Of. i. 1.

Ver. 24. Me. This is a proof of having made great progress in wisdom, since the half-learned are the most presumptuous. C.

Ver. 25. Much. Prot. “the which is far off, and exceeding deep, who can find it out?” H.

Ver. 26. Reason. Of all things. In this natural wisdom consists. Sept. “and number.” He examined the pretensions of philosophy, which attempted thus to predict future events; but found that it was all deceit, like a harlot. Olympiod.—He explored the qualities of different things, as an arithmetician counts numbers. M.

Ver. 27. Her. He speaks by experience, (S. Jer.) as none perhaps ever fell more terribly victims of impure love. C.—Though a plurality of wives was then permitted, Solomon did wrong in marrying strangers; and in suffering himself to be deluded by them, so as to erect temples to their respective idols. H.—All the attractions of women are replete with danger, and can only be overcome by God’s grace, and by flight. 1 Cor. 4:8. Prov. 7:22 and 22:14. C.

Ver. 29. Man. The superior part of the soul rarely thinks of good; but the sensual part always inclines to evil. W.—Solomon found danger from all women, (S. Jer.) and there is none who may not prove fatal to those who are off their guard. C.—Yet some are doubtless innocent, like the bless Virgin. H.

Ver. 30. Right. He fell by his own free-will. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xiv.

11. W.—The great corruption of the world is not, therefore, to be attributed to God. Eph. 4:23. Our first parents were led by curiosity to examine whether the fruit was good, &c. (S. Cyr. Cat. ii. Chal. Boss.) or mankind, in general, make useless enquiries.—And he. Heb. and Sept. “they,” &c. C.—Of the word. That is, of this obscure and difficult matter (Ch). if this sentence have any connection with the preceding. It is placed at the head of the next chapter in Heb. C.

ECCLESIASTES 8

Ver. 1. Most. Sept. “he whose face is impudent, shall be hated.” The truly wise and virtuous man is always polite and affable. C.—As we may form a probable conjecture of a person’s disposition from his countenance, so we may judge of man’s virtue by their actions. They are right and meritorious when the intention is good, (W.) and the works themselves blameless.

Ver. 2. I. Prot. add, “counsel thee, to keep, &c. “Obey the king and God.” H. 1 Pet. 2:17.—Solomon proposes his own example, or speaks in the name of the just.—God. The law of Moses, confirmed with an oath, or the engagement to be faithful to the king. 2 K. 5:3. 1 Par. 29:24.

Ver. 3. Face. This courtiers observe, while many Christians neglect God.—Work. Defend not what has been said or done amiss.

Ver. 4. So? The eastern kings rule with absolute sway. Prov. 16:14.

Ver. 5. Answer. Heb. “judgment.” He knows when to reprove even kings with effect; like Nathan, Elias, or S. Ambrose. 2 K. 12:1 and 3 K. 18:17.

Ver. 6. Man. Solomon often reminds him of his misery. Sept. and Theod. “man is possessed of much knowledge,” as they read dahth for rahth. C.

Ver. 7. Past. Prot. and Sept. “that shall be.” H.

Ver. 8. Spirit from leaving the body, or the wind from blowing. There is no quarter given by death; so the wicked cannot escape vengeance.

Ver. 9. Hurt. Those who are despised in elevated situations, might have been happy in obscurity.

Ver. 10. Works. In life and death hypocrites are mixed with the unjust; and this excites indignation.

Ver. 11. Fear. Thus they abuse the patience of God, and grow worse, because he is good. His time will come. Apoc. 16:15 Eccli. 5:4. 2 Pet. 3:10.

Ver. 12. Face. If God shew such clemency to the wicked, will he disregard his servants? Greek interpreters have read in a different meaning. C.—Sept. “the sinner has done evil from that time, and for a long while,” (T.) &c. See S. Jer. H.

Ver. 13. Let. Or, Heb. “it shall not,” &c. Prot. H.—Faith evinces that the wicked will be punished.—But. Heb. “like a shadow.” Sept. “under the shade,” in prosperity.

Ver. 14. Vain, or afflicting. Hence some have denied Providence. Jer. 12:1. C.

Ver. 15. No good for a man, &c. Some commentators think the wise man here speaks in the person of the libertine, representing the objections of these men against divine Providence, and the inferences they draw from thence, which he takes care afterwards to refute. But it may also be said, that his meaning is to commend the moderate use of the goods of this world, preferably to the cares and solitudes of worldlings, their attachment to vanity and curiosity, and presumptuously diving into the unsearchable ways of divine providence. Ch. C. 2:24 and 3:12. Eccli. 15. C.—Felicity is not attached to temporal prosperity, nor are the afflicted always miserable. W.

Ver. 16. Distraction of politicians, (Grot.) and of all human affairs.

Ver. 17. Reason. We know in general that God does all for his own glory, and for the welfare of his elect. But we cannot account for his treatment of mankind in particular cases. Rom. 11:33. S. Jer. C.—Say. Sept. “speak what thing soever, that he may know he,” &c. H.

ECCLESIASTES 9

Ver. 1. Of God. He seems to treat both alike, so that the just themselves cannot say whether their sufferings be a punishment or a trial. S. Jer. C.—Knoweth not certainly, and in an ordinary manner. W.—Hatred. Heb. and Sept. “yet love and hatred man knoweth not.” H.—Prosperity or adversity proves nothing. C.—Mortals cannot tell whether their afflictions tend to their greater improvement, like Job’s, or they are in punishment of sin, like those of Pharaoh, and of the Egyptians. This they shall know after death. W.—Yet the wicked know already that they are displeasing to God. Salmeron in 2 Cor. xii. “The just and ... their works are in the hand of God, even love and hatred; men know not,” &c. Dieu. Amama.

Ver. 2. But. Heb. joins this with the preceding not, “by all that is before them. All things come alike to all, there is one event to,” &c. Prot. H.—The pagans distinguished real goods and evils from those which were only apparent, like prosperity and adversity, which are determined only by the good or bad use. S. Jer.—Thus religion looks upon virtue and vice in the former light; and riches, poverty, &c. in the latter. It may be difficult to decide, whether, under adversity, the just have supported themselves better by virtue, or the wicked by vanity. God will manifest the truth. C.—Perjured. Heb. and Sept. “swearer, so he that fears an oath.” H.

Ver. 3. Evil. People hence take occasion to indulge in vice, (C. 8:14) though the conduct of God be irreproachable. C.—Shall. Heb. “they go to the dead.” H.—Many think that these are the sentiments of the impious.

Ver. 4. There. Even those who have had the vanity to claim divine honours, never could persuade themselves that they would escape death. But the just forms a different conclusion from the wicked. He looks upon his life only as a preparation for the other, (Heb. 11:13. Eph. 2:19) while libertines make haste to enjoy the fleeting pleasure. Is. 22:13. To the former death seems desirable, (C. 4:2 and 6:3) to the latter it is a subject of consternation; and he prefers the vilest creature living, to the most noble when dead. C.—Heb. “for whosoever is chosen (yebuchar. Marg. yechubar, “is united”) to all the living, has hope; for a,” &c. H.—Moderns generally follow the marginal reading of the Masorets. C.—“For who shall live for ever?” Sym. “Who partakes with all the living? There is hope.” Sept. H.—During life alone the sinner may amend. C. 2:3. The Gentiles are preferred before the Jews. W.

Ver. 5. Know nothing more, viz. As to the transactions of this world, in which they have now no part, unless it be revealed to them; neither have they any knowledge or power now of doing any thing to secure their eternal state, (if they have not taken care of it in their lifetime) nor can they now procure themselves any good, as the living always may do, by the grace of God. Ch.

Ver. 7. God. Be grateful to him, and make a good use of his benefits, (S. Jer. exp. ii.) or these are the words of libertines. Boss. S. Jer. i. explicat. C.

Ver. 8. White. As in times of joy, and among people of quality. C. 10:17. Prov. 31:23.—Head. Our Saviour reproaches the Pharisees for neglecting this. Lu. 7:45.

Ver. 9. Wife. Some translate, “the woman,” or harlot; as if the wicked still spoke.

Ver. 10. Earnestly. Live in delights, or perform many good works. C. 2:5. Our Lord seems to allude to this passage. What thou dost, do quickly. Jo. 13:27.

Ver. 11. All. Thus it appears to the inattentive, and to the wicked. For Solomon frequently inculcates that Providence directs all wisely. Human industry is not always attended with success. Deut. 29:19. This is a fresh proof of the vanity of all things. C.

Ver. 12. With. Heb. adds, “evil.” Net, (Mont.) or hook. H.—Them. They may use precautions; but, without God’s aid, they will not succeed. Ps. 126:1. C.

Ver. 14. And the siege, &c. Heb. has only “great bulwarks over or against it.” H.

Ver. 15. Afterward, is not in Heb. The poor man was unnoticed before. C.—Vulg. insinuates that he met with no return of gratitude, which is but too common; (H.) and this shews the vanity of the world.

Ver. 16. Heard? Eccli. 13:28. Men are so unjust as to despise wisdom, if it be in a poor man. The prudence of an individual has often saved cities, as was the case at Abela, and Bethulia; (2 K. 20:22. C.) and Syracuse was defended a long time by Archimedes against the whole Roman army. Plut. in Marcel.

Ver. 17. Fools. Though the wise often meet with contempt, it is only among fools, who form the majority. C.—Vain declaimers in the Church shew their own folly, as well as that of their hearers. S. Jer.

Ver. 18. Things. A woman saved Abela; and Achan almost ruined Israel. Want of prudence in a general is often fatal. Virtues are connected, as well as vices. C.—For one transgression, many acts of virtue are lost. S. Jer.

ECCLESIASTES 10

Ver. 1. Ointment. A fly cannot live in it. Pliny xi. 19.—Hence the smallest faults must be avoided, (C.) and superfluous cares, (S. Greg.) as well as the conversation of the wicked, (Thaumat.) particularly of heretics. S. Aug. con. Fulg. 14.—Detractors may be compared to flies:

they seek corruption, &c. A little leaven corrupteth the whole lump. 1 Cor. 5:6. C.—The wicked infect their companions, and vice destroys all former virtues. W.—Wisdom, or “a small ... folly is more precious than wisdom,” &c. of the world. 1 Cor. 1:25 and 3:18. Dulce est desipere in loco. Hor. iv. ode 12.—Heb. “folly spoils things more precious than wisdom.” A small fault is often attended with the worst consequences, (C. 9:18) as David and Roboam experienced. 2 K. 24 and 3 K. 12:14. C.—Sept. “a little wisdom is to be honoured above the great glory of foolishness.” Prot. “dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking flavour; so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honour.” H.

Ver. 2. Hand, to do well or ill. Deut. 1:39. Jon. 4:11. Chal.

Ver. 3. Fools. People judge others by themselves. C.—Thus Nero could not believe that any were chaste. Suet.

Ver. 4. Place. If the devil tempt or persuade thee to sin, repent and humble thyself; or if thou hast offended the great, shew submission.

Ver. 5. Prince, who seems to have been guilty of any indiscretion.

Ver. 6. Rich. Such were chosen magistrates. Ex. 18:21. Prov. 28:16 and 30:21.

Ver. 8. Him. Those who disturb the state or the Church, shall be in danger.

Ver. 9. Stones. Landmarks or walls. Prov. 22:18.—Them. God will punish his injustice, in meddling with another's property.

Ver. 10. Made blunt. After being repeatedly sharpened, (C.) it will be more difficult to cut with it, and will expose the person to hurt himself, v. 9. H.—Man, since original sin, is in a similar condition.—Wisdom. The wise perform great things even with bad tools. Heb. “wisdom is the best directress.” C.

Ver. 11. Silence. Prot. “without enchantment, and a babbler is no better.” H.—But he compares the detractor to a serpent, (C.) as he infuses the poison into all who pay attention to him. S. Jer. S. Bern.

Ver. 12. Grace. Pleasing and instructive. C.

Ver. 14. Tell him. How foolish, therefore, is it to speak about every thing!

Ver. 15. City. Being so stupid, that they know not, or will not take the pains to find what is most obvious. C.—Thus the pagan philosophers knew all but what they ought to have known; (S. Jer.) and many such wise worldlings never strive to discover the paths which lead to the city of eternal peace: like him who contemplated the stars, and fell into a ditch. C.

Ver. 16. When thy. Heb. lit. “whose,” cujus, as v. 17. H.—S. Jerom give two senses to this passage, the literal and the mystical, according to his usual custom. The dominion of young men and of luxurious judges is reprov'd, as well as innovations in matters of religion. Is. 3:4. Those are blessed who have Christ for their head, descending from the patriarchs and saints, (over whom sin ruled not, and who of course were free) and from the blessed Virgin, who was “more free.” They have the apostles for princes, who sought not the pleasures of this world, but will be rewarded, in due time, and eat without confusion. T. 7. W.—Child. Minorities often prove dangerous to the state, while regents cannot agree.—Morning, as children eat at all times. This may relate to the ruler who is a child in age, or in knowledge, though it seems rather to refer to his counsellors. Is. 5:11.

Ver. 17. Noble. Royal extraction, (Εσθλων γενεσθαι. Eurip. Hec.) and education, afford many advantages which others, who raise themselves to the throne, do not enjoy. Heb. “the son of those in white,” (C.) or “of heroes.” Mont.—Eurim, (H.) or Chorim seems to have give rise to the word Hero. The advantages of birth only make the defects of degenerate children more observable. C.—Heroum filii noxæ. “The sons of heroes are a nuisance,” (H.) was an ancient proverb.—Season. The time was not fixed; but it was deemed a mark of intemperance to eat before noon, when judges ought to have decided causes. Dan. 13:7. Acts 2:15.

Ver. 18. Through. If we neglect our own, or other’s soul, (H.) in the administration of Church, (S. Jer.) or state, all will go to ruin.

Ver. 19. Feast. As if they were born for this purpose, (Phil. 3:19. C.) fruges consumere nati. Hor. i. ep. 2.—Money.—

Scilicet uxorem cum dote fidemque et amicos, Et genus, et formam regina pecunia donet. Horace, i. ep. 6.)

—Heb. “money answers all purposes,” (H.) to procure meat, drink, &c. C.

Ver. 20. Said. Pigeons are taught to carry letters in the east, and Solomon alludes to this custom, or he makes use of this hyperbole to shew, that kings will discover the most secret inclinations by means of spies. We must not speak ill even of those who are worthy of blame. v.

ECCLESIASTES 11

Ver. 1. Waters. Sow thy seed where it may produce a good crop. C.—Be charitable to all. Lu. 6:30. Indiscrete faciendum bene. S. Jer.—Assist those in distress, (C.) even though they may be ungrateful, or unable to make a return. Lu. 14:12. T.—In this third part we are exhorted to serve God with perseverance. Of all virtues, the works of mercy avail most. Matt. 25. W.

Ver. 2. Eight. To as many as thou art able, (C.) especially to those who are of the household of faith, (Gal. 6:10. H.) whether under the old or the new Testament, signified by the numbers, seven and eight. W. S. Jer.—Mandatum accipis octo illis partem dare, fortasse benedictionibus, (S. Amb. in Lu. vi. n. 49.) which intimates, that we must apply ourselves to the pursuit of al virtues, as the number eight denotes perfection. C.

Ver. 3. If the tree fall, &c. The state of the soul is unchangeable, when once she comes to heaven or hell: and the soul that departs this life in the state of grace, shall never fall from grace; as on the other side, a soul that dies out of the state of grace, shall never come to it. But this does not exclude a place of temporal punishment for such souls as die in the state of grace: yet not so as to be entirely pure; and therefore they shall be saved, indeed, yet so as by fire. 1 Cor. 3:13, 14, 15. Ch.—After death, none can merit. W.—“He who shall not have cultivated his field, (the soul) shall after this life experience the fire of purgation, or eternal punishment.” S. Aug. de Gen. con. Man. iii. 20. H.—The souls in purgatory have their names inscribed in heaven, like the ancient saints, who were detained in the bosom of Abraham. C.—They fall, therefore, to the south. Let people dispense their alms to all, as the clouds rain upon the just and unjust, (H.) upon the cultivated and the barren land, and let them do it before death. They know not how soon it may lay them low. C.—By looking at the branches of a tree, we may conclude which way it will fall; so we may form a judgment of our future state, by reflecting on our present dispositions. “Our branches are our desires, by which we stretch ourselves to the south, if they be spiritual,” &c. S. Bern. ser. xlix. The liberal are not concerned where they bestow charity. People will gather up the fruit both on the north and south, and they who have given alms will find them (Abenezra; Mercer.) laid up in the heavenly tabernacles. H.—This agrees with the sequel. C.

Ver. 4. Reap. Those who are too circumspect in their alms-deeds, will often pass over such as stand in need, (S. Jer.) and people who reflect on the difficulties of a virtuous life, will never begin. S. Greg. iii. Past. xvi. and Mor. xxvii. 5.

Ver. 5. Spirit. In a man, or of the wind. Why then wouldst thou judge of the merit of thy petitioner? or pretend to determine why God has made thee rich and him poor?

Ver. 6. Better. Be kind to all during life. Gal. 6:10. C.—Do good, both in youth and in old age, (W.) lest, if thou shouldst grow remiss, all would be lost. S. Jer.

Ver. 8. And the. Heb. “for they are many. What comes to pass is vanity.” Mont.—Nothing can more effectually repress the love of this world. Eccli. 7:40. After Solomon has presented the objections of the wicked, he comes to this conclusion.

Ver. 9. Eyes. He speaks ironically, (C.) or exhorts to spiritual joy and moderation. S. Greg. Mor. xxiv.

Ver. 10. Anger. All turbulent passions, and evil or carnal pleasures. S. Jer.

ECCLESIASTES 12

Ver. 1. Not. Prevent old age, to procure a stock of virtues. H.—Solomon refutes the former sentiments of the wicked, which he had perhaps once entertained. C.

Ver. 2. Before the sun, &c. That is, before old age: the effects of which upon all the senses and faculties are described in the following verses, under a variety of figures. Ch.—All are exhorted to live well, before death come to deprive them of their senses and all helps: and to continue in expectation of judgment, the signs of which are given, as Matt. 24. W. S. Jer.—Rain. One misery succeeds another, the understanding is darkened, and the senses become dull. C.—The Jews explain v. 2, 7 of the future distress of their nation under captivity. S. Jer. H.

Ver. 3. House. The sides, (S. Jer.) or rather the arms. C.—Some understand prelates, or angels. Thaumaturg.—And the powers that are in heaven shall be moved. Mar. 13:25. H.—Men. The arms, (Chal.) or thighs, (Smith) or those who were formerly the most robust.—Number. The rest have been lost, and what remain are of little service for chewing meat. C.—Holes. Spectacles, (Geier) as if they had been already in use. C.—Heb. “windows.” H.

Ver. 4. Doors. The lips, (C.) feet, (Chal.) nostrils, (Vat.) or the trachea and pulmonary arteries.—Bird. The cock-crowing; or at the least sound their slumbers are broken.—Deaf. Heb. “be low.” The ears cannot enjoy music, nor can the voice of the old people please. 2 K. 19:25.

Ver. 5. Way. They shall walk bent down, and afraid of rough ground.—Flourish. Their head shall become white, like the almond-flower. Jer. 1:11.—Fat. Sept. “heavy.”—Destroyed. The hair shall fall off. C.—Concupiscence shall be extinct. Vat. T.—Eternity. The body being consigned to the grave, and the soul to the region of spirits, to have no farther concern with the transactions of the world. H. Job 7:9.—Street. This custom is often mentioned. Herod. ii. 85. Lu. 7:32.—The women dance, having one (C.) or two old people disfigured in the midst of them, to recount the actions of the deceased. Brun.

Ver. 6. Cord. The nerves.—Fillet. Veins, or the spermatic vessels, (C.) and the soul. S. Jer.—Cistern. When the bladder, &c. become disordered. Num. 24:7. C.

Ver. 7. It. Man is composed of two distinct parts; the destination of which we ought never to forget. Thus the objection of infidels (c. 3:19) is refuted. Plato and some of the ancients had the same idea of the soul’s spiritual nature; though some took it to be an aerial body. C.

Ver. 8. Ecclesiastes. “The preacher.” W.—He returns to his first proposition, and having pushed the objection of free-thinkers as far as possible, shews us what we ought to believe and practise. He establishes the distinction of soul and body, the advantage of instruction, (v. 11) without meddling with things too high, (v. 12) the obligation of fearing God, (v. 13) and future retribution. v. 14. This is the sum of all sound morality. C.

Ver. 10. Profitable. Heb. “pleasing.” Utile dulci. H.—Perhaps he condemns his attempt to know all things. c. 1:13. C.

Ver. 11. In. The ground, (H.) to keep a tent in its proper place. He seemed before to have placed the wise on the same level with fools. C. 6:8, 11 and 7:1. C.—Shepherd. God, or Solomon. The Jews explain it of Moses, and his successors, who taught the people.

Ver. 12. Not. I have had experience of all.—End. They can teach nothing farther. C.—

Tenet insanabile multos

Scribendi cacoethes. Juv. Sat. vii.

—Impious productions abound, while those which promote piety are too scarce. When the same truths are enforced, as those which the Scriptures contain, we cannot be accused of writing many books. Orig. Philoc. v. S. Jer.—Flesh. It ruins the health.

Ver. 13. All man. The whole business and duty of man. Ch.—This is the sum of all profitable doctrine. W.—He who does not fear God, deserves not the title of man. He is nothing but vanity. C.

Ver. 14. Error. Or hidden and secret things. Ch.—Heb. “with every secret thing,” (Prot. H.) “every inadvertency.” Sept. Sym. C.

CANTICLE OF CANTICLES

SOLOMON’S CANTICLE OF CANTICLES

INTRODUCTION

This book is called the Canticle of Canticles, that is to say, the most excellent of all canticles: because it is full of high mysteries, relating to the happy union of Christ and his spouse; which is here begun by love; and is to be eternal in heaven. The spouse of Christ is the Church: more especially as to the happiest part of it, viz. perfect souls, every one of which is his beloved; but above all others, the immaculate and ever blessed Virgin mother. Ch.—The bridegroom is Christ, as God and man. His praises and those of his spouse are recorded by various speakers. Solomon has given us three works; for beginners, the more advanced, and the perfect; as the philosophers teach ethics, physics, and metaphysics. All the holy Scriptures contain spiritual food, but they are not all fit for every person. Heb. 5:13. With what humility ought we not, therefore, to read this most perfect and mystical canticle, as the sentiments of spiritual love are expressed in the same words as that of worldlings, and we are more inclined to follow our own judgment and carnal notions! W.—None, therefore, should dare to peruse this work, who has not mastered his passions, having his conversation in heaven. H.—The Jews would not allow any to read it before the age of thirty. Orig. and S. Jer.—Some of the fathers and commentators have even asserted that the mystical sense is the only one which pertains to this book, (Theod. Durham. T.) and it is certainly the true and principal one, though allusion may be made to the marriage of Solomon with Pharaoh's daughter, (C. Bossuet. D.) or with a Tyrian princess, (c. 4:8 and 3 K. 13:5) or with Abisag. Rabbins. —Grotius shews the corruption of his own heart in his impure comments, as Theodorus, of Mopsuestra, is blamed by the second Council of Const. iv. a. 68. The name of God never, indeed, occurs; as he is represented under the idea of the bridegroom, &c. and the piece is allegorical. It might be divided into seven scenes, or nights, as the marriage feast lasted so long. Gen. 29:22. During this time the bridegroom saw his spouse seldom, and with great reserve, (C.) as was the custom with the Lacedemonians. Plut. in Lyc.—We might also refer all to six nights, or to the six ages of the Church, conformably to the system of De la Chetardie and Bishop Walmesley on the Apocalypse.—I. Age. C. 1:2 marks the ascension of Christ, and the propagation of Christianity; v. 4, 5 persecutions; v. 6, 7 vocation of the Gentiles; v. 12 protection granted by Christ. II. C. 2:3 peace under Constantine; v. 11. 17 troubles excited by Arius. III. C. 3:1 irruption of barbarians; v. 4 does not overturn the Church; v. 6 they are converted; v. 11 and Christ is more glorified, as Apoc. 19. IV. C. 4:5 the Latin and Greek Churches; v. 8 the Chaldees, lions, and Greeks, leopards, (Dan.) are converted; the Turks obtain dominion; v. 12 the Greek schismatics cut off; v. 16 the Church is persecuted, but protected. V. C. 5:2. Dew marks the cooling of charity, (S. Aug.) when Luther appeared; c. 6:3 yet the Church triumphs, particularly after the Council of Trent. VI. C. 6:9 after the sounding of the sixth trumpet, the Jews are converted, and adorn the Church, in spite of antichrist's power; v. 11 she addresses the synagogue, v. 12. C. 8:2 obtains leave to go into the house of her mother, as the apostles were of Jewish extraction; v. 7 the constancy of the martyrs appears; (see Rondet.) v. 8–14. the Church pants for her speedy union with her beloved. We may justly admire her authority, in preserving this and the former work of the canon, notwithstanding the internal and external evidence, and the ill use made of them by infidels, which seemed to militate against them. The Prot. Chateillon styles this “a wicked book.” Several passages may, no doubt, be abused by a corrupt heart: but what is there so holy, which may not be perverted? When we meditate on this canticle, we ought to remember the admonition given by the Church in the Mass: “Let hearts be on high;” and Oh! that all might answer with truth: "We have them to the Lord!"

CANTICLE OF CANTICLES 1

Canticles. Heb. shir hashirim asher Lishlomo, "the Canticle of Canticles which is for (H.) or according to Solomon," (M.) dictated to him by the Holy Ghost.

Ver. 1. Let. Heb. yishakeni, (H.) "kiss or instruct me," as if to insinuate the we must raise our thoughts from carnal to spiritual things.—The. Heb. "kisses."—His mouth. Others I reject. M.—The synagogue prays for Christ's coming, as the Church does for his glorious appearance. W.—The figures of the law and predictions afford not satisfaction; only the Messiah can bring it to mankind. Orig.—They shall all be taught by God. Jo. 6:45. Heb. 1:2. H.—Breasts. Heb. also, "loves." But the former is the primary signification of (M.) dodec. Christ, in his divine and human nature, is the source of all our good. His graces are manifested. He instructs and feeds us with the truths contained in Scripture, and in tradition, (H.) or in the Old and New Testament. Ven. Bede, &c.—Spiritual delights are to be preferred before all terrestrial ones. From the incarnation of Christ, and sanctification of man, all other graces proceed. T.—At first the spouse speaks to the bridegroom in the third person, to show her respect, though he was certainly present. Her companions attend her. C.—Wine. All seem to agree that these words are addressed to the bridegroom: which shews that they must be understood in the mystical sense. H.

Ver. 2. Ointments. The bosom used to be perfumed. Athen. xv. 5. and xv. 14.—Thy name. Thou thyself. The preaching of the gospel produced a wonderful change in the world. 2 Cor. 2:15. C.—The Church honours the name of Jesus on the second Sunday after the Epiphany. A. Butler, p. 130. H.—Thee. The martyrs and Christian virgins are inflamed with divine love.

Ver. 3–4. To, &c. is in the Sept.; but not in Heb. or Complut. C.—Grace must draw, and then people will run. Jo. 6:44 and 12:32. Phil. 3:12. S. Amb. Bossuet.—Rooms. Where there is abundance of wine and ointments. The extraordinary favours of heaven are not granted to all. Matt. 13:11. C.—Righteous. The apostles, and faithful souls, (H.) and all who form a right judgment of things, (M.) having their thoughts, works, and actions composed. T.—Black. Or brown. v. 5. H.—The Egyptians were of a less fair complexion, and she had been exposed to the sun. v. 5. C.—The synagogue gloried in her advantages; but the Gentiles being chosen by Christ, obtain the palm. Theod.—Though outwardly afflicted, the Church is inwardly fair. W.—Cedar. Or of the Arabs, who dwelt in tents, made of black goat's hair. C.—The tents of the eastern kings were equal in magnificence to our palaces. Bernier, Valle, &c.

Ver. 5. Altered. Heb. “looked upon me,” (Prot.) or “darted his rays at me.” Mont. H.—The Church of the Gentiles was quite disfigured before Christ chose it. Persecutors afterwards strove to tarnish its beauty, but in vain.—Vineyard. My face (C.) and person I have not regarded, while I was attentive to serve others. H.—Pastors, who are chosen against their will, sometimes pay so much attention to the welfare of their flock, that they neglect their own interior, and fall into small faults, which Christ will know how to excuse and pardon. Ezec. 33:2. S. Bern. ser. xxx. C.

Ver. 6. Liest. Heb. “makest thy flock to rest.” Prot. H.—Mid-day. She represents herself and her beloved as guarding flocks, which were usually driven into some shady place during the heat of the day, when the shepherds took their innocent recreations.—Wander. Sept. Prot. But marginal note has, “as one that is veiled,” which was the mark of a common woman. Gen. 38:14. The Gentile Church is eager to be guided by the one true Shepherd, and adheres to him with the greatest fervour, (C.) during the heat of persecution. Cassiod.—We ought to imitate the solicitude of the spouse, and hide ourselves under the shadow of the cross when we are tempted. Isai. 25:4. C.

Ver. 7. If. Christ comforts his Church. W.—He doubts not of her fidelity. M.—But the very insinuation, which she had made, causes him to give her this sort of rebuke. God is jealous. Ex. 34:14. He punishes the smallest faults. The spouse perceives this, and runs towards him.—Thyself. He who is ignorant of himself, must be so likewise of God, (C.) and will be sentenced to feed goats. S. Jer. ep. xxii. ad Eustoc.—Kids. Which had been detained at home. They will naturally seek their mothers. All creatures will raise the soul to God. Job 12.—Shepherds. Though in the midst of a perverse generation of idolaters and philosophers, the Church will continue steadfast. M.

Ver. 8. Company. Heb. “mare.” Such were preferred, as more gentle and swift. Pharaoh had probably made his son-in-law a present of a magnificent chariot. Theocritus (xviii.) compares the beauty of Helena to a Thessalian horse in a chariot, so that this idea is not low. Gen. 44:14. Os. 10:11. C.—Horsemen. Prot. “horses.” H.—Heb. susa. Sept. ἵπλος means also “cavalry,” as well as a mare. The Church has nothing to fear. M.

Ver. 9. As, &c. Heb. “with rows of jewels, thy neck with chains of gold.” Prot.—Sept. here read like the Vulg. c instead of b before thurim, which signifies chains, (v. 10. H.) as well as turtles. We cannot say that this bird has cheeks. C.—It is an emblem of the Church mourning, and ever true to her beloved, (Orig. &c.) who bestows a variety of graces on different people. 1 Cor. 12:4. C.

Ver. 11. While. The Church meditates on his passion and resurrection. W.—Repose. Or bed. Thus our Saviour was treated. Matt. 26:7. Lu. 7:37. C.—Odour. The virtues of the Church please him. M.—The saints, before and since his coming, pray with all earnestness. Apoc. 5:8.

Ver. 12. Abide. Heb. adds, “all night.” Christ remained nine months in the virgin’s womb. C.—The faithful discover him in both the Testaments, (H.) and meditate on his sufferings. Myrrh is a bitter but odoriferous liquor.

Ver. 13. Cyprus. A shrub with leaves like the olive-tree, and fruit growing in clusters, of a very agreeable smell. See Pliny, xii. 24. Christ has given us his sacred blood on the cross, and in the blessed Eucharist. M.

Ver. 14. Behold. Christ praiseth his spouse. W.—Doves. Sharp-sighted, and reddish. Gen. 49:12. The Holy Ghost came upon Christ in the form of a dove. Matt. 3:16. We must imitate his simplicity, (Matt. 10:16) and have a pure and single eye, or intention, (Matt. 6:22. C.) inviolably to please God. Orig.—The Church decides matters of controversy, without any mistakes. M.

Ver. 15. Behold. The spouse makes a return of praise, and thanksgiving for her repose, to Christ. W.—The corporal beauty of Solomon or of our Saviour is not fully ascertained; but their inward perfections are often proclaimed.—Flourishing. Heb. “green.” Sept. “shaded.” Est. 1:5.—This bed was the womb of the blessed Virgin, the cross, or any faithful soul. S. Bernard says it is a monastery, retired and adorned with all virtues. C.

Ver. 16. Beams. Prelates.—Rafters. Virtuous subjects. M.—Cypress. The are both odoriferous and incorruptible. The cypress has leaves from top to bottom, and grows not so large as the cedar. Pliny, xii. 17.

CANTICLE OF CANTICLES 2

Ver. 1. I am. The spouse compares herself to a lily, as she is the fairest flower on the bed, (C.) or Christ may here speak. W. Isa. 11:1. Orig.—He praises himself first, that his spouse may hear her own eulogy. M.

Ver. 2. Thorns. The bridegroom enhances the praise of his spouse. The Church, surrounded by infidels and persecutors, maintains her beauty and station. Heretics, &c. are no better than thorns. Orig. C.—The Church excels all other societies. In her communion the innocent are preferred before sinners, and among the former, the blessed Virgin surpasses all.

Ver. 3. As. The Church praises Christ, resting secure under his protection. W.

Ver. 4. Cellar. This was not under ground. Homer (Od. b. 237.) places the wine near the nuptial bed. C.—In me. Heb. “he brought me to the banquetting-house, and his banner over me was love.” Prot. H.—He has shewn me the greatest tenderness. Only the religion of Christ lays before us our duties to God, to ourselves, and neighbours. C. S. Tho. ii. 2. q. 26. H.—The holy Spirit came on the assembled disciples, who were deemed to be drunk, and Christ nourishes the pious soul with the wine of his own blood. M.

Ver. 5. Flowers. Heb. “bottles.”—Languish. Sept. “am wounded.” H.—Those who enter upon the paths of virtue, are often deprived of consolations. C.—They must support themselves by reflecting on the words and sufferings of Christ. S. Amb. ps. cxviii. ser. 5. Boss.

Ver. 6. Hand. After peace comes affliction: grace is followed by glory. Prov. 3:16. C.

Ver. 7. I. Christ permits not his Church to be persecuted, till she be able to bear it. W.—Roes. Sept. “armies and power,” the angels and apostles, who have spread the gospel through the world. It would seem that the Jewish women loved hunting, (C.) like those of Phœnicia and Lacedæmon. Æneid. i. They were going to sing, (C.) the morning epithalamium, (Theocrit. xviii.) after the first night of the marriage. The second meeting takes place, v. 8, 17. H.

Ver. 8. The. Feeling the protection of Christ, the Church preacheth boldly the truth against pagans and heretics. W.—She knows the voice of the shepherd, (Jo. 8:47 and 10:2) and keeps at a distance the wolves in sheep’s clothing, or pretended reformers, who would scatter the flock.—Hills. She sees him returning in the evening with the utmost speed of a stag, as the Heb. implies. C. 2:9 and 8:14.

Ver. 9. Hart, (Prov. 5:18) which is swifter than the dogs. Xenoph.

Cuneg.—This animal is said to destroy serpents, as Christ did the power of the devil. Theod.—Wall. Under the old law, Christ was only seen in figure. He manifested himself in the new. Yet our sins separate him from us. Is. 59:2. He is concealed in the sacred mysteries, (C.) and his humanity keeps from our sight the glory of his divinity, which alone can impart full content. S. Amb. S. Bern.—He shewed a glimpse of it at his transfiguration, and by his miracles. M.

Ver. 10. Arise. He sings under the window, to v. 16.—My dove, is taken from the Sept. C.—Christ invites his spouse to approach, though he shews not himself as yet; and orders his pastors to root out heresies. v. 12. W.—She is ever faithful, and rejoices in him. 2 Cor. 11:2. Matt. 9:15. Eph. 5:26. C.

Ver. 11. Winter. The rigour and darkness of the old law give place to that of light and love. Orig.—After persecution had ceased, pruning became more necessary. C.—The Israelites and the world were redeemed in spring, and the ceremonies of the law were abolished at the same season. M.

Ver. 12. Pruning. Prot. “singing of birds.” H.—But the former version is better. Sept. Sym. &c.—Turtle. Which returns in spring. Is. 8:9. C.—It denotes the preaching of the gospel, (S. Cyr. ador. 15.) or rather the sighs of a holy soul in exile.

Ver. 14. Rock. Wild pigeons retire thither. Varro, 3:7. Κοιλὴν εἰσεπατο πέτρην. Il. 20. Ser. xlvi. 28. C.—Holy souls seek protection in the wounds of their Saviour. S. Greg. S. Bern. ser. lxi.—Wall. In the holy Scriptures, which defend the Church. She is brought to light for the edification of all. M.

Ver. 15. Foxes. They hurt vines, (Theoc. 5.) and denote false prophets. Ezech. 13:4. S. Aug. Ps. lxxx.—For. Heb. “and our vines of Semadar.” v. 13. C.—Foxes breed in spring, and greatly infested the country. Judg. 15:4.

Ver. 16. Feedeth. “His flock.” Sept. He still retains the fragrancy of lilies. As married people are two in one flesh, (Eph. 5:31.) Christ and his Church are irrevocably united. C.—She reposes in him. W.

Ver. 17. Break. Or “yield a refreshing air,” (aspireset) in the morning, (H.) and evening, when she begs he will return, (Theod.) as she could not enjoy his company in the day-time. C. 1:1 and 4:6.—Bether. Or the lower Bethoron, near Jerusalem. These short visits in the night, shew the vicissitudes of comfort and dryness in the most perfect. Those who are still addicted to their passions, and to the world, can have no pretensions to such favours, which amply repay any passing desolation. S. Bern. ser. lxxiv. C.

CANTICLE OF CANTICLES 3

Ver. 1. Bed. The Church, finding Christ by his own revelation, and not by philosophy, holds him fast. W.—He had delayed coming at the usual hour, to give us to understand, that he is not found amid delights, nor in a crowd, but that we must seek him diligently, like Magdalene. Jo. 20. S. Amb. de Isaac.—The apostles endeavoured to convert the synagogue, but their offers were rejected, and the guards, or princes, persecuted them. M. C. 5:7. H.

Ver. 3. City. To prevent fires, &c. God will require the souls of the flock at the hands of his pastors.

Ver. 4. Me. She was perhaps dead. Women had separate apartments, to which none but the husband could have access. Gen. 24:28. At the end of the marriage-feast, the bride was conducted to her husband's house. Matt. 25:1. C.—The Jews shall in the end acknowledge Christ, (W.) as the Church desires. M.

Ver. 5. I. The bridegroom (C.) speaks as c. 2:7. (W.) and c. 8:4. He retires early.

Ver. 6. Who. The female companions of the spouse, (C.) or the bridegroom's friends, (M.) admire her at a distance. C. 6:9 and 8:5. C.—The converted Gentiles change the desert of the world into a paradise, by their good works, which ascend like a perfume. S. Greg. They admire their own conversion, and proclaim that we must fight for heaven, (W.) and adore Christ, the God-man; imitating all his virtues, (H.) and preaching his gospel. M.

Ver. 7. Bed. Being stationed at the door to prevent any alarm, v. 8. C.—In the Church Christ finds his repose, and daily produces the only heirs of heaven. Ven. Bede.—The angels, saints and pastors watch to defend it against the spirits of darkness. M.

Ver. 9. Litter. Sept. to conduct his spouse with solemnity; or a throne; though it most probably denotes the bridal bed. C.—Heb. apiron. Greek, φορεῖον.

Ver. 10. Going. Prot. “covering of it of purple.” H.—Death must be endured, if necessary, for the sake of the faith, as this is the highest degree of charity. W.—He, &c. Heb. “is prepared for the beloved above the,” &c. See Od. v. 660. C.—Prot. and Pagn. “the midst thereof being paved (Mont. set on fire) with love for (Mont. by) the daughters.” H.—The most desirable things adorn the litter, or the Church, that all may come to her, who has God to guide her decisions. M.

Ver. 11. Go. All are invited to come to Christ, who, in his sacred humanity, which he took of his mother, was crowned in heaven, after his passion. W. S. Greg. Alcuin.—The synagogue crowned him with thorns, and gave him the hard bed of the cross. S. Bern. S. Anselm, &c.—Bethsabée might live to see the marriage of her son, who owed the crown to her. 3 K. 1:18. Prov. 4:3. Both the parties were crowned, (Is. 61:10) and no doubt Solomon would display his usual magnificence. The diadem was a bandage, adorned with embroidery, and precious stones. C.

CANTICLE OF CANTICLES 4

Ver. 1. How. Christ again praises the beauty of his Church. W.—The dialogue takes place in the country. H.—From corporal beauty, which is often dangerous, and the portion of the most dissolute, we must raise our minds to spiritual advantages, which the Holy Ghost has here in view.—Within. S. Amb. “besides thy taciturnity.” Sept. “silence.” Rabbins, &c. “hair.” Prot. “within thy locks.” But what renders this version of tsammathec (H.) suspicious is, that none of the ancients knew of it, and the hair is afterwards specified. C. 6:4. Moreover, Isaias, (47:2) uses it for (C.) “turpitude,” (S. Jer.) or the parts which are usually “covered.” Sept. H.—Si qua latent, meliora putat. Met. 1500.—All the glory of the king’s daughter is within. Ps. 44:14. Modesty and silence are the best encomium. C.—The Lord praises the intention, occupations and doctrine of the Church, the twins of faith and good works; the preaching of Christ’s passion without shame, (v. 3) and the administration of the sacraments, which, like the neck, unite the members to their head; so that they become invincible, (v. 4) whether they be of Jewish or Gentile extraction, v. 5. W.—Up. Heb. and Sept. “appear.” Jerusalem was the highest part of the country; (H.) and coming up and down often means no more than coming or going. Jug. 11:3 and 15:11. C.—The hair of goats in Lycia was beautifully curled. Ælian 16:30.—Women used such false hair. Mart. xii. 45.—Though the hair be only an ornament, it is not to be neglected; so the pious Christian will always treat with respect the ceremonies established chiefly for the instruction of the ignorant. C.—Those simple and fervent souls, by their numbers, adorn the Church, as hair does the body. S. Greg.—The external and internal perfections of the spouse deserve commendation. M.

Ver. 2. Them. Those who lay aside the old man, and receive baptism, are filled with grace, to bring forth the fruits of virtue. S. Aug. Doct. ii. 6.—Pastors in particular, must lay aside worldly cares, and attend to their flocks. M.

Ver. 3. Scarlet. Preachers of the gospel (S. Greg.) must speak with elegance, and have their lips dyed with the blood of Christ, and purified with coals from the altar. C.—So, if we may use the words of a living critic, who is sometimes accurate, “a commentator ought to study at the foot of his crucifix, and write with ink drawn from the heart of Jesus.” H.—Pomegranate. Plump and ruddy, representing the purity of the Church, and of virgins, who are its “flower,” (S. Cyp.) and bring forth fruits of good works. S. Aug. de Virg.

Ver. 4. Bulwarks. Heb. Thalpiyoth, “at the height of the defiles,” probably in Libanus, when David conquered Syria. Thalassar, Thelmela, &c. were such “heights.” Bucklers, to be used in case of need, or for ornament. Thus the neck of the spouse was adorned with chains and pearls. The Church is this tower, the pillar of truth, 1 Tim. 3. Matt. 16:18. Apostles and prelates are her bucklers.

Ver. 5. Roes. This comparison does not seem happy: but exactitude is not required. C.—Indeed if we were to take all in the literal sense, a very grotesque figure would arise, with a head like Carmel, a nose like a tower, &c. which shews that the tropological or allegorical sense must be adopted. D.—The two Testaments given for our instruction, (c. 1:2) or the charity towards God and our neighbour, may be meant. Theod.

Ver. 6. Retire. In the morning, (Sanct.) or rather the bridegroom takes his leave early, promising to return in the evening. C. 2:17. C.—Myrrh. To Calvary, where the fervent will pour forth their prayers, and learn mortification. C.—Christ dwells in mortified and devout minds.

Ver. 7. Thee. All must be pure before they enter heaven, as the blessed Virgin was on earth, (W.) and the Church is still. Eph. 5:27. C.—Before his departure, Christ heaps praises on her.

Ver. 8. Thou. Heb. “look from.”—Libanus. So Jerusalem is called, Zac. 11:3. Ribera. M.—Amana. Sept. “faith.” By it and charity, we must do good. S. Aug. Ps. lxxvii. Amanus separates Cilicia from Syria.—Sanir is the name given by the Phenicians to Hermon, (Eusebius) beyond the Jordan. 1 Par. 5:23.—Leopards. It is not fit for women to hunt such beasts. Ovid (Met. x. 10.) thus speaks of Venus: Nuda genu, vestemque ritu succincta Dianæ, &c. The Church leaves Jerusalem to preach the gospel without fear. M.

Ver. 9. Wounded. Symmachus, “given.” Sept. Prot. “ravished.” Mystic writers suppose, that the spouse had been guilty of some negligence; or, on the contrary, that her deportment was most enchanting, bent on God, and on good works. C.—Sister. So Assuerus styles himself brother of Esther. 15:12. Christ died for the unity of his Church. M.

Ver. 10. Spices. He returns her compliment. C. 1:2.

Ver. 11. Lips. Teachers who accommodate their instructions to the capacity of their audience, (C.) giving milk to children. Heb. 5:13. H. 1 Cor. 3:2.—In allusion, perhaps, to this passage, (C.) it was customary to give milk and honey to the new baptized. Tert. coron.—Garments. Which were perfumed, (Gen. 27:17. Ps. 44:9) and imply good works, (2 Cor. 5:3. Rom. 13:14. C.) and the external service and prayers of the Church, which ascend like incense. Ps. 140:2. M.

Ver. 12. Up. She is perfectly chaste. Prov. 5:14. The Church excludes from her society all unbelievers and schismatics. The wicked serve to exercise the virtuous. Her pastors explain the Scriptures, the fountains of saving knowledge. C.—Christ is also a fountain. Zac. 13:1 and Jo. 7:37. M.

Ver. 13. Plants. The various orders of clergy and laity.—Cyprus, (c. 1:13. C.) whence a healing oil is extracted. Theod.—Prot. “camphire.” H.—Spikenard is twice mentioned, as it may be well mixed with cyprus and saffron. M.

Ver. 14. Cinnamon. Very rare. Ex. 30:23.—Libanus, or “incense.” Heb.

Ver. 15. Libanus. The law of the gospel was proclaimed by the apostles, who were Jews. They explained the pure doctrine of the Scriptures, and converted many.

Ver. 16. Wind. At different times. Let all nations be convinced of thy beauty. C.—The holy Spirit enabled the apostles to convert the world. Nys. Rupert.—All temptations, whether proceeding from cruelty or deceit, “make constant souls more grateful to God.” W.

Ver. 1. Apple-trees. The spouse, submitting to God's will, is content to suffer. W.—She addresses her beloved, and as he had praised her, under the similitude of a delightful garden, she invites him into it. C.—I, &c. Christ again approves of her patience, and invites the saints to congratulate with her. W.—He always hears his Church. Matt. 28:20. Mark 11:24. C.—The saints had prayed for Christ's coming; and, accordingly, (Is. 58:9) he takes flesh of the most pure virgin. S. Athan. Synop.—Comb. Sept. "bread."—Milk. Chal. "white wine." But (C.) mile and wine may be taken together. Clem. Pæd. i. 6.—The chaste delights of retired and penitent souls are thus described: (C.) Dulciores sunt lacrymæ orantium quam gaudia theatrorum. S. Aug. Ps. cxxviii. "The tears of penitents are the wine of angels, because in them is the odour of life." S. Bern. ser. 30.—Inebriated. Not so as to lose reason. Gen. 43:34. C.—Prot. marg. "be drunk with loves." H. Prov. 5:19 and 7:18. This wine of love, is the blessed Eucharist, which maketh virgins to spring forth, (Zac. 9:17) and is a foretaste of heaven. Ps. 35:9. It makes us forget the old man, (C.) and raise the mind to God. S. Cyp. ep. 63.—To this feast Christ invites his disciples. Matt. 26 and 1 Cor. 11. M.—Myrrh. Implies that they must be mortified. H.

Ver. 2. Knocking. The spouse had retired to rest, as her beloved delayed longer than usual. But love is ever on the watch. C.—She wished to meditate, but is called upon to assist others, and excited by Christ's own example. W.—Dew. Having been out in the evening, preceding this fourth night. This denotes imperfect Christians, who remain, indeed, attached to the head, but are a disgrace to it, by their scandalous lives. S. Aug. tr. 37 in Jo. S. Greg. C.—Such was the state of many in the days of Luther, who accordingly joined the first reformers. See Philips's Life of Card. Pole. p. 364. H.—Nights. Anacreon (ode 1.) has something similar. Christ knocks by his inspirations and chastisements, and he is better heard in the night of tribulation. Apoc. 3:20. C.—Heretics began to blaspheme Christ, after the Church had only enjoyed a short peace, (M.) after the ten persecutions.

Ver. 3. Garment. By this is designated the tunic, which was undermost. H.—Feet. People in that climate had their feet bare in the house, and even on journies only wore sandals: so that frequent washing was requisite. Gen. 18:4 and 1 Tim. 5:10. These excuses were vain, and Christ would not regard them. Matt. 25:1. Lu. 12:35. Theod. C.—The care of souls brings on many external occupations, which contemplative men would decline. S. Greg. M.

Ver. 4. Touch. Of me, (Cassiod.) or rather of the door or window. I was grieved that I had made him wait so long. C.—Heb. "were moved for him." Prot. marg. "or (as some read) in me." Pagnin prefers this; Sept. and Mont. the former explanation of halaiv. H.—Grace moves us to begin and prosecute good works. S. Greg. Nyssen. Theod.—Christ gives it more abundantly, to make the champions of the Church contend with adversity. M.

Ver. 5. Arose. The Church employs herself in active life, still retaining a desire to return to contemplation. v. 8. W.

Ver. 8. Love. She seems insensible to the insults received. C.—The Church prays to the saints on earth, and in heaven. M.

Ver. 10. Ruddy. Or shining. Et color in niveo corpore purpureus. The divine and human nature, or the conception and sufferings of Christ are thus described. C.—The spouse gives this admirable description of her beloved. H.

Ver. 11. Gold. God is the head of Christ, (1 Cor. 11:3) and is most pure. N.—The guards of Solomon were powdered with gold dust. Jos. Ant.—Branches. Elatae, or fruits of the male palm-tree. Theod. Plin. xiii. 4.

Ver. 13. Set by. Prot. "as sweet flowers."—Choice. Lit. "the first." v. 5. H.—The modesty and words of Christ excited admiration. 1 Pet. 2:21. Jo. 7:46. C.—He exhorted sinners to repent, and rebuked the obstinate. M.

Ver. 14. Hyacinths. Or purple veins. C.—Prot. "hands are as gold rings set with the beryl." Heb. "full of Tharsis," (H.) or precious stones, (M.) from that country, (Ex. 28) with which his rings were ornamented. C.—Sapphires. His belt or garment is thus ornamented. Sanchez.—The works of Christ proceeded from his infinite charity for mankind, whose salvation he greatly desired, (Mar. 7:37 and 1 Cor. 15:22 and 1 Tim. 2:4) so that none can perish but by their own fault. C.

Ver. 16. Lovely. Heb. and Sept. "desires." M.—The beauty of Christ is chiefly interior; and all must aim at this perfection, who would be his spouses. Ps. 44:3. C.

Ver. 17. Seek. The fervent resolve to seek Christ, wherever he may be. W.—His praises excite many to love him. M.

CANTICLE OF CANTICLES 6

Ver. 1. Lilies. The church teaches, that God is delighted with the pious desires and works of the faithful. W.—She answers the question which had been put to her. C.—God associates lilies, or the perfect, to his angels. He “feeds his flock,” and “is fed,” on works of piety, as Heb. and Sept. imply both. M.

Ver. 2. Beloved. She speaks thus, when she finds him, and runs to his embraces, having found what trouble her neglect had occasioned. C.

Ver. 3. Thou. Christ again commends his Church, which is well composed of distinct orders, some governing, others retired from the world, and the rest exercising works of mercy, amid its troubles, who altogether form a complete army, terrible to all her enemies. W.—Jerusalem. Which was then one of the finest cities in the east. C. The Catholic Church resembles the heavenly Jerusalem. Theod.—Terrible. So great is the power of love, (Rom. 8:35) in the martyrs, and of the Church, against infidels! C.—She is lovely to Christ, and terrible to the wicked. Even her spouse is wounded by her glance. M.

Ver. 4. Turn. The more one contemplates God’s majesty, the more he will be convinced that it is incomprehensible. W.—To pry into mysteries, may cause Christ to retire. Theod. &c.

Ver. 7. Number. The true pastors are numerous, but hirelings more so. The faithful are innumerable, and all are united in the same faith. W.—The spouse and the queens represent the more perfect; the concubines, or wives of inferior degree, those who are led by fear; and the maidens, such as are languid and negligent. Orig.—The Roman Church is at the head of all metropolitan, episcopal, and parochial Churches. H.

Ver. 9. Who. The companions of the spouse, (C.) or the synagogue, admire the Christian Church. W.—Morning. Aurora. The Church dissipated the darkness of paganism; she appeared as the moon under persecution, and as the sun, after the conversion of Constantine. C.—The like will happen in the days of antichrist. Ven. Bede.—The religion of the patriarchs may be compared to the morning-star: that of Moses, to the moon; and of Christ, to the sun. M.

Ver. 11. Aminadab. The devil, (Theod.) or probably some renowned general. Aquila explains it “of the people’s leader,” (C.) or “munificent one.” Mont.—I knew not what forced me to flee with such speed, as if I had been panic-struck, (C.) or the spouse professes that she knew not that he had retired into the garden of nuts, or she would not have been under apprehensions of his being ill-treated by Aminadab, as Christ was by Pilate. M.

CANTICLE OF CANTICLES 7

Ver. 1. What? Christ commends the Jews, who shall at last embrace the faith with great fervour. W.—Thou. Heb. and Sept. “ye.” They join this sentence with the preceding chapter. H.—Companies. Heb. “as it were the choir (or dance) of Mahanaim,” (C.) where Jacob saw the camps of angels, near the Jaboc. H. Gen. 32.—These dances might be proverbial.

Ver. 4. Ivory. Preachers communicate the sentiments of the Church, (C.) which prevails against the gates of hell. Cassiod.

Ver. 5. Carmel. Shaded with trees. C.—Heb. “purple,” which colour was sometimes given to the hair. Propert. ii. 18.—Channels. Of the dyers. Heb. “to beams.” C.—Prot. “the king is held in the galleries” to view thee. H.—Christ was all charity, and the faithful are twice dyed, with the love of God, and of their neighbour. M.

Ver. 7. Grapes. The Church triumphs over her adversaries, and feeds her children. C.

Ver. 8. Up. Christ shed his blood on the cross, and enabled his Church, composed of Jews and Gentiles, who were before barren, to produce a numerous progeny. C.—Mouth. Heb. and Sept. “nose.”

Ver. 9. Lips. Sept. “sufficient for my lips and teeth.” H.—The wine in that country was very thick, when kept a long time. It here denotes charity, or the gospel truths. Lu. 5:37. Acts 2:13. Heb. “causing the lips of them who sleep to speak,” (C.) as the apostles did, in transports of zeal. Theod.—Yet the reading of the Sept. Aquila, &c. seems preferable. C.

Ver. 10. Turning. The Church is submissive to Jesus Christ, and is entirely actuated by the Spirit. C.—She takes the words, as it were out of his mouth, (v. 9) and answers, worthy, &c. acknowledging that all the praise belongs to him.

Ver. 11. Villages. She begs that he would come and remain with her. W.—She accompanies him into the country, on the morning after the fifth night. There Christ affords the purest delights, (v. 12. C.) and the Church (M.) becomes his mother, while she instructs and feeds others. S. Greg. hom. M.

Ver. 13. Mandrakes. Heb. dodai comes from the same root as dodi, “my breasts or loves.” v. 12. H.—It may denote oranges, as mandrakes are not spring-fruits. Gen. 30:14. C.—Yet (H.) married women eagerly sought after mandrakes. Here they may signify such as are fit to gain souls to Christ. M.—And the old. Or great abundance. Lev. 26:10. Matt. 13:52. C.—She acknowledges Christ to be the Saviour of all, under the Old and the New Testament. W.—A doctor of the Church shews Christ in the prophets, and figures of the law, as well as manifested in the gospel. Aponius, &c. C.

CANTICLE OF CANTICLES 8

Ver. 1. Mother. The synagogue continues to pray for Christ's coming. W.—Her request has been heard, and He has assumed our nature; so that we may receive from him all the marks of tenderness, and none but the carnal will shew any signs of contempt. The spouse wishes to manifest her love without restraint, and to be delivered from the shame of sterility, (C.) or the Church desires to see Christ in heaven, and to praise him. M.

Ver. 2. Teach me economy, on which subject Xenophon represents the newly married entertaining themselves.—Wine. Mar. 15:23. Os. 14:8. Nectar was of this description, (C.) being composed of wine, honey, and odoriferous flowers. The best was made at Babylon. Athen. i. 25. and ii. 2.—These liquors intimate all the virtues, which Christ has taught; the practice of which affords him the greatest satisfaction. Jo. 14:23. They are best learnt in retirement, (C.) and from our great teacher. Mic. 4:2. M.

Ver. 4. Jerusalem. Sept. add, “by the armies and powers of the field,” as c. 2:7 and 3:5. H.—The spouse presently awakes after the sixth night, and goes out. C.—Christ admonishes all not to disturb those who would serve him. W.

Ver. 5. Flowing. Thus speak the companions of the spouse; and the bridegroom, turning to her alone, reminds her of an adventure. The Jews would put this in the mouth of the spouse. C.—Corrupted. Heb. and Sept. “fell in labour, there she was delivered who bore thee.” H.—Christ redeemed Eve, who had been seduced to eat the forbidden fruit, and by his sacred blood on the cross, awoke and healed our fallen nature. C.—The court of heaven admires the Church of the Gentiles, and every pious soul ascending from this world, particularly the blessed Virgin. The synagogue was corrupt, when she called for the death of the Son of God, and said, His blood be upon us, &c. We have no king but Cæsar. W.—Grace must go before, that our free-will may also walk forward. M.

Ver. 6. Arm. Working by charity. Gal. 5:6. H.—Women in the east imprint what they like most on their bosom and arms, or carry bracelets and gems on those parts, with similar inscriptions. Os. 2:2. Is. 3:20. S. Clem. Pæd. ii. 11.—Christ must live in us. C.—Tota ejus species exprimatur in nobis. S. Amb. Isaac viii.—Jealousy. That is, zealous and burning love. Ch.—Hell. Or the grave, which subdues all. Love is a violent passion. C.—Nullus liber erit, si quis amare velit. Prop. ii.—Christ gave his life to redeem mankind, and the martyrs have joyfully endured torments and death, to evince their love. C.—Flames. Heb. “a flame of God,” or most vehement. H.

Ver. 7. Drown it. As other fires may be extinguished. He who sinks under persecution, has not real charity. Temptation does not weaken a person, but shews what he is. Ecclus. 34:9. C.—He shall. Worldlings will ridicule his parting with temporal delights, for those which do not appear: but the true lover will make no account of the former. C.

Ver. 8. Our sister. Christ styles the Church his own and the synagogue’s sister, promising her many benefits. W.—The relations of the spouse wish to have her married, though she seemed young. Ezech. 16:7.—Spoken to, concerning marriage, or its consummation. Gen. 34:6. Dan. 13:57. C.—The synagogue had but few to give her proper instructions. M.—But Christ would provide her, if she were not wanting to herself. H.

Ver. 9. Cedar. Procuring for her a rich and steady husband to protect her. These are the words of the bridegroom. The Christian Church seemed weak at first. But her pastors and martyrs caused her to triumph over all the powers of hell. C.—Those who correspond with the first grace, are furnished with others. M.

Ver. 11. The. The bridegroom, in the character of a countryman, asserts that he would not give his vineyard or spouse (C.) for all the king’s riches.

Ver. 12. Before me. I am satisfied with my spouse.—The peaceable. Heb. and Sept. “Solomon.” H.—Retain them, and also pay the keepers their wages. I envy not all the treasures of the world; nor would put them in competition with my vineyard, or spouse. The synagogue of Moses and Solomon degenerated, while the Church of Christ has continued faithful, and has always some good workmen. S. Greg. Ven. Bede, &c. C.

Ver. 13. Hearken. The seventh morning is come, and I must depart to the mountains. C. 2:17 and 4:6. Christ, before his ascension, exhorts his Church to present her petitions. He is always ready to hear her, and to grant her aid, in every emergency. See S. Amb. de Virg. xvi. 99. —The virtuous pray that her requests may be granted, (H.) and are eager to know what they are. M.

Ver. 14. Flee. The Church consents that her beloved should ascend to heaven, as he still remains with her. Ven. Bede. S. Bern. ser. ix. Qui habitat. C.—The whole Church militant requests that he would ascend thither, for the good of all his servants, begging for an abundant supply of grace, that we may ascend the high mountains of perfect charity, and zeal for God's honour; and that eh would make our souls such hills and gardens, adorned with all the flowers and fruits of virtue, in which he may vouchsafe to dwell. Amen. W.—Flee to heaven, and draw me with thee. C. 1:4. M.

WISDOM

THE BOOK OF WISDOM

INTRODUCTION

This book is so called, because it treats of the excellence of Wisdom, the means to obtain it, and the happy fruits it produces. It is written in the person of Solomon, and contains his sentiments. But is is uncertain who was the writer. It abounds with instructions and exhortations to kings and magistrates to administer justice in the commonwealth, teaching all kinds of virtues under the general names of justice and wisdom. It contains also many prophecies of Christ's coming, passion, resurrection, and other Christian mysteries. The whole may be divided into three parts: In the six first chapters, the author admonishes all superiors to love and exercise justice and wisdom. In the next three, he teacheth that wisdom proceedeth only from God, and is procured by prayer, and a good life. In the other ten chapters, he sheweth the excellent effects, and utility of wisdom and justice. Ch.—Their authority is surely greater than that of the Jews, (C.) whom Prot. choose to follow. H.—Before they attack us, they must, however, answer this prescription. C.—S. Iræn. Clem. Alex. Origen, S. Athan. &c. attribute this book to Solomon; and, though S. Jerom and S. Aug.

call this in question, they maintain its divine authority. Sometimes the Fathers abstain from urging it against the Jews, because they reject it, for the same reason as our Saviour proved the immortality of the soul, against the Sadducees, from the books of Moses alone, though other texts might have been adduced. The Councils of Carthage, 419, Florence, Trent, &c. declare this book canonical, (W.) agreeably to the ancient Fathers. S. Aug. Præd. xiv. and de Civ. Dei. xvii. 20. &c.—Philo (S. Jer.) the elder, (W. M.) one of the Sept. (Geneb.) might compile this work from the sentences of Solomon, preserved by tradition, as Sirach's son did that of Ecclesiasticus; (W.) or it is styled "Solomon's Wisdom," (Sept. H.) on account of its resembling his works, in like manner as the Second of Kings is called Samuel's, though he wrote none of that book. W.—Sixtus (Bib. viii. hæ. ix.) and others, maintain, that this was written originally in Heb. and some think by Solomon; being translated by the Sept. But these go too far. C.—The nine first chapters seem, however, to be the production of Solomon, though the latter may have been added by the Greek translator, (Houbigant) who must, therefore, have been divinely inspired. H.—The sentiments are very grand, (C.) and contain a prediction of the sufferings of the just one, whence we may infer, that the name of the author was originally in the title, like that of all other prophets. The arguments which Calmet adduces, to prove that Solomon was not the author of the first part of this work, may easily be refuted. In the New Testament, that part is frequently quoted, whence we may gather, that it was allowed to be the work of Solomon. Houbig. præf. p. 176.—Some style this work Panaretos, as being an exhortation to all virtues. C.—All the five sapiential books (Prov. &c.) are cited under the title of Wisdom in the mass-book. Superiors are here admonished to act with justice, and taught that wisdom is to be obtained by prayer, and by a good life. C. 9. Its effect and utility (W.) form the subject of the latter part. See Apocrypha, vol. i. p. 597. H.

WISDOM 1

Ver. 1. Goodness. Entertain just sentiments of the Deity, and avoid all duplicity. This truth is placed in the strongest light in the five first chapters, or preface.

Ver. 3. Unwise. He shews that their wisdom is all folly, and that they cannot withstand his power. C.—There are mortal sins of thought. W.

Ver. 4. Subject. Or “enslaved to sin.” H.—Soul and body are intimately connected, so that the actions of one defile the other, and banish wisdom.

Ver. 5. Discipline. The instructive light of the Holy Ghost.—
Understanding. Those who deny God or Providence, (C.) and lead a wicked life, are abandoned. H.—Not abide. Ελεγχθῆσεται: “He shall be connected or manifested,” shewing that he will not acquit the guilty, v. 6. M.—When Solomon fell, his wisdom ceased. Iniquity soon betrays itself. C.

Ver. 7. That. S. Aug. reads hic, “this who,” more correctly than hoc, as it refers to the spirit, (C.) which having made and filled all things, must be perfectly acquainted with every action. H.

Ver. 10. Jealousy. God is strong and jealous. Ex. 20. C.—He examines the smallest deviation from the paths of rectitude. H.

Ver. 12. Seek not with such eagerness (zelare) your own ruin, (C.) by an evil life, (W.) or rather thrown not the blame on death, as if you were necessitated to sin. God created man to be immortal.

Ver. 14. Health. Good. Gen. 1:31. C.—Poison, or medicine, (W.) medicamentum. W.—Poison and wild beasts become noxious to man only after sin. It is this which infects the veins. All may derive an antidote from Jesus Christ.

Ver. 16. It. Sept. αὐτον.—Death. The wicked strive M. to draw upon themselves the second death (C.) as they will not repent. W. Is. 28:15. H.

WISDOM 2

Ver. 1. Right. He shews how the wicked brought death into the world, and expresses the sentiments of the epicureans, as in Ecclesiastes. The six first chapters are a sort of paraphrase of the nine first of Proverbs, in which the attractions of virtue and of pleasure are contrasted, &c. C.—Remedy. Lit. “refreshment.” Sept. “healing.”—Hell, or the grave. H.—They reject as fabulous, the accounts of people being raised to life by miracle. C.—They suppose that the soul is mortal, and that there is neither reward nor punishment after death. W.

Ver. 2. Nothing. Sept. “by chance.” The epicureans imagined that the first man was produced by the conflux of atoms. Lucret. i. 5. C.—

Smoke, or vanishes like it.—And speech. Budæus would substitute “a little spark.”—Speech may be used for “thing.” Our life is something like a spark. M.—Speech is an effect of the rational soul, as a spark comes from fire. C.

Ver. 5. Sealed, like one in the tomb. Matt. 27:66. The epicureans were well convinced of the fragility of our nature: but they drew false inferences from it, pretending that we should enjoy ourselves now, as there will be no future life. This they ought to have proved. C.

Ver. 6. Come. From the disbelief of future rewards and punishments proceeds the epicure’s life. W.

Ver. 7. Time. Sept. Alex. “of spring.” H.—Youth is the spring of life. The voluptuous conclude, from the transitory nature of things, that we should make use of them. Would it not be more rational to despise them? C.

Ver. 11. Worth. Strange maxims! which few will dare to proclaim, though they act according to them. C.

Ver. 12. Just. Infidels are not content to live in riot: they also persecute the just. W.—This passage points out the conduct of the Jews towards our Saviour, in so striking a manner, that Grotius would assert it has been altered by some Christian. But the Fathers adduce it as a clear prediction (C.) of the Jewish malice. Matt. 27:41. Mar. 14:53. W.

Ver. 13. Knowledge. The prophets spoke to sinners in the name of God, and many of them lost their lives in the cause. Christ appeared as a new star, to promote their welfare; yet this only serves to irritate them. C. Jo. 8:16.

Ver. 20. Words. Or he shall be punished for what he has said. Syr. Vat. &c. Matt. 26:61. C.—We shall hence form a judgment of his real merits, (M.) unless this be spoken ironically; as if the just had foolishly flattered himself with the divine protection. Matt. 27:43. H.

Ver. 22. Secrets. The disbelief of mysteries leads to a dissolute life, and to the persecution of the just. W.—The pagans knew not the advantages of suffering, and even the apostles were ignorant of the mystery of the cross, till after the resurrection. C.

Ver. 24. Envy. Lucifer thought that the honour of the hypostatic union (C.) belonged to the angelic, rather than to the human nature; and this he was guilty of envy, (H.) and strove to become like the most High. Is. 14:14. S. Bern. ser. xvii. in Cant. Corn. A. Lap. &c.

WISDOM 3

Ver. 1. Of death, is not in Sept. During life the just are protected by God, (Lu. 12:7) and still more in death. This passage is very applicable to martyrs. C.—Temporal death is to the just the road to happiness, where they shall not incur damnation, or the torment of death. Though the martyrs seem to be utterly destroyed, they pass to joys eternal and unspeakable. W.

Ver. 2. Die. In this the wicked are not under a mistake; but they err when they suppose that the just shall be no more. If the hopes of the pious were confined to this world, they would be the most miserable of all. 1 Cor. 15:19. C.

Ver. 6. Holocaust. The sufferings (M.) which they have voluntarily endured, cause them to be pleasing to God. H. Zac. 13:9.—Time of judgment, or of death. C.—Sept. “at the time of their visitation, they shall shine, and,” &c. 5:7. Matt. 13:43. H. Zac. 12:6.

Ver. 8. Judge. All the just shall approve of God’s condemning the wicked. W.—They shall be invested with power, (Apoc. 2:26. Matthew 19:28) which, like that of Christ, will be of a spiritual nature, (H.) and will appear most terrible at the last day. Matt. 28:18. Apoc. 19:6. C.

Ver. 9. Elect. Sept. add, “and a visitation for his saints.” Charity secures both faith and hope; which, without it, are unavailing to happiness. H.—Those who have the virtue of hope, will await the completion of God’s promises.

Ver. 12. Foolish. Dissolute, as the sequel shews. Prov. 9:13. Rom. 1:26. The family of the wicked imitate his conduct, and become his torment. C.—This is often the case. In the moral sense, the sensuality and works of the impious are corrupt. W.

Ver. 13. Barren. The Jews deemed this a reproach. But it is better than to have children by a crime. M.—Fruit. Her good works shall serve instead of children for her glory, at the hour of death.

Ver. 16. Perfection. Lit. “shall be in consummation,” or wholly destroyed. H.—They shall not come to age, or Sept. “initiated.” The pagans excluded the base-born from their mysteries, as the Church does from holy orders; and experience shews, that the fruits of adultery are often miserable, (C.) and while they imitate their parents, they can have no hope. v. 18.

Ver. 18. Trial. Lit. “of knowing” (H.) the works of all. The crime of adulterers is not imputed to their offspring; and it sometimes happens, that the children of saints are cast away.

WISDOM 4

Ver. 1. Glory. The offspring of the chaste is happy, (C.) and honourable: (H.) very different from that of adulterers. C.—Bodily chastity is a great virtue; but purity of faith is more requisite to please God, being the foundation of all virtues. W.

Ver. 2. Itself. Virtue extorts the esteem even of worldlings. Antiochus wept for Onias. 2 Mac. 4:37. C.—Sublatum ex oculis quærimus invidi. Hor. iii. od. 24.—Conflicts. In the cause of continence. C.

Ver. 3. Slips. Vitulamina, a word, to which the people were so habituated, that it could not be altered. S. Aug. de Doct. xii.—Yet some read better (C.) plantationes. S. Bonav. Lyran.—The offspring of the unchaste will not prosper. C. 3:16.

Ver. 6. Beds. Lit. “sleep,” somnis, ὑπνω. C. 7:2. H.—Whether the children live or die, they are a reproach to their parents, as those who see them enquire about their birth.

Ver. 7. Death. He is always ready; but dies in his youth. C.—Whenever death comes, it is for his advantage, and if he depart in his youth, his immaculate life is to be preferred before the old age of the wicked. v. 16. W.

Ver. 11. Away. Like Enoch. Gen. 5:24. Heb. 11:5. C.—“Bad conversations corrupt the best manners.” 1 Cor. 15:33. Is. 57:1. But could not God have supported the just under temptation? Undoubtedly. His judgments are unsearchable. S. Aug. de Præd. xiv. C.—The holy doctor thence proves, that those who die in a just state, might have forfeited it, if they had lived longer. God knew this possibility, and that it would not take place, and his foreknowledge agrees with man’s free-will, which some, inclining to Pelagianism, would controvert. They objected to this authority: and he was therefore obliged to prove that the book of Wisdom is canonical. Ib. W.

Ver. 12. Bewitching. Thus the pleasures and goods of the world are well described. For as fascination consists in a delusion of the people, who suppose that their senses are deceived by vain appearances; so it is the mistake of worldlings to believe that the objects of their desires are real goods, and contain no danger.

Ver. 19. Speechless. The damned shall have no excuse, being condemned by their own conscience, (W.) which shall be instead of a thousand witnesses. M.—In three words, three different punishments are specified.

Ver. 20. Against. Conscience will condemn or acquit those who have no other law. Rom. 2:15. C.

WISDOM 5

Ver. 1. Then. At the day of judgment. The just and the reprobate know each other's condition. Lu. 16:20.—Labours. Defrauding them of their wages, (Lev. 19:13) or plundering them. Sept. “despised, (C.) or frustrated his labours.” H.—Worldlings deride those who strive to obtain the goods of eternity, (C.) and think they labour in vain. W.

Ver. 3. Within. Or among themselves.—Repenting. In despair.—Reproach. We diverted ourselves with turning them to ridicule. C.—This change of sentiment (H.) proceeds not from the love of virtue, and is useless. W.

Ver. 5. God. As they styled themselves truly, through the merits of Christ. C. 2:18.

Ver. 6. Understanding in not in the Rom. (C.) or the Alex. copy. H.—Some read “of justice.” Ephes. 5:11. C.

Ver. 9. Post. Sept. “fame.”—

*Fama malum quo non aliud velocius ullum.
Mobilitate viget, viresque acquirit eundo.* Æn. iv.

Ver. 13. Virtue. How quickly passes the life of man, (Prov. 30:18) and how few leave behind them a good reputation! Many of those whose actions are recorded in history, were falsely admired, (C.) and indeed the scourges of mankind. H.

Ver. 14. Such, &c. This is not in the original; but supplied to complete the sense, (C.) as otherwise the following remarks would seem to be the confession of the damned in hell, (H.) or before the judgment-seat. Castro.—The past time is used to shew the certainty of the event. W.

Ver. 15. Dust. Sept. Ps. 1:4. Lit. “like the tender beard, (H.) or wool.” Lanugo. C.

Ver. 16. Care. Lit. “thought.” H.—God thinks and provides for them.

Ver. 17. Crown. The Scripture thus represents the glory of the blessed, because there is nothing more desirable than independence. But the happiness of the elect will be to throw their crowns at the foot of God’s throne, (Apoc. 7:10. C.) in whom they find every advantage. S. Aug. ser. i. de vit. apost.

Ver. 18. Armour. Sept. “he will take zeal, his complete armour.” H.—See Is. 59:17. Eph. 6:16. C.—The misery of the damned is unchangeable. W.

Ver. 21. Unwise. “As we have sinned in all, we are wounded by every thing.” S. Greg. hom. 25. Ev.

Ver. 22. Directly. Straight to the mark. M.

Ver. 23. Casting. He alludes to the ballista, used to throw stones. Jos. 10:11. These comparisons shew the power of God over all nature. C.

WISDOM 6

Ver. 1. Wisdom, &c. This is not in Greek, and seems out of its place, being taken from Prov. 16:32 or Eccles. 9:16. C.—The connection with the preceding is observable in the next verse. H.

Ver. 2. Kings. The author puts these words in the mouth of Solomon to give them greater weight, (C.) or rather (H.) as the inspiration of God is the most unexceptionable authority, and it would be of no service to introduce a false personage speaking; these nine first chapters were written by Solomon, though the original has since disappeared. This has been the case with respect to the original text of Tobias and Judith, (Houbigant) as well as to that of the many canticles and parables which Solomon wrote. H.

Ver. 4. Power. All power is from God, and to be respected, even though the magistrate should sometimes abuse his authority. W. Rom. 13:1.—They must render an account to the common master. 2 Par. 19:6.

Ver. 6. Rule. How severely did God chastise Moses, David, and Ezechias.

Ver. 7. Little, and ignorant. Those in power ought to know, and to perform their duty.

Ver. 8. Equally. In proportion to their exigencies, or he punishes all as they deserve. It is not clear that he speaks of grace, as the Pelagians would assert, (C.) abusing this passage. See S. Aug. ep. cvi. or clxxxvii.

Ver. 9. Mighty. This cannot be too often inculcated, (v. 6) lest the great should forget God and themselves. C.—Each must render an account of his charge, and be punished accordingly if he offend. S. Greg. hom. ix. Evang. W.

Ver. 10. Kings. Sept. “tyrants.” But this title was nor formerly odious.

Ver. 11. Just. Sept. “holy.” The Jewish judges were generally priests. —Answer. The sovereign judge, to whom Job and David confidently appeal.

Ver. 13. Seek her. With the assistance of divine grace. Deut. 30:11. Rom. 10:6. The advantages of wisdom invite us to seek her. C.

Ver. 15. Door. Ready to introduce herself. H. Prov. 1:20 and 8:34 and 9:1.)

Ver. 16. Think. With eager desire to be guided by her maxims. C.

Ver. 17. Providence. To facilitate our just designs. Prov. 9. M.—She is on the watch to save us. H.

Ver. 18. Discipline. We must begin with a sincere desire of instruction, and submit to correction, (C.) if we would come near to God, v. 20. H. —Wisdom is attained by this gradation. W.

Ver. 21. Everlasting is not in Greek. Wisdom conducts to the throne, (v. 22. C.) which shall last for ever. H.—The sense of the Vulg. is very just. C. 5:17.

Ver. 24. Now. The pagans attributed the invention of wisdom to Socrates, or to Pythagoras. But she proceeds from the bosom of God, and was practised long before their times.

Ver. 25. Envy. I will not imitate such. C. 7:13. Wisdom ought to be diffused. C.

Ver. 26. World. The wicked is ransomed and healed by the wise. Philo.

WISDOM 7

Ver. 1. Myself. Solomon acquired wisdom, and all others may do it.

Ver. 6. Out. Augustus asked a little before his death: "Have we acted our part (personæ) well enough?" Suet.—Life is like a stage; before and after which, all are equal.

Ver. 7. Wherefore, as I had no advantage over others naturally, I asked for the wisdom requisite to fill so important an office. 3 K. 9:10. C.—Solomon, whose sayings are here recorded, prayed for wisdom. W.

Ver. 8. Preferred. I did not ask for extensive dominions, &c. C.—In Prov. 8:10. &c. as well as here, some things refer to the uncreated, and others to created wisdom. M.

Ver. 13. Not. Eccclus. 20:32. Matt. 25:25. Such disinterestedness deserves to be imitated by all the learned. C. 6:25.

Ver. 14. God. Coming near to him. C. 6:20 and 1 Cor. 6:16. The wise do not seek for glory; but it follow them.

Ver. 15. Would. With sincerity, and in a sententious and captivating manner. 3 K. 9:24. C.—Thoughts. Præsumere has this meaning. H.—Presumption is far removed from true wisdom. Solomon manifested his greatness of soul by his buildings, and wise regulations.

Ver. 18. Times. Or "things." S. Amb. Abr. ii. 7.—Times past, present, and future, (Orig. hom. xxi.) or the three seasons;; autumn, the beginning of the civil year, summer the end, and spring or winter, the middle. Grot.—Their. The "seasons," as the Greek implies, (C.) and the vicissitudes of heat and cold. M.

Ver. 22. Holy. These are the proper epithets of the spirit of wisdom, (W.) or of the Holy Ghost. Corn. a Lap. Lorin.—They may also be applicable to the wisdom which resides in man: one, in essence, manifold, in its operations, subtle, knowing all things; (c. 1:7) eloquent, to persuade; (C.) Greek, "easily moved, or moving," ευκλινητον, (H.) active. Gr. "open (C.) or entire."

Ver. 24. For wisdom, which is the same with the Spirit, and the Son of God. v. 25.

Ver. 25. Glory. As S. Paul testifies of Jesus Christ. Heb. 1:3. Euseb. Demon. Evang. iv. 5.—It may also be understood of the wisdom given to the prophets and saints. v. 27. Plato thought this to be a vapour, or fire proceeding from God. In Protag. Philo. de Som.—Some apply the passage to the blessed Virgin. Corn. a Lap. v. 26. C. See Prov. 1:2. W.

Ver. 26. Goodness. This is particularly noticed, as he speaks of the favours received. It was also an effect of infinite goodness, that the Deity should communicate itself substantially, in the generation of the Son, and the procession of the Holy Ghost. M.

Ver. 27. Prophets. No age or nation has been left destitute by God. Among the Gentiles, Job was a saint. H.—The philosophers also knew God, (Rom. 1:21) and taught many important truths, (C.) though they erred in other respects, and dishonoured their profession. True religion has always subsisted, and saints, (H.) yea even pagan philosophers, have borne witness to the truth. Clem. Alex. &c. C.

Ver. 30. Evil. Or disgrace. Grot.—The brightest days are succeeded by night. The divine wisdom never fails, though that of man is subject to change, as Solomon has taught us by his own woeful example. C.

WISDOM 8

Ver. 1. She. The uncreated wisdom is infinite; and the created is the most excellent of God's gifts. W.—Sweetly. God is every where present, (S. Bern.) and directeth all with ease. S. Aug. ep. ad Dard. q. i.

Ver. 4. Works. Directing us to imitate them, as much as possible. H.—She teaches us how to refer all to God, (M.) while mere philosophers stop at vain speculations, and barren admiration of the Deity.

Ver. 6. Are. Wisdom is an universal teacher. But she particularly inculcates virtue. All science which has not this tendency is vain. C.

Ver. 8. Speeches. Rhetoric, (Grot.) or doubtful matters, as Solomon discovered the real mother. 3 K. 3:27.—Arguments. Greek, “riddles,” which were much in fashion. 3 K. 10:1. C.—Wonders. Such as comets and eclipses. M.—When Anaxagoras discovered the latter, he durst not write, but only instructed his disciples in secret, for fear of being taken for an atheist, or magician. Plut. in Nicias.—The sciences, which are now common, were formerly confined to few; and the people looked upon eclipses as so many prodigies. The wise man is possessed of all natural sciences, and can predict the changes of weather, &c.—Ages. Forming a judgment of futurity from past occurrences.

Ver. 13. After me. He speaks to the great, who are more sensible of glory. Solomon's fame would have continued untarnished, if he had not fallen, (C.) and we may hope that he repented, and verified this prediction. H.—It is not certain that he obtained immortal glory. W.

Ver. 15. Of me. Wisdom is the best protection.—Good and valiant. These are the two most essential qualifications of kings.

Ver. 19. Received. “By lot,” sortitus, (H.) to exclude all preceding merit. S. Aug. de Gen. lit. x. 18.—Good soul. Natural dispositions (Pineda) are perfected by grace and labour. C.

Ver. 20. More good. The pre-existence of souls seems to be insinuated, though this is not clear, and the opinion is now rejected. Some are born with a better disposition for learning than others. S. Aug. con. Jul. iv. 3.—Yet none possess any seeds of virtue by nature, or are more infected than others, with original sin, as some heretics would assert. C.

Ver. 21. Continent. All good must come from God. H.—Chastity cannot be preserved without his aid. S. Aug. Conf. vi. 11.—Yet this seems not to be the literal sense. Solomon prays for the acquisition of wisdom, (C. Eccli. 6:28 and 15:1. M.) which includes continence, religion, and every virtue. H.

WISDOM 9

Ver. 1. God. This prayer, which continues to the end of the book, is a paraphrase of 3 K. 3:6. &c. with several additional instructions, to remind people in authority of the love of justice. C.

Ver. 7. King. Hence it appears, that the sentiments of Solomon are expressed. W.—Judge. This is the first duty of a king.—Thy sons. He ought to govern his people, remembering that they are God’s creatures and children.

Ver. 8. Beginning. In thy eternal decrees, or when thou madest choice of Israel. H.—The temple was greater, but very like the tabernacle: only the court of the priests was divided from that of the people. In the desert, the whole camp was considered as the court of the latter. C.

Ver. 9. With thee. The uncreated wisdom is God himself: that which is communicated to man is his gift. v. 10. W.—World. Prov. 8:22. This request shews what idea Solomon had of God’s majesty, for which he was preparing a temple.

Ver. 17. Thought. How shall we govern as we ought, and act as thy vicegerents, without thy Spirit? Prov. 16:10 and 2 K. 14:17.

Ver. 19. Whosoever, &c. is not in the Sept. But men includes as much. H.—The saints have been preserved from the contagion and punishments of the world only by means of the divine benefit. C.

WISDOM 10

Ver. 2. Sin. Hence it is clear, that our first parent repented, (W.) and was saved. Gen. 5:5. S. Iræn. iii. 34. S. Aug. ep. xcix. ad Evod. Corn. a Lap. C.—Things. Before sin, he submitted willingly; but afterwards, he was forced to use all his ingenuity to preserve this dominion.

Ver. 3. The unjust. Cain. We have no proof of his repentance.

Ver. 4. Cause. The wickedness of the race of Cain. C.—Just. Noe.—Wood. Who would have thought that such a vessel would save mankind, &c. amid the raging storms? Noe must have been an able mechanic: (C.) but God both directed him, and closed up the door. Gen. 7:16. H.

Ver. 5. She knew the just. She found out and approved Abraham, (C.) Sem, or Heber, who took no part in building the tower. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. C. xvi. 4.—To God. Many say that Abraham was at first addicted to idolatry. Philo. S. Aug. &c.—But not after he was directed by the light of heaven. C.—Strong. Gave his strength to stand firm against the efforts of his natural tenderness, when he was ordered to sacrifice his son. Ch.—Against. Lit. “in.” To obey God was true compassion to his son, though it might have deprived him of this life. H.—How many virtues did not Abraham manifest on this occasion! S. Amb. Off. ii. 5.

Ver. 6. The just man. Lot.—Pentapolis. The land of the five cities, Sodom, Gomorrah, &c. Ch.

Ver. 10. The just. Jacob.—Of God. Or heaven open, and angels ascending and descending. Gen. 38:12.

Ver. 11. Deceit. Laban’s craft did not prevent Jacob from growing rich. H.

Ver. 12. Enemies. Laban and Esau. C.—Conflict with the angel. Ch.

Ver. 13. Just. Joseph. Ch.—Sinners. His brethren, &c. Sept. “from sin” of adultery. M.—Pit. Or prison, to which he was confined at the instigation of Potiphar's wife, always preserving his virtue. C.—He had also been let down into an old pit by his brethren. H.

Ver. 14. Kingdom. Which he ruled under Pharaoh. Gen. 41:40. C.—The Hebrews styled all in high authority kings. Grot.

Ver. 16. God. Moses. Ch.—Num. 12:7. Ps. 104:26. &c.

Ver. 21. Eloquent. They would, if possible, have sounded forth thy praise. Dionys.—The Hebrews had been kept in ignorance, and afraid to speak. C.—Infants, and dumb people, might also, by miracle, join in the song. H.

WISDOM 11

Ver. 1. Prophet. Moses, (Ch.) by whose ministry the Hebrews were delivered, (H.) and governed with the utmost prudence. Num. 12:2–6. C.

Ver. 3. Their enemies. The Amalecites, (Ch.) and all others, who durst attack Moses. Deut. 3:1.

Ver. 5. By what things, &c. The meaning is, that God, who wrought a miracle to punish the Egyptians by thirst, when he turned all their waters into blood, (at which time the Israelites, who were exempt from those plagues, had plenty of water) wrought another miracle in favour of his own people in their thirst, by giving them water out of the rock. Ch.—The Egyptians were thus tormented by thirst, though so near the Nile; and the Hebrews were refreshed in a barren desert. Ex. 7:20.

Ver. 7. River. The Nile, to which the Egyptians gave divine honours. C.—Thou. Sept. “disturbed with corrupted blood, in punishment of the infanticide decree, thou gavest,” &c.

Ver. 14. By their punishments, &c. That is, that the Israelites had been benefited and miraculously favoured in the same kind, in which they had been punished. Ch.—Benefited. After war, peace is more agreeable. W.

Ver. 16. Serpents. The Egyptians adored asps, and fed them at their tables, without receiving any harm. Ælian. Hist. xvii. 5.—Dumb beasts. Viz. frogs, sciniphs, flies, and locusts. Ch.

Ver. 24. Repentance. If people neglect to reform their conduct in this world, they must expect to be treated with all severity in the other.

Ver. 25. It. Sin and disorder is the work of man, deserving hatred. C.—God created nothing evil, nor is there any but one God, as the Manichees pretended.

Ver. 26. Called. Into existence, or into its proper place. Rom. 4:17.

Ver. 27. All. Awaiting their amendment, and unwilling to destroy thy creatures. C. 12:10. Hence thou didst not exterminate the Egyptians at once. C.

WISDOM 12

Ver. 1. O how. Sept. “for incorruptible is thy Spirit;” which S. Athanasius (ad Serap.) adduces as a proof of the Holy Ghost’s divinity. C.—God loves the soul of man. Grot.

Ver. 5. Consecration. Lit. sacrament, or land. That is, the land sacred to thee, in which thy temple was to be established, and man’s redemption to be wrought. Ch.

Ver. 8. Wasps. These were the auxiliaries of the Hebrews. Deut. 7:20. S. James saved Nisibis from the Persian army, by praying for gnats to descend. Theod. Philot. i.—The inhabitants of Belgrade incensed bees, by fire and smoke, to attack the troops of Amurath. Bonf. iv. dec. 3.

Ver. 10. Natural. We are all by nature children of wrath. Eph. 2:3. H.—But the Chanaanites were accursed by Noe, (Gen. 9:25) and were brought up in wickedness (Ps. 57:4) by their parents. S. Aug. de Bapt. ii. 8.—Changed. Because they would not employ well the time allowed them. C.—By custom, malice became as it were natural, after nature was corrupted. W.

Ver. 11. Pardon. Or impunity. C.—“Thou art angry, and yet are tranquil. S. Aug. Conf. i. 4.

Ver. 12. Done? Shall the clay say to the potter, why hast thou made me thus? Is. 45:9 and 64:8. We know, that under a just God, no one is miserable, unless he deserve it. v. 15.

Ver. 15. Punished. S. Aug. ep. 106. Some have read incorrectly: “Thou condemnest him who ought not to be punished, and deemest him a stranger to thy virtue,” which S. Greg. (Mor. iii. 11.) explains of Jesus Christ, the victim of sinners; other, of people born in sin, (Lyran.)

while some would hence prove the decree of reprobation. Duran.—But it is needless to explain a text which the Greek shews to be inaccurate. C.

Ver. 19. Hope. Under a God of such clemency, none should despair.

Ver. 27. God. Who destroyed their idols: yet they did not serve him, (W.) which was true of all the pagans. Rom. 1:21. C.

WISDOM 13

Ver. 1. Vain. Sept. “foolish by nature, who are ignorant of God.” H.—In this and the three following chapters, the miseries of idolatry are described, to shew the value of wisdom and piety. C.—Without the knowledge of God, all is darkness. 1 Cor. 2:2. S. Just. dial.—Is. He who is, must be the most proper name of God. Ex. 3:14. Philosophers could perceive that all creatures had a beginning, and that there must be some first cause or God, whom some confessed, but did not honour as they ought. Rom. 1. W.—Could not. Inasmuch as they were vain. H.

Ver. 2. Fire. The chief god of the Persians.—Wind. Zephyrus, &c.—Air. Which is perhaps the wind. Socrates was accused of adoring nothing, but heaven and the clouds, (Aristot. nub.) as the Jews were. Nil præter nubes et Cœli numen adorant. Juv. xiv. 97.—Stars. The zodiac, or pleiads. This species of idolatry was most ancient and general.—Water. The ocean, Neptune, &c. The Egyptians adored water above all, as the origin of other things. Hence they were punished first by it. Philo, vit. Mor. 1.—Moon. These were mostly the objects of worship, under the names of Baal, Astarte, (C.) the Phœbus, or Dianæ of the Romans. H.

Ver. 5. Thereby. God is announced by the heavens, and by all creatures. Ps. 18:1. Rom. 1:20. “Who can look up to heaven, and be so foolish as not to allow that there is a God?” Cic. Harusp.

Ver. 10. Of men. The pagans in general took the material statue to be the residence of a god. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. C. vii. 6. and viii. 13.—The more learned regarded the figures of the sun, &c. as his representations, while others supposed that Jupiter meant the heavens, Juno the air, Vulcan, fire, &c.—Hand. This is to abuse antiquity. The idol of the Arabs was a rough stone. In more polished nations, the workmanship of Praxiteles, Phidias, &c. was more regarded. C.—As no creature deserves to be esteemed a god, much less do the works of men’s hands. W.

Ver. 14. Vermilion. The ancients greatly esteemed this colour, (C.) and painted with it the statues of their gods on festival days, and the bodies of those who had the honour of a triumph. Pliny, xxxiii. 6.

Ver. 15. Iron. Baruch (6:26) ridicules the same custom, and the other prophets intimate that the pagans took these statues to be really gods, otherwise their practice was no more blameable than that of the Jews, who fastened the cherubim to the ark with gold, and carried them. But the latter did not believe that the Deity resided personally in those images; no more that we do, that Christ is attached to his image on the cross. This distinguishes the behaviour of the faithful from that of pagans. C.

WISDOM 14

Ver. 1. Him. The folly of exposing one's life, without necessity, to such imminent danger at sea, is great; though much less than to confide in idols, (C.) which are commonly made of more corruptible wood than ships. W.

Ver. 3. Waves. Of the Red sea, (Vat.) through which the Israelites passed, (W.) or rather hast taught navigation to Noe, (v. 6) and enabled him to build the finest vessel that ever appeared.

Ver. 5. Saved. Before the invention of the compass, long voyages were deemed the effects of rashness, or of great confidence in Providence. C.

Ver. 7. Cometh. By which Noe was preserved, (Corn. a Lap.) or criminals are executed. Jansenius—The author foretells the redemption of mankind on the cross. W. Gal. 3:13. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. C. xv. 26. S. Amb. Ps. cxviii. ser. 8.

Ver. 12. Fornication. Invention of idols brought people to give way to spiritual fornication, and corruption of manners. W.—They freely practised what was sanctioned by the example of their gods. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. ii. 7. and 3 K. 14:24 and 4 K. 23:7, 3. C.

Ver. 13. Beginning. Truth is always prior to falsehood. H.—Josephus (Ant. i. 4.) says, idolatry commenced in the 8th generation, and the Jews assert, under Enos. “Then began the name of God to be profaned,” as the Chal. &c. translate, Gen. 4:26. S. Jer. q. Heb.—The corruption of morals was the natural consequence. v. 12.—Ever. Christ shall destroy them. C.

Ver. 15. Servants. This was at first done privately, and made the way for public idolatry. Calvin attempts to refute this assertion, maintaining that Laban's idols were more ancient, and not images. But this argument is nugatory, as theraphim may be rendered either images, (Prot. 1552.) or idols. Prot. 1603. The latter version is preferable, as Laban called them his gods, and the Greek and Latin have idols. It is also certain, that Ninus set up the image of his father, Jupiter Belus, to be honoured by the people, before Abraham's time; and the fathers agree, that the making of images in memory of the dead, was the first occasion of idolatry. S. Chrys. hom. 87. in Matt. S. Jer. in Osee ii. &c. W.—Nimrod ordered divine honours to be paid to his deceased son. Gul. Paris. Leg.—Yet this fact is not certain. Diophante, the Lacedemonian, assigns the same origin to idolatry as is here given. Grot.

Ver. 18. Ignorant. The arts of sculpture and painting may be prejudicial, (C.) and were therefore banished by Moses from his republic, (Philo) as the Jews were so prone to idolatry. C. 15:4. The case is different with us. H.

Ver. 21. Name. It cannot with propriety be given to any but God. W. —The Jews explain this of the name Jehovah, which they will never pronounce. C.

Ver. 23. Children. This was done by the Chanaanites, Hebrews, &c. C. 12:23. Is. 57:5.—Hidden. The sacrifices of Ceres, Bacchus, &c. were performed in the dark, and horrible impurities were committed. Eph. 5:12.—Madness. Before they be initiated in the mysteries of Ceres, or prostitute themselves in honour of the deities of impurity, (Jos. Ant. xviii. 4.) in the very temples. Quo non prostrat femina templo? Juv. ix. C.—Many crimes proceed from idolatry. W.

Ver. 28. Mad. Like the Bacchanalian women, running crowned with serpents, and eating raw flesh.—Lies. The delusions of the devil, or the fraud of priests.—Easily. Those who believe not in religion, or in the power of him by who they swear, can give no security by an oath. They fear no harm. v. 29. Yet they are perjured if they believe Jupiter, for example, to be a god, (S. Aug. ep. 54. ad Pub.) and if they do not, they are impious; abusing an oath, which is in itself sacred. C.

Ver. 31. Just. Lit. "the punishment of sinners always walketh about," &c. H.—"The stone does not hear thee speaking, but God punishes the deceiver." S. Aug.—The pagans supposed that their idols sometimes punished perjury. Juv. Sat. viii.—It is God who does it. C.

WISDOM 15

Ver. 1. Mercy. The pagans have no real respect for their gods: the fear them not. C.—But we know that Thou governest all, (H.) and will punish us, if we transgress. C.

Ver. 4. Us. He wrote after the captivity, when the Jews abhorred idolatry, (C.) as they might also do at the beginning of Solomon's reign. H.—Picture. It is not certain that the art was known in the days of Moses, or that he expressly forbade it. Pliny says it was discovered at Corinth, by making the outlines of a man's shadow on the wall. Afterwards one colour was used, till a variety was found to represent things more perfectly, (L. xxxv. 3, 4.) so as to deceive the senses, for which reason it is styled a fruitless labour. C.

Ver. 10. Clay. In death, those who have trusted in creatures, shall be abandoned by all.

Ver. 11. Worketh. God gives life, and also the rational soul. Gen. 2:7.

Ver. 12. Evil. This is the maxim of worldlings. C.—Virtus post nummos. Hor. i. ep. 1.—Our occupations are like those of children. They presently perish, or we must quit them. S. Chrys. hom. xlvii. ad Pop.—We must strive to act our part well. Libertines deem this life a comedy, and represent religion as an imposition. C.—They are like atheists, as they leave the true God, who seek gain by idols. W.

Ver. 14. In their pride, they threaten more than they can perform, (Is. 16:6) or they take images to be gods, which infants only imagine are men, as Lactantius observes, quoting Lucilius,—

Ut pueri infantes credunt signa omnia athena Vivere et esse homines. H.

—Measure. They become insolent, and despise and persecute the servants of God. W.

Ver. 19. Beasts. They are deformed, (H.) and seem to have been cursed by God, like the serpent. Gen. 3:14. C.—Fled from. Or “have banished” (Lorin.) God's praise, claiming it for themselves. M.

WISDOM 16

Ver. 1. Things. Sept. “therefore by similar things they,” &c. H.—The Egyptians were punished for their idolatry by beasts, though they worshipped them, (H.) being infested with insects, frogs, locusts, &c. (C. 12:23. Ex. 8 and 10. C.) and seeing their first-born perish for their cruelty. W.

Ver. 2. Meat. The second time, God gave them in his anger: but still he dealt favourably with his people, (Ex. 16:13. Num. 11:7. C.) punishing them as a father, for their amendment. W.

Ver. 3. They indeed desiring food, &c. He means the Egyptians; who were restrained even from that food which was necessary, by the frogs and the flies that were sent amongst them, and spoiled all their meats. Ch.—Ex. 8:3. C.—These. The Israelites. Ch.—New meat. Quails. M.

Ver. 6. Sign of salvation. The brazen serpent, an emblem of Christ our Saviour; (Ch.) and of the obedience which they should shew to God's commands. C.—The sign could have no inherent value; but, as a token of God's favour, was the means of curing the people. W.

Ver. 12. Plaster, malagma. The remedy ordained by God was not naturally efficacious. C.—“Every wound of the soul has its medicine in the Scriptures.” S. Aug. Psalm xxxvi.

Ver. 17. The fire had more force. Viz. When the fire and hail mingled together laid waste the land of Egypt. Ex. 9. Ch.—This destroyed the useful cattle, but not such as infested the Egyptians. W.—The water seemed to nourish the flames. 3 K. 18:39.

Ver. 18. Mitigated. The Egyptians could not banish the insects with fire and smoke, (Jans.) or the storm sent by God, did not exterminate the sciniphs, which had caused the magicians to acknowledge a miracle. Ex. 8:18. The frogs and flies were already gone. Ib. 11 and 31. C.

Ver. 20. Angels. See Ex. 16. W.—If angels stood in need of food, they could have nothing more delicious. So water is styled honey, to denote its excellence. Ps. 77:25. Lev. 20:24. Joel 3:18.—Taste. These expressions are figurative. C.

Ver. 21. Sustenance. Lit. “substance,” which some explain (C.) of God himself preparing this delicious food. Naz. or. xlix.—Liked. So that if a person wished to eat an egg, &c. the manna became one, without altering its appearance, which is the case in the blessed Eucharist. Valentia, 4 disp. 6. &c.—But this opinion supposes a continued miracle, which seems not necessary, and it is generally believed that the taste alone was changed, which S. Aug. and others restrain to God's faithful servants, otherwise the Hebrews could not have been disgusted with manna. Num. 11:6 and 21:5. To these it was therefore simply manna. But the others found in it whatever they could desire. S. Greg. Mor. vi. 9.—Yet according to others, (H.) both enjoyed the same privilege. M.—We cannot account for men's fancies.

Ver. 26. Word. Deut. 8:3. Matt. 4:4. Fruits, of themselves, could not support man. C.

Ver. 28. Light. Those who desire to receive any favour must seek it with diligence, as the manna was to be gathered before sun-rise. Clarius. C.

Ver. 29. Water. The ungrateful and negligent shall find their hopes frustrated, (C.) as well as the wicked, who expect salvation (W.) without a change of manners. H.—Ingratitude stops the fountain of grace. M.

WISDOM 17

Ver. 1. Souls. The Egyptians, who were punished with horrible darkness, as they had followed an unjust, dark, and cruel policy against the Hebrews.

Ver. 2. Providence, and day-light, like incorrigible slaves, in prison. C.—The Egyptians were three days in darkness, (Ex. 10:22) and the Gentiles continued without faith in God, till after Christ's resurrection. W.—Only few served him, before that glorious event.

Ver. 3. Sins. This interior darkness was punished with the exterior one. C.—Forgetfulness. Of each other, being concerned only for themselves, (H.) or they seemed to be forgotten by Providence, or buried in Lethæan, most dismal obscurity. The interpreter thus mentions Cocytus, without sanctioning poetical fables. Job 21:33. M.—Exceeding. Greek, "spectres." C.

Ver. 6. Fire. Like lightning, which would not allow them leisure to distinguish objects. C.

Ver. 7. Rebuked. Or chastised. H.—The magicians could not imitate this miracle, nor secure themselves from its horrors. C.

Ver. 9. Fear. the Egyptians kept serpents in their houses, and fed them. But now, neglecting to shew this attention, they were affrighted with their hissing.—Air. Or could live. They seemed to wish for death, (C.) like the damned, but it fled from them. H.

Ver. 10. Things. The wicked are most cowardly. C.—“Crimes may be safe; they cannot be secure.” Sen. ep. xcvi.

Ver. 11. Thought. And giving way to despair, when it is extreme.

Ver. 12. Expectation. Or fear. Such an one is filled with a mortal anxiety.

Ver. 14. Them. From the sight of spectres, and remorse of conscience.

Ver. 15. Irons. Darkness forced them to stay where they were. C.

Ver. 17. Birds. Nothing can afford comfort to the affrighted. M.

WISDOM 18

Ver. 1. Their. The Hebrews’ (M.) or rather the Egyptians’ voice. The land of Gossen was preserved from these horrors, (C.) though such Egyptians as might be found there, were exposed to them; and their dismal lamentations made the people of God appreciate their own happiness. They are styled saints, (H.) as the Church is holy, and has always some saints in her society. Out of it there is no sanctity. W.

Ver. 3. Therefore. “Instead of those things,” (Gr.) darkness and complaints, (H.) God led away his people in triumph. Hab. 3:3.—A harmless sun. A light that should not hurt or molest them; but that should be an agreeable guest to them; (Ch.) or the desert should receive them, where they should be provided with food. M.

Ver. 4. Was. Lit. “began.” H.—In Egypt, the Hebrews themselves were unacquainted with the law, which was given at their arrival at Sinai, and by means of the Greek version, and the propagation of the gospel, it was more divulged. C.—The unwritten law was, however, better preserved in that nation, than in any other: and the Jews were selected, in order that they might communicate the treasure to all. H.

Ver. 5. One child. Viz. Moses. Ch.—He was preserved to be the leader of the Hebrews, when the Egyptians were drowned (W.) in the Red Sea. M.

Ver. 6. Fathers. God had assured the patriarchs, that he would visit his people, and Moses had told them what would take place, during the night of their deliverance. Ex. 4:22 and 11:4. C.

Ver. 9. Men. The patriarchs. Their children, the Israelites, offered in private the sacrifice of the paschal lamb; and were regulating what they were to do in their journey, when that last and most dreadful plague was coming upon their enemies. Ch.—Alike. The feast was a bond of union with God and their neighbour, (C.) and the Hebrews resolved to be always true to one another both in prosperity and adversity. H.—Fathers. Abraham, &c. Songs usually accompanied feasts, and the promises made to the patriarchs filled the Hebrews with confidence that they would shortly take possession of Chanaan. C.

Ver. 12. Noblest. The first-born (Ch.) of Pharaoh, and those of slaves and cattle, were slain. Ex. 12. C.

Ver. 14. Course. This description of the decree, or angel of the Lord, is most magnificent. The Church applies it to Christ's nativity, who is thought to have been born at midnight. C.—It insinuates his coming, when the world should enjoy a profound peace, though buried in the darkness of ignorance. W.

Ver. 17. Visions. These informed the Egyptians, that their miseries were not to be attributed to any natural cause. The dying proclaimed the same, as Moses had done. Ex. 11:4.

Ver. 23. Living. Whom the angel was prevented from attacking. Num. 16:47. C.

Ver. 24. Priestly. Lit. robe of the poderis, (H.) "reaching down to the feet," and made of sky-blue linen, with pomegranates and bells at the bottom. C.—The colours represented the four elements. H.—See S. Jer. ep. cxxviii. Joseph. iii. 8.—Fathers. The twelve descendants of Jacob, whose names appeared in the stones of the breast-plate. Ex. 28:17.—Majesty. On a golden plate worn by the high priest on his forehead, was inscribed "Holiness to the Lord." Ib. 36. C.—Sanctitas Jehova. M.

Ver. 25. Afraid. Or shewed a regard for them. H.—Great is the power of a saint, of holy vestments, and of prayer. M.—Enough. God did not intend to exterminate his people, as he had done the first-born of Egypt. C.

WISDOM 19

Ver. 1. Knew. God foresaw the malice of the Egyptians against his people, but as not the author of it. W.

Ver. 2. Care. Lit. “solicitude,” (H.) so that they would not allow them time to prepare victuals.

Ver. 4. Necessity. God permitted them to be blinded by their own obstinacy. C.—They rushed headlong into the channel of the Red Sea. H.

Ver. 6. Beginning. It seemed susceptible of any form; and the elements appeared to be of another nature. The fire burnt in water, the sea retired, &c. C. 5:21 and 16:24.

Ver. 7. Field. Like a meadow, (C.) germinans, “growing grass.” Sept. H.—Pliny (xiii. 25.) attests, that “the Red Sea, and all the eastern ocean, are full of wood.” The Hebrews passed with as much ease as in a desert, (Ps. 105:9. Is. 63:13) or place of pasture, while the sea seemed to be in quest of other channels. C. Gen. 1:9. H.

Ver. 12. Thunders. Which took place at the destruction of Sodom, for their warning. C.

Ver. 14. In another. Lit. “but there was another respect (or punishment) of them, because unwillingly they received strangers.” Gen. 19:1. H.—The Amorrhites would not admit the Israelites. Num. 21:21. W.

Ver. 15. Laws. Or “rights,” justitiis. The Hebrews acknowledged the civil authority (M.) of Pharaoh, though they adopted not his religion. C. 18:4. H.

Ver. 17. Changed. The meaning is, that whatever changes God wrought in the elements by miracles in favour of his people, they still kept their harmony by obeying his will. Ch.—He answers the objection of philosophers, who argued against the possibility of miracles, as being against the established laws of nature. But they induce no more confusion than the various strings of a harp, when they are touched with skill, though they have each their respective name and sound. The ancients frequently compared the harmony of the universe to a musical instrument. See plut. Macrob. som. ii.—Sight. Sept. add, “of what happened” (H.) in those miraculous changes.

Ver. 18. Water. Men, &c. passed through the Red Sea, while frogs got into houses.

Ver. 20. Therein. For the punishment of the Egyptians. C. 16:18. C.—Food. Manna. Ch.—Sept. “immortal food,” ambrosia. H.—Place. This conclusion agrees very well with the preceding observations. But it seems some thing should be said respecting the original petition for wisdom; whence we conclude, with Grotius, that the work is imperfect: (C.) though this is by no means clear, as the prayer is sufficiently expressed in the nine first chapters, if not in the whole book, and God answers it, 3 K. 9. H.

ECCLESIASTICUS

INTRODUCTION

This book is so called from the Greek word that signifies a preacher: because, like an excellent preacher, it gives admirable lessons of all virtues. The author was Jesus, the son of Sirach, of Jerusalem, who flourished about two hundred years before Christ. As it was written after the time of Esdras, it is not in the Jewish canon; but is received as canonical and divine by the Catholic Church, instructed by apostolical tradition, and directed by the Spirit of God. It was first written in Hebrew, but afterwards translated into Greek by another Jesus, the grandson of the author, whose prologue to this book is the following: Ch.

—If some forbear to urge the authority of this book, in disputes with the Jews, we need not be surprised, as there were other proofs against them. We often act with Prot. in the same manner, even using their versions, &c. H.—It was alleged in the controversies about baptism and grace, and no one thought of rejecting its testimony. C. 34:30. S. Cyp. ep. 65. S. Aug. Bap. vi. 34. Grat. ii. 11. &c.—The Councils of Ephesus, 3d Carthage, (c. 47.) Francfort, 8th Toledo, and Trent, ought to settle all doubts on this head. The Jews themselves have a great regard for the book, (though the Thalmud condemns it for admitting more persons than one in God) and seem to have copied many sentences from it into the two Syriac alphabets of Ben Sira. This may be the work which S. Jerom (Pref. in Sal.) testifies he saw in Heb. as that test cannot at present be found. C.—See ep. 115. D.—But this is no proof that it was not extant in S. Jerom's time, and the many variations between the Greek copies themselves and the Vulg. may owe their rise to the different translators omitting some parts of it. H.—The same person seems to have translated this and the former book into Latin in the earliest ages, though the present work is more obscure, because the Greek is less beautiful, of which the Rom. edit. is deemed the most correct; though the Compl. agrees with the Vulg. He appears to have given frequently a double version, for fear of not having expressed the full sense in the first, unless the additions be his, or some other person's glosses, which have crept into the text. C.—If this be the case, near one hundred verses ought to be cut off, yet as they are published without any distinction by the Church, perhaps it would be as well to adhere to the former sentiment, or to suspend our judgment. C. 9:12. H.—Many of the Fathers quote this book as the production of Solomon, because it contains many of his sentences preserved by tradition, (M.) and resembles his works. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xvii. 20.—The Greek styles it “The Wisdom of Jesus, the son of Sirach.” He has imitated (H.) the Proverbs to c. 24. Ecclesiastes to c. 42:15 where wisdom ends her exhortation, and the Canticle in the remainder of the work, praising God and the great men of the nation, down to Simon II. Vales. in Euseb. iv. 22. C.—The last chapter contains a prayer, which may be in imitation of the book of Wisdom. This work is often styled Panaretos, a collection of pious maxims, (H.) or a “receptacle of all virtues.” W.—Many think it was composed between A.M. 3711. and 3783; (Torniel.) but it seem rather to have appeared in times of persecution, (c. 36) after Philopator had been incensed against Simon II. for opposing his entrance into the sanctuary, (c. 50:4. &c.) for which he ordered the Jews in Egypt to be cruelly butchered, (2 Mac.) and after Epiphanes, the Syrian monarch, had commenced his most cruel persecution of that people, and of Onias III. twenty-two years after the death of Simon II. (c. 35 and 50) A.M. 3828. B.C. 176. Euseb. Grot. Usher. C.

ECCLESIASTICUS 1

Ver. 1. Wisdom. In this book, Wisdom is taken for the Deity, the Son, or the gift communicated to men. Prov. 3:19. Wisd. 7:25. C.

Ver. 3. God. This is eternal and unsearchable, more than the sand of the sea, &c. Is. 40:12. H.—Man cannot comprehend God's works. W.

Ver. 4. Created. Or “generated,” if it be understood of the Son. S. Athan. Bos.—The wisdom which is given to man, was in God before the creation. Prov. 8:22. C.—The decree regarding the incarnation was from eternity. M.

Ver. 5. Commandments. The wise will observe the law (Deut. 4:6. H.)

and the Scriptures. This verse is not in the Gr. of Rome, &c. but it is in the edit. of Complut. and Camerarius.

Ver. 9. In the Holy Ghost, or from himself. See Wisd. 1:5 and 7:22. Gr. omits these words. C.

Ver. 11. Joy. Eternal glory is the fruit of the fear of the Lord; not that this virtue sufficeth, but it is the beginning, grounded on true faith, and bringeth forth other virtues, and fruits of the Holy Ghost, and a joyful crown in the end. W.—The virtuous enjoy or deserve honour. C.

Ver. 16. Womb. Grace has prevented them. H.—They are free from evil dispositions. Wisd. 8:19. Job 31:18.—Women; feminis, or rather seminis. C.—Gr. “it shall be intrusted to their seed.” H.—“His mercy is fixed with their seed.” Syr. M.—This includes both men and women.

Ver. 17. Religiousness, or proper application of knowledge. H.—A learned impious man is most dangerous. This and the two next verses are not in Greek.

Ver. 27. Sin, by vigilance or by repentance.

Ver. 29. To him, as may be seen in the lives of the patriarchs.

Ver. 32. Sinner. Such imagine that God’s service is insupportable. W.

Ver. 35. Faith, or fidelity. M.—The meek shall possess the land. Matt. 5:4. C.

Ver. 39. Down. Pride is usually thus treated. Matt. 23:12. C.

Ver. 1. God. All must be tried. Tob. 12:13. Heb. 12:6. Lu. 24:46. But God will grant sufficient grace. 1 Cor. 10:13. C.

Ver. 2. Humble. Gr. “regulate thy heart, and endure, and make not haste in the time of trouble,” (H.) inflicted by God. Grot.—But not impatient. Is. 28:16.—Clouds. Lit. “overcast,” obductionis. H.—Desire not death, in order to be covered from the miseries of life; for that would (W.) border on despair. H.

Ver. 3. Patience. Or expectation of being relieved. M.

Ver. 5. Humiliation. It shews what they really are. C.

Ver. 10. Enlightened. With joy. Is. 58. M.—This verse is not in Greek. To avoid such frequent repetitions, it would be well to mark the passage in different characters, (H.) or between crotchets, as in the French version. C.—Yet the Greek editions are not uniform. See Drusius and Hæschel.

Ver. 14. Ways. Attempting to reconcile the service of the world with that of God, who rejects hypocrites, (H.) the inconstant, and faint-hearted. v. 15 and 3 K. 18:21. C.—Virtues and sins will receive their due. W.

Ver. 20. Hearts. With God's grace (H.) to fight manfully. C.—Sanctify. Greek, "humble their souls, saying, we shall," &c. v. 22. H.—Prayer, vigilance, and humility are the best dispositions to resist the devil.

Ver. 22. Men. He alludes to 2 K. 24:14. In this world, God punishes with mercy; in the next, with severity. Dan. 13:23. C.

ECCLESIASTICUS 3

Ver. 1. Love. The progeny of God's children brings forth the fruits of obedience and love. W.—Wisdom teaches every virtue. C.—This verse is not in Greek.

Ver. 3. Seeking. Greek, "and hath confirmed the judgment," &c. H.—God will revenge any disrespect shewn to parents. M.

Ver. 7. Father. Greek, "Lord ... mother (8) and will serve them," &c. H.—Though you may feed your parents, you are still much in their debt. S. Amb. in Lu. 2. and 18. Ex. 20:12. Job 4:3.

Ver. 9. Father. Greek adds, "and thy mother." C.—Grabe marks this in another character, and substitutes "them" for him. v. 10.—And his, &c. is wholly omitted. H.

Ver. 11. Foundations. S. Aug. (de Civ. Dei. xxii. 8.) gives a memorable instance. The pagans deemed such curses most terrible. Orpheus. Gen. 9:25.—They are executed upon the wicked.

Ver. 12. Thee. Boast not of thy superior talents, nor say any thing disrespectful.

Ver. 13. A father. Greek, "mother." Alexander was ashamed of having Philip for his father, pretending that he was the son of Jupiter Ammon. His mother Olympias, with much ingenuity, wrote to him, that he would thus make Juno her powerful rival!

Ver. 15. Fail. Bis pueri senes. They do not lose the character of fathers, how infirm soever, (C.) and those can never truly serve the invisible Deity, who despise their fathers, his visible images on the earth. Philo. Decal.

Ver. 16. Sin. Or ill-nature. Greek, “instead of sins, (17) a house shall be built up for thee.” H.—Thy family shall increase. Ex. 1:21. C.—Alms, prayer, and sacrifice for parents merit reward. W.

Ver. 18. Of. Greek, “Like a blasphemer is,” &c. C.—He who reviles his father, meditates blasphemy against the Deity. Menander.

Ver. 19. Meekness. Here a new subject begins. Goodness begets love. S. Amb. Off. ii. 7.

Ver. 20. Greater. The dignity of a person should be the measure of his humility, (S. Amb. de virg. 31.) as the most elevated are the most exposed to pride. Humility is taught only by true wisdom and the gospel. Matt. 11:29. Philosophy may inspire us with the contempt of riches, &c. C.—Yet humility is the most indispensable duty, and no less essential than delivery to an orator. S. Aug. ep. 118. ad Diosc.—All human greatness comes from God, who requires us to shew our gratitude by humility. W.

Ver. 22. In, &c. The mysterious nature of God and providence, cannot be comprehended: and in many things we must confess our ignorance. Life is often spent in idle researches.

Ver. 26. Suspicion. Gr. Comp. “their vain suspicion hath deceived many and their wicked thought has ruined their judgment. Not having the apples of the eye, thou wilt be deprived of light; and being ignorant, do not speak.” The latter sentence is marked by Grabe as wanting in his copy, as it is in the Vat. if we may believe the London edit. (H.) which, however, is not an exact copy, no more than any of the other editions, of that famous MS. Grabe.

Ver. 27. Heart. Which fears neither God nor man. S. Bern. cons. 1.—Those who have not shewn mercy, can expect none. H.—The impenitent see their folly, like Antiochus, when it is too late. C.—They have loved the danger, which shall overtake them. Prov. 1:26. He seems to refute those who believed in fate, and would take no precautions. C.—Those who live in sin, tempting God to the last hour, generally perish. W.

Ver. 29. Wicked. Greek, “hard,” obdurate in sin, like Pharaoh. Rom.

2:5. H.—Sorrows. Or crimes, as the word often implies, and the punishment thereof. C.—“Sin, by its own weight, leads to another, (S. Greg. Mor. xxv. 12.) and while custom is not resisted, a necessity arises.” S. Aug. Conf. viii. 5.

Ver. 30. Congregation. The proud or obstinate sinner will take no advice. Prov. 18:3. C.

Ver. 31. Understand. Greek, “shall devise a parable, and the ear of the hearer is the desire of a wise man.” H.

Ver. 33. Water, &c. He delights to instruct the attentive. C.—Resist. Greek, “shall expiate, or obtain pardon for sins.” Dan. 4:24 and Lu. 11:41. “Alms-deeds are a sort of baptism, which may be often repeated” to advantage. S. Amb. or. Max.—“When we bestow any thing, it is not of our own, but the gift of Christ. We give bread ... He, the poor, renders us the kingdom of heaven.” S. Jerom in Ps. cxxxiii. God becomes our debtor. S. Chrys. hom. liii. and lviii.—Our inheritance is secured. S. Cyp. de Op.—But then charity and repentance must accompany our alms. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. 21. ult.

ECCLESIASTICUS 4

Ver. 1. Alms. Gr. “life,” and of what is necessary to support it. Si non pavisti, occidisti. S. Tho. (ii. 2. q. xxxii. 5.) quoting the offices of S. Amb. though the sentence is not to be found there. C.—Christians are not master of what is superfluous, no more than those who have the goods of the Church. S. Chrys. Corn. a Lap.—Turn. Gr. “draw not after thee indigent eyes.” H.—Make not the poor wait, long for relief. 2 Cor. 9:7. Rom. 12:8. Prov. 8:28. C.—Qui tarde dat, diu noluit. Sen. Ben. i. 1. —Fames et mora bilem in nasum concitant. Plaut.

Ver. 5. For ... anger, and behind, &c. is not in Gr. H.—He thrice repeats the same injunction. Ex. 22:22. C.—Deal not cruelly with the poor; for God will revenge their injuries. W.

Ver. 7. Of the. Gr. “and bow,” &c. H.—Submission to magistrates is enforced. C.

Ver. 8. And ... owest, is not in Gr. H.—People in office must attend to all. C.

Ver. 15. One. Or “sanctuary.” They shall be honoured like priests. Is. 61:6. Birth, rather than merit, gave a title to the Jewish priests; but those who are wise shall minister in a more glorious temple. C.

Ver. 18. In temptation, &c. The meaning is, that before wisdom will choose any for her favourites, she will try them by leading them through contradictions, afflictions, and temptations, the usual noviceship of the children of God. Ch.—Gr. “for sideways or through crooked paths she shall walk with him at first, (19) she,” &c. H.—The narrow path leads to heaven, (Matt. 7:13) and to virtue. Hesiod.

Ver. 21. To him. And explain why she has treated him so roughly.

Ver. 22. Enemy. Gr. “ruin.” This road leads to eternal misery. H.

Ver. 23. Time. For all things. Eccl. 3:1. All depends on the proper season.

Ver. 24. Ashamed, to ask for relief, (v. 25. C.) or to say the truth, as the martyrs have done. This is not in Greek.

Ver. 25. Sin. Thus to refuse asking for what is necessary to support life, would be criminal.—Grace. When we refrain from doing things truly shameful. C. 41. C.—To abhor sin is glorious; but to yield to it, through shamefacedness, or not to reprove it, is vicious. W.

Ver. 27. Fall. Excuse not his faults, (C.) lest thou partake in them.

Ver. 28. Hide, &c. is not in the Alex. copy, though inserted by Grabe. H.—Ostentation is blameable; still we must in defence of the truth. C.

Ver. 29. Tongue. Gr. “by speech, wisdom shall be known, and instruction by the word of the tongue.”

Ver. 30. Lie. Gr. “of thy want of information.” Yet Grabe and the Comp. edit. have lie, &c. H.—Always yield to the truth, (C.) and never tell a lie, but speak the truth at proper times. W.

Ver. 32. River. Useless resistance is to be avoided; and when it is requisite to oppose the demands of the great, we must do it with reserve. v. 33. C.

Ver. 33. Strive. Gr. “unto death strive for the truth, and the Lord God will fight for thee.” H.—The saints were modest, but intrepid. C.—All must rather lose their lives than act against justice or truth. W.

Ver. 34. Works. Perform what thou hast promised.

ECCLESIASTICUS 5

Ver. 1. Unjust. The translator styles riches unjust, because they often proceed from, or tend to injustice. They can afford no protection in death. Ps. 48:17. Lu. 11:19 and 16:9. C.

Ver. 2. Heart. If no man can oppose thee, remember God's judgments. W.

Ver. 3. How mighty am I? is not in Gr. though read by S. Cyp. and S. Aug. Spec.—Sennacherib's vain boasting was soon punished. Is. 37:36. C.

Ver. 4. Rewarder. Gr. "is long-suffering, he will not let thee escape."

Ver. 5. And add. Gr. "to add." Take not occasion from God's goodness to offend him. H.—He will punish at last. Jans.—Though you may have taken pains to repent, are you assured of being forgiven? Eccle. 9:1. A relapse calls for greater severity, though the graces of God are without repentance. Rom. 11:29. He does not recall his favours, but he hates the ungrateful, v. 6. Bell. Just. iii. 4. C.—Satisfaction must be made even after the sin has been remitted. W.—This may be feared. M.

Ver. 7. Looketh. Gr. "shall rest" in hell, to punish the abuse of mercy. H.

Ver. 8. Day. A rabbin being asked when one must repent? answered, the day before death. But we know not when that will take place! Then, replied he, we must repent to-day. Drus.—"God has promised thee pardon, if thou repent, but he has not promised thee to-morrow." S. Aug. Ps. cxiv.

Ver. 12. The way. Greek, "thy knowledge or sentiment, and let thy speech be one," (H.) that men may depend upon thee.

Ver. 13. Word. Comp. adds, "of God." But the Rom. edit. has, "be quick to hear, and answer slowly." Jam. 1:19. "It is safer to hear than to preach." S. Aug. lix. in Jo.—Constancy in virtue will obtain the promised peace. W.

Ver. 14. Lest. Gr. "honour and infamy is in speech; and the tongue of man proves his ruin." H.—Nothing can be productive of better or of worse consequences. Prov. 18:21. C.

Ver. 16. Be. Gr. "ensnare not by thy tongue, (17) for evil confusion is upon the thief, and great condemnation on the double-tongued. 18.)

Be not ignorant in any thing, great or small." H.—The detractor is more dangerous than the thief. He pierces without being seen. Eccle. 10:11. Prov. 26:20. Rom. 1:29.

Ver. 18. Great. Only examine the justice of the cause; or, according to the Greek, commit no fault of ignorance, nor say, "I did not think." C.—Acknowledge thy friend in his poverty, as well as in his greatness. H.

ECCLESIASTICUS 6

Ver. 1. Instead. Gr. "and instead," &c. Syriac begins this chapter with the preceding verse, with which this is connected. Detraction will separate friends.

Ver. 2. Extol. This conduct is inimical to true friendship, which requires that we should make allowance for one another's faults. C.—Like. Gr. "lest thy soul be torn away like a bull. Thou wilt eat," &c. H.—Vulg. is better. C.

Ver. 3. Wilderness. Thus was Nabuchodonosor humbled. Dan. 4. M.

Ver. 5. Appeaseth. Gr. "and an eloquent tongue multiplies good words." H.—The affable gain our affections. Gideon pacified the incensed Ephraimites by a mild answer. Jud. 8. W.

Ver. 6. Counsellor. Only few are capable of this office, (H.) or of keeping a secret. Yet we must have peace, if possible, with all. Rom. 12:18. C.—The Scythians condemned many friends, no less than many wives, (Luc. Tox.) and Aristotle (Eth. 9:10) commends this maxim of Hesiod: μητε πολυξεινος μητ αζεινος; "neither to have too many guests, or intimate friends, nor to be without any."

Ver. 7. Get. Lit. "dost possess a friend, possess him in trial," (H.) as the Greek also has it. But the Heb. term kanah, means likewise, "to acquire," and a friend ought to be chosen with judgment. It is too late to try him after he has been received. C.—One must try much before a companion be chosen, that he may be afterwards preserved. Plut.—"Possess not friends quickly, but those whom thou hast obtained, reject not with disgrace." Solon. Laert. i. and ii. 8.

Ver. 8. Trouble. Such are interested friends; but true friendship is a kind and perfect agreement in all divine and human affairs." Cic. S. Aug. c. Acad. iii.—Religion must be the foundation.

Ver. 9. Reproaches. Disclosing all your imperfections. C.—“The closest alliances, being broken, produce the most bitter enmities.” Pliny, xxxvii. 4.

Ver. 12. Humble. “Friends must have a respect for each other.” Cic.

Ver. 13. Friends. Such as have been just described. Of these the maxim of Bias may be true, that people should “love as if they were to hate,” at some future period. Laert. i.—Entire confidence becomes those who are friends indeed.

Ver. 14. Defence. Jonathas and Chusai saved David.

Ver. 16. And immortality, is not in Greek. C.—But shews the meaning of life is this place; as a true friend will not cease to give good advice for eternity. H.—But even in this world, nothing can be more advantageous. C.—Amicus magis necessarius est quam ignis et aqua. Cic. S. Amb. off iii.—Him. Cicero himself says, “friendship can subsist only among the virtuous.” Yet these, judging others by themselves, are more easily imposed upon, and ought, therefore, to address themselves to God. C.

Ver. 17. Be. He will instill into his friend sentiments of piety, if he have them not before. Amicitia similes invenit aut facit. “Pythagoras desires that in friendship one should be formed of many.” Cic. v. 11. H.

Ver. 18. Wisdom. A good education will, at last, bring forth fruit, though the passions may choke the good seed for a time. C.—“Take wisdom for the provision on thy journey, from youth to old age.” Bias. Laert. i.

Ver. 22. Trial. Such stones were used to try people’s strength, (Zach. 12:3. C.) or to try gold. Vat.—The Syriac explains it of a precious stone. But the first idea is preferable. Many will not so much as attempt to become acquainted with wisdom and piety.

Ver. 23. Name. Perhaps the author may compare the Greek word Sophia, (C.) with Tsopuie, (H.) “hidden,” or with the Greek term, zophos, which means “darkness.” See c. 43:8 and 46:1. The original Heb. test is lost, so that we cannot determine to what word allusion is made. See Corn. a Lapide, who has written the best commentary on this book.—But, &c. is not in Greek. C.—Many prefer learning before piety. But S. Aug. says, the unlearned rise and take the kingdom of heaven, while we with our learning, devoid of heart, (or charity. H.) behold we fall into the dirt. Conf. viii. 8. W.

Ver. 28. Thee. She will even seek thee first. Wisd. 6:14. Prov. 8. Matt. 7:7.—Gotten. Continence does not here signify being chaste, (C.) though this is one of the fruits of wisdom. Wisd. 8:21. Gal. 5:23. H.

Ver. 30. Firm. Lit. “bases of virtue;” (H.) which is not in Gr. and rather embarrasses the sentence; (C.) though it may signify, that if we serve the Lord with fidelity, our building will never be overturned. H.

Ver. 35. Wise. Lit. “prudent.” The Latin has this epithet, because old people are not always such, though it may be expected of them. C.—“While wisdom increases, all other faculties decrease.” S. Jer. ad Nepot.

Ver. 36. Morning, with the utmost diligence. C.—“The very meeting of the wise is of advantage; and thou mayst learn something of a great man, though he open not his mouth.” Sen. ep. xciv.

ECCLESIASTICUS 7

Ver. 2. Evils. Gr. “injustice.” Evil communications corrupt good manners, (H.) or the punishment of sin follows it commission. C.

Ver. 3. Not. Gr. “not in.” H.—Seven-fold: more abundantly. Osee 10:11. Job 4:5. Gal. 6:7. C.—The wicked shall receive the fruit of their wickedness. W.

Ver. 4. Honour. Ambition is the source of ruin to men and empires. Jam. 3:1. C.

Ver. 5. God. Gr. “the Lord, and affect not wisdom (σοφίᾱς) before the king.” H.—Of ourselves we are despicable; and kings love not those whose superior talents seem to eclipse their own. David’s valour excited the hatred of Saul, and Alexander “was indignant that Antipater (his general, H.) had conquered, thinking his own glory was diminished by that which another acquired.” Curt. 6.

Ver. 6. Integrity. A judge is expose to many dangers. 2 Par. 19:6. C.—“He must be prudent and firm.” Plato, 2 Rep.—What will become of those who push themselves forward? S. Chrys. hom. xxxiv. in Heb. 13.

Ver. 8. To sin. Correct not thy severity by too great indulgence, nor entangle thyself with the sins of othres, as with a chain. Is. 5:18.

Ver. 9. Mind. If thou hast committed a fault, despair not, but pray, (v. 10) avoiding presumption. v. 14.

Ver. 12. Soul. Whether the person have incurred a fault or not, we ought to shew pity, reflecting on our own frailty. 1 Cor. 10:12.

Ver. 13. Devise. Lit. “plough.” But Heb. Charasch, means also to machinate.—Brother. We cannot hence infer, with Grotius, that the Jews allowed themselves to deceive strangers. C.

Ver. 14. Good, but very pernicious, (Mat. 5:37. Apoc. 21:8. S. Aug. Mend.) though some have thought that lies might be told to prevent evil. Orig. &c. C.

Ver. 15. Repeat not. Make not much babbling by repetition of words, but aim more at fervour of heart. Ch.—A supplication ought to be drawn up in a concise manner. H.—Judges and orators should speak with due reserve. Prayer must be unceasing: yet many words must not be used to inform God of our wants. Our Saviour seems to allude to this text. Mat. 6:7.

Ver. 16. High. Gen. 2:15 and 3:18. The patriarchs and the most famous Roman generals followed this employment.

Ver. 19. On the flesh, is not in Greek. Christ appears to have had this passage in view, Mark 9:44. Many suppose that both allude to the fire which burnt dead bodies, &c. in the vale of Hinnon. But all allow that the inextinguishable flames of hell are meant. Whether the fire and worms be corporeal or not has been questioned: the Greek Fathers, and the Church of Florence, generally maintain the negative, and the Latins assert it on better grounds. S. Thomas adopts the opinion of many of the Fathers, who explain the worm to denote the remorse of conscience. Yet many take it to be a worm, though not like those with which we are acquainted. Horreo vermem mendacem et mortem vivacem. S. Bern. cons. v. See S. Jer. Is. lxvi. A. Lap. S. Greg. Dial. iv. 29. S. Aug. De C. xx. 10. S. Amb. vii. in Lu. xiv. C.—Fire and the worm of conscience are both eternal. W.—The punishment at least is such, and more intense than we can conceive.

Ver. 21. Wife. The virtuous never approved of divorcing any but the incorrigible. C. Dis.

Ver. 27. Man. The Jews in general embraced the married state in their youth. S. Paul prefers virginity. 1 Cor. 7:8.

Ver. 28. Hateful. To marry such a one would be an occasion of divorce, which is always odious.

Ver. 29. Groanings, in child-bed, and (C.) during thy infancy. M. Job 4:4.

Ver. 33. Priests. Gr. “priest, and give him the portion which is enjoined thee, the first-fruit, and for negligence, and the gift of the shoulders, and the,” &c. v. 35. H.—Arms. That is, with all thy power: or else by arms (brachiis) are here signified the right shoulders of the victims, which by the law fell to the share of the priests. See v. 35. (Ch.) Ex. 29:28. Lev. 7:22.

Ver. 34. Few offerings, if thou be poor. Sa.—Be alone with the priest when thou dost confess, and imitate the small number.

Ver. 36. Poor. They and Levites are always to be invited. Deut. 12:19 and 14:26.

Ver. 37. Dead: detained in purgatory. W.—And restrain not grace from the dead. Withhold not from them the benefit of alms, prayers, and sacrifices. Such was the doctrine and practice of the Church of God, even in the time of the Old Testament. And the same has always been continued from the days of the apostles in the Church of the New Testament. Ch.—Meat was also placed on the tombs of the deceased, for the benefit of the poor. Tob. 4:18. S. Aug. Conf. vi. 2.

Ver. 38. Walk. Gr. “mourn.” H.—It was customary to join those who mourned for the dead, and to offer them meat, and endeavour to comfort them. C. Diss.

Ver. 39. Love, being approved both by God and man.

Ver. 40. End. Gr. “things;” death, judgment, and either hell or heaven. H.—This consideration is a powerful preservative against sin. W.—For who would dare to offend his judge, if he believed that the next moment he would be arraigned before his dreadful tribunal? C.—“We die daily,” &c. S. Jer. ad Heliod.

ECCLESIASTICUS 8

Ver. 2. Bring. Gr. “overweigh thee,” (H.) or turn the balance of the judge (C.) against thee, by money, (H.) which sometimes will corrupt kings. It is better, therefore, to avoid all law-suits. W.

Ver. 4. Fire. v. 13. Prov. 26:20. Such contests are full of danger.

Ver. 5. Family. Or “ancestors.” They will be accused of having neglected thy education. People generally associate with those of the like dispositions.

Ver. 13. Sinners. Gr. “a sinner, lest thou be burnt in the fire of his flame, when he shall be enraged. H.—This is not the time for reprehension. C.—The envoys of Ezechias prudently answered nothing to Rabsaces. S. Jer. in Is. xxxvi.—Useless correction must be avoided. M.

Ver. 14. Words. Thus the Pharisees attacked our Saviour. Matt. 22:15. In popular assemblies it is dangerous, but sometimes requisite to oppose bold declaimers. C. 9:25.

Ver. 16. Power. Thou must consider the debt as thy own. Prov. 6:1. C.

Ver. 20. Love. Gr. “keep the word secret. 21) Do no hidden thing before a stranger.” H.—The skilful alone must be consulted. W.

Ver. 22. Evil. Gr. “false kindness.” The rest is omitted. H.—Samson was undone by Dalilia. When Pompey was going on an embassy, he was taken by king Gentius, who wished to extort his secret from him; but he put his finger in the flame of a candle, that he might see that all his attempts would be fruitless. V. Max. iii. 3.

ECCLESIASTICUS 9

Ver. 1. Lest. “A husband should teach his wife to be chaste by his own example.” Lact. Relig. vi.

*Ipse miser docui quo posset ludere pacto
Custodes eheu! nunc premor arte meâ.* Tibul.

Ver. 4. Dancer. Gr. “musician, lest,” &c. H.—The same person is often given to both music and dancing, (M.) and these arts are very dangerous. Met. 14:6.—The dances in the East were more licentious than ours.

Ver. 5. Gaze. It is not always possible to avoid seeing them; but the greatest caution is requisite. Job 32:1. Mat. 5:28. C.—Jealousy and all dangerous occasions must be avoided. W.

Ver. 7. Streets. Gr. “retired parts,” where bad women dwell. C.

Ver. 8. Up. Gr. “of a fine appearance.” Grabe substitutes, “who has found favour.” H.—The Fathers condemn too much dressing as a mark of levity and incontinence.

Ver. 12. Nor, &c. is also admitted in many copies, though found in the Comp. and Ald edit. C.—Grabe replaces it on the authority of Clem. (Pæd. ii. 7.) as he does many other passages, which are erroneously left out in several editions. Prolog. t. 4. c. 3. It would therefore be injurious to the word of God, if we were always to reject the additions in the Vulg. which are not in the Vat. Gr. copy; and they must not all at least be considered as interpolations.

Ver. 16. Envy not. If thou hast faith and wisdom, thou wilt rather dread his punishment. Ps. 36:1 and Prov. 3:31. C.—He is like a summer flower, that is quickly cut down. W.

Ver. 17. Wrong. Gr. “applauses of the unjust. Remember that they will not be justified even to hell.” H.—The world itself will finally approve only of virtue. C.—The wicked will be condemned both by God and man. H.

Ver. 20. It. Gr. “Know what thou art ... walking on the pinnacles of the city.” H.—The same sense is given in the Vulg. as people walking among armed men in a rage, are exposed to imminent danger. M.

Ver. 21. Beware. Gr. “aim at.” Examine the person to whom thou intrusteth a secret.

Ver. 24. Artificers. All strive to excel in their profession.

Ver. 25. Hateful. Satirists are dangerous. C.—

Dummodo risum

Excutiat sibi, non cuiquam parcat amico. Hor. i. sat. 4.

ECCLESIASTICUS 10

Ver. 1. Judge. Gr. “instruct.” Ch.—The example of rulers is very powerful. W.

Ver. 2. Therein. Regis ad exemplum totus componitur orbis. Claud.—As a whole city is infected with the vices of princes, so it may be corrected by their good behaviour, (continentiâ.) Cic. Leg. 3.

Ver. 3. Rulers. All who wish to live under just kings. Prov. 29:4.

Ver. 4. It, as he did David. Job 34:30. Dan. 2:20. C.

Ver. 5. The scribe. That is, the man that is wise and learned in the law. Ch.—It also denotes an officer. Judg. 5:14. God must give light and success. C.

Ver. 6. Injury, out of revenge. H. Lev. 19:18.—“Cæsar used to forget nothing but injuries.” Cic. Ligar.—This at least is the character of a great man. S. Aug. ep. 138. and 54.

Ver. 7. Men. It invades the rights of the former, and disturbs the repose of mankind.—All. Gr. is obscure, “and from both proceeds injustice;” (C.) or, “it shall act unjustly.” H.—Pride attacks both God and man. Grot.

Ver. 8. Deceits. Hence kingdoms are changed. W.—The ambition and luxury of subjects (Cato) and the negligence of the rulers, bring on confusion. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. v. 13.

Ver. 9. Man. The desire of plunder, or of glory, occasions revolutions. H.—Covetousness is the root of all evils, and causes people to abandon the faith. 1 Tim. 6:10. W.

Ver. 10. Bowels, and would have no compassion for others or for himself. Some Gr. copies leave out as far as sale, but Grabe replaces the omission from the Comp.

Ver. 14. Beginning, or summit; αρχη. C.—Thus Lucifer and Adam fell by pride. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xii. 6. All sin, being a contempt of God, springs from pride, (Prosper. contemp. iii. 3.) and from an inordinate self-love. C.

Ver. 15. Sin, because man abandons God’s law, and falls into all misery. W.—The proud easily yield to all sorts of iniquity. M.

Ver. 16. Disgraced. Gr. “hath taken an exemplary vengeance, and hath,” &c. H.—Them, as he did the giants, Sodom, Nabuchodonosor, &c.

Ver. 17. Stead. Lu. 1:52. C.—“Thales being asked what was difficult to be seen; replied, a tyrant grown old.” Laert. 1.

Ver. 18. Nations, the Chanaanites, who submitted to the yoke: or rather the Hebrews. C.—Gr. “instead of them.”

Ver. 19. Foundation: overturning Sodom, Babylon, and even Jerusalem, for their sins. C.

Ver. 28. Wise. When Diogenes was exposed to sale, and asked what he could do, he answered, “I know how to command free men.” Laert. 6. —Joseph and Daniel obtained authority by their wise conduct. C.

Ver. 31. Desert. Let not avarice deprive thee of the necessities of life, nor do any thing beneath thy dignity. Lu. 21:19.

Ver. 33. Glorified. Gr. “honoured on account of his knowledge, and the rich is,” &c. H.

Ver. 34. And. Greek omits this sentence: (C.) yet Grabe has, And the man who is without honour in wealth, how much more so will he be in poverty? H. Eccle. 7:12.

ECCLESIASTICUS 11

Ver. 1. Men. Merit is preferable to high birth, as it surmounts difficulties. C.—Those who humble themselves, like Daniel, or fall under the oppression of others unjustly, as Joseph did, shall be exalted by God. W.

Ver. 2. Look. “The most robust is farthest removed from wisdom.” Cicero.—The beauty of the soul must be regarded. S. Amb. Virg. 3. C.

Forma bonum fragile est, quantumque accedit ad annos Fit minor, et spatio carpitur ipsa suo. Ovid, Art. 2.

Ver. 3. Sweetness. Honey was more esteemed before sugar became common. As the little bee produces such sweetness, so the less beautiful often by their abilities surpass the comely.

Ver. 5. Throne. Gr. “pavement.” Dionysius II. tyrant of Syracuse, was forced to turn schoolmaster at Corinth. C.—Crown. Abdalonymus, a gardener, was placed on the throne of Sidon; (Curt. 4.) and several Roman emperors had been of the meanest condition. Pliny xxxv. 18. David was a shepherd.

Ver. 6. Others, like Samson, Sedecias, Bajazet, &c.

Ver. 7. Man, as David did Miphiboseh. 2 K. 16:4. Constantine the Great grieved for having put his son Crispus to death on too weak evidence; and Theodosius repented for the sentence he had rashly passed on the inhabitants of Thessalonica. Even though the sentence should happen to be just, it would be wrong to pronounce it too hastily.

Ver. 8. Discourse. This is a mark of impertinence. Prov. 18:13. C.—Let others finish their sentence, and wait if there be any elder or better informed to speak. W.

Ver. 10. Escape. God will grant thee riches without so much solicitude (Lyran.) or rather meddle not with too many things, as that is the way to succeed in none, and destroys all repose.

Ver. 16. Sinners. They are all born in sin. But some appear to have worse dispositions than others. Ps. 57:4. C.—God is not the author of iniquity. H.—He punishes in order to save, though he be offended by the wicked choice of man. C.—Blindness of heart and obduracy are punishments of sin. W.

Ver. 17. Ever. All things work together for the good of the elect. Rom. 8:8. H.—God never abandons first. Trid. Ses. vii. 11.—The wicked often abuse graces. C.

Ver. 21. Covenant. All the Israelites partook in covenants entered into between God and their fathers, which became their own by circumcision, as we become entitled to the alliance of Christ by baptism.

Ver. 22. Place. If God bestow not riches, it may be for thy advantage.

Ver. 24. Fruit. Prosperity was a sign of God’s favour, under the old law. Now nothing is more equivocal, and the poor are declared blessed. C.

Ver. 26. Myself. Neither the poor nor the rich can be independent of God. H.—Perhaps no one does to hold this language. But many act as if they thought themselves gods, and some have claimed divine honours. 4 K. 18:34. Is. 14:13. Ezech. 29:3.

Ver. 28. Death, in old age, (Grot.) or rather after the soul's departure. The pagans had not this consolation. Their hopes were confined to the earth; and as they saw many honest people miserable, they introduced a chimerical idea of happiness, consisting in virtue alone. The views of Christians are chiefly bent on future rewards.

Ver. 29. Hour. The last of life. It demonstrates the vanity of past pleasures. Even a momentary toothache will banish the recollection of such delights.

Ver. 30. Children. If they take wicked ways, it is a stain on their father's memory; and though the latter were blameless, it must greatly disturb their repose. C.—Children may here denote the works of man, which can only then be pronounced perfect, when he is incapable of falling from the state of virtue. H.

Dicique beatus

Ante obitum nemo supremaque funera debet. Metam. iii.

—Solon inculcated this truth to Cræsus, and when the latter was about to be burnt to death by Cyrus, he called thrice upon Solon's name; the reason of which being told the conqueror, he took pity on the fallen king, and treated him with great respect. Laert. 1. Plut. in Solon—These sages only regarded the goods of this life. But the Christian's real happiness commences after death. Mors ... gratio missionis est. S. Amb. Mort. viii.

Ver. 36. Own. So Herod destroyed his wife's family, and Paris stole Helen. C.

ECCLESIASTICUS 12

Ver. 1. To whom. All must not be admitted into the house, nor treated with marks of particular esteem. Yet daily alms must be given without too scrupulous an enquiry. Lu. 6:30. C.—It would be wrong to encourage sinners, who would run to their ruin. But we must relieve the penitent. W.

Ver. 2. Lord. Christ rewards what good is done to his poor brethren.

Ver. 3. For. Gr. (4.) "Give to the pious, and receive not the sinner, (6.) Do," &c. H.—The gospel enjoins us to do good to all. S. Aug. (Dort. iii.

16.) and S. Tho. (ii. 2. q. xxxii. a ix.) explain this in a spiritual sense, that we must not partake in the crimes of others. We may also make presents to the virtuous, and pass over people of a different character, particularly when they would abuse our gifts. The honest poor must be preserved.

Ver. 10. Rusteth. So his malice always returns, (C.) and he shews what he is. Vat.—Christianity does not blame due reserve in treating with those whom we know not, or who have formerly injured us. Though we must love them from our heart, yet we need not intrust our secrets to them, nor even to every friend. Joab always retained a hatred for Abner, and Absalom for his brother and father, though they dissembled their resentment. C.—So the wicked commonly act. H.—We must love, but not trust them, being wise as serpents. Matt. 10. W.

Ver. 11. Of him. Gr. adds, “and thou shalt be to him as one who has rubbed a mirror, (of brass from the rust. It returns perpetually. C.) and shalt know that the rust is not removed for ever. Grabe. H.

Ver. 13. Beasts. Vipers, &c. Why should they familiarize themselves with such? Some Italians still handle serpents without fear, pretending that they are the descendants of S. Paul. C.—But he was never married, (1 Cor. 7 H.) and they are rather of the race of the Marsi, who formerly claimed the same privilege, having made use of some drugs to prevent the poison. The ancients believed that they could charm serpents.

Ver. 16. Blood. Jer. 41:6. Samson yielded to the tears of women. Judg. 14:16 and 16:6.

Ver. 18. Eyes. Is taken from v. 16. It is not in Gr. H.—His tears are like those of crocodiles, which cry when they are going to kill a man. C.

ECCLESIASTICUS 13

Ver. 1. Pride. We are naturally prone to it, and the friendship and manners of the proud will increase it. C.—If, therefore, the rich be not virtuous, it is dangerous to keep their company, (W.) both for this and the next world.

Ver. 3. Kettle. Made of iron. It will presently be broken. So the poor must suffer, if they marry, or have society with those who are much above their rank. C.

Ver. 7. Thou? Distrust those who promise much. C.—Spem pretio non emo. Ter.

Ver. 8. Drawn. Lit. “exhaust.” H.—He will feast thee, while he wants thy service, or he will come to dine with thee, and thus reduce thee to distress. Prov. 23:1. C.

Ver. 10. Humbled. By foolishly attempting to rival the sumptuous feasts of the great. V. 9 and 11 are not in the Greek. H.

Ver. 11. Wisdom. Depend not on others’ bounty. M.—When the cause of God is at stake, be firm, like S. Paul. C.—Pusillanimity in a superior might cause him to neglect his duty. W.

Ver. 14. Concerning, &c. is not expressed in Gr. H.—If a person be so weak as to disclose his secret to a great man, he will never be trusted by him. C.

Ver. 17. Awake. Be cautious even in sleep, if possible; or seem not to hear what passes at court. C.

Ver. 19. Himself. Similarity of manners and of condition is favourable to friendship. C.—The good and bad cannot be friends, their manners are so different. Cic.

Ver. 21. Lamb. Christ has taught people of different tempers to embrace the faith, which shows his admirable power. Is. 11:6.

Ver. 25. Away. Ps. 61:4. C.—“It is human to push those who are falling.” Cic. pro Rabir.

Ver. 26. Helpers. Who prevent his ruin, (C.) and turn his words to good sense. M.—Proud. Gr. “what should not be disclosed,” ἀπορρητα. H. C.—Their “fault increases, being fed by applause.” S. Greg. Mor. iv. 29.

Ver. 28. Clouds. People suppose that the rich must possess genius. Hor. ii. Sat. iii.—“Every one honours the rich.” Theog. C.—Exception of persons hinders many good counsels, and promotes evil. W.

Ver. 30. Ungodly. The abuse of riches is alone blameable. All things are clean for the clean, while the wicked perverts every advantage.

Ver. 31. Evil. Sorrow will manifest itself. C.—Imago animi vultus. Cic. Decorat. iii.

Ver. 32. Find. Few are perfectly sincere. C.—Gr. “a cheerful countenance is the vestige of a heart in good things, (H. prosperity.

M.) and the discovery of parables is the effect of laborious enquiries.”
H.—Study makes the countenance serious. C.

ECCLESIASTICUS 14

Ver. 1. Mouth. He is perfect. James 3:2.

Ver. 3. Envious. Who will neither use his wealth himself, nor bestow it. The true use of riches is to take a sufficiency, and to relieve the poor. C.

Ver. 4. Gathereth. Gr. “taketh from his,” &c. H.—Such misers are continually derided, but will never be cured. Eccle. 2:18 and 6:2. An old proverb says, “The miser doth nothing right but when he dies.” C.

Ver. 6. Envieth. By refusing himself the necessities of life, he rejects God’s gifts, and scandalizes his neighbour. W.

Ver. 7. Wickedness. Persisting covetous till death, as is commonly the case.

Ver. 11. Offerings. Make a proper use of what God has bestowed. C.

Ver. 12. The covenant of hell. The decree by which all are to go down to the regions of death, (Ch.) which hell frequently denotes. H.—Under the old law, all went down into some part of hell. W.—Hath been. Gr. “hath not,” &c. We know not when we shall die, though all must taste of death, (H.) and therefore we must make haste to do good. M.—Shall, or “is, he shall die the death,” (Gen. 2:17) as the Greek has this sentence. v. 18. H.

Certo veniunt ordine Parcæ, Nulli jusso cessare licet. Sen. Hercul.

Ver. 15. Sorrows. Gr. “toils,” or what thou hast amassed with much care. H.

Ver. 16. Take. Alms-deeds will ensure the remission of sins. This usury is lawful. We must also keep up a good society with our friends. C.—Justify. Gr. “sanctify thy soul (17) for.” Grabe. H.—Some read “love,” or divert thy soul by lawful amusements. The argument is addressed to Jews and Gentiles. C.

Ver. 18. Fade. Gr. “grow old like a garment. For the covenant from the beginning is, he shall die the death. Like a leaf flourishing on a bushy tree.” H.—Homer has the same thought, Il. vi.

Ver. 20. End. The fruits of the Spirit are alone immortal. v. 21. Gal. 6:8.

Ver. 27. Glory. As under the miraculous pillar. Ex. 24:17. He who shall abide with wisdom shall have nothing to fear. C.

ECCLESIASTICUS 15

Ver. 1. Good. Gr. “these things, and he who possess the knowledge of the law will find her,” (C.) or, “he who keeps the law, will receive her.” Grabe. 1 Cor. 4:20. H.—All who resolve to be virtuous, will have God’s grace, which preventeth them, and continueth to afford them assistance. W.

Ver. 2. Married. Lit. “from virginity.” H.—Those who have been espoused in youth have the most durable love for one another. Prov. 2:17. Mal. 2:14. C.

Ver. 5. She. Or Gr. “he shall open his mouth, (6) he shall find joy and a crown of exultation, and shall inherit,” &c. H.—Church, or assembly of the people. In both, the wise shall be heard with respect. C.

Ver. 9. Praise. Or Gr. “a proverb,” Prov. 17:7 and 26:7. C.—David invites even dragons to praise God, but sinners never. S. Chrys. orat. prebyt. Ps. 49:16.—The person who preaches will, and lives not accordingly, injures God. W.

Ver. 10. Wisdom. Gr. “it was not sent to him, (C.) or he was not commissioned by the Lord. For praise shall be spoken in wisdom, and the Lord will give him success.”

Ver. 11. She. Ignorance and vice are defects, and consequently not the work of God, but of the perversion of free-will. See Jam. 1:13. Ezech. 33:11. S. Aug. Grat. & lib. ii. C.—Beza says, that God ordained Adam’s fall, but for a good end; and decreed justly what men unjustly perform, (ref. Castel. ii.) which is refuted here, and Deut. 7:11. &c. W.

Ver. 14. Counsel. Many explain this of Adam, before his fall, when he stood not in need of asking continually for God’s assistance. S. Aug. correp. ii. n. 35.—But if we examine the context, it shews that man, in his present state, is declared inexcusable if he yield to sin, as he has still free-will, which may avoid it, with the grace of God, (C.) which is always ready to support us. Gr. subjoins, (v. 16.) “if thou wilt, thou shall keep the commandments, even to execute faithfully the good pleasure. (17.) He.” &c. H.

Ver. 15. Precepts. These would never be imposed, if man were not free. C.

Ver. 17. And fire. Or, good and evil, as the Vulg. explains it, (v. 18) though the Gr. be silent. H.—The law written on the heart, as well as on the tables of stone, shews man his duty; and he has free-will to comply with it. Deut. 30:15. Jer. 21:8. C.—He may enjoy every advantage of life, denoted by these two elements. Lyr.

An quod in his vitæ causa est, hæc perdidit exul
His nova fit conjux; hæc duo magna putant. Ovid, Fast. 4.

Ver. 21. Commanded. He only permitted the wickedness of Semei, (2 K. 16:10) and the persecutors of his people, whose hearts are already bent on evil. S. Aug. Grat. & lib. xx.

ECCLESIASTICUS 16

Ver. 1. Rejoice. Gr. “desire not an useless multitude of children,” &c.

Ver. 2. Labours. All will end in ruin which springs from corruption. H.—Achab and Gedeon had seventy sons, but all were presently exterminated, while Abraham had a numerous posterity by his son Isaac.

Ver. 7. Out. They shall perish by civil and foreign wars, (C.) and by God’s indignation. Deut. 32:23. H.—They who yield to the fire of concupiscence, will feel God’s wrath for ever. W.

Ver. 9. Of their word, is not in Gr. but may imply the effrontery of the Sodomites, who were not ashamed of openly professing their brutality. Ezech. 16:49. C.

Ver. 11. Six hundred thousand footmen, &c. Viz. the children of Israel, whom he sentenced to die in the wilderness. Num. 14. (Ch.) Ex. 12:37.

Ver. 14. Off. The virtuous shall be rewarded. Rom. 2:6. Gr. “the patience of the impious shall not delay.” He shall soon be punished, (H.) while he who gives only a cup of cold water to the poor, shall find a recompense. Matt. 10. W.

Ver. 15. And, &c. is not in Gr. the different editions of which vary. C.—Instead of this sentence, Grabe inserts from the Comp. “the Lord hardened Pharaoh, that he might not know him, that his surprising works might be manifest under heaven. To every creature his mercy is evident, and he has divided his light from darkness with adamant. H.—His counsels are unsearchable, and the good are entirely separated from the reprobate. 1 Tim. 6:16. Lu. 16:26.

Ver. 16. High. God would not be God if he were indifferent about virtue. None of his creatures can be beneath his notice. All the world is but like a drop of water to him. Is. 40:15. 22. He cannot be distracted. C.

Ver. 20. And. Gr. “his ways.” v. 21. H.—God’s threats and promises touch not the sinner.

Ver. 22. Testament. The law, or the judgment, which God shall pronounce. C.

Ver. 26. And their. The heavenly bodies continue their courses, (Grot. Jans.) and all things still subsist, (H.) being formed and preserved by an intelligent being. He refutes the epicureans. C.

Ver. 29. Be. Gr. “they shall not disobey his order for ever.” H.—After the sun, &c. had been regulated on the fourth day, God set in order sublunary things. v. 30. C.

Ver. 31. Forth, the glory and power of God upon the earth. Ch.—Before. Gr. “hath covered its (the earth’s) face, and into it,” &c. H.—All living creatures shall return to dust. Ps. 103:29. C.—Rational and brute creatures praise God by answering the ends designed by him. W.

ECCLESIASTICUS 17

Ver. 1. And made. This is transposed in Gr. to the end of the third verse. H.—The creation of other things had been specified before. Man was designed to be immortal, and was made like to God in his soul, which is spiritual, intelligent, &c. But sin caused his days to be shortened. C.—By original sin, he lost the justice which he had at first received. W.

Ver. 4. Dominion. This is greatly diminished since the fall. C.

Ver. 6. Evil. Man has understanding, and may merit, which brutes cannot.

Ver. 7. Hearts. God will bring them to judgment, and has given them a law. C.

Ver. 9. Life. The observance of which will insure life both now and for ever. Rom. 10:5. This was the peculiar privilege of Israel, (C.) though the natural law had the same effect, and God had left none without sufficient light. H.—The law was for a trial of obedience. Gen. 2. W.

Ver. 10. Everlasting. The gospel has perfected or fulfilled the law. Matt. 5:17.

Ver. 11. Saw. When he gave the law on Mount Sinai. Ch. Ex. 20:18.—Voice. Thunder. Ps. 28:4. C.

Ver. 12. Neighbour. Of whom the second table, or the seven last precepts of the law, speak. H.

Ver. 13. Eyes. He conducted them in the pillar, and always watched over them. Gr. Rom. adds, “their ways are bent on evils from youth, and he could not.” Comp. “for every man is bent on evils from youth, and they could not from stony hearts make them fleshy, (Ezec. 36:26. C.) for in the division of the nations of all the earth (14) over,” &c. Grabe.

Ver. 15. God. Comp. adds, “he nourishes him as his first-born with instruction, and dividing the light of love, he does not abandon him.” H.—But the Rom. edit. agrees with us. God declared himself king of Israel, (C.) and its guardian, while he intrusted other nations to angels. Orig. S. Aug. Ps. cxxxviii. Glossa. Deut. 32:8.

Ver. 16. Ways. He suffers them not to follow their own inclinations, like the Gentiles; but chastises them if they have done wrong. Acts 14:15. C.

Ver. 17. Covenants. Gr. “injustices were not concealed from him, and all,” &c. H.—God. Complutensian adds, “but the Lord being good, and knowing his work, neither left nor abandoned them, still sparing them.” Heb. 13:5. H.—This is a gloss omitted in the Rom. edit. Ps. 77:34.

Ver. 18. Alms, and all good works are placed in God’s treasury, and as a ring which a person wears on his finger with the utmost care. Jer. 22:24. Cant. 8:6.—Eye. Gr. Comp. adds, (C.) “dividing to his sons and daughters penance, (19.) And.” H.—The Rom. and Ald. edit. agree with the Vulg.—Head. Giving a crown of glory.—And shall, &c. is not in Greek. It implies that the wicked will be punished like Core. C.

Ver. 22. Offend less: minue offendicula. That is, remove sins, and the occasions of sins. Ch.

Ver. 24. And. Gr. “return to the Highest, and be converted from injustice, (for he shall lead from darkness to the light of health) and greatly abhor abomination. Who shall praise the most high in hell, instead of the living, and of those who make a return of praise, or confession? Praise perisheth from the dead, as from one who has had no being. The living and sound of heart shall praise the Lord. (28.) How,” &c. H. Ps. 87:11. C.—We cannot merit perseverance, but must pray for it incessantly. W.

Ver. 25. Go to the side, &c. Fly from the side of satan and sin, and join with the holy ones that follow God and godliness. Ch.—Christ is styled the father of the age to come. Is. 9. M.

Ver. 29. Immortal. We all stand in need of a pardon. C.—And. Gr. (30.) “what ... and it fails. And flesh and blood shall study evil. (31.) He.” H.—We cannot exact absolute perfection from any mortal. But still a person may be watchful, and trust in God’s mercies. C. 18. C.

ECCLESIASTICUS 18

Ver. 1. Together, as to their substance, though they received different forms successively, as Moses relates. Both writers are divinely inspired. S. Aug. de Gen. ad Lit. iv. 33. W. S. Tho. i. p. 974. a. 2.—Some suppose that all things were really formed in an instant, and that the order described by Moses is only as we should conceive it. Cajet.—This passage only means that God alone was the creator both of the sun and of man, and without him nothing was made, (Jo. 1. Ps. 32:15) as he gave existence to all, κοινῇ, “in common.” C.—And he. Gr. “and there is no other besides him who steers the world with the palm of his hand. And all things obey his will;; for he is king of all, in his might, separating what is holy among them from the profane. (2.) He has enabled no one to,” &c. H.

Ver. 5. Added. The works speak for themselves, though man be silent. C.

Ver. 6. Begin. God is so great and incomprehensible, that when an has done all that he can to find out his greatness and boundless perfections, he is still to begin: for what he has found out, is but a mere nothing, in comparison of his infinity. Ch.—It is best to adore him in silence and humility. C.

Ver. 7. Grace. Gr. “utility.” H.—Evil. What can man do for or against God? Job 22:3. Ps. 15:2.

Ver. 8. Years. Seneca fixes on the same number; (Brev. Vitæ. 3.) Macrobius on seventy, for the life of man; which nearly agrees with the author of Ps. 89:10. H.—It seldom happens that people exceed 70, or 100 years. But what is this compared with eternity? C.—Gr. “a hundred years are many ... so are a thousand years in the day of the age,” or of αἰῶνος, eternity. H. Ps. 89:4 and 2 Pet. 3:8.

Ver. 9. Them. Human misery calls forth God’s pity. C.

Ver. 12. Flesh. It is infinite and disinterested. Man assists his neighbour expecting a recompense, and remembering that he may be distressed.

Ver. 14. Judgments. To execute his orders. Here ends the discourse begun c. 14:22. C.

Ver. 15. Complaint. Gr. “reproach.” H.—The manner of giving, enhances the value of the gift, or even surpasses it. C.

Super omnia vultus

Accessere boni, nec iners pauperque voluntas. Met. 8.

Ver. 20. Medicine. This is more requisite and easy to do in the maladies of the soul, which are brought on by our own fault. Principiis obsta. C.—Mercy. Greek, “propitiation in the hour of visitation,” (H.) or punishment. C.

Ver. 21. Sick. Rom. Gr. adds, “by abstinence, and in the time of sins, manifest a conversion.” H.—If we take precautions to avoid illness, why should we neglect the concerns of our soul?—Conversation, or good conduct.

Ver. 22. Always. These admirable maxims seem copied from the gospel. Lu. 18:1. C.—The same spirit dictated all the Scriptures. H.—Those pray always who neglect not this duty at proper times, and are always resolved to do so. S. Aug. ep. 121. q. ad Prob. W.—Gr. “be not hindered from performing thy vow in good time, and wait not to be justified, (H.) or to put it in execution till death. Deut. 23:21. Before thou takest a vow,” &c. Examine well if thou intend to perform it. C.

Ver. 23. God. Can we expect that he will hear what we do not ourselves? To approach his majesty, without repentance and attention, is presumptuous. We must ask God to open our lips, and do what lies in us. Trid. C.

Ver. 24. Face, saying to the reprobate, Depart, &c. C. 7:40. Matt. 25:41. H.

Ver. 25. Riches. By their good use, lay up a treasure in heaven, and be always humble. C. 11:27.

Ver. 26. God. All things continually change. C.—Rotam volubili orbe versamus. Boet. cons. 2.—Reflect on Aman and Mardochai. C.

*Quem dies vidit veniens superbum,
Hunc dies vidit fugiens jacentem*. Sen. Thyeste.

Ver. 27. Thing. Mindful of the reverse of fortune. C. 11:30. Prov. 28:14. C.—Sloth, and repent. Greek adds, “the fool will not observe the season.” H.

Ver. 28. Her. It is a rare thing to discern and give due praise to merit. C.

Ver. 29. And judgments. Gr. “full of accuracy.” Some add the title “restraint of the soul.” H.

Ver. 31. Enemies. This motive will make the most impression on those who are slaves to their passions. C.

Ver. 32. Small. Lit. “nor in those which are small.” H.—Composed of the meanest citizens. Quarrels and sin are there almost inevitable. C.—Gr. “rejoice not in high living; nor beg for its symbol,” (H.) or feast, in which each person contributed his share, συμβολη, as the next verse implies. C.—Symbolum dedit, cœnavit. Ter. And.

ECCLESIASTICUS 19

Ver. 1. Little. Small expenses, often repeated, will ruin an estate, (H.) and the neglect of venial sins is of the most dangerous consequence. C.—The best way to avoid great faults, is to guard against small ones. W.

Ver. 2. Off. From God (C.) and religion. See Gen. 19:33 and 2 K. 11:1. Os. 4:11.

Ver. 3. Number. Of the living. H.—The venereal disease seems to be described.

Ver. 4. Credit. To harlots. 1 Cor. 6:18. C.

Ver. 5. Hateth. Gr. “resisteth pleasure, shall crown his life. He who guardeth his tongue, shall live without contention: and he,” &c. H.

Ver. 6. He. Gr. omits this explication of the preceding verse.

Ver. 8. Not. Only to God and his minister. Friends do not require to be informed of such things. Gr. “disclose not the conduct of others.”—Be. Gr. “be not.” Do not boast of sins which thou hast not committed, (C.) as S. Aug. did before his conversion. H.—But the Vulg. seems preferable. C.—In ordinary conversation to reveal our faults would be dangerous, but not in confession, or in religious orders, for advancement in virtue. W.

Ver. 9. Hate thee. Whether thou hast spoken of thy own or of others’ faults, he will distrust thee.

Ver. 10. Burst thee. Like poison, or as new wine (C.) does a leathern bottle. H.—This expression well implies the eagerness which some manifest to divulge a secret injurious to their neighbour. C.

Ver. 13. Understood. Gr. “done it.” H.—For want of coming to a timely explanation, many friendships are broken, owing to groundless surmises.

Ver. 15. Committed. Or “a false report,” commissio. C.—Gr. “a foolish calumny.” H.—Monere et moneri proprium est veræ amicitiae. Cic.

Ver. 17. Him. Gentle means must be first tried. Matt. 18:15. Gal. 6:1. H.

Ver. 18. Place. Love true piety. C.—Disposition. Gr. “complying with.” H.—The Complut. has several additions which are not in the Rom. edit. C.—Grabe inserts them. But it is not necessary to mark here every such variation. H.

Ver. 22. Unjust. S. James (3:15) describes true and false wisdom. Rom. 16:19. C.

Ver. 23. Wickedly. Gr. “in black,” (H.) wearing the robes of mourning. Grot.

Ver. 24. And. Gr. “there,” &c. H.—The hypocrite abstains from exterior crimes, only through fear. C.—False pretence of piety, is hypocrisy; and it is wrong for a superior to reveal his secret faults to his subjects. Reason must direct. W.

Ver. 26. Countenance. Yet this is not always the case. v. 28. We may sometimes condemn a person unjustly, on such outward appearances. C.

Ver. 28. Lying. Gr. “a reproof which is not seemly; and there is one,” &c. H.

ECCLESIASTICUS 20

Ver. 1. Prayer. A friend’s excuses must be heard. C.—Gr. “and he who apologises shall be preserved from ruin.” Grabe adds, “how good it is for one who has been rebuked,” &c. v. 4. H.—Thus the guilty merit pardon, and the innocent obtain a greater reward, and satisfy for former offences. W.

Ver. 2. Maiden. Or “woman,” (H.) who has been entrusted to his care. M.—Such people are not free from concupiscence, which must be restrained by the virtue of chastity. S. Aug. c. Jul. vi. 14.

Ver. 8. Hated. As the pests of society. See Cic. off. 1.

Ver. 9. Loss. The prosperity of the wicked must not be envied. Ps. 38:1, 8. C.

Ver. 11. Glory. Galba “would have been universally deemed worthy of the empire, if he had not reigned.” Tacit. Hist. 1.—Adrian VI. thought the pontificate the greatest misfortune to which he had been exposed; and this observation was engraven on his tomb.—Estate. By merit.

Ver. 12. Sevenfold. As the merchandise was good for nothing, which the miser had obtained for a little money, thinking to save thereby.

Ver. 13. Graces. Or favours bestowed with ill-nature.

Ver. 14. Sevenfold. He expects more. C.—His intention is full of guile, who flattereth and detracteth for the sake of gain. W.

Ver. 15. Much. As Dido did. “This is to make a display of favours to excite hatred.” Sen. Ben.

Ver. 16. Hateful. He seems to distrust you, and will not permit his goods to be of any service. C.

Ver. 17. Have. Gr. “say I have,” &c.—His. Gr. “my,” as also v. 18. H.—

Such is the language of the fool.

Ver. 19. That, &c. Riches and poverty are both wrong to misers and fools. Gr. “he had as well be without any thing.” C.

Ver. 20. Pavement. It is equally destructive.

Ver. 21. Grace, (acharis) impolite and importunate. C.

Ver. 23. Shall. Gr. adds, “not.” Yet if a person has had the will to offend, he must repent, though he could not put it in execution. H.

Ver. 24. Himself. Being afraid to beg for necessities, or given too much.

Ver. 25. Nothing. People are always displeased, when a promise is broken. C.

Ver. 26. Man. “It is the vice of slaves.” Arist. Ethic.

Ver. 27. Lying. He exposes honour and virtue, without making restitution. C.—He throws all into confusion, and we can trust him with nothing. M.

Ver. 29. A. Gr. adds a title, “discourses of proverbs.”

Ver. 30. And ... exalted, is not in Gr. but explains the meaning of the former sentence.—Escape. Gr. “obtain pardon for iniquity.” H.—The great will protect him.

Ver. 31. Make. Gr. “like a bit in the mouth, remove corrections.” Ex. 23:8. C.

Ver. 32. Both? He who, through a false humility refuses to take charge of others, resembles a man who locks up his corn in time of scarcity. S. Greg. Part. iii. 26. Matt. 25. C.—Wisdom must be shewn for the benefit of others. W.

Ver. 33. Folly. He may still appear to have some sense, and injures none.—It is convenient to conceal faults, provided they be amended. W.

ECCLESIASTICUS 21

Ver. 1. Thee. The just may offend: but the wicked relapse continually.

Ver. 2. Hold. Gr. “bite,” (C.) in the same sense. M.—Serpents sting in secret: so all sins inveigle the soul. W.

Ver. 3. Lion. Yet only those are hurt, who consent to sin. The devil may go round about, (1 Pet. 5:8) and tempt; (C.) he cannot bit, except a man willingly expose himself, and come near. v. 2.

Ver. 4. Remedy. In man. H.—Only the sovereign physician can cure it. C.

Ver. 5. Riches. As they make enemies arise. Gr. subjoins, “so the house of the proud shall be made desolate.” H.—Roboam lost ten tribes by an insolent answer, and the Tarquins were expelled for their pride.

Ver. 6. Speedily. God is the protector of the poor. Ps. 10:5.

Ver. 7. Sinner. He rejects all medicines. How shall he be cured? C.—They who fear God, will examine their actions when they are warned. W.

Ver. 8. By him. And to avoid his reproaches. Gr. “knoweth when he is ruined.” H.—He is more reserved, and escapes the dangers of talkativeness.

Ver. 9. Winter. This season is unfit for building; so the man who borrows, may be forced to pay again (C.) before it is convenient for him. H.—Injustice will bring on ruin. Jer. 23:13. Some Gr. copies have, “stones for a heap over his tomb,” as Achan and Absalom were treated. Reputation, or goods ill-acquired, will not continue long. W.

Ver. 10. Fire. All their grandeur will end in smoke. H.—Mal. 4:1. Matt. 13:30.

Ver. 11. Stones. It is broad and easy. Matt. 7.

Ver. 12. Thereof. Practice makes perfect. A painter may produce a better piece by this means, than one who is more acquainted with theory, (C.) and neglects it. H.

Ver. 15. Bitterness. True wisdom promotes the general good.

Ver. 16. Of life. Which never fails. Jo. 4:14 and 7:38.

Ver. 20. Church. Or assembly, Job 29:11. 21. C.—All good people dislike senseless talk, and approve of what is edifying. W.

Ver. 21. Fool. All is in confusion, like a heap of ruins.

Ver. 22. Hand. He esteems instruction burdensome.

Ver. 23. Low. A smiling countenance is commendable, but loud laughter is to be avoided. Clem. Pæd. ii. 5.—It causes too great a change, (Plato, Rep. 3.) and is a mark of folly. Eccle. 7:5. S. Aug. c. Acad. ii. 2.

Ver. 25. House. And meddles with the concerns of others. C.—Of the mighty, is not in Gr. The wise will not easily receive invitations. H.

Ver. 26. Window. Gr. “door” with impudence. C.

Ver. 29. Heart. Understanding. H.—The wise speak with reflection. Prov. 16:23.

Ver. 30. While the ungodly, &c. He condemneth and curseth himself; inasmuch as by sin he takes part with the devil, and is, as it were, his member and subject. Ch.—In vain does he lay the blame of his sins on the devil. v. 3. C.—He condemns himself by imitating the wicked. Lu. 19. W.

Ver. 31. By all. Gr. “in the neighbourhood.” The rest is omitted. H.

ECCLESIASTICUS 22

Ver. 1. Sluggard. Who neglects his own and others’ welfare. C.—Disgrace. He is still despised here, and punished eternally. Matt. 25:30. W.

Ver. 2. Pelted. Gr. “compared to a lump of dung.” H.

Ver. 3. Loss. “I wish,” said Augustus, “I had never married, or that I had died without children.” Suet.

Ver. 4. Inheritance. Her wisdom and economy. Prov. 31:29. Women had no inheritance among the Jews, when they had brothers.

Ver. 5. Bold. In speaking and acting without restraint. C.

Ver. 6. Mourning. S. Jer. (ep. ad Julian) quoting this sentence, calls it “divine Scripture.” Prov. 25:20.—Of time. Or “stripes and instruction well-timed, are wisdom.” H.—Only the wise know how to correct with advantage.

Ver. 7. Fool. Who is incapable of understanding. Those who have sense may be corrected, though they may have taken evil courses.

Ver. 9. This? The Athenian philosophers and Festus derided S. Paul.

Ver. 10. For the fool. In the language of the Holy Ghost, he is styled a fool that turns away from God to follow vanity and sin. And what is said by the wise man against fools is meant of such fools as these. Ch.—Their wicked life is worse than death. W.

Ver. 13. Day. There was a longer time assigned for great men. Gen. 50:3. Num. 20:30 and Deut. 34:8.—Life. This is understood of those who have lost all reason, or sense of religion. S. Monica wept for her son, hoping that he would repent, as a certain bishop had comforted her. S. Aug. Conf. iii. ult.

Ver. 17. Lead? Gold alone is heavier. But the fool is compared with lead, and is most insupportable.

Ver. 19. Wood. Such were used in the walls of Jerusalem, (4 Mac. 2) and of the temple and palace. 3 K. 6:36 and 7:12.

Ver. 21. Cost. Of lime. C.—Gr. omits this comparison, as well as the 23d verse. H.

Ver. 23. Not fear. This seems contrary to what goes before. But fools are sometimes intrepid even to harshness. C.

Ver. 24. Resentment. Or “sense,” (H.) by means of pungent reprimands. C.

Ver. 25. Away, (Gr.) Lit. “will knock them down,” dejiciet. H.—Deliberate provocations (v. 27) are pardoned with more difficulty than a sudden impulse of wrath. v. 26. On such occasions we may withdraw our confidence, but not our charity and patience. Matt. 5:11. C.—A true friend will not be lost for a temporal damage; but he must not be slighted. W.

Ver. 29. Inheritance. Gr. adds, “for poverty is not always contemptible, nor is the senseless rich worthy of admiration.” H.

Ver. 32. Of him. Yet I will not follow their example. C.—If my friend has behaved ill to me, he will be the greatest sufferer. H.

Ver. 33. Not. Ps. 140:3. Who can sufficiently guard his tongue? C.

Ver. 1. By them. Viz. the tongue and the lips, mentioned in the last verse of the foregoing chapter. Ch.—We cannot resist of ourselves, and must therefore pray to God. W.—We have need of a good master to correct our eagerness in speaking. C.

Ver. 2. Ignorances, &c. That is, that the scourges and discipline of wisdom may restrain the ignorances, that is, the slips and offences which are usually committed by the tongue and the lips. Ch.—The tongue is a restless evil. Jam. 3:8.

Ver. 3. Over me. The noblest motives are not always proposed first.

Ver. 5. Eyes. God never makes such presents, but he permits us to fall in punishment of former transgressions. C.—Coveting. Gr. “from thy servants all giant-like affection. Vain hopes and desires remove from me; and thou shalt possess him who wishes to serve thee without ceasing.” Grabe. H.

Ver. 6. Foolish, (infrunitæ) is used in this sense by Seneca. C.—Greek has not this epithet. The title, “instruction of the mouth,” follows, (H.) to v. 20. C.

Ver. 10. Them. Gr. Alex. has only (9.) “swearing, (10) and have not a custom of naming the Most High.” Other editions have “the holy one.” H.—Rash and false oaths are forbidden. Jer. 4. Matt. 5. W.

Ver. 11. Sin. “No swearing is secure.” S. Aug.—Slaves were forced to confess the truth by torments; free-men took an oath; and priests gave their word. Plut. Prob.

Ver. 13. Dissemble. Gr. “despise.” He will be punished, at least, by God. C.

Ver. 14. In vain. Without a design to execute, (Grot.) or through levity, or rather falsely. Ex. 23:1. Deut. 5:11.

Ver. 15. Opposite. Or equal. Gr. “clothed with death.” He denotes blasphemy, (Lev. 24:14) or the invitation to idolatry, (Deut. 13:1) or calumny. v. 17. Lev. 19:12. C.—In oaths God is called to witness, as being unable to deceive. But blasphemy attributes to him or to others what does not belong to them. W.

Ver. 16. Merciful. Or true believers, Assideans. 1 Mac. 2:42.

Ver. 17. Of sin. A Hebrew idiom, to imply something criminal. Those who have laid aside shame, are capable of any wickedness.

Ver. 18. Men. Treat thy parents with no less regard, (C.) even though thou shouldst be exalted in dignity. Lyr.—Thus thou wilt be rewarded, (C.) of if thou transgress, wilt be brought to judgment. Bossuet.—Gr. “thou shalt sit,” &c. H.

Ver. 19. Nativity. Wish not that thou hadst not been born of such parents. Grot.

Ver. 20. Life. For who will admonish him?

Ver. 21. Two. The first is a passionate man, (v. 22) the second a libertine, (v. 23) and the third an adulterer. v. 25. C.

Ver. 22. Hot. With any furious passion, (Vat.) or anger, (C.) avarice, (W.) or lust. M.

Ver. 23. Mouth. Gr. “body.”—Fire. Shameful disease will come upon him. C. 19:3. His brutal passion will never be satiated. C.

Ver. 24. Sweet. He is not delicate in his choice. H.—All obstacles increase his irregular desires. Prov. 9:17. C.

Ver. 27. And. Gr. “the eyes of men are his dread.” H.—Such is the folly of the adulterer!

Ver. 30. And he. Gr. “and where,” &c. He shall be stoned. Lev. 20:10. C.—Taken. Gr. subjoins (v. 32.) “so,” &c. H.—If carnal adultery be thus punished, how much more will spiritual adultery, schism, and apostacy from the Catholic religion? W.

Ver. 38. Shall. Gr. “that thou shouldst be taken under his protection.” H.

ECCLESIASTICUS 24

Ver. 1. Wisdom. Gr. title, “the praise of wisdom.” Here the book of Ecclesiastes is imitated. H.—See also Prov. 8 and Wisd. 7:24 and 8:1. The pagans boasted of their philosophy. But it was not to be compared with the true religion, which the Israelites possessed.—Own self. Lit. “soul.” She alone is capable of this office. C.—In God. Referring all the glory to him. M.—This sentence is not in Gr. H.—The second person of the Trinity proclaims his own praises. W.

Ver. 2. Power. The temple, rather than in the schools of Athens. C.

Ver. 3. And. Gr. (5.) “I came out of the mouth of the Highest, (6) and as," &c. H.—He alludes to the darkness which covered the earth. Gen. 1:2. Job 38:9. Many explain this of the uncreated wisdom, born in the womb of the blessed Virgin; and the Church, in her office, applies it to her in a mystical sense. But it seems literally to refer to the wisdom and grace granted to the saints, which enlightens every man, and presides over the creation.

Ver. 7. Cloud. Guiding the Israelites (Ex. 13:21) or near the throne of God. Wisd. 9:4. C.

Ver. 8. Penetrated. Gr. "walled in."

Ver. 11. By. Gr. "with all," &c. H.—Lord. Israel was chosen gratuitously. C.—Gr. of whom?

Ver. 12. Rested. Gr. "gave rest to my tent." H.—So Virgil says, requierun. flumina cursus. M.—God offers grace, but forces none to accept of it. W.

Ver. 13. And take, &c. is not in Gr. H.—This may be explained of the true religion, or (C.) of the word of the Father. S. Aug. Trin. i. 12.—In the Church only is effectual grace, (W.) or none will receive it, who refuses to hear the Church. H.

Ver. 14. Created. Or engendered. Prov. 8:22.—Him. As his priestess, directing all the ministers of the temple. C.—Christ is begotten by the understanding, and the Holy Ghost proceeds from love. Creation is not here taken strictly. W.

Ver. 16. His. Gr. "of his inheritance, (17.) I," &c. H.

Ver. 17. Sion. Beyond the Jordan. Gr. "Hermon." Deut. 4:48.

Ver. 18. Cades-barne. Num. 20:1. Gr. "Engaddi," (C.) or Rom. and Alex. edit. "on the sea shore." H.

Ver. 19. In the streets, in not in Gr. C.—Grabe inserts, by the waters. H.—These trees flourish most in such situations, and people delighted to walk under them in hot countries.

Ver. 20. Myrrh. Which distills through the bark, without any incision.

Ver. 21. Onyx. A shell-fish in the Indies, which feeds on the spica nardi, and hence becomes odoriferous.—Aloes, (gutta) the finest myrrh.—Not cut. Gr. "in a tent."—And my, &c. is not in Gr. Wisdom is compared to what was most esteemed. C.

Ver. 22. Honour. Rich and pleasant. H.

Ver. 24. I, &c. Grabe restores this verse, and, instead of the next, has, “but I am given to all my children, being born myself for ever, to those who are specified by him. (26.) Come,” &c. H.—The text seems to be corrupt. C.

Ver. 25. Life. Christ declares himself to be, the way, the truth, and the life.

Ver. 27. Spirit. Greek, “remembrance.” It has not the following verse.

Ver. 29. Thirst. Without being ever disgusted. Jo. 4:13. C.—Experience of carnal delights is quite the reverse. S. Greg. hom. xxxvi. Ev.—The more grace a person has, the more he desireth and receiveth from God. W.

Ver. 30. Sin. Or lose their labour. They shall be directed in the paths of life. C.

Ver. 31. They. Gr. “all these things are the book of the covenant of the most high God, the law which Moses gave unto us, an inheritance to the synagogues of Jacob.” Grabe puts in a different character from the Compl. “Lose not strength in the Lord, but stick to him, that he may strengthen you. The Lord Almighty is the only God, and there is no other Saviour.” Then follows, (v. 35.) “who,” &c. H.—Everlasting. Provided his life correspond with his doctrine. No occupation can be more glorious. C.—Let thy Scriptures be my chaste delights: let me not be deceived in them, nor deceive others by them. S. Aug. Conf. xi. 2. C. Dan. 12. M.

Ver. 32. Truth. They are equally certain, and no more is required. C.—He that loves has fulfilled the law. H.

Ver. 34. King. Viz. Christ, who by his gospel, like an overflowing river, hath enriched the earth with heavenly wisdom. Ch.—Ever. The Lord (H.) is a king, (Carriers) who, &c. v. 35. H.—Solomon’s wisdom is also praised. C.—The sceptre of David remained till the captivity, and the royal family continued in esteem till Christ. Yet David was only a figure of Christ, the eternal king. W.

Ver. 35. Phison. Or Phase of Colchis, which rises in Armenia, like the Tigris and Euphrates, all which overflow their banks at the beginning of summer, on account of the snow melting.

Ver. 36. Harvest. The snow of Libanus make the Jordan swell at Pentecost. Jos. 3:15.

Ver. 37. Light. Giving to all the light of reason, and to Israel the law.

Ps. 147:20.—Gehon. Or Araxes, which descends from Armenia into the Caspian sea, though some erroneously take it to be the Nile, (C.) which overflows at the same time as the Euphrates. Pliny xviii. 18. Solon xlv.

Ver. 38. Of her. Christ was the first that had perfect knowledge of heavenly wisdom. Ch.—This is the privilege of God. Gr. “the first hath not perfect,” &c.

Ver. 40. Rivers of saving waters, on all, but particularly (H.) on Judea. v. 42. Gr. “and like a ditch (dioryx. C.) from a river, and as an aqueduct, I came into paradise,” (H.) like the four rivers aforesaid. Gen. 2.

Ver. 44. Off. He alludes to the conversion of the Gentiles.

Ver. 45. I will. Many Fathers explain this of Christ’s descent into hell. But as it occurs not in the Gr. it may be considered as the tradition of the first Christians, who gave this version, (C.) or they found it in their copies. H.

Ver. 46. Prophecy. Of no less authority. The prophets had ceased for some time before Christ. C.—Them. Gr. “to ages of ages. See,” &c. H.

Ver. 47. I. Wisdom, or the author of this book. C. 33:18. Wisd. 7:13. C.

ECCLESIASTICUS 25

Ver. 1. Pleased. Wisdom still speaks. Solomon often makes similar division, to make the deeper impression. Prov. 30:15. 24.

Ver. 4. Fool. Gr. “adulterer, devoid of sense.” Is. 65:20. C.—Luxuria ... senectuti foedissima. Cic. off. i.

Ver. 5. Age? Wisdom, says Bias, “is more durable than other possessions.” Laert.

Ver. 9. Things. Gr. “nine suppositions I have blessed in my heart,” (H.) or thought that they may confer felicity. But the tenth will certainly do it. C. 14.

Ver. 10. Enemies. Not out of revenge, but for the glory of God. See Matt. 5:43.

Ver. 12. A true. Gr. “prudence.” C.

Ver. 14. Things. Gr. adds, “for light (15) he that,” &c. H.

Ver. 16. It. This is not in the edit. of Rome, or of Aldus: but it is in the rest. Fear commonly begins the work of salvation, and love perfects it. 1 Tim. 1:5. C.—All happiness in this life is grounded on the fear of God. W.

Ver. 17. Evil. Gr. reads not this; but the Syriac does, omitting the two next verses. C.—Heresy is described under the idea of a wicked woman, concealing her malice. W.

Ver. 18. Choose. Lit. “see.” H.—Some supply “send any plague,” &c.

Ver. 21. Enemies. Which they wish, or may behold. C. 18:31. C.

Ver. 22. Head. Or poison, as the Heb. rosh signifies both. Rondet.

Ver. 23. Woman. Gr. “enemy.” C.—Revenge is the passion of little souls, and of women. Juv. xiii.—Dragon. This is not exaggerated, if we reflect on the evils occasioned by Eve, Dalila, Athalia, &c. C.—“A woman is the greatest wild-beast.” Menander.

Ver. 24. Sackcloth. And is black when passion bursts forth, though women too frequently conceal their anger to take deeper vengeance.

Ver. 25. Groaned. Gr. “shall fall.”—Little. Gr. “bitterly.” He cannot avoid hearing of his wife’s misconduct. H.—She will raise him enemies on all sides.

Ver. 26. Her. I could wish no greater evil to the worst of enemies. Eccles. 7:27.

Ver. 27. Man. He cannot advance. C.—Semper habet lites. Juv. vi.

Ver. 28. Beauty. Other qualifications of more importance must be regarded. H.—He should choose one who may be a companion and assistant in domestic concerns. Grot.

Ver. 30. A. Gr. “If she bring a fortune to her husband,” (H.) she will continually upbraid him with it, and cover him with confusion. v. 29. C.—Lay-leadership in spiritual things is so unreasonable, that few heretics will endure it. W.

Ver. 32. Happy. A lazy wife will give no content.

Ver. 33. Die. Eve tempted her husband, and thus we are all involved in sin. 1 Tim. 2:14.

Ver. 34. Water. Incontinency. C. 26:15. Prov. 5:15. If water find a hole, it will presently flow away. Women were kept much at home in the East, as they are in many parts of Europe. C.—Retirement and silence are the characteristics of a wise woman. Æschyl. Thebas.

Ver. 35. She will. Gr. “cut her off from thy flesh.” Grabe and Comp. add, (H.) “give a bill of divorce or her dowry, and send her away.” C.

ECCLESIASTICUS 26

Ver. 1. Double. Uneasiness deprives a person of much comfort. W.

Ver. 3. To a, &c. is not in Gr. H.

Ver. 5. Fourth. A jealous wife. v. 8.

Ver. 6. City. When all are charge with a crime, or when all rise up against a man. C.

Ver. 8. Woman. Gr. adds, “against another woman.”

Ver. 9. With. Gr. “and the scourge of the tongue, which,” &c. H.—Back-biting occasions the four evils aforesaid. Grot.

Ver. 10. Woman. When oxen move, the yoke moves also: Thus heresy will suffer none to rest. W.—The yoke ought to fit the neck, and not be fastened to the horns. Colum. ii. 2.

Ver. 11. Hid. She will be given to debauchery. S. Chrys. C.—Romulus ordered wives to be slain, like adulteresses, who had drunk wine at home. V. Max. vi. 3.

Ver. 12. Eye-lids. Shewing her impudence. 2 Pet. 2:14. Is. 3:16.

Ver. 13. Herself. From gazing at men. C.—Love manifests itself by the eyes. Propert.

Ver. 15. Hedge. Or “stake,” palum, (H.) on which tents are fixed. Gen. 38:14. C.—Fail. Incontinence will at last ruin her health. H.

Ver. 16. Bones. The Catholic faith is the ground of all virtues. W.

Ver. 18. Worth. Lit. “exchange.” Gr. (H.) such a wife is above all price. M.

Ver. 20. Continent. Adhering to virtue. C.

Ver. 22. Holy. Made of gold, and placed in the sanctuary. M.

Ver. 23. Soles. Gr. “heels.” Comp. “solid pavement.” A long addition follows in this edition, which is inserted by Grabe, (H. but is not in the best copies. C.) instead of the following verse. H.

Ver. 26. Poverty. The Romans provided for veteran soldiers, as Louis XIV. did with great magnificence. C.—Greenwich hospital is for the same purpose. H.—Despised. Solomon make the same complaint. Eccle. 9:15.

Ver. 27. To sin. He is less excusable, as he knows what he abandons. Jer. 2:12. C.

Ver. 28. Two. Gr. “scarcely is a merchant exempt from negligence, and the seller of wine, and eatables, (Grot.) or retailer (Voss. καπηλος) shall not be justified from sin.” H.—Negligence. That is, from the neglect of the service of God: because the eager pursuit of the mammon of this world, is apt to make men of that calling forget the great duties of loving God above all things, and their neighbours as themselves.—A huckster. Or a retailer of wine. Men of that profession are both greatly exposed to danger of sin themselves, and are too often accessory to the sins of others. Ch.—Lips. Innkeepers talk too much to please, and thus fall into danger. Prov. 10:19. W.—They are also exposed to lying, (M.) and to adulterate their merchandise. C.

ECCLESIASTICUS 27

Ver. 1. Poverty. Gr. “the indifferent thing,” as the Stoics represented money. C. 7:20.—Sinned. Hence proceeds the danger to which little merchants are exposed. Involuntary poverty is very miserable. Prov. 30:9

Ver. 2. Fast. Anacharsis styled “the market-place the receptacle of mutual cheating.” Laert. 1.—The seller praises his goods to get them off: (Hor.) the buyer says it is bad. Prov. 20:14. The next verse is a gloss omitted in Gr. C.

Ver. 4. Fear. By this the soul is preserved in a good state. W.

Ver. 5. Thoughts. The more he thinks on some things, the more is he perplexed. C.—After sin is purged away, there remains some defects like dust. Ps. 50:4. W.

Ver. 6. Affliction. Gr. “thought,” (H.) or speech. C.—A young man being brought to Socrates, that he might pass judgment on his dispositions, the philosopher ordered him to “speak.” Cic.

Ver. 7. As. Gr. “the fruit shews the dressing,” &c.

Ver. 9. Honour. The desire of justice is the sure method to obtain it. The rest is not in Gr. H.

Ver. 11. Iniquities. They fall deeper, or sin entails punishment. C.

Ver. 12. A. Gr. “the speech of the wise man is wisdom throughout: but,” &c. H.—The fool always mixes something improper with what good he speaks. C.—Sun. The wise man preserves his virtue, whether it appear or not. W.

Ver. 13. Keep. Gr. “wait an opportunity.” H.—Go but seldom. Their discourse tends to promote iniquity, (v. 14) and blasphemous oaths, (v. 15) and bloodshed. v. 16. C.

Ver. 15. Ears. The Jews did so, when they heard blasphemy. Acts 7:56. M.

Ver. 17. Mind. In Egypt, those who disclosed a secret to the enemy, were condemned to have their tongues cut out. Diod. ii. 2.

Ver. 19. Him. He will never trust thee more. v. 22.

Ver. 20. Friend. Sept. Rom. and Alex. “enemy.” H.—This crime is like murder. The Romans sometimes solemnly renounced the friendship of those who had offended them, as Germanicus and Caius did that of Piso. Tacit. An. 2. Suet. 3.

Ver. 22. Because. Gr. “for one may bind up a wound, and an insult may be pardoned. But he who hath revealed secrets, hath lost all hope,” (H.) or “confidence.” v. 24 c. 22:27.

Ver. 25. Off. Some Gr. copies have, “he who knows him will depart from him.” It is difficult to guard against a false friend, who winks as if he desired to please us, (C.) while he really seeks our ruin. v. 26.

Ver. 28. Wound. Gr. “deal wounds. He,” &c. H.—Traitors, in the dark, often wound their fellows, (C.) or themselves. M.

Ver. 29. Setteth. Gr. “layeth a snare, shall perish in it.”

Ver. 30. Him. God will punish, when the sinner has perhaps forgotten his offence. C.—Such are often chastised here, and always hereafter. W.

Ver. 33. Them. He shall feel the indignation of God, (C.) and shall repine. H.

ECCLESIASTICUS 28

Ver. 1. Sins. To seek revenge out of rancour, or contrary to justice, is a grievous sin. W.—Retaliation was tolerated, (Ex. 21:24) but love was not to be laid aside. Deut. 33:3–5. Lev. 21:17. Ps. 7:5. Mat. 7:2.

Ver. 2. Forgive. This charity enforces, when the offender is penitent, if the remission of punishment be not contrary to justice and discipline. W.—Mat. 6:12., and 18:32. Lu. 6:37. We all stand in need of pardon. C.

Ver. 5. And doth. Gr. “who will expiate his sins?” Is God bound to receive his victims or prayers while he entertains such dispositions? C.

Ver. 7. In his commandments. Supply the sentence out of the Greek thus: Remember corruption, and death, and abide in the commandments, (Ch.) which condemn revenge. Ex. 23:4. C.—Comp. “and do not rage or menace thy neighbour with destruction and death; yea, stick to the commandments. Be mindful of the precepts, and be not angry with thy neighbour; and of the covenant,” &c. v. 9. H.

Ver. 9. Ignorance. He uses a softer term. In effect, most quarrels proceed from a misunderstanding. “Every sinner is ignorant.”

Ver. 12. Burneth. The more fuel, the greater will be the blaze.

Ver. 13. And a, &c. is not in Gr. Prov. 19:12 and 26:21.

Ver. 16. Third. Who carries stories between friends, to set them at variance. C.

Ver. 18. It, &c. is omitted in Greek. H.—Indiscreet reports often cause dissensions. W.

Ver. 19. Labours. Causing their husbands to suspect them.

Ver. 22. Their own. Gr. “the.” Detraction separates many friends. C.

Ver. 25. Hell. Or rather “the grave.”

Ver. 26. Its. Gr. “it shall not take hold of the pious, and they shall not,” &c. H.—Their virtue shall quickly shine forth. C.

Ver. 28. Hear. Gr. “lo, hedge in thy possessions with thorns: bind up thy silver and gold.” H.—To pay attention to detraction is as bad as to utter it. W.

Ver. 29. Just. Gr. “a door and bolt,” &c. as v. 28. If people guard their property with so much care, why do they make light of words? H.—These ought to be weighed with more attention than money, and we ought to spare no pains or expense on this head. C.

Ver. 30. Tongue. Gr. “by them, lest thou fall before him who lays snares.” C. 29. H.

ECCLESIASTICUS 29

Ver. 1. Hand. That is, he that is hearty and bountiful in lending to his neighbour in his necessity. Ch.—Fœnus, in this book means simply “lending.” Rondet.—This is a work of mercy, and a sort of alms. Justice requires that the thing should be restored, and if any refuse on purpose, he is as bad as a thief. W.—He who lends will receive usury from the Lord. Prov. 19:17. Ps. 36:21.—In hand. Rich.

Ver. 2. Time. The neglect of this causes many to be unwilling to lend. C.

Ver. 5. Hands. Like slaves. Macrob. 1.—Others kiss the face, neck, &c. Acts 20:37.

Ver. 7. Found it. Seeming to make thee partaker of his good fortune, (Jans.) or he will keep the other half as his own. Grot.

Ver. 9. Injuries. Thus one loses both money and friends. Must we then never lend? If the person be poor, we must be ready to give. C.

Ver. 11. And delay. Or lit. “and for an alms, drag him not along.” H.—Let not the fraud of many deter thee from assisting the poor, for the sake of God and justice. C.—Si fraudaris pecunia acquiris justitiam. S. Amb. Tob. iii. n. 11.

Ver. 12. Commandment. Deut. 15:7. Else where is your merit?

Ver. 13. Friend. He is entitled to partake of all thy goods. If he be only thy fellow-creature, assist him; and God will reward thee. Mat. 6:19.

Ver. 15. Heart. Gr. “thy store-houses,” the poor. C.—I never read that one who was liberal to the poor came to an evil death, as he has so many to intercede for him, whose prayers must be heard. S. Jer. ad Nepot.—Works of mercy produce the best fruits. W.

Ver. 18. Himself. Yet he will not engage his word for more than he can pay, (v. 27 c. 8:16) nor encourage the negligence of debtors. Prov. 6:1.

Ver. 19. Life. Or his subsistence, (c. 19:28) though some answered for the person of another. 3 K. 20:39.

Ver. 20. And. Gr. “will turn away the goods of his surety, (21) and the ungrateful in mind will abandon his redeemer.” H.—“All hate the ungrateful,” (Cic. off. ii.) and the Persians punished such with death. Xenop. Cyr. i.—Him. Gr. subjoins v. 23. H.

Ver. 23. Estate, (dirigentes) whose affairs were prosperous. M.—Hence Solomon dissuades any rash engagements.

Ver. 25. Things. Tax-gatherers may deserve to fall into this misery. C.

Ver. 26. Not. Prudence requires that we should not ruin ourselves to help others. W.

Ver. 27. Shame. Clothing is like a portable house. Grot.—Man stands in need of little, and those who are content will not need to borrow. v. 29.

Ver. 31. Shall. Or “has formerly entertained” those, who now reproach him, make him serve in the meanest offices, and at last cast him forth. It may also signify that people who receive ungrateful vagabonds, will be required to serve them, and had better keep them out. v. 33. C.—Gr. “thou shalt entertain and give drink to the most disagreeable things.” H.

Ver. 32. Others. Gr. “me.” M.—Travellers carried their provisions with them. C.

Ver. 33. Give. Gr. “depart, stranger, from the face of glory; for,” &c. H.

Ver. 34. Lender. Who demands his money, and upbraids his debtor. M.

ECCLESIASTICUS 30

Ver. 1. He. Gr. prefixes “on children.” H.—And not, &c. is omitted in

Gr. It may signify, and not beg, (C.) or steal. H.—The welfare of the country depends on the good education of children, which cannot be performed without correction, (C.) though this should never be used till more gentle means have been tried. Fenelon on Educ.—The neglect of correction proceeds from a misplaced tenderness, (Prov. 13:24) which in the end proves most prejudicial both to the child and to the public. H.—See Plato, rep. ii. and vii. Arist. pol. vi. Cic. off. ii. C.

Ver. 2. Them. Gr. “his acquaintance.” H.—He sees himself re-born in his son. v. 4. C.

Ver. 7. Wounds. To which he has exposed himself for his child’s welfare, (2 Cor. 12:15. Raban.) or if he neglect correction, he will have to bewail the wounds which his son’s imprudence shall occasion. Syr. Vat. Gr. Comp. “He who rubs, (Rom. edit.) cherishes his son,” &c. C.—The eldest brother must take care of the rest, so as even to expose himself to danger. W.

Ver. 8. Horse. A colt full of spirit, when properly broken in, will answer best, so a proper education corrects impetuous tempers. Plut. apop. in Them.

Ver. 10. Laugh. “Smiling he must be feared.” S. Greg. Mor. xx. 3.

Ver. 11. Devices. Gr. “sins of ignorance.” Youth is incapable of guiding itself, being destitute of experience, and too confident. Ezek. 45:20.

Ver. 13. Thee. “Very few excel their father.” Hom. Odys. E.—This is sometimes to be attributed to the neglect of education. C.—Gr. subjoins, “on health.” H.

Ver. 14. Evils. Health is better than riches. Pythag. &c.

Ver. 15. Justice. This is the first of all advantages. C.—Thales pronounced him happy who was healthy and rich, and whose “soul was well tutored.” Laert.—Gr. “health and a good constitution are preferable to all gold, and a,” &c. H.

Ver. 17. Rest. In the grave. He speaks not of the soul. Job 3:13.

Ver. 18. Grave. The dead cannot partake of them, (C.) so neither can the sick of their great possessions. H.—It was customary to place meat on the tombs of the dead. C.—The pagans invited them to eat; (S. Epip. Ancor.) but the faithful intended it for the poor, who might pray (C.) for the deceased. M. C. 7:37. Tob. 4:18.—The kings of France were served at table till they were placed in the tomb, and in many monasteries the usual portion is assigned the dead for thirty days, and given to the poor. C.

Ver. 21. Sighing. Thus meat is useless to those whom God visits with sickness. See c. 20:3.

Ver. 22. Sadness. For temporal things, but trusting in Providence. 1 Pet. 5:7. Grief for sin is alone of service. 2 Cor. 7:10. C.—Pusillanimity must be avoided. W.

Ver. 23. A never. Gr. “the joy,” &c. Prov. 17:22 and 2 Cor. 9:7.

Ver. 24. Have. Gr. “love thy soul, and comfort thy heart, and drive,” &c. H.

Ver. 25. Many. Bringing on maladies, and driving people into despair, v. 22. It was thought that the sad could not prophesy. 4 K. 3:15. Hermas ii. Mand. iii. More Neb. ii. 37. C.

Ver. 26. Envy. Or jealousy. These passions banish joy. Envy is like rust. C.

Ver. 27. Always. Gr. “will mind the meats which it shall eat.” H.—It will feast and enjoy content. This verse and the following chapters are in a much less natural order in the Gr. editions, till c. 37. C.

ECCLESIASTICUS 31

Ver. 1. Riches. Lit. “honesty” has this sense. H.—The study of virtue and of the Scriptures removes temptations of the flesh. S. Jer. ad Rust. W.

Ver. 2. Hand. With too much anxiety. C.—Gr. “the solicitude of watching will drive away slumber, and a grievous malady will moderate sleep,” (Grabe. H.) or “sleep will alleviate a severe illness,” as experience evinces. C.

Ver. 4. Poor. All have not equal success. Prov. 10:22. Ps. 126:1. Drus.

Ver. 5. Justified. He is exposed to various temptations. 1 Tim. 6:9.

Ver. 7. To it. Being a sort of idol. Col. 3:5. C.—Woe. Gr. “and every,” &c.

Ver. 8. Nor, &c. Gr. (9.) who, &c. “Pride is the worm of riches.” S. Aug.—“In delights, chastity is endangered; and humility in the midst of riches.” S. Bern. conv. Cler. xxx.—Not to transgress, on such occasions, is the greatest miracle. C.—Man has free will, and those are happy, who, by God's grace, do not abuse it. W.

Ver. 11. In, &c. Gr. Alex. "and wisdom (Grabe substitutes the Church) shall proclaim his alms." H.—God will bless his riches. C.

Ver. 12. Be, &c. Gr. "do not open," (H.) shew not too much greediness.

Ver. 14. Wicked. Jealous or avaricious, as if the person feared lest he should have to prepare the like sumptuous entertainment. Prov. 23:1. Judas blamed the profusion of Magdalene. Jo. 12:5.

Ver. 15. Face. Or portion set before him. 1 K. 1:5. C.—When. Gr. "wheresoever it, (H.) or he (C.) shall look, stretch forth thy hand, and strive not with him in the dish. Judge," &c. Let the envious person (H.) or the master be served first. C.

Ver. 19. Use. Gr. "in all act considerately. Eat like a man," &c. (H.) not like a beast.

Ver. 20. First. Yet not too soon, lest the others should seem to be gluttons. C.

Ver. 21. Of all. Gr. "of them. How," &c. H.—Politeness is grounded on virtue. C.

Ver. 22. Wine. Gr. specifies nothing, and to eat much is unwholesome. H.

Ver. 23. Choler. Or the cholic. The intemperate, infrunito, (C.) Gr. "insatiable," cannot sleep. H.

Ver. 25. Vomit. Some have omitted this term as indelicate; but the Scripture does not approve of intemperance, while it advises the preventing of a disorder. A man's stomach may sometimes be innocently overcharged. On such occasions, an emetic was prescribed. The ancients had nt the same horror of it as moderns. Prov. 23:8. C.—Cicero, addressing Cæsar, says, Cum te vomere post cœnam velli dixisses. Pro. R. Deiot.—And thou. Gr. "hear," &c.

Ver. 27. Quick. Intemperance and idleness are the great sources of illness.

Ver. 28. Bread. And other provisions; while the miser is contemned. Prov. 22:9. C.—Bread supports the body, and instruction the soul. If it be bad, it does the reverse. W.

Ver. 30. Challenge. Not to fight, or rather (H.) to drink. Is. 5:22. C.

Ver. 31. Rebuke. Or disorder. Gr. “prove,” (H.) or “lay open.” C.—Consilium retegis Lydo. Hor. iii. ode 21.

Ver. 32. Taken. Gr. “is as good as life,” &c.—Thou shalt. Gr. “what,” &c.

Ver. 33. With. Gr. “destitute of wine, (35) and this was created to,” &c.

Ver. 35. And not. Greek, (36.) “sufficient wine taken in season is the,” &c.

Ver. 37. Sober. Greek, (39.) “wine,” &c. H.—Anacharsis said that “the vine bore three clusters; the first of pleasure, the second of drunkenness, the third of discontent.” Laert. i.

Ver. 42. Reproach. Alexander transfixed Clytus for so doing. Curt. viii. —Again. By the pernicious custom of drinking healths, which still prevails in some countries, (C.) and occasions people to get drunk. Drus.—Such abuses ought to be discouraged by every one. H.

ECCLESIASTICUS 32

Ver. 1. Ruler. Or king of the feast, alluding to an ancient custom. Est. 1:8. C.—Nec regna vini sortiere talis. Hor. Athen. Dipn. Plut. Symp. i. q. 14.—Humility is most requisite for those in power, and it is most difficult to condemn vain honours, when enjoyed. S. Greg. pastor. W.

Ver. 3. Contribution, towards the feast, (M.) or company. This sentence is not in Gr. “rejoice on their account, and for the excellent disposition, mayst receive a corner.” H.

Ver. 5. Music. Which usually accompanied the meals of the rich. Hor. ii. ode 11.—“A lyre is handed round, on which each one plays. When Themistocles confessed that he knew not how, he was deemed deficient.” indoctor. Tusc. i. Quint. i.

Ver. 6. Words. Some Gr. copies have, “where there is a concert, pour,” &c. C.—And be. Gr. “and utter not wise sayings out of season.”

Ver. 7. Wine was not used at all meals. C.—After they were ended, the pagans sung in honour of Bacchus, or of great mane. Plut. Sym.—But the Jews directed their hymns to God. Mat. 26:30. Philo, Contemp.

Ver. 9. Hear. Gr. (10.) “young man speak if there be wanted of thee; scarcely twice if thou be asked. Sum up thy speech, much in few words. Be knowing and still silent. (11.) In the,” &c. H.

Ver. 13. Thee. Gr. implies to be equal. C.

Ver. 14. Storm. Lit. “hail.” Gr. “thunder.” H.—It comes forth at the same time as the lightning, but travels slower. C.—For. Gr. (15.) “at,” &c. H.—Young people must leave the table, and take recreation.

Ver. 17. Bless. This is taught by the light of reason, (C. 5:7) and the omission before or after meals betrays a want of faith and gratitude, particularly in Christians.—Replenisheth. Gr. “inebriateth thee with his goods.” H.

Ver. 20. Light. They shall advance in virtue and glory. Prov. 4:18. C.

Ver. 21. Excuse. Lit. “comparison.” “He will bend the law to his desires.” Thus heretics interpret Scripture. H.—Gr. “he will find condemnation.”

Ver. 24. Without counsel; or “by himself,” (C.) cum eo.—And. Gr. “do nothing without counsel, and in acting do not repent,” (H.) but execute what has been prudently devised. C.—God directs; yet he would have us to ask advice. W.

Ver. 25. Rugged way. The end of which is unknown. Lu. 14:28. C.—Lest. Gr. “and keep a guard over thy children. In every good work confide in thy soul; for,” &c. H.

Ver. 27. In faith. That is, follow sincerely thy soul in her faith and conscience, (Ch.) when it is well informed. Gr. “in every good work believe thy soul; for,” &c. C.—Act not in opposition to it. W.—Rondet and Grotius would read, “in every work believe in God with all thy soul.”—All that is not of faith is sin, (Rom. 14:23) inasmuch as it is against conscience. H.

ECCLESIASTICUS 33

Ver. 1. Evils. God will make all turn to the advantage of the elect.

Ver. 3. To him. God will fulfill all his promises. C.—Gr. continues, “as the interrogation (H.) of the Urim, (δηλων. C.) prepare what to say, and so thou shalt be heard. Put on instruction, and thus reply.” H.—Speak not without being prepared.

Ver. 5. Cart. Inconstant and grating. C.—The wicked turn from one vice to another, as heretics devise many errors, not having their heart established in grace. Heb. 13:9. W.

Ver. 6. Him. And will be unmanageable, (M.) when he has any thing to ridicule. C.—Qui captat risus. Hor. i. Sat. 4.

Ver. 7. Another. God's will alone appoints one to be holy or fine; and another to be stormy, or dedicated to labour. C.—And one. Gr. “and all the light of the day throughout the year proceeds from the sun.”

Ver. 8. The sun. Gr. “and he distinguished the seasons and holidays (10) some,” &c.

Ver. 10. Great. Gr. “holy.” H.—Thus all men are by nature equal. Yet what difference do we not find in their condition? Some live in obscurity, who might have shone upon the throne; and this is God's will. C.

Ver. 12. Station. Exterminating the Chanaanites. God disposes of all with sovereign power and justice. Rom. 9:29.

Ver. 14. Ordering. All depend on God. C.—“The predestination of the saints is nothing but the foreknowledge and preparation of God's benefits, by which those are most certainly liberated who obtain their freedom. But where are the rest left; except in the mass of perdition, by the just judgment of the Deity? S. Aug. Persev. xiv. n. 35, and Corrupt. xiii. n. 42.

Ver. 15. Another. Lights and shades both contribute to form the beauty of a picture. H.—Antitheses adorn a discourse, as opposite things do the universe. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xi. 18.—God will make the wicked subservient to his glory.

Ver. 16. Of all. Solomon, Ezechias, &c. made various collections of similar maxims. C.—The books of the Machabees were alone written after this in the Old Testament. M.—Gr. places what follows after C. 30:26. These four verses may be regarded as a sort of preface. H.

Ver. 21. Change thee. That is, so as to have this power over thee. Ch.—Be inflexible on this head. C.

Ver. 23. The pre-eminence. That is, be master in thy own house, and part not with thy authority. Ch.—Let not thy wife or servants rule in thy name. M.

Ver. 25. Fodder. Gr. prefixes “on slaves.” H.—They were bought like horses. Aristotle (Œcon. i. 5.) gives the like instructions on their treatment. C.

Ver. 27. A still. Gr. “the neck, (28) torture,” &c. H.

Ver. 31. Faithful, is not expressed in Gr. but must be understood.—Blood. Taking him prisoner at the hazard of thy life. The like misfortune might easily have befallen thee. C.—Seneca (ep. 47.) says, “live so with thy inferior, as thou wouldst have thy superior live with thee.”

Ver. 33. Thou. Gr. “on what road wilt thou seek for him?”

ECCLESIASTICUS 34

Ver. 1. The. Gr. “on dreams. The,” &c. H.—No dependence can be had on the pretended interpretation of dreams, which do not come from God; (C.) as some do. Mat. 1. Dan. 2. W.

Ver. 3. Man. When he turns away from the mirror, it appears no more. Jam. 1:23.

Ver. 4. Unclean. This text has been abused, to prove that the sinner cannot confer grace in the sacraments. C.—But Christ does this by his ministry. S. Aug. Ps. x. n. 6.

Ver. 5. Deceitful. Gr. “divinations, and auguries, and dreams, are vain.”

Ver. 6. Travail. Such things cannot be explained. Twenty people will all give different interpretations.—High, as those of Jacob, Joseph, &c. were. Yet it is difficult to make the discrimination. S. Greg. dial. iv. 48.—Homer admits of two sorts of dreams. Odys. xix.

Ver. 7. Them. The devil takes advantage of their weakness, and they have recourse to magic, &c. C.

Ver. 8. Law, which forbids attention to dreams. Lev. 19:26. Is. 8:20. A. Lap.—No part of the law shall perish; and some will always explain it truly. W.

Ver. 9. What. Gr. “A man who has travelled, knows much,” &c. H.—Thus Ulysses became so wise, (Homer) as well as the ancient philosophers, Pythagoras, &c. S. Jer. ad Paulin.—The knowledge derived from books will not suffice. C.

Ver. 10. Experienced. Gr. “much abroad, shall abound with subtlety. (11.) I,” &c.

Ver. 12. And. Gr. “And I know more than I announce.” Grabe’s edit.

Ver. 13. For. Gr. “On account of these things I have been saved:” (H.) by my great experience, which gives weight to my instructions.

Ver. 14. Is. Gr. “shall live. (15.) For ... them. (16.) He,” &c. H.

Ver. 20. From falling, or when a person is fallen.

Ver. 21. Mockeries. Some Gr. copies have “gifts.” Such unjust presents or sacrifices, God will abhor. Is. 41:8. Deut. 24:15. C.

Ver. 22. Lord. Gr. (23.) “most ... wicked, nor,” &c.

Ver. 26. Bread. Gr. “a livelihood, killeth his neighbour; and he sheddeth blood, who keepeth back the hire of the workman.” H.

Ver. 28. Labour? So, if your sacrifices be ill-gotten, they will not be received; and if you relapse, you will be as bad as ever. C.

Ver. 30. Dead. Lit. “is baptized by or from the dead;” baptizatur a mortuo. H.—S. Cyprian thought this text was peremptory against the baptism of heretics; and Donatists were of the same opinion. They seem not to have read, if he touch him again, which entirely alters the meaning. S. Aug. admonishes them of this; though he explains it of the pagan rather than of the Jewish purifications, to which it refers. Num. 19:11. See S. Aug. c. Cres. i. 24. and ii. 25. c. Petil. i. 9. S. Cyp. ep. ad Quint. C.

Ver. 31. Prayer. A relapse makes the former repentance unless. Mat. 18:33. W.

ECCLESIASTICUS 35

Ver. 1. Offerings. He cannot otherwise observe the law. H.—Virtue is the most acceptable sacrifice. C.—The sacrifices of penance, of justice, and of praise, are to be preferred before all external ones. W.

Ver. 2. And to. Gr. (4.) “He,” &c. H.—The peace-offering and that for sin, as well as the oblation of fine flour and of praise, (which is the most perfect of all) are noticed. C.—External sacrifice must not be neglected. W.

Ver. 4. Sacrifice. Gr. adds, “of praise.” H.—This was the true spirit of the law. C.

Ver. 6. Lord. The poor, who present a virtuous heart, are more acceptable than the rich, who are buried in sin, though the latter may offer the most splendid sacrifices. H.—God requires that all should do according to their abilities. If they have nothing, they must fulfill the commandments, and he will be satisfied. Some have inferred from Ex. 23:16 that the poor were rejected. But the meaning of the law is here explained. C.

Ver. 10. Heart. Lit. “mind.” Gr. “eye,” (H.) free from avarice. 2 Cor. 9:7.

Ver. 11. Sanctify: “set apart” for the use of the ministers, and of the temple. C.—God will reward thee much more. W.

Ver. 14. Wicked; defective. Lev. 22:21. Mal. 1:7. Gr. “curtailed, or ill-acquired,” (C.) or “do not bribe” God; (δοροκοπει. Grot.) as the word is used 2 Mac. God will not regard our gifts, to let our offences escape punishment. Is. 42:1. C.

Ver. 19. For, &c. is not in Greek. God will protect the defenceless. H.

Ver. 21. He, or “it.” C.—Prayer is personified, and presents itself before God.

Ver. 22. Them, the Gentiles, &c. v. 23. Gr. “will not delay to punish them, till he crush the loins of the unmerciful. And,” &c. H.

Ver. 23. Unjust Egyptians, Syrians, and Greeks, who then oppressed the Jews.

Ver. 24. Adam, who was not spared. C.—Gr. “of men and their desires.” H.—Our version seems to be taken from the Heb. D.—Adam sometimes denotes any man. M.

Ver. 26. The. Gr. “mercy is beautiful,” &c. Ps. 9:10. H.

ECCLESIASTICUS 36

Ver. 1. Have. He has pointed out the conditions for prayer, and now he gives a model. The Jews were at this time dispersed and subservient to the Egyptians or Syrians, which greatly afflicted them. C.—And shew. Gr. (2.) “send.”

Ver. 2. That. Gr. Rom. omits the rest. But Grabe retains, “all nations which seek not after thee.” H.—This prayer implies a prediction of the Gentiles’ conversion, as the psalms do frequently in like terms. Ps. 64. W.

Ver. 4. Sanctified, by chastising us, or by protecting our fathers in the desert.

Ver. 10. End of our sufferings. The malice of our enemies is at the height.

Ver. 11. Escapeth the sword. Deut. 32:36. He foretells the event, or wishes that they may be chastised, in order that they may enter into themselves, and adore the true God.

Ver. 12. Other lord. The Syrian and Egyptian monarchs sometimes claimed divine honours. Dan. 7:25 and 11:36. C.

Ver. 13. That. Gr. transposes the rest, and has only, and thou, &c. H.

Ver. 14. First-born. Ex. 4:22. Wives, children, servants, were called after their lord or father. Is. 4:1 and 63:19. Jer. 7:10.

Ver. 15. Rest, where the temple is built. 2 Par. 6:41. Ps. 131:8.

Ver. 16. Words, predictions, as heretofore; or with thy favours.

Ver. 18. Thee. The Jews were more faithful after the captivity. The author seems to beg for the coming of the Messias.

Ver. 19. People, which thou hast prescribed. Num. 6:24. C.—Direct. Gr. “All shall know.”—Art. Gr. “Lord art the God of ages.” H.—Here the prayer ends. C.—The author continues to instruct. H.

Ver. 20. Another. Thus act discreetly in the pursuit of knowledge. The good may be distinguished from bad, as easily as venison can from other meats. C.—As there is a difference of meats, so must discretion be used in words, in the choice of a wife, &c. W.

Ver. 22. Resist. Gr. “requite it,” as it deserves. H.

Ver. 23. Man. Yet in marriage the temper of the person is to be considered.

Ver. 24. More. Love is the most violent of all the passions, and nothing can afford greater content than a virtuous and consoling wife. C. 26:21. C.

Ver. 26. Good, is not in Greek, but the context shews that it is necessary. H.—By concord small possessions increase, as by discord the greatest are lost. W.

Ver. 27. Want. If he be not so at first, servants will soon ruin his affairs.

Ver. 28. Rest, or abode with his wife and family. The Jews in general married, and such as delayed were deemed suspicious characters. Prov. 27:8. C.

ECCLESIASTICUS 37

Ver. 1. Death. Gr. explains this: (C.) I mean (2.) “a companion and friend turned?” &c. H.—True friendship is most necessary, and false most dangerous. W.

Ver. 5. Will. Grotius suspects that not is wanting. Yet, if a false friend take up arms, it will only be (C.) for his own belly. M.—Not is ill-omitted in the Comp. edit. in the last part of the following verse.

Ver. 7. Snare. Greek Rom. and Alex. has at the end (C.) of v. 11, “with him that suspecteth thee.” H.

Ver. 10. Stake, or stumbling-block. C.

Ver. 12. Treat not. The negation is omitted in the Vulg. (H.) which speaks ironically in the three following verses. Gr. “consult not with him who suspecteth thee, and hide thy counsel from those who are jealous of thee. With a woman,” &c. Consult not, is always understood. Among the Jews, polygamy occasioned much jealousy.—Envious miser. C.

Ver. 13. Nor. Gr. “with the merciless concerning kindness, with the sluggard concerning any work. With one hired for the year, concerning coming to an end.” συντελειας. H.—He will never finish his work, or think he has sufficient wages.

Ver. 15. God, and is enlightened, as well as a good friend, v. 16. C.

Ver. 17. It. Gr. “more faithful than it,” the well regulated heart. H.—It will give the best counsel, if we be not guided by passion.

Ver. 18. Holy is not in Gr. but must be understood. C.—The soul or heart, which is attentive to God, (v. 17) will be the best guide. H.—All good advice proceeds from the Lord. S. Aug. Doct. prol. 7.—We must always have recourse to him, though we must use our best endeavours. W.

Ver. 20. In. Gr. “Reason is chief of every work, and counsel must go before every action.” H.—We must distrust our own lights.

Ver. 21. Them. The heart gives birth to good or evil, which the tongue utters. Matt. 12:34 and 15:18.—Soul. What will science, without charity, profit him, if he should even gain the world? Matt. 16:26 and 1 Cor. 13:1.

Ver. 23. Hateful. His sophisms are soon discovered. Gr. “there is one wise, hateful in his discourses: he shall be devoid of all wisdom.”

Ver. 25. Soul. Being replenished with wisdom, he communicates it to others, and obtains an eternal reward. C.

Ver. 28. But. Gr. “And.” The wisest must soon die: Even the race of Israel shall end: But the virtuous shall be for ever remembered. v. 29. H.—The blessed in heaven live for ever. W.

Ver. 30. Life. Attempt nothing above thy strength: or Gr. try what agrees with thy health or soul, (C.) and see thou give it not what is hurtful to it.” H.—S. Paul (1 Cor. 11) exhorts every one to prove or try himself and his own conscience. W.

Ver. 31. Soul. “We must not dispute about tastes.” H.—They are as various as men’s faces. All conditions do not suit every person.

Ver. 33. Choler, or indigestion. “Gluttony has slain more than the sword.” C.

ECCLESIASTICUS 38

Ver. 1. Honour and pay. Prov. 8:9. C.—Gr. adds, “with his fees.” H.—The health of body and soul must be regarded. W.

Ver. 2. King. Physicians were formerly kept at the king’s expense. Pliny xxix. 1.

Ver. 4. Them, as he will all superstitious remedies. C.—“A crowd of physicians killed Cæsar,” said Adrian, on his death-bed. They often try experiments, and kill with impunity. Pliny xxix. 1.—Yet we must not condemn the prudent use of medicine. C.

Ver. 5. Wood, of various sorts. Grot.—Many suppose that he alludes to the miracle of Moses, (Ex. 15:25) who thus was supernaturally informed (C.) of the effects of a certain wood. T. M. S. Aug. q. lvii. in Ex.

Ver. 6. The. Gr. “that his or its virtue might be known by man.”

Ver. 7. These plants.—And of. Gr. “Of these the maker of ointments shall compose a mixture and his works are not yet finished, when peace (health) from him appears on the face of the earth.” H.—Disease flee before him; so powerful are his medicines, that the very smell effects a cure.

Ver. 9. Thee. We must neither trust too much in physicians, (2 Par. 16:12) nor despise them, as this would be tempting God.

Ver. 10. Sin. All diseases are in consequence of original sin, and may are inflicted for actual transgressions. Jo. 9:2 and 1 Cor. 11:30. Num. 12:10. C.

Ver. 11. Then. Gr. “as being no longer. Yet give,” &c. H.—Be converted and offer sacrifice, as if there were no hopes of life. Still do not despair. C.

Ver. 13. Thou. Gr. “a sweet smell (success) shall be in their hands.” H.

Ver. 15. Physician. This state is very troublesome, and a punishment of sin. v. 10.

Ver. 16. Burial. Thus we must shew our respect for the deceased. The Jews also prayed for them. 2 Mac. 12:42. C.—“The care ... and pomp of funerals are rather the consolations of survivors than of service to the dead.” S. Aug. cura 2.

Ver. 17. For. Gr. “and shed burning tears of mourning, (18) and lament for,” &c. H.—Sorrow would be unsuitable for the saints, and useless for the damned, who being rebellious to God do not deserve our lamentations. Yet nature dictates, and people expect we should allow something to the first emotions of sorrow, (C.) for a day or two; and we may receive the consolatory visits of our friends, during the seven days of mourning. C. 22:13. Jo. 11:19. S. Paulin. ad Pam.—To avoid the evil reports of men, we must shew ourselves to be really sorry; yet we must not suffer grief to hurt our health. W.

Ver. 19. And the, &c. is not in Greek. Excessive sorrow brings on sickness, and renders us unfit for any thing.

Ver. 20. Aside, in solitude.—Substance; or what the poor has to live on, will seem sweet or bitter according as he is affected with joy or grief.

Ver. 21. End. This is the chief utility derived from attending funerals.

Ver. 23. Thee. A man on his death-bed, or already dead, is introduced speaking. C.

Ver. 24. Him. Gr. “thyself.” He is at rest, we hope; (H.) be thou so too. C.

Ver. 25. A scribe; that is, a doctor of the law, or a learned man. Ch.—Sorrow (H.) and too much employment, are injurious to learning. C.

—Sapientiae otia negotia sunt. S. Bern. ser. 85. Cant.—When pastors have leisure, they would do well to write, in imitation of S. Paul, &c. W.

Ver. 28. Work: engraving on gold, or silver, or on precious stones.

Ver. 29. Sitting. Such was the ancient custom of smiths, (C.) who carried all their implements with them, and laboured with much pain. Chardin.

Ver. 34. Glazing. The earthen vessel would otherwise spoil all but oil and water. C.

Ver. 37. Dwell. Gr. “travel,” to get a livelihood, (Grot.) or to acquire wisdom, (C. 34:9 and 39:5) and walk about like the ancient philosophers. They shall not be chosen magistrates. C.

Ver. 38. Spoken. They have not leisure to attend the lectures of sages; (H.) nor are they ever quoted by them.

Ver. 39. World, giving children to the commonwealth, (M.) and employing themselves in useful arts. The Jews would not allow magicians, players, &c. to reside in their country.—Craft. They pray that they may succeed in their employment, while some also strive to comply with their religious duties. C.—Applying. Gr. refers this to the following chapter, “As for him who applies his soul and meditates on the law of the Most High, he will,” &c. H.

ECCLESIASTICUS 39

Ver. 1. Ancients. The Essenes (Jos. Bel. i. 7.) and Therapeuts (Philo. Comtemp.) were most famous of all for doing so. In general the Jews despise the learning of foreign nations: but some have applied themselves to it, particularly Philo, Josephus, &c. 1 Mac. 1:11 and 2 Mac. 6:11.—Prophets. These required the utmost study, before the coming of Christ. 1 Pet. 1:11. Dan. 9:9. C.—The virtuous must follow both an active and contemplative life. W.

Ver. 2. Sayings, or history of Abraham, &c.—Parables. This was most in vogue. 3 K. 10.—But mechanics abstained from this study. C. 38:38. C.—To meditate well, 1. knowledge; 2. virtue; 3. humility; and 4. hope, are requisite. W.

Ver. 4. Governor or the province or army. The most enlightened were chosen, like Joseph. Daniel 1:4. &c.

Ver. 5. Men. Travelling was very requisite, (C. 34:11) and history records the actions of the bad as well as the good, for the instruction of the public.

Ver. 6. Pray. Diligence and prayer are the means to acquire wisdom. C. 4:13.

Ver. 9. Lord, being in a sort of rapture, and enlightened by Him.

Ver. 13. Generation. With what care do we not preserve the Scripture? &c.

Ver. 15. Thousand. Children or other men.—Rest, in death. C.

Ver. 16. With. Gr. “as the moon in the first quarter,” δειχομηνια. H.—The Vulg. has read δειχομηνια, “divine transport.” The author declares that he was inspired. C.

Ver. 17. By. Gr. “Hear me, ye holy children.”—Offspring. Lit. “fruits.” H.—He speaks to the children of Israel, the people of God: whom he exhorts to bud forth and flourish with virtue. Ch.

Ver. 19. Bring. Gr. “praise a canticle.”

Ver. 20. Voice. Gr. “songs of your lips, (H.) and with ancient lyres,” &c. C.

Ver. 22. Waters. At the world’s creation, or at the passage of the Israelites. C.

Ver. 23. Salvation. None can prevent the salvation of God’s elect. H.

Ver. 25. Wonderful, or new. C.—The greatest miracles cost him nothing. H.

Ver. 26. Time. The veil shall be withdrawn, and Providence will appear. Gr. “all things are made for their use.”

Ver. 28. That. Gr. “as he changed the waters into saltness,” (H.) at Sodom, (C.) “his ways are plain for the saints: so to sinners they are stumbling-blocks.” v. 30. The Red Sea gave a passage to Israel, and overwhelmed the Egyptians. H.—Him. God does all with grandeur. He poured his graces upon Israel, and overwhelmed the giants in the deluge. C.

Ver. 30. Good and, is omitted in Gr. Before the fall, all was happiness. Now, the wicked have still some mixture of good. v. 32. Bossuet.

Ver. 31. Water and fire. These are requisite to prepare bread. The Romans refused them to the enemies of the state.—Cluster. Gr. “blood,” as Deut. 32:14. C.—God gives the necessities of life, which the virtuous use well, for their reward; and the wicked ill, to their ruin. W.

Ver. 32. Evil. The good or bad use of them decides all. Wisd. 14:11. Rom. 8:18. Tit. 1:15.

Ver. 33. Spirits. Storms (Ps. 10:7 and 148:8) good angels, (Gen. 19:11. Is. 37:36) or rather devils: who, though created in holiness, fell, and became executioners of the wicked. C.—They abused their free-will, and are eternally punished. W.

Ver. 34. Destruction, and final ruin of the impious, or at the least day. C.—Appease. God is pleased with the execution of justice. M.—Yet the devils cannot obtain a reconciliation; neither do they act to please God, having their wills obstinately bent against his, though they be forced to obey. H.

Ver. 36. Beasts. Wolves, &c. with which the country was infested. Deut. 7:22 and 22:24.—Sword. War.

Ver. 37. Feast. Gr. “rejoice,” as at a feast. Ezech. 39:16.—Word. They will be ready at the first sign. C.—All creatures, but the rebel angels and man, obey God. H.

Ver. 38. Resolved. Lit. “confirmed” in this opinion by a divine light. v. 16. 21.

Ver. 39. Time. If we receive not at first, we must have patience.

Ver. 40. That. Even sin contributes to manifest the justice and mercy of God; and we are not to judge of his works, but to praise him; as every thing is created for wise purposes, and evil proceeds from our abuse of things. C.

ECCLESIASTICUS 40

Ver. 1. Labour, “anxiety,” ἀσχυολία. M.—All misery (C.) is in consequence of original sin. W.—The life of man is a trial. Job 7:1 and 14:1.—Of all. The earth, (C.)

Ver. 4. Purple. Lit. “hyacinth,” (H.) or violet colour. Purple was more like scarlet.

Ver. 5. Knowledge. He is disquieted by restless (C.) and frightful dreams. v. 6. H.

Ver. 7. Fear, or no reason for it. C.

Ver. 8. Beast. Their instinct causes them to fear death, to fight, &c.

Ver. 9. Moreover. Gr. “death,” &c. are all destined for the wicked.

Ver. 12. Out, and severely punished. C.—They shall not appear in the book of life.

Ver. 14. Rejoice. The corrupt judge once rejoiced: but now he shall mourn. H.—The possessions and grandeur of the unjust shall end in a moment, like a clap of thunder. Ps. 36:36. Prov. 10:25. C.

Ver. 15. And make. Gr. “they are unclean,” (H.) and will produce no fruit.

Ver. 16. Weed. Lit. “verdure.” Gr. Achei, (H.) properly denotes the rush, papyrus, which grows on the banks of the Nile, (Gen. 41:2. C.) and was used for fuel. Alpin. i. 7. Matt. 6:30.—Thus the wicked will presently (C.) be treated. M.

Ver. 17. Grace. The beneficent will produce fruits, like those of paradise. Gen. 2:8.

Ver. 18. That is. Gr. “and of one that.”—In it. Gr. “and more than both is one discovering a treasure,” (H.) who finds himself rich, without labour or injustice.

Ver. 19. Both. Thus Judith, Zenobia, &c. ennobled their husbands. Prov. 31:10.

Ver. 20. Wisdom. Virtue gives more content to the soul than corporal pleasures do to the body. It brings us near to God. C.

Ver. 22. Green. “The sight of no colour is more agreeable to the eyes.” Pliny xxxvii. 1.—The Church is more excellent than the synagogue. W.

Ver. 23. Husband. Their union is closer, and they can best assist each other.

Ver. 25. Counsel. By this the Romans conquered the world. 1 Mac. 8:31. Prov. 11:14.

Ver. 26. Heart, and make people presumptuous; while piety gives real courage. Ps. 26:1. C.

Ver. 28. It, or “him.” H.—The virtuous man is covered with glory.

Ver. 29. Indigent. Gr. “live not by begging,” being too lazy to work, or incurring this punishment for thy sins. Lev. 26:16. Ps. 108. Deut. 15:4. Involuntary poverty is a most severe scourge. C.—All are bound too labour for what is needful; (W.) some by prayer, others by trade, &c. H.

Ver. 30. Meat. Such is the condition of the parasite, (C.) and of the beggar. H.

Ver. 32. Unwise. Some read, “impudent man,” with the Gr.—Fire. He shall feel the inconveniences of poverty; (H.) yet will not work, being lost to all shame. C.—Plato (Leg. 11.) orders magistrates to “clear the country of such an animal,” ζῴον, (H.) and the Lacedemonians suffered no beggars among them.

ECCLESIASTICUS 41

Ver. 1. Death is terrible to all, but most to those who live comfortably. C.—O vita misero longa, felici brevis. Sen.

Ver. 3. Sentence, pronounced on Adam and all his posterity. C.

Ver. 5. Flesh. “It is a great consolation to share the fate of all.” Sen. Provid. v.

Ver. 6. What. Gr. “why wouldst thou refuse to submit to the?” &c. H.

Ver. 7. Life. Thou wilt not be asked how long, but how well thou hast lived. No one will then envy thy long life. C.—It will be in vain to plead that the length or shortness of life has occasioned thy sins; for God does all with justice and for the best, if men would use rightly his benefits. W.—Thou wilt not repine at having lived too short a time. M.—An evil life will be alone condemned. Wisd. v. D.

Ver. 8. Ungodly. They adopt the wicked manners of their parents (C.) and companions, and thus become still more criminal. H.

*Œtas parentum pejor avis tulit
Nos nequiores, mox daturos
Progeniem vitiosiore.* Hor. ii. ode 6.

—This was terribly verified in the three French assemblies, which overturned the Church and state. A. 1793. See Barruel. H.

Ver. 10. Father. He is rather their executioner, (C.) and would have been less cruel, if he had murdered them while they were innocent. Wisd. 12:10. H.

Ver. 12. Portion. It would have been better for them never to have existed. Mat. 26:24. This the case of heresiarchs. C.

Ver. 13. From. Gr. “go to destruction.” H.—It is their destination (C. 40:11. C.) and choice. H.

Ver. 14. Body. The death of the body is bewailed in the just, but that of the soul also of wicked people calls for our tears. They will soon perish. Ps. 9:7.

Ver. 15. Great. The concern which all have for a good name, is one of the strongest proofs of the souls’ immortality. Prov. 22:11.

Ver. 17. Peace, with docility, (Mat. 11:25) or in the midst of prosperity, be on your guard. C. 20:32. C.

Ver. 19. Have a shame, &c. That is to say, be ashamed of doing any of these things, which I am now going to mention: for though sometimes shamefacedness is not to be indulged, yet it is often good and necessary; as in the following cases. Ch.—Disciples ought to esteem what their masters teach, though they do not perceive the reasonableness of what they assert. W.

Ver. 20. Opinion. Grotius corrects the Gr. “It is not laudable to be incredulous in all.”

Ver. 21. Mother. Thy misconduct seems to redound to their dishonour, as if they had not given thee a proper education.

Ver. 22. People. They will stone thee. Remember the fate of Roboam. 3 K. 12. C.

Ver. 24. And of. Lit. “out of respect for the,” &c. De veritate Dei & testamento. H.—The same words occur C. 42:2.; whence Jansenius thinks they have been transferred hither. Most refer them to what goes before. Blush for lying, which is contrary to the truth of God; and for the other sins which injure his covenant.—Meat. This posture betrays idleness or pride.

Ver. 25. Harlot. The eyes must be chaste. Jer. 9:21. Mat. 5:28.—Kinsman, when he is poor, and refusing to assist him. C.

Ver. 26. Turn. Gr. “of taking away a portion and gift,” made already to God or men; (27) “of considering attentively another’s wife; of being too busy about his,” &c. H.

ECCLESIASTICUS 42

Ver. 1. Men. Here the Gr. concludes the former chapter very properly, (H.) as we must be ashamed of doing these things, and not of those which follow. C.—“Of repeating [and] of the speech which thou hast heard, and of revealing secret words; (things. H.) and thou shalt be truly bashful, (αἰσχυνησῇς. C.) and find favour with every man.” Grabe’s edit. H.—Thereby. In such cases we must shew a holy impudence, like Jeremias, 1:10. 18.

Ver. 2. Covenant. We must be ashamed of transgressing these, (C. 41:24) but not of complying with them. This is the first duty of man. —Ungodly. Blush not to oppose such a judgment, (C.) though all the judges should be against thee. Follow no collusion of man to do evil. H.—Pass sentence without respect of persons, (Deut. 1:16. C.) whether the parties be thy companions, or only travellers. v. 3. H.

Ver. 3. Friends. Be not ashamed to leave something to thy friends, though relations may grumble; or execute thy friend’s will exactly. C.

Ver. 4. Little. Be scrupulously exact in thy dealings, but not afraid of advancing thy fortune by lawful means.

Ver. 5. Buying. This regards magistrates, who must correct such frauds. Gr. “of the money (C.) to purchase from merchants.” H.—We may examine whether the coin be good, and strive to get things as cheap as we can.—Bleed. Great severity was formerly used. C. 30:12. C.

Ver. 6. Keeping. Lit. “a seal.” H.—All must be locked up.

Ver. 7. In. Not out of distrust so much, as to keep servants honest. All who have written on economy give the same rules.

Ver. 8. Men. So Daniel discovered the malice of the two ancients. Dan. 13:46. Admonish the aged not to enter into disputes, or strive with the young. C.

Ver. 9. Knoweth. Lit. “who is hidden.” H.—An unmarried woman was styled Halma, or “hidden.” Is. 7:11. C.—Pass away. Gr. “abuse.” H.—Some read adultera, (Sixt. V. Jans.) instead of adulta, improperly. It was deemed shameful for a parent not to have his daughter married soon. 1 Cor. 7:36.—Hateful. Deut. 24.

Ver. 10. Barren. And thus fall into contempt. Deut. 7:14. If she committed adultery she must die; or if she were only suspected, she must drink the waters of jealousy. Num. 5:17. Husbands would often seek a divorce, on such occasions; which would involve the father in fresh difficulties.

Ver. 11. Multitude, who will accuse thee of negligence. C.

Ver. 12. Body's. Lit. “man’s.” But females are included in this term. H.—It was also necessary to guard the Greeks, and pagans in general, against a criminal affection for boys.

Ver. 13. Man. Gr. “woman.” Malice is natural to her. Beauty becomes her ruin, as well as that of others. C.—The Fathers compare women to a load-stone. S. Bas.—Men who come near them, are greatly exposed. C.

Ver. 14. Better, &c. That is, there is, commonly speaking, less danger to be apprehended to the soul from the churlishness, or injuries we receive from men, than from the flattering favours and familiarity of women. Ch.—Josephus (c. Ap. ii.) attributes this sentence to Moses, and prefers the worst man to the best woman, as Euripides does in Clem. Strom. iv. C.—But this is ridiculous.—Reproach. This explains what sort of good the woman aforesaid has done; she had fostered the passions of men, and brought them to shame, which all the malevolence of an enemy could not have done. H.—The company of women is therefore more dangerous. C. 9. W.

Ver. 15. Remember, or publish. He praises God and the great men of his nation, to the end of the book, (C.) or to C. 50:29. H.—By. Lit. “in.” H.—I have only abridged what the sacred Scriptures relate.

Ver. 16. Work. The world displays God’s glory and power. Ps. 18:6.

Ver. 17. Saints, in heaven, or rather the Israelites. Ps. 147:20. C.

Ver. 19. Signs. Lit. “sign,” the order of the stars, &c. H.—Yet God does not study these things, to discover what will happen. He is the author of nature. C.—From his works we are to form some idea of his greatness. Job 28. &c. W.

Ver. 25. Another. By this opposition the world subsists, according to Linus, Epimenides, &c. Hanc Deus et melior litem natura diremit. Met. i. See C. 23:16.

Ver. 26. He. Gr. “one thing establishes the good of another,” (H.)

serving as a counterpoise. C.—Black colours cause the white to shine forth. Youth is guided by the experience of old age. M.

ECCLESIASTICUS 43

Ver. 1. Shew. We cannot behold these things without admiration of God.

Ver. 2. High. The sun is the most excellent of all irrational creatures, affording light (W.) and heat for the production of things; (H.) whence Aristotle (de Anima ii.) styles it “father of men and of gods.” Yet it is inferior to man, being devoid of reason. All creatures manifest God’s majesty; the little as well as the great. W.

Ver. 5. Hastened. Some Gr. copies read “slackened,” alluding to Jos. 10:13.

Ver. 6. In all. Gr. Comp. “to stand guard.” Other copies agree with the Vulg. though embarrassed.—World. To mark out the seasons. Gen. 1:14. Ps. 103:19.

Ver. 7. Day. The lunar system prevailed only after the captivity. The Passover was celebrated on the 14th of the moon of Nisan.

Ver. 8. Name. Meni is used for the moon, (Jer. 52:11.) which resembles the Gr. mén, “month.” This is also derived from méné, “the moon.” We know not what Heb. words were used. C. 6:23. The two former may both come from manah, “to divide.”

Ver. 9. Armies. The stars, &c. are compared to a camp or army.

Ver. 11. Judgment. The angels are not pure before God; (Job 4:18 and 15:15) or rather the stars obey his orders. Bar. 3:34. Judg. 5:20. Ps. 118:91. C.

Ver. 12. Brightness. Mille trahit varios adverso sole colores. Æn. 5.

Ver. 14. Judgment, to punish the wicked. Ex. 14:24. Is. 37:36. C.

Ver. 15. Birds, sent to give information by letters, as the Egyptians still do. Bochart i. 2. Is. 60:5.—Tempests execute God’s judgments. Job 38:22.

Ver. 16. Broken, as from huge mountains. Job 38:39. C.

Ver. 18. Strike. Gr. “upbraid, (Drus.) or make the earth fall in labour,” odinesen. Grabe. H.

Ver. 19. Lightning. Gr. “flying, he.” H.—Locusts. “They cover the cornfields with a destructive cloud.” Pliny xi. 29.

Ver. 20. Shower, as if God were about to drown the world. The melting of snow occasions dreadful inundations. C.—Its whiteness sometimes deprives people of their sight. Xenoph. Anab. iv.

Ver. 21. Thistles. Gr. “stakes,” pointed as it were with steel. M.

Ver. 22. Crystal, or ice. C.

Ver. 23. Burn. Cold destroys verdure no less than fire. Gen. 31:40.

Ver. 24. Overpower it. Gr. “give joy; (25) with,” &c. H.—Warmth and rain restore beauty to the earth, after the horrors of winter.

Ver. 25. Still. Lit. “silent.” Matt. 8:26.—Lord. Gr. Rom. “Jesus planted it;” which is a mistake for νησους, islands. C.—“He planted islands in it.” Grabe thus corrects the Alex. copy, though it agree with the Rom. and Aldine editions. H.

Ver. 26. Thereof. Ps. 106:23. “He who has not sailed has seen nothing evil.” Possidip.

Ver. 27. Monstrous. Gr. “creation of whales.” H.

Ver. 28. Is. Gr. “his angel gives a prosperous journey.”—Regulated. Gr. “blended.” H.—If God be angry, all will go to the bottom. Grot.

Ver. 29. All. Lit. “in all.” Every thing obeys God. C. 42:15. Eccle. 12:13.

Ver. 30. Him. So the Gr. reads. Vulg. seems to say, “boasting in all, what shall we be able to do?” What is man, fighting against the Lord! C.

Ver. 32. His. Gr. “exalting the Lord, exert your power; and labour, for you will not come up to him: (35) who,” &c. H.—He is above all praise. Ps. 144:3. C.

Ver. 35. From. Gr. “many hidden things are,” &c. H.—The angels, and many secrets of nature, have not been mentioned. C.

Ver. 1. Gr. prefixes, "A Hymn of the Fathers." The author here imitates the third work of Solomon. H.—He had given rules for all virtues; and he now sets before us those who had put them in practice. C.—It was the custom to sound forth the praises of these fathers in the temple and synagogues. v. 15. Grot.

Ver. 2. Glory. Gr. adds, "in them." He was the author of all their virtues, (H.) and has acquired much glory by their means, (C.) among men; though his essential glory can never increase.

Ver. 3. In the. Gr. "futurity by their predictions." Kings, judges, and prophets are praised. H.—The virtuous are justly styled kings. Gen. 23. W.

Ver. 4. The present. Gr. "the people by counsels, and by the knowledge of the office of scribes of the people. Wise in speech by their instruction. (5.) Seeking out," &c. H.—Prudence and eloquence ought to appear in a ruler.

Ver. 5. Tunes. The Hebrews, and David in particular, were famous for music. C.

Ver. 6. In. Gr. "established in power, living," &c. (H.) like Abraham, Ezechias, &c. C.

Ver. 7. Generations. Lit. "race of their nation." But this is omitted in Greek.

Ver. 8. Born. Gr. "some of them have left a name," (H.) or posterity. Deut. 25:6.

Ver. 9. Them. This may be understood of the wicked Israelites, or of the sons of Abraham by Agar, &c.

Ver. 10. Mercy. Assideans, (1 Par. 6:41 and 1 Mac. 7:13) or true Israelites.

Ver. 14. Peace. The Jews were very solicitous about this. Gen. 35:8. C.

Ver. 16. Into. Gr. "a model of penance to past or future generations." H.—The Latin fathers suppose that Henoch was translated to heaven, or to the earthly paradise. It is the tradition both of Jews and Christians that he is still alive, and will come to oppose Antichrist, (Apoc. 11:3. Gen. 5:22. Heb. 11:5. C.) when he will preach penance, (W.) chiefly to the Gentiles, while Elias will address himself to the Jews. H.

Ver. 17. A. Gr. "an exchange," to save mankind. Gen. 6:8 and 8:21. C.

—Noe was perfect, (W.) which does not exclude some human failings. H.

Ver. 20. Multitude. His name implies as much. C.—He was father of all who believed in Christ. W.

Ver. 21. Faithful. He received the sign of circumcision, and was ready to sacrifice Israel. C.

Ver. 22. In his. Gr. “that the nations should be blessed in his posterity.”—Dust. Lit. “a heap.” H. Gen. 12:2 and 22:17.

Ver. 23. Earth. In Arabia, and from the Red Sea to the Euphrates. This was verified in David. Ps. 71. Gen. 13:14.

Ver. 25. Jacob. The promises made to Abraham were confirmed to Isaac and Jacob. H.—These were also blessed in Abraham. W.

Ver. 26. Tribes. Giving him so many children, who inherited Chanaan.

Ver. 27. Men. The Israelites. v. 10. Gr. “the man,” Joseph; though the Gr. of the Rom. edit. would refer it to Moses. C.—Grabe corrects his copy agreeably to the Vulg. H.

ECCLESIASTICUS 45

Ver. 1. Men. Pharao, Jethro, and the whole nation of the Hebrews, whom he governed as a father, being the mildest of men. Num. 12:2–3. His life was a continued miracle, and he was honoured more than any prophet, (ib. 6. Acts 7. C.) seeing God’s works more clearly, but not his substance. Ex. 33. W.

Ver. 2. Saints, patriarchs or angels, as he saw God face to face.—Enemies. The Egyptians, Amalecites, and all who rebelled against God.—Cease. Removing the scourges which he had inflicted. His serpent devoured those of the magicians, who were confounded before him.

Ver. 3. Kings. Pharao, Og, &c.—Glory, when he had passed by. Ex. 33:22.

Ver. 4. Meekness, giving him these necessary qualifications to rule a rebellious people. v. 1.

Ver. 5. Heard. Gr. “made him hear his voice.”

Ver. 6. Face, familiarly.—Life, by observing which, the Hebrews might live. Thus the trees of life and of knowledge were a sort of remedy against death and ignorance. Gen. 2:9. C.

Ver. 7. His. Gr. “holy, like to himself his brother of the,” &c. H. Ps. 105:16.—He was the interpreter of Moses, and honoured with the high priesthood. Aaron and his posterity were bound to be faithful to the law. v. 19. C.—Their priesthood was to last till Christ appeared, a priest forever of the order of Melchisedech.

Ver. 9. Robe. Lit. “stole,” (H.) which was a long robe, used in the East by both sexes.—Crowned. Gr. “confirmed” him in his dignity. C.

Ver. 10. To the. Gr. “enclosing his legs, (H. breeches. C.) and the robe hanging down to the feet, (poderê) and the garment over the shoulders,” (H. ephod) which met at the breast, where the rational were fixed. See Ex. 28. C.—Many. Gr. “spheres, (H. or pomegranates. Ex. 28:23. C.) with many little bells,” (H.) to admonish the people of his coming.

Ver. 12. Man. Beseleel, who made the greatest part. C.—Gr. “of an embroiderer, with the rational of judgment, and the signs (manifestation. C.) of truth. H.—Thus the Sept. commonly describe the Urim and Thummim. Ex. 28:6. C.

Ver. 13. Tribes. Gr. “sons.” H.—Their names were engraven on 12 stones.

Ver. 14. Holiness, or “holy to the Lord.” Ex. 28. C.—Work. Gr. “works very rich.” H.—This regards all his attire. The high priest only used it in the temple, on grand festivals. C.

Ver. 17. His. Gr. Comp. “their.” H.—Some of the ordinary priests offered the daily holocausts.

Ver. 18. Filled. Consecrated. Lev. 8:26.

Ver. 19. Testament. It prefigured that of Christ, which lasts for ever. Heb. 7. C.—Execute. Gr. “serve him, both by executing the priestly office, and by blessing the people,” &c. H.—This was one of the high priest’s functions. Num. 6:23. The rest might offer sacrifice and incense, except on the day of expiation, (Lev. 16) and on solemn festivals, though the Scripture is silent on the latter head.

Ver. 21. Law. The most important causes were to be tried before the high priest, who, with his brethren, were the interpreters of the law. Matt. 2:6.

Ver. 24. Fire. Thus consuming 250 men. Num. 16:30.

Ver. 26. Eat. The skin of holocausts were along given to the priests.

Ver. 27. People. Having only 2,000 cubits round their cities. Num. 35. The priests were thus interested to keep the people to their duty, as their own subsistence depended on the devotion and gifts of the latter. C.—They had no distinct territory, like the rest of the tribes. W.

Ver. 28. Imitating. Gr. “by shewing a zeal in the fear of the Lord.” Num. 25:11.

Ver. 31. That he. Or so he made a covenant with Aaron, that he, &c. C. —Gr. “and (Grabe puts according to) the covenant made to David ... that the king’s son successively should alone inherit, the inheritance of Aaron was for his posterity. May he impart wisdom to your heart,” &c. —He made. Gr. “glory during their age.” H.—The sacred writer pours forth this prayer for God’s ministers, (C.) that their good things and glory may never end, as long as the Jewish dispensation should last. He is equally solicitous for the priesthood as for the sceptre of David. In both the families of Aaron and David children succeeded to their father’s dignity, and God had made a covenant for that purpose. H.—David assisted the priests, and greatly advanced God’s service. 1 Par. 23. W.—His eulogy is given C. 47; and he is here only mentioned (C.) as a comparison. H.

ECCLESIASTICUS 46

Ver. 1. Jesus, the son of Nave. So Josue is named in the Greek Bibles. For Josue and Jesus signify the same thing, viz. a Saviour; (Ch.) and Nave is the Greek pronunciation of Nun; (H.) or this is an old fault of transcribers. C.—Among. Gr. “in the prophecies.” H.—He was endued with the prophetic spirit, and was raised up by God as a noble figure of the great prophet. Deut. 18:15. C.—He succeeded Moses in the temporal power; the spiritual belonged to the sons of Aaron. Num. 27. W.

Ver. 2. Israel. He led the people into Chanaan, and divided it among them.

Ver. 3. Hands. To pray, (Vat.) or fight, (Boss.) or to give a signal. Jos. 8:26. A. Lap.—Stretched. Literally, threw (H.) darts, romphœas.

Ver. 4. The. Gr. “he conducted the wars of the Lord.” C.—Other edit. agree with us.

Ver. 5. In. Gr. “by his hand,” (H.) and order, so that the day-light continued 24 hours.

Ver. 7. Adversaries. The hail destroyed more than the sword. Jos. 10:11.

Ver. 8. Power. Gr. “complete armour for his warfare was before the Lord, since he,” &c. They found it was impossible to resist such weapons. H.—One. “Follow God,” was a maxim of the ancient sages, which they even attributed to Apollo. Josue and Caleb did so in opposition to the rebels. Num. 14:24. C.—The rest all perished, (W.) if we except those who were not 20 years old, or who did not join in the murmurs of the seditious. H.

Ver. 9. Mercy, and piety, (C.) endeavouring to prevent the murmurs of the people, which would draw upon them destruction, as the event shewed. H.

Ver. 11. Land. Hebron, when he was 85 years old. Jos. 14:6. H.

Ver. 13. Lord. Abimelec must be excepted, (C.) as he was only an usurper. H.—The Judges were all saved, though some have been great sinners. W.

Ver. 14. Place. At the resurrection, which the Jews firmly believed. Ezec. 27:3.

Ver. 16. People. Though he disapproved of their resolution. 1 K. 8:6. Os. 13:11.

Ver. 17. And the. Sixt. V. &c. read, “and he beheld the God.” 1 K. 3:7. C.—Vulg. may signify also, “God beheld Jacob,” (Gr.) with a favourable eye, and enabled Samuel to restore their fallen state, and to recover the ark. H.

Ver. 18. Because. Gr. has not faithful, or what follows. C.—Yet Grabe’s copy retains πιστος ορασεως, “faithful in seeing” into futurity; so that his predictions were always verified, and he acquired the confidence of all. 1 K. 3:20. Prophets were former styled seers: yet they could not behold God, as he inhabits light inaccessible. 1 Tim. 6:16. H.—Light. S. James (1:17) seems to allude to this passage. M.

Ver. 19. Without. Gr. “fed with milk.” 1 K. 7:6. The Philistines were discomfited, and continued peaceable during the rest of Samuel’s government.

Ver. 21. Tyrians, who were auxiliaries, or in league with the Philistines. C.

Ver. 22. Shoe. So Abraham declared he would not receive the latchet of a shoe from the king of Sodom. Gen. 14:23.—Him. All confessed his integrity, before he delivered up the sovereign power to Saul. 1 K. 12.

Ver. 23. Nation. Foretelling that Israel should be defeated. Some doubt whether the soul of Samuel appeared; but it seems clear from this passage, (1 K. 28:18. C. Diss.) as he could not otherwise be praised for it. W.

ECCLESIASTICUS 47

Ver. 1. Nathan. Many other prophets lived at the same time. But he was most conspicuous, and crowned Solomon. C.—Gr. “and after him Nathan arose to prophesy,” (H.) and keep up the succession.

Ver. 2. Flesh. Gr. “peace-offering.” The fat was deemed most delicate.

Ver. 3. Played. Tearing them to pieces with the greatest ease. 1 K. 17:34. C.

Ver. 6. Nation. Who were no longer under the control of the Philistines. H.

Ver. 7. Thousand. This was sung in the cities, (1 K. 18:7. C.) and excited the envy of Saul, who nevertheless could not prevent David’s exaltation. H.—Did he, or the people who praised the Lord and David. C.

Ver. 8. Horn. Power and glory. H.—For ever, is not in Gr. David defeated the Philistines at the beginning of his reign. C.

Ver. 9. Glory. Contained in the Psalms. H.—He was always very grateful. C.—His pure and sincere heart pleased God more than his other works. W.

Ver. 11. Altar. Of holocausts. Moses had not appointed singing.

Ver. 12. Set. Lit. “adorned the times.”—Of his. Gr. “while they praised his holy name, and sounded forth holiness early.” H.—David strove to give all perfection to the sacred ceremonies of religion, that the people might be attracted to the tabernacle, (C.) and serve the Lord with gladness. H.

Ver. 13. Sins. Remitting the punishment, (2 K. 12:13. C.) and the guilt also, (H.) in consequence of his repentance.—Covenant. Engaging that his posterity should enjoy the throne (2 K. 7:12. C.) if they continued faithful. Ps. 131:11 sup.c. 45:31.

Ver. 14. Enemies. The piety of David was thus rewarded. H.—It must have been the greatest satisfaction to him, to see so wise a son on the throne, and all in perfect peace. 3 K. 1:48 and 4:24. C.—These blessings were a reward of his virtue. W.

Ver. 15. Youth. When other are less informed. This serves to place the apostacy of Solomon in a more striking light. C.—The author seems astonished both at the wisdom and at the folly of this prince, (H.) and apostrophises him. W.

Ver. 16. Earth. Or explored all the secrets of nature, retexit. 3 K. 4:29.

Ver. 18. Interpretations of riddles. Hence people praised the Lord. 3 K. 10:24.

Ver. 20. Copper, (aurichalcum.) Gr. “tin.” 2 Par. 9:13.

Ver. 21. Thyself. Lit. “thy thighs.” Gr. “sides.” Syr. “strength.”—Subjection. Lit. “thou hadst power over thy body,” (H.) using it as if it belonged not to God. He was guilty of excess in marrying a thousand wives, and yielding to idolatry, (C.) fearing to displease those whom he loved to his own ruin.” S. Aug. de Gen. ad lit. xi. 42.—Dreadful infatuation! H.

Ver. 22. Defiled. Consecrating some even to Moloch, (Pineda vii. 11.) or having children by those whom the law prohibited. Deut. 7:2 and 23:2. C.—His sins were punished: yet God’s mercy preserved his posterity. W. Ps. 88.

Ver. 23. Rebellious. (Gr.) Lit. “hard.” H.—Jeroboam was at the head of it. 3 K. 12:14. C.

Ver. 24. Lord. David’s piety caused the sceptre to be still preserved in his family, (H.) though Solomon’s conduct deserved to lose it. C.

Ver. 25. Of the. Gr. “a root from him,” to govern a part, while Jeroboam reigned over the other tribes of Jacob. H.—God fulfilled his promises to Jacob and David. M.

Ver. 26. Fathers. Some would hence infer, that Solomon died penitent. H.

Ver. 27. Folly. A most imprudent prince, despised by the whole nation. He answered the people roughly, and lost the ten tribes; but idolatry was his greatest folly, and from this he was never reclaimed.

3 K. 14:22. C.

Ver. 29. Jeroboam. Though not of his seed, as we only find Roboam mentioned of all the thousand wives of Solomon. He left behind him Jeroboam, notwithstanding his desire to have him slain; and this man brought ruin on the nation. H.—Sin. This is the usual title given to this introducer of idolatry. He engaged the ten tribes in the worship of the golden calves, which ruined the state and religion of Israel.

Ver. 31. Vengeance, (defensio) and put, &c. in not in Gr. Theglathphalasar and Salmanasar carried the tribes away into captivity. 1 Par. 5:26 and 4 K. 14. 17:6. C.—Many hereupon opened their eyes, (M.) as we may hope. Those who returned with the rest of the Jews relapsed not, at least into idolatry, in such an open manner. H.

ECCESTASTICUS 48

Ver. 1. Torch. He was animated with a burning zeal, (M.) like John the Baptist, admonishing kings, &c. Jo. 5:35. Lu. 1:17. C.

Ver. 2. And they. Gr. “and by his zeal he diminished them. By,” &c. H. —He slew the priests of Baal, and many perished by famine. 4 K. 18. Grot. C.

Ver. 3. Heaven. That it should not rain for three years and a-half. 3 K. 17:1.—Thrice. First upon his sacrifice, and twice to destroy fifty soldiers. Ib. 18 and 4 K. 1:10. C. W.

Ver. 5. Man. The son of the widow of Sarepta.

Ver. 6. Destruction. The prophets are said to perform what they foretell; to indicate the certainty of the event. Elias denounced death to Achab, Jezabel, Ochozias, and the two Jorams. 4 K. 9:12 and 2 Par. 21:12. &c. C.—Brokest. Gr. “those in honour from,” &c. alluding to (H.) Ochozias and Joram. 4 K. 1:16 and 1 Par. 21:15. C.

Ver. 7. Judgment. Gr. “the reprimand of the Lord,” for betraying fear, (3 K. 19:3. 9. 12. H.) or the reprimand regarded Israel. C.

Ver. 8. Penance. Gr. “reward,” (H.) or punish the guilty. Hazael and Jehu were anointed by Eliseus, though by order of Elias.—Thee. Eliseus was called from the plough, and adhered to his master, who governed the sons of the prophets in large communities.

Ver. 10. Jacob. Prot. reject the authority of this book, partly (H.) on account of this (W.) ancient tradition. Enoch and Elias will appear in the days of antichrist, to convert many. The Jews will then agree with the Patriarchs, and embrace the religion of Christ. C.—Elias came in the person of John the Baptist, at the first coming of our Saviour, but he will come in person before his second appearance. H.—The application which Christ makes of the prediction of Malachy (4:6) to the Baptist, does not exclude this more distant accomplishment. Elias is still alive in some part of the world, as well as Enoch, whom S. Aug. styled “the first-born (primogenitor) of our resurrection.” De Civ. Dei. xv. 19. 4 K. 2:11.

Ver. 11. Friendship. Like Eliseus, or the disciples of both. C.—Gr. “who slept in love, for we also shall live indeed; (13.) Elias,” &c. H.—When we shall witness thy return, if we prove faithful, we may expect an immortal name, and not otherwise. C.—He speaks in the person of those who shall live at that time. H.

Ver. 13. Eliseus. Who received his double spirit, with his garment. 4 K. 2:15.—Prince. Joram. 4 K. 3:14 and 6:32.

Ver. 14. Overcome. Or “escape.” Gr. Syr. He knew what Giezi and the Syrians were doing, at a distance. 4 K. 5:26 and 6:12.—Prophesied. Or raised the dead to life. 4 K. 13:21. C.—On his death-bed (v. 15) he also foretold the victory of Joas. Ib. 14. Vatab. &c.—The miracle wrought by his relics (H.) shewed that he was a true prophet. W.

Ver. 19. Thereof. From Gehon, a fountain on the west. 2 Par. 32:30. C.

Ver. 20. Lifted. Gr. “removed from Lachis, and,” &c. 4 K. 18. &c.

Ver. 23. He was. Gr. “and he purified (H. or redeemed, C.) them by the hand (ministry) of Isaias. (24.) He,” &c. H.—Prayer prevailed when troops were insufficient. 4 K. 19. W.

Ver. 25. Sight. Gr. “vision.” All his predictions were verified. C.

Ver. 26. Life. Fifteen years. Is. 38 and 4 K. 1:11. H.

Ver. 27. At last. After the captivity, (Is. 2:2. C.) or in the days of the Messias. M.

ECCLESIASTICUS 49

Ver. 1. Perfumer. The Scripture reproaches this king alone with no fault. C.

Ver. 3. Directed. Gr. “prosperous in converting the people.” 4 K. 22 and 2 Par. 24. H.—He began when he was only eight years old: but set to work more effectually ten years afterwards. The prophets complain of the disorders which prevailed before that period. C.

Ver. 4. Sinners. Or “sins,” when iniquity was become fashionable. He consulted no false policy, (H.) but boldly exerted himself in God’s service, and even invited the Israelites out of his dominions to come and celebrate the passover. 2 Par. 34:6. C.—They belonged, in effect to him, as the twelve tribes were all promised to David’s family, and the kingdom of Jeroboam was only a rebellion. C. 47:23. H.

Ver. 5. Sin. The two former effaced their sins by repentance, and never tolerated idolatry, which even Josaphat and Asa did, (3 K. 22:43. &c. C.) not destroying the high places. Many others yielded not to idol worship. W.

Ver. 6. Despised. Gr. “they failed,” and lost the crown.

Ver. 7. They gave. Achaz called in to his assistance the king of Assyria, who afterwards claimed the kingdom as tributary to him, 4 K. 18:7. 14. Gr. “He (God. C. Alex. copy has They) gave their horn,” &c. H.

Ver. 8. Holiness. Jerusalem, which was styled holy, in the sicles of Simon.—Desolate. No one came to the festivals. Lam. 1:4.

Ver. 9. Renew. To foretell the destruction and establishment of kingdoms. Jer. 1:5, 10.

Ver. 10. Cherubims. Ezec. 1:4 and 8:1 and 10:1.

Ver. 11. Rain. Denoting great misery. Ezec. 13:11 and 38:22. C.—And of. Lit. “to do good,” (H.) or to announce the liberation of the penitent captives. Ezec. 18:21 and 23:16. &c.

Ver. 12. Place. C. 45:15. The Pharisees adorned the tombs of the prophets. Matt. 23:29. Daniel is not mentioned among them, because he lived at court.

Ver. 13. Hand. Most precious. Jer. 22:24. Cant. 8:6.

Ver. 14. Josedec. He was a noble figure of Christ, and helped build the temple. Agg. i. 2. and ii. 3. Zac. 3:1 and 6:11.

Ver. 15. Houses. He laboured much for the people’s welfare. 2 Esd. 5.

Ver. 16. Henoch. Before the deluge. M.—He stood up for the Lord, amid the most corrupt people, and was translated. C. 44:16. He and Joseph have many advantages over the rest. C.

Ver. 17. Joseph. He has not been named, but designated. C. 44 ult. C.—Who. Gr. the “ruler,” &c. H.

Ver. 18. They prophesied. That is, by being carried out of Egypt, they verified the prophetic prediction of Joseph. Gen. l. Ch. Carriers.—This sentence is omitted in Gr. H.—See c. 48:14.—Joseph had intimated that the Israelites should leave Egypt. W.

Ver. 19. Men. The former was the father of the faithful, before the deluge; the latter after. C.—Beginning. Gr. “in the creation” was appointed to rule. H.—He alone among men was innocent, coming from the hands of God, and he might glory that he had no other father. C.—Eve enjoyed the like privileges. H.

ECCLESIASTICUS 50

Ver. 1. Simon I. was “style[d] the just, on account of his piety towards God, and his good-will to his countrymen.” Jos. 12:2. Many apply what follows to him. Eus. Salien. M. &c.—But Simon II. is more probably meant, who opposed the entrance of Philopator into the sanctuary, after he had offered sacrifice for him, in the pompous manner here described. Boss. iii. Mac. C.—Temple. Which began to want repairs. M.—Simon II. reigned twenty years. C. Jos. 12:4. H.—The first lived in the time of Ptolemy I. of Egypt, when this book was written; and dies before it was translated, under Ptolemy III. about three hundred years before Christ. W.

Ver. 2. Walls. Gr. ἀναλημμα, “the repairs (or elevated building, Mello. 2 Par. 22:5) round the temple,” including the court of the Gentiles, which had not been finished. Ezech. 40:5. It was necessary to build at the edge of the mountain, (C.) and the wall was three hundred cubits from the bottom. This was more than double the height of the temple, as it was only one hundred and twenty cubits high. M.

Ver. 3. Out. Of the reservoirs. But he repaired them. H.

Ver. 4. Destruction. When it was in the most imminent danger from Philopater. 3 Mac. Bos. C.

Ver. 5. Enlarge. Gr. “fortify.”—Conservation. Gr. “when in the midst of the people, coming out of the house of the veil. (6.) He,” &c. H.—

Leaving the most holy place, he was surrounded by crowds of sacred ministers, (v. 14) or rather on the day of expiation, he came into the court of the people, to purify them. C.

Ver. 6. Cloud. He was a far superior to the other priests in majestic appearance and attire, as Lucifer is to other stars, &c. v. 11. C.

Ver. 7. So did. Gr. “on the temple of the Most High,” with dazzling effulgence. Jos. Bel. vi. 6.

Ver. 11. Forth. Gr. adds, “fruits.”—Rearing. Gr. “elevated to the clouds.” H.—Robe. Stole, or violet tunic. C.—Power. That is, with all his vestments, denoting his dignity and authority, (Ch.) and extremely rich, as virtus often implies. C. 44:3. C.—Gr. has, “boasting.”

Ver. 12. Vesture. Gr. “enclosure of holiness,” περιβολην. H.—His splendid attire of gold and jewels, cast a dazzling light all around. C.—He was pleased to offer the peace-offering for the king of Egypt, (Bossuet) to honour him, though another priest might have done it. H.

Ver. 14. Palm. A forest of young ones shoots up from its roots; (Job 29:18) so the high priest shone among the other children of Aaron. C.

Ver. 15. King. Gr. “Almighty” King, παντοκρατορος. H.—He presented an unblemished victim, with all due solemnity. Lev. 3:1.

Ver. 16. Grape. Pouring wine upon the fire. Ex. 29:40. C.

Ver. 17. Prince. Gr. “universal king.” H.—The whole sacrifice was pleasing to him.

Ver. 18. God. Gr. “the Highest.” He had required these sacrifices, as memorials of his covenant, and sovereign dominion. Lev. 23:34.

Ver. 20. House. Gr. Comp. and Grabe, “sound, sweet melody was made.”

Ver. 21. Office, λειτουργιαν αυτου, “his service.” H.—The people prayed for king Ptolemy, to whom they were subject; though the high priest possessed almost sovereign power. The Egyptian monarch was present, (C.) and at the end of the sacrifice expressed his resolution to go into the inmost recesses of the temple, from which the people endeavoured to dissuade him. Finding their efforts to be in vain, “they all (addressing themselves to God) said with one accord.” 3 Mac. 2. Grabe substitutes, “wherefore the high priest, Simon, kneeling down before the temple, and stretching forth his hand with solemnity, made this prayer.”

Ver. 23. Prayer. Gr. “adoration, that they might receive a blessing from the Most High.” H.—Power. In keeping Philopator out of the temple. God granted his request, (C. λῑτᾱνειᾱς) “and scourged him who was so insolent and bold ... throwing him like a reed, unable to move, and speechless on the pavement.” 2 Mac. 2:26. After Philopator’s guards had removed him, the high priest congratulated the people, (v. 26) expressing his abhorrence of their enemies in general, though the only mentions three neighbouring nations which had shewn a particular enmity to the Jews, when a contrary behaviour might have been expected. v. 28. H.

Ver. 24. Now. A the sight of these wonders, the author exhorts the people to be grateful, and full of hope. C.

Ver. 26. His, Simon’s, (M.) or God’s days. When he may judge it convenient. H.

Ver. 27. Abhorreth. Viz. with a holy indignation as enemies of God and persecutors of his people. Such were then the Edomites, who abode in Mount Seir, the Philistines, and the Samaritans, who dwelt in Sichem, and had their schismatical temple in that neighbourhood. Ch. —This was the source of continual dissensions. Joseph. xi. 8. and xii. 2. Jo. 4:20.—The Jews and Samaritans are still at variance. The former, in the days of Esdras, pronounced a curse against the latter, forbidding any of them to become converts to their religion, (Grot.) which, if true, shews a very blameable malice. See Deut. 27:4. H.—Which, &c. is omitted in Gr. These three nations had evinced the greatest hatred towards the Jews, and thus deserved to be accounted objects of horror, though if the author harboured any ill-will, his conduct is not praised, (C.) but only recoreded. H.—The Samaritans consisted of Assyrians, Jews, &c. and therefore are styled no nation; and they were foolish in mixing idolatry with the true worship. W.

Ver. 28. Seir. Gen. 14:6. All the Greek copies read corruptly “of Samaria.”—Foolish. Thus Christ said, you adore what you know not. Jo. 4:22. C. See 4 K. 17:29. W.

Ver. 29. Jesus. He declares his name, and concludes with wishing peace to the observers of these maxims. Grotius thinks that this was inserted by the grandson, (C.) who translated the work into Greek. H. —But there is no reason for this supposition. Solomon puts his name at the beginning and at the end of Ecclesiastes, and he frequently commends his own instructions, as this author does. C. 33:17 and 39:16 and 51:19. C.

Ver. 31. Steps. He ... shall have the light of life. Jo. 8:12. M.—Some

Gr. copies add, “and to the pious he has given wisdom. Blessed be the Lord for ever. So be it. So be it.” H.

ECCLESIASTICUS 51

Ver. 1. Sirach. This prayer may be in imitation of the book of Wisdom. H.—Grotius assigns it to the grandson, without reason; as the author continues to speak of his travels, &c. He seems to have lived under Onias III. and under Seleucus and Antiochus Epiphanes, of Syria, to whom he was probably accused, and hence took occasion to retire into Egypt, where Ptolemy Epiphanes was king. C.—Others think (H.) that he was accused before Ptolemy Lagus, when he took Jerusalem. M.—We know too little of his life to decide any thing. C. See c. 50:1. H.—Saviour. When we are not able to make a return, we must shew greater marks of gratitude, and particularly to God, for the favours which we have not deserved. W.

Ver. 3. By. To accuse me. Zac. 3:1. C.

Ver. 5. Gates. Gr. “many.” H.—He exaggerates the danger to which he was exposed, as he was not miraculously delivered from the flames, &c. (C.) though this might be the case. At least he thanks God for preserving him (H.) from the various torments which were then in use.

Ver. 6. In. Gr. “from the midst of a fire which I did not enkindle,” or deserve by any crime.

Ver. 7. Hell. The grave. I was preserved like Jonas. C.—Unjust. Gr. “the accusation was made to the king, by an unjust tongue. My soul approached unto death, and my life,” &c. H.

Ver. 11. World. Shewn to Noe, Joseph, &c. C.—Nations. Gr. “enemies.” v. 12.

Ver. 13. Thou. Gr. “I raised my supplicating voice from the earth, and I,” &c. H.

Ver. 14. The Father. Grotius asserts boldly, that it should be, “my Father,” and that some Christian has changed this. But his authority may be rejected, when he brings no proof; and Bossuet has solidly refuted him. The passage clearly proves the belief of the second person, and seems to allude to Ps. 109:1. Drus. Vat. &c. C.

Ver. 18. When. He now gives some account of himself, and exhorts all to seek for wisdom. H.—He was advanced in years, when he fell into the aforesaid danger, after his travels. C. 34:9. C.—Wisdom is most easily acquired, while a person is innocent. Eccle. 12. W.

Ver. 19. After her. Being convinced that prayer is requisite for the preservation and improvement of such a treasure. See 3 K. 3:8. C.—And. Gr. “from the flower as of a ripening grape. My heart,” &c.

Ver. 22. Wisdom. Gr. “instruction for myself.” H.

Ver. 25. Wrestled. Against pleasure, idleness, &c. This shews how arduous a task it is to attain wisdom. C.—Confirmed. Greek, “in earnest.”

Ver. 27. Knowledge. Gr. Alex. “time of harvest.” Grabe substitutes, “in purification,” (H.) or the practice of virtue. Wisd. 1:4.

Ver. 28. Heart. Or understanding, as the Heb. place this in the heart. 3 K. 3:9.

Ver. 29. Her. I did it, with all solicitude. Cant. 5:4. Jer. 4:19. C.

Ver. 30. Tongue. Eloquence, (M.) which I will exert in praising him.

Ver. 31. Gather. Gr. “dwell in the,” &c. H.—He addresses those who are walking in the broad road.

Ver. 33. Silver. Only good-will is necessary, which all may have. Is. 55:1. Rom. 10:6. Wisd. 6:13.

Ver. 36. Gold. The wise man has more opportunities of enriching himself than others; but he despises unnecessary wealth. C.—We must labour for wisdom more than for riches, and we shall be rewarded hereafter. W.

Ver. 38. The time. It is never too soon to be wise. In doing good let us not fail, (Gal. 6:9) in order to obtain that food, which remains for ever. Is. 6:7. Fear God, and keep his commandments, for this is all man. Eccle. 12:13. C.—This is the sum of the sapiential works, and of all the Scriptures: To depart from evil is understanding. Job 28:28. H.

ON THE PROPHETS

We come now to another division of the Bible, specified by our Saviour: All things must needs be fulfilled which are written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me. Luke 24:44. He more frequently comprises all the Scriptures under the titles of Moses, or the Law and the Prophets; (ib. v. 27) as in effect, all the sacred writings refer ultimately to him, who is the end of the law; (Rom. 10:4) and the Jews comprise under the name of the first prophets, the histories of Josue, &c. H.—God has kept up a succession of prophets from the beginning, who either by word of mouth or by writing, established the true religion. Their predictions are the most convincing proof of its divine of its divine origin. Is. 41:23. They contain many things clear, and others obscure: having, for the most part, a literal, and a mystical sense. C.—Yet some relate solely to Christ, while others must not be applied to him. Bossuet.—The Fathers, in imitation of the ancient Jews, and of the apostles, discover frequently a spiritual sense, concealed under the letter, as Christ himself declared that Jonas, in the whale's belly, prefigured his burial and resurrection on the third day. See Mat. 12:39. Mar. 9:11. Gal. 4:24. When the figurative sense is thus authorized, it may serve to prove articles of faith; and such arguments must be more cogent in disputes with the Jews, than what can be drawn from their authors. They must confess that the New Testament contains a true history, or they cannot require that we should pay greater deference to the Old. Tertullian (Præs.) well observes, that heretics have no right to the Scriptures: But if they will quote them, they must receive them all, and adopt the sense given to them by the Church. C.—The providence of God, in giving the prophets, and other guides to direct his people, was ever an object of admiration and gratitude. The prophets were enabled, by a supernatural light, superior to that of faith, though beneath that of glory, to announce the secrets of futurity, as eye-witnesses; whence their predictions are styled visions, as such witnesses deserve the utmost credit. We have the writings of the four great, and the twelve less prophets. In these, many things are hard to be understood, which must not be interpreted by the private spiri. 2 Pet. 1. A large commentary would be requisite to explain these to the bottom, and we must refer the curious to the works of the Fathers, &c. as the subsequent notes will be rather briefer than usual. W.—The Sept. varies much from the original in Isaias. But we cannot specify every particular. C.—S. Jerom has frequently given a double version in his learned comments on the prophets, as he would not peremptorily decide which exhibited the sense of God's word more accurately. H.

ISAIAS

THE PROPHECY OF ISAIAS

INTRODUCTION

This inspired writer is called by the Holy Ghost, (Ecclesiastic. 48:25) the great prophet; from the greatness of his prophetic spirit, by which he hath foretold, so long before, and in so clear a manner, the coming of Christ, the mysteries of our redemption, the calling of the Gentiles, and the glorious establishment, and perpetual flourishing of the Church of Christ: insomuch that he seems to have been rather an evangelist than a prophet. His very name is not without mystery: for Isaias in Hebrew signifies the salvation of the Lord, or, Jesus is the Lord. He was, according to the tradition of the Hebrews, of the blood royal of the kings of Juda; an after a most holy life, ended his days by a glorious martyrdom; being sawed in two, at the command of his wicked son-in-law, king Manasses, for reproving his evil ways. Ch.—He began to prophesy ten years before the foundation of Rome, and the ruin of Ninive. His style is suitable to his high birth. He may be called the prophet of the mercies of the Lord. Under the figure of the return from captivity, he foretells the redemption of mankind (C.) with such perspicuity, that he might seem to be an evangelist. S. Jer.

ISAIAS 1

Ver. 1. Amos. His name is written in a different manner, in Hebrew, from that of the third among the minor prophets, (W.) though S. Aug. has confounded them.—Ezechias. He wrote this title towards the end of his life, or it was added by Esdras, &c.

Ver. 2. Earth. He apostrophises these insensible things, (C.) because they contain all others, and are the most durable. Theod. Deut. 31:1.

Ver. 5–7. Sad. This was spoken after Ozias had given way to pride, when the Ammonites, &c. began to disturb Juda, (4 K. 15:37 and 2 Par. 27:7) under Joathan, who was a good prince, but young. C.—Enemies. At the last siege, (S. Jer.) or rather when Jerusalem was taken by the Chaldees. C.—Many, from the highest to the lowest, had prevaricated: but God always preserved his Church. W.

Ver. 8. Cucumbers. Or melons, which grew in the fields, and huts were erected for guards, till they were gathered.

Ver. 10. Sodom. Juda is so styled reproachfully, (C.) because the princes imitated the crimes of that devoted city. Ezec. 16:49. Inf. c. 2:6 and 3:9. M.

Ver. 11. Victims. Without piety, they are useless. God tolerated bloody victims to withdraw the people from idolatry, but he often shewed that they were not of much importance, in order that they might be brought to offer the sacrifice of the new law, which eminently includes all the rest. S. Jer. Ps. xlix. 9. Am. v. 21. Jer. vi. 20. Theod.

Ver. 14. Bearing. Hebrew, &c. “pardoning,” (C.) or “bearing.” Sept. “I will no longer pardon your sins.” H.

Ver. 16. Wash. Interiorly. C.—He seems to allude to baptism. Eus. Theod.

Ver. 18. Accuse me. If I punish you without cause.

Ver. 22. Water. There is no sincerity in commerce. C.—Teachers give false interpretations of the law. S. Jer.—Iniquity abounded before the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldees and Romans. W.

Ver. 24. Ah! God punishes with regret. M.—Comfort. I will take complete vengeance under Joathan, (4 K. 15:37.) Achaz, &c.

Ver. 25. Tin. I will reform abuses in the reign of Ezechias, but much more by establishing the Church of Christ, which shall be the faithful city. C.

Ver. 26. Judges. The Jews explain this of the judges, and priests, who governed after the captivity; though it refer rather to the apostles, &c. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 29. Idols. Prot. “oaks, which ye have desired, and ye shall be confounded for the gardens,” &c. H.—the groves were sacred to Venus, and the gardens to Adonis, and were scenes of the greatest immorality and profanation. C. 65:3.

Ver. 31. It. The efforts of Achan and Ezechias against the enemy proved in vain. C.

ISAIAH 2

Ver. 1. Jerusalem. Many particular prophecies are blended with the general one, which regards Christ. C.

Ver. 2. Days. The whole time of the new law, from the coming of Christ till the end of the world, is called in the Scripture the last days; because no other age, or time shall come after it, but only eternity. Ch.—It is therefore styled the last hour. 1 Jo. 2. W.—Mountains. This shews the perpetual visibility of the Church of Christ: for a mountain upon the top of mountains cannot be hid. Ch.—This evidently regards the Church. Mat. 5 W.—The Jews can never shew the fulfillment of this prophecy in any material temple. Micheas (4:1) copies this text.

Ver. 3. Jerusalem. Our Saviour preached there, and in some sense the religion established by him, may be esteemed a reform, or accomplishment of the old law.

Ver. 4. War. Ezechias enjoyed peace after the defeat of Sennacherib, as the whole world did at the birth of Christ. C.—Claudentur belli portæ. Æn. i.

Ver. 5. Lord. Ezechias, or rather Christ and his Church, invite all to embrace the true faith. C.

Ver. 6. Jacob. Thus the converts address God, (H.) or the prophet give the reasons of the subversion of the ten tribes.—Filled. Consecrated as priests.—Children. Imitating idolatrous nations, (C.) and marrying with them, (C. Sept. Theod.) or even giving way to unnatural sins. S. Jer. M.—The Jews were not utterly cast off till they had put Christ to death. His Church shall never perish. W.

Ver. 8. Horses. Which the kings were forbidden to multiply. Deut. 17:16. Great riches often precede the ruin of states.

Ver. 9. Forgive. Sept. “I will not dismiss them.” Heb. “and thou hast not pardoned them.”

Ver. 10. Rock. Screen thyself if thou canst. He alludes to the kingdom of Israel, which was ruined by idolatry. v. 18. 20.

Ver. 13. Basan. Israel; or Syria and the Ammonites, (C.) whom Nabuchodonosor subdued, five years after he had taken Jerusalem, (Joseph. x. 11.) as the Idumeans, (v. 14.) Philistines, and Egyptians, (v. 15) and Tyrians, (v. 16) who felt also the indignation of the Lord. Jer. 25:15.

Ver. 16. Tharsis. In Cilicia, denoting large ships for merchandise.—Fair. Heb. “desirable pictures.” Sept. “ships.” C.

Ver. 18. Destroyed. This was verified by the establishment of Christianity. And by this and other texts of the like nature, the wild system of some modern sectaries is abundantly confuted, who charge the whole Christian Church with worshipping idols, for many ages. Ch.—Yea, for above a thousand years, while she still professed the name of Christ. W.

Ver. 20. Bats. The Egyptians adored all sorts of animals. Herod. ii. 65. —Ægyptus portenta colat. Juv. xv.—Omnigenumque Deum monstra. Æn. viii.—The mole was much esteemed by magicians, who promised any the art of divination and success, who should eat the heart of one still warm. Pliny xxx. 3. The Israelites were always ready to embrace such superstitious practices. C.

Ver. 22. High. Adhere to Jesus Christ. Orig. M.—Sept. omit this sentence, and S. Jer. thinks they did it perhaps for fear of shocking their brethren. In Jer. 17.—It is supplied from Aquila's version, "how must he be esteemed?" C.—Prot. "for wherein is he to be accounted of?" Jesus will kill the wicked one with the spirit of his mouth. 2 Thess. 2:8. H.—No dependence must be had in man. The Israelites vainly trusted in Egypt. C.

ISAIAS 3

Ver. 1. Strong. Heb. and Sept. imply, “woman.” H.—Validam. S. Cyp. Test. i.—After the death of Christ, the Jews had none strong. S. Jerom.—Strength. Heb. “staff,” or support (Lev. 26:26) in the dreadful famine which fell on Jerusalem. Lam. 4:5. 10. Who then shall rely on the power of any man? C. 2:22. C.—The Jews were depressed at the sieges of their city, and will be so till the end of the world. W.

Ver. 2. Prophet. Ezechiel was taken away under Jechonias. Other prophets were disregarded, and the cunning man, (ariolus, which may be understood in a good or bad sense. C.) every false prophet was silent, when danger threatened.

Ver. 3. Countenance. Sept. “the admired counsellor,” (H.) who came into the king’s presence.—Architect. 4 K. 24:14. C.—Eloquent. Lit. “mystic.” H.—Aquila and Sym. “enchanter.”

Ver. 4. Effeminate. Heb. “babes.” Sept. “scoffers.” Aquila, &c. “changers,” (C.) who give way to unnatural excesses. Rom. 1:27. H.—Some manifest a prudence beyond their years: but the last kings of Juda did not. 2 Par. 36:1. Eccle. 10:16.

Ver. 5. People. They were divided, whether they should continue to obey Nabuchodonosor, or listen to the Egyptians. Ismael slew Godolias. Jer. 41.

Ver. 6. Garment. They were ready to follow any, who was not quite destitute, like themselves. Jer. 39:10.—Ruin. Fallen people.

Ver. 7. Clothing. The indigent were excluded from dignities, for fear lest they should seek to enrich themselves by unjustifiable means. Ex. 18:22. Plut. in Sol. Pliny xvi. 19. C.

Ver. 8. For. The prophet tells what will happen. M.—And their. Sept. “are sinful, disbelieving what regards the Lord. Wherefore now their glory is brought low.” H.—They must have followed a very different Hebrew copy from ours. C.

Ver. 9. Shew, (agnitio.) “Knowledge.” W.—Impudence, &c. C.—Hacurath (H.) occurs no where else. C.—From their countenance we may judge that they are proud, &c. M.

Ver. 10. Well. Jeremias (39:11) was treated by the enemy with great respect. Sept. "having said, let us bind the just man, for he is troublesome, (H.) or displeasing (C.) to us. Hence they," &c. H. Wisd. 2:12. Many of the Fathers quote it thus. But our version agrees well with the original, as Isaias joins consoling predictions with those which are of a distressing nature. C.—Yet the Sept. seem to have thrown light on the Heb. by supplying an omission from the book of Wisdom. Houbig.—Thus all must be explained of the wicked, whose malice shall be punished.—He shall. S. Jer. and all versions read, "they shall eat the fruit of their doings, or devices." Fructum adinventionum suarum comedent. H.—All who hear of this must applaud the just God for acting well in their punishment. According to the Sept. Christ and his adversaries are clearly pointed out. S. Jer.

Ver. 12. Women. "Let no women be our senate, as the impious Porphyrius objects." The scribes and Pharisees sought for lucre and pleasure. The teacher approved by the Church must excite tears and not laughter; he must correct sinners, and pronounce no one blessed. S. Jer. H.—The last kings of Juda were real tyrants, and weak as women. C.—Blessed. Prot. marg. and the text has, "lead thee."

Ver. 16. Pace. Prot. "and making a tinkling with their feet," (H.) by means of little rings round their legs. C. Stridore ad se juvenes vocat. S. Jer. ep. xlvii.—The daughters of Sion, denote all the cities and villages which were defaced by the Chaldees, and still more by the Romans, forty years after Christ. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 17. Bald. Like slaves. Deut. 21:12.—Hair. Heb. and Sept. "shame."

Ver. 18. Of shoes. Heb. "gold tissue." Ps. 44:14. This term occurs nowhere else, and many of these superfluous ornaments are not well known. But we may conclude that they are pernicious to a state, and hateful to God. C.—Decorem ... invitorem libidinis scimus. Tert. cult.

Ver. 24. Stench. The Jews are noted on this account, as if in consequence of this curse, or of their being confined to prisons, &c. Fœtentium Judæorum et tumultuantium sæpe tædio percitus.—M. Aurelius "was often weary of the stinking and seditious Jews." Marcellin ii.

Ver. 25. Fairest. They shall not be spared. C.—"As they have perished by their beauty, their fairest," &c. Chal.

Ver. 26. Ground. The posture of captives. Lam. 1:1.

ISAIAS 4

Ver. 1. Seven. Many shall sue for a husband, men shall be so scarce. To continue unmarried was reproachful. Deut. 7:14. C.—After the conversion of the Gentiles, pastors will be much wanted. W.

Ver. 2. Bud. That is, Christ, (Ch.) who was faintly prefigured by Zorobabel. Zac. 3:8. Our Saviour was the fruit of the earth, and sovereign Lord. C.

Ver. 3. Life. Only the faithful shall be saved. W.—The Jews, after the captivity, shall be more obedient. But converts to the faith of Christ are styled saints, (Rom. 1:7. &c.) such particularly as are predestined to glory. Rom. 8:30. C.—Those who are called to life and the true faith, may forfeit this honour, by their own fault. M.

Ver. 4. Burning. By baptism of water and fire, or of the Holy Ghost. S. Jer.

Ver. 5. Protection. God will protect his Church, more than he did the Israelites by the pillar. Ex. 14:20. S. Bas. &c.

ISAIAS 5

Ver. 1. My cousin. So the prophet calls Christ, as being of his family and kindred, by descending from the house of David. Ch. M.—Heb. and Sept. “beloved.” Dod may also mean a near relation. C.—Isaias being of the same tribe, sets before us the lamentations of Christ over Jerusalem. Lu. 19:41. W.—The Hebrews had canticles of sorrow, as well as of joy. The prophet thus endeavours to impress more deeply on the minds of the people what he had been saying. The master of the vineyard is God himself. v. 7. C.—Hill. Lit. in the horn, the son of oil. Ch.—The best vines grew among olive and fig trees. Doubdan 21.—Sept. “in a horn, (mountain) in a fat soil.” H.

Ver. 2. Stones. They burn and starve in different seasons. Col. 2:3.—Choicest. Heb. sorek. H.—There was a famous valley of this name. Judg. 16:4. The angels guarded the vineyard, in which Abraham, Moses, &c. were found.—Tower. To keep the wine, &c. Mat. 21:33. It denotes the temple, (C.) Scriptures, &c. M.—Wild. Sour. Deut. 32:32.

Ver. 3. Judge. God condescends to have his conduct scrutinized. C. 41:1.

Ver. 4. Was it. “Why has it produced wild grapes, while I looked?” &c.

Ver. 5. Down. By the Chaldees, and after the death of Christ. C.—when God withdraws his aid, man is unable to stand. Yet he falls by his own fault, which God only permits. W.

Ver. 6. It. During the whole of the captivity, the land might keep its sabbaths. Lev. 26:34. C.—The people shall be deprived of saving doctrine. M.

Ver. 7. Israel. This comparison is very common. Ps. 79:9. Mat. 20:1. C.—The preceding parable is explained. M.—Cry. For vengeance. Jer. 12:8. Gen. 4:10 and 18:20. C.

Ver. 8. Even. Sept. “to take from your neighbour: shall,” &c. H.

Ver. 9. Things. Unjust practices.—Inhabitant. What will your avarice avail, (H.) since you must abandon all? C.

Ver. 10. Measure. Heb. “both.”—Thirty. Heb. “a chomer shall yield an epha.”

Ver. 11. To follow. Heb. “for shecar,” (C.) palm wine, (Theod.) or any inebriating liquor. S. Jer. in C. xxviii. Our version is conformable to Aquila and Sym. H.—Num. 6:3. Eccle. 10:16.

Ver. 12. Work. Chastisement. v. 19 and c. 28:21. C.—They are admonished to observe the festivals of the Lord, and not to indulge in riotousness. W.

Ver. 14. Hell. Or the grave, which never says enough. Prov. 30:15. Isaias alludes to what should happen under Nabuchodonosor, as if it were past. G.

Ver. 16. Justice. All will be taught to adore him. H.

Ver. 17. Strangers. Ammonites, &c. (C.) shall occupy part of the land. H.

Ver. 18. Cart. Fatiguing themselves with iniquity, (Wisd. 5:7. C.) and delaying your conversion. S. Isid. M.

Ver. 19. It. The Jews were often guilty of the like insolence. Jer. 17:15.

Ver. 21. Conceits. Blind guides. Mat. 15:14.

Ver. 22. Drink. Heb. “mix shecar.” People generally mixed wine and water. They also strove who could drink most, and the Greeks had a feast for this purpose, (C.) which they styled Choas, for the measure which was to be swallowed down. Aristoph. Acharn. act. iv. 4. and 5. ult.—Cyrus the younger boasted to the Gr. ambassadors, that “he could drink and bear more wine than his brother.” Plut. in Artax.

Ver. 23. Justice. Declaring the righteous guilty. v. 20. H.

Ver. 25. Still. After the ruin of Jerusalem, the people were led away. C.—Grievous sins must be severely punished, as was that of the murderers of Christ. W.

Ver. 26. Off. Like a king, leading all his subjects to battle. C.—Whistle. He alludes to the custom of leading forth bees by music. C. 7:18. S. Cyr.—Earth. The Chaldees, (c. 41:9. Jer. 6:22) and not the Romans, as some would suppose.—Swiftly. Like an eagle. Dan. 7:4. Jer. 48:40.

Ver. 27. Broken. They shall march incessantly. Ezech. 26:7 and 30:11.

Ver. 28. Hoofs. They were hardened, but not shod. Xenoph. Amos 6:13.

Ver. 29. Lion. Nabuchodonosor is compared to one. v. 26. Jer. 4:7.

Ver. 30. Mist. Denoting calamity. Heb. “ruin.” Sept. “indigence.” C.

ISAIAS 6

Ver. 1. Died. Either a natural (C.) or a civil death, by means of the leprosy. Chal. Tostat. 7.—This and the former chapters relate to the commencement of Joathan’s reign, whether before or after the death of Ozias. C.—Many think that this was the first prediction of Isaias. Orig. S. Jer. ad Dam.—I saw. By a prophetic vision, as if I had been present at the dedication of the temple. 3 K. 8:10. C.—Lord. Not the Father, as some have asserted, but the Son. Jo. 12:40. S. Jer. ad Dam. C.—Neither Moses nor any other saw the substance of God; but only a shadow. Yet Manasses hence took a pretext to have Isaias slain. Orig. S. Jer. Trad. Paral. W.

Ver. 2. The two Seraphims “burning.” They are supposed to constitute the highest order of angels. Num. 21:6.—His. God’s or their own face. Heb. and Sept. are ambiguous. Out of respect, (C.) they look not at the divine majesty. M.

Ver. 3. Glory. By no means of the Incarnation. The unity and Trinity are insinuated. S. Jer. S. Greg. Mor. xxix. 16.

Ver. 4. Of him. Sept. “them,” (H.) the Seraphim signifying that the veil was removed by the death of Christ, (Theod.) or that the people should be led into captivity, as a Jew explained it to S. Jerom.

Ver. 5. Peace. It is proper for sinners to do so. Eccli. 15:9. The prophet was grieved that he was unworthy to join in the acclamation of the Seraphim, and had reason to fear death. Gen. 16:13. Ex. 33:20. He finds himself less able to speak than before, like Moses. Ex. 4:10 and 6:12.

Ver. 6. Coal. “Carbuncle,” (Sept.) the word of God, (S. Basil) spirit of prophecy, (S. Jer. 142. ad Dam.) &c.

Ver. 7. Sin. Impediment in speech. All defects were attributed to some sin, (Jo. 9:2) as Job’s friends maintained.

Ver. 8. For us. Hence arises a proof of the plurality of persons. C.—Send me. Thus Isaias was an evangelical and apostolical prophet. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 10. Blind. The prophets are said to do what they denounce. S. Tho. 1. q. xxiv. 3. Sanct.—Sept. “heavy or gross is the heart,” &c. The authors of the New Testament quote it thus less harshly.—Them. Is God unwilling to heal? Why then does he send his prophet? C.—He intimates that all the graces offered would be rendered useless by the hardened Jews. S. Isid. Pelus. 2. ep. 270.—Heb. may be, “surely they will not see,” &c. C.

Ver. 11. Desolate. By means of Nabuchodonosor, (S. Chrys.) and the Romans, (Eus. &c.) or even till the end of the world, their obstinacy will continue.

Ver. 12. Earth. After the captivity, the people shall be more docile. But this was more fully verified by the preaching of the gospel.

Ver. 13. Tithing. The land shall produce its fruits, and people shall bring their tithes. Ezec. 20:40. There shall be some left; (c. 1:9 and 4:3. C.) though only a tenth part will embrace Christianity. S. Bas.—Made. Sept. “ravaged.” They shall be exposed to many persecutions under Epiphanes, and few shall escape the arms of the Romans, (C.) those particularly (H.) who shall be a holy seed. C.—The apostles were of Jewish extraction, (H.) and spread the gospel throughout the world. M.

Ver. 1. Achaz. This must be seventeen years later than the former prediction. 4 K. 15:37. The kings of Syria and Israel jointly attacked Juda, but were forced to raise the siege of Jerusalem. The next year they came separately, and committed the following ravages. The news of their junction threw all into confusion. v. 2. Isaias was then sent to inform the king, that the designs of his enemies should not take effect. Yet the two kings obtained each a victory. But they could not dethrone Achaz, as they intended. C.—Paine traduces this prophecy as a lie, asserting that they succeeded. What! did they make Tabeel king? v. 6. The Israelites would not even keep the captives who had been taken. 2 Chron. 28:15. Watson, let. 5.—Achaz had been made captive before. But now the Lord defeated the projects of his enemies, as he will the conspiracy of heretics against his Church. W.

Ver. 3. Jasub. This name was mysterious: Shear-Jashub means “the rest shall return” from Babylon, or be converted under Ezechias. C. 10:22. C.—Prot. Go “thou, and Shear-Jashub, thy son, at the end of the conduit,” &c. H.

Ver. 4. Tails. So he styles the two kings in derision. The distrust of Achaz was punished by the loss of many of his subjects, but he was not dethroned, having engaged the Egyptians and Assyrians to attack his enemies. v. 17.

Ver. 6. Tabeel. Chal. “whom we shall think proper.” He will not so much as name him.

Ver. 8. Rasin. Both the king and his capital shall be ruined.—And five. Capellus (p. 497.) would read six and five; or, in eleven years time. But (C.) Ephraim was led captive twenty-one years after, and the Cutheans took their place when sixty-five years had elapsed. A. 3327. Usher—Most people date from the prophecy of Amos to the ruin of Samaria, just sixty-five years. The former solution seems preferable. C.

Ver. 9. Continue. Sept. “and will not understand, even the Lord,” &c. H.—Heb. “and since you do not believe,” (C.) or “because you are not confirmed” by a miracle. Grot.

Ver. 11. Above. Require it to thunder, (1 K. 12:17) or the earth to open. Num. 16:28. C.

Ver. 12. Lord. He was afraid of being forced to relinquish his evil ways. S. Jer.—Though an idolater, he knew he ought not to tempt God.

Ver. 14. Virgin, halma, (H.) one secluded from the company of men. Alma in Latin signifies “a holy person,” and in Punic “a virgin.” The term is never applied to any but “a young virgin.” If it meant a young woman, what sort of a sign would this be? S. Jer.—It was indeed above the sagacity of man to declare that the child to be born would be a boy, and live till the kings should be destroyed. But the prophet undoubtedly speaks of Jesus Christ, the wonderful, &c. (c. 9:5) as well as of a boy, who should prefigure him, and be an earnest of the speedy destruction of the two kings. He was to be born of Isaías, (c. 8:4) and of all the qualities belonging to the true Emmanuel, only that regards him, which intimates that the country should be delivered before he should come to years of discretion. v. 16. C. Diss. Bossuet—The Fathers generally apply all to Christ.—Called. Or shall be in effect. C. 1:26. C.—The king hardly trusted in God’s mercies, whereupon the incarnation of Christ, &c. is foretold. W.

Ver. 15. Honey. Like other infants. C.—The new baptized received some to remind them of innocence. Tert. cor. 3.—Christ shall be true man. M.

Ver. 16. Good. Being arrived at the age of discretion, Achaz engaged the Assyrians to invade Damascus. Its citizens and four tribes were carried into captivity the year following. Phacee only survived another year, A. 3265. This was a pledge, that what regarded the son of the virgin would also be accomplished. C.—Land of the enemy. C. 4 K. 16. M.

Ver. 17. Assyrians. His aid shall prove the greatest scourge, (2 Par. 28:20) while the Idumeans and Philistines shall also ravage the country. 28:17. Achaz has vainly trusted in man.

Ver. 18. Of Egypt. The Idumeans, &c. dwell on the borders. C. 5:26. Yet many explain this of the victories of Nabuchodonosor and Nechas.

Ver. 20. Razor. Or cut off with scissors all the hair, as was done with lepers, (Lev. 14:9) and Levites. Num. 8:7. The country shall be pillaged, and all shall be in mourning. C.—The men shall be despised as no better than women and cowards. S. Jer. Theod.—Hired. With large sums. C.

Ver. 22. Land. Pastures shall be so large, (M.) though uncultivated, the greatest part of the inhabitants being removed.

Ver. 23. Pieces. Sicles. This was the price of the best vineyards. Cant. 8:2. C.—Now people may hunt in them. H.—The subjects of Achaz were much reduced. C.

Ver. 24. Thither. The hedges shall be rooted up (H.) or neglected, so that cattle may graze. M.—Two sorts of mountains are specified; some for vineyards, and others for pasture. C.

ISAIAS 8

Ver. 1. Book. This mystery would require a large explanation. W.—Pen. Lit. “style.” H.—Write intelligibly. Here all is plain. C.—Take. Prot. “concerning Mahershalalchashbaz.” Marg. “in making speed to the spoil, he hasteneth the prey.” H.—Chashbaz, the son of Isaias, was a sign that Syria and Israel should soon be rendered desolate; and in a more elevated sense, he shewed that Christ should overturn the powers of hell. C.—The virgin’s son took the prey from the devil, who before possessed almost all the world. W.—Urias. Probably the high priest, who afterwards weakly complied with the king’s idolatrous order. 4 K. 16:10. C.—Yet at this time, he was a credible witness. H.—Zacharias. A person to us unknown. C.

Ver. 3. Prophetess. The blessed Virgin, (S. Chrys. &c.) or to his wife. He gives his son a different name from Emmanuel, (c. 7:14) that they might not be confounded.—Hasten. Heb. Mahershalalchashbaz. v. 1. H.

Ver. 4. Assyrians. Theglathphalassar, the next year, took the Damascenes to Kir, and Nephthali, Reuben, Gad, and Manasses into captivity. Yet the kingdom continued some time longer. Never was prediction more explicit. Can the pagans produce any thing similar?

Ver. 6. Silence. Being willing to receive Tabeel, instead of their lawful prince. Achaz was then terrified, and chose to become tributary, rather than to lose his crown. Herein both offended God, in whom they ought to have trusted; and the auxiliary king looked upon himself as master of the country. 2 Par. 28:20. C.—Israel had joined with the Syrian; but was reduced to the state of captivity, while Jerusalem was preserved. W.

Ver. 7. River. Euphrates, (C.) with the overflowing of which the Assyrian is compared. H.

Ver. 8. Wings. Or troops.—Emmanuel. Christ was born in the country, and Lord of it: though it might be said to belong to the son of Isaias, as being his figure. C.

Ver. 9. Overcome. The defeat of Sennacherib, of the Idumeans, &c. under Ezechias, is intimated. 4 K. 18:8 and 19:35.

Ver. 10. God. Heb. “Emmanuel.” We have a pledge of God’s protection.

Ver. 12. Conspiracy. In despair, they wish to submit to the enemy. v. 6. Isaias exhorts them to have recourse rather to the Lord. C.

Ver. 14. Two. The wicked of both kingdoms, (H.) who choose to revolt from God. Many of Israel were led into captivity, and the territory of Juda was laid waste. C.

Ver. 16. Disciples. Let some faithful witnesses keep this prophecy, (H.) that when it is verified, all may be convinced.

Ver. 17. Jacob. Having resolved on their ruin. C.

Ver. 18. I and my two children. C. 7:3 and 8:4. H.—The actions of some were prophetic. C. 20:2. Os. 12:10. C.—God announces what will happen, by the names of my children, (H.) and by their age, as well as by my mouth. C.

Ver. 19. Seek of pythons. That is, people pretending to tell future things by a prophesying spirit.—Should not the people seek of their God, for the living of the dead? Here is signified, that it is to God we should pray to be directed, and not to seek of the dead, (that is, of fortune-tellers dead in sin) for the health of the living. Ch.—Mutter. Lit. “use a shrill note,” strident. H.—so Horace, (1 Sat. viii.) says—

Umbræ cum sagana resonarent triste et acutum.

—Should. Make this reply: Should, &c.

Ver. 20. Law. Sealed, (v. 16) or to the law of Moses. Eccli. 34:28. C.—Sept. “why do they consult the dead concerning the living? For he gave the law to assist us.” H.—Light. They shall die or be miserable. C.

Ver. 21. By it. The word of God. H.—God. Elohim means also princes or idols. C.—Whether they seek God unwillingly, or the aid of men, (v. 22) they shall perish. W.

ISAIAS 9

Ver. 1. Loaded. Theglathphalassar took away whole tribes, (2 Par. 5:2–6) the year after this. Yet these people were the first enlightened with the rays of the gospel, (Matt. 4:13) though so much despised. Jo. 7:52. C.—Here Christ preached first. But after his passion, few Jews believed in him. W.

Ver. 2. Risen. the kingdom of Juda hoped for redress, when they saw the people of Israel humbled, (H.) or rather after the defeat of Sennacherib. C.

Ver. 3. And hast. Parkhurst says it should be, “(whom) thou hast not brought up (the Gentiles) with joy they,” &c. Symmachus) H.—The numerous forces of the Assyrians could not save them from the angel. Under Ezechias the people increased. Was not his reign a figure of the Church persecuted and increasing; but on that account, in danger from a relaxation of discipline? Lu. 5:5.—Spoils. They shall return thanks to God for the unexpected liberation.

Ver. 4. Oppressor. Who levied taxes for Assyria. 4 K. 18:7. Sennacherib made war, because Ezechias refused to pay them any longer, and his troops fell upon each other, (C.) as the Madianites had done. Judg. 7. H.

Ver. 5. Fire. Being cut and useless. See Diss. on the defeat of Sennacherib. C.

Ver. 6. Child. The Messias, whom the son of Isaias prefigured.—Shoulder. Where the badges of royalty were worn. C.—Christ bore his cross. Tert. &c.—Wonderful. In his birth, &c.—Counsellor. From whom all good advice proceeds. Grotius falsely translates, “the consuler of the strong God,” meaning Ezechias. Though he deemed the Socinians unworthy of the Christian name, (Ep. ad Valleum.) he too often sides with them. Johets always means one who “gives counsel.” C. 40:13. Ezechias was at this time ten years old, and he did not always take advice, nor was his reign peaceful, &c.—God. The three Greek versions maliciously render El “the strong,” though it be uncertain that it ever has that meaning, as it certainly has not when joined with gibbon, “mighty.” Why should two terms of the same import be used? The Sept. copies vary much. Some read only, “he shall be called the angel of the great council, for I will bring peace upon the princes and his health.” S. Jerom thinks they were afraid to style the child God. But this reason falls to the ground, as other copies have, (C.) after council, “Wonderful, Counsellor, God, the Mighty, the Potent, ἐξουσιασζης, the Prince of Peace, the Father of the world to come, for, &c. (7.) His.” Grabe (de Vitiis lxx. p. 29.) asserts that the former is the genuine version, and that the inserted titles are a secondary one; so that there must have been two version before the days of Aquila, as the text is thus quoted at large by Clement and S. Iræneus, A. 180; Kennicott adds also by S. Ignatius, A. 110. H.—The omnipotent God became a little child, and without violence subdued the world, which he still governs. W.

Ver. 7. Peace. Christ gives it, and propagates his Church. Heb. 12:2.

Ver. 8. Word. Sept. “death.” This also agrees with the Heb. term, and with the context.

Ver. 9. Cedars. They speak in a proverbial way, that they will shortly repair the injuries done by the Assyrians depending on king Osee.

Ver. 11. Him. Israel. Salmanasar came to ruin the kingdom. C.

Ver. 12. Still. God punishes the impenitent throughout eternity. v. 12 c. 10:4. W.

Ver. 14. Him. Heb. “the branch and the rush.” C.—Sept. “the great and the small.”

Ver. 16. Headlong. If the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch. Matt. 15:14. H.

Ver. 17. Folly. Sin. They are all guilty. He will shew no compassion.

Ver. 18. High. All shall witness the fall of Israel, (C.) like a forest on fire. H.

Ver. 19. Brother. Civil wars shall rage. 4 K. 15. Josephus (Bel. vii.) perhaps alluded to this passage, when he said, that an ancient prophecy announced ruin to the Jews, when they should turn their arms against each other. C.

ISAIAS 10

Ver. 1. Injustice. These great ones excite God’s indignation. C.—Jeroboam forbidding any to go to Jerusalem; and the Pharisees establishing their wicked traditions, ruined all. W.

Ver. 3. Afar. When Salmanasar shall come from Ninive to destroy Samaria, to punish the people for their idolatry (C.) and oppressions. H.—Glory. Golden calves, (Ose. 8:5 and 10:5) or possessions. C. 9:8.

Ver. 5. Woe. Or come on, Heus, though (C.) ho is ordinarily rendered, alas! It here indicates that God makes use of this scourge with regret, and will afterwards consign it to the flames. H.—The prophet speaks of Salmanasar, or of Sennacherib. S. Cyr. S. Jer.

Ver. 6. Deceitful. Heb. “hypocritical,” joining my worship with that of idols. C.—They had solemnly promised to serve the Lord. Ex. 19:8. W.

Ver. 7. So. He will not think that he is executing my vengeance, supposing that he conquers by his own power.

Ver. 9. As. Lit. “altogether kings.” H.—Thus Nabuchodonosor kept the conquered princes for derision. Hab. 1:10. Judg. 1:7.—Arphad, Arad, or rather Raphanæ. Jer. 49:23.—Damascus. These two cities were not yet subdued.

Ver. 10. Idols. He looks upon the true God as no better than any idols, (4 K. 18:32) and falsely supposes that the latter were adored in Jerusalem. C.

Ver. 12. Works. Humbling and terrifying Ezechias and his subjects, who were reduced to great distress, in order to avert the impending war. H.—Eyes. The Assyrians were punished in their turn.

Ver. 14. Nest. Some put these words in the mouth of God. Tert. Abdias 4.—But they shew the insolence of Sennacherib.

Ver. 15. Axe. The Assyrian has no right to boast. What can man do without God’s assistance? C.—Gratiæ tuæ deputo et quæcumque non feci mala. S. Aug. Conf. ii. 7.—Sennacherib persecuted the Jews of his own free will, though he was God’s instrument. W.

Ver. 16. Fire. The Jews assert, that 185,000 perished by an inward burning, so that only ten men were left. v. 19. S. Jer.

Ver. 17. Light. God. H.—Thorns. Private soldiers. C.

Ver. 18. Glory. Officers.—Flesh. Or body. All shall perish. H.—Fear. Sennacherib escaped alone, and fell by the sword of his own sons.

Ver. 20. Israel now submitted to Ezechias, as their kingdom was overturned in the sixth year of his reign, eight years before Sennacherib’s arrival. Isaias speaks of this time, and therefore makes no distinction of the kingdoms. Striketh the Assyrian.

Ver. 22. Converted. This was partly verified in the children of Israel who remained after the devastations of the Assyrians, in the time of king Ezechias: and partly in the conversion of a remnant of the Jews to the faith of Christ. Ch.—4 K. 18:3. Rom. 9:27. The apostle follows the Sept. (C.) “and if the people of Israel be.”—Converted. Sept. “saved, for perfecting the word and abridging in justice. Because God, the Lord of hosts, will make an abridged word in the universe.” H.—As the apostle has explained this passage, “every other interpretation must cease.” S. Jer.—The few who were converted under Ezechias were a figure of those who should embrace the faith of Christ. C.—

Consumption. That is, the number of them cut short, and reduced to few, shall flourish in the abundance of justice. Ch.—Heb. “the desolation is decreed, justice shall overflow.” God will treat all with rigour. Nah. 1:8. The incredulous Jews shall be rejected. v. 23. Rom. 9.

Ver. 24. Egypt. He sent Rabsaces from Lachis, when he set out to meet Tharaca. 4 K. 19.

Ver. 25. Little. Twenty-eight years, (Ps. 89:4) or he alludes to the destruction which took place in a single night, (C.) or in a moment. v. 16. H.

Ver. 26. Oreb. Judg. 7:25.—And his. Moses thus let loose the waters of the Red Sea on the Egyptians, by stretching forth his rod. C.

Ver. 27. Oil. That is, by the sweet unction of divine mercy. Ch.—Chal. “before the anointed,” in consideration of Ezechias and Isaias. In the higher sense, it denotes the victory of Christ over the devil. C.

Ver. 28. Into Aiath, &c. Here the prophet describes the march of the Assyrians under Sennacherib; and the terror they should carry with them; and how they should suddenly be destroyed. Ch.

Ver. 29. Lodging. Here, say the Assyrians, we will encamp.

Ver. 31. Take. Prot. “gather themselves to flee.” H.

Ver. 32. Nobe. He may arrive thither shortly, in the environs of Jerusalem. C.—Sept. “exhort to-day, that they may continue on the road. Comfort with the hand the daughter of Sion, thou rock and hills within Jerusalem.” H.—Hand. As Nicanor did against the temple. 2 Mac. 15:32. C.

Ver. 33. Vessel. Like Gideon, when he attacked Madian. v. 26. Judg. 7:19. Sept. “the nobles.” H.—Heb. “their beauty.” The empire of Assyria shall presently fall. C.

ISAIAS 11

Ver. 1. Root. Juda shall not be exterminated, like the Assyrians. C.—Christ shall spring from the blessed Virgin, (W.) for the salvation of mankind. The Jews agree, that this prediction regards the Messias; though some, with Grotius, would explain it literally of Ezechias. They do not reflect that he was now ten years old, and that the prophet speaks of an event which should still take place after he had been a long while upon the throne. If we were to look for any figure of the Messias, to whom this might be applicable, it would be Zorobabel. Zac. 3:8. But how disproportionate would be the promises to the execution? Some passages may indeed relate to the return of the captives, (v. 11) as the people must have a more immediate object, to insure the accomplishment of the more elevated predictions concerning the Messias: but these also refer ultimately to the propagation of the gospel, which the prophet had also in view. C.

Ver. 2. Him. In the form of a dove. Jo. 1:32. H.—“The whole fountain of the Holy Ghost descending.” Ev. Nazar. S. Jer.—Christ was filled with his seven gifts, and of his fullness his servants receive. W.—Yet all virtues are the gifts of the holy Spirit, and the number seven is not specified in Hebrew, as the same word (C.) yirath, is rendered godliness, which (v. 3) means, the fear of the Lord. H.—God enables us to penetrate the difficulties of Scripture, and to act with prudence, &c. M.

Ver. 3. Filled. Heb. “breath or smell.” So S. Paul says, (2 Cor. 2:15) we are the good odour of Christ. C.—Prot. “he shall make him of quick understanding (marg. smell) in the fear,” &c. H.—Ears. Which are often deceived. M.

Ver. 4. Wicked. Antichrist, (2 Thess. 2:8) and all impiety, by means of the apostles.

Ver. 5. Reins. He shall possess these virtues, performing his promises with the strictest fidelity. C.

Ver. 6. Wolf. Some explain this of the Millennium. ap. S. Jer. Lact. vii. 24.—But the more intelligent understand, that the fiercest nations shall embrace the gospel, and kings obey the pastors of the Church. C.—Lead. Or “drive,” as the word is used by Festus. H.

Ver. 8. Basilisk. Ps. 9:13. The apostles subdued kings and philosophers, without any human advantages.

Ver. 9. Kill. The most inveterate pagans, being once converted, entirely alter their manners. Ose. 2:18.

Ver. 10. Ensign. the cross is the standard of Christians.—Sepulchre. Heb. Sept. &c. “rest.” S. Jerom give the true sense. The holy places have been greatly revered, and Christian princes strove for a long time to recover them. C.—They are respected even by the Turks. Christ’s death was ignominious, but his monument was full of glory. Thus the saints begin to shine, where the glory of the wicked ends. W.

Ver. 11. Time. After the deliverance from Sennacherib, they shall return from captivity. Ezechias recalled some few. 2 Par. 29:9.—Remnant. Some embraced the gospel. Rom. 2:2. Acts 2:41. &c.—Phetros, in Egypt.—Of the Mediterranean sea, and all places to which the Jews went by water.

Ver. 13. Away. Under Ezechias the Israelites began to join with Juda. But they did it more cordially after their return from Babylon.

Ver. 14. Shoulders. Or confines. Ezech. 25:9. Ezechias and the Machabees attacked the Philistines. C.—Sept. “and they shall fly on the ships of the strangers; they shall plunder the sea together, and those on the east, and Idumea.” H.—East. Ammonites, &c. often defeated by the Machabees, and probably by Ezechias.

Ver. 15. Tongue. Gulf of the Mediterranean, near Pelusium, or the seven mouths of the river Nile. The country was ravaged by Sennacherib, Cambyses, Alex. and Epiphanes. C. 19:4. &c. The Jewish captives shall return thence. C. 50:3. Zac. 10:10.

Ver. 16. Assyrians. They shall march without impediment. C.

ISAIAS 12

Ver. 1. Thanks. Lit. “confess.” The Jews thank God for their return, as the Church does for her deliverance from sin. W.—Canticles were composed on such occasions. Ex. 15.—Angry. They do not thank God on this account; but because he had averted his indignation. C.

Ver. 3. Fountains. Instead of those which your fathers drank in the desert. C.—You shall have the holy Scriptures, (H.) sacraments, &c. Jo. 4:13 and 7:38.

Ver. 6. Of thee. He alludes to the name Emmanuel. Christ preached, and his own would not receive him. Jo. 1:11 and 26. C.—He continues with us, concealed under the sacramental species. M.

ISAIAS 13

Ver. 1. Burden. That is, a prophecy against Babylon. Ch.—Nimrod began the kingdom. Gen. 10. Belus and Ninus brought it to great eminence. But after 1240 years, Babylon was taken by Cyrus. W.—Isaiaś delivered the seven following chapters in the first year of Ezechias. C. 14:28.

Ver. 2. Mountain of Media, whence Darius came. It was usual to erect a signal, (c. 30:17. Jer. 6:1) to call troops together. C.

Ver. 3. Sanctioned. The Medes and Persians were appointed by God to punish Babylon. W.

Ver. 4. Kings. Darius styles himself king of the Medes and Persians. Dan. 6:12. Many princes and nations composed his army.

Ver. 5. Heaven. Where it seems to touch the horizon. Thus the countries beyond the Euphrates are often designated.

Ver. 6. Near. Though one hundred and seventy-two years distant.

Ver. 8. Burnt. Black with despair. Nah. 2:10 and Joel 2:6.

Ver. 9. Desolate. This was effected in the course of many centuries. C.—The building of Seleucia caused Babylon to be deserted. Pliny vi. 27.—Hence we know not at present where it was situated.

Ver. 10. Stars. This is not to be taken literally, but only implies that the people shall be in as much consternation (C.) as if the world were at an end. v. 13. H. Grot. Mat. 24:27. Apoc. 6:12. Jer. 4:23.

Ver. 11. World. The vices of all nations were concentrated at Babylon. C.

Ver. 12. Precious. Rare, (W.) or sought after for destruction. v. 17.

Ver. 13. Heaven. With thunders.

Ver. 14. Land. Baltassar shall be abandoned by his allies. Crœsus had been already defeated, before Cyrus invested Babylon.

Ver. 17. Medes. Who had set themselves at liberty about twenty years before this. They were not solicitous about gold. Ezech. 7:19. Soph. 1:18.

Ver. 19. Gomorrha. Towards the end of the Macedonian empire. C.—The Persians kept wild beasts in it. S. Jer.—The palace of Nabuchodonosor subsisted in the days of Benjamin, (C.) but could not be approached on account of serpents. Tudel. p. 70.

Ver. 20. Tents. To dwell, (C.) or to traffic. Theod.—Another city was built, but not so large, nor in the same place. W.

Ver. 21. Beasts. Heb. tsiim, “fishermen.”—Serpents. Heb. ochim. Sept. “echo,” (H.) or “reeds.” Babylon was built on a marshy situation, and Cyrus having let out the waters of the Euphrates, they could never be effectually stopped.—Ostriches. Or swans.—Hairy. Goats. C. 34:14. C.

Ver. 22. Owls. Or jackals, which resemble foxes, and going in packs, will devour the largest creatures. Bochart. Parkhurst in aje. H.—But S. Jer. explains it of birds. Job 28:7. Lev. 14.—Sirens, fabulously supposed to be sweet singing women with wings.—Thannim denotes some great sea monsters, such as whales or sea calves. C.

ISAIAS 14

Ver. 1. Prolonged. Babylon was taken one hundred and seventy-two years after. C.—Yet this time is counted short, compared with the monarchy, which had lasted a thousand years. W.—Ground. Cyrus restored the Jews; yet all did not return at that time.—Stranger. Converts. Est. 8:17. All Idumea received circumcision under Hyrcan.

Ver. 2. Place. Cyrus probably granted an escort, as Artaxerxes did. 2 Esd. 2:7.—Servants. They had purchased many slaves, (1 Esd. 2:65) as some were very rich in captivity, and were treated like other subjects.—Oppressors. Stragglers of the army of Cambyses, &c. though this was chiefly verified under the Machabees. Jer. 25:14 and 30:16. C.

Ver. 4. Parable. Sept. ᾠδὴν. “Lamentation.” H.—Or mournful canticle.

Ver. 6. Persecuted. The Jews read incorrectly, “is persecuted.”

Ver. 7. Earth. Subject to, or bordering upon the Assyrian empire. Under Darius the Mede, (the Cyaxares of Xenophon) and Cyrus, the people were little molested. C.—The neighbouring princes (fir-trees, &c. v. 8) were also at rest. H.

Ver. 9. Hell is personified, deriding the Chaldee monarch, Baltassar, who perished the very night after he had profaned the sacred vessels. Dan. 5:3. He probably received only the burial of an ass. v. 11. 19. C.

Ver. 12. O Lucifer. O day-star. All this, according to the letter, is spoken of the king of Babylon. It may also be applied, in a spiritual sense, to Lucifer, the prince of devils, who was created a bright angel, but fell by pride and rebellion against God. Ch. Lu. 10:18. C.—He fell by pride, as Nabuchodonosor did. W.—Homer (Iliad xix.) represents the demon of discord hurled down by Jupiter to the miserable region of mortals.

Ver. 13. North. And be adored as God in the temple of Jerusalem. Ps. 47:3. The Assyrian and Persian monarchs claimed divine honours. 4 K. 18:33. Judith 3:13.

Ver. 15. Depth. Heb. “sides,” (v. 13) or holes dug out of a cavern. C.

Ver. 16. Turn. From their respective holes in the monument.

Ver. 19. Grave. Strangers seized the crown of Baltassar, and neglected his sepulchre: or if we explain it of Nabuchodonosor, his tomb was probably plundered, (C.) as the Persians did not spare that of Belus. In the reign of Alexander, the tombs of the kings were covered with water, and filled with serpents. Arrian. vii.

Ver. 20. Thy. Sept. “my.” Thou hast been a murderer instead of a shepherd.—Ever. The children and monarchy of Nabuchodonosor presently perished. Evilmerodac and Baltassar reigned but a short time, and left no issue to inherit the throne.

Ver. 22. Name. It shall lose all its splendour, and be mentioned only with abhorrence. 1 Pet. 5:13.

Ver. 23. Besom. Reducing it to a heap of rubbish, (C. 13:21. C.) as the event shewed. Watson.

Ver. 25. Assyrian. 4 K. 19. W.—Sennacherib, (S. Jer.) Cambyses, or Holofernes. The sight of their chastisement would ben an earnest of the fall of Babylon. C.—The allies of Assyria, (M.) or the enemies of God’s people, will also be punished. C. 15. H.

Ver. 28. Achaz. When Ezechias was just seated on the throne. The preceding and subsequent predictions were then delivered. C. 13:20.

Ver. 29. Rod. Achaz.—Bird. Ezechias will openly attack thee. 4 K. 18:8. C.—Prot. “shall be a fiery flying serpent,” (H.) like that erected by Moses. Num. 21:9. Sennacherib and Assaraddon shall lay waste Philistia. v. 31 c. 20:1. C.—Though Achaz be dead, Ezechias and Ozias will destroy more of that nation. 4 K. 18:8 and 2 Par. 26. W.

Ver. 32. Nations. Surprised that Ezechias should escape, while the power of the Philistines was overturned so easily; or when the king sent ambassadors to his allies, to announce the defeat of Sennacherib by the angel. All confessed that this was an effect of the divine protection towards Sion. C.

ISAIAS 15

Ver. 1. Moab. Which would be visited in three years' time (c. 16:14) either by Ezechias, or by Sennacherib, though history be silent on this head. The Moabites had been very cruel., Amos 1 and 2.—Night. Suddenly. C.—Their misery was so much the greater. W.—Ar. The capital. C.

Ver. 2. House. Prot. "he is come up to Baith," (H.) or the royal family is gone to the temple of their idol, Chamos, to lament. S. Jer. M. C.—Shaven. As in mourning. Jer. 48:37.

Ver. 4. Itself. Every one shall deplore his own distress.

Ver. 5. My. A charitable heart will grieve for the misfortune of an enemy. W.—I shall join in the general lamentations, though Moab has always been so great an enemy of Israel. C.—Sept. "the heart of Moab cries in itself to Segor." H.—We will retire thither. Chal.—Bars. Princes. Prot. "his fugitives shall," &c.—Heifer. Strong and ungovernable. Heb. "to Heglath and to Shelishia for," &c. though we may as well adhere to the Vulg. Sept. &c.

Ver. 6. Nemrim. Or Nemra, (Num. 32:3) to the north of Segor. C.—The country around hence became barren. S. Jer.

Ver. 7. Willows. That is, as some say, the waters of Babylon; others render it a valley of the Arabians, (Ch.) or "of crows," to which their bodies will be exposed. C. 57:6.

Ver. 8. Cry. Of iniquity, or rather of grief.

Ver. 9. Dibon. Sept. &c. read, "Dimon," which signifies, "blood." I will give it a better claim to this appellation.—Lion. Nabuchodonosor. C.—Sept. "I will bring the Arabs up on Dimon, and will take away the seed of Moab, and Ariel, and the remnant of Adama." H.

ISAIAS 16

Ver. 1. Petra. Heb. selah, "the rock." H.—Our Saviour spring from Ruth, the Moabitess. M.—The original may insinuate, that the king of the country had neglected to pay the usual tribute to Juda. 4 K. 3:4. C.—"Send the lamb to the ruler," &c. Tournemine. Amid scenes of distress, the prophet perceives that the Saviour will proceed from one of this nation. W.

Ver. 2. Arnon. They shall not be able to fly over, or to escape the conqueror.

Ver. 3. Night. Seek a retreat in the darkest places; or protect Israel when they shall flee before the Assyrians. Their cruelty is thus insinuated. Amos 1.

Ver. 4. Dust. Theglathphalassar. I need not exhort you to receive my people, as I know your dispositions, and they are out of danger. C.

Ver. 5. Just. This regards Christ, (S. Jer.) prefigured by (H.) Ezechias. C.

Ver. 7. Walls. Heb. “Kir-hareseth.” C. 15:1. H.

Ver. 8. Lords. Princes of Jerusalem, (Lam. 1:1) or of Assyria. C.—Sea. Of Sodom, even as far as Jazer, (H.) in the tribe of Ruben. C.

Ver. 9. My tears. C. 15:5. H.—I announce a different sort of music from that which is customary in times of harvest, and of vintage. The liquor shall be tears. C. 63:2. Jer. 48:32. 33. C.

Ver. 10. Carmel. This name is often taken to signify a fair and fruitful hill or field, such as Mount Carmel is. Ch.—It means, “the vine of God.” C.

Ver. 11. Wall. Kir-hareseth. v. 7. I am grieved at your misfortunes. C.

Ver. 12. Prevail. Chamos shall not be able to help them.

Ver. 13. That time. A long while ago. Ps. 92:2.

Ver. 14. Not many. It was laid waste in the third year of Ezechias. But its final destruction took place only five years after that of Jerusalem. C.—The wars against Moab continued three years, after which it was reduced to servitude. W.

ISAIAS 17

Ver. 1. Damascus. When it was taken by Theglathphalassar, or rather by Sennacherib. C. 10:8. It was again ruined by Nabuchodonosor. Jer. 49:24. But after the first taking, it never regained its power. Magni nominis umbra. C.

Ver. 2. Aroer. Chal. “abandoned, shall be folds for sheep.” Sept. “left for ever a resting place for flocks and herds, and none shall pursue.” The tribes on the east of the Jordan shall be led captive, as well as those on the west, Ephraim, &c. H.

Ver. 3. Damascus. Their too great union proved their ruin. Sennacherib took Damascus, as Salmanasar had done Samaria.

Ver. 4. Lean. All the power of the kingdom shall fail, as in a mortal illness.

Ver. 5. Raphaim. Near Jerusalem. 3 K. 21:13. Sept. “of stones.” C.—It will be equally difficult to find any men left in the kingdom of Israel. H.

Ver. 7. Israel. They obeyed the summons of Ezechias and of Josias, (2 Par. 30:1 and 34:6) and every after followed the same worship as Juda. C.

Ver. 9. Left. By the Chanaanites, when the children of Israel came into their land. Ch.—Their consternation was become proverbial. Jos. 2:9 and 5:11.

Ver. 10. Good. Sept. “fruitless.” Israel had abandoned the Lord; and could expect nothing but the fruits of death. C.

Ver. 11. Much. Thou hast laboured earnestly, but reaped no benefit. H.

Ver. 12. Multitude, &c. This and all that follows to the end of the chapter, relates to the Assyrian army under Sennacherib, (Ch.) or rather to that of Israel and its allies. C.—After the Assyrians had afflicted Israel, they were also punished. W.

Ver. 14. Not be. Phacee and Rasin were presently exterminated.—Spoiled us. The kingdom of Achaz. 4 K. 17:5.

ISAIAH 18

Ver. 1. Cymbal. Or sistrum, commonly used in Egypt. Sept. “ship sails.”—Ethiopia, or Chus, lying between the Nile (the branches of which are styled rivers) and the Red Sea. He alludes to the kingdom of Tharaca. 4 K. 19:8. C.

Ver. 2. Ambassadors. Heb. “images,” (Bochart) in honour of Adonis;

(S. Cyr.) or rather Ezechias, or Tharaca send to demand troops. C.—Bulrushes. Lit. “paper.” H.—Formed of rushes which grow on the banks of the Nile. Pliny vii. 56. and xiii. 11.—Angels. Or messengers.—Pieces. With factions after the death of Sabacon, or by the inroads of Sennacherib.—Other. He derides the vanity of the Egyptians. C.—Expecting the overflowing of the Nile. H.—Heb. “of line,” (C.) with which they marked out each person’s property, after the waters had subsided. Strabo 17.—Foot. They worked their dough with their feet, and sent swine to trample on the seed, which required no more cultivation. Herod. ii. 14. and 36.—Spoiled. The Nile made considerable alterations.

Ver. 4. Place. God rules all with ease.—Harvest. The allies shall comfort my people, (C.) or Sennacherib shall threaten ruin. H.—But I will frustrate his evil designs. His army shall perish unexpectedly. v. 5. C.—The Egyptians had sent messengers to assure the Israelites that they would come to assist them: but the prophet informs them of their own ruin. W.

Ver. 6. Them. Their bodies shall lie unburied.

Ver. 7. Sion. Egypt shall send presents to the Lord. 2 Par. 32:23. C.

ISAIAH 19

Ver. 1. Egypt. Many refer this to the coming of Christ, (C.) at whose presence the idols fell down, and many saints adorned the country. W.—But the prophet may also literally refer to the wars of the Assyrians against Egypt. Sabacon having retired, after reigning fifty years, Anysis, and afterwards the priest of Sethon, succeeded to the throne. The latter was attacked by Sennacherib. After his death, twelve kingdoms were formed, but Psammitichus reunited them, and had Nechao for his successor. Herod. ii. 141. 158.—Behold. The prophet speaks fourteen years before the attack of Sennacherib.—Cloud. Ps. 17:11. Some Fathers explain it of the blessed Virgin. C.—Moved. Plundered by the Assyrians. M.

Ver. 2. Kingdom. Under the twelve kings. C.

Ver. 3. Egypt. Sept. “of the Egyptians shall be troubled within them.” H.—Soothsayers. Feeble but too common resource of superstitious people!

Ver. 4. Masters. Twelve kings. Psammitichus, one of them, shall gain the ascendancy.

Ver. 5. Dry. The lakes and the Nile shall not afford sufficient moisture. C.—If the Nile rose less than twelve or more than sixteen cubits famine ensued. Pliny xviii. 18.

Ver. 7. Fountain. The Nile rises in Ethiopia. But the canals alone were left dry. C.—Sept. “the achi, every green herb along the river, and every,” &c. H.

Ver. 8. Fishers. The lake Moëris produced a talent every day for the revenue, and so great was the abundance of fish, that they could hardly be salted. The Nile was also well supplied with fish.

Ver. 9. Linen. Gr. “silk.” Ezec. 16:10. C.

Ver. 10. All they. Sept. “and all who make strong drink (secer) shall be in sorrow, and shall afflict their souls.” H.—This version is perhaps the best, as the Egyptians used much ale or wine distilled from barley. C.

Ver. 11. Tanis. Or of the twelve kings. v. 1. They are disconcerted at the approach of Psammitichus, (C.) or at the want of water. H.

Ver. 13. Memphis. The seat of many kings, and a very ancient city. Heb. “Hoph.”—Stay. Lit. “angle,” denoting the chiefs, or all the land. Judg. 20:2.

Ver. 15. Back. King and subject are equally confused. C. 9:14. C.

Ver. 17. Terror. Hebrew also, “a rejoicing,” (S. Jer.) on account of Sennacherib’s defeat there. C. 18:7.

Ver. 18. Chanaan. Hebrew. The Israelites had a connection with Egypt, which the prophets often blame. C. 30:2. Ezechias trusted in their aid, when he refused to pay tribute to the Assyrians. Many at that time, or afterwards, retired thither, and served God unmolested. C. 11:2. Jer. 42. More established themselves in the country under Alexander and the Ptolemies. 3 Mac. 8. But this prediction was more fully accomplished by the propagation of the Christian religion. Grace no where shone forth more brightly than in this country, once the seat of superstition.—Sun. Heb. “of desolation.” But the copies have varied. It is supposed to denote the city On. Gen. 41:45. C.—Prideaux (p. 2. b. 4.) accuses the Jews of willfully corrupting this text in the Sept. Kennicott.

Ver. 19. Altar. If the Jews were forbidden to have any other than the one at Jerusalem, how can the prophet announce this as a blessing? Onias being excluded from the high priesthood, retired into Egypt, and obtained leave to build the temple Onion, in the Nome, though not in the city of Helipolis, above Bubaste, on the Nile, alleging that Isaias had foretold this event, and that one was already built at Leontopolis. Jos. Ant. xii. 15. and xiii. 6.—But we must allow with the fathers and Jews in the days of S. Jerom, that this prediction regarded the Messias, when altars might be lawfully erected in every nation. See Misna, tr. Moneuth, xiii. 10.—Monument. The cross is set up wherever Christ is adored. C.—The Egyptians shall embrace Christianity, and Anthony, &c. shall live a holy (W.) and austere life. H.

Ver. 20. Them. The Jews were miraculously rescued from the hands of Philopater, (c. Ap. ii.) or rather Christians are delivered from sin and Satan.

Ver. 21. Egypt. The kings often caused sacrifices to be offered for them; but they were not acceptable, as long as they continued idolaters. The country was converted to Christianity, (C.) and the Anchorets performed their vows and penitential exercises, to the admiration of all. H.

Ver. 22. Scourge. By means of Sennacherib, Cambyses, and Ochus. Afterwards the country was quietly subject to the kings of Persia, Alex. the Ptolemies, and the Romans. C.

Ver. 24. Land. The apostles, who were true Israelites, (H.) procured the blessing of faith for these nations, (C.) to serve God with concord. H.

ISAIAH 20

Ver. 1. Year. Eighteen after the preceding predictions. C.—Sargon. Sennacherib, (S. Jer.) Salmanasar, (Sanct.) or Assaradon, who intended to revenge Sennacherib, and sent his “collector of taxes” to take Azotus from Ezechias, and then to proceed farther. C.—Psammitichus having obtained the sole dominion of Egypt, besieged Azotus for 29 years. Herod. ii. 157. Amos 1:8.

Ver. 2. Sackcloth. The prophets lived in poverty. Zac. 13:4. Their persons were prophetic. It is not agreed whether Isaias went quite naked, or only without his upper garment. The former supposition would represent better the condition of slaves, (v. 4) and is adopted by S. Jerom, &c. C.—People are said to be naked when they are almost so. 2 K. 6. Jo. 21. H.—Yet “nothing is more honest than to obey God.” S. Jer. W.

Ver. 3. Years. Isaias went so long, or perhaps only three days undressed. Num. 14:34. Ezech. 4:5. Egypt and the Arabian Ethiopia were to be abandoned to the Assyrians, in or during three years.

Ver. 4. Shame. Thus captives were generally exposed to sale. C. 47:2. Nah. 3:5.

Ver. 5. Glory. The alliance of these nations shall not avail the Jews, who are said to inhabit an island, because they neglected God’s service no less than the most distant and abandoned nations. C.—The changes in empires must convince us to depend only on God, since Damascus and Egypt could not save the Hebrews, nor even themselves. W.

ISAIAS 21

Ver. 1. The desert of the sea. So Babylon is here called, because from a city as full of people as the sea is with water, it was become a desert. Ch.—After its fall, it was mostly inundated. C. 13:20.—Land. Media and Persia, which lay to the south, and were not so beautiful as the environs of Babylon.

Ver. 2. Spoileth. Baltassar is incorrigible, or his opponents must proceed. C.—Elam; that is, O Persia: (Ch.) Cyrus, and Darius, the Mede. C.—The former nation was weak, and the latter strong. W.—Cease. The enemy will shew no pity; nor shall I; as Babylon did not heretofore. H.

Ver. 3. Pain. He bewails the crimes and the fall of Babylon, which at this time was in amity with Ezechias. v. 10. C.

Ver. 4. Babylon. Prot. “the night of my pleasure hath he turned into fear unto me.” Sept. “My soul is turned into fear.” H.

Ver. 5. Drink. Persians refresh yourselves.—Take up. Heb. “anoint.” He may also allude to the Babylonians, who were feasting.

Ver. 7. Camel. These two riders are the kings of the Persians and Medes. Ch.—The sentinel, placed by Isaias, in spirit, or rather by the king of Babylon, brings these tidings. C.

Ver. 8. Out. Lit. “He cried, a lion.” H.—Cyrus appears like one. Sept. “And call Urias to the watch-tower,” &c. C. 8:2.

Ver. 9. Horsemen, drawn by the ass and camel. v. 7. This was verified long after.

Ver. 10. Floor: you who must shortly be reduced to the utmost distress. Baladan was friendly to Ezechias. But Assaradon having seized Babylon, took Manasses prisoner; and the city thenceforward continued to fill up the measure of its sins. C.

Ver. 11. Duma. That is, Idumea, or Edom. Ch.—It was a city of that country, twenty miles from Eleutheropolis. S. Jer.—Assaradon desolated Idumea the following year. v. 16. The Jews absurdly apply to Rome what is said of Edom. S. Jer. C.

Ver. 12. Night. Instead of joy, I must announce dreadful things. H.

Ver. 13. Arabia. This sentence is not in the Rom. (C.) or Alex. Sept. (H.) and Dedan is a city of Idumea. C.—The Israelites are threatened. W.

Ver. 14. Water. To neglect this was to be accessory to another's death, in those dreary regions. C. 16:3. Deut. 23:2.

Ver. 16. Hireling; counting precisely. C. 16:14. C.—Cedar: Arabia, (Ch.) near to Edom. C.

ISAIAS 22

Ver. 1. The valley of vision: Jerusalem. The temple of Jerusalem was built upon Mount Moria, or on the mountain of vision. But the city is here called, the valley of vision, either because it was lower than the temple, or because of the low condition to which it was to be reduced, (Ch.) during the captivity. W.—Vision. Sept. “Sion.” H.—This prophecy regards the devastation caused by Sennacherib, (S. Jer.) Nabuchodonosor, (Sanct.) the Romans, (Eus.) or by Assaradon, when he took Manasses. 2 Par. 33:11 and 4 K. 21:10.—Tops, to weep.

Ver. 2. Battle. He taxes the king with cowardice.

Ver. 4. People. He saw this in spirit, though he might not live to witness it. C.

Ver. 5. Searching. That day beheld the Assyrians (H.) undermining the wall, and behaving with haughtiness (C.) on Mount Sion. H.

Ver. 6. Wall. Arms were frequently hung thereon. Cant. 5:14. C.

Ver. 8. Covering. Heb. masac, (H.) “shade,” for the convenience of the people. 4 K. 16:18.—Forest, built by Solomon. Ezechias has also procured store of arms, which were now delivered out to the citizens.

Ver. 9. Many, but you have neglected them, (C.) till it be too late. H.—Pool, communicating with Gehon on the west. C.

Ver. 11. Walls. Manasses enclosed the pool within walls, forming a second town. 4 K. 22:2–9.—Ago. You have not imitated the piety of Ezechias.

Ver. 13. Die. Thus the pagans encouraged themselves to feast. C.—Ergo vivamus dum licet esse benè. Petron.—This conduct betrayed an entire want of faith. C.—“Nothing offends God so much ... as contempt proceeding from despair.” S. Jer.

Ver. 14. Die. The repentance of Manasses, and the piety of Josias, could not avert the storm. Discite justitiam moniti et non temnere divos.

Ver. 15. Temple, in the place of Eliacim. He had been secretary before, (C.) and had intruded himself into some office in the temple, which he abused. W.

Ver. 17. Cock. S. Jerom’s master assured him that the word which is usually rendered a warrior, has this meaning. H.—The comparison agrees well with a proud man reduced to misery. C.—Heb. “With the captivity of a man, and he will cover thee.” Sept. “he will cast out and bruise the man, and will take away thy comely robe, and throw thee into,” &c. H.

Ver. 18. Lord; Manasses, who hath exalted thee. C.

Ver. 20. Eliacim, who had been displaced, v. 15. He acted as regent after the departure of Manasses, who always followed his counsels at his return. Judith 4:5. The priesthood was not then incompatible with civil and military functions.

Ver. 21. Girdle, the badge of power. Job 12:18.

Ver. 22. Shoulder. Here the marks of dignity were worn. Eliacim was appointed master of the palace, over all the other servants. C.—Thus we may gather what power Christ conferred on S. Peter, when he gave him the keys of heaven. Mat. 16:19. Apoc. 3:7. H.

Ver. 23. Peg, on which whatever is placed shall be secure. 1 Esd. 9:8.

Ver. 24. House. He shall be the ornament of the priesthood.—Music. All affairs in church and state shall be at his disposal.

Ver. 25. Fall. Sobna shall lose all his employments, and ruin others. C.

ISAIAS 23

Ver. 1. Tyre was destroyed, in part, by Nabuchodonosor. Cyrus permitted all the captives of this, as well as of other countries, to return.—Cethim; Cyrus, or rather Macedonia. Merchants come thence no longer.

Ver. 2. Island. Tyre was originally surrounded with water. A communication with the land was made afterwards. Jos. 19:29. C. Ezec. 27. W.

Ver. 3. Nile. Heb. Shichor, or “muddy water,” designates that river. Jos. 13:3.—River. The overflowing of the Nile gave fertility to Egypt, insomuch that Tyre and other nations were supplied by it with corn.

Ver. 4. Strength: people who sail. Sept. “but the strength ... replied: I,” &c. Sidon will not be concerned for the fall of her rival. She alleges that she has nothing to do with Tyre. That city would not allow that it was a colony of Sidon. v. 12. C.

Ver. 6. Seas. The rich Tyrians did so. S. Jer.—Sept. “to Carthage.” Heb. Tharsis, is Cilicia. C.—Hence Nabuchodonosor did not find a sufficient reward. Ezec. 29:18.

Ver. 7. Sojourn. Many fled, others were made captives.

Ver. 8. Earth. The merchants were as rich as kings, or the latter sent their merchandise to Tyre. Ezec. 27:33.

Ver. 10. Girdle, fortress; or rather, thou art naked, like a slave. C. 20:4.

Ver. 12. Daughter; colony. C.—Oppressed. Lit. “calumniated.” H.

Ver. 13. It. Hebrew adds, “for fishermen.” It was formerly covered with water. Euseb. præp. ix.—Ruin. The fall of Babylon has been denounced. C. 13.

Ver. 15. King Nabuchodonosor, whose two sons reigned but a short time. The captivity of the people of God began also A. 3398, and ended A. 3468, the first of Cyrus.—Harlot. She shall be re-established, (C.) and shall invite people to her markets. Sanchez.—Before Cyrus, she had kings, but they were of small power. The city was become very rich, and well fortified, when Alexander was stopped by it for seven months. See Ezec. 26:14. C.—Tyre had rejoiced at the misfortunes of the Hebrews, and was punished by the like captivity. W.

Ver. 17. Commit. Sept. “be the emporium for all.” Great injustice prevailed formerly among merchants, so that it is represented as a dishonest calling. H.

Ver. 18. Sanctified to the Lord. This alludes to the conversion of the Gentiles. Ch.—Before, the Tyrian were great enemies to the Jews. 2 Esd. 13:16 and 1 Mac. 5:15. Our Saviour wrought a miracle in favour of one of this country. Mat. 5:22. Zac. 8:20. C.—Continuance. Lit. “old age.” Aquila, “with changes of dress.” H.

ISAIAS 24

Ver. 1. Earth. After the ten preceding threats, the prophet denounces destruction to the whole world, (W.) at the day of judgment; though he may also allude to the desolation of the promised land, as our Saviour joins both in the same prediction. Mat. 24. C.

Ver. 2. Priest. All distinctions shall be disregarded. W.—When Jerusalem was taken, all became captives.

Ver. 4. Weakened: Joakim, &c. are made prisoners. The greatest monarchs must come before God’s tribunal.

Ver. 6. Sin. Towards the end of the world iniquity will abound, and men shall rage against each other. Mat. 24. W.—They will also feel the effects of sin.—Mad: abandoned to their passions, (Deut. 28:28) excepting only the elect. M.—Few. The Chaldees permitted only a few of the poorest sort to remain. 2 Par. 29:10.

Ver. 9. The drink. Heb. shecar, “palm wine.”

Ver. 10. Vanity. Jerusalem, (C.) or any other city, will be all in confusion. H.—In, as was the case in times of mourning. Jer. 9:21. C.

Ver. 14. Sea. The few elect (v. 13) being rescued from the misery of the world, shall praise God. H.—They are exhorted to lift up their heads. Lu. 21:28. M.

Ver. 15. Instruction. The Church is like an island, compared with the rest of the world; or it preaches the gospel to all nations, and to the islands, like Great Britain. W.—Apostolic men are required to preach incessantly to all sorts of people. Heb. “in light;” or Pagn. “in vales.” M.

Ver. 16. I said. The prophet, or any other, may speak thus in the latter days. C.—Myself. I cannot recount what horrid pains I beheld. S. Jer. M. 2 Cor. 12:4.

Ver. 17. Snare. He alludes to the methods of taking wild beasts. Job 18:11.—Opened, as they were in the days of Noe. C.—All sorts of misery hang over us.

Ver. 20. Night, unexpectedly, (H.) and with the utmost speed. C.

Ver. 21. High. The stars, which in many places of the Scripture are so called. Some commentators explain that these words here signify the demons of the air. Ch.—The apostate angels will be judged. 1 Cor. 6:6. Mat. 24:29.

Ver. 22. Visited. Hence Origen (Prin. iii. 6. &c.) took occasion to assert, that the damned would one day be released, though the Scripture so often declares the contrary. The prophet speaks of the future liberation of the Jews; (C.) or he intimates that after many days, yea throughout eternity, the reprobate will still be punished. M.

Ver. 23. Blush: he turned into blood. Joel 2:10. Dreadful calamities shall ensue, to usher in the great day of judgment. C.

ISAIAS 25

Ver. 1. Amen. He approves of God’s judgments (H.) against Jerusalem. W.

Ver. 2. City; Jerusalem, or rather Babylon, (C. 21. C.) or every city (H.) in the world. M.—Strangers: the temples of idols.

Ver. 3. People; the Chaldees, or their conquerors.

Ver. 4. Poor; Juda, whom Nabuchodonosor’s fury could not exterminate.

Ver. 5. Away. Cyrus (C.) shall reduce Babylon the great. H.

Ver. 6. Mountain of Sion, a figure of the Church, and of heaven. The Jews shall feast: yea, some of all nations shall partake of the blessed Eucharist, and obtain heaven. The expressions are too grand for a corruptible feast. C.—Wine. Lit. “of vintage,” (H.) on which occasion great rejoicings were made. Hesiod. Hercul. 297.—Prot. “of wines on the lees.” H.—In the East, the wines were very thick. Ps. 75:9. C.—On the rejection of the Jews, the Gentiles were converted. W.

Ver. 7. Tied. He will open their eyes to the truth of the gospel. They shall be no longer as criminals, expecting death, or mourning.

Ver. 8. Ever. Heb. “he shall swallow up death in victory.” 1 Cor. 15:54. Christ, by dying, conquered death, and rescued us from its power, if we do not voluntarily subject ourselves to it again. This was faintly represented by the liberation of the captives.

Ver. 10. Mountain: the Church. C.—Moab. That is, the reprobate, whose eternal punishment, from which they can no way escape, is described under these figures. Ch.—The Machabees probably executed this vengeance on Moab. 1 Mac. 5:6.

Ver. 11. Hands. All his exertions and fury will prove useless. H.—Moab shall lie prostrate.

ISAIAS 26

Ver. 1. Day. Under the law of grace, Christians sing this and such like canticles. W.—Sion. This word is not in Heb. &c. though it be understood. C.—Other nations have their respective cities. All Christians admit this one. W.—The captives continue to return thanks. Yet the Holy Ghost speaks chiefly of the Church, and of the general resurrection. C.—Bulwark. Faith and good works. W.

Ver. 2. Truth. The Jews who returned from Babylon, were more virtuous than their ancestors, as the prophets intimate; though they have Christians principally in view.

Ver. 3. Away: condemning the virtuous, as if they were fools. M.—Sym. “our work, or fiction, is taken away.” Heb. may have other meanings. H.

Ver. 4. You, people of Juda.

Ver. 5. High: Nabuchodonosor and his empire.

Ver. 6. Needy. The Jews shall behold the ruin of the city by Cyrus, (C.) who was of a contemptible nation. H.

Ver. 7. In. God will remove every obstacle, at their return.

Ver. 9. Night of distress.

Ver. 10. Justice. Clemency would therefore be ill placed. If the Israelites had not been led away captives, would they ever have been reformed?

Ver. 11. Not see. Let them perish, or live to witness the glory of the Jews.

Ver. 12. Works, both in punishing and rewarding. C.—God crowns his own gifts. E.

Ver. 13. Lords of Babylon, (C.) and our own passions. H.

Ver. 14. Giants; the proud emperors of Babylon, whom thou wilt destroy. Sept. “physicians;” as Rephaim has also this meaning.

Ver. 15. Nation of the Jews. C.—Sept. “add evils to them, O Lord; add evils to the nobles of the land.” H.—Heb. may have the same sense.—Ends: princes, or the Chaldees, sending them also into captivity; or thou hast propagated thy Church over the world.

Ver. 16. They. Sept. “We,” &c. C.—Affliction is a wholesome medicine. H.

Ver. 18. Wind. Our expectation of aid from others has been disappointed. C.—Sept. “the spirit of thy salvation, which thou hast wrought on the earth. We shall not fall, but the inhabitants of the earth shall fall.” H.—Their copies must have been different from ours.—Fallen. The Chanaanites are left for our trial and punishment. C.

Ver. 19. Dead: a civil death, shall regain their liberty; and those who have left this world in a state of virtue, shall be happy.—Ruin. Cyrus liberated the Jews, having conquered Babylon.

Ver. 20. Away, and Cambyzes be destroyed. Ezech. 38:11. C.

Ver. 21. Shall cover her stain no more. This is said with relation to the martyrs, and their happy resurrection. Ch.—The blood of the saints shall demand vengeance. C.

ISAIAH 27

Ver. 1. Hard. Sept. “holy.” C.—Leviathan. That is, the devil, the great enemy of the people of God. He is called the bar serpent from his strength, and the crooked serpent from his wiles, and the whale of the sea, from the tyranny he exercises in the sea of this world. He was spiritually slain by the death of Christ, when his power was destroyed. Ch.—It may also literally refer to Nabuchodonosor, and the king of Egypt, or rather to Cambyses, or Holofernes, but particularly Cambyses. C.

Ver. 2. Vineyard; the Church of Christ, (Ch.) or Judea. It may be the beginning of a noted song. C.

Ver. 3. Drink; or, as the Hebrew may also be rendered, I will continually water it. Ch.—God will protect his people. C.

Ver. 4. In me, against the Church; nor shall I become as a thorn or brier in its regard; or march against it, or set it on fire: but it shall always take fast hold of me, and keep an everlasting peace with me. Ch.—God rather speaks of the enemy. If he attempt to lay waste this vineyard, I will chastise him. C.

Ver. 6. Rush in. Some understand this of the enemies of the true Israel, that shall invade it in vain. Others of the spiritual invasion made by the apostles of Christ. Ch.—Prot. “He shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root.” Sept. “those who come are children of Jacob.” H.

Ver. 7. Struck. Hath God punished the carnal persecuting Jews, in proportion to their doings against Christ and his saints? Ch.—God punished Israel as a father: but he will destroy the Chaldees, &c. C.

Ver. 8. Cast off. When the synagogue shall be cast off, thou shalt judge it in measure, and in proportion to its crimes. Ch.—The Israelites have been rigorously punished. C.—He, &c. God hath designed severe punishments in the day of his wrath. Ch.

Ver. 9. Jacob; viz. of such of them as shall be converted. Ch.—Altar, dedicated to idols: then he shall obtain pardon. C.

Ver. 10. City. Jerusalem, (Ch.) or more probably Babylon, of which he is going to speak.

Ver. 11. Women. The princes shall be weak and irresolute. C.—Sept. “Hither, ye women, coming from the shew. For it is not an intelligent people.”

Ver. 12. River Euphrates, even to the Nile. H.—Nabuchodonosor laid waste all the intermediate countries. Afterwards Cyrus gave the people liberty. On the death of Cambyses, the nations were in consternation; and it was only during the peaceable reign of Darius that Israel returned, though not in a body, as the Jews had done twenty years before. C. 26. C.—By one, into the Church of Christ. Jo. 11. M.

Ver. 13. Trumpet. The preaching of the Gospel for the conversion of the Jews. Ch.

ISAIAS 28

Ver. 1. Ephraim. That is, the kingdom of the ten tribes. Ch.—Flower. The pride of the kingdom shall thus decay. M.—Head. Samaria, situated on a hill, having under it a most fertile valley. Ch.—See Amos 2:6 and 4:2. Samaria was taken in the sixth year of Ezechias.

Ver. 2. The Lord. By his instrument, Salmanasar. H.—Heb. “behold the strong one, and the mighty to the Lord, as,” &c. C.—Sept. “behold the Lord’s fury ... as,” &c. H.

Ver. 4. Up. Theglathphalassar was captivated with the beauty of the country, and made it tributary. But Salmanasar, fearing a revolt, destroyed it. 4 K. 17:4.

Ver. 5. People, who returned to the service of God; or it refer to the kingdom of Juda.

Ver. 6. Gate. Ezechias reunited the divided kingdoms, and inspired his troops with courage, bringing them back victorious. 2 Par. 30:1 and 4 K. 18:7. C.

Ver. 7. These also. The kingdom of Juda. Ch.—Ezechias could not correct every abuse; though what is here specified, regards rather the reigns of his successors.

Ver. 8. Place. All was defiled: they gloried in their shame.

Ver. 9. Breasts? S. Paul seems to allude to this text. 1 Cor. 3:2. C.—The abandoned Jews ask contemptuously, if they be to be taught like children? H.

Ver. 10. Command, &c. This is said in the person of the Jews, resisting the repeated commands of God, and still putting him off. Ch.—They deride the prophets, speaking words of no meaning, as if their predictions were no better. S. Jer.—Think they that we have to learn the first elements, or to join syllables together? C.—Heb. Tsau latsau, &c. H.—The Nicholaites abused these words. S. Epiph. 25.—Why do they not speak plain? Sometimes terrible things are denounced, God will lead them into a country where they shall indeed have to learn the language, like children. C. 29:11. C.—Prot. “for precept must be upon precept ... line upon line ... here a little, and there a little. For with stammering lips,” &c. H.

Ver. 12. Hear. To leave off their wicked practices, and cruelty. The Jews would not understand: therefore Christ spoke to them in parables. C. 6:9. Mat. 13:14. &c.

Ver. 13. Taken. God will make his prophets speak, notwithstanding your repugnance; or he will reduce you to the necessity of learning an unknown language. C.

Ver. 14. Men, who make a parade of your knowledge, (H.) to turn the most sacred things into ridicule.

Ver. 15. Protected. Their conduct spoke this language. They would not fail to make alliances with Egypt, and to trust in idols, whatever the prophets might say to dissuade them. C.

Ver. 16. Stone. Christ. Ch.—The Jews and Grotius would apply it to Ezechias. But he was already on the throne, and never could realize these glorious promises. The people were not to believe in him, &c. C. —Hasten. Let him expect his coming with patience. Ch.—It would be delayed some time. Heb. may also signify “stagger;” (C.) in which sense the Sept. and the authors of the New Test. seem to have taken it. “Whosoever believeth in him, shall not be confounded.” See Rom. 9:33. H.—Isaias promises a Redeemer, though these people were unworthy; and then returns to his own times. M.

Ver. 17. Measure. In the days of the Redeemer, they shall lead a virtuous life, (C.) or the scorners shall be treated with rigour.—Protection. The wall, (M.) or lies, (v. 15. C.) on which you depend, shall turn to your confusion. H.

Ver. 19. Hear. Under the last kings of Juda, the misery was continual. Captivity opened the eyes of the people, and they were afterwards more docile. The murder of Christ, and the subsequent evils which befell the nation, seem to have had a quite different effect. They will at last submit to his yoke. C.

Ver. 20. Straitened. It is too narrow to hold two: God will have the bed of our heart all to himself. Ch. 1 Cor. 10:20 and 2 Cor. 6:14. S. Jer. &c.—The Jews explain it of the utmost distress, to which the people would be reduced, so that they would not be able to assist a friend. Amos 3:12. Forcr. C.

Ver. 21. As in, &c. As the Lord fought against the Philistines in Baal Pharisim, (2 K. 5) and against the Chanaanites, in the valley of Gabaon. Jos. 10. Ch.—Strange. He punished unwillingly. C.—“It is not God’s work to ruin what he has created.” S. Jer.—He will punish in an extraordinary manner those scoffers. v. 15. Num. 16:29. Piscat.

Ver. 22. Earth. Nabuchodonosor will take a complete and speedy vengeance. C. 10:22.

Ver. 24. Sow. The works of the husbandman vary, so will God’s punishments be inflicted with measure, according to each one’s deserts. v. 27. Wisd. 6:7. C.

Ver. 25. Gith. Heb. ketsach. Sept. μελανθιον. H. Pliny xx. 17. M.—Sept. have not expressed all the terms of the original, (H.) being perhaps ignorant of their meaning. S. Jer.

Ver. 26. God. From him proceeds every useful invention. The pagans attributed the discovery of corn, &c. to their idols.

Ver. 27. Saws, or heavy instruments. It would be thus crushed too much. C.

Ver. 28. But. Sept. “it shall be eaten with bread. For I will not be angry with you for ever, nor shall the sounds of my bitter wrath trample upon you.” H.

Ver. 29. This also, &c. Such also is the proceeding of the Lord with his land, and the diverse seeds he sows therein. Ch.

ISAIAH 29

Ver. 1. Ariel. This word signifies the lion of God, and here is taken for the strong city of Jerusalem. Ch.—It was destroyed by the Chaldees, (4 K. 25) and still more by the Romans, 40 years after. C. W.—Ezechiel (43:15) styles the altar of holocausts Ariel.—Took. Sept. The Heb. means also “inhabited.” H.—Sion was called the city of David. C.—The invasion (H.) of Sennacherib is here foretold (Forcr.) two years before. C. 31:9.

Ver. 2. Trench. Sennacherib did not besiege the city. C. 37:33. But he made preparations for it, and his sentiments are expressed, (C.) together with the fatal consequences which he felt, when his army was offered up (H.) as a victim on the altar of holocausts. v. 1.

Ver. 3. Circle. Thus provisions were cut off. C.

Ver. 4. The Python. The diviner by a spirit. Ch.—Jerusalem shall hardly dare to make a noise. C.

Ver. 5. Away. The numbers, and speedy downfall of the Assyrians, are described. H.

Ver. 6. Thunder. Ps. 75:7. Tharaca was coming to assist Ezechias. C. 37:36. C.

Ver. 7. It, in their dreams.

Ver. 9. Be, &c. Though God spared the city, for the sake of the good, He will not fail to punish scoffers, in due time, as He now declares. H.—Drunkenness. You shall suffer for your crimes, (C. 28:7) or be affrighted.

Ver. 10. Sleep, or compunction, (Rom. 11:8. C.) denoting their obstinacy. S. Chrys.—Visions. Prot. “the seers.” H.—The Jews perceived but very imperfectly the meaning of the prophets, when they spoke of a future Redeemer, God and man. They are now more infatuated, (C.) having a veil on their hearts. 1 Cor. 4:3. Both learned and ignorant refuse to believe, excusing themselves. v. 12. H.—The more they read the Scriptures, the less do they understand. C.

Ver. 13. Men. Our Saviour applies this to the Jews. The evangelists follow the Sept. Mat. 15:8. Mark 7:6. C.—“This people approacheth to me, (Grabe adds, with its mouth and with) their lips they honour me, but their heart is far from me. Yet in vain do they honour me, teaching the commands of men and doctrines.” H.—They still continue to corrupt God’s word by their false interpretations.

Ver. 14. Hid. At the approach of Sennacherib, the politicians were confounded. But the obstinate blindness of the Jews in the midst of such a blaze of predictions, which are evidently accomplished in Jesus Christ, excites admiration. That their ancestors should have found them obscure, is not so wonderful. The prophets foretold this event; and the reprobation of the synagogue, which had been so highly favoured, is a proof of the truth of the Christian religion. 1 Cor. 1:18. C.

Ver. 16. Not. So it is in vain to think that your hypocrisy or excuses will deceive God. C. 28:15. H.

Ver. 17. Charmel. This word signifies a fruitful field. Ch.—Shall Carmel be presently a forest or barren mountain? No. But I will work a greater miracle. v. 18. Jerusalem shall rejoice, and Sennacherib shall be filled with dismay.

Ver. 19. Rejoice. Our Saviour alludes to this text, (Lu. 7:22) which, under the figure of the deliverance from captivity, points out the vocation of the Gentiles. C. 35:5 and 42:7. 19.

Ver. 20. Prevail. Wicked princes, scoffers, &c. (v. 10. C. 28:7) shall be exterminated. Ezechias promoted piety with greater zeal after his deliverance.

Ver. 21. Gate. False prophets rose up against those who spoke the truth, and condemned them unjustly. C.—The just, Christ. M.

Ver. 23. Israel. They shall serve God with fidelity and gratitude. C. 30:22. C.

Ver. 24. Murmured. Magicians, (Grot.) or false sages. C. 28:9. C.

ISAIAS 30

Ver. 1. Of me. Ezechias was guided by human prudence, in making an alliance with Egypt, though he might have just reasons for refusing to pay tribute to the Assyrians. 4 K. 18:20. C.—And. Sept. “alliances not by,” &c. H.

Ver. 2. Down, with presents. v. 6. 4 K. 18:20.

Ver. 3. Shame. Egypt had been defeated before Sennacherib’s approach.

Ver. 4. Hanes. Chal. “Taphanes,” (Jer. 2:16) or Daphnæ Pelusiæ. Herod. ii. 30.—In the Arabic, Nome, which formed part of (H.) the dominions of Tharaca. C.

Ver. 6. Burden. This title seems unnecessary, and may be added by some Jew, (C. 21:13) though the Chal. and others explain it, “They carry on their beasts, presents to the south,” to the nations of Arabia and Egypt, infested with lions, &c. The rest of the prophecy is against the Jews, who cannot well be styled beasts of the south. C.—Basilisk. The ibis devours many serpents on their flight from Arabia and Egypt. Herod. ii. 5. Solin. xxxii.

Ver. 7. Cried. Heb. “called it Rahab, (or pride) it is rest.” The people are indolent, though they will make great promises. C.

Ver. 8. Box. This word was covered with wax. Propert. iii. 3.—Write, that none may pretend that they were not admonished. Some think that this was addressed to Jeremias: but Isaias spoke to his incredulous countrymen.

Ver. 10. See not. Such were the dispositions of their heart. C. 28:15.

Ver. 11. Us. Mention God no more, or let him not meddle with our affairs. Seek not to reclaim us, we are pleased with our delusion. C.

Ver. 12. Oppression. Lit. “calumny,” (H.) or rebellion against the Assyrians. This was contrary to the respect due to God’s name, used in the ratification of treaties, how wicked soever those princes might be.

Ver. 13. For. Ps. 61:3. If God had not miraculously cut off the army of Sennacherib, what would have become of the kingdom of Juda?

Ver. 15. Be. Sept. “groan,” as Origen, &c. read. If you be seriously converted, and trust not in Egypt, you need not fear.

Ver. 16. Ones, or chariots. C.—Egypt was famous for horses. Deut. 17:16. Forcr.—Rebsaces ridicules the Jews for the want of them. 4 K. 18:23. H.

Ver. 17. Five. A small number shall put you to flight. M.—Mast, set up after a shipwreck, to warn others, or as a signal. C. 33:23.

Ver. 18. Wait for him. Having convinced Ezechias that he ought to trust in on other, the Lord rescues him from the hand of Sennacherib. C.

Ver. 19. Weep. The citizens expected certain death, (H.) or slavery. C.

Ver. 20. Water. The land will be reduced to a miserable condition by the ravages of Sennacherib. H.—The following was a sabbatical year. v. 23. C. 37:30.—Teacher. It seems that Isaias, &c. had been silent. He spoke after Ezechias had sent for him, and God promises that the people shall not be left without guides. C.—Christ will not abandon his Church. M.

Ver. 22. Garment. Heb. “ephod,” belonging to the idol, or its priest. Ezechias had prohibited idolatry at first. After his deliverance he was still more zealous, and even those who had formerly retained an affection for idols, saw their vanity, and became sincere.

Ver. 24. Floor. They shall not have straw only, but wheat, &c. to denote abundance.

Ver. 25. Towers, or chief officers of Sennacherib. All shall be luxuriant.

Ver. 26. Sevenfold. Exceedingly great, equal to the light of 49 days. C.—The fame of Ezechias spread widely. His kingdom was a figure of that of Christ, when this was more perfectly realized, the preaching of the gospel having dispelled the darkness of error. C.—He alludes to the day of judgment. S. Jer. M.

Ver. 27. Name. Majesty of God, (C.) in the future ages. H.

Ver. 28. Error. The unjust government of Sennacherib, who endeavoured to engage all in idolatry.

Ver. 29. Night. When the festivals commenced. C.—He may particularly mean that night, when the destroying angel slew the Egyptians. Vatab.—Pipe. Music. H.—This was not prescribed.

Ver. 30. Stones. The Angel raised the storm, which destroyed many, while the rest in a panic fell upon one another. C. 9:5 and 28:2.

Ver. 31. Rod. Sennacherib is terrified, who a few days before insulted the living God.

Ver. 32. Harps. The sound of thunder will fill the people of Ezechias with joy, while the enemy shall perish irrecoverably. C.

Ver. 33. Topheth. 'Tis the same as Gehenna, and is taken for hell. Ch.—The Assyrians perish amid horrid cries (H.) and thunders, which resembled the noise made by drums, and by children who were burning in the arms of Moloc. 4 K. 18:4 and 23:10. and 2 Par. 29:16. Some think that the carcasses of the Assyrians were to be burnt in this common sewer of Jerusalem. But they were too far distant. C. 37:33. C.

ISAIAS 31

Ver. 1. Chariots. He continues to inveigh against this practice. C. 30:16. C.—Salmanasar will ruin the ten tribes. M.

Ver. 2. Words. The Lord will punish the wicked Jews, (C.) after the Egyptians. Joseph. x. 1.—The former would not believe the prophets. W.

Ver. 3. Hand. If God neglect to support empires, they fall of themselves.

Ver. 4. Thereof. He will thence hurl destruction on the distant enemy. C.—He had destroyed Sennacherib's army. 4 K. 19. Yet they forgot this and other proofs of God's power and love. W.

Ver. 5. Over. He will protect Jerusalem, notwithstanding the menaces of Sennacherib, as he did his people from the destroying angel.

Ver. 6. Revolted. Let your conversion bear proportion (C.) with your sins. H.

Ver. 7. Idols. Their worship was afterwards more severely prohibited. C. 30:21.

Ver. 8. Flee not. Heb. "flee to himself," lo. Sept. and Vulg. have read la, "not." The angel destroyed the army, and the king was slain at his return.—Tributaries. Ninive being afterwards subject to the Chaldees, &c. C.—Heb. "shall melt." Vat.

Ver. 9. Strength. Heb. "rock," the king.—Jerusalem, to protect it, (C.) and punish the guilty. Chal.

ISAIAH 32

Ver. 1. King. Ezechias or Josias, as figures of Jesus Christ, who is meant. C.—They and their counsellors only foreshewed the advantages derived from Christ and his apostles in a more abundant manner. S. Jer.—Judgment and justice. These words have a higher meaning than what is assigned to them by philosophers. In God, the former implies the preparation of the means for man's redemption, as the latter does the execution; and in man, judgment denotes the selection of what is right, and justice implies the putting it willingly in practice. Thus Christ will fulfill all the he has graciously purposed, with the two other divine persons; and the princes, his pastors, shall discern what is good for their own and people's eternal welfare. W.

Ver. 2. Land. Ezechias and Josias were both a defence to their subjects.

Ver. 3. Dim. True prophets shall speak, while false ones shall be silent. C.

Ver. 4. Plain. Some parts of the prediction relate literally to the Old Test. But this alludes to the New, when the mysteries of religion are clearly confessed in the Catholic Church. W.—Even the most illiterate are guided with security, if they will but hear the Church. H.

Ver. 5. Deceitful. Heb. “miser be called liberal.” Lu. 22:25. These good princes are contrasted with Achaz, who had oppressed his subjects.

Ver. 7. Vessels. Arms, (C.) or all the words and actions of the miser are bent on evil. H.—The ministers of wicked princes resemble them. M.

Ver. 9. Women. Great cities. He announces the impending dangers.

Ver. 10. Year. After a long time; or the prophet speaks two years before the arrival of Sennacherib, after the vintage was ended. C. 30:20 and 4 K. 19:29. C.

Ver. 12. Mourn. Sept. “beat.” H.—Breasts, suckling infants. In mourning, women beat and uncovered their breasts, which, on any other occasion, would have been deemed very indecent. C. Ezech. 23:34. Herod. ii. 84.

Ver. 13. Up. Being uncultivated for two years. This was still more the case during the captivity. C.—How. Sept. “from every house joy shall be taken away, thou rich city.” H.

Ver. 14. Ever. Some palaces had been demolished by Sennacherib, though this seems to refer to the Babylonian captivity.

Ver. 15. High, as Ezechiel (37:10) saw the dry bones rise again. Under this idea prosperity is frequently described. The rest of the chapter may very well be explained of the propagation of the gospel.—Forest. Carmel was a fertile spot. Judea shall flourish, and Assyria shall be laid waste. The synagogue will be rejected, while the Gentiles, (C.) formerly so barren, shall embrace the faith and true piety.

Ver. 17. Peace. The just shall enjoy peace, under Ezechias.

Ver. 19. Hail. God’s judgment shall overtake Babylon, or rather Ninive.

Ver. 20. Waters. Fruitful soils, abounding with cattle. C.—Both Jews and Gentiles shall submit to Christ. Clem. Strom. vi. S. Jer.

ISAIAS 33

Ver. 1. Spoilest. This is particularly directed to Sennacherib. Ch.—He was a figure of persecutors of the Church, to which many passages here allude. C.—Remotâ justitiâ quid sunt regna nisi magna latrocinia? S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. iv. 4.—Sennacherib plundered Samaria and Juda, and despising God, was himself contemned. W.

Ver. 2. Morning. Speedily. Heb. “mornings,” or every day. Ezechias thus addressed God.

Ver. 4. Them. The neglect of burying these insects has often brought on the plague. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. iii. 31.

Ver. 6. Faith. Sincerity and justice adorn the reigns of Ezechias and Christ.

Ver. 7. Without. The people of the country, and the envoys of Ezechias. 4 K. 18:14. Heb. “Behold their Ariel, cried they without,” insultingly, (C.) pointing at Jerusalem. C. 29:1. At which (H.) the envoys rent their garments, &c. C. 36:22. C.—“Behold I shall appear to them.” Aquila. S. Jer.—Angels. Messengers or deputies sent to negotiate a peace, (Ch.) who wept because they could not obtain it. W.

Ver. 8. Void, though Sennacherib had received what he demanded. 4 K. 18:14.

Ver. 9. Confounded. Its trees were cut down. C. 37:24.

Ver. 10. Myself, when all human aid fails.

Ver. 11. You, Assyrians, are bringing destruction upon yourselves. C.

Ver. 14. Of you. Heb. “of us.” H.—They are seriously alarmed at the sight of the fires prepared to burn the dead bodies of the Assyrians, (C. 30:33) and begin to think of hell, (C.) which their sins deserve. H.

Ver. 15. Blood. Avoiding revenge, and punishing the guilty, without respect to persons. Such was Ezechias, and therefore his enemies could not hurt him.

Ver. 16. Sure. Never failing. C.—This was a great advantage in those dry regions. H.

Ver. 17. King Ezechias, or he shall be one of his courtiers.—Off. Their limits shall be extended. Those who believe in Christ, shall cast their eyes up towards their heavenly country. Heb. 9:13.

Ver. 18. Ones. These questions were put by the people, when the enemy approached; or they now rejoice that their severe masters were gone.

Ver. 19. Shameless, unjust Assyrians. Lu. 18:2. When shame is gone, people give way to every excess.—Profound. Unknown to the Jews. 4 K. 18:26.—No wisdom, manners, or piety.

Ver. 20. Broken. It was taken 125 years afterwards. The Church remains till the end of time, (C.) whereas both the prophets and history assure us, that Jerusalem was subject to destruction. W.

Ver. 21. Of rivers. He speaks of the rivers of endless joys that flow from the throne of God to water the heavenly Jerusalem, like a deep river. C.

Ver. 23. Thy tacklings. He speaks of the enemies of the Church, under the allegory of a ship that is disabled. Ch.—Sennacherib shall attempt invasion no more than a ship without masts would put to sea.

Ver. 24. Feeble. All were obliged to collect the plunder, to be afterwards divided. None shall plead illness. The inhabitants of Jerusalem will not feel the effects of sin (C.) on this occasion. H.

ISAIAH 34

Ver. 1. Come. Both Gentiles and Jews are admonished of the world's end before judgment. W.

Ver. 4. Away. These strong expressions denote great misery. C. 13. Joel 2:10. Ezech. 32:27. C.—Book. Heb. “roll.” H.—Some thence foolishly inferred that the destiny of every one might be read in the heavens. Huet. Eus. præp. vi. 11. Philoo. xxiii. Pic. Astrol. viii. 5.—The prophet only means that the heavens shall be devoid of beauty, (C.) and covered with darkness. H.

Ver. 5. Heaven. Casting down the rebel angels. S. Jer.—The resolution to destroy the Idumeans, for their cruelty to the Jews, has been taken long ago. All these expressions allude to the last judgment. C.—Idumea. Under the name of Idumea or Edom, a people that were enemies of God and his Church. Ch.—Assaradon fell upon Edom two years after Sennacherib's death. C.—No strong place like Bosra, shall rescue any from destruction at the last day. W.

Ver. 7. The unicorns. That is, the great and mighty. Ch.

Ver. 8. Recompenses. When the persecutors of Sion, that is, of the Church, shall receive their reward. Ch.—The Idumeans had frequently shown their ill-will towards the Jews. 2 Par. 28:17. Amos 1:11. C.—Sion shall perish as the wicked in hell shall be tormented. W.

Ver. 9. Pitch. The soil was sulphureous, and became neglected, (v. 10) like the territory of Sodom. The people are now no more, and only a few miserable Arabs pitch their tents there.

Ver. 11. Line. Intimating entire destruction. Lam. 2:8 and 4 K. 11:13. C.—Yet God will not punish more than people deserve. M.

Ver. 13. Dragons, Thannim. C. 13:22. H.—Ostriches, or swans.

Ver. 14. Monsters. Lit. “Ass-centaurs.” H.—Heb. “fishermen shall find islands.” C. 13:21.—Ones. Goats.—Lamia. Heb. lilith. Chal. “owl,” the bird of Minerva, or the Moon, which the Arabs style Alilat. C.—Dicodorus (20) relates that Lamia was an African queen, who having lost her children, was changed into a beast, and destroyed all the children she could catch; and the Jews deal still more in fables, (C.) asserting that Lilith was the first wife of Adam, &c. Buxtorf. Syn. 2.

Ver. 15. Ericius. Heb. “kippoz, (H.) hath its nest.” It may denote the serpent, aconτίας. Bochart.—All this shews the desolation of the country.

Ver. 16. Read what I have written.—The other. All these beasts will be there, (C.) or all these declarations will be verified. H.

ISAIAS 35

Ver. 1. Lily. Judea flourishes under Ezechias: but the Church does more so after the coming of Christ, to whom these expressions conduct us. C.—The Gentiles shall be converted and flourish, as this text shews. W.

Ver. 2. Joy. The primitive Christians rejoiced in a good conscience, and in suffering for the truth.

Ver. 3. Knees. Ye prophets, comfort the people with these promises. C.—The apostles taught the Gentiles to do good. M.

Ver. 4. Recompense. Christ will satisfy the justice of his Father. H.—He will redeem the world, and refute the false interpretations of the Bible. C.—He will bring the devil into subjection. M.

Ver. 6. Free. Our Saviour healed both soul and body, (C.) shewing by his works (Jo. 10. W.) that he had fulfilled this prediction. Lu. 7:22. Mat. 11:5.—Waters. Baptism has sanctified the most wicked.

Ver. 7. Dragons. Sea monsters. C. 34:13. C.—All shall be in proper order, neither too dry nor too wet. H.

Ver. 8. Way, leading to Jerusalem. Idolaters, &c. shall not be there. C. 52:1. This was only verified (C.) in the Catholic Church, where, though some wicked may be found, the truth still prevails; and holiness can be obtained no where else. H.—This Church is unspotted. Eph. 5:27. C.—Fools. The most simple may learn what is necessary for salvation, (M.) which will never be done by consulting Scripture alone. H.

Ver. 9. Lion. The devil's power shall be repressed, so that none will be deluded except by their own fault. M.

Ver. 10. Sion. Before the defeat of Sennacherib, the roads were unsafe. C. 38:8. C.

ISAIAS 36

Ver. 1. And. These four chapters are taken from 4 K. 18. &c. as a sort of explanation of what Isaias has been foretelling. C.—An abridgment also occurs, 2 Par. 32.

Ver. 7. Altar. Such is the blindness of infidels, that they confound what is done to destroy idols, with their worship. W.

ISAIAS 37

Ver. 1. Sackcloth. Emblems of repentance. Sennacherib's boasting (v. 13) was chastised. v. 36. W.

Ver. 7. Spirit. Angel, or a different design. 2 Thes. 2:8. C.

Ver. 18. Lands. Heb. "all the lands and their land." The parallel text is more correct, "the nations and their land." Kennicott.

Ver. 24. Carmel. See 4 K. 19. Ch.

Ver. 25. Shut, &c. Heb. matsor, (H.) “of Egypt,” where Sennacherib had been. C.

Ver. 29. Lips, and treat thee like some ungovernable beast. H. Ezech. 29:4 and 38:4. C.

Ver. 30. Thee. He directeth his speech to Ezechias.

Ver. 35. Servant. Hence it plainly appears that God protects the living for the sake of the saints departed. To evade this proof, Prot. (Bible 1603) explain, “for God’s promise sake made to David.” But God never made any such promise to him; otherwise the city would never have been destroyed. W.

Ver. 36. They. The people of Jerusalem, or rather the soldiers of Ezechias, who saw those who had been slain, near Pelusium. C.

ISAIAS 38

Ver. 9. Ezechias. Sanchez groundlessly thinks it was composed by Isaias. C.—Ezechias was afflicted lest he should give way to dangerous joy. W.

Ver. 10. Hell. Sheol, or Hades, the region of the dead. Ch.—He was afraid to die without issue. S. Jer. 5:12.—Manasses was born three years later. C.—The king would naturally have died. S. Aug. de Gen. ad lit. vi. 17. W.

Ver. 11. Living. I shall not assist at the festivals of the Lord in the temple.

Ver. 14. For me. He represents his disease, as an inexorable creditor.

Ver. 18. Truth. He speaks only of the body.

Ver. 22. Lord. The answer is given, (4 K. 20:9) which seems to evince that this is only an extract. C.—The prophet prescribed the medicine, and the king asked for a sign before he sung the canticle. W.

ISAIAS 39

Ver. 1. And. Sept. add, “ambassadors and presents.” See 4 K. 20:12. C.

Ver. 8. Days. He is not unconcerned about his children, but dares not request more. Having given way to immoderate joy and vanity, he was informed that all his treasures should be taken away. W.

ISAIAS 40

Ver. 1. Be. Sept. “comfort my people.” Let them not be dejected. H.—The end of the captivity, and still more the coming of the Messias, afford consolation, (C.) and to this the prophet chiefly alludes. W.

Ver. 2. Evil. Heb. and some Latin copies have, “warfare.”—Double. A rigorous chastisement. Apoc. 18:6. C.

Ver. 3. God, that he may conduct his people from Babylon. Sanchez.—Yet the prophet speaks chiefly of the baptist, (Mat. 3:3. C.) who is evidently foretold. W.

Ver. 4. Plain. For the captives, or the conversion of the world. Bar. 5:6.

Ver. 5. Glory. God will rescue his people. Christ will redeem mankind.

Ver. 6. Field. On the downfall of the empire of Babylon, the Jews were liberated.

Ver. 9. Thou, female. How beautiful are the feet of those who announce good tidings! Rom. 10:15. H.—Thus a feminine noun is applied to Solomon. Eccle. i. Prophets make known to all the coming of the Saviour. C.—Christ preaches from the mountain, and his apostles over the world. W.

Ver. 10. Him. Christ will reward and punish. Jer. 31:16. Lu. 2:34.

Ver. 11. Young, or have lately had young lambs, foetas. Jesus is the good shepherd. Jo. 10:14.

Ver. 12. Who. He now proceeds to shew the difference between God and idols.—Fingers, is not expressed in Heb. which may denote the epha. Ps. 79:6. C.—God’s power and goodness in the works of the creation, shew what he will do for man. W.

Ver. 15. Dust. Heb. caddak, (H.) “as dok fallen.” Sym.—It may signify an atom. S. Jer.—If all nations be only like a drop, what portion of it do I occupy? C. v. 17.

Ver. 18. Image. Catholics never pretend to represent the Deity, when they depict the Father as a venerable old man, &c. They do not adore pictures, as our adversaries would insinuate. If we were disposed to cavil, we might bring the same charge against them. For a few weeks ago, “a beautiful altar-piece, painted and presented by the lady of major general Cheney, was put in Hornsea church, representing Christ blessing the bread and wine.” But Protestants can confine such things to their proper use, and Catholics must adore them. H.—“Such things the Jew, Apella, may believe: not I.” Horace.

Ver. 19. Silver. Is God like these idols? H.—Who knows not that the workman is better than they are? Wis. 13:11. C.

Ver. 20. Wood. Heb. hamsuccan, (H.) which Sept. Chal. and S. Jerom explain of a sort of wood used for idols. Moderns take it to be “a rich,” or rather “a poor man. He who is mean in his offering, chooses wood that,” &c. C. Prot.

Ver. 21. Beginning, by the light of nature, and (W.) has not Moses declared that God alone created the world? H.—His power and goodness herein convince us that he will not deny grace. W.

Ver. 22. Locusts, compared with the greatest animals.—Nothing. Heb. “a curtain.” Sept. Syr. “vault, (C.) or chamber,” καμαραν.

Ver. 23. Searchers. Heb. “princes to nothing.” Prot. H.—Philosophers know nothing independently of God, nor can they subsist without him. W.

Ver. 26. Host of heaven, the stars, &c. Gen. 2:1. Ps. 146:4.

Ver. 27. Judgment, or conduct, (Gen. 40:13. C.) as if God minded not our affairs.

Ver. 31. Eagles, who grow young, when they get new feathers. Ps. 102:5. S. Jer.—In this and the following 26 chapters the prophet chiefly comforts his people, as he had rebuked them for their crimes in the first part. W.

ISAIAH 41

Ver. 1. Islands, near Asia, whose conversion Isaiah often predicts, (C.) as he does that of all nations. H.—God continues to prove his divinity, (C.) expostulating with idolaters, whose conversion is insinuated, and among the rest that of Britain, which is the most renowned island in Europe. Bristow, anot. 11. W.

Ver. 2. Just one. Sept. “justice.” Christ, (Eus. S. Jer.) Abraham, (Chal. Grot.) or Cyrus, whose conquests were effects of God’s providence. v. 10. C. 45.—Kings. Cyrus liberated Persia, conquered Babylon and all Asia.

Ver. 3. Feet. His march and victories shall be so rapid, like those of Alexander. Dan. 8:5.

Ver. 4. Beginning. Disposing all things, as the conquests of Cyrus, announced so long before by name, evince.—Last. Alpha and Omega. Apoc. 1:8 and 22:13.

Ver. 5. Islands. People of Asia Minor. Gen. 10:5. C.—The Babylonians made a league with the most potent king Crœsus, to oppose the young conqueror. Xen. B. i.

Ver. 7. Moved. Thus the nations conspire against Cyrus (C.) and the Messias. H.

Ver. 10. Upheld thee. Cyrus shall gain the victory, and give thee liberty.

Ver. 14. Dead. Though you were in the grave, I could protect you. Captivity is often represented under this idea. C.—You who are despised, fear not, since Christ will protect and reward you. W.

Ver. 15. Chaff. Cambyses perished on the mountains of Judea, (H.) and the Machabees gained many victories over the Syrians. Mic. 4:13. Ezec. 39. C.—They are here meant, as their exploits resembled those of Cyrus. Houbigant.

Ver. 18. Waters. The captives shall be refreshed in the deserts. C. 35:6 and 43:20. C.

Ver. 19. The thorn. In Hebrew, the shitta or settim, a tree resembling the whitethorn. Ch. S. Jer.—A fragrant shade shall speedily rise up. Bar. 5:6. C.

Ver. 21. Thing. Add “strong,” forte, (H.) any good proof of idolatry.

Ver. 23. Good. The prescience and power of God prove his divinity. Can idols produce any thing similar? C.—None can tell what will happen, unless God reveal it. W.

Ver. 24. Work. All that you can do or promise. Heb. “your work is worse than a viper.”

Ver. 25. Sun. Cyrus had a Persian for his father, and a Mede for his mother; thus uniting both nations, (C.) so that he was styled a mule by an ancient oracle. Eus. præp. ix. 41.—These countries lay to the north-east of Judea. C.

Ver. 26. Just, or “the just one,” (H.) that we may recognise Cyrus at once.—Your words. He addresses the idols. You cannot dive into futurity. C.

Ver. 28. I. Isaias, (M.) or God, (H.) pronounces sentence against the speechless idols. M.

ISAIAS 42

Ver. 1. My servant. Christ, who, according to his humanity, is the servant of God, (Ch.) and Redeemer of others; none else being able to satisfy for themselves. W. Phil. 2:7. C.—This passage clearly refers to the Messias, (Chal. Kimchi) who was prefigured by Cyrus. v. 6. C. Hugo.—It is quoted by S. Mat. (12:18) who has some variations both from the Heb. and the Sept. (C.) particularly the first part of v. 4 which the Sept. renders, “He shall shine, and shall not be broken.”

Ver. 4. Islands. Sept. and S. Mat. “the Gentiles shall hope in his name.” H.

Ver. 6. Gentiles. This was literally verified in Christ. Cyrus is also styled the just, (C. 41:26) and gave liberty to many nations.

Ver. 7. House. The Jews out of captivity, prefigured the redemption of mankind. These miracles proved that Jesus was the Messias. Lu. 7:22.

Ver. 8. Things. They shall not partake of my divinity. Our Saviour was truly God. Phil. 2:6.

Ver. 9. Them. The completion of former predictions enforces the belief of those which are yet to come. C.

Ver. 10. All. Lit. “its fullness,” (H.) sailors, (C.) and fishes. H.—He concludes with a canticle.

Ver. 11. Cedar, or the Jews in exile in the desert Arabia. P. 119:5. C. —The people dwell in tents. Roger. ii. 5.—Petra. A city that gives name to Arabia Petræa. Ch.

Ver. 13. Enemies. The Chaldees, (C.) by the hand of Cyrus.

Ver. 15. Pools. Cyrus deluged the country about Babylon. C. 13 and 21:1. H.—The proud and covetous, who expected Christ to give them kingdoms, were deceived. He came to teach humility, and to grant eternal rewards. W.

Ver. 16. Blind captives, or converts to Christianity.

Ver. 18. Deaf Jews, who would not listen to the prophets. v. 19. C.

Ver. 19. Sold. Heb. Cimshullam, (H.) the perfect, or favoured. The Turks call “believers” Musselmans. C.

Ver. 22. Men, whom they corrupt by their bad example. H.—Heb. “their young men are in chains,” during the last wars, and the captivity of Juda. C.

Ver. 24. We. Sept. “they have sinned,” which seems preferable. H.

ISAIAS 43

Ver. 1. And. Notwithstanding the sins of his people, God will deliver them, that they may be his witnesses. v. 10. C.—Name. As an intimate friend, (H.) or slave. C. 49:1. C.—God grants grace without any preceding merit. W.—Forerius explains this mostly of the Gentile church, though it regards the converted Jews. Houbig.

Ver. 2. Waters. In every emergency, God will protect thee, (C.) as he did the three children. H.—He will suffer none to perish, without their own fault. Hence the Church still continues pure. W.

Ver. 3. Ethiopia. Heb. “Chus,” the isle of Meroe, (Grot.) or the country bordering on the Red Sea. C. 45:14. These were given to indemnify Cyrus. They obtained their liberty to return home, after 40 years. Ezec. 29:11.

Ver. 4. Eyes, by a gratuitous choice.—Men. Chaldees, &c.

Ver. 5. East. Babylon.—West. The island beyond the Mediterranean.

Ver. 6. North. Assyria.—South. Egypt. The captives returned from these countries under Cyrus, Alex. &c. so that before the coming of Christ, Judea was as well peopled as ever. C.

Ver. 7. Calleth. Heb. “is called by my name.” Prot. H.—My people’s chastisements and liberation prove my divine perfections.

Ver. 8. Ears. Yet will not hear, (C.) or who are miraculously healed. H.—It seems rather to mean idolatrous nations, (v. 9. C.) or rebellious Jews. Forer. Houbigant.

Ver. 9. Former. The pagans were little acquainted with antiquity. Such researches lead to the knowledge of the true religion. H.—Truth, if they can produce any true prophecy.

Ver. 10. Witnesses. The history of the Israelites was sufficient to shew who was God. C.—Thus the establishment of Christianity manifests its truth. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xxii. 6.—Sept. add, “and I am witness.” H.

Ver. 12. One idol, to announce what would happen.

Ver. 14. Bars. Sept. “fugitives.” Theodot. “strong ones.”—Glorying. Sept. “shall be bound in ships,” to be sent beyond the Caspian Sea. C.—Cyrus was victorious for the sake of God’s people; for he will not neglect his Church. W.

Ver. 16. Waters. of the Jordan and the Red Sea, in the latter of which Pharao perished. v. 17.

Ver. 19. New. I shall work the like miracles as were seen in the wilderness.

Ver. 20. Chosen. We know not that rivers were found in Arabia. But the people were equally favoured. Christ facilitates the road to heaven by his example and graces, while the most savage tempers are changed in baptism.

Ver. 23. Incense. My kindness is gratuitous. In a strange land, thou couldst not offer sacrifice. See C. 48:9 and 49:1. C.

Ver. 24. Iniquities. Thou hast shewn the greatest ingratitude. H.—Yet I will save thee.

Ver. 26. Thyself. God condescends to act thus with men. C. 41:20. Osee 4:1.

Ver. 27. First father. Adam, (Liran.) or rather Abraham sinned, by diffidence, (Gen. 15:8. S. Jer.) or was formerly an idolater. Jos. 24:2. Geneb. A. 2049 S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. 12. C. T.—Teachers. Lit. “interpreters,” (H.) Moses and Aaron. Num. 20:9. C.—All the patriarchs and teachers sinned, till Christ, the immaculate lamb, appeared. Adam engaged all in guilt. W.

Ver. 28. Profaned, or declared such, (H.) Nadab, &c. (Lev. 10:1. C.) or Moses and Aaron. M.—Sept. “and the princes defiled my holy things.” H.—Slaughter. Heb. “anathema.” Yet I will re-establish all. C.

ISAIAS 44

Ver. 3. Stock. I will give fresh life to my people, as to the figure of Christ’s Church.

Ver. 5. Israel. They shall no longer be ashamed of being called Israelites or Christians.

Ver. 8. Witnesses. The history of the true religion is its best proof. C. 43:9. 10.—Known. Ruled, consequently no other can be truly God. C. —Idolaters are foolish, trusting in those who cannot announce future events. W.

Ver. 9. Ashamed of the origin and imbecility of their idols. C.—All this may be turned against heretics, who worship their own fictions; which the Church never does. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 12. File. Heb. mahatsad, (H. Jer. 10:3.) “to make an ax, with,” &c. This is the remote cause of the idol.

Ver. 13. Man. To be styled afterwards a god. C.—Maluit esse deum. Hor. i. ser. 8.

Ver. 18. Covered. Sept. “darkened.” Are Catholics in the same predicament? C. 40:18. H.

Ver. 20. Lie. Can I assert in conscience that it is a god?

Ver. 22. Return from captivity, (C.) and from their former errors. Mat. 11:26. H.

Ver. 25. Mad. That people may be no longer deluded.

Ver. 26. Servant. The prophets and Jesus Christ, whose works never fail. Mat. 24:35. C.—In all this prediction of the Church, Isaias alludes to Jerusalem destroyed, and afterwards rebuilt. W.

Ver. 27. Deep. Babylon, situated amid waters. C. 21:1. C.—Rivers, as Cyrus did. Herod. i. 191.

Ver. 28. Cyrus. This was spoken 110 years before his birth, which shews the prescience and power of God, so as not to injure free-will.

The parents of Cyrus could not give him this name to fulfill the prediction, as they knew nothing of it. Amon was apprised that a person called Josias would overturn idolatry; but he had no reason to suppose that it would be his son. 1 K. 13:2.—My shepherd. Chal. “that he shall reign.” This was shewn by the Jews to Cyrus, on which account, (C.) he gave them leave to return, &c. Joseph. xi. 1.—The title of shepherd is given to Agamemnon by Homer, and it denotes a good prince, such as historians represent Cyrus to have been. He observed that kings and shepherds had the like duties to perform; (Xenoph. viii.) and after his death he was bewailed as a “father.” Herod. iii. 89.—At first he did not bear the name of Cyrus, (Herod. i. 113.) which in the Persian language means “the sun.” Ctesias. Plut.

ISAIAS 45

Ver. 1. Anointed, often implies one chosen for some great work. Cyrus was to ruin the empire of Babylon, and to set the nations at liberty. He was a proof of the Deity by executing his decrees.—Cyrus. Some copies of the Sept. seem to have read κυριω, “to the Lord,” incorrectly. S. Jer.—Though Cyrus was not anointed, he is styled thus, in allusion to the custom of the Jewish kings. W.

Ver. 2. Brass. Babylon had 100 such gates. Herod. i. 179.

Ver. 3. Treasures. See Pliny xxxiii. 3. He overcame the rich king of Lydia, &c.

Ver. 4. Likeness of Christ.—Known me. Before the Jews had shewn Cyrus the prophecies, he did not attribute his success to the Lord, and even afterwards he seems not to have left the superstitions of his country, as his sacrifices to idols are described. He resembled Nabuchodonosor and the philosophers, who did not glorify God according to their knowledge. Dan. 2:47. Rom. 1:21. Cyrus even revoked the decree for building the temple. 1 Esd. 4:5. C.—He believed there was one God; (1 Esd. 1) yet he did not embrace the truth entirely. W.

Ver. 7. Create evil, &c. The evils of afflictions and punishments, but not the evil of sin. Ch.—I afflict and comfort my people.

Ver. 8. Saviour. Thus the ancient saints thirsted for the coming of Christ. His figure is styled the just. C. 41:2. 25.—Him. Christ, born of the virgin, in time, and of God from all eternity. I have appointed Cyrus to be his precursor, to set the captives free. C.—He has been spoken of before. But now the prophet turns to Christ alone, who built his Church on a rock. W.—Cyrus had not a right faith in God, and Zorobabel was himself set free, and was not king. S. Jer.

Ver. 9. Earthen. Lit. “Samian.” H.—Samos was famous for its pottery. Pliny xxxv. 12. Heb. “Clay, disputest thou against the potters of the earth?” He shews the folly of idols, after having proved his own divinity. C.—Prot. “Let the potsherd strive with the potsherd of the earth.” H.

Ver. 10. Forth. As such language would be improper to parents, so it is wrong to complain that God places us in any situation. M.

Ver. 11. To me. Ask what will come to pass, or direct me how to act.

Ver. 13. Justice. Cyrus shall punish the Chaldees and restore the Jews. C.—The prophet returns to him after having mentioned a greater Saviour. v. 8. Houbig.

Ver. 14. Stature: the people of Saba were the tallest and best proportioned in Arabia. Agathar. v. 50.—Cyrus possessed all these countries. He sent the Egyptians home in the third year of his reign, at Babylon, A. 3470. Ezech. 29:11. They never became subject to the Jews; but embraced the religion of Christ, acknowledging him for God. v. 15. C.—Besides thee. Prot. “Surely God is in thee, and there is none else, there is no God.” Those whom we have hitherto adored, deserved not the name. Vulg. and Sept. make the people address Christ, the God-man. H.

Ver. 15. Saviour. We confess that thou hast delivered the Jews; or rather, we acknowledge that thou, O Christ, art true God under the veils of thy human nature, and Saviour of all. Cyrus was only a feeble representation of thee.

Ver. 16. Confusion. Idolaters shall be confounded, when they shall behold the glory of the elect.

Ver. 18. In vain. Heb. “to be a chaos.” Gen. 8:2.

Ver. 19. Earth. The pagan oracles were given chiefly in mountains, where the impostures of the priests might escape detection. They were also generally ambiguous, or mere guesses. The declarations of the true prophets were quite the reverse.—In vain; without reward. C.

Ver. 20. Gentiles: converts, (H.) or Jews, returning from Babylon.

Ver. 21. Me. He transports his auditors to the times succeeding the captivity, when the completion of the prophecies will be evident.

Ver. 23–24. Myself, having none greater. Heb. 6:13.—Justice: sure.—To me. All that are born belong to me. The Jewish women had seldom recourse to midwives, (Ex. 1:19 and 1 K. 4:19. C.) no more than the Ethiopians. Ludolf. i. 14.—Swear, by the true God. H.—Oaths on proper occasions, honour him. Deut. 6:13. Nothing could be spoken more plainly of the Gentiles' conversion.

Ver. 25. Empire. Cyrus shall make this confession, (1 Esd. 1:2) and all who embrace the religion of Christ, shall attribute all their virtue to him.

ISAIAH 46

Ver. 1. Bel; perhaps Nimrod, (C.) or Saturn, to whom they sacrificed their children. W.—Nabo, “the oracle” of Belus. The Chaldees adored statues and beasts. But the Persians worshipped the elements. C.—Xerxes destroyed the tomb of Belus, after his expedition into Greece. Arrian vii.) He had there demolished the temples, (Herod. viii. 109.) pretending (H.) that “the world is the house of the gods.” Cic. Leg. ii.—Weariness. The priests affected to be weighed down, as if the god were present. Bar. 6:25. S. Cyr.

Ver. 2. They. Lit. “their soul.” H.—The pagans must have supposed they had one. C.—Captivity. “There are as many triumphs over the gods as over men.” Tert.—The former shared the fate of their adorers. Their statues were plundered.

Ver. 3. By my. Vulg. may have read a me ab, (C.) instead of a meo. Heb. and Sept. “taken from the womb,” (H.) and treated with the utmost tenderness. C.

Ver. 8. Ashamed. Sept. “groan.” Prot. “shew yourselves men.” H.

Ver. 11. Bird; Cyrus, whose rapid conquests are thus denoted. C.—He chose a golden eagle, with wings expanded, for his standard. Xen. vii.—Christ came from heaven to redeem the world. Ps. 18:6. Mal. 4:2. C.—He was the orient, adored by the eastern sages, to whom the prophet refers. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 12. Israel. It shall no longer be a reproach. Cyrus shall restore my people to their own country. But Christ more fully accomplished what is here declared respecting the establishment of his Church. C.

ISAIAS 47

Ver. 1. Virgin; delicate. M.—Cyrus overthrew this empire, (C.) which now felt its share of misery. W.

Ver. 2. Shame. Heb. tsammathec, Cant. 4:1, 4. Prot. “thy locks, make bare the legs, uncover the thigh, pass,” &c. H.—Thou shalt be reduced to a state of the most abject slavery. Ex. 11:5. Sup. 3:17 and 20:4. The Barbarians sold their slaves naked.

Ver. 6. Polluted; deemed or declared unclean. But thou hast sought to gratify thy vindictive temper, in punishing my people. C.—The sins of both called down vengeance. W.

Ver. 7. Lady. Pride goes before ruin. Prov. 16:18.

Ver. 9. Two. The empire and the people shall be removed at once.—Enchanters; princes or magicians, who gave them evil counsel. v. 12.

Ver. 11. Know. All this shews the vanity of magic, which cannot announce future events to do any good. C.

Ver. 13. Months, to tell which would prove lucky. Est. 3:7.

Ver. 14. Thereat, to warm themselves, (H.) or to adore. C.—In Cappadocia are to be seen “Pyratheia, ... in which the magi keep a perpetual fire, and sing hymns about the space of an hour.” Strabo xv. —These were a sort of open temples. C.

Ver. 15. Merchants. The city was well situated for trade. C. 13:20. Diod. ii.

ISAIAS 48

Ver. 1. Waters; people, (Apoc. 17:15. H.) or from the stock of Juda. Prov. 5:15. C.—He claimed the sovereign power, but had not the fortitude or wisdom for Israel. W.

Ver. 2. City: citizens of Jerusalem. Dan. 3:28. Mat. 4:5.

Ver. 3. Suddenly, when there was no human appearance of the event, as when I foretold the exploits of Cyrus and the ruin of Babylon so long before.

Ver. 4. Brass; unblushing. Jer. 3:3. C.—Os tuum ferreum. Cic. c. Piso.

Ver. 6. Them. Could you have believed them?—Knowest not. He upbraids their ignorance and indocility.

Ver. 7. Knew. Therefore I did not speak of the liberation from Egypt, but from Babylon, which is represented as just taking place. C.

Ver. 8. Opened; docile, (Theod.) or acquainted with these things. Isaias first made known the captivity of Babylon, and its end; and he insists so much, that people may discern the truth of his predictions, and of religion. No atheist can, with a good conscience, hold out against his arguments. C. 40. &c.

Ver. 9. Bridle thee, like a headstrong beast, (C.) running to its own ruin. H.—God pardons freely, that people may be saved if they will. W.

Ver. 10. Poverty, at Babylon. I have not treated thee with the utmost rigour, nor attempted to render thee free from every imperfection. C. —Sept. “Lo, I have sold thee, but not for silver; I have snatched thee from the,” &c. H.

Ver. 14. Things, as I have done respecting Cyrus? (S. Cyr. &c.) who was a figure of Christ. v. 15.

Ver. 16. Spirit. The Fathers here find the three Persons of the blessed Trinity specified. Isaias was not from the beginning, though the text may also speak of him C. as the spoke long before the event, by divine inspiration. Chal. S. Jer.

Ver. 19. Name. The Jews were not forgotten, till they had rejected the Messias.

Ver. 21. Out. Their return was facilitated. This may easily be applied (C.) to the conversion of the Gentiles. S. Jer.

Ver. 22. Peace. Sept. “rejoicing,” or prosperity for the Chaldees or wicked Jews. v. 18. C.—It is promised only to the penitent. W.

ISAIAH 49

Ver. 1. Give. This fresh discourse continues to C. 56:9 relating to the Messias, who is introduced speaking to all the world. Acts 13:47 and 2 Cor. 6:2. Some apply a part to Cyrus, Isaias, or the Baptist, as to his figures. C.—The prophet has foretold the conversion of the Gentiles, as he now does, like an evangelist. S. Jer.—Many Jews will embrace the gospel at the end of time. W.

Ver. 2. Sword, penetrating the very soul, (Heb. 4:12) and slaying the wicked. Apoc. 1:16 and 2 Thess. 2:8. Without Christ, his ministers can apply this sword to little purpose. Cyrus cut asunder the bonds of the captives by his decree. C.—Grotius improperly explains all of Isaias. Houbigant.

Ver. 3. Glory. In the Church, God is adored in spirit and truth. Isaias is ordered thus to address the Israelites.

Ver. 4. God. He will reward the labours of his ministers, though the people be obstinate. The prophets and our Saviour frequently complain. C. 65:2. Mar. 9:18.

Ver. 5. Will not. Heb. Sept. &c. “to be gathered.” H.—The original text, independent of the Masorets, may have the sense of the Vulg. Yet there are other proofs of the synagogue’s rejection. C.—Prot. “though Israel be not gathered, yet,” &c. Margin, or “that Israel may be gathered, and I may,” &c. H.

Ver. 6. Earth. S. Paul, explains this of Christ, (Acts 13) who said, Go teach all nations. Mat. 28. Isaias was one of his first preachers.

Ver. 7. Despised, Christ, Cyrus, or Isaias; though it refer chiefly to our Saviour.

Ver. 9. Ways. The captives shall find every convenience. C.

Ver. 12. South. Heb. Sinim; (H.) China, (S. Jer.) or rather Sin, or Pelusium, and Sinai, in Egypt and Arabia. Sept. “Persians.” C.

Ver. 14. Sion, the Jews, who will at last be converted in great numbers. Houbigant.

Ver. 16. Hands, which were nailed to the cross. Sept. “I have delineated thy walls on my hands, and thou art before me always.” H.—The Assyrians wore such characters on their hands or necks. Lucian. Lev. 19:28. C.—Christ will always love his Church, which is of all times and nations. W.

Ver. 17. Of thee. Sanballat, &c. shall yield to Zorobabel, Nehemias, &c.

Ver. 19. Inhabitants. The country was better peopled, (C.) and Jerusalem enlarged under the Machabees. Jos. Bel. v. 6.

Ver. 20. Barrenness, of which thou complainest. He alludes to the captives who returned, and to Christian converts. M.

Ver. 22. Shoulders. Thus the Syrians commonly carried children astride. Cotovic. xiv.

Ver. 23. Nurses. The Persian kings favoured the captives. The greatest monarchs bow before the prelates of the Church, (M.) and kiss the Pope's toe. They venerate relics, (H.) and greatly enrich the Church. C.

Ver. 24. Strong. Can I force the Babylonians to yield? Surely, and the devil also. Lu. 11:21.—Mighty. Heb. “just,” in lawful war. Sept. “unjustly.”

Ver. 26. Flesh. They shall attack one another. C.—Neriglissor slew Evil-merodac. Beros. c. Ap. i.—Gobrias and Gadatas betrayed and killed Baltassar. Xenoph. iv. 5. and 7. C.—In their fury they shall tear their own flesh. M.

ISAIAS 50

Ver. 1. Away. Such a one could not be received again, if she had taken another husband. Deut. 24:3. Some explain this of the captives. But God restored them to favour. It seems rather to relate to the reprobation (C.) of the synagogue, which will never again become the true Church, (H.) though many of Israel will be converted. Rom. 11:25.—Sold you, as a father might do. Ex. 21:1. Mat. 18:15. S. Ambrose (Tob. viii.) inveighs against such cruel parents, as the Christian religion had not then entirely repressed this inhumanity. C.—God rejected the synagogue, not out of hard-heartedness or want, but because of her sins. W.

Ver. 2. Hear. My spouse had gone after other lovers. The people refused to hear the prophets; and the priests were become as corrupt as the rest, when the city was taken by the Chaldees and by the Romans. C.—Sea. Babylon. C. 21. H.—I could work the same miracles, as I did when Israel came out of Egypt.

Ver. 4. Weary. Isaias speaks in the name of Christ, whose words carried conviction and comfort along with them. Jo. 6:69 and 7:46. C.—Wakeneth. Lit. “lifteth up.” Cynthus aurem—Vellit. Ec. 6.—Hear, or obey. H.—Christ preached more powerfully than Isaias, and continues to do so by his pastors. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 6. Spit. The greatest indignity. Job 30:10. Deut. 25:9. Yet this was the treatment of our Saviour. Lu. 18:31. Mat. 26:67. C.—“The great Grotius, (I wish he were great in explaining the prophets)” applies this to Jeremias. Houbigant.

Ver. 7. Rock. Christ heard the accusations of his enemies unmoved, as he had not been afraid to blame the conduct of the Pharisees.

Ver. 10. Light. The faithful are exhorted to take courage, while the Romans will destroy the rebellious Jews, (v. 11. C.) and the wicked shall dwell in hell fire. M.

ISAIAS 51

Ver. 1. Lord. He speaks of the redemption of mankind, under the allegory of the return from captivity.

Ver. 2. Alone, and gave him children when he was grown old, and Sara barren. I can surely save you likewise. C.—The example of these great progenitors is set before the Jews. Thus S. Paul says: Remember your prelates. Heb. 13. W.

Ver. 4. Nations. This was verified when the Bible was translated into Greek, and still more by the preaching of the gospel.

Ver. 5. Just. Christ, prefigured by Cyrus, whose empire was very mild. C. 44:28.

Ver. 6. Fail. Mat. 24:35. The prosperity of the Jews was not of long duration. But the Church will remain till the end of time.

Ver. 9. Proud. Heb. “Rahab,” Pharaoh, king of Egypt. Job 26:12. Ezech. 29:3. C.—God drowned in the water, which had retired for Israel. He will thus destroy the devil. W.

Ver. 13. Oppressor. If thou hadst not abandoned God, thou wouldst have had no reason to fear Nabuchodonosor; and his power is now gone.

Ver. 14. Fail. Cyrus shall quickly restore the Jews to their country. He shall not lay waste the provinces, like many conquerors.

Ver. 16. People. This may refer to Isaias, Cyrus, &c. as figures of Christ. C. 49:1. He has bestowed greater favours on Christians than Cyrus did on the Jews, opening the kingdom of heaven to true believers, &c. Eph. 2:19.

Ver. 17. Dregs. Take courage: Babylon’s turn is come. v. 23. C.

Ver. 19. Two. War and famine cause desolation and destruction. W.—Jerusalem was reduced to the greatest misery in the last siege under Nabuchodonosor. Lam. 4:3. C.

Ver. 20. Ox, oryx. Heb. Thua. Deut. 14:5. H.—Many accounts respecting it are fabulous. Some understand a sort of wolf, mentioned by Pliny viiii. 34. Sept. “like beet half boiled.”

Ver. 23. Over. This inhumanity was not uncommon. Jos. 10:24. Ps. 109:1.

Ver. 1. Thee. Judea was no more laid waste by its ancient enemies. The persecution of Epiphanes did not continue long. Many have attacked the Church; but they cannot overcome her, nor will she cease to preach the truth, and to continue pure and holy.

Ver. 3. Money. The Chaldees acted impolitically in leaving the country without inhabitants, and Cyrus will derive no immediate advantage from your return. C.—The Jews had not injured the Chaldees, nor mankind the devil. But both had offended God, who out of mercy paid their ransom. W.

Ver. 4. Assyrian. Pharaoh, (Sa. T.) or rather Nabuchodonosor, (C.) and the princes of Assyria, who acted tyrannically. H.

Ver. 5. Long, by the Chaldees, weak Jews, and strangers, who misconstrue my conduct towards my people, and represent it as the effect of injustice, or of weakness.

Ver. 6. Here. Jesus Christ appears, the Redeemer foretold so long before.

Ver. 7. Peace. He come like a conqueror to save his people. It may also be applied to the prophets and apostles, (C.) as S. Paul explains it. Rom. 10:15. M.

Ver. 8. Watchmen, prophets. The angels sung at the birth of Christ. Lu. 2:14.

Ver. 10. Arm. The Saviour. Lu. 1:51.

Ver. 11. Lord, the Levites departing from Babylon. 1 Esd. 1:7. Num. 3:6 and 4:5. &c. C.—S. Paul proves hence that communication with infidels in spiritual things is always unlawful. 2 Cor. 6:17. W.

Ver. 13. Servant, Christ. In vain do the Jews attempt to apply this to any other. It is wonderful that Grotius should follow their steps, and understand Jeremias to be meant; though elsewhere he allows that the prophet speaks only of the Messias. De Verit. v. 19.—This author has been of great prejudice to religion. The Chaldee and many modern Jews have been compelled by evidence to apply this to the Messias. See Geir. &c. Jesus was pleased to assume the form of a servant. Phil. 2:7.

Ver. 14. Of men, who have disfigured the countenance of our Saviour with buffets, &c. The Jews would not receive him under this abject form, though it had been foretold equally with his elevation. C.

Ver. 15. Sprinkle with baptism, (H.) and his manifold graces. C.—

Sept. "so many nations shall wonder at him." H.—Mouth, out of reverence. How many great princes have submitted to his yoke? C.—Beheld. The Gentiles (M.) embrace the faith, at the sight of Christ's miracles. C.

ISAIAH 53

Ver. 1. Revealed. Who could have believed such things? The apostles complain how few were converted. Jo. 12:38. Rom. 10:16. C.—These would not submit, though the gospel was not against reason. W.

Ver. 2. Plant. Hebrew also, "suckling child." Sept. &c.—Ground. The blessed Virgin. C.—Was. Sept. "he had no appearance nor beauty. But his appearance was abject and deficient above all men; a," &c.—That we. Lit. "and we have desired him." Notwithstanding his abject condition, He was the desired of all nations, and by his wounds we are healed. H.—Some assert that the person of Christ was not beautiful, while others think that his wounds prevented it from being discerned. Salmeron would supply a negation from the first number: "We have not desired him."

Ver. 3. Not. The whole life of Christ was spent in the midst of poverty, and contradictions. Heb. 4:15. He has thus taught us to despise ourselves.

Ver. 4. Sorrows. Healing them by his own afflictions. Mat. 8:15. Sickness is an effect of sin, which Jesus came to destroy. 1 Pet. 2:24—Lep, who was bound to have his face covered. v. 3. Lev. 13:45.—God. Payva (Def. Trin. iv.) assures us that many Jews were converted by the perusal of this chapter, and particularly of this verse, which may be rendered "as a God wounded and afflicted." C.

Ver. 5. Healed. He inculcates this important truth repeatedly. Christ nailed the hand-writing that was against us to the cross. Col. 2:14. H.

Ver. 6. Astray. We belong to his fold. C. 40:11. Jo. 10:11. Lu. 15:4.—Laid. Sept. "abandoned him to our sins," as to so many executioners; (C.) "and he, because he had been abused, opened," &c. H.

Ver. 7. Will. The pagans were very attentive that the victim should not make much resistance. Macrobi. iii. 5.

Ver. 8. Judgment, or by an unjust and cruel judgment. H.—Heb. "from prison and judgment." C.—Sept. "in humiliation, (H.) or humility, his judgment was taken away,” or rescinded, by his glorious resurrection. S. Philip follows this version in explaining this passage to the eunuch. Acts 8:33.—Generation, from his eternal Father or from the Virgin, his incarnation, life, resurrection, or posterity in the Church. All these may be meant, and are inexplicable. C.

Ver. 9. Death. Heb. “and he made his grave with the wicked men, and with the rich man, in his death.” H.—Grave and death seem to be transposed; and we might better read, “He was taken up with wicked men in his death, and with a rich man was his sepulchre.” This indeed is only a conjecture, but well grounded in the context. See Jos. 24:19. Kennicott.—Sept. “and I will give the wicked for his grave, and the rich men for his death.” H.—The rich man may denote the small number of Jews who embraced the faith. C.—They esteemed themselves rich, and were highly favoured by God; yet they were blinded, (H.) and given up to the Romans, in punishment of their deicide. Mat. 27:25. The Church is gathered both from Jews and Gentiles. v. 10. C. S. Jer.—“He will send to hell the wicked,” (Chal.) who slew him. M.—Christ was buried where malefactors were generally, yet honourably, in the tomb of Joseph. W. Mat. 27:57.

Ver. 10. Bruise. Sept. “to cleanse him from the wound.” H.—God was pleased that he should satisfy for our crimes.—Hand. Christ has died for all, and established a Church which shall not perish.

Ver. 12. Many. Even to the ends of the earth. Ps. 2:8.—Strong. Demons, Jews, &c. Heb. “with the strong” apostles.—Wicked thieves. Barabbas, &c.—Transgressors. His executioners. The gospel could not speak plainer. C.

ISAIAH 54

Ver. 1. Barren Jews in captivity, or Church of the Gentiles, to which alone the expressions can be applied. C.—The Gentiles were before unfruitful, as the Jews will be till towards the latter times. W.

Ver. 2. Stakes, to receive so great a family. All the Israelites did not return, and it does not appear that many embraced their religion, as they have done that of Christ.

Ver. 3. Left. To the north and south. Jerusalem increased. But what was it compared with the Christians establishment!

Ver. 4. Widowhood. Thy former excesses shall be forgotten. C.

Ver. 5. Thee. Heb. “Bohalaic (H.) shall be your Baalim,” or husband, who was styled Lord. 1 Pet. 3:6. Perhaps he may allude to the two wives, the synagogues and the Church, or to the idols, which should be adored no more.

Ver. 6. Youth. This enhances her fault. God is pleased to overlook it, in the captives (C. 50:1) and Gentiles.

Ver. 9. Earth. Giving him the rainbow for a sign. My covenant with the Church is equally irrevocable: she is founded on a rock. Mat. 16:18. C.—Christ will no more abandon her than he will drown the world. Some mountains shall be moved out of their place, but she shall not. W.

Ver. 11. Sapphires. Heb. “antimony,” a mineral shining like silver. 4 K. 9:30.

Ver. 12. Bulwarks. Heb. windows of crystal; (Ezec. 27:16. C.) Prot. “of agate.” H.—All this is allegorical, like the redemption of the new Jerusalem. Apoc. 21.

Ver. 13. Lord, Christ. Jer. 31:33. John 6:45.

Ver. 14. Thee. The Cutheans rendered the Jews suspected. 1 Esd. 4:2. and 6:1

Ver. 15. To thee, in the inheritance. This was verified in the Church. We have no account of many being converted before.

Ver. 16. Destroy. I can give peace or war. C.—Sept. “but I have created thee not for utter destruction.” H.

ISAIAH 55

Ver. 1. Waters, which in that country are very scarce.—Milk. Sept. “fat.” C.—In the western Churches, wine and honey were given to the new baptized. C. 7:15. S. Jer.—Christ invites all to come to him. John 4:14, and 7:37. The establishment of the Church is described under the figure of the return from Babylon. C.—Grace is offered to all. But only those are justified who thirst, and do their best. Mat. 5:6. W.

Ver. 3. David. I will be equally faithful to you. Ps. 88:29. Sept. “the holy things of David faithful.” Acts 13:34. The resurrection of Christ fully accomplished the promise made to David.

Ver. 4. Him. David, who continually proclaimed the divine mercies, (Ps. 17:1) or rather Christ; though Grotius alone would refer it to Jeremias. C.

Ver. 5. Not with approbation. H.—The Gentiles are converted.

Ver. 6. Near. He will shortly (C.) turn to the Gentiles. John 12:35. Acts 13:46. H.

Ver. 7. Way. This is a necessary preliminary to God's service. W.

Ver. 8. My ways. I am not vindictive, but require a sincere conversion. C.—We cannot serve both God and the world. We must therefore adhere to the former. W.

Ver. 11. Sent it. I will assuredly bring you from Babylon; and the rain shall sooner return upwards than I will break my promise.

Ver. 12. Peace, by strangers. C. 49:22.—Hands, for joy. C.—Ipsa sonant arbusta Deus Deus ille, Menacula. Virg. Ec. 5.

Ver. 13. Myrtle-tree. Instead of the wicked, the just shall be seen. Chal.—Away. The conversion and sanctity of the Gentiles shall be a trophy to the Lord. M.

ISAIAS 56

Ver. 1. Judgment, the right resolution to do God's will, which justice executes. C. 32. W.—My justice. Sept. "mercy." Christ is at hand. Prepare for your deliverance, by keeping the commandments.

Ver. 2. Sabbath. All the Jewish festivals, (C.) as well as those of the Christian Church, (H.) and the whole law. W.

Ver. 3. People. The Jews would not admit all nations to their communion. Deut. 33:1. A little before Christ's coming, they began to make more proselytes; (Mat. 23:15) and the sacred books being translated, came to the knowledge of the Gentiles, who were thus induced by degrees to embrace the true faith. The road to heaven was always open for those who kept the commandments, (v. 6. C.) though they might not receive circumcision. H.—Christ has removed the wall of separation, (Eph. 2:14. C.) and established one fold for all. Jo. 10. H.

Ver. 4. Eunuchs. It was ignominious to have no children among the Jews, as the propagation of the true religion depended much on their numbers. But now, since the Church is gathered from all nations, virginity is preferable to marriage, and those who keep the sabbath, or all the commandments, and choose this state freely, will receive greater glory than the other sons and daughters of God. Against this plain meaning, P. Martyr (de Coelib.) asserts that God prefers eunuchs only because before those who transgress the law. But he gives them a place better than his other sons, &c.! Prot. (Bib. 1603) understand that eunuchs shall be called after (or according to) God's people, and be of the same religion, which implies no preference at all. They add, therefore, yea, under Christ the dignity of the faithful shall be greater than the Jews were at that time; as if the comparison were between God's servants before and after Christ, and not between eunuchs and such as have children. How much better is it for us to follow the holy Fathers, who hence commend those who make a vow of perpetual chastity? They shall possess an excellent dignity among the angels. S. Bas. virg. —The rewards of continency are great, eximia. S. Cyr. Alex. hic. —“In the eternal mansion they are preferred before children.” S. Greg. past. iii. 29. &c. W.—Such spiritual eunuchs, as S. John the evangelist, are meant. “He hath chosen what the Lord would, that he should offer more than was commanded ... He who is an eunuch, and performs all that is prescribed, shall have ... the best place, so that he shall be a tower, and occupy the rank of a priest, and instead of children of the flesh, shall have many spiritual children.” S. Jer. H.—The law excluded eunuchs from the Church. Deut. 23:1. But under the gospel, they may enter heaven. Mat. 19 and 1 Cor. 7:32. &c. Daniel (1:3) and his companions were eunuchs, yet in high estimation; and virtuous eunuchs are commended. Wisd. 3:13. C.—Choose. Observing the commandments and counsels, like religious men. M.—Those who choose to do more than is commanded, will have a greater reward. W.

Ver. 7. Prayer. So the temple is justly styled. H.—This shall be open to all nations. After the captivity, the Jews condescended to let the Gentiles have a court, and they even suffered some princes to go into the court of the priests. 2 Mac. 3:33. Physcon wished to penetrate into the inner sanctuary, (3 Mac. Eccli. 1) which could not be granted.

Ver. 9. Beasts. Here a fresh discourse begins to C. 61. The Chaldees and Romans are invited to punish God's people for their sins, committed before the captivity. Zac. 14:2. C.—The prophet foresees the negligence of some pastors, and denounces their rigorous chastisement. W.

Ver. 10. Watchmen. Priests and prophets. C.—We know (H.) only Jeremias who continued firm. Lam. 2:14. In the days of Christ, the corruption was not diminished. C.

Ver. 11. Last. The scribes devour the houses of widows, making long prayers. Mat. 23:14. They are blind. Mat. 15:14. H.

ISAIAH 57

Ver. 1. The just. Christ, (C.) Josias, (Grot.) or any whose cause is just, yet finds no protection from such corrupt magistrates. H.—Evil, by the wicked, or to prevent his fall. 4 K. 12:20. People little consider what a loss the world sustains, when those die who might have averted the divine wrath. C.—They are usually taken away, that they may not witness such misfortunes, and are settled in eternal peace. W.

Ver. 2. Bed. The grave which affords rest to the virtuous, Josias, &c. C.

Ver. 3. Sorceress. Sept. “lawless” children. H.

Ver. 4. Tongue, in contempt. Saints, and particularly Jesus Christ, have been exposed to ridicule.

Ver. 5. Comfort. Heb. “heat,” abandoning yourselves to shameful excesses.—Torrents, to avoid being seen. Such sacrifices would have been incredible, if the Scriptures, and all history did not prove their existence. Deut. 12:31. Wisd. 12:3 and 4 K. 23:10.

Ver. 6. Them. The stones of the torrent, which were often the objects of adoration. Lev. 26:1. Gen. 28:18. The god, Helagabalus, was a rough boundary stone.

Ver. 7. Bed, like a shameless prostitute. The idols are generally represented in this light, as corrupting God’s people. C.

Ver. 8. Remembrance. Domestic gods. S. Jer. The Lares or Penates were usually placed in the court or porch. The Jews probably used Hecate or Trivia, for the same purpose. C. 65:11 and 66:17. To prevent this impiety, God had ordered some of the law to be written on the doors. Deut. 6:9. But this it seems was disregarded. 4 K. 23:8 and 1 Mac. 1:58. Ezech. 8:5.—Near me. Idols were placed in the very temple. Jer. 35:15 and 4 K. 21:4. Ezech. 8:3 and 16:17. C.—Hand. Prot. “where thou sawest it.” Thou didst even invite thy lovers by presents. Ezech. 16:32. H.

Ver. 9. King. Moloc, or (C.) any foreign king, of whose alliance God did not approve. Theod.—To please them, the true religion was adulterated.

Ver. 10. Rest. They were obstinate before the coming of Nabuchodonosor, and of the Romans.—Asked. Confiding in their own strength.

Ver. 11. Afraid, since thou hast despised my, my laws and offers.

Ver. 12. Justice. He speaks ironically. C.—Self-righteousness is vicious. H.

Ver. 13. Companies, or princes, in whom thou hast confided. Assyria and Egypt cannot save themselves. C.

Ver. 14. And I. Seeing there is no aid in man, God will save his people for his own goodness' sake. H.

Ver. 16. End. I will not always threaten or be angry. Gen. 6:3. C.—Spirit. Holy Ghost. S. Iræn. v. 12. S. Aug.—God spares the humble penitent, and grants what they desire with as much eagerness as a sailor does a fair wind. W.—He does not regard the indifferent. H.

Ver. 17. Heart. Dreadful state of the abandoned sinner! Deut. 32:21. Ps. 12:2 and 43:24.

Ver. 19. Lips. Whatever they could ask, so that they might sing canticles. All should be content. He alludes to the liberation of the captives, which was near, and to the redemption of mankind far off. C.

Ver. 20. Dirt. Lit. “treading,” conculcationem. H.—The works of the wicked are fruitless. They have no content. C.

Non enim gazæ neque consularis
Summovet lictor miseros tumultus,
Mentis et curas laqueata circum,
Tecta volantes. Hor. ii. ode 16.

—The obstinate sinner can receive no pardon. W.

ISAIAH 58

Ver. 1. Sins. During the captivity. v. 11. S. Thomas.—Some will not hear, and those must be rebuked with all patience, till they follow virtue. W.

Ver. 2. Approach, and contend with God, scrutinizing his conduct, (Prov. 25:27) and doing good for the sake of applause and self-interest.

Ver. 3. Will. This alone suggested their fasts, and they did not shew compassion. Ezec. 7:2. C.—Debtors, who are not able to pay. S. Jer. Deut. 24:12.

Ver. 4. Strife. The usual works were interrupted. The Church formerly forbade law-suits on fast-days.—Fist. Mat. 18:28.—Wickedly. Sept. “the humble.”

Ver. 5. Circle. They affected extreme debility. Mat. 6:16. C.—Ashes. These external marks of penance are not condemned, but the want of corresponding sentiments. H.—Prot. would hence infer that fasting from flesh is not requisite, or a religious worship. But S. Jerom shews the contrary, provided it be joined with the observance of other commandments, as the saints and Christ himself have shewn us.

Ver. 6. Bands. Contracts of usury, &c. C.

Ver. 7. Deal. Lit. “break.” H.—Thin cakes are still used in the East.—Flesh, or relation. Gen. 27:27.

Ver. 8. Light. Prosperity, (C.) or Saviour. H.—Mat. 4:2 and John 1:8. C.—Health. Aquila, “the scar of thy wound shall soon be covered.” S. Jer.—Up. He shall close the rear, like the angel in the cloud. Ex. 13:21 and 14:19. He will grant thee rest from bondage in the grave and in heaven. C.

Ver. 9. Finger, contemptuously, or threatening. S. Jer.—Some explain it of the ordaining sacred ministers, or taking another’s property.

Ver. 10. Soul, effectually, and with love relieving the distressed. C.

Ver. 11. Fail. Sept. Alex. adds, “and thy bones as a flower shall spring and grow fat, and shall inherit ages of ages.” S. Jerom says this is not in the best copies. H.

Ver. 12. Generation. As the Jews did not comply with the condition, the Church falls heir to these promises.

Ver. 13. Sabbath, doing no work, or refraining from the violation of festivals.—Delightful. We must not think the sabbath of the Lord a loss: (Amos 8:5) but rejoice in praising him. Ps. 45:11. C.—A word, or to apply to God’s word. Grot.—Pious reading on holidays is the duty of all who have an opportunity. H.

Ver. 14. Earth. Judea. C.—Sept. “upon the good things of the land.” H.

ISAIAS 59

Ver. 2. Iniquities. The history of Susanna shews that the captives were not all free from sin, which alone prevented their liberation. Lam. 3:44. C.—God is willing and able to save. He punishes for sin, to cause us to repent. v. 20. W.

Ver. 4. Justice. They arraign unjustly. None call upon the just God, but trust in idols.—Iniquity. They kill themselves, while they strive to injure others. Ps. 7:15. Mic. 2:1.

Ver. 5. Basilisk, or viper. C.—The young ones “burst through the viper’s sides.” Pliny x. 62.—So the works of the wicked are useless or destructive.

Ver. 8. Peace, or prosperity. They quarrel with all, and ruin themselves. Ps. 13.

Ver. 9. Therefore. The wicked Jews nevertheless confess that their sins prove their destruction.

Ver. 10. Dead. The Jews will not recognize Christ, notwithstanding the prophecies and miracles.

Ver. 11. Judgment, that God would avenge us, (v. 9) and regard our fasts. C. 58:3.

Ver. 14. In. Where truth is disregarded, there can be no justice.

Ver. 16. Himself, to arrest his arm, stretched out to chastise his son; or to second him. There is nothing in man to stop God’s vengeance. He therefore pardons out of his own goodness. C. 59:2 and 63:4. C.—He became man to redeem us, as no pure mortal could do it. W.

Ver. 17. Justice. None can blame his conduct.

Ver. 19. On. Heb. “is standard-bearer.” Aq. S. Jer.—Cyrus, the figurative redeemer, proceeds rapidly.

Ver. 20. To Sion. Sept. “from Sion, and will turn away iniquity from Jacob. (21) And this,” &c. H.—S. Paul hence proves that the Jews will at last be converted. Rom. 11:26. The return of the captives prefigured this event. C.

Ver. 21. Covenant. Note here a clear promise of perpetual orthodoxy to the Church of Christ. Ch.—She hath still the spirit of truth. W. Mat. 28:20.—None will apply this to the synagogue, which is visibly in the dark, and abandoned. C.

ISAIAS 60

Ver. 1. O Jerusalem, is not in Heb. or S. Jer. but in the Sept. Some few things may refer to the terrestrial Jerusalem, though the prophet speaks chiefly of the celestial and of the Church.—Lord, very great. Christ came to save us. C.—God prevents by his grace, but man must co-operate to be justified. W.

Ver. 2. People. Babylon shall suffer, while thou art relieved. C.—The Gentiles continue in darkness till they embrace the faith. v. 3. H.—Only those who are in the Church receive the light of truth. W.

Ver. 3. Rising. The three wise men were the first.

Ver. 4. Rise up. S. Jer. “suck,” as the Heb. may imply. C.—Sept. “shall be carried on the shoulders.” H.—This may refer to the captives and to the Church.

Ver. 5. Wonder. Heb. and Sept. in S. Jerom, “fear.” This sensation is often mixed with joy. Mat. 28:8.—Thee. No such nations joined the Jews, as they did the Church.

Ver. 6. Epha. Abraham’s grandson, who dwelt near his father, Madian, in Arabia, which was famous for camels. C.—Saba. India mittit ebur, molles sua thura Sabæi? Geor. i.—The Arabians embraced the gospel, but never brought their treasures to Jerusalem. C.—The three kings came on swift beasts to adore Christ, and fulfilled his prophecy. Mat. 2. W.

Ver. 7. Cedar and Nabaioth sprung from Ismael, and dwelt in desert Arabia, under tents, feeding flocks. S. Jer. Ezech. xxvii. 21.—They also were converted to Christ.

Ver. 8. Clouds. They are thy children, accompanied by strangers.

Ver. 9. Afar. All nations shall receive the gospel. Many made presents to the temple, after the return of the Jews. C.—The islands, Great Britain, &c. embrace the faith. Tert. Orig. Ven. Bede, S. Chrys. &c. W.

Ver. 10. To thee. The Persians monarchs (C.) were mostly favourable to the Jews. H.—The Gentiles help to form the Church, which rejects no one. v. 11.

Ver. 12. Desolation. Though the Machabees conquered several nations, this can only be verified in the Church of Christ, to which God has subjected all; so that out of his faith none can be saved. Heb. 2:8.

Ver. 13. Glory; cedar, which was chiefly used in building the temple. 1 Esd. 3:7. C.—This must be explained of the saints, who founded the Church, &c. S. Jer.—Emperors became Christians, with the most potent nations. W.

Ver. 14. Feet. Prot. “shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet.” This posture is not then essentially idolatrous. H.—Jerusalem shall be rebuilt by those who destroyed it. C. 49:17. It is not easy to prove this of the earthly city: but the pagans, who persecuted the Church, have embraced her communion, and begged to receive baptism.

Ver. 16. Kings. Thou shalt be treated like royal babes. C. 49:23. C.—Sept. “and thou shalt eat the riches of kings.” H.

Ver. 17. Visitation. Sept. “give thy chiefs in peace, and thy bishops in justice.” S. Clement (ad Cor.) reads, “I will appoint their bishops in justice, and their deacons in faith.” C.—The Scripture thus specifies the name and duties of the pastors of the Church S. Jer.

Ver. 18. Gates. Jerusalem was not less corrupt after the captivity than before, if we except idolatry. C.—Heaven alone enjoys a perfect peace and freedom from sin, (S. Cyr. &c.) though the Church is always holy. H.

Ver. 19. Thou shalt, &c. In this latter part of the chapter, the prophet passes from the illustrious promises made to the Church militant on earth, to the glory of the Church triumphant in heaven. Ch.—Glory. S. John seems to have copied this. Apoc. 18. &c.

Ver. 22. The least of the apostles shall bring many converts, (C.) or shall be spiritual (H.) governor of a great city, (Mic. 5:2) in the Church militant. C.—A small shoot, or family, in the Church, shall produce many others. M.

Ver. 1. Lord. Heb. adds, “God.” Adonai seems to have been inserted to prevent the pronunciation of Jehovah, (Kennicott) which alone occurs in the Sept. Arab. and in S. Luke, 4:18. H.—Thus Elohim may have been substituted for Jehovah, Gen. 22:8 as v. 14, “Abraham called the name of that place Jehovah jireh, because he had said that day on the mount: Jehovah will provide” a victim, even Jesus Christ in the same place. Perhaps no part of the Bible is “so absurdly translated” as this, (Ken.) by Protestants. H.—S. Luke follows the Sept. in his quotation, only instead of to preach a, &c. he has an explanation, to set at liberty them that are bruised. Isaias may here speak of himself, (Chal.) yet only as a figure of Christ. The Jews admit that the Messiah is meant. Christ had received the Holy Spirit at the Jordan. John 1:32. He performed these works, (Lu. 7:22) particularly addressing his discourse to the meek and poor. Soph. 3:12. Zac. 11:7 and 1 Cor. 1:26. C.—He was not anointed with oil, like Aaron, but with the Holy Ghost; so that of his fullness others must receive. Acts 10:39. &c. W.

Ver. 2. Year of Jubilee, (Jer. 25:11) when the Jews should be delivered, as a figure of Christ’s redemption.—Vengeance, when the Chaldees, &c. should perish, (C.) and all obstinate sinners, at the day of judgment. H.

Ver. 3. Glorify. The rulers shall act with justice. C. 60:17, 21.

Ver. 4. Ruins, as the Jews did. C. 58:12. The apostles preached to the Gentiles, who had been long neglected.

Ver. 5. Vines. Bishops were soon chosen from among the Gentiles. The Machabees subdued the neighbouring nations. 1 Mac. 15:28.

Ver. 6. Priests. They were greatly honoured, (Ex. 19:6) so that the sons of David had the appellation. The Jews had still to labour as before. Christians become heirs to these promises, and are styled a royal priesthood. 1 Pet. 2:9. Apoc. 1:6. They have received the Scriptures from the Jews, and employ human sciences for the advancement of religion. The wisest pagans yield to the force of truth.

Ver. 7. Part: God, or the land. Converts shall bless God for having withdrawn them from the crowd of infidels, and they will rejoice in suffering for his sake, (C.) preferring their lot before that of unbelievers. Before this change the apostles grieved. W.

Ver. 8. Holocaust. The pagans saw such things were improper victims. Eus. præp. iv. 14.—Sept. “hate unjust plunder.” H.—Therefore will I subject the strangers to you. v. 5.—Truth. I will grant a sure reward.—Covenant. These of Nehemias and the Machabees were soon forgotten:

but Christ's covenant shall abide for ever.

Ver. 9. Blessed. The Jews are visibly the reverse. The Church flourishes in spite of domestic and foreign enemies.

Ver. 10. Jewels. Apoc. 21:2. Jerusalem, or rather the Church, praises God.

Ver. 11. Nations, whose conversion is implicitly foretold. All behold the justice which God has treated both his people and their oppressors. C.

ISAIAS 62

Ver. 1. Rest, as long as God grants me life, or till I behold the Saviour; or Cyrus, the figure of Christ. C.—True preachers will not be silent on account of any threats, but will labour for the Church. 2 Tim. 2. W.

Ver. 2. One. No profane historian mentions what Cyrus did for the Jews; but all the world knows how much Christ has favoured his Church. C.—Name. Thou shalt be no longer the rebellious Jerusalem, but the spouse and chosen people, the Church of Christ. S. Ignat. ad Magnes. S. Jer.

Ver. 3. Hand. Chal. “before.” Heb. “by the protection.”

Ver. 4. Forsaken. Yet the synagogue was again rejected, at the death of Christ. The promises naturally relate to his Church. C.—Inhabited. Prot. retain the Heb. words Chephtsi-bah, “my delight in her,” and Beulah, (marg.) “married.” H.

Ver. 5. Dwell. Heb. “marry.” They shall be attached to their country.—Thee. He shall love thee as a bridegroom does one whom he has lately married. Christ never abandons his virgin spouse. C.—Isaias speaks of some state of the Jews which has not yet taken place. Houbigant.

Ver. 6. Watchmen; priests and prophets, (Mat. 2:1. Ps. 133:2. C.) or angels. S. Jer. S. Bern.—The synagogue has long been destitute of guides, but the Catholic Church has an uninterrupted succession of watchful pastors.—Mindful whose duty it is to remind him of his promises, and to recite the Church office. C.—Heb. mazcirim, monitors. 2 K. 8:16. H.—In these faithful watchman the Church is always visible. W.

Ver. 8. Hand; inviolably. Deut. 32:40. The Persians deemed this oath most sacred. C.—Darius just expiring, said to Polycrates, “By thee I give this right hand to Alexander,” (Plut.) that he may revenge my death.—Wine. The Church cannot be deprived of her faith or of her God.

Ver. 10. People, that they may return to Judea, and be converted to Christ. C.

Ver. 11. Work the redemption of mankind. H.—Though Cyrus was a figure of Christ, he was as much beneath him as earth is below heaven. Zac. 9:9. C.

ISAIAH 63

Ver. 1. Edom. Edom and Bosra (a strong city of Edom) are here taken in a mystical sense for the enemies of Christ and his Church. Ch.—S. Jerom with reason finds it difficult to explain it of Christ, as it regards the Machabees. Houbigant.—The first six verses are applied to our Saviour’s ascension, which excites the admiration of angels. Ps. 23:7. Judas, the Machabee, the glorious figure of Christ, is introduced speaking in this and the following chapter. He conquered Idumea, (1 Mac. 5:3 and 2 Mac. 10:10) and fought to save the people. 1 Mac. 9:21. C.—The highest order of angels asks this question, admiring the beauty of Christ, though imbrued in blood after his victory. S. Dionys. Hierar. vii. W.

Ver. 3. Press. Christ suffered, (S. Cyr.) and punished his enemies, Apocalypse 14:19. Judas received God’s sword from Jeremias, (2 Mac. 15:15) and liberated his people.

Ver. 5. Me. I depended on the goodness of my cause, and on God’s aid. C. 59:15. C.

Ver. 6. Drunk with the wine of my fury. Ps. 74:9. Ezec. 23:31. H.

Ver. 7. I, Isaias; or rather the hero mentions what induced him to rise up. 1 Mac. 16:10. C.—The Jews confess God’s mercies. S. Jer.

Ver. 8. Deny, or prove degenerate. C.—God approves the conduct of the Machabees. H.

Ver. 9. Presence, in high authority. Ex. 33:20. C.—The angel guardian of the Church. Particular guardians also see God’s face. Mat. 18. W.

Ver. 10. One; Moses. Num. 14:29 and 20:3, 12.

Ver. 11. Flock. Ps. 76:21.—One. Moses inspired by God. C.

Ver. 13. Not, the road was so plain. Wisd. 19:7. H.

Ver. 15. Back. This is spoken by the prophet in the person of the Jews, at the time when for their sins they were given up to their enemies. Ch.—Judas uses the same language at Maspha. 1 Mac. 3:50. C.

Ver. 16. Abraham, &c. That is, Abraham will not now acknowledge us for his children, by reason of our degeneracy; but thou, O Lord, art our true father and our redeemer, and no other can be called our parent in comparison with thee. Ch.—Abraham is not able to save us. C.—The patriarchs may justly disregard us, as degenerate children; yet we hope in God's mercies. Thus S. Jerom, &c. explain the passage, which does not favour the errors of Vigilantius and of Luther, who maintain that the saints departed do not know what passes in this world. S. Aug. (Cura xv.) shews the contrary, from the example of Lazarus, Luke 16. They know each other, though they had not lived together, (S. Greg. Dial. iv. 33.) and beheld in the light of God what regards their clients. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xxii. 29. We cannot decide how the martyrs do help those whom it is certain they assist. S. Aug. cura xvi. c. Faust. xx. 21. S. Jer. c. Vigil. S. Greg. 3 ep. 30. and 7 ep. 126. &c. W.

Ver. 17. Hardened, &c. The meaning is, that God, in punishment of their great and manifold crimes, and their long abuse of his mercy and grace, had withdrawn his graces from them, and so given them up to error and hardness of heart. Ch.—They had abused his patience, to sin the more. Theodoret—The Jews are accustomed to attribute all to God, though they agree with us in reality God might prevent any sin. C.—But he chooses to leave man to the free exercise of his liberty. He hardens (H.) “not by infusing malice, but by not shewing mercy; and those to whom he shews it not, are undeserving.” S. Aug. ep. ad Sixt. cxciv. 14.—God is never the author of error. Man takes occasion from his indulgence to become obdurate. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 18. Nothing; holding them in the greatest contempt. Epiphanes though he should make them easily change their religion. His persecution lasted only three years and a half.—Sanctuary. 1 Mac. 1:23. 49. 57 and 3:45.

Ver. 19. Name. We seem to have no distinction, temple, &c. C.—Prot. “We are thine. Thou never bearest rule over them. They were,” &c. H.

ISAIAH 64

Ver. 1. Presence, as at Sinai. Ex. 19:16. Judg. 5:4. Judas continues to pray. C.—The faithful sigh for Christ's coming. H.—All good people desired it most fervently. W.

Ver. 2. They. Sept. "As wax melts before the fire, so also fire will burn the adversaries, and thy," &c. H.—Burn. Sparks of fire seem to proceed from it.

Ver. 3. Bear. Ex. 20:18. Heb. "expect." Judas appeared victorious, when the nation was prostrate.

Ver. 4. Thee. Never was deliverance more unexpected or miraculous. S. Paul quotes this passage, to shew the wisdom manifested in the incarnation. 1 Cor. 2:9. It is commonly applied to the glory of heaven.

Ver. 5. Thee. The little band of Judas was sincerely attached to the Lord. 2 Mac. 1:3.—Sinned. This excited thy anger. Yet thou wilt shew mercy. Sin is often put for punishment. C.—Vau means also, "for, and, yet." Prot. "for we have sinned." But we follow S. Jer. and the Vulg. W.

Ver. 6. Unclean: leper. Grot. Lev. 13:45.—Justices. That is, the works by which we pretended to make ourselves just. This is spoken particularly of the sacrifices, sacraments, and ceremonies of the Jews, after the death of Christ, and the promulgation of the new law. Ch.—The justice which is under the law is stated uncleanness, when compared with evangelical purity. Phil. 3:8.—"If any one after the gospel ... would observe the ceremonies of the law, let him hear the people confessing that all that justice is compared to a most filthy rag." S. Jer.—The good works which are done by grace, and not by man alone, cannot be said to be of this description. They constitute the internal glory of man, and God will one day crown these his gifts. Of ourselves indeed we can do nothing, and the works of the Mosaic law will not avail, as S. Paul inculcates; but those works, point out the saint, which are preformed by charity with faith in Christ. This justice is not imputed only, but real; and shews where true faith exists, according to S. James. Thus the apostles explain each other. H.—Woman. Sept. "of one sitting down;" like Rachel. Gen. 31:35. Sym. "lying-in." Aq. "of proofs." Grot. "like a plaster on a sore, which is thrown away." Such were Alcimus, &c. C.—To practise (H.) the Jewish rites would now be sinful. M.

Ver. 7. Of thee; to remove thy indignation, like Moses, Jeremias, (7:15.) &c. See Ezech. 13:5.

Ver. 10. Desolate, under Antiochus Epiphanes. 1 Mac. 1:31 and 4:38. C.

ISAIAH 65

Ver. 1. Me. God answers the preceding prayer, and announces the rejection of the synagogue, alluding to the armies which prevailed in the days of the Machabees.—Not. S. Paul explains this of the conversion of the Gentiles. Rom. 10:20. C.—It cannot regard the Jews, who are spoken of in the next verse. W.

Ver. 3. Gardens, to the impure Venus and Adonis.—Bricks, to the Manes. C.—

Tegula porrectis satis est velata coronis
Et sparsæ fruges parvaque mica salis. Ovid, Fast. x.

Ver. 4. Idols: to have dreams, (Strabo xvi.) and commit impurities.—Broth of swine's flesh, which was prohibited. Lev. 11:7.

Ver. 5. Unclean. Thus acted the hypocritical Pharisees.—Smoke. A just punishment of those who had sought the smoke of human applause.

Ver. 6. Bosom: good measure. Lu. 6:38. Rewards and punishments will be eternal.

Ver. 7. Hills. Some offered sacrifices to God, others to idols; both unlawfully. C.

Ver. 8. Whole. The good grain is preserved amid the general corruption. H.—A few of the Jews were chosen to believe in Christ.

Ver. 9. Mountains of Judea, (Deut. 3:25) which the captives shall recover, as a figure of those who shall embrace the Christian faith.

Ver. 10. Plains. Heb. Sharon, in the land of Basan.—Achor, near Jericho, called after Achan, (C.) who perhaps was more correctly styled Achor. Jos. 7:26. Osee 2:15. H.

Ver. 11. Fortune. Heb. “Gad,” the sun. Gen. 30:11.—Upon it. Sym. “without me.” Sept. “to fortune.” Heb. “to Meni,” the moon, or Queen of heaven. Jer. 7:18 and 44:17. C.

Ver. 12. Chosen. Free-will is clearly expressed, as rewards are, v. 13.

W.

Ver. 13. Servants; Christians, (C.) particularly the elect. H.—When the Romans approached Jerusalem, the Christians retired to Pella, and had plenty. Houbigant.

Ver. 15. Execration. They can wish to be preserved from nothing worse.—Name. The faithful shall be no longer called Jews. C.—They shall be hated, while the name of Christian shall point out God's servants. W.

Ver. 16. Amen, or “of truth.” False gods shall be neglected. They shall not swear by them, as formerly. Soph. 1:5.—Christ usually adopted the asseveration, Amen, Amen, to enforce his truths. H.

Ver. 17. New earth, in eternity, (Clarius) or here indeed, (2 Pet. 3:3. &c. Houbigant) having purified the former by the general conflagration, which many assert will take place at the end of 6,000 years. S. Jer. S. Aug. &c. At the return of the captives, the country flourished again under the Machabees; (v. 18. Grot.) or rather the gospel changes the face of the earth. C. 66:22. C. Forerius.—After the resurrection the qualities, and not the substance, of the world, will be changed. W.

Ver. 20. Fill up. To die soon was deemed a misfortune. Ps. 54:24. Ex. 20:12. Virtue is the measure of the Christian's life, and God will reward those who labour even late. Mat. 20:13.—Accursed. This age will not be spared. Both just and wicked shall be immortal in eternity. Theod.

Ver. 22. A tree. Sept. “of the tree of life.” Jer. 18:8. C.—Continuance. Heb. “My elect shall long enjoy the works,” &c. H.—They shall not build for others to enjoy.

Ver. 23. In. Heb. “for trouble.” Chal. “death.” Sept. “malediction.” The children shall not be cut off; and baptism shall secure their salvation.

Ver. 25. Straw. People of the most perverse tempers shall become mild by the influence of the gospel, and shall dwell together in perfect concord. C.—Food, according to the sentence. Gen. 3:14. M.—The devil's power is abridged. C. 11:6. C.—The proudest Gentiles are converted, and adopt the mild manners of Christians, in fasting and mortification. W.

Ver. 1. House. This is a prophecy that the temple should be cast off. Ch.—Isaias alludes to the return of the captives, as to a figure of the Church. They had flattered themselves with the idea of building a magnificent temple. God regards it not, as long as they follow their own wills and cherish pride. C.—He is pleased with the piety of his servants, which may be exhibited any where, though the temple is the most proper place. See Acts 7 and 14. After the gospel, the sacrifices of the law became unlawful. W.

Ver. 3. He. Sept. “the wicked who.” H.—Ox. This is a prophecy, that the sacrifices which were offered in the old law, should be abolished in the new; and that he offering of them should be a crime. Ch.—Without the proper dispositions, sacrifice only displeases God. C.—Brain, or slay. H.—Incense. To offer it in the way of a sacrifice; (Ch.) or to remind God of his people. The expression is popular, but energetic. Lev. 2:2, 9. and 6:15.—Ways, to please themselves, and to bind me. But I will not have a divided heart. C. 1:11 and 58:3. C.

Ver. 4. Mockeries. I will turn their mockeries upon themselves; and will cause them to be mocked by their enemies. Ch.

Ver. 5. Brethren, the Idumeans, &c. or the Jews, who would not believe in Christ.

Ver. 6. Lord, who is about to quit the temple, and to abandon the Jews to their internal dissensions, and to the arms of the Romans. Many prodigies announced this judgment. C.—One Jesus cried for seven years and five months, “Woe to the temple,” &c. At last he cried, “Woe to myself;” when he was shot dead. Jos. Bel. vii. 12. Tacit. Hist. v.—Angels were heard crying in the temple, “Let us go hence.” Jos.—There was contradiction in the city. Ps. 54. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 7. Before, &c. This relates to the conversion of the Gentiles, who were born as it were all on a sudden to the Church of God. Ch.—Sion furnished the first preachers of the Gospel. H.

Ver. 8. Day. Shall a whole nation be born at once? Twelve fishermen effect the most surprising change in the manners of the world.

Ver. 9. God. His grace converts the nations. C.

Ver. 10. For her. Ye shall be comforted, (H.) when the captives return, and the gospel is propagated.

Ver. 12. You. S. Paul fed the weak with milk. 1 Cor. 3:2. Heb. 5:12 and 1 Pet. 2:2.

Ver. 14. Herb, in baptism and the resurrection.—Enemies, the Chaldees, infidel Jews, and all the reprobate. v. 15. How many miracles were wrought by Christian preachers! Persecutors have come to an untimely end. C.—Before judgment, the world shall be consumed. W.

Ver. 16. Many. Few are chosen. H.—All the wicked shall perish eternally. M.

Ver. 17. Within the court, or gardens, where they purified themselves, foolishly supposing that this would remove their crimes, as the pagans did. S. Jer. Tert. Bapt. v.—Instead of gate, S. Jerom wrote unam, “one,” moon or Hecate, which is obviously derived from Heb. Achat. C. 57:8 and 65:11. Chal. Syr. &c. “gardens, one after another with those who eat,” &c.—Mouse, or “field-rat,” (Bochart) all declared unclean; (Lev. 11:7. 29. C.) or, “the dor-mouse,” (S. Jer.) which was looked upon as a delicacy by the Romans. Varro iii. 15. Pliny xxxvi. 1.

Ver. 18. Gather them, thoughts, &c. All is personified in poetry. The Gentiles shall witness my judgments. C.

Ver. 19. Sign; the cross, which Christ left to enlighten us, (Ezec. 9. S. Jer. W.) or the gospel, with the power of working miracles. Some Jews shall be saved, and shall preach to others, as God’s servants.—Sea. Heb. “Tharsis, to Phul in Thebais, Lud, (Ethiopians. Bochart) who were expert archers.” Sept. “Mosoch.”—Italy. Heb. “Thubal;” denoting Italy, Spain, Iberia, &c.—Greece. Heb. “Javan;” who peopled Ionia and the Archipelago. Islands, near Asia, (C.) and all distant places. Parkhurst, p. 4. H.—Men of all nations shall be converted, and brought by angels to the Church. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 20. Brethren, as the converts may justly be styled. C.—Coaches, (carrucis.) Heb. circaroth, (H.) “dromedaries,” (Bochart) “with songs of praise.” Chal. &c. The precise import is unknown. Truth shall shew its sweet force.—Offering; the first-fruits, brought by all with great solemnity. Deut. 26:4 and 2 Thes. 2:12. C.

Ver. 21. Of them, Gentiles; (v. 19) some of whom alone will be properly priests, though all enjoy the title in a figurative sense. 1 Pet. 2:9. The Jews strive in vain to elude this text. C.—Under the law, one family alone enjoyed this honour: but Christ chooses the most deserving pastors. W.

Ver. 22. Name. The faith and morals of Christianity shall subsist for ever, like the gospel, which is termed the new heavens. C. 65:17. Mat. 16:18.

Ver. 23. Sabbath. Grotius explains this of the Gentiles, who should come to Jerusalem. But this was never realized before the propagation of the gospel. The Jews came thrice a-year. Christians shall attend the sacred mysteries every week. Ex. 13:14. Mal. 1:11.

Ver. 24. Men; rebellious Jews and persecutors, who perish miserably. —Flesh. Josephus (Bel. vi. 16.) describes the horrors of the last siege of Jerusalem. The prophet may allude to the fires kept up in the vale of Hinnon; (C. 30:33) and our Saviour applies this text to the damned. Mark 9:43. All shall condemn them. C.

*Accedat lacrymis odium, dignusque puteris
Ut mala cum tuleris plurima, plura feras.* Ovid in Ibin.

JEREMIAS

THE PROPHECY OF JEREMIAS

INTRODUCTION

Jeremias was a priest, a native of Anathoth, a priestly city, in the tribe of Benjamin, and was sanctified from his mother's womb to be a prophet of God; which office he began to execute when he was yet a child in age. He was in his whole life, according to the signification of his name, great before the Lord, and a special figure of Jesus Christ, in the persecutions he underwent for discharging his duty, in his charity for his persecutors, and in the violent death he suffered at their hands; it being an ancient tradition of the Hebrews, that he was stoned to death by the remnant of the Jews who had retired into Egypt, (Ch.) at Taphnes. His style is plaintive, (W.) like that of Simonides, (C.) and not so noble as that of Isaias and Osee. S. Jer.—He was the prophet of the Gentiles, as well as of the Jews, predicting many things which befell both, and particularly the liberation of the latter, A. 3485, after the seventy years' captivity, dating from A. 3415, (C.) or 3398, the 4th of Joakim. Usher C. 25. H.—He began to prophesy when he was very young, A. 3375, in the 13th year of Josias, (C.) before that prince had brought his reformation to any great perfection. H.

JEREMIAS 1

Ver. 1. Helcias, the high priest who discovered the book of the law, (Clem. Strom. i. &c.) though this be uncertain.—Anathoth, a village to the north of Jerusalem, to which many priests had retired, though it did not belong to them. C.

Ver. 3. Joakim. His immediate predecessor and successor, both called Jechonias, (H.) are passed over, as their reign was short, (C.) only lasting three months each. H.—Fifth. Jerusalem was taken on the 9th of the preceding month. But the temple was not burnt, nor the captives sent off till the fifth month, or the 10th of the civil year. C. 39:8 and 52:13 and 4 K. 25:2. C.—Jeremias also prophesied in Egypt. C. 44. W.—But this title alludes to his principal predictions. M.

Ver. 5. Knew, with affection, and designed thee for this office for eternity. Many think (C.) that Jeremias was purified from original sin before his birth. S. Aug.—He had this privilege, and was also a priest, prophet, virgin, and martyr. W.—Yet to sanctify, often means only to set aside. Ex. 13:2. Eccli. 49:9.—Nations, whose overthrow he points out. C. 25:27. 32. &c. C.

Ver. 6. Ah. Heb. ahah. Sept. “thou Being.” Prot. “Then said I: Ah, Lord God.” H.—He does not imitate a child. He might be above 30 years old, though some say (C.) only 14, (T.) or less; yet he finds himself devoid of eloquence, like Moses. Ex. 14:10. C.

Ver. 9. Mouth; perhaps H. with a coal, by means of an angel, (Is. 6:5) in a sort of dream. He found himself changed into a new man.

Ver. 10. Root up, to announce the fall and restoration of many nations. Ezec. 4:2. C.—Jeremias spoke of the Gentiles, as well as of the Jews. W.

Ver. 11. Watching. Heb. “of an almond.” Sept. “nut-tree.” H.—The almond-tree flourishes in January, and bears fruit in March. Theod. Pliny xvi. 25.—Thus God will speedily send his scourge from Babylon, to punish his people. C.—The sense is the same. M.—God’s law is outwardly bitter, but the kernel is sweet. Theod. W.

Ver. 13. North, whence the wind blows, to make the fire burn more intensely. Assyria lay to the north, and Babylon to the east of Judea; but the troops always penetrated the northern frontier, as they could not pass through the Desert Arabia. The caldron represented Jerusalem. Ezec. 11:3 and 24:3.

Ver. 14–15. North. The tributary kings were forced to attend. Judith 2:7 and 3 K. 20:1.—About. The princes thus took Sedecias, and sent him to Reblatha. C. 39:3. C.

Ver. 17. Loins. Make haste, and take courage. Job 38:3. M.

Ver. 19. Prevail. God does not promise peace, but victory. W.

JEREMIAS 2

Ver. 2. Espousals. He speaks ironically. Theod.—Yet the Israelites at first shewed greater proofs of love than they did afterwards. It is true they often prevaricated, in the wilderness. Ex. 32:1. Amos 5:25. Ps. 77. &c. C.—The Lord declares his gratuitous love, and then upbraids his people. H.—He had caused them to multiply in Egypt, and gratuitously made choice of them. W.

Ver. 3. Increase; most desirable. Osee 9:10. God punished those who attempted to injure his people: yet they abandoned his service.

Ver. 5. Vanity; idols, whom he will not mention, to spare their shame. C.

Ver. 7. Carmel. That is, a fruitful, plentiful land. Ch. W.—All Palestine is thus designated. M.

Ver. 8. Priests were silent, or abandoned themselves.—Pastors; “princes.” Chal. Manasses, Amon, &c.—In Baal, promoting his worship. H.—The land was full of false prophets, and none stood up for the Lord.

Ver. 9. Children; the Israelites, under Moses, and their posterity transgressed.

Ver. 10. Cethim; Macedon. It here denotes the western nations, as Cedar does those of the east.

Ver. 11. Glory; the true God and his ark. Ps. 3:4 and 1 K. 4:21.

Ver. 12. Gates; angels, or the temple.

Ver. 13. Water. The idols and nations, to which they have had recourse, injure them. C.—The Jews did just the reverse to what God commanded. W.

Ver. 14. Slave. From such, labour and tribute were required. Mat.

Ver. 15. Lions; kings of Assyria, &c. The decree for the devastation of Juda had already passed, though it was not put in execution.

Ver. 16. Taphnes, 16 miles from Pelusium, in Egypt. The nation proved only detrimental to the Jews, by engaging them in their abominations, instead of affording relief.

Ver. 18. Troubled. Heb. shichor, or Nile water, (Jos. 13:3) which was thought as good as wine, and grew better for keeping. Strabo xvii.—Hence the people adored it. Vitruv. viii.—God often reproached the Jews for distrusting in his protection, and seeking aid from the Egyptians, who deceived them. We know not that Josias did so. C.—He even opposed them, and lost his life in defending the country. 4 K. 23:29. H.—He was probably obliged to pay tribute to the Assyrians, whom Achaz had called in. 2 Par. 28:23. These alliances the Lord condemned.

Ver. 20. Thou. Sept. Yet Heb. and Chal. have, “I have permissively broken,” or foretold this infidelity.

Ver. 21. Chosen. Heb. Sorek. Judg. 16:4. Is. 5:2 and 16:8. C.—God created all things good, planted his Church in justice, and no evil proceeds from Him. W.

Ver. 22. Borith. An herb used to clean clothes, and take out spots and dirt, (Ch.) like kali, soda, (C.) or soap. Langius.—Prot. “and take thee much soap.” H.

Ver. 23. Valley of Hinnom, under the very walls of Jerusalem. C.—Runner. Heb. “dromedary,” which takes its name from its swiftness. H.—The female camel continues all day with the male, and cannot be approached. Aristot. Pliny x. 63.—Juda is represented as no less libidinous. C.

Ver. 24. Away. The female may easily be found by the poisonous hippo-manes. Georg. iii.—Thus Jerusalem is an impudent prostitute. H.

Ver. 25. Foot, and the parts which modesty covers. My exhortations are slighted. C.—Despair opens the door to every sort of impurity. Eph. 4:19. H.

Ver. 26. Taken. Juda affected still to be very pious. v. 23.

Ver. 28. Cities. All were abandoned. Ezech. 16:24. Osee 10:1.

Ver. 30. Prophets; Zacharias, (2 Par. 24:21.) Isaias, &c. Mat. 23:34. C.

—Punishment is designed by God to cause people to repent. W.

Ver. 31. See, or hear. The sword seems to be animated. C.—Lateward. Heb. “darksome land.” Have I not heaped blessings on my people?—Revolted. Prot. “Lords.” H.

Ver. 33. Thou who. Heb. “Therefore have I.” C.—Prot. “hast thou also taught the wicked ones thy ways.” H.—Thou hast opened a school of vice.

Ver. 34. Innocent children, immolated to Moloc, or people murdered, whose blood thou hast not concealed. 4 K. 21:16.

Ver. 37. Head, like the violated Tamar. 2 K. 13:19. The king of Egypt was routed, when coming to assist Sedecias. C. 37:3. 10. C.

JEREMIAS 3

Ver. 1. It. Heb. “a saying.” Sept. “If,” &c. Deut. 24:1. H.—Woman. Heb. “land.”—Lovers. Sept. “shepherds,” C. seeking aid from idols and foreigners.

Ver. 2. High. Lit. “straight forward.” H.—On the hills, idolatry and immorality prevailed.—Ways, where harlots used to sit. Gen. 38:14. Prov. 7:9 and 23:27.—Robber; “Arab,” (Chal. &c.) or “crow.” (Sept.) C.—No sin is so great as to be irremissible to the true penitent. W.

Ver. 3. Rain; about November. Deut. 11:14. This drought happened under Josias, (C. 5:24) and was different from that specified, C. 8:13 and 14:1.

Ver. 4. Guide. Husband. Prov. 2:16 and Joel 1:8.

Ver. 5. Wilt. Heb. “will he,” &c. The faithless people will not use this language, but do all the evil possible.

Ver. 6. Days, before the 18th year. God now pronounces sentence (C.) on all. H.—Rebellious, a faithless wife. The kingdom of Israel gave way to idolatry first. But the people were less favoured than Juda, which had many prophets and good kings, the temple, &c. Moreover, the misfortunes of Israel did not open the eyes of their brethren. C.—Both the ten tribes, and the two tribes (W.) which adhered to the line of David, prevaricated. H.

Ver. 10. Falsehood. Their reform was only apparent, under Joas, &c.

C.

Ver. 11. Soul, and appeared comparatively innocent. v. 6. Ezech. 16:51. S. Jer.—Yet neither of them was excusable. W.

Ver. 12. North. Samaria, or rather Assyria, where the people were captives.—Face, in anger.

Ver. 13. Ways, dividing thy love, and adoring idols with me.

Ver. 14. Kindred. Only few Israelites returned under Cyrus. The rest came by degrees, though it was more fully accomplished by the conversion of the Gentiles.

Ver. 15. Pastors. Zorobabel, &c. but more particularly Christ and his apostles.

Ver. 16. Ark. It was no longer at Jerusalem. The law and its figures cease.

Ver. 17. All. Many might embrace the Jewish religion. But the predictions of the prophets on this head, were not verified, till the gospel was preached. C.—Then many embraced the faith: several captives also returned to God. W.

Ver. 18. North. Sept. add, “and from all places” where the Jews were in captivity. H.—Many thus returned to their own country. v. 14. C.—Israel had been led into captivity sooner, but all were released at once. Theodor. W.

Ver. 19. Gentiles, which they all covet, or to which they are invited in the Church. C.—Me. On these conditions thou shalt be restored. H.

Ver. 21. God. Hence proceed these miseries and lamentations.

Ver. 23. Liars, unfruitful; and the idols have left us empty. C.—They were placed on the hills. Houbigant.

Ver. 24. Confusion. Thus Baal was styled Boseth, contemptuously. Jer. 11:13.

Ver. 25. Shame. We are justly punished with exile, (C.) and death. M.

JEREMIAS 4

Ver. 1. Blocks; idols, (C.) and other occasions of sin. H.

Ver. 2. Swear, when requisite. C.—Thus thou wilt learn to confess one God. Theod.—If all were upright, oaths would be unnecessary. Mat. 5:34. But as they are not so, (C.) this may be a religious act. W.—Justice. These three conditions are essential. H.—Him; the people, (C.) or God. S. Jer.—An oath must attest God, and be used when a thing is true and of moment. W.

Ver. 3. Thorns. Your misconduct hinders your advancement. C.

Ver. 4. Hearts. Understand, and act with purity. H.

Ver. 5. Cities. Nabuchodonosor is at hand.

Ver. 7. Robber. Nabuchodonosor attacks unjustly, (C.) though he be God's scourge.

Ver. 9. Heart; counsel and vigour.—Prophets of falsehood.

Ver. 10. Alas! Prot. "Then I said: Ah! Lord God, surely thou hast deceived," &c. (H.) by permitting the people to follow false prophets. Is. 63:17. Ps. 43:19.

Ver. 11. Desert of Arabia. It may designate Nechao, (2 Par. 35:20) who slew Josias, after whose death all fell to ruin.

Ver. 15. Ephraim. At Bethel and Dan the calves were adored. C.—But they were now no more. H.—The irruption of Nabuchodonosor is announced. He set himself up for a god.

Ver. 16. Guards. The Chaldees will besiege the city, and prevent provisions from entering. 4 K. 25:1. C.

Ver. 19. My. God, (S. Jer.) the people, (Grot.) or rather Jeremias speaks.

Ver. 20. Moment. The cities are destroyed as easily as a tent.

Ver. 22. Me, practically. They have not honoured me as they ought. C.—If they were indeed devoid of sense, they would be excused. W.

Ver. 23. Void. Heb. "Thohu and bohu," like chaos. Gen. 1:2. H.

Ver. 25. Gone. Beasts feel the wrath of God, and in a land uninhabited; not even birds will remain. Osee 4:3. S. Jer.

Ver. 26. Carmel: the beautiful country of Palestine, (H.) Jerusalem, (Theod.) or the mountain so called.

Ver. 27. Destroy, when Jechonias was led captive. God allowed the people still eleven years to repent; and he afterwards restored the Jews. C.—He will never suffer his church to perish. W.

Ver. 28. Repented. Only a finite being can do this. God's resolution is here unconditional and fixed.

Ver. 30. Stone, or antimony, like Jazabel, (4 K. 9:30) to darken and enlarge the eye-lids.—Lovers. Infidel nations of Egypt, &c.

Ver. 31. Child. Heb. and Sept. "a first-born," when the pains are most acute. C.

JEREMIAS 5

Ver. 1. Go, Jeremias, and you who publicly adhere to me.—Man. Sodom would have been spared for the sake of ten just people. Gen. 18:32. Before the reform of Josias, Jerusalem was strangely corrupted, though these expressions be hyperbolical, and spoken as it were in the heat of debate. Josias, Holda, and others, were living at this time, and renowned for their piety.

Ver. 2. Falsely. Some may confess my name. But they swear falsely. C. 4:2. C.—Unless the requisite conditions be observed, an oath is unlawful. W.

Ver. 3. Return. The miseries with which, Achaz, &c. were afflicted, produced no amendment.

Ver. 4. Foolish idiots, (C.) who have had no means of receiving instruction. H.—Such might be more excusable; but when the chiefs offend, the evil is irremediable.

Ver. 6. Lion. Nabuchodonosor.—Wolf. Cambyzes, (C.) and leopard. Epiphanes. H.—The Chaldees, Persians and Greeks afflicted them. S. Jer.—The first beast may designate Nabuc: the second Nabuzardon: the third, Alexander or Epiphanes. W.

Ver. 7. How can. I have only the character of judge left. C.

Ver. 8. Stallions. Heb. mashcim, (H.) "stretching out," as others translate. Ezec. 23:20. S. Jer.—The horse is the most intemperate of all animals but man. Aristot. Hist. vi. 22.

Ver. 10. Destroy, at the first taking of the city, v. 18 and C. 4:27.—Branches. Children of Jechonias, (C. 22:30) and the people. C.—Heb.

“her battlements,” (H.) Chal. “palaces.”

Ver. 13. Them. The evil shall fall on the head of these impostors. So the wicked deride the prophets (C.) impugning the known truth. H.

Ver. 14. Fire. Thou shalt declare their impending ruin.

Ver. 15. Ancient. Nemrod founded the empire of Ninive and of Babylon. Gen. 10:10. Nabopolassar had succeeded to the ancient Assyrian and Chaldee sovereigns. Under his son, Nabuchodonosor, the dominions were much enlarged.—Say. 4 K. 18:26.

Ver. 17. Devour. Heb. “destroy.” They did not eat human flesh.

Ver. 19. Own. You shall thus know the difference between the masters. C.

Ver. 21. Understanding. Lit. “heart.” C. 4:22. H.

Ver. 22. It. Nature and chance are improper terms. God regulates all, and has established those laws which preserve the world.

Ver. 24. Rain, in autumn and in spring. Deut. 11:14. C.—Fulness. Heb. “the weeks for harvest.” H.—That of barley began at the Passover, and that of wheat ended before the feast of weeks, (Ex. 34:22. Lev. 23:10. C.) or Pentecost. H.

Ver. 25. Away. The rain comes unseasonably.

Ver. 26. Man. As some tyrants have done, though this implies (C.) the eagerness with which the wicked strive to corrupt mankind. H.

Ver. 28. Of the widow, is not in Heb. C.—Fatherless. Prot. add, “yet they prosper, and they,” &c. H.

Ver. 29. Nation? It is contrary to God’s justice not to punish the guilty. W.

Ver. 31. Clapped. Heb. “came down to, or received in, or domineered by their hands.” The priests concurred with these impostors for their own ends. C.

JEREMIAS 6

Ver. 1. Strengthen. Heb. also, “Flee, Benjamites, from the midst,” &c. Jerusalem belonged partly to this tribe, which prided itself on its valour.—Thecua was in the lot of Juda, 15 miles south of Jerusalem.—North. The Chaldees approach. C. 1:13. C.

Ver. 3. Shepherds. So captains are styled, because they feed and govern soldiers. W.

Ver. 4. Prepare. Lit. “sanctify.” Observe the usual formalities of demanding reparation, offering victims, &c. The Chaldees thus encourage one another, and will allow themselves no rest day or night. v. 5.

Ver. 7. Cold. Heb. “come forth.” All the citizens imitate her vices.

Ver. 8. Instructed, by afflictions and prosperity, by public and internal admonitions. Willful ignorance is criminal, and drives God away. C. 51:9. Ps. 80:12.

Ver. 9. Basket. Chaldees, destroy all. Nabuchodonosor took Joakim twice, and afterwards Jechonias and Sedecias. C. 29:2.

Ver. 10. Uncircumcised. Impure and deaf. C.—Non vocat impossibilitas supplicio quæ de contemptu et infidelitate descendit. S. Jer.

Ver. 11. In. Jeremias is indignant. The Lord then orders him to pour, or declare what will ensue. C.

Ver. 13. Prophet. Sept. “false prophet.” C. 4:31. H.

Ver. 14. Disgracefully. They shall be ashamed, when the contrary to what they declared shall come to pass. C. 8:11.

Ver. 16. Paths, of patriarchs, and of Moses. Avoid novelty in religion. C.—This advice is very applicable to the present generation. H.

Ver. 17. Watchmen. Prophets. Ezech. 3:17 and 33:2.

Ver. 18. Congregation. Sept. “shepherds feeding their flocks have heard.” The Chaldees are apprised of my resolution against Juda. C.—After the Jews had been called repeatedly in vain, the Gentiles obey. Mat. 10:5. W.

Ver. 20. To me. For want of proper dispositions; otherwise the offerings of the best things were enjoined, and commendable. The Jews are taught not to depend on external observances, while they neglect the heart. C.

Ver. 22. North. As Babylon lay with respect to Jerusalem, (W.) or rather to the east. H.

Ver. 26. Only son. Let thy grief be extraordinary. Amos 8:10. Zac. 12:10.

Ver. 27. Trier of my people, as of gold in the furnace. Job 22:25.

Ver. 29. Bellows, or crucible.—Lead, which was intermixed to purify the dross (S. Jer.) of gold and silver. But brass and iron could not be thus purified. All would be lost labour. Afflictions do not correct the obstinate. C.

JEREMIAS 7

Ver. 2. Gate, before all the people. This discourse ends C. 13. C.

Ver. 3. Dwell. Heb. “make you dwell here.” H.

Ver. 4. Lord. The triple repetition shews the vain confidence of the people, who blindly imagined that the temple would screen them, (C.) and that external sacrifices would suffice. But they were rejected with the temple. W.

Ver. 7. Dwell. Heb. and Sept. as v. 3. H.

Ver. 9. Not, which have done you no good, and deserve not to be styled gods. C.

Ver. 10. Because. Hebrew also, “although,” (Sa. Grot.) “to perform,” (Chal. Mont.) or “by doing.” God must surely approve of our conduct, since we are unmolested. S. Tho. Lyr.—But the Vulg. seems preferable, and the people attribute their success to idols. C. 44:17 and 2 Par. 28:23.

Ver. 11. Robbers. Our Saviour alludes to this. Mat. 21:13.—Seen. Think not to hide yourselves, as in a den. My temple shall not be an asylum for wretches. C.

Ver. 12. Beginning, under Josue. H.—The sins of a few priests caused this place to be abandoned, (1 K. 2:22 and 3:4. Ps. 77:60) and shall the crimes of a whole people escape? C.—It is true, that place and Jerusalem were once sanctified: but the people being criminal, God retires. W.

Ver. 13. Early. Sparing no opportunity of reclaiming you. C.

Ver. 15. Ephraim. The ten tribes (W.) had been led into captivity in the days of Ezechias, the great-grandfather of Josias. C.

Ver. 16. Praise, offered to appease my wrath. H.—This admirably shews the force of the saints' intercession, which God does not reject, but rather encourages by such declarations. Abraham and Moses did not leave off praying for the guilty, (Gen. 18:23. Ex. 32:10) and the Lord complains that there was none to withhold him. Is. 64:7. Ezech. 22:30. C.

Ver. 18. Heaven. That is, the moon, which they worshipped under that name. Ch.—Some understand the sun also the stars. C. 44:17. Is. 65:11. All the family contributes to promote this idolatry.

Ver. 21. Flesh. I reject your holocausts. Keep them for yourselves. C.

Ver. 22. I commanded them not: viz. such sacrifices as the Jews at this time offered without obedience; which was the thing principally commanded: so that in comparison with it, the offering of the holocausts and sacrifices was of small account. Ch.—The observance of the decalogue would suffice. Victims were to teach internal piety. Lev. 1. W.—God “brought them out of Egypt, not for the sake of their sacrifices, but that they might ... hear his word.” S. Iræn. iv. 17.—This was the principal design. See Mat. 9:13. Os. 6:6 and 1 Cor. 1:17. Maldon. M. C.—The rules for sacrifices were given after the adoration of the calf, as necessary preservatives against idolatry. S. Tho. i. 2. q. 102. a. 3.—Yet the paschal lamb, &c. had been already commanded. C.—Many such absolute expressions imply a condition or comparison. Gloss. Prov. 8:10.—I brought. Several MSS. read thus more accurately than the Heb. “He brought,” (Ken.) which Prot. abandon, (H.) though the present reading may stand. Chappel. Crat.—Every variation should be noticed, as this and the former verse “seem greatly corrupted; perhaps the Syr. version will be the best guide to their true meaning.” Kennicott.—Yet the passage is sufficiently intelligible in the Vulg. and Sept.

Ver. 27. Thee. Sept. omit this verse, which Grabe replaces. The people will be more inexcusable. H.

Ver. 29. High. People lamented in such places. C. 9:13. Judg. 11:35. C.—Wrath, which he treats with the utmost severity. H.

Ver. 30. Abominations. Heb. We have lit. “stumbling-blocks,” offendicula. H.—Manasses placed idols in the very temple, as the last kings of Juda did. 4 K. 23:4. Ezech. 8:3.

Ver. 31. Valley, to the south of the city. Here Moloc was adored, and Josias therefore contaminated the place. 4 K. 23:10. C.—It was very delightful. S. Jer.

Ver. 32. Place, elsewhere. H.—This was verified when Nabuchodonosor and Titus besieged the city. C.—The latter was quite shocked. Jos. Bel. vi. 14. See C. 19 and 31:40.

Ver. 34. Bride. None shall think of marrying, (C. 16:9 and 25:10. C.) all being filled with lamentation. M.

JEREMIAS 8

Ver. 1. Graves. They might suppose that they would find treasures in them, as the tombs of Semiramis, Cyrus, &c. were thus enriched. This inhumanity seems to have taken place before the last siege. Bar. 2:24. C.

Quæque carent ventis et solibus ossa Quirini Nefas videre dissipabit insoleas. Hor. epod. 16.

—Cruelty and avarice cause persecutors to act thus. W.

Ver. 4. Again. Why then do not the people strive to repent?

Ver. 7. Stork. These birds retire at the approach of winter to warmer climates. In Poland swallows plunge into marshes, like frogs. If instinct teach them to do so, for their preservation, is it not strange that men should be so inconsiderate?

Ver. 8. Falsehood. The impostors have deceived you, and they are themselves taken prisoners. C.

Ver. 9. Them. Those who understand, and do not observe the law, are not wise. W.

Ver. 10. Others. Idumeans, &c. Yet most part of the land remained uncultivated. C.—The rest, to v. 13. “they will collect their fruits, says,” &c. is supplied by Grabe. H.

Ver. 12. They are. Or, “are they?” &c. S. Jer.—No, they are too hardened. C. 6:14.

Ver. 13. Gather into Jerusalem, to be butchered. C.—Away. They are now in the greatest distress. H.—This probably happened a little before the last siege. C. 14.

Ver. 14. Silent, in utter destruction. 1 K. 2:9. We cannot be in a worse condition.

Ver. 16. Dan, by which the Chaldees must pass. C. 4:15. Many have hence inferred that antichrist will be the serpent (v. 17) of the tribe of Dan. Gen. 49:17. C.

Ver. 17. Charm. The Chaldees will not be moved to pity (M.) by any words. W.

Ver. 18. Me. God, Jeremias, the people, or rather Jerusalem bewails her children. C.

Ver. 19. Sion. Thus the people complain, (M.) or God answers them that they had no reason to have recourse to idols for protection. C.

Ver. 20. Saved. Our hopes of redress are vanished. We must still pine away for want of food. H.—The siege continues, though we had been assured it would shortly be terminated. C.—It commenced January 30, A. 3414. Soon after Nabuchodonosor went to meet Pharaoh, and having defeated him, returned about June, A. 3415, and after 390 days took the city, 27th of July, A. 3416. Usher C. 39:2. C. Ezech. 4:5. H.

Ver. 21. I. Jeremias. M.—The prophet continues to speak in the next chap.

Ver. 22. Balm, (resina) “turpentine,” (C.) which was much used. Dioscor. i. 66.—Galaad was famous for the best. C. 46:11. Gen. 37:25. —Closed? Have I not sent prophets? But they will not be healed. C.

JEREMIAS 9

Ver. 1. To. Heb. is more expressive. C.—“Who will give my head waters, (H.) or change it into water, and my eyes into a fountain.” C. —Prot. “Oh that my head were waters.” H.—The miseries of my people are so great, (C.) a few tears would not suffice to bewail them. W.

Ver. 2. Men. Why cannot I retire (M.) from this scene of misery, or afford some consolation to the captives? Sept. “Who will give me the last station in the desert?” H.

Ver. 3. Lies. They are bent on deceit (C.) and murder, (H.) v. 8. Ps. 63:4 and 119:2.

Ver. 4. Deceitfully. A man must guard against his relations and domestics. Mic. 7:5. Mat. 8:34. C.

Ver. 5. Iniquity. It is become natural to them. S. Jer.—They cannot lay the blame on the violence of passion. They sin on purpose. C.—Sept. “they have not left off, (6) in order to be converted. Usury upon usury; fraud upon fraud; they,” &c. H.

Ver. 7. Try them in the crucible of war. C. 6:27. C.

Ver. 10. Owner. Heb. mikne, “cattle,” or (H.) “substance.” S. Jer.—Departed. Beasts and birds will not continue long after men cease to cultivate the country. Theod. C. 4:25 and 12:4. Soph. 1:3.

Ver. 11. Sand. The stones were burnt to dust. 2 Esd. 4:2. C.

Ver. 15. Gall. Heb. rosh, “poison,” &c. Deut. 29:18. H.

Ver. 16. Consumed. C. 44:27. No country shall afford them protection. C.—The richer sort were made captives, and most of the people destroyed, but not all. C. 4:25. W.

Ver. 17. Wise, in composing or singing the Nænia, or mournful songs, recording the praises of the deceased. C.—“This custom still subsists in Judea: women go about with dishevelled hair and naked breasts, with mournful tunes, exciting all to tears.” S. Jer.—Music was also used. Mat. 9:23. Thus feigned tears, at least, would supply the want of real ones.

Ver. 21. For. This was the song. C.—Streets. Death spares none. The least suspecting fall. H.—It enters by the windows, if the doors be shut. Joel 2:8.

Ver. 22. Speak. Our editions of the Sept. omit this word, though S. Jerom found it in his copies, (C.) and in Theodotion, expressed by “death;” while others rendered it, “speak,” as the same letters *db*r, may have both meanings, according as people may please to pronounce them. S. Jer.—Grabe supplies, “by death. (22.) These things, says the Lord.” H.

Ver. 24. Me. Virtue will save, when riches, &c. will prove useless. M.—Phocilides, a pagan, said, (C.) “Boast not of wisdom, strength, or riches great. One God is wise, and potent too, and rich.” H.

Ver. 26. Egypt. the uncircumcised shall be punished as well as Juda, if they transgress. Only the Jewish nation properly observed the right of circumcision generally, or at first. Others imitated them, but with various ceremonies. C. Diss. Ezech. 31:18. Judith 14:6.—Hyrcan obliged the Idumeans to receive circumcision. Jos. Ant. xiii. 17.—

Round. The Arabs, &c. Lev. 19:27. C.—Heart. All then became guilty. Rom. 2:25. M.—Neither these nations nor Juda was circumcised in heart, and of course were hypocrites. W.

JEREMIAS 10

Ver. 2. Ways. Religious rites. v. 3.—Fear. Worship. Lev. 19:14.—Signs. They were designed to point out the seasons. Gen. 1:14. C.—Heathens thought that they had a divine power. W.

Ver. 4. Asunder. Is. 44:8. Bar. 6:3. Wisd. 13:11. The pagans themselves laughed at such folly. C.—If such things were gods, the makers and tools deserved more adoration: Fabri deorum vel parentes numinum, says Prudentius. The vanity of such idols was more easily discerned than that of the stars. W.

Ver. 5. Tree. The ancient statues were ill-formed, (Diodor. 4.) before Dedalus brought the art to greater perfection, and gave them a living attitude.

Ver. 6. There. Sept. omit the three following verses; and from v. 9. all these, &c. to the end of v. 10 which Grabe inserts in a different character. H.

Ver. 7. Wise. MS. 2. has in the margin “kings,” perhaps more correctly. Kennicott.

Ver. 8. Vanity, and shews them clearly to be foolish (C.) and wicked. H.

Ver. 9. Ophaz, or Phison, (Gen. 2:11. C.) the coast of Pegu, Faprobana, &c. M.

Ver. 10. Wrath. God is the true cause of all that terrifies mankind.

Ver. 11. Heaven. This verse is in Chaldee, for the captives to use at Babylon, to defend themselves. It should be in a parenthesis, as it interrupts the discourse. Perhaps it was added during the captivity.

Ver. 13. Voice. Thunder, (Ps. 28:3) which is usually the forerunner of rain. Lightning is occasioned by the inflamed exhalations of conflicting clouds.

Ver. 14. Knowledge. If it were real, he would see the vanity of idols. v. 8. C.

Ver. 16. Portion. The Lord. H. Ps. 72:6.—Rod, to measure, (Ps. 73:2) or the sceptre and ruler. M.

Ver. 17. Shame. Idols. See if they will keep thee. Heb. “thy merchandise,” or most precious effects.

Ver. 18. Found by the enemy. Heb. also, “find” me, being taught by affliction. C. 29:13. C.—Entering into sentiments of penance, they shall say, Woe, &c. H.

Ver. 22. North. He has announced this conqueror eight times.—Dragons. Tannim means “huge reptiles,” whether of sea or land. C.

Ver. 23. The way, &c. Notwithstanding man’s free-will, yet he can do no good without God’s help, nor evil without his permission. So that, in the present case, all the evils which Nabuchodonosor was about to bring upon Jerusalem, could not have come but by the will of God. Ch. W.—This prince succeeds by thy order. Theod.—Yet chastise us as a father, and have us not to his fury. v. 24. C.—“Let new preachers blush, who say that each one is governed by his own will,” (S. Jer. C. ix. 23) and able to do good without God’s grace. H.

Ver. 24. Judgment. C. 30:11. Ps. 6:1. Justice is not contrary to mercy. C.

Ver. 25. Glory. This is repeated from Ps. 78:6. M.—The prophet supposes that these nations will not repent, and that their sins are more enormous. To see God’s people treated with greater severity, might scandalize the weak, while infidels would take occasion to abuse their own impunity. C.

JEREMIAS 11

Ver. 1. The, &c. He continues his discourse, (v. 15) or rather addresses the people, when Josias renewed the covenant. 2 Par. 34:29. Lev. 26. Deut. 27. C.

Ver. 4. Fathers. God chooses his people for obedience, not for kindred, &c. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 5. Amen. Sept. “So be it.” H.—Thou hast fulfilled thy engagements.

Ver. 6. Cities, or to those who come thence to the temple, that all may know.

Ver. 7. For. This and the next verse have not been read by Sept.; (C.) but only “and they did not comply.” Grabe supplies the rest. H.

Ver. 8. Brought; or “will bring,” seems preferable. What does the history of God’s people till the captivity exhibit, but scenes of disorder and of succeeding misery? C.

Ver. 9. Conspiracy. They are leagued together to do evil, with all earnestness. S. Jer.

Ver. 10. To them, for a long time. Yet they must not despair, or have recourse to idols, (v. 12) or witches. 1 K. 28.

Ver. 13. Confusion. Thus he contemptuously denotes Baalim. C. 3:24. C.—Various idols were objects of adoration, (H.) so that no city or street, perhaps not any house, was pure. C. 7:18 and 44:17. Is. 65:11. Ezech. 16:25.

Ver. 15. Beloved, dilectus. Heb. and Sept. have the fem. Chal. “people.” They presumptuously thought that they would be freed from all their abominations, by partaking of the sacrifices. C.—But the offerings of such are not accepted. M.—The flesh is holy, but is of no service to the obstinate sinner. W.

Ver. 16. Burnt, by lightning. The olive was a most useful and beautiful tree.

Ver. 18. Shewedst me. He insinuates that something more than what appears must be understood. Theod.—All Christians explain what follows of Jesus Christ, (S. Jer. W.) whom Jeremias prefigured in his sufferings. C.—“Let us follow the rule which shews that all the prophets did most things for a type of our Lord and Saviour; and what was now done by Jeremias, foreshewed what would happen to our Lord.” S. Jer.

Ver. 19. Meek; pet lamb. The Arabs still keep one in their houses. 2 K. 12:3. Bochart ii. 46. C.—Knew. I acted as if I had been ignorant. M.—Yet Christ foretold his sufferings. Mat. 20:18. &c. W.—Bread. Christ, the bread of life, was nailed to the disgraceful wood. S. Jer. S. Greg. Mor. iii. 12.—They threaten to beat him, (De Dieu) or to mix a poisonous wood with his food. C. M.—Some Jews had corrupted this text in S. Justin’s time. D.

Ver. 20. Sabaoth. That is, of hosts or armies; a name frequently given to God, in the Scriptures.—Thy revenge. This was rather a prediction of what was to happen, with an approbation of the divine justice, than an imprecation. Ch.—He speaks of the impenitent, (S. Jer.) and wishes they may be converted.

Ver. 21. Life. What precedes, was spoken concerning the prophet, though it regarded Christ also in a proper but more elevated sense. C.

Ver. 23. Remains. All these priests shall perish. Ps. 36:28. H.—He speaks of the wicked, as a remnant was still left. C. 4. Is. 10. W.

JEREMIAS 12

Ver. 1. Is just. Heb. “judgment.” Sept. “I will make my apology to thee.” Jeremias had been grievously persecuted by his countrymen: he therefore mentions a subject which has been the source of much perplexity. The success of the wicked is a temptation for weak souls. See Job 21. Ps. 72:3. Hab. 1:13. C.—The prophets often speak in their names, not being ignorant or doubtful of the justice of divine providence. W.

Ver. 2. Reins. They have thy name in their mouth, but not in their heart. Is. 29:13. Mat. 15:8.

Ver. 3. Gather. God orders his prophet to announce the misery of the wicked.

Ver. 4. Mourn? Is not this a proof of my providence in chastising Juda? This famine is specified C. 8:13 and 14:4. C.—Last end. Two letters seem to be transposed in Heb. as the Sept. read “ways.” Kennicott.—The impious blaspheme as if all were ruled by chance. C.

Ver. 5. Horses. If thou hast been terrified at the threats of thy fellow-citizens, how wilt thou withstand those of Jerusalem? (M.) or he speaks to Juda, who would not be able to resist the Chaldees, since the Philistines, &c. had routed the Jews, though destitute of cavalry.—Jordan, or the nations of Ammon, &c. on that side. C.—Prot. “if in the land of peace, wherein thou trustedst, they wearied thee, then how wilt,” &c. H.

Ver. 6. To thee. Edom, &c. made a league with Sedecias, which they broke. They always bore a hatred to the Jews, though sprung from the same stock. C. 27:1. Lam. 4:21. C.

Ver. 7. Soul; people, (H.) whose punishment was decreed. Say not, therefore, that the wicked always prosper.

Ver. 9. As a. Sept. “a den of the hyena:” Alex. “robbers.” Grabe inserts, "or a den around it?" H.—They have read auss, "a den," instead of hait, "a bird." Bochart, (iii. 11.) however, shews that the latter word denotes various wild beasts, and nearly follows the Sept. Though the inheritance be most charming, it shall not pass unpunished. C.

Ver. 10. Pastors; princes of my people, as well (H.) as of the Chaldees. C. 6:3.

Ver. 11. Heart, to seek God and the cause of their misfortunes.

Ver. 13. Fruits. They shall not satisfy your expectations or wants.

Ver. 14. Land. Nabuchodonosor led the Ammonites, &c. into captivity, five years after the Jews. Jos. Ant. x. 11. C.—After the children are chastised, the rod is burnt. W.

Ver. 15. Land; the Jews, as well as their neighbours. C. 49:6. M. Is. 23:15. Ezec. 16:55.

Ver. 16. People. After the captivity, converts were more cherished. Yet the predictions concerning the call of the Gentiles were accomplished only by the preaching of the gospel. C.

JEREMIAS 13

Ver. 1. Girdle, usually worn by women. S. Jer. Ex. 28:42.—It denoted the Jews, who became more corrupt during the captivity; (v. 7. 11) so that God delivered them out of his pure mercy. Thus He explains this prophetic action. C.—Loins. God cherished his people. M.—Water. He made choice of them when they were rough and deformed. S. Jer. —Their sins cause their ruin. H.

Ver. 4. Euphrates, above 150 leagues distant. Some think this was only to be done in spirit: but it is generally supposed that the prophet made this long journey twice. Bochart suggests that Euphrates (Heb. Peratha) may be put for Ephrata, or Bethlehem, as the first syllable is often cut off. C.—Yet a journey to the Euphrates would represent more strikingly the destination of the people; and it would not be difficult for God to convey Jeremias thither in a short time, if requisite, as he sent Habacuc through the air to carry a dinner to Daniel; (14:32) though this supposition is not here necessary, as the labour to which Jeremias was repeatedly exposed, might shew the people their manifold transgressions and captivities. H.—Such prophetic actions make a deeper impression than words. Heb. 1. The ingratitude of the people is here described, to C. 21. W.

Ver. 9. Rot. I will bring them low. M.—They shall see that all their dependance must be on the divine mercy.

Ver. 11. Glory; that they might serve me for the edification of the world.

Ver. 12. Bottle, of earthen ware. C. 25:27. C.—Every man shall suffer. v. 13. H.—This is another prophetic similitude denoting extreme perplexity. W.—Do. They deride the prophet, as if he said nothing worthy of notice. M.

Ver. 16. Dark. Jo. 12:35.—Mountains, beyond the Euphrates, resembling clouds.

Ver. 17. My soul. Jeremias can do no more. C.—Sept. “your soul, ... your eyes,” &c. H.

Ver. 18. Queen; Nohesta, mother of Joachim, or to the consort of Sedecias. C.—Sept. “to the princes.” H.

Ver. 19. South, belonging to Juda; (C.) or Egypt will afford no protection. Tournemine. C. 37:3. 10.

Ver. 20. North: ye Chaldees. H.—Heb. and Sept. “see those who come.”—Cattle. O king, what account wilt thou give of the people to the Almighty? C.

Ver. 21. Head. Achaz called the Assyrians into the country, and Ezechias had shewn his treasures to the Babylonians. Other kings excited God’s indignation.

Ver. 22. Defiled. Thou art exposed to the brutality of the soldiers.

Ver. 23. Evil. Bad habits are a sort of second nature. I speak in vain. C.—Yet God sometimes converts inveterate sinners, who cannot rise of themselves. W.

Ver. 26. Appeared. Thou art treated as a wretched and vile captive. H.

Ver. 27. Me; to serve me. M.

JEREMIAS 14

Ver. 1. Drought, during the last siege, (v. 18. S. Jer.) or after the captivity of Jechonias; (C. 8:13) though the famine might happen in the days of Josias. Joel 1. C.—This scourge was in punishment of sin, and signified the privation of grace. W.

Ver. 3. Water. Siloe was the only spring near, and it was often dry, (S. Jer.) though it was formerly abundant, (Jos. Bel. vi. 6.) as well as the fountain of Gehon. The city was furnished with cisterns. C.—But all was now dry. H.—Heads; mourning. 2 K. 15:30.

Ver. 5. Field. They prefer places frequented by men. Pliny viii. 32.

Ver. 6. Wind, for refreshment.—Failed, through want, though they be very piercing.

Ver. 7. Sake. We have the honour to be called thy people. We urge no merit of our own.

Ver. 8. Lodge. The Fathers apply this to our Saviour, in a spiritual sense. C.

Ver. 9. Wandering. Sept. “sleeping;” (H.) or as a boaster, who thinks himself strong. W.—Upon us. Shall strangers rule over thy people?

Ver. 10. Rested. They are inconstant, fond of novelties, and apply to idols.

Ver. 11. Good, that the drought may be removed. C. See C. 7:16 and 11:14. M.—“It is folly to pray for him who has sinned unto death,” (S. Jer. 1 Jo. v. 16) by final impenitence. C.—Sacrifices will not benefit the impenitent. S. Jer.

Ver. 13. Ah. Hebrew has only one exclamation, or three letters, which Aquila renders, Ah, ah, ah. C. 1:6. Ezech. 4:14. H.—Jeremias lays the blame on false prophets. C.—Yet they afford no excuse to thy followers. Both fall into the ditch. W.

Ver. 17. My. Sept. “your eyes.” Jeremias shews by his tears the future misery. C.—Virgin. Though many were sinners, the Church had some just souls. W.

Ver. 18. Famine. Under Jechonias many were slain, and the chiefs carried into captivity. 4 K. 24:12.—Into. Heb. “through the land, and are ignorant.” Chal. “they apply to their business, to earthly concerns, and care not.” C. 5:31.

Ver. 21. Glory; heaven, the temple or Jerusalem. How will infidels blaspheme!

Ver. 22. Rain. Let not the people have recourse to idols, (C.) in despair. H.

JEREMIAS 15

Ver. 1. If. The Geneva Bible reads corruptly, “Though Moses ... stood,” contrary to Heb. and Gr. W.—And Samuel. These two had shewn a particular love for the people. Ex. 32 and 2 K. 12. C.—Ezekiel (14:4) specifies Noe, Daniel, and Job, who were eminent for sanctity. Daniel was still alive. Yet God will not grant their request; and he forbids his prophet to pray for those who were resolved not to repent. C. 14:11. H.—Their punishment was fixed, and God will not remit it at the request either of the living or of the dead. Hence it is evident, that the dead could and did sometimes make intercession, otherwise they would not here be mentioned. To evade this argument, Prot. in the Geneva Bible, suppose God’s “meaning to be, that if there were any man living, moved with so great zeal towards the people as were these two, yet he would not grant their request, for so much as he had determined the contrary.” Yet surely Jeremias, Daniel, &c. had a similar zeal; and therefore the text speaks of Moses and Samuel in a state of happiness, where their charity is greater than in this life, as S. Jer. S. Chrys. (hom. 1. in 1 Thess.) and S. Greg. (Mor. ix. 12.) explain it. W.—Jeremias had been praying earnestly for the people in the temple. But God answers his request with a severity rarely witnessed in Scripture, ordering him to drive the people out, or to announce that they should be thus treated. C.

Ver. 2. Death. This Heb. phrase intimates that some should die by sickness, &c. W.

Ver. 3. Kinds of persecutors, the sword, &c. C.

Ver. 4. Rage. Heb. “agitation.” C.—Sept. “necessities.” Prot. “to be removed into all,” &c. H. This the event verified. Isai. 11:11.—Manasses. Though he obtained pardon, the people would not imitate his repentance. A dreadful warning for princes! C.—“The people generally perish by the fault of their governors.” S. Jer.

Ver. 5. Peace. All will abhor thee. C.—“The creatures cannot be so clement as the Creator.” S. Jer.

Ver. 6. Intreating thee. Heb. “of being intreated;” (S. Jer.) or, “of repenting,” and suspending the effects of my wrath. C.—Sept. “I will no longer spare them." H.

Ver. 7. Will, or "have scattered" the ten tribes, and many of Juda, before the last siege. C.

Ver. 8. Man, or "a spoiler of the young man," (H.) so that the widow shall also be deprived of her children. Heb. "the young spoiler," Nabuchodonosor. He shall not come like a night thief, to attack the metropolis.

Ver. 9. Seven: many. It is not common for a mother to lose so numerous a family; yet such shall be the misfortune of Jewish parents. The synagogues shall decrease.—Day. Her prosperity shall end on a sudden. C.

Ver. 10. Strife. Jeremias was under continual persecution, (M.) yet ceased not to reprimand the wicked. H.—Obsequium amicos, veritas odium parit. Cic.—Usury. Such people are exposed to contention. M.

Ver. 11. Remnant; posterity, (C.) or rather possessions, as the prophet never married. C. 16:2. H.—God assures him that he shall be protected. M.—The Chaldees treated him with respect. C. 39:2 and 40:1. Sedecias and the people had often recourse to him. Chal. "They will come to intreat thee, when the enemy shall straiten them." C.

Ver. 12. Iron. Shall the iron (that is, the strength of Juda) stand against the stronger iron of the north, (that is, of Babylon) or enter into an alliance upon equal footing with it? No, certainly; but it must be broken by it. Ch.—Iron is not easily united with brass, though Pliny (xxxiv. 4.) mentions a statue of this nature. Neither iron nor brass can stand against steel, which is meant by the iron from the north. The Jews shall not hurt Jeremias, v. 20. C. 1:17. C.—Prot. "shall iron break the northern iron and the steel?" The riches of Juda shall become a prey, v. 13. H.—Stronger kingdoms easily oppress their weak allies. W.

Ver. 14. Bring. Sept. "enslave thee to thy," &c. Chal. "thou shalt serve." H.—They have read (C.) hahabaddi. Heb. has r instead of d, "I will make thee to pass with thine enemies into a," &c. Prot. H.

Ver. 15. Patience. That is, let not thy patience and long suffering, which thou usest towards sinners, keep thee from making haste to my assistance. Ch.—He is actuated by a zeal for God's glory. C.—He is afraid of his own weakness, and begs to be delivered shortly. Ps. 12:2. W.

Ver. 16. Eat them. I received them most cordially, (Ezec. 3:1. H.) as one who is hungry.—Upon me. I was recognized as the prophet of the Lord.

Ver. 17. Jesters, who deride religion, (Ps. 1:1) or sport away their time. C.—Hand, through vanity. Lit. and I boast of.” H.—I rejoiced in suffering, as this prophet. Many (C.) supply nor from the former part of the sentence. M.—Threats. I could not refrain from admonishing the people of their ways, (H.) which I would not countenance by my presence. C.—All indeed kept at a distance from me.

Ver. 18. Trusted. It is not cured as soon as might be expected. H.—It continually breaks out again, (M.) like a bog not properly drained. H.—Heb. “Thou art become,” &c. Chal. “break not thy promise, as,” &c. Do not reject me when I stand most in need of redress. C.—My hopes seem (H.) vain. W.

Ver. 19. Converted, and cease to fear the people; (C.) and confide in my precious words, (H.) despising the vile threats of the people. M.—Mouth; interpreter. Ex. 4:16. Chal. “If thou wilt recall the wicked into the way of justice, though shalt fulfill my will.” See S. Jer. in Ps. cv. 32.—To thee. Thus Sedecias and the people acted, C. 21:1 and 42:2. C.—The prophet must not give way to sinners, but hey must be reclaimed. W.

Ver. 21. Mighty; Chaldees. Providence watched over Jeremias, amid all his enemies. C.

JEREMIAS 16

Ver. 2. Place. It was going to be destroyed, and the cares of a family might interrupt the prophet. The Fathers believe that Jeremias never married, (see S. Jer. in C. xxii. Isidor.) which was then a rare example. C.—He always lived a single life, and not only in time of tribulation. S. Jer. c. Jov. 1. W.—The Church enforces this law of God for her sacred ministers, in subdeacons and the higher orders. S. Paul shews the propriety of such a regulation, (1 Cor. 7) which innovators deem unnatural and tyrannical. How then could God enforce it once? With his grace we may observe celibacy like Jeremias. H.

Ver. 4. Illnesses, denoting God’s wrath. S. Jer.—Earth. The privation of sepulture was accounted one of the greatest evils.

Ver. 5. Feasting; usual at burials for all relations. C.—This custom reduced many to poverty. Jos. Bel. ii. 1.—

Sed cænam funerishæres
Negliget iratus quod rem curtaverit. Pers. vi.

—Mourn, if thou shouldst meet a funeral. Lu. 7:32.

Ver. 6. Cut. Moses prohibited this being done in honour of Adonis. Lev. 19:27. Deut. 14:1. Ezech. 27:31. “The custom of cutting the arms and hair still subsists in Judea,” says S. Jerom; and in other countries. Plut. Herodot. iv. 71.

Ver. 7. Cup. Most exquisite things were sent on such occasions. Buxtorf, Syn. xxxv. Prov. 31:6. Tob. 4:18. John 11:19.

Ver. 8. Feasting. Heb. “of drinking,” in times of joy.

Ver. 12. Fathers. Hence you are justly partakers of their punishment. Mat. 23:32. C.—A continuance in sin brings on severe punishments; after which, God again shews mercy. W.

Ver. 13. Gods. Elohim, “masters,” &c. C. 17:4. Chal. “idolatrous nations.”

Ver. 15. Fathers. He joins consolation with distressing predictions, and alludes to the redemption of mankind, of which the return of the Jews was the most striking pledge.

Ver. 16. Rocks. They shall be found in all their lurking places. Ezech. 12:12. Hab. 1:4. C.—The apostles shall save them. Orig.—The Medes and Persians shall grant them liberty; or rather Nabuchodonosor shall fish at first, and afterwards hunt or destroy more of the Jews. C.—Apostolical men (W.) shall be like rocks, (S. Jer.) for the protection of their hearers.

Ver. 18. Double: enormous. H. C. 17:18.—I will punish them doubly. —Carcasses. So he styles the victims, or idols, the representations of dead men.

Ver. 19. Them. After the captivity many were converted. Esth. 8 and 1 Esd. 6:21. Edom was forced to receive circumcision. But this was nothing in comparison with the crowds which embraced the gospel.

Ver. 20. Make gods. This consideration alone suffices to shew their absurdity. C.—“Man must now be merciful to god!” Tert. Apol.—No one can make even a man, much less a god. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 21. Power, in taking vengeance on idolatry.—Lord. “He who is;” (C.) Jehova. H.

JEREMIAS 17

Ver. 1. The. Grabe (de Vit. p. 8.) observes that the four first verses were omitted in the Sept. by some careless transcriber, long before the days of Origen, who restored them from the Heb. and the other Gr. versions. On such occasions his work was very useful; but the marks being soon neglected, great confusion ensued. S. Jer. Kennicott, Dis. ii. —Grabe has restored these verses in his edition. H.—Eusebius (Dem. x.) and Theodoret acknowledged them; and Nobilius found the first verse thus expressed in many copies, (C.) as it is in Grabe: “The sin of Juda is expressed in writing with a finger nail of adamant, cleaving to the breast of,” &c. H.—Altars, to appear more conspicuously to the latest times. This excited God’s indignation. C.—These figurative expressions shew the inveterate malice of the people. W.

Ver. 3. Sin of idolatry. C. 15:13.

Ver. 4. Be left. Prot. “discontinue from thine,” &c. H.—The land shall have its sabbaths, which thou wouldst not allow. Chal. Ex. 22:11. Lev. 26:34.

Ver. 5. Thus. Sept. continue from the last chapter, “cursed,” &c. H.—Sedecias had formed alliances with several princes, instead of turning to the Lord. C. 27 and 37. C.—Our chief dependence must be on God, not on human policy. W.

Ver. 6. Tamaric. A barren shrub, that grows in the driest parts of the wilderness. Ch.—Harhar denotes some sort (H.) of “useless wood.” Sym. See C. 48:6. Isai. 17:2.—Salt, like the environs of Sodom, the fruits of which were bad.

Ver. 8. Fruit. See Ps. 1:3. Pindar, Nem. viii. How different from the wicked! C.

Ver. 9. Perverse. Sept. “deep.”—Unsearchable. Sept. “man, who shall know him?” H.—God alone can search the heart by his own power. He enables saints to do it by the light of glory, or of prophecy; as Eliseus and S. Peter knew secret transactions. W.

Ver. 11. Partridge. Heb. kore, (H.) may mean the “coucou.” The kra lays many eggs, all of which she does not hatch. C.—Prot. “As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not,” &c. H.—It is rare that all produce birds; so the unjust do not succeed (C.) in the end. H.

Ver. 12. Throne. The temple. We may also read “O high,” &c. C. 14:21.

Ver. 13. Earth, where alone their portion shall be, (Apoc. 3:5,) or they shall be forgotten. It is a proverbial expression, like that of Catullus:

*Dixit: sed mulier cupido quod dixit amanti
In vento et rapidâ scribere oportet aquâ.*

—Living, which never fail, unlike those of the wicked. C. 2:13.

Ver. 15. Come. We have several instances of such impious sarcasms. Isa. 28:10 and 34:13. Amos 2:12. Mic. 2:6. C.—We fear not the Chaldees. M.

Ver. 16. Troubled. Heb. “in haste to be a pastor after thee.” Chal. “I delay not, at thy command, to announce thy truths to them.” C. 1:6. Jeremias was aware of the dangers attending his office, yet not dismayed.—Day: approbation, (1 Cor. 4:3) or advantages of the world. C.—Of man. Heb. also, “of the wretched:” anush. I wished rather for the people’s welfare, (H.) and sought not their ruin. Chal. Theodor.

Ver. 18. Let them be confounded, &c. Such expressions as these in the writings of the prophets, are not to be understood as imprecations proceeding from malice or desire of revenge, but as prophetic predictions of evils that were about to fall upon impenitent sinners, and approbations of the ways of the divine justice. Ch.—The prophet has already prevented this objection. v. 16. H.

Ver. 19. Gate of the palace, or that by which the kings entered the temple, on the west. The time when this admonition was given is not ascertained.

Ver. 21. Souls. Those who broke the sabbath were to die. Ex. 30:15. Num. 15:32.—Burdens, or servile work. C.—The Jews trifle in deciding what is a burden. Orig. prin. 4:2.—Sabbath often denotes the observance of the whole law. W.

Ver. 25. David. I will observe my covenant. 2 K. 7:12.—Horses: in prosperity, (M.) provided this law, as well as all the rest, be observed. H.—Such temporal rewards were commonly proposed under the law, as spiritual ones are now. W.

Ver. 26. Sacrifices. Heb. mincha, (H.) “offerings” of flour, wine, &c. C.

Ver. 27. Fire, by means of Nabuzardan. M.—The city shall be entirely destroyed. C.

JEREMIAS 18

Ver. 2. Potter's. Thus God would shew his dominion over all. Rom. 9:21.

Ver. 3. Wheel. Heb. "stones." Sept. "seats;" or "wheel." Chal. Ex. 1:16. See Eccle. 38:32. C.

Ver. 4. Broken. So Providence ordered it. S. Jer.—How should this idea humble man! C.—A potter may mould afresh the clay as long as it is soft, but God can change the hardest heart. W.

Ver. 8. Shall repent, having free-will, though prevented by grace. S. Jer.

Ver. 12. Hopes. C. 2:25. Sept. "we are valiant men." H.

Ver. 13. Virgin. The disorders of Israel are thus enhanced. C.

Ver. 14. Snow. It continues on Libanus seven or eight months, (La Roque quoted. Univ. Hist. ii. p. 363) or all the year; (Tacit. Hist. v. 6.) and hence the mountain is justly denominated "white," as the Alps and Albion are from albon. Bochart. Parkhurst, p. 155. H.—Away. Yet my people abandon me, to serve idols! Heb. may have many other senses to the same purpose. Sept. "Shall the mountain springs fail, or snow from Libanus? Shall a stream forcibly driven by the wind, turn aside?" H.—The laws of nature are observed by inanimate things, and shall my people be so foolish as to follow mere vanity.

Ver. 15. Ancient; followed by the patriarchs. C. 6:16.

Ver. 16. Head, through contempt (C.) and pity. Lam. 2:15.

Ver. 17. Burning. Heb. kadim, "eastern," (H.) coming from Desert Arabia. Ex. 10:13. C.—Back. Thus the Lord now treats the synagogue. S. Jer.

Ver. 18. Prophet. Jeremias will not cease to upbraid us with our transgressions; or we have guides as good as him, and we shall not be left destitute, as he would intimate.—Tongue, detraction; or make him suffer for what he says. In all the transactions of this prophet, Christ was foreshewn; (C.) and here, particularly, the Jews demand the crucifixion. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 20. Remember, &c. This is spoken in the person of Christ, persecuted by the Jews, and prophetically denouncing the evils that should fall upon them in punishment for their crimes. Ch.—Jeremias had prayed earnestly for the people. C. 14:17. H.

Ver. 21. Therefore. He foretells of the event, and approves of the chastisement of the impenitent, (C.) whose “impurity might be a bad precedent for others. S. Jer. See C. 17:18.

Ver. 22. For. Prot. “when.” H.—Robber. So Nabuchodonosor and all professional conquerors are styled. C.

Ver. 23. Destroy. Heb. “with them.” use them as vessels of ignominy: abutere. H.

JEREMIAS 19

Ver. 1. Priests. They were to furnish the vessel, and accompany the prophets. v. 10. Sept. “and thou shalt take some of,” &c. H.—Words and actions together instruct most powerfully. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 2. Gate, which must have been to the south-east of Jerusalem, leading to the valley. C.—Sept. “Charseith gate.” H.—Here the common people were buried, after the reign of Josias, who contaminated the place where the idol Moloc had been adored.

Ver. 3. Tingle, as if he had heard a sudden noise or clap of thunder. C.

Ver. 4. Profaned. Lit. “rendered strange.” H.—I have no farther regard for it.—Innocents: their own children. v. 5. C. 7:31.

Ver. 5. Mind. Perhaps the people stupidly thought thus to honour him; but God pointedly condemns such sacrifices.

Ver. 6. Valley. Sept. “burial-place of slaughter.” v. 2. Here the Chaldees slew many.

Ver. 9. Sons, to punish them for their cruel sacrifices. S. Jer.—This was verified under Sedecias. Lam. 2:10 and 4:10. Ezech. 5:10.

Ver. 11. Again. The captives indeed returned, so that this must not be urged too much. C.—Yet the Romans strictly fulfilled this prophecy, (S. Jer. Sanctius) and the city was built in another place, and styled Ælia. H.—God can perform what is impossible to man. C. 18:3. Mat. 19. W.

Ver. 13. Topheth. This sentence was not in S. Jerom’s Hebrew copy, but in the Sept. (C.) with some variations: (H.) “All the houses of the kings of Juda, like the place of Topheth,” is added by the Sept. S. Jer. —In Grabe they agree with the present Heb. and Chal. only rendering, “shall be as a place in ruin, for the defilements in all,” &c. H.—Of heaven: the moon, &c. 4 K. 23:12. Josias could not entirely root out this impiety. C. 32:29. His wicked son Joachaz or Sellum, was probably now on the throne, when the prophet went to the potter, &c. C. 18 to 21.

Ver. 14. People. Many still resorted to the temple. C.

JEREMIAS 20

Ver. 1. Son, or descendant. His father was Melchia. C. 21:1 and 1 Par. 9:12. C.—Chief: high priest, (Theod.) or rather a chief officer, (C. 29:25) or prince, (Matt. 26:27. Tolet. Grot.) whose duty it was to take up impostors. He treated Jeremias in this light. C.—See Lu. 22:52. H.

Ver. 2. Struck, or seized. Grot.—Upper gate, nearer the temple. C.

Ver. 3. Phassur. This name signifies, increase and principality; and therefore is here changed to Magor-Missabib, or “fear on every side,” to denote the evils that should come upon him in punishment of his opposing the word of God. Ch.—Aquila renders Posseur, “a stranger,” and S. Jer. “blackness of visage.” H.—It may also mean, “one who causes paleness.” C.—Mogur may signify “fear or distress.” Sept. and Syr. “an exile.” H.—He deserved to be thus treated. v. 6. C.—He would be terrified by many enemies. W.

Ver. 6. Lie. He was therefore a false prophet, and vexed that Jeremias should contradict him. C.

Ver. 7. Thou hast deceived, &c. The meaning of the prophet is not to charge God with any untruth; but what he calls deceiving, was only the concealing from him, when he accepted of the prophetic commission, the greatness of the evils which the execution of that commission was to bring upon him. Ch.—Heb. “thou hast enticed me,” when I declined the office. T.—God never promised that he should suffer no persecution. H.—Jeremias might also have supposed that he was to be sent to the Gentiles. C. 1:5. S. Jer. in C. xxv. 18.—The oriental languages are much more lofty than ours, and express common things in the strongest manner. C.—We may perceive the different emotions of fear and joy (D.) with which the prophet was actuated, like S. Paul, and our Saviour himself. The saints evince the weakness of man and the power of divine grace. C.—Heb. “If thou, Lord, hast deceived me, I am,” &c. Tournemine.

Ver. 8. Day. They keep asking where are these enemies from the north, the plagues? &c. C.—He is sorry to see the word of God despised, (Theod.) and is guilty of a venial pusillanimity, concluding that his words had no good effect. M.

Ver. 9. And there, or “for,” &c. I was grieved continually. Sanctius.—I could not however refrain from speaking. Acts 17:16 and 1 Cor. 9:16. Job 32:18.

Ver. 10. Side, seeking an opportunity to ruin me, as the Pharisees did our Saviour. Ps. 40:10. C.—Prot. “familiar watched for my halting, saying, peradventure he,” &c. H.

Ver. 12. Let me see, &c. This prayer proceeded not from hatred or ill-will, but zeal of justice. Ch.—He expresses in a human manner a future punishment.

Ver. 13. Sing. God having shewn that his prayer should be heard, he gives thanks, (C.) and thus shews that what he is going to say proceeds not from impatience. Theod.

Ver. 14. Cursed, &c. In these and the following words of the prophet, there is a certain figure of speech to express with more energy the greatness of the evils to which his birth had exposed him. Ch.—The wicked would deem the day of his birth cursed, or unlucky. M.—Jeremias was now in prison, (Grot.) and people in pain express themselves forcibly, particularly in the East. v. 7. Job 3:2. C.—Perhaps no man had announced the tidings of his birth, or he might be no longer living to feel the effects of a curse: as the day was certainly irrevocably past. H.

Ver. 16. Repented, is decree for the ruin of Sodom being fixed.—Noon. This is more extraordinary than at midnight. Let him always be terrified with dismal sounds. C.

Ver. 17. Who. Sept. “because he (the Lord. D. T.) slew me not in my mother’s womb.” H.—Syr. Grot. &c. explain the Heb. in the same sense, though it may also agree with the Vulg. from the womb, or as soon as I was born. O that I had never seen the light! C.—He abstracts from the effects of original sin. T.—It is better not to exist than to be in constant misery. Mat. 26. S. Jer. W.—The prophet bewailed the abuse which was made of God’s word, by unbelievers. v. 8. H.

JEREMIAS 21

Ver. 1. Sent, after Nabuchodonosor had returned from Egypt. A. 3415. This consultation should be placed after C. 37. C.—Phassur, specified above, and C. 38:1. (C.) or a different person. S. Jer. Pisc.—Sophonias, the second priest, (C. 37:3 and 52:24) of the 24th class, (1 Par. 24:18) who was slain at Reblatha. C.—Jeremias threatens the great ones to C. 29 and is persecuted. He spoke this when Nabuchodonosor invaded the country. W.

Ver. 4. City. The people shall turn their arms against each other; or rather the Chaldees shall use their weapons to destroy them. C.

Ver. 6. Pestilence. Sept. “death;” the sword, and various diseases. H.

Ver. 7. To them. This was verified, C. 52 and 4 K. 24.

Ver. 8. Death; the former if they submit, the latter if they fight, v. 9. C.—God’s grace is ever ready, that sinners may be converted. W.

Ver. 9. Spoil. He shall be happy to escape naked. C. 38:3. C.

Ver. 13. Valley. He speaks to Jerusalem, confiding in the strength of her situation, upon rocks, surrounded with a deep valley. Ch.—Lit. “valley, solid and in a plain.” H.—Isaias (22:1) styles it ironically, “the valley of vision.” C.—Jerusalem was situated on many rocks. Jos. Bel. vi. 6.

Ver. 14. Doings. Heb. “studies.” So “Your studious pursuits” occurs, v. 12, in many Heb. MSS. though the printed copy have, “their;” and “spoiled” for apprised. Kennicott.—Forest, the temple, which is called Libanus, (Zac. 11:2) and the houses built of cedar-wood, (4 K. 25:9. C.) particularly the royal palace of the forest. 3 K. 7. H.

JEREMIAS 22

Ver. 1. Go. The contents of this chapter are of a more ancient date than those of the foregoing chapter; for the order of time is not always observed in the writings of the prophets. Ch. W.—King Joakim, who succeeded Sellum, A. 3394. Usher.

Ver. 5. Myself, having none greater. Heb. 6:13. Oaths evince the insincerity of men, who distrust each other; but when God condescends to use them, it shews men’s incredulity.—House, the temple, or rather the palace, where the king was sitting at the gate, v. 2. C.

Ver. 6. Galaad, the head of Libanus. By Galaad, a rich and fruitful country, is here signified the royal palace of the kings of the house of David; by Libanus, a high mountain abounding in cedar-trees, the populous city of Jerusalem. Ch. W. Theodor.—Both mountains are connected. S. Jer. Strabo xvi.—Yet the proper Galaad was at some distance, and on the side of Ammon very barren. The palaces had arisen from a miserable state to resemble Libanus. They shall surely be destroyed. C.—The advantageous situation of Jerusalem should not protect it, no more than it had done Galaad. 4 K. 15:29. Jun. Grot.

Ver. 7. Prepare. Lit. sanctify; (Ch.) as various religious ceremonies were used before the declaration of war, and to know what would be the success. C.—The Chaldees were destined to execute God's decrees. S. Jer.—Cedars; fine buildings, (v. 14. C.) and chiefs. H.

Ver. 10. Dead. He means the good king Josias, who by death was taken away, so as not to see the miseries of his country.—Away. Sellum, alias Joschaz, who was carried captive to Egypt. Ch. v. 12 and 4 K. 23:33. C.—He was the fourth son of Josias, (1 Par. 3:15) and had probably the title of king after the death of Sedecias. W.

Ver. 13. Friend. Joakim forced his subjects to work for him for nothing.

Ver. 14. Wide. Heb. “measured;” large, and well-proportioned.—Vermilion, (cynopide.) This colour was invented in the town of Pontus, and was used for statues, &c. Pliny xxxiii. 6. and xxxv. 6. Wisd. 13:14. C.—Heb. shashar (H.) may mean indigo. Jun. C.

Ver. 15. Cedar; Josias. C.—Shall thy magnificent palaces secure thy empire? H.—Him. Obey the Lord, in like manner, that thou mayst prosper.

Ver. 18. Sister. They shall not condole with his consort.

Ver. 19. Jerusalem. C. 36:30. He died indeed with or like his fathers. 4 K. 24:6. But it is not said that he was buried. S. Jer.—The Chaldees designed to send him to Babylon, (2 Par. 36:6) but slew him on the road, (Usher, A. 3405) or treated his corpse ignominiously after his arrival. Grot.

Ver. 20. Go; Jerusalem. The verbs are feminine.—Lovers; citizens, or Egyptians, &c. C. 27:2.

Ver. 22. Pastors, or princes, whose expectations of aid will be frustrated. Osee 12:1. Chal. "Thy leaders shall be scattered to all the winds."

Ver. 24. Jechonias: Joachin, (4 K. 24:6. W.) or Chenias, who did not take warning by his predecessor's misfortune.—Ring, or seal, if he were most dear to me, the prime minister of the greatest monarch. Agg. 2:24. C.—Alexander gave his ring to Perdiccas, designating him his successor, or regent. Curt. x.

Ver. 26. Mother; Nohesta, (4 K. 24:8) who perverted, (C.) or did not correct him in his youth. H.

Ver. 27. Mind; ardently desiring and expecting to be liberated. C.

Ver. 28. Jechonias. Prot. "Koniah, a despised broken idol? is he," &c. Sept. Alex. "Jechonias has been dishonoured as a vessel, or which there is no need, for he hath been snatched and cast," &c. H.

Ver. 30. Write this man barren. That is childless: not that he had no children, but that his children should never sit on the throne of Juda. Ch. 5:28. Mat. 1:12. Ezech. 17:24. Zorobabel was of his seed, yet he never obtained the title or sovereign power of a king. The Machabees were of a different family. S. Jer.—Joachin, or Jechonias, was restored indeed to some favour, (4 K. 25:27) but not to the kingdom, no more than any of his posterity, till Christ. W.

JEREMIAS 23

Ver. 1. Pastors. Successors of Josias (C.) and false prophets. M.

Ver. 3. Multiplied. The prophets subjoin tidings of peace to such as might cause affliction. Theodoret.

Ver. 4-5. Pastors; Zorobabel, &c. as figures of Christ, and of the pastors of his Church.—No more, as much as formerly. So many expressions must be understood.—Branch. Sept. "orient."—Reign. Zorobabel was not chief governor, (C.) though at the head of his tribe. H.—The kingdom of Christ was not of this world. Jo. 18:36. C.—He alone imparts justice to others. W.

Ver. 6. Saved: less disturbed. The world shall be redeemed. Lu. 2:14. Eph. 2:14.—Just. Heb. "Justice," by whom we are made just. He is the true God. Col. 2:9. 14. No man could bear this title: and Grotius insidiously attempts to apply it to the Jews, though the Chal. &c. clearly speak of the Messiah. He must be read with great caution. C.—Sept. “This is his name, which the Lord will call him, Josedech. In the prophets. 9. My,” &c. H.—Josedech means “the Lord justice.” C.—Sym. “Lord, justify us.”

Ver. 8. Land. The deliverance from Egypt and Babylon were emblems of man’s redemption, which was accomplished by far greater miracles.

Ver. 9. Prophets of falsehood. He directs his discourse to them, and afterwards to the priests, being filled with amazement at their impending ruin.

Ver. 10. Adulterers; impostors or idolaters.—Cursing of the Lord, or the abuse of his sacred name. C.—Unlike. Heb. “not right.” H.

Ver. 11. Defiled. Heb. “hypocrites.” My priests retain the appearance of religion, to join with impostors in deluding the people.

Ver. 14. Jerusalem. These were far worse, as they pretended to be inspired by God, whereas those of Samaria publicly adhered to Baal; so that the people must have been foolish to have been deceived by them. C.

Ver. 15. Gall, or something mortally bitter. C. 9:15. H.

Ver. 16. Own. To rely on private judgment, and not on the Church, is a mark of falsehood. W.

Ver. 17. Blaspheme. Heb. “despise;” or Sept. “reject disdainfully the word of the Lord, you,” &c. C. 6:14 and 8:11.

Ver. 18. Counsel. Heb. “secret.” Which of you is acquainted with his designs? I will inform you, that your perdition is at hand. v. 20. C.

Ver. 21. Not send. The want of mission proves a prophet or preacher to be false. W.

Ver. 22. I should. Some copies read avertissent, “they would have turned,” conformably with the Heb. &c. and we should suspect that this was a mistake of the transcriber, if S. Jerom did not agree with the Vulg. in his commentary, (C.) though not in express terms: (H.) “I also should not have abandoned them to impurity ... Let us behold how heretics, having once given way to despair, ... seek the gratification of their sensual appetite.” S. Jer.

Ver. 23. Off? Can you so easily penetrate my designs, or escape my fury? Am I like your idols of yesterday? Sept. and Theodot. “I am a God at hand,” &c. which agrees with the sequel. C.

Ver. 27. Dreams, as if God had favoured them with his revelations. H.—Fathers; the false prophets of Baal, whom these imitate.

Ver. 28. Dream, to those who are really sent by God, (C.) and recognized. 1 Cor. 14:29. H.

Ver. 29. Pieces? True prophets will have a zeal for the conversion of souls. C. 20:9. Heb. 4:12.

Ver. 30. Neighbour, causing those whom I have sent to be disregarded.

Ver. 31. Use. Hebrew also, “sharpen, or render smooth,” and insinuating. Ps. 49:16. C.

Ver. 32. Wonders. Prot. “lightness.” Sept. “frauds,” or pretended miracles. H.—False prophets cannot work true miracles: but it is more difficult to distinguish these than the former mark of being lawfully sent. v. 21. W.

Ver. 33. Burden, Massa, (H.) denotes a weight, or sometimes a prediction. C.

Ver. 34. Burden of the Lord. This expression is here rejected and disallowed, at least for those times: because it was then used in mockery and contempt by the false prophets, and unbelieving people, who ridiculed the repeated threats of Jeremias under the name of his burdens. Ch.

Ver. 35. Answered. I will make you alter your language by chastisements.

Ver. 39. Take. Heb. of the Masorets, (C.) “I, even I, will utterly forget (Prot. H.) or abandon you.” Chal. But the sense of the Sept. and Vulg. seems preferable. C.

JEREMIAS 24

Ver. 1. Engravers. Heb. “those who enclose.” 4 K. 24:14 and 1 K. 13:19.

Ver. 2. Season. Appearing in autumn and ripe in spring. Mic. 7:1. C.

Ver. 5. Regard. Lit. “know,” with love. Ps. 1:6. H.—Jechonias was treated with honour, (4 K. 25:27) as well as Daniel (2:48) and Zorobabel, of the same family. C. 29:5. The captives, under Sedecias, (v. 8) were much more abused. C. 29:17. C.—This is the literal sense; the mystical shews that the good shall be rewarded. W.

Ver. 6. Up, till the Messias appear, and the true Israel of God, his disciples, to whom the promises chiefly pertain. They will continue for ever. If this answer does not give satisfaction, as it ought, we may say that the Jews did not comply with the condition, and were therefore abandoned to the Romans. C.

Ver. 8. Egypt, to which they fled contrary to the prophet's advice. 4 K. 25:26.

JEREMIAS 25

Ver. 1. Babylon, when he was associated by Nabopolassar, three years before his death, A. 3397. This year Joakim was taken to be conducted to Babylon, though he was afterwards permitted to remain on very hard conditions, while the sacred vessels, Daniel, &c. were taken away, and the 70 years of captivity commenced. They ended in the first of Cyrus, A. 3468. Usher—This chap. should be placed before the 24th and after the 26th. C.—The prophets did not observe the order of time. C. 21. W.

Ver. 3. Josias. He prophesied nineteen years under him, and three under his successors.

Ver. 4. All. We know of Joel, Habacuc, Sophonias, and Holda. C.

Ver. 9. My servant. So this wicked king is here called; because God made him his instrument in punishing the sins of his people. Ch. W.—He thought himself more than man, but he was only the rod destined for the fire.

Ver. 10. Sound, or songs of women turning the mill. Mat. 24:41. C.—Lamp, or illuminations, on account of some victory, (H.) or festival. Pers. v. 180. The Jews “light a lamp for the sabbaths,” (Sen. Ep. xcv.) before they commence. H.

Ver. 11. Years. Ver. 1. The neighbouring nations were also involved in this calamity, and were to be sent back by Cyrus. C.—Another period of 70 years is specified, (C. 29:10) during which the city and temple should remain in ruins, till the second of Hystaspes, A. 3485. Usher—This system is not without difficulties. The present prediction seems rather to refer to the desolation, (Vatab. Agg. 1:2) as appears from Zac. 1:12 or the prophet speaks of the same event in both places, dating from the year preceding the capture of Jerusalem, (A. 3415), till Darius gave entire liberty to the Jews, A. 3485. We differ from Usher in the years allotted to Cyrus, who began to restore the Jews. 1 Esd. 1:5. C.—These 70 years are dated from the 11th of Sedecias. W.

Ver. 12. Punish. Literally, visit upon. Ch.—Cyrus overturned the monarchy, and the city was ruined by degrees. Is. 13 and 14 and 21:1. Ezek. 1:5. C.

Ver. 14. Kings. They perfidiously joined the Chaldees, after making a league with Sedecias. C. 27:3. This is condemned, (C.) and not precisely their submitting to Nabuchodonosor. C. 28:8. Their league with Juda was indeed wrong; but the infringement of it was another crime. Sept. is here much transposed almost to the end. See Grabe. H. —Jeremias had prophesied against the nations, though his words are given. C. 46. &c.

Ver. 15. Fury. Chastisement. Is. 51:17.—All, who might be then at Jerusalem. Sanctius thinks Jeremias travelled into all these countries: most believe it was only done in vision. He might write to them. C.—The cup metaphorically denotes God's wrath. Ps. 74:9. W.

Ver. 18. As, &c. He probably inserted this (H.) after the event, (Vat.) or the country was much distressed even under Sedecias.

Ver. 19. Pharao, who was defeated (Ezec. 30:25) coming to assist Juda, (C. 37) and again plundered after the taking of Tyre. Ezec. 29:18.

Ver. 20. In. Heb. "the mixed multitude," (Ex. 12:38. C.) or "Arabs." Grot.—Ausitis, near Palmyra. Job 1:1.—Azorus, taken by the Egyptians, and afterwards by the Chaldees. C. 47:2.

Ver. 21. Ammon. The details are given in C. 48 and 49. Ezec. 25 to 34. Abdias and Sophonias.

Ver. 22. Kings. Ithobaal (Jos. Ant. x. 11.) had many governors under him. Nabuchodonosor besieged Tyre for 13 years. Ezec. 26. &c.—Sea, or Gibraltar. See Jos. sup. v. 22. H.—He had navies on the Mediterranean. Ezec. 30:9.

Ver. 23. Buz. Scenite Arabs, who cut off the hair of the eyebrows. C. 9:26. These Saracens left the hair below the ears long, as the Polonians and Hungarians do. W.

Ver. 25–26. Zambri, sprung from Cethura, and dwelling in Arabia, (C.) or Persia, (S. Jer.) where Pliny (vi. 28.) places the Zamarenians.—Elam. Persians, (H.) by the sword of Alexander, (S. Jer.) or Cyrus subdued those who were subject to the Medes, and united the two nations.—North. Armenia, &c. subdued by Cyrus and by Alexander.—Brother. When Cyrus stood up for the Persians. All shall drink, as at a feast, (C.) of this bitter wine.—Face, and forming the empire of Babylon. H.—Sesac. That is Babel, or Babylon; which after bringing all these people under her yoke, should quickly fall and be destroyed herself. Ch.—The Chaldees are not expressed, to avoid their resentment. The sh in sheshac, is at the same distance from the end as b in Babel is from the beginning of the alphabet. See S. Jer. H. 2 Tim. 4:17.—Yet they are not elsewhere spared. C. 49. &c. Sesac was probably the idol, “anais or the moon.” C.—The Sacean feasts were very dissolute, like the saturnalia at Rome. Dio. Chrys. iv. Strabo xi. C.—Cyrus took Babylon after he had conquered the rest of Asia, and then seizing Nabonides at Borsippe, which was sacred to Anais, “the moon,” (C.) or Diana, (Strabo xv.) suffered him to die in peace. Berossus in Jos. c. Ap. 1.—Thus fell the king of Sesac, an idol worshipped both at Borsippe and at Babylon.

Ver. 29. City. Jerusalem first fell a prey.

Ver. 30. Beauty. The temple, which was like the palace (C.) of the great king. H.—Grapes. Great feasting was then customary. The soldiers rushing to battle, “answer” the Lord. Sept. C.—People encouraged one another by songs under the labour of the vine-press, as those in distress must do. W.

Ver. 31. Flesh. He will justify his conduct, particularly at the last day.

Ver. 32. To nation. Jerusalem, Tyre, Syria, desert Arabia, Ammon, Idumea, and Egypt, shall fall one after another. Thus Cyrus will attack the Medes, Asia, and Babylon.

Ver. 34. Leaders. Sept. “rams.” He addresses the princes.—Vessels. Sept. “chosen rams,” fattened for slaughter.

Ver. 37. Silent. The places where you fed your flocks so delightfully, are laid waste.

Ver. 38. The dove. This is commonly understood of Nabuchodonosor, whose military standard, they say, was a dove. But the Hebrew word Jonah, which is here rendered a dove, may also signify a waster or oppressor, which name better agrees to that unmerciful prince; or by comparison, as a dove’s flight is the swiftest, so would their destruction come upon them. Ch.—Sept. “waste or impassible before the great sword. C. 4:7. H.—While God, like a lion, protected his people, none durst invade them. M.—What is said respecting the Babylonian standards is very dubious, (Grot. C.) as the same expression is applied to the Persians, (C. 50:16. M.) though it may there also be understood of the Chaldees. H.—God is like a dove, yet terrible. W.

JEREMIAS 26

Ver. 1. Beginning, after Joakim had reigned some time. v. 21.

Ver. 2. Word. This example all pastors should follow, in the midst of dangers. C.

Ver. 3. If. God is not ignorant, (C.) but he preserves man’s free-will. S. Jer.—He threatens conditionally, if people persist in evil. W.

Ver. 6. Silo. C. 7:12. C.—Curse. No greater punishment could be threatened or endured in this world. H.

Ver. 8. Death. The pretext was plausible, as God seemed to have promised the temple an eternal duration. 3 K. 9:3. The Jews accused Christ of the like crime. Mat. 26:61. Such questions were brought before the sanhedrim and priests. C. 26:57. But the latter are here (C.) the chief accusers with “the false prophets.” Sept. H.—The princes, moved by the elders, (v. 17) acquit the prophet, (C.) at the persuasion of Ahicam. v. 24. Several priests would probably judge along with the other princes, as the examination of impostors belonged chiefly to their tribunal. H.—All is often used for most part.

Ver. 15. Sent me. This was a complete justification. C.—None could deny but Jeremias had all the characters of a true prophet. v. 16. H.

Ver. 16. All. The populace easily changes either for better or for worse. W.

Ver. 17. Ancients. They declare what happened about 100 years before, respecting Micheas. 3:12. C.

Ver. 18. Mountain. Sion, on which the house of the Lord was built. Conquerors have sometimes ploughed up cities. C.—Jam seges est ubi Troja fuit. Ovid, ep. i.

Ver. 20. There was. The adversaries make this reply, or the others contrast the conduct of Joakim with the piety of Ezechias.

Ver. 23. Egypt, as a seditious person ... Joakim was tributary to Pharaos.

Ver. 24. Ahicam. A man employed under Josias, (4 K. 22:12) and father of Godolias, who was also the protector of Jeremias. C. 39:14 and 4 K. 25:22. C.

JEREMIAS 27

Ver. 1. Joakim. This revelation was made to the prophet in the beginning of the reign of Joakim: but the bands were not sent, to the princes here named, before the reign of Sedecias. v. 3. Ch.—He wore them six or seven years. Vat. T.—But this is uncertain. Sept. omit this title. Syr. Arab. &c. read “Sedecias.” C.—As far as Juda may belong to the last chapter. S. Jerom includes the whole verse. H.—It seems to be rather a fresh prophecy, or the title may be spurious, like many in the Psalms. See C. 26:1 and 28:1. Is. 21:13.

Ver. 2. Chains. Heb. “a yoke and pole,” (C.) or piece of wood for the necks of slaves. S. Jer.—Thus would the servitude of these nations be clearly represented. H.—Bands and chains were proper signs, as they were used to bind captives. W.

Ver. 3. Edom. Thus he exercises the function of prophet among the nations. C. 1:5. These had come to compliment Sedecias, or rather to form a league.

Ver. 5. Eyes. God disposes of all princes, &c. His prophets speak boldly. C.

Ver. 6. Beasts. The property of those people, or the most barbarous nations. S. Jer.—Hangmen and executioners may in the same sense be styled God’s servants. W.

Ver. 7. His son; viz. Evilmerodach, and his son’s son, viz. Nabonydus, or Nabonadius, the Baltassar of Daniel, (chap. 5) and the last of the Chaldean kings. Ch.—Come. It will not be long before this rod is cast into the fire, the usual fate of those who execute God’s vengeance.

Ver. 9. Prophets, who deluded the Jews, as diviners did the Gentiles.

Ver. 10. To remove. Heb. “that I may,” &c. This will be the effect, though contrary to their intention.

Ver. 11. In it. None complied, and though the Idumeans, &c. joined the Chaldees against Juda, they were punished (C.) for their former league. v. 3. H.

Ver. 16. Time. Hananias specified two years, (C. 28:3) which proved false. Some “silver vessels,” (Bar. 1:8) and not those of gold, it seems, (C.) or not all, (H.) were restored at the request of Saraias. C. 51:59.

Ver. 18. Hosts. If they prevail, account me a false prophet. C.—The things taken shall not be soon restored; but more shall be conveyed away. W.

Ver. 19. To thee. Hebrew also, “concerning,” as v. 21. (H.) though (C.) inanimate things are often spoken to. S. Jer.

JEREMIAS 28

Ver. 1. Juda. So far Sanctius joins with the former chapter, improperly. In the 4th year, seems rather an interpolation; though the Sept. omit in the beginning, &c. to reconcile the passage; and others date the 4th year from the last sabbatical one, which is quite unusual. See C. 27:1. C.—Sedecias reigned 11 years, so that the 4th might be said to be the beginning. W.—Prophet. Sept. “false prophet,” to explain the meaning: the original denotes any prophet. S. Jer. H.

Ver. 3. Years. Some were brought back in the 4th of Sedecias; (C. 27:16. H.) so that this must be false, whether he spoke in the 1st or 4th year of his reign. C.

Ver. 6. Do. Heb. also, “will do.” He speaks ironically; or shews that he wishes not the misfortune of his countrymen. C.—He approves of the good thing, but warns his people that it is falsely promised. W.

Ver. 9. Truth. This criterion was given by Moses; and another was assigned in case the prophet attempted to introduce idolatry, which was not here the case. Deut. 13 and 18:20. C.

Ver. 10. Chain, or wooden yoke. C. 27:2. H.

Ver. 12. Way, mildly. God inspired him what to say soon after.

Ver. 13. Iron. Deut. 28:48. The rashness of Hananias brought a heavier punishment on his admirers, which is the lot of all who follow heresiarchs. H.

Ver. 17. Seventh month. He had spoken in the 5th of the sacred year.
v. 1. C.

JEREMIAS 29

Ver. 1. Letter. Lit. “book.” H.—It was probably sent at the beginning of the reign of Sedecias by his ambassadors, and is different from that sent by Baruch 1 and C. 52:28.—Prophets. Chal. “scribes.” C.—Sept. “false prophets.” v. 8. H.—Daniel had begun to prophesy, A. 3402. Ezechiel commenced only five years after the captivity of Jechonias. One prophet frequently instructs another, as Nathan did David. Dan. 9:2 and 1 Pet. 1:11. C.—Jeremias declares that the captivity would continue long. He comforts and rebukes to C. 40. W.

Ver. 2. Queen. Nohesta.—Eunuchs. Real, (Heb.) or “Grandee.” Chal.—Engravers. C. 24:2.

Ver. 3. Gamarias, the son of Saphan, is different. These two are unknown.

Ver. 5. Build. Establish yourselves, as you must remain a long time in captivity. We are exhorted not to be attached to the things of the world, to remind us that we shall not live long. C. 16:2 and 35:7 and 1 Cor. 7:29.

Ver. 7. Peace. We must submit to the magistrates, where we reside. Bar. 1:11 and 1 Tim. 2:1.

Ver. 8. Prophets. There were many false ones. v. 21. Ezec. 13.—Dreams. The prophets, or people. They are vain.

Ver. 10. Seventy. Dating from the 4th of Joakim to the 1st of Cyrus, A. 3468. C. See C. 25:1. 11. H.

Ver. 11. An end. Sept. “these things.” This version is much abridged. From v. 15 to 21 is omitted in S. Jerom’s and the Rom. edit.; but not in the Comp. or Theodoret. C.—Grabe inserts what is wanting, and places the 15th at the end of our 20th verse. H.

Ver. 15. Said. Expressing your confidence in Providence; or rather, if we join this with what follows, he rebukes them for trusting in false prophets, who represented their condition as worse than that of their brethren, who were left behind; whereas it was really better. v. 17 and C. 24:2. 8. C.—The deluded people suppose that the false prophets had been sent by God. W.

Ver. 19. By night, or “early,” de nocte, as soon as the night was over.

H.

Ver. 22. Curse. v. 18. The malediction which has befallen the Jews, “overtake thee.” W.—Fire, in frying-pans, (see 2 Mac. 7:5) or cauldrons of boiling oil. This death shews that these were not the infamous judges who tempted Susanna, (C.) as the Jews quoted by (H.) S. Jerom, Salien, &c. would infer from v. 23 and Dan. 13:57. They were stoned to death by the people. ib. 62. C.—Yet the king might order their dead bodies to be cut in two and burnt, to express his horror of their wicked conduct. Dan. 13:55. 59. H.

Ver. 23. Folly. A crime. Judge 19:23 and 2 K. 13:12.—Witness, the sovereign truth. C.

Ver. 24. And. God orders his prophet what to say, to an accusation sent from Babylon, in consequence of the former letter. v. 5. 28. H.—Nehelamite, “torrent,” (S. Jer.) or “dreamer.” We know of no place of this name.

Ver. 25. The second priest, (4 K. 25:18) a chief officer of the temple. C. 21:1.

Ver. 26. Joiada, whose zeal had been conspicuous long before, under Joas, in persuading him to destroy the false prophets. 4 K. 11:17. Sophonias is exhorted to imitate him, by treating Jeremias in like manner. C.—Thou. Heb. “ye should be officers.” Prot. H.—There were many chief priests.—Raveth. Heb. “is possessed, and counterfeits the prophet.” Such were to be slain, being confined till sentence had been passed. Deut. 18:20. C.

Ver. 28. Time, before you will return. H.—Sophonias read the letter, approving of its contents, (S. Jer.) though this is not certain. He took no violent steps against Jeremias, as Phassur had done. H.

Ver. 32. Sit, in an honourable station, or they shall all die. C.

JEREMIAS 30

Ver. 2. Book. This was spoken in the reign of Sedecias, for the people’s conviction. The prophet had received orders to write in the 4th year of Joakim. C. 36:1. C.

Ver. 3. Come. Some in S. Jerom explain this and the following chapter of the end of the world, when all shall confess Christ. Others refer them to the preaching of the gospel alone. E. T.—But the return from captivity is specified, as prefiguring that event. S. Thomas, &c. C.—It is probable that many of the ten tribes returned to Samaria. C. 31. Ezec. 33. W.

Ver. 4. To Juda. All the race of Abraham are concerned. The kingdom was no longer divided.

Ver. 5. We. Jeremias is ordered to express the alarms of the captives, at the news of the destruction of Jerusalem, or rather of the Chaldee empire, by Cyrus. They were naturally afraid that they would also suffer.

Ver. 6. Bear. Lit. “beget,” generat. But it has here the former signification, (H.) pariat. Vat.—Yellow. The Babylonians are in great anxiety. C.

Ver. 7. Great, and terrible for this city, the outer walls of which shall be demolished, (Beros. C.) and all its glory perish. H.—Of it. Cyrus liberated the Jews. 1 Esd. 1.

Ver. 8. Strangers. Idols. The people were not so prone to worship them. Yet the Jews were almost constantly subject to foreigners (C.) despectissima pars servientium, Macedonibus invalidis ... sibi ipsis reges imposuere. Tacit. Hist. 5.—Christ granted a more perfect liberty to the faithful. Jo. 8:33. C.

Ver. 9. David. That is, Christ, of the house of David. Ch. Ezec. 37:24. Osee 3:5.—Grotius and some modern Jews, in opposition to their ancestors, (Chal. Kimchi, &c.) and to all Christians, would understand Zorobabel, though he was never possessed of the title or authority of king. C.—The prophecy may allude to him, but it is fulfilled only in Christ. Theodoret.

Ver. 11. Nations, which are now no more. Grabe supplies v. 10. 11. 15 and 22. H.—Judgment, like a father, (C.) though the chastisement may seem cruel. v. 14. H.—Heb. “with justice, but I will not deny thee for ever.” Chal. “utterly.” C.—Only the Church is preserved continually. All other kingdoms change. W.

Ver. 13. Up. There is none to judge thy cause, or to be thy physician. C.

Ver. 14. Lovers. Nations which had seduced thee to worship their idols. H.—Enemy. This judgment (v. 11) was requisite. C.

Ver. 16. Prey. The Romans utterly overturned the Macedonian empire, (H.) as the former had done the Persian, and they the Chaldee monarchy, which has risen on the ruins of the Assyrian empire. But the Jews rise as it were from their ashes. C.

Ver. 17. Close. Sept. “remove the healing plaster from thy painful wound.” H.

Ver. 18. Temple. After 70 years, it was rebuilt. The Church was founded on a rock. W.

Ver. 19. Play, or laugh. C.—Prot. “make merry.” C. 31:4.—Lessened. The Jews were as numerous in our Saviour’s time H. as ever they had been. C.

Ver. 21. Leader. Zorobabel, the figure (Theod.) of Christ, who is here meant. C.—He springs from Jacob. W.—The sceptre was not taken away till his coming. Gen. 49. H.—Who. Cyrus alludes to this passage in his decree. 1 Esd. 1. C.—The prediction is fully verified in Christians. S. Jer.—Christ is near to God, being one. Jo. 14. W.

Ver. 23. Wicked, at Jerusalem, or rather the Chaldees; and the Jews, who crucified their Messias. S. Jer. &c. C.

JEREMIAS 31

Ver. 1. Israel. The ten tribes returned as well as Juda, &c. C.—They were more ready to receive Christ than the other two tribes. Mat. 13. &c. W.

Ver. 2. Desert. From which the former inhabitants had been driven, (4 K. 17:6. 24. C.) or, as those under Moses were favoured, (H.) so shall the captives. Grot.—Sept. “I found him warm,” (θερμὸν, means also a lupin, which has misled the old Latin interpreters. S. Jer.) murdered “in the desert, with those slain by the sword. Go, and destroy not Israel.” H.

Ver. 3. Afar. He has seemed to despise me, (S. Jer.) or he has spoken to my ancestors. C.—Chal. He has “manifested himself long ago to our fathers. Prophet, tell them I have,” &c. Ps. 35:11 and 108:11. C.

Ver. 5. Samaria. Its wine was famous. Judg. 9:27. Jos. Bel. iii. 2.—Time, three years being elapsed. Lev. 19:35. C.—Prot. “plant, and shall eat (marg. profane) them as common things.” They shall not be too greedy, (H.) but shall have leisure to enjoy the fruits of their labour.

C.

Ver. 6. Watchmen. Some were stationed on eminences to observe the first appearances of the moon, (C.) which was a sort of festival. H.

Ver. 7. Head. Rejoice over Babylon.—Save. Heb. Hoshang, “I beg,” was usually added; and this acclamation is used by the Church.

Ver. 8. Together. All shall hasten, and there shall be no impediment. Is. 35:5.

Ver. 9. Shall, or “came” into captivity. Bar. 6:6. Ps. 125:6. Is. 66:20.—Way. They shall find every accommodation, and plenty of water. Is. 35:7 and 49:10.—Born. Chal. “beloved.” I will treat the ten tribes as well as Juda. Christ inebriates his disciples with his graces. C.—Ephraim shall be treated with all the love and attention shewn to the first-born. W.

Ver. 12. Sion. There shall be no farther schism or idolatry among them.—No more, if they prove faithful. This was not the case.

Ver. 14. Fatness. Abundant crops secured them more plentiful tythes, as long as the people preserved their religion. H.—No nation had more priests, or better provided for. C.

Ver. 15. High. Lit. “high places.” Heb. Rama. H.—There was a city of this name near Bethlehem, where Rachel was buried. Benjamin was her son, and was conducted by this road to Babylon. Chal. Grot. T.—Ephraim and Manasses were also her grandchildren, and she may bewail their captivity by personification. S. Mat. (2:18) shews that this prediction was more fully accomplished when the innocents were slain. The same passage may allude to different events. C.—All the people of God, both of the ten and of the two tribes, bewailed their captivity, and the mothers lamented for those slain near Bethlehem. W.

Ver. 16. Reward. A time fixed for thy tears being dried up. Is. 16:14 and 40:10.

Ver. 18. I was. Chal. Theodoret, and S. Chrys. have “not.” But chastisement produced a salutary effect upon the ten tribes. Osee 6:1 and 14:3.—Convert. Bring me back from captivity and from my evil ways. This must be attributed to grace. C.—We cannot repent without it. S. Jer.—Da quod jubes. S. Aug. Conf. x. 19. and 31. and 37.—God’s grace is the principal cause of justification. Man’s co-operation is the secondary cause. W.

Ver. 19. Thigh, through grief. Femur mœrenti plangere dextrâ. Metam. xi.—Cyrus struck his thigh, mounted his horse, and went to attend the funeral of Abradates. Xen. vii.—So did Achilles for Patroclus. Il. xvi.—Youth, being seduced by Jeroboam.

Ver. 20. I spoke. Heb. “my word is in him,” and he is docile to my instructions.

Ver. 21. Tower, to bewail thy past follies; or signals to know the way, or tombs for thy beloved.

Ver. 22. Daughter. Bury thy dead, and delay thy return no longer. The Israelites did not soon make use of the leave granted by Cyrus. C.—Man. Heb. “a hero.” T.—The fathers generally explain this of the incarnation. C.—Christ had the perfect use of reason in the virgin’s womb. H.—He was the brightness of his Father’s glory. Heb. 1:3. Even some ancient Jews apply this to the Messias. Galatin. 6:14. But the moderns understand that women would offer themselves in marriage; the times would be so happy. This was not so unusual in countries where polygamy prevailed. Ruth 3:9. Is. 4:1. Cant. 8:1. C.—Hence this is hardly the meaning; for God promises something new. H.—“The Lord hat created a new thing in a woman.” Aquila.—Symmachus agrees nearly with the Sept. “because the Lord has created thee by salvation a new plantation. Men shall go about in thy salvation.” This “might be explained, if it were not sacrilegious to argue respecting God’s word by human sense,” says S. Jerom; though this censure of “the Vulgate” (Sept.) seems rather harsh. He complains here of his copy. Theodoret explains it of the apostles going through the world to spread the gospel. H.—Behold whence thy happiness must come, (M.) O thou who hast so long proved faithless, going astray after many lovers. H.—Christ, in his mother’s womb, was in stature small, but a perfect man (W.) in the use of reason, &c. H.

Ver. 23. Bless thee. Thus the captives speak in rapture at their return.

Ver. 24. Together. Jerusalem shall be large enough to contain all, at the great festivals.

Ver. 26. To me. Thus Jeremias concludes his prediction with joy. C.

Ver. 27. Men. They shall increase exceedingly by my blessing. H.—Beasts were the source of their riches. Hence pecunia is derived from pecus. W.

Ver. 29. Edge. Such observations had been too often made. Ezech. 18:12. H.—Henceforward you shall not suffer for the faults of Achab, Manasses, &c. Each one shall bear his own burden. The captivity has been like a deluge, cleaning all away. C.

Ver. 31. Covenant. That made with the captives was not such. Their covenant is grown old, and at an end, as S. Paul shews. Heb. 8:8. They were not indeed divided, as they had been. Ezech. 37:16.

Ver. 32. Dominion. As a husband, (Heb. C.) or “Lord.” H.—“I despised them.” Sept. Heb. 8.

Ver. 33. Heart. They were more docile after their return: yet still their service was very imperfect and forced. How many false traditions were received, at the coming of Christ! This of course, regards his disciples.

Ver. 34. Lord. Christ himself came to instruct mankind. The true God was better known than ever, even by the illiterate. Yet God requires us to have recourse to men, in order to know his truths, as S. Paul was sent to Hananias, and the eunuch to Philip. H.—The apostles were enlightened by the Holy Ghost, (Jo. 6:45. S. Aug. de Spir. C.) who still guides the flock by his pastors. The private spirit is too fanatical and delusive. H.—The most ignorant shall easily become acquainted with the truths of salvation. External preaching is requisite, though of little use unless grace touch the mind and the heart. T.—All will hear successively, (H.) or embrace the gospel at the same time, for several years before the last day. Houbig. pref. in Prop. 356. Is. 11:9 and 45:23. Soph. 3:9. &c. H.

Ver. 36. Ever. Like the Chanaanites and Ephraim during the captivity. Is. 7:8. God restored the latter. Yet they are again dispersed from above 17 centuries, so that this perpetuity, which shall equal the world’s duration, belongs to the Church. C.—Israel remains, not in the incredulous Jews, but in those who with the apostles embraced and propagated the faith of Christ. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 37. Out, experimentally, and not by philosophical hypotheses, which were little known in the days of Jeremias. C.—Sept. “if it be made lower.” H.—This is impossible; so it is that I should abandon Israel. Theodor.—All was not faithless. C.—The Israel of God embraced the gospel. H.

Ver. 38. Come, is only in the margin of the Hebrew, but is found properly in some MSS. Kennicott.—Corner. On the south, opposite to the former. 2 Esd. 3:1.

Ver. 40. Valley of Hinnom, or Topheth, (C. 7:32 and 19:6) where Cedron flowed. Zac. 14:4. C.—The city was much enlarged on this side, under the Machabees. Jos. Bel. vi. 6.—Ever. Yet the temple was utterly destroyed by the Romans, so that we must explain this of the Catholic Church, founded on a rock, and proof against the gates of hell, and all the malice of heretics and persecutors. Mat. 16:18. C.

JEREMIAS 32

Ver. 1. Tenth. The city had been besieged about a year, (C. 39:1) and the prophet continued to admonish the king and people of their fate. C. 34. C.—He bought land, to shew that they should one day return. W.

Ver. 2. Court, at large, so that people might come to him freely. He was not chained or in prison, as C. 37:15 and 38:6. 13. C.

Ver. 4. Eyes. They were afterwards put out at Reblatha, (H.) so that he could not see Babylon. Ezech. 12:13. W.—Sedecias was imprisoned, and buried there by the Jews. C. 34:5 and 12.

Ver. 7. Next. Priests could sell only to their fellow priests. Lev. 25:34. S. Jer.—Others might dispose of their landed property to any, until the year of jubilee. The nearest relation had the first offer, but he was not obliged to purchase. Jeremias now consented, to shew that the people should return to possess the land, though it was now in the enemy's hands. C.—Thus a Roman purchased the land on which Hannibal was encamped, despising his power and threats. V. Max. iii. 8. Livy xxvi. H.

Ver. 8. Came into the city clandestinely; or rather he entered before the siege. C.

Ver. 9. Silver. Heb. “seventeen sicles of silver.” H.—Coin was not yet used. C.

Ver. 11. Outside. “There was another copy left open for inspection, (v. 14) which custom still prevails,” says S. Jerom. H.

Ver. 14. Days, safe from dampness, &c. Thus Origen found a version of the Bible preserved at Jericho. C.—After the captivity, the owners shall claim their land.

Ver. 17. Alas. Heb. ahah, ah! only once. Sept. “O, thou Being, Lord God.” H.—Hard. Heb. also, “hidden, wonderful,” &c. C.—“When the gods perform, nothing appears incredible.” Pindar, Pyt. x. See v. 27. Lu. 1:37. H.

Ver. 18. After them, to the third and fourth generation. Ex. 34:7. His mercy is more exalted. C.

Ver. 20. Day. We remember thy ancient miracles, and witness others.

Ver. 23. Any of. Lit. “all those,” which seems better, as he who offends in one, becomes guilty of all; and the Jews certainly had observed some precepts, though they did not persevere unto the end. H.

Ver. 24. By. Lit. “at the presence of the sword,” or by its force. Ps. 59:6. W.

Ver. 25. Is given, in the eternal decrees. v. 28. H.

Ver. 29. Baal, the sun, &c. C. 19:13. Soph. 1:5 and 4 K. 23:12. C.

Ver. 30. Continually, (Sym.) “moreover,” (Aq.) or “alone.” Sept. and Theodot. v. 23. H.

Ver. 31. Built it. The Jebusites polluted it. David himself offended, as well as Solomon, and under all the kings many crimes were committed, (C.) which is always the case in large cities. These general terms only denote a great corruption, though some would be virtuous. H.

Ver. 34. It, under Achaz, Manasses, and perhaps the last kings of Juda. Ezech. 8:9.

Ver. 35. Consecrate. Heb. “make them pass” through or into the fire, to be consumed in honour of Moloc. 4 K. 21:6.—Heart. They perhaps meant to imitate Abraham. C. 7:31.

Ver. 37. Lands. What is here said must be understood of the captives, yet in such a manner that Christians are more particularly designated, for the Jews never enjoyed such perfect security, nor followed one way, nor enjoyed the eternal covenant, (v. 39. 40. C. 31:31. C.) except those who embraced the true faith of Christ. At all times one religion alone can be pleasing to God, (v. 39) and those who were saved under the old law, must have believed in a Redeemer to come, as we must do in one already past. H.—God would not suffer true believers to become extinct under the old law; much less will he since Christ’s coming. W.

Ver. 41. Truth, like a tree which shall not be eradicated.

Ver. 44. Juda, and in. A farther description of these cities is given, situated about the capital, Hebron, Sephala, (the plain) near Gaza, (C.)

and the Negeb or south country, (H.) towards Arabia. Here the excellent commentary of S. Jerom ends, to our great loss. C.—It was perhaps his last work, undertaken after the twelve minor and the other three great prophets. He never wrote on Baruch, on the epistle of Jeremias, the Gr. parts of Daniel, &c. as the Jews did not allow them to be canonical, and the point was not then decided. The Church styles S. Jerom “the greatest doctor in expounding the sacred Scriptures,” as he translated and illustrated the greatest part of them; (H.) and indeed he seems to have been the best qualified for the undertaking, of all the fathers. Du Pin.—Hence we may lament the more that we have not all his works in their genuine purity and perfection, as even the latest editions are very faulty, and proceed upon a plan which the learned do not approve. See A. Butler, Kennicott, &c. H.

JEREMIAS 33

Ver. 1. Time. Soon after the former. C.—He was comforted in prison by two visions, shewing that the Church should not perish for the sins of many. W.

Ver. 2. Thus. Heb. uses the fem. for the neuter. Sept. “forming the earth,” &c.

Ver. 3. Cry. The prophetic spirit was sometimes granted to earnest prayer. Dan. 9:2 and 10:3.

Ver. 4. To. “Concerning the houses ... and the sword of them,” who would not obey God, thus bringing on their own destruction.

Ver. 6. Their. The houses, wounds, or breaches. Heb. and Sept. C.—Peace. That is, the peace and welfare which they pray for. Ch.—I will teach them how to pray for a durable peace.

Ver. 8. Iniquity, by means of the captivity, which shall be a sort of baptism. C. 31:29. C.

Ver. 9. And it. Jerusalem, as figure of the Church. M.—Fear, worship, and desist from persecuting God in his saints, (H.) whom he so highly favours.

Ver. 11. Vows. Promised victims of thanksgiving. C.—First, when they were settled in it under Josue. H.

Ver. 13. Mountains. C. 32:44.—Numbereth them, they come into the fold. C.—Chal. “my people shall be instructed, and formed by the hand of the Messias.” Grabe supplies what follows to the end of the chap. H.

Ver. 15. Bud, or orient, Christ, (C.) of whom Zorobabel was a figure. Theodoret. All cannot be verified of the latter. v. 16. C.—The Jews themselves explain this of the Messias. Calov.—It evidently refer to him, as he was born of David, whose posterity should continue till Christ, the founder of an eternal kingdom. W.

Ver. 16. Him. Sept. Chal. &c. The Heb. has “her” Jerusalem, or the Church, which receives all its beauty from Christ. C.—See C. 23:5 where all read him. H.

Ver. 17. David. This was verified in Christ, who is of the house of David; and whose kingdom in his Church shall have no end. Ch.—The tribe of Juda continued most eminent till his coming. But there was no king till Hyrcan, and he was of another tribe. The priests governed after Nehemias, till Herod was appointed by the Romans. This must therefore be explained of Christ’s eternal kingdom. Gen. 49. C.

Ver. 18. Priests. This promise relates to the Christian priesthood; which shall also continue for ever: the functions of which (more especially the great sacrifice of the altar) are here expressed, by the name of holocausts, and other offerings of the law, which were so many figures of the Christian sacrifice. Ch.—The Levitical sacrifices have ceased for 17 centuries. But Christ will officiate by his ministers till the end of time. C.—S. Hypolitus and all the fathers agree that the blessed Eucharist is the complement of all the ancient sacrifices. W.

Ver. 21. Ministers. The promise is not conditional, but as unchangeable as the course of the seasons. C.

Ver. 24. Families of kings and priests, (Ch.) or the two kingdoms of Israel and Juda. The people complained that God had broken his word, (C.) so heretics assert that he has abandoned his Church for above 800 years. Providence watched in a particular manner over the families of Aaron and David, which enjoyed peculiar privileges, (H.) or blessings. W.

JEREMIAS 34

Ver. 1. Came, in the 11th year of Sedecias, before the Chaldees returned to their siege. C. 37:4.

Ver. 3. Go to, yet shall not see Babylon, (Ezec. 12:13) his eyes being put out. C. 32:4. C. See 4 K. 25:7. W.—Paine objects this as a false prophecy, though it was verified so terribly. Daniel, &c. would not neglect to bury the king. Watson.

Ver. 5. Peace. That is, by a natural death. Ch.—Burn thee, like Asa; (2 Par. 16:14. C.) or aromatical spices were only burnt over their dead bodies, which were also embalmed. Sanct. Vat. &c.—Tostat says that Sedecias was intoxicated, for sport, (Hab. 2:15) and died of grief in prison. C. 52:11. C.—The king of Babylon would probably not refuse him a decent burial. Watson, Let. vi.

Ver. 7. Lachis, near Hebron. Detachments were sent to different places.

Ver. 9. Brethren. The sabbatical year happened in the 9th of Sedecias, when the Chaldees approaching, caused him to shew some signs of religion. But when they departed to meet the Egyptians, the people repented of what they had done well. C.—Such a relapse offends God more than the former sins, as our Saviour shews by a parable. Mat. 18. W.

Ver. 14. End, or commencement. Glass. Gram. iii. 6. Ex. 21:2. Deut. 15:12. Lu. 2:21. C.

Ver. 16. And set. Heb. “to their own soul,” to do as they pleased. H.

Ver. 17. For you. I acknowledge you no longer as my servant. I will let loose the sword, &c. against you.

Ver. 18. Parts. This was done to signify that if they transgressed, they consented to be slain. Gen. 15:9, 17. It seems Sedecias and his subjects had solemnly ratified the covenant made at Sinai, being impressed with fear of the enemy.

Ver. 19. Eunuchs, chief officers. One was at the head of the army. 4 K. 25:19.

Ver. 21. From you, to attack Egypt. Afterwards the various detachments came and took Jerusalem. C.

Ver. 22. Command. He did not approve of their cruelty, but used them as scourges. W.

JEREMIAS 35

Ver. 1. Joakim, when Nabuchodonosor besieged him again in his 7th year. The Rechabites then pitched their tents in Jerusalem. v. 11. C.—Here we behold a figure of religious orders in the Church, as well as in the Nazarites and disciples of the prophets. Num. 6 and 4 K. 1. They observed certain rules for acquiring greater perfection, and refrained from many things which were otherwise lawful. Thus various religious orders, both of men and of women, have flourished in the Church, and though they have different names and regulations, yet they are not sects, as heretics would pretend, but all follow the same faith, use the same sacraments, and are a great ornament to the Catholic Church by their profession of the three essential vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience, in imitation of the apostles. Mat. 19:12.—Joakim. This happened before the preceding prophecies. W.

Ver. 2. Rechabites. These were of the race of Jethro, father-in-law to Moses. Ch.—All the Heb. and Latin doctors agree that the Rechabites were strangers. v. 7. 19. W.—Treasures of corn, wine, &c. Jeremias, as a priest, had free access.

Ver. 4. Of God. Prophets are generally thus designated. 4 K. 4:7. We know nothing more of this holy man.—Princes of the priests; or where princes made their offerings, or assembled to judge. C. 26:10.—Entry. He was not removeable like the other Levites. 1 Par. 9:19. 34. C.

Ver. 5. Wine. This was not an exhortation, but a trial. H.

Ver. 6. Jonadab. A man much esteemed by Jehu. 4 K. 10:15. W.

Ver. 7. Days. The reward of dutiful children. Ex. 20:12. These are models of those Christians who follow the rule of some virtuous person, in order to be at a greater distance from any transgression of the law, and to observe it with more perfection. C.—“If a father could lay such an injunction on his descendants, and they receive commendation for observing it, why may not the fathers of the Church enjoin things which are not of themselves necessary, but ... useful to avoid the occasions of evil, or to advance in virtue?” says Grotius, a Protestant, after S. Jerom, (ad Paulin.) S. Aug. in Ps. lxx. &c. H. Jonadab exhorted, and prescribed this rule, but it was not properly a command, being too arduous. T.

Ver. 11. Syria. 4 K. 24:2. The mention of these shews that this was the second siege, when Joakim was slain, and many led into captivity, (C. 52:28) with these Rechabites. C.—They lived under tents, but in case of necessity entered the city. v. 10. If they observe works of supererogation, all must surely keep God's law. W.

Ver. 14. Me. What a contrast! H.—This was only a counsel, mine a law! T.

Ver. 19. Before me, in an honourable situation (1 Par. 2:55) about the temple. It was not requisite that they should be Levites. C.—For ever. Their reward shall be eternal bliss. H.—This they sought for, as they were strangers of Madian in the country. v. 7. M.

JEREMIAS 36

Ver. 1. Fourth, towards the conclusion, after the siege was raised. v. 6. 9.

Ver. 2. Write. He had already prophesied 22 years. Now he was more frequently ordered to write. C.—He executed the order by the hand of Baruch. 5:4.

Ver. 3. If. This indicates free-will. H.—God makes this last effort, that the hearing of so many separate prophecies together might make a deeper impression.

Ver. 4. Book. This was afterwards burnt. What he wrote a second time has not come down to us, in the same order. Jeremias made us of his memory, which was directed by the Holy Spirit. C.

Ver. 5. Shut up. Not that the prophet was now in prison; for the contrary appears from v. 19 but that he kept himself shut up, by reason of the persecutions he had lately met with. See C. 26. Ch.—If he had been confined, as Grotius asserts, the king would easily have found him. C.—He and Baruch retired to some secret place, as most priests (W.) did formerly in England, (H.) that they might better exercise their functions than they could do in the hands of the persecutors. W.

Ver. 6. Read. This may sometimes have as good an effect as preaching without a book. H.—Fasting day of expiation, (Usher, A. 3398) or rather on (H.) the day prescribed in the 9th month. v. 9. Lyran. T.

Ver. 7. They. Lit. “their supplication may fall prostrate before,” &c. H.—It is personified. So Homer represents (C.) “supplications,” as daughters of Jupiter, lame, and with eyes averted, (Il. ix.) to shew how we ought to pray. Jeremias finds means to instruct the people: the word of God is not bound. 2 Tim. 2:9. C.—As many refused to hear his discourses, God ordered him to write what might be a perpetual warning and reproach, or testimony against them. W.

Ver. 9. Fast. Probably on account of the catastrophe the second year. Dan. 1:2. Many such were afterwards appointed. Zac. 7:3 and 8:19. All came to Jerusalem on such occasions.

Ver. 10. Gate, on the east, (2 Par. 20:5) leading to the court of the priests. C.

Ver. 18. Reading. No study was requisite. H.—Ink. It formerly resembled that used by printers, (C.) being composed of soot and gum. Vitruv. 7:10.

Ver. 19. Are. Thus they provide for the safety of the prophets, and perform their duty to the king.

Ver. 21. Read it. This was the third time. It was in vain afterwards to destroy the book.

Ver. 22. Winter-house. He was very magnificent, and had other apartments for summer. Though the climate was warm, fires would be useful in November.—Hearth. There was no chimney used, and the smoke went out by the door, or by holes at the top of the room, as we see in some old monasteries. C.—Charcoal was probably used. Bar. 6:42.

Ver. 23. Pages. Perhaps what was written on so many skins, (H.) or sheets of paper, pasted together, and rolled up; or there might be some marks to shew the different subjects, like the sections used in the synagogue, (C.) or our chapters; though we are assured that all was formerly written without any separation even of letters. Prot. have “leaves.” H.—Heb. “doors.” C. The secretary cut and burnt the leaves by the king’s order. v. 25. W.

Ver. 24. Afraid. They saw all without any concern, not believing that God spoke to them. They did not imitate Josias. 2 Par. 34:19.

Ver. 26. Hid them, and prevented any one from betraying them. C.—He did not remove them to a place different from what they had chosen by his direction. W.

Ver. 30. None, &c. Because his son, Joachin or Jechonias, within three months after the death of his father, was carried away to Babylon, so that his reign is not worthy to be taken notice of. Ch. Theodoret. W.—

He was subject to the Chaldees; his uncle took his place. Joakim had the burial of an ass. C. 22:18. C.—None of the following princes enjoyed the glory or power of the ancient king. S. Tho. p. 3. qu. 31. a. 2. W.

Ver. 32. Before. We cannot tell what. C.—Prot. “many like words.” H.

JEREMIAS 37

Ver. 1. Sedecias. He was less impious than his two predecessors; but too weak to do good.

Ver. 3. Pray, or consult. He wished to know whether the Chaldees would return. C.—He feared, yet ill-treated the prophet, as Herod did the baptist. W.

Ver. 6. Return, routed. C. 46:15. His army was small. Ezech. 17:17 and 30:21. This king Ephree, (C. 44:30) or Apries, had succeeded Psammis, after an interregnum of ten years’ continuance. Herod. ii. 161.—He foresaw that his own dominions would be invaded, after Jerusalem, the key, was taken. The other allies of Juda perfidiously sat still, or joined the Chaldees. C.

Ver. 8. Away. They departed indeed, but for a short time.

Ver. 9. Tent. So easy it is for God to destroy by few as well as by many! H.

Ver. 11. Possession, lately purchased. C. 32. Lyran.—Yet some think this had not yet taken place. C.—Sept. “to buy provisions among.” Heb. “to slip away thence in the midst of the people.” H.—He wished to escape the fury of his enemies at Jerusalem. C.—It is an old device of persecutors to lay false charges on the innocent, as Julian and the Arians did. Hist. Tripart. vi. 27. W.

Ver. 14. Beat him, as a traitor and fugitive.—Prison, very deep. v. 19. C.

Ver. 15. Prison. Lit. “lake or pit,” (H.) such as was used to keep wine. Thus God tries his chosen friends, according to their strength!

Ver. 18. Prophets. He insults over these impostors, and speaks boldly. The Chaldees were now returned. C. 38.

Ver. 19. Be. Heb. “fall prostrate.” C. 36:7.

Ver. 20. Entry, where he had been already. C. 32:1 and 34:1. 7.—Piece. Roll, sufficient for a day's maintenance. C.—Prot. "a piece of bread (Sept. a loaf) out of the baker's street." H.

JEREMIAS 38

Ver. 1. And Phassur, the violent priest. C. 20:1.—People, who might come to the entry of the prison.

Ver. 2. Safe. Heb. "a booty." C. 21:9.—Sept. "like a thing found." C.—The Hebrew idiom implies that he shall most surely live. Voluntary offerings prevent eternal misery. W.

Ver. 5. Lawful. This is a compliment, or Sedecias complains indirectly that they had only left him the name of king. He grieved at the treatment of the prophet. C.

Ver. 6. Mire, up to the neck; so that he would soon have been smothered. Jos. Ant. x. 10.

Ver. 7. Eunuch. Officer over 30. v. 10. H.—He was afterwards rewarded. C. 39:15. C.—God moves some to pity the distressed, till he recompense their patience. W.

Ver. 9. City. It was useless, therefore, to add the torment of the dungeon, since he must soon have perished. C.

Ver. 12. Arms. He was probably naked. Sanctius.

Ver. 14. Third, or officers of the guard's gate, leading from the palace to the temple. 4 K. 11:19. C.—Heb. hashelishi; (H.) the third denotes also an officer of the army.

Ver. 17. King. He was at Reblatha. Though an usurper, he had claims upon Sedecias, whom he had appointed ruler, on his swearing to be faithful and to pay tribute. The prophet's advice was just. C.—Even conditional prophecies are certain, and the king would have been treated differently if he had complied. But on his refusal, great misery ensued. W.

Ver. 19. Jews. Traitors, whom Sedecias had perhaps treated ill. C.

Ver. 22. Say. At parting, bewailing thy blindness, which has entailed misery upon all. H.—Of peace. That is, thy false friends, promising thee peace and happiness, and by their evil counsels involving thee in misery. Ch.—Mire. He alludes to his own treatment, (C.) which he had received from these false counsellors or princes. v. 4. H.

Ver. 26. There. This he had actually done. C. 37:19. He perhaps renewed the petition, at this interview, to satisfy the king. H.—We may conceal the truth, but must never speak what is false. C.—“In a matter, says Puffendorf, which I am not obliged to declare to another, if I cannot with safety conceal the whole, I may fairly discover no more than a part.” Who can require a privy counsellor to reveal the king’s secret? Yet Paine accuses the prophet of duplicity! Watson.

JEREMIAS 39

Ver. 2. Fifth. The parallel passages and other editions read ninth. Some pretend that (C.) the city was taken on the 5th of the 4th month, and after being pillaged was burnt on the 7th (4 K. 24:8) or 10th of the 5th month. C. 52:12. Sanct. A. Lap.—But the city was taken on the 9th of the 4th month, and Nabuzardan entered on the 7th of the 5th month, and burnt it and the temple on the 10th. Salien, &c. C.—From the beginning of the siege (A. 3414) to the end (A. 3416. Usher), two years and a half elapsed. It was interrupted a short time. Two fasts are still observed by the Jews to deplore these events. Zac. 7:3 and 8:19.

Ver. 3. Neregel, Sereser. Perhaps Nabuzardan should be read, (v. 13. H.) or these names are mentioned twice, probably by mistake of transcribers. The former was an idol; (4 K. 17:30) the latter word means “treasurer.” C.—Prot. Nergal—Sharezer seems to be one person, as in Sept. or “treasurer of Nergel.” H.—Samgar-nebu, was “prefect of the temple of Nabo.”—Sarsachim, “prince of the sacæ, or Scythians.”—Rabsares, “master of the eunuchs,” or officers within the palace. Such a one was employed by Sennacherib. 4 K. 18:17.—Rebmag, “chief of the magi,” (C.) or “master of the camp.” Jun.—These entered the first wall. C. 1:15. Is. 22:7.

Ver. 4. Walls. This gate had not yet been seized, (C.) leading to Jericho. v. 5. H. Ezech. 12:4.—Sept. Rom. passes over the next 12 verses, which seem to be taken from 4 K. 25:4. C.—Grabe supplies v. 4 to 13 inclusively. “And they sent,” &c. which is well connected with v. 3.—The possession of one gate would let all the army enter: whereupon Sedecias fled by a postern gate. W.

Ver. 5. In the land, or environs of Emesa, in Syria. Theod.—Judgment. Reproaching him with perfidy and ingratitude. W.—He slew the nobles, as his accomplices.

Ver. 9. Army. Heb. “slayers,” denoting soldiers, cooks, and sacrificers. Gen. 37:36.—Remained, having escaped the sword, &c. They had been spared when Joakim and Jechonias were taken.

Ver. 10. Cisterns, and fields. 4 K. 25:12. They were thus attached to the Chaldees.

Ver. 11. Had given, after the prisoners had got to Rama. C. 40:1.

Ver. 13. Nabusezban perhaps stand for Semegar, Nabu, and Sarsachim. The other four officers occur v. 3. C.

Ver. 14. Godolias. The Jews say he had gone over to assist the Chaldees. T.

Ver. 18. Saved. Heb. “a booty.” C. 21:9. Thus God rewards what is done to his servants. Mat. 25:40. C.

JEREMIAS 40

Ver. 1. Word. This happened to Jeremias; (Raban) or the prophet rather interrupts what he was about to say, to let the reader know the state of affairs, when he was consulted about the journey into Egypt. C. 42:9.—Rama; probably in Benjamin, near Bethel. Judg. 19:12. C.—In this last part, Jeremias foretells what would befall the Jews in Egypt, and other nations. W.

Ver. 3. You, people of Juda. H.—This pagan acknowledges that God had punished his people, (C. 18:16. C.) as Titus did at the last siege. Josephus. H.—He acknowledges the justice of God. W.

Ver. 4. Eyes, with all kindness. C. 39:12. H.—Before thee. Thou hast liberty to choose. Gen. 13:9 and 20:15 and 24:51.

Ver. 5. And. Heb. “And as he (the people, or Godolias) will not return, dwell,” or, “He had not yet answered, when the general said: Return to Godolias.” He perceived that the prophet was not desirous of going to Babylon; and he insinuated that such a step would not be for his advantage, as the captives would not return.—Presents. He had been plundered like the rest.

Ver. 6. Masphath; because it was near Jerusalem, and an ancient place of devotion. C.

Ver. 7. Captains, who had fled from Sedecias, and effected their escape. Jos. Ant. x. 11.

Ver. 9. With you. They might naturally suspect Godolias, and think that the Chaldees would seize them as soon as they should know of their escape.

Ver. 10. Answer. Heb. “stand before,” as minister (H.) for the Chaldees. You need not be jealous of my power; and I can answer that they will not hurt you, provided you continue quiet. C.—He promises to act in behalf of the people, as a governor ought to do. W.

Ver. 11. Countries. They had fled to avoid the taxes, &c. but found no redress. Lam. 1:3.

Ver. 13. Came, having discovered the design of Ismahel, whose ambition prompted him to murder the governor, that he might reign: as he was of the royal family. C. 41:1. C.

Ver. 14. Baalis. Queen. Grot.—The Ammonites sought the entire ruin of the Jews.

Ver. 16. Do not. He did right in forbidding this assassination, which could never be authorized, even to prevent a similar crime. Godolias should have taken precautions: but he was too open, (C.) like Eumenes. Grot.

JEREMIAS 41

Ver. 1. Month; Tisri, the third of which is still observed as a fast by the Jews. C.—Godolias had given a supper to the traitors, and had drunk plentifully. They set upon him while he and the people were retired to rest. Jos. Ant. x. 11.—This happened two months after the burning of Jerusalem. C. 29:2. Nabuchodonosor soon after punished this perfidy of the Ammonites. C.—Bread: feasted. H.—Such tragedies are usually performed with the show of friendship. W.

Ver. 4. Second, or next day. All had been slain in the night but some captives. C.

Ver. 5. Rent, as people mourning. Lit. “dirty.” Heb. and Sept. “cut.” H. C. 16:6. Lev. 19:28.—Lord, Masphath, were people performed their devotions, as well as they could. Judg. 20:1 and 1 Mac. 3:46. Jeremias had probably ordered an altar to be erected, as Samuel had done. 1 K.

7:6. C.—Others think that these people went thither for a priest, to offer what they had brought on the altar of Jerusalem. Bar. 1:10. T.—Masphath lay to the south. C.—It seems many of the people about Samaria were true believers, and even more affected at the destruction of the temple. H.—Their city had been demolished by Salmanasar (C.) long before, and many fresh inhabitants introduced, who adhered to idols. H.

Ver. 6. He. Sept. “they.” Yet Heb. intimates that Ismahel feigned tears. C.—He did not weep sincerely. W.

Ver. 7. Into. Lit. “slew them about the,” &c. H.—The pit was not full of water, but had been intended by Asa for a reservoir, (v. 9 and 3 K. 15:20. C.) when he built Maspha. W.

Ver. 8. Field. It was usual to cover them up carefully. Chardin.—Avarice sometimes will set bounds to cruelty, when nothing else will. W.

Ver. 10. King’s; Sedecias, (C.) or some of his predecessors, as all the women were taken, (C. 38:22, 23) unless those had escaped before. H.

Ver. 11. Johanan. He and the rest of the fugitives thus shewed that they were clean. W.

Ver. 12. Gabaon, famous for the battle of Abner. 2 K. 2:13.

Ver. 15. Eight. He had brought ten. v. 1.

Ver. 16. Eunuchs; officers of Sedecias, who had escaped. C. 40:9.

Ver. 17. As. Heb. “at the station or inn of Chamaam,” the son of Berzellai. Chal. Perhaps our Saviour was born in this (C.) “inn,” (Eus. Dem. vii. 4.) which was then deserted. H.—Egypt. These poor wretches find no repose. C.

JEREMIAS 42

Ver. 2. Pray; consult. v. 4. C. 37:3. H.—Few; comparatively, though there was a great number. C. 43:5.

Ver. 5. Witness. Jeremias knew their fickle temper. They will obey, only if God comply with their desires. C.—They began with piety, but soon refused to obey the directions given. C. 43:2. W.

Ver. 6. Good or evil. That is, agreeable or disagreeable. Ch.—It would have been well for them if they had been sincere, (v. 10. H.) and determined to comply whether the prophet announced prosperity or the reverse. W.

Ver. 7. Days. The Spirit breathes where he will, and the prophets must wait his good time. Jeremias prayed for ten days in that place. He now resumes his discourse. C. 40:1.

Ver. 10. Appeased. Heb. “comforted.” Sept. “at rest.” I forget (C.) or pardon (H.) the past.

Ver. 12. And will. Heb. “and he will.” The king will take pity on you. —Dwell. Sept. “return;” which is less correct.

Ver. 15. Faces; obstinately. v. 17 and C. 44:12.

Ver. 18. Kindled. Heb. “hath dropped.” 2 Par. 12:7.—Curse. People can wish no greater misery to their enemies. C.—They shall be execrated. Is. 65:15. W.

Ver. 20. Deceived. Sept. “done ill in your souls.” Your intention was bad. You thought that I should speak conformably to your wishes. C. —He saw by the prophetic light, or by their deportment, that they were bent on going. H.—They were doubly guilty in neither observing their promise nor obeying God’s decree. W.

JEREMIAS 43

Ver. 2. Proud and headstrong. C.—Sinful people easily become worse. They are guilty of calumny, and comply not with their promise/ C. 42:5. W.

Ver. 3. Baruch. He had been at Babylon, and was liberated with Jeremias, always speaking with moderation of the king of Babylon, and exhorting the people to submission. This was enough to make the populace suspect. They are incapable of reasoning.

Ver. 6. And Baruch, by compulsion. W. C.—Hence God did not cease to speak by their mouth. H.

Ver. 8. Taphnis, or Daphnæ Pelusiæ, sixteen miles from Pelusium, (Antonin.) the Hanes of Isaias, (30:4) and key of Egypt. It was a royal city.

Ver. 9. Wall; kiln, or court. Heb. Justice was administered at the gate, and the magnificent throne of Solomon was placed in the court or porch. 3 K. 10:18. C.—The prophet preaches by facts, laying great stones in the chief city. C. 19:10. W.

Ver. 10. Servant. The greatest monarchs only execute God's decrees.

Ver. 12. Temples. Heb. also, "the palaces of the princes," as temples occur below.—Captives. The idols share the fate of their votaries. C. 48:7.—Array; or Heb. "cover with soldiers the land." Sept. "he shall cleanse (C.) or destroy." Bochart.

Ver. 13. Sun. Sept. "of Heliopolis," where the largest temple of the sun was seen. Egypt was famous for its obelisks, erected by Pheron, successor of Sesostris. Some have been removed to Rome.—Fire. History does not specify the particulars: but we may judge how the conqueror would treat these temples, &c. from what Xerxes and Ochus did afterwards. C.

JEREMIAS 44

Ver. 1. Magdal, the third station of the Israelites, (Ex. 14:2) or another "tower" twelve miles from Pelusium. C. 46:14.—Memphis, the capital of Nome, near the western banks of the Nile, and famous for its pyramids, which are standing, though the town be no more. C. 46:19.—Phatures; perhaps in higher Egypt. Jeremias might go or send to these cities, this his last prediction, (C.) to reclaim his countrymen from idolatry. H.

Ver. 2. Inhabitant: or the number is exceedingly small. C.—All the Jews had retired. H.—It would be well if people would reflect, how those who have given way to heresy and infidelity have been treated. W.

Ver. 6. Forth, drop by drop. C. 42:18. I have repeatedly warned them by punishments. H.

Ver. 8. Gods. Their blindness and malice was inconceivable. They attribute their past miseries to the neglect of worshipping the moon! v. 18. They may be compared to a mixture of iron and brass, which is put through the crucible in vain. C. 6:29. Ezech. 22:18.

Ver. 11. Face, to punish grievously. Ezech. 4:3 and 20:35. C.—All did not perish, but the far greatest part. v. 14. 28. W.

Ver. 14. Desire and expectation. C. 22:27. They meant to return as soon as the Chaldees had left the country: but their hope were vain. The enemy would fall upon Egypt, after he had taken Tyre and the neighbouring provinces; and those who had not abandoned that country in time, would perish. v. 12. 26. C.

Ver. 17. The queen of heaven; the moon, which they worshipped under this name, (Ch.) as also under that of the Celestial Venus, (Theod.) Diana, and Isis. It seems the Jews had engaged by vow (v. 27) to restore her worship. C.—The women more particularly adored the moon: yet all were guilty. C. 7:18 and 4 K. 23:5. W.

Ver. 18. Famine. They think nothing of the transgression of the law, &c. v. 23. Could obduracy and blindness go greater lengths? 1 Mac. 1:12.

Ver. 19. Worship. Heb. “to represent.” The cakes had a crescent on them. C. See Hesychius in σεληνια.—Husbands. The women are most zealous. But all partook of this idolatry. C. 7:18. C.

Ver. 21. Heart, or mind to punish you for idolatry. Sacrifices could be offered to the Lord only in his temple. H.

Ver. 26. Liveth. They swore by his name as by that of idols. God could not abide such company. C.—Not one of these obstinate Jews shall be spared. v. 14. Others, like Jeremias, the Sept. and the holy family, no doubt called upon the Lord in the land of Egypt. H.

Ver. 30. Enemies. Herodotus (ii. 161. 169.) informs us that Apries reigned fortunately twenty-five years, when he lost many of his men fighting against the Cyreneans, and was dethroned by Amasis, and strangled by his subjects. Usher (A. 3433) suspects that Amasis was assisted and confirmed by Nabuchodonosor, and he might thus fulfill the prophecies. C. 43:11. &c. Ezech. 29. &c. Josephus (Ant. x. 11.) and Berosus (c. Ap. i.) assert, that Nabuchodonosor defeated and slew the king of Egypt, though Herodotus is silent on this subject, his account being communicated by the Egyptian priests, and full of fables. C.

JEREMIAS 45

Ver. 1. Book, which Joakim burnt, and sought the life of the prophets. C. 36. C.—Baruch apprised of the general distress, weeps for it, and his life is spared. W.

Ver. 5. Great: the spirit of prophecy; (Rabbins) or rather to be exempted from suffering, while all the neighbouring nations were perishing. C.—And save. Lit. “for salvation.” Heb. “booty.” H.—He seems to have been set at liberty with his master. C. 40:1. C.

JEREMIAS 46

Ver. 1. Gentiles, to whom Jeremias was sent. C. 1:5. What follows regards them, (C.) if we except the last chapter. H.—It was thought proper to place these predictions here, though out of their chronological order, to which the Sept. have more adhered, placing them after C. 25. C.—The punishment of the chief enemies of the Jews is foretold. W.

Ver. 2. Nechao. He slew Josias, and took all as far as Charcamis. 4 K. 23. Four years after Nabopolassar associated his son, and sent him to conquer these countries, which he effected. 4 K. 24:7. Jos.

Ver. 3. Prepare Egyptians, the enemy is at hand. C.

Ver. 5. Seen. The prophets usually speak as if things were already past. W.

Ver. 6. Away. It will be in vain. C.—Nechao went to defend Charcamis, but lost “many myriads in the battle,” and all the country “as far as Pelusium, except Judea.” Joseph. x. 7.

Ver. 7. Rivers. He alludes to the Nile. The king of Egypt had a numerous army.

Ver. 8. City; Babylon, and every fort which shall oppose my progress. C.

Ver. 9. Men. Soldiers formed one of the principal classes among the Egyptians. Herod. ii. 164.—Ethiopians. Heb. “Cush,” in Lower Egypt, on the Red Sea.—Lybians. Heb. “Phut, another son of Cham, inhabiting the Nome Phtenethu.” Ezech. 30:5. Nah. 3:2.—Lydians. Their situation is not known.

Ver. 10. Devour. It seems animated, and eager to slay the victim. Ezech. 39:17.

Ver. 11. Of Egypt; or ye Egyptians, who have been wounded. The balm (H.) or resina of Galaad was then very famous. Gen. 37:25. C.—Egypt thought itself invulnerable, and is derided. Its cures was hopeless. v. 16. W.

Ver. 13. Egypt, under Apries, about thirty-five years after the former expedition. C. 44:30. Ezech. 29 and 31. This country was invaded the last. v. 14.

Ver. 15. Men. Lit. “man.” Heb. abir, (H.) where Apis has been perhaps formed. C.—Sept. “Why has Apis (Comp. omits this word) fled from thee? thy calf, thy chosen one has not remained.” H.—He derides the chief idol of Egypt; or he alludes to those who fell at Charcamis, or rather who fled after they had come out to assist Sedecias. C. 37:5. Ezech. 30:21.

Ver. 16. Dove. Heb. also, “of the destroyer.” Sept. “Greeks,” or Ionians. C.—See C. 25:35. Ch.—Nebuchodonosor came with expedition, or had a dove on his standards. M.

Ver. 17. Pharao. Sept. add, “Nechao.” But Apries seems rather to be meant. C.—A. Heb. shaon hehebir hamohed. Prot. “is but a noise, he hath passed the time appointed;” (H.) or, “the height which the crowd (or God, who raised) hath displaced.” C.—Sept. retain the original: but the middle word varies in their copies. H.—All the boasts of Pharao ended in smoke. He lost the proper opportunity, and caused his own kingdom to be laid waste. Syr. “the disturber, who deranges the times.” C.

Ver. 18. He, the destroyer; (v. 16) or “it,” my word (H.) shall surely stand as long as the mountains, (C.) yea, longer than heaven and earth. H.—My decrees shall be put in execution in spite of the efforts of man. C.

Ver. 19. Furnish. Lit. “make thyself vessels of captivity,” or pack up what thou mayst want there. H. Ezech. 12:3 and 29:11.—Many returned under Cyrus. v. 26.

Ver. 20. Goad her. Nabuchodonosor shall subdue the country.

Ver. 21. Hirelings. Apries had thirty thousand Carians, &c. who were defeated by Amasis. Herod. ii. 163.

Ver. 22. Brass. Sept. “hissing serpent;” lamenting in secret. Is. 29:4.—Wood. Battle-axes were then used. Great cities and monarchs shall fall. Zac. 11:2. Ezech. 31:3. C.

Ver. 23. Above, or “more than locusts,” (H.) which destroy all herbs where they light.

Ver. 25. Visit upon. That is, punish.—Alexandria. In the Heb. No; which was the ancient name of the city, to which Alexander gave afterwards the name of Alexandria; (Ch.) or this city was built near Rachotes, the harbour. “Ammon of No” was rather Diospolis, (Ezec. 30:14. Sept.) in the Delta, north of Busiris. Ammon was the chief god adored at No. Nah. 3:8. Sept. Alex. “I will revenge myself on Ammon, her son, on Egypt, or Pharaoh, and on them.” H.—Ammon was of their invention, and for this the people were justly punished. It means also, “a multitude.”—Kings. C. 42:12. Apries was slain, (C. 44:23. C.) and his two successors perished miserably by sentence of Cambyses. Herod. iii. 14. and 16.

Ver. 26. Afterwards, forty years being expired (Ezec. 29:14) from the time when Apries made his unsuccessful attack on Cyrene, and his subjects revolted.

Ver. 27. Off from all countries, (C.) particularly from Egypt; (H.) on occasion of which country’s deliverance, that of Jacob is foretold. C.—If God would bring the Egyptians back, much more would he deliver the Jews. W.

Ver. 28. Nations of Assyria, Chaldea, &c. C. 30:11. C.

JEREMIAS 47

Ver. 1. Gaza, going or returning from Charcamis. Apries also attacked Tyre, and would of course invade the Philistines. They had assisted the Tyrians against Nabuchodonosor, who therefore made incursions into their territory, and into that of Ammon, &c. while the main part of his army besieged Tyre for thirteen years. C.

Ver. 3. Marching. Lit. “pomp,” (H.) or warlike apparatus. H.—Prot. “stamping of the hoofs of his strong horses, at,” &c. H.—Children. Fear makes one forget the nearest relations, while each one provides for himself. C. 9:4. Mic. 7:5. Mat. 10:35.

Ver. 4. Tyre. See C. 47:4. Ezech. 26. &c.—Sidon. It had rejoiced at the downfall of its rival, (Is. 23:4) and of the Jews. Joel 3:4. Ezech. 28:24. Artax Ochus punished it severely; (C.) and its own king, Tenner, betrayed his subjects, who were slain by the Persians, or burnt themselves in the conflagration of the city. Diodor. Olym. 177. a. 2.—Helpers; Philistines, who came originally from the isle of Caphtor, or Crete.—Cappadocia was not an island, or near the sea, (C.) but at a distance from the Jews. Sanct.

Ver. 5. Baldness, the sign of mourning, (C.) or captivity. H.—Peace. Heb. “shall be destroyed.” Sept. “cast away.” She has afforded no assistance to Gaza. H.—Valley, along the Mediterranean. C.—Lit. “And ye remnants of their valley, how?” &c.—Cut, in despair or grief. C. 41:5. Sept. “Remnants of the Enakeim, (giants) how long wilt thou make incisions?” H.—The race of Enack dwelt in those parts; though ankim seems to have been mistaken for ankom. C.

Ver. 6. Sword. He is moved with pity to see so much carnage, but reflects that such is the will of God. Nabuchodonosor was his sword or scourge. C.

JEREMIAS 48

Ver. 1. Moab. This people broke their covenant with Sedecias, yet were punished for having entered into it, five years after the taking of Jerusalem. Jos. S. Jer. in C. xxv. 32.—The same war is described by Ezec. 25:8. Soph. 2:8. Many words of Isaias (15 and 16 and 24) are adopted, though he speaks of what happened under Ezechias.—Nabo, a town at the foot of that mountain, where Moses died. Deut. 34. It might have been famous for some pretended “oracle.” Is. 15:2 and 46:1. This chief city, with the rest, shall be destroyed. W.—Cariathaim. This city, and most of the others, were repossessed by Moab after the Israelites were led into captivity. C.—City. Heb. Hammissgab, a fortress. Vat.

Ver. 2. Hesebon, at the foot of Phasga, and one of the strongest cities. —Shalt. Heb. “shall Medemena hold her peace.” C.—“Thou shalt be cut down, O madmen.” H.—It signifies “silence.” Thou silent city, thou shalt be reduced to a mournful silence or destruction.

Ver. 7. Bulwarks. Heb. “works,” or possessions of corn, cattle, &c. C.—Chamos, the idol of the Moabites. Ch.—He was esteemed the king of the country, as the devil is the ape of God. The prophets often deride the imbecility of these idols. C. 43 and 11. The chief idol of Moab shall fall, to shew the vanity of trusting in idols. W.

Ver. 8. Spoiler, or “thief,” (prædo) a title which Nabuchodonosor deserved, on account of his unjust conquests. C.

Ver. 9. Flower: an usual ceremony at funerals. A. Lapide. M.—Manibus date lilia plenis. Æn. vi.—Heb. “wings.” Prot. “signs.” Sept. (H.) “that they may know how to return.” Let Moab flee. C.

Ver. 10. Deceitfully. In the Greek, negligently. The work of God here spoken of, is the punishment of the Moabites. Ch.—Woe to those who spare those whom God orders to be destroyed, as Saul and Achab did. 1 K. 15:8. 23 and 3 K. 20:32. 42. The zeal of the Levites, Phinees, &c. is rewarded. Ex. 32:27. Num. 20:8.

Ver. 11. Fruitful as a vine.—Lees. The wine has not been disturbed. It was customary to keep it first in pits, (Mark 12:1. Is. 5:1) and afterwards in large earthen vessels. Vina bibes Tauro diffusa: “Thou shalt drink wine bottled off in the consulship of Taurus.” Hor. i. ep. 5. —If the wine was weak, the vessels were put under ground. Pliny xiv. 21.—The better sort was arranged in order, (v. 12) in some clean apartment. Cant. 2:4. Odys. B. 237.—Changed. He alludes to the wine. H.—Moab has enjoyed a long peace and prosperity. C.

Ver. 13. Of Bethel. That is, of their golden calves, which they worshipped in Bethel. Ch.—Chamos and the golden calves were both taken away. Osee 8:5. C.—The ten tribes had foolishly trusted in the latter. 3 K. 12. W.

Ver. 16. Swiftly; about twenty-three years from the fourth of Joakim.

Ver. 17. His name, as particular friends. Ex. 33:12. 17. People in the East had a secret name, which they disclosed to very few, to prevent incantations.—Rod. This nation was exceedingly vain. v. 29.

Ver. 18. Thirst. Dibon was well supplied with water. Is. 15:9.

Ver. 20. Arnon, on which river Aroer stood.

Ver. 26. Drunk with the wine of God’s wrath.—Dash. Heb. “roll in,” or “they shall clap hands over Moab, in,” &c.

Ver. 27. Thieves. C. 2:26. C.—Prot. “was he found among thieves? for since thou speakest of him, thou skippest for joy.” H.—Chaldee agrees with the Vulg. which is clearer. C.—Sept. “hath he been found stealing from thee, since thou hast fought against him?” Grabe subjoins, “Thou shalt go into banishment. H.—As Moab was related to Israel, his derision was the more criminal, and more grievously punished. W.

Ver. 28. Place. Seek for shelter in the caverns and highest mountains. H.

Ver. 30. Able. He hath attempted too much.

Ver. 31. Brick wall. Heb. Kir-cheres, (Is. 16:7. C.) “the city of the sun;” (Grot.) Ar, the capital. The prophet joins in the mournful canticle, as was usual. Lu. 7:32. C.—Those who boast of more than they have, are compared to an earthen wall. W.

Ver. 32. Jazer, or “more than for Jazer;” about six leagues to the north of Sebama, which had a rivulet communicating with the sea of Jazer.

Ver. 33. Carmel, which here denotes any fruitful vineyard or place.—The, &c. Prot. “none shall tread with shouting, their shouting shall be no shouting.” Heb. hedad, “the cry” of the people in the vintage. C.

Ver. 34. As a. Lit. “the heifer;” a title of Oronaim, which was proud and ungovernable. H.—Heb. also, “from Agelah to Salisa; the,” &c.—Bad; abandoned. Is. 15:6. C.

Ver. 43. Fear. It was customary to hang feathers near a wood, to frighten the prey into pits or nets. Is. 24:17. Sanct.

Ver. 45. There ... saith, &c. to the end of the chapter is supplied by Grabe. His copy subjoins, “What Jeremias prophesied against all nations. Thus,” &c. C. 25:15. H.

Ver. 45. Hesebon, expecting shelter. But internal broils ruined them.—There, &c. to 47, is borrowed from Num. 21:27. Sehon had taken Hesebon from Moab.—Part. Moses has “Ar, of Moab, and the inhabitants of the heights of Arnon.” C.—Tumult. Heb. shaon, (H.) means also pride, in which sense Balaam uses Seth. Num. 24:17. C.

Ver. 47. Days. When they, Elam and the other Gentiles, shall be converted to the faith of Christ. We read of no other bringing back, (W.) though it might take place. H.

JEREMIAS 49

Ver. 1. Melchom, the idol of the Ammonites. Ch.—Gad, to whom a part of their country was assigned. After the captivity this tribe, the Ammonites seized the country, regardless of God's appointment. They joined the Chaldees afterwards; but the latter could not depend upon them, and sent them into captivity, to revenge the death of Godolias. C. 41:2. Soph. 2:8. Ezech. 25:3. C.—They had taken the country as their right, as if all Israel had perished; which God resents. W.

Ver. 2. Rabbath; called Amana, Astarte, and Philadelphia, by Stephanus.—Possess; returning first from captivity, and subduing the cities of Ammon, under Hyrcan. 1 Mac. 5:6.

Ver. 3. Hai, or Je-abarim. Both these cities pertained also to Moab.—Hedges. Heb. Gederoth, may be the city Gadara.—Melchom, or Moloc, who claimed dominion over this people. If they had used their reason, they must have seen that he was no god, since the Lord disposed of him as he pleased so long before.

Ver. 4. Delicate. Heb. “rebel or dissolute.” Sept. “impudent.”

Ver. 7. Edom. This nation was involved in the common ruin, for its barbarity towards God's people. Abd. x. Ps. 136:7. Ezech. 25:12.—Theman, renowned formerly for wisdom. Job 2:11. Yet at the approach of danger, all were confounded. C.—They were only worldly wise. W.

Ver. 8. Hole. The territory of Edom, from Eleutheropolis to Elath, is full of such. S. Jer. in Abd.—Dedan lies south of the Dead Sea. C.

Ver. 10. Secrets, or lurking holes. v. 8. H.—God permits the Chaldees to plunder all.—Brethren; Israelites.—Neighbours; Moab, &c.

Ver. 12. Was not so much. There were some faithful Jews. C. 25:28. C.

Ver. 13. Bosra, different from that of Ammon; (C. 48:24. Cellar. iii. 14.) though this may be doubtful. Could such a city be unknown?

Ver. 14. Ambassador; Jeremias: or rather this is a personification of the passions, which would sufficiently prompt the Chaldees. C.—A good angel might urge them to execute the divine decrees. Theodoret. —The greatest armies are thus made use of by Providence, without approving of their malicious designs.

Ver. 15. Little. Edom was scarcely known, except in sacred history; and it was forced to receive circumcision by the Machabees.

Ver. 16. Hill. The mountains were numerous, and full of caverns. v. 8.

Ver. 17. Desolate. The few who survived left their ancient territories, which are now a desert, like most of Stony Arabia. C.—Hiss, out of contempt. The punishment was so great as to excite surprise. W.

Ver. 19. Swelling. Lit. “pride;” (H.) or those banks which the Jordan reaches, when it overflows. They are lined with woods, from which lions rush to devour the sheep. C.—Strong “one’s dwelling.” Heb. H. Zac. 11:3.—Over her. What sort of men come to the attack? or, who shall dare resist them? C.

Ver. 20. Little. Chal. “chiefs of the people.” Tsair (H.) is supposed to have this sense. Mic. 5:2. C.—But the weakest of the Chaldees will be an overmatch for Edom. H.

Ver. 23. Damascus, the capital of Syria. Is. 7:8. W.—It was punished at the same time as the rest. Jos.—Arphad; Arad, an island near Tyre, or Raphanæ. Theod.—Syr. “Rephad ... they are troubled from the sea.” Nabuchodonosor left Tyre to invade them. C.—As in. The islands of the Mediterranean tremble for themselves, and all Syria is afraid, hearing of the fall of so many cities and nations.

Ver. 25. They. Heb. Sept. and Chal. add, “not.” Why have they not spared this beautiful city? or, why have not its citizens given it up, to prevent its entire demolition?

Ver. 27. Benadad. So the kings were usually styled. 3 K. 15:8. Sept. “the son of Ader.”

Ver. 28. Cedar and Asor were parts of Arabia; which, with Moab, Ammon, Edom, &c. were all brought under the yoke of Nabuchodonosor. Ch.—We know nothing of the situation of Asor, which means “a court.” C.—It might be the flying camp (Theod.) of the Saracens, (S. Jer. in Is. xxi. 16) who dwelt under tents like the hordes of Tartars, the Ethiopian emperor, and the mogul. Yet this seems to have been a fixed habitation. v. 30. 33.—East; the Desert Arabia. v. 32. C.—Cedar was the son of Ismael, and Asor the chief city of the Agarens. W.

Ver. 29. About. The enemy shall terrify them, and plunder all their riches.

Ver. 31. Alone. We need not fear any resistance. They have no allies. C.—The ancient Suevi, of Germany, laid waste the surrounding countries, that they might appear more terrible. Cesar iv. and vi.

Ver. 32. Wind; throughout the world.—Round. C. 9:26. C.—This the Arabs did, in imitation of Bacchus. Herod. iii. 8.

Ver. 34. Elam. A part of Persia. Ch.—The Elamites had besieged Jerusalem, under Manasses, (C.) and are therefore punished. W.—They were subject to Aseradon: Nabuchodonosor subdued them after the other nations. v. 36. Cyrus set his countrymen at liberty, (C.) and thus began his conquests. H.—Pagan historians assert, at random, that they were before subject to the Medes.

Ver. 38. Thence. Daniel (8:2) governed at Susa, the capital of Elam, for Baltassar.

Ver. 39. Return. They joined the standards of Cyrus, and became masters of the East. C.—This and similar texts are understood of the conversion of the Gentiles. Acts 2:7. W.

JEREMIAS 50

Ver. 1. Prophet. He had spoken against them in the fourth year of Joachim, and now is more explicit in the fourth of Sedecias, (C. 51:60) sending his predictions to be read, and then thrown into the Euphrates. The fall of Babylon was gradual. It was in consequence of her pride and cruelty, v. 11, 17, 23, 29. Is. 47:6. C.—It had shewn the greatest enmity to the Jews, and was at last overthrown by the Medes and Persians. W.

Ver. 2. Declare. This is grand. Let all the captives publish these tidings. C.—Bel, &c. Bel and Merodach were worshipped for gods by the men of Babylon. Ch.—Merodach might be an ancient king deified. C.—These greatest of their idols could neither save the people nor themselves. W.

Ver. 3. A nation, &c. viz. the Medes, (Ch.) under Darius, (Dan. 5:31. Theod. Grot.) or rather under Cyrus, who came upon Babylon from the north, after conquering Asia; though he was born to the east of that city. Is. 61:2 7. He was a Mede by his mother, and ruler of that nation. He gave liberty to the Jews, as the prophet inculcates ten times.—Desolate. Herodotus. Xenophon, &c. say not that Cyrus demolished any part of the city; but Berosus informs us that he took it without opposition, and levelled the outer walls. Hystaspes did more damage. Herod. iii. 150.

Ver. 4. Weeping for joy and compunction. Israel returns, as well as Juda. C.—Thus Joseph wept when he beheld his brethren. Gen. 42:24. W.

Ver. 5. Covenant. They renewed the old one under Nehemias, and never publicly broke it, as they had done. Yet the covenant of Christ is more properly meant.

Ver. 6. Shepherds; kings, (C.) and false prophets. H.

Ver. 7. Not sinned: the Jews were such notorious offenders. But in what had they injured the Chaldees?—Beauty. Heb. “dwelling or fold.”

Ver. 8. Kids; rams. This comparison was not ignoble. Go boldly out of the city, before it be besieged.

Ver. 9. Nations. Cyrus had Armenians, &c. in his army. C.—Thence, by the bed of the Euphrates, the waters of which were mostly let out into the marshes. Thus the city was taken, while the people were feasting. Herod. i. 191.—Aristotle (Pol. iii. 3.) says, three days passed before all the citizens were apprised of its fate, it was so extensive: but this is incredible. If we follow the account of Berosus, Cyrus routed Nabonides, who fled to Borsippe, while he took Babylon and demolished the outer walls. Jos. c. Ap. i. C.—North, with respect to Babylon. W.—The Persians lay rather to the south, and to the east of Palestine, (H.) if our maps be accurate. C.

Ver. 11. Bulls. You have rioted in Juda, and treated my people cruelly. H.—In Hebrew four verbs have improperly i for v; but C. 51:34. v supplants i five times. Kennicott.

Ver. 12. Dust, like a suppliant. Is. 47:1. C.—Dry. The country shall be equally unfruitful. The waters of the Euphrates being let off, gave a passage to the enemy. v. 9. H.—Babylon soon lost its splendour. C.—Vologeses completed its ruin. Pliny vi. 26.—It ceased to be the metropolis or mother city. H.—The whole country was laid waste. W.

Ver. 15. Hand, to form leagues; or she faints, (Sept.) and submits. Lam. 5:6.

Ver. 16. Harvest. Such were usually unmolested. C.—Babylon was so large, that people sowed corn within the walls. Curt. v.—The environs were well cultivated. Pliny xviii. 17.—Dove, or the destroyer; for the Hebrew word signifies either the one or the other. Ch. C. 25:38 and 46:16.—Lit. “from before the sword of the dove.” The power of Babylon is no more. H.—The king is compared to a dove, for his swiftness; or God is meek, though terrible. W.—Land. The other nations were set free as well as the Jews. C.

Ver. 17. Bones. He completely ruined the nation, which the Assyrians had left. H.—They led the ten tribes away, and the Chaldees took the rest. 4 K. 18 and 25. W.

Ver. 18. Assyria. This monarchy was subdued by Nabopolasser.

Ver. 19. Israel; the ten tribes, whose country is specified.

Ver. 20. None. Idolatry shall not be re-established.

Ver. 21. Rulers: the most potent empire of Babylon.—All. Heb. “anathematize them and their posterity.”

Ver. 23. Hammer. The violent injustice of the Chaldees is thus entitled.

Ver. 24. Aware. Men seemed to rise out of the earth. v. 9.

Ver. 25. Armoury. Fire and war are the Lord’s weapons. Job 38:22.—Work: punishment. C. 48:10.

Ver. 26. That. Heb. “her granaries; trample on her as on heaps of corn, destroy,” &c. He alludes to the custom of oxen trampling out the corn. C. 51:33.

Ver. 28. Voice. I hear the captives proclaiming this at their return.

Ver. 30. Peace, in the grave; (C.) or shall submit quietly. 1 Mac. 1:3. H.

Ver. 31. Proud. So the Chaldees are often styled in the Psalms. 100.—The prophet addresses Nabuchodonosor, or rather Baltassar, (M.) under whom the city was taken, (Jos. &c.) by Darius and Cyrus. He may be the Nabonides of Berosus, the question is so much perplexed. Yet “we are convinced that Darius reigned at Babylon before Cyrus, and took the city after the death of Baltassar.” C.—Most commentators are of a difficult opinion. H.

Ver. 33. Israel. Samaria had been destroyed forty-four years before the fourth of Joakim, from which period many of Juda had been captives seventy years, till Cyrus became their deliverer, and chastised the Chaldees. C.—Both kingdoms had been oppressed by a strong hand, till a stronger, even God himself, delivered them. W.

Ver. 34. Name. He gives victory to Cyrus. Thus the Lord directs all for the sake of his elect, and laughs at the vain projects of men. C.

Ver. 35. Wise men. They were styled Chaldees, and inhabited a certain part of the city, being employed in astronomical and mathematical observations. They disapproved of those who cast nativities. Strabo xvi.

Ver. 36. Diviners. Heb. “impostors.” They were nowhere more plentiful. Dan. 1:20. Fortune-tellers were consulted on every occasion. The eastern nations are still much addicted to this superstition.

Ver. 38. Drought. Cyrus almost drained the Euphrates. C. 51:42. Is. 21. —Things, fit to terrify children. Bar. 6:14. C.—Prot. “they are made upon their idols.” H.

Ver. 39. Fig-fauns. Monsters of the desert, or demons in monstrous shapes; such as the ancients called fauns and satyrs: and as they imagined them to live upon wild figs, they called them fauni-ficarii, or fig-fauns. Ch.—Maldonat reads sicariis, “ruffians.” Sixtus V. and S. Jerom, (in Is. 13:21) have fatuis, “foolish wild men.” Heb. “the Tsiim iwth the iim shall dwell there, and the daughters of the Yahana (H. swans) shall there reside,” or “fishermen among the rushes shall dwell,” &c.—Ever. Its situation is unknown. There is still a town of the same name, but not in the same place.

Ver. 42. Cruel. The Medes will not spare for money. v. 3. Is. 13:7.

Ver. 43. King. Baltassar, (though he was succeeded by Darius) or Nabonides. v. 31. C.

Ver. 44. And beautiful. Heb. “habitation.” H.—He will rush into the fold. C. 49:19. C.—The king of Babylon had ruined many. Others shall destroy him, rushing on like the Jordan. W.

JEREMIAS 51

Ver. 1. Thereof. Heb. leb kamai, “of the heart, rising up against me.” H.—Many take Leb-kamai to be the enigmatical name of the Chaldees, by a secret combination of letters, (Kimchi. Grot.) as if they were not clearly designated in the sequel. C.—The prophet expresses more pointedly what he had declared in the preceding chapter. W.

Ver. 2. Fan her. After the corn was trodden out, it was heaved into the wind. This custom would insinuate the distress and captivity of the Chaldees. Sept. "I will send ... scoffers, and they shall treat her with scorn, καθυβριουσιν. H.—They have read (C.) zedim for zarim.

Ver. 3. Mail. There will be little or no resistance made. C. 50:3. H.—The Persians denounce destruction to all taken in arms; or, according to Sept. and Syr. they exhort each other to fight. C.—"Let him," &c. H.—Heb. of the Masorets, "you who bend ... spare not." C.—Prot. "against him that bendeth let the archer bend his bow," &c. H.—Heb. is printed ne tendat tendat tendans. The second word is properly omitted in some MSS. Thus (1 Chron. 24:6) we read taken taken, achuz having been put erroneously for achad, one. Kennicott.

Ver. 5. Forsaken, as a widow, viduatus. H.—God still considers the nation as his spouse.—Their land. That of the Chaldees, (C.) or of the Jews. Theodoret.—Sin, or punishment.

Ver. 6. Silent. Jews proclaim that Babylon is justly punished, (C.) lest you partake in her crimes. Apoc. 18:4. Prot. "be not cut off in her," &c. H.

Ver. 7. Cup. She has exercised the vengeance of the Lord on Juda, Egypt, &c.

Ver. 8. Suddenly. She has not lost many battles; but is fallen at once from being the greatest city of the East.

Ver. 9. We. The guardian angels, or Jews reply. Miracles are lost on her.—Heavens. Her crimes call for punishment. Gen. 18:21 and Jon. 1:2.

Ver. 10. Justices. We had not injured the Chaldees, though we had offended God.

Ver. 11. Sharpen. He addresses ironically the citizens of Babylon.—Medes. Thus the subjects of the Persian monarchs are commonly styled. C.

Ver. 12. Standard. Call together thy subjects and allies. H.—This must be explained of Babylon. M.—Yet all will be in vain. v. 11. H.—Ambushes. Herein the valour and genius of heroes was most displayed. Jos. 8:2. Homer.

Ver. 13. Waters. Not far from the Tigris, and divided into two parts by the Euphrates. C.—Entire, being cut up by the roots, pedalis, (Lyran.) or according to the measure of thy crimes. Delrio. C.—Sept. "thy end is truly come into thy bowels." H.

Ver. 14. Himself. Sept. "his hand" lifted up, or by his power.—Locusts. Their ravages were equally dreaded. Joel 2:4. Judg. 6:5.

Ver. 16. Rain. Thunder and lightning are usually followed by showers. C.

Ver. 17. Every man, &c. That is, every maker of idols, however he boasts of his knowledge and skill, does but shew himself a fool in pretending to make a god. Ch. Wisd. 14:18.—By his, or "by default of knowledge;" (a scientia. H.) as the Heb. may also mean. The Babylonians were so confounded, they knew not what to do. C.—Prot. "Every man is brutish by his knowledge." Marg. or "is more brutish than to know." C. 10:14. H.

Ver. 20. Thou, Cyrus, (Grot.) or more commonly the Chaldees are understood.

Ver. 25. Mountain. So Babylon is styled in derision. See C. 21:13. Is. 1:10 and 20:6 and 22:1. The city stood on a plain. Some think that its palace and walls are designated.—Burnt; unfruitful. This happened long after Cyrus, though it then ceased to be the capital, and became only a shadow of its former greatness.

Ver. 26. Corner. No king or conqueror shall spring thence. Alexander thought of making it the seat of his empire, but was prevented by death. Strabo xv.

Ver. 27. Prepare. Lit. "sanctify." H.—Call together all nations to fight against Babylon. W.—Many religious ceremonies were used.—Ararat, where the ark rested, (Gen. 8:4) near the Araxes, (S. Jer. in Is. xxxvii.) or in the Gordyeen mountains, in Armenia, where the Menni dwelt.—Ascenez, or Ascantes, (C.) near the Tanais. Pliny vi. 7.—Taphsar, "the prince." Nah. 3:17. Pagn. "Warriors." Chal. "Machines" Sept.—Caterpillar, or "locust," (bruchum. H.) which resembles more a body of cavalry. C.—Sept. "Push forward the cavalry against her, as a multitude of locusts." H.

Ver. 28. Prepare; "sanctify." H.—Media. Cyrus. v. 11.—Captains: generals. C.—Rulers. Lit. "magistrates." H.—Heb. Seganim, a title used once by Isaias, and frequently by those who wrote after the Assyrians (C.) commenced their invasion. H.

Ver. 30. Bars, fastening the gates. C.—Those who entered by the channel of the river, would seize the gates to let their companions enter. H.

Ver. 31. King, feasting in his palace, (Herod. i. 191.) or at Borsippe.

Berosus. He sent to make inquiries, (C.) or his subjects hastened to convey the doleful tidings, and thus met each other. H.

Ver. 32. Fords. Thus the enemy entered.—Marches. Heb. “sedges,” which grew to the size of trees, and were burnt when the waters of the river and lakes were drained. Herodotus (i. 185. 178.) specifies a lake four hundred and twenty stadia square, and says the ditches round the city were full of water.

Ver. 33. Threshing, performed by oxen treading, and by rollers, &c. Judg. 8:16 and 2 K. 12:31.—Little; about fifty-six years.

Ver. 34. Dragon, or huge fish, which swallows without chewing. Sion is here venting her complaint. Ps. 136:8. C.—She shews that Babylon is justly punished for her cruelty towards God’s people. W.

Ver. 36. Spring; commerce, the source of her riches; or rather the waters shall be brought out of their usual channels. For many ages (C.) the Euphrates has been lost in sands, and reaches not the Persian Gulph. Pliny vii. 27. Cellar. iii. 16.

Ver. 37. Dragons. This has been the case for above sixteen centuries. C. 50:31. Is. 13:21.

Ver. 38. Roar. They shall retain their haughty air and threaten others, when they themselves shall fall (C.) in the midst of their feasting. Dan. 5:30. Xen. vii.

Ver. 41. Search, the city which worshipped the moon, (C. 25:26.) Bel, (C. 50:2.) &c.

Ver. 42. Sea: numerous armies of Cyrus, or the waters of the Euphrates let loose. C.—In the days of Alexander, many tombs of the kings were inundated. Strabo xv.

Ver. 44. Down. His priests pretended that he eat, (Dan. 14:11) and a woman of their choice slept in the most retired part of the temple. Herod. i. 181.—The prophet derides this notion. The idol, or rather his votaries, (H.) shall be forced to let go the Israelites. C.—Fall, by means of Cyrus and of Darius. C. 50:3. H.

Ver. 46. Faint. You may apprehend that your miseries will increase in the midst of such confusion; but no, Baltassar, the last of your oppressor’s race, shall be assassinated by Neriglissor, who will be succeeded by Laborosoarchod and Nabonides. This last shall yield to Cyrus, who will grant you liberty. Baltassar reigned two years, Neriglissor four, his ill-tempered infant son nine months, when his followers murdered him, and gave the crown to a Babylonian called Nabonides, who kept it seventeen years, till Cyrus took him prisoner. This we learn from Berosus, quoted by Josephus, c. Ap. i. On the other hand Daniel makes Darius, the Mede, succeed Baltassar, and after him Cyrus reigned. To these changes and continual alarms the prophet alludes.

Ver. 47. Idols; Bel, &c. v. 41.—Slain. Heb. “dancers.” The people were feasting. C.—It means also “slain,” (Prot.) or “soldiers.”

Ver. 48. Praise, for the just punishment. H.—The crimes were public. C.

Ver. 50. Mind. Offer sacrifices of thanks on Sion, (H.) both Jews and other nations. C.

Ver. 51. We. The Jews answer: we are ashamed when we think of these places. M.

Ver. 53. High. Her fortifications and ditches will prove fruitless. C. 48:7. 18.

Ver. 55. Great voice, or boasting and songs of joy, usual at public meetings.—Noise. They groan under affliction.

Ver. 57. Drunk, with the wine of fury. v. 39. C. 25:26.

Ver. 58. Broad wall. The pagan historians agree not in the dimensions, but allow it was excessively broad and lofty. C.—Six chariots might go abreast. It was 360 stadia long, (Ctesias); or 480 (Herod. i. 178.) that is above 23 leagues, allowing 2,500 paces for each. This author says the breadth was fifty cubits of the king, three inches larger than the common one, or about twenty-one inches. Pliny (vi. 26.) improperly applies this to Roman feet, and says the walls were two hundred feet high; while Herodotus assigns so many cubits. C.—There were three different walls. Curt. v.—Cyrus demolished the outer one. Beros.—What remained, (C.) with the hundred brazen gates, Darius treated in like manner. Herod. i. 179. and iii. 159.—Thus was the prediction fulfilled, and the works of so many captive nations brought to nothing. It is asserted that 200,000 (C.) daily finished a stadium, (Curt. v.) or 125 paces. C.

Ver. 59. With. Heb. also, (C.) “on behalf of.” Prot. marg. H.—It is nowhere else asserted that Sedecias went in person, and Sept. Chal. &c. explain it in this manner. Baruch accompanied his brother Sararias, and probably took the letter. Bar. 1:2. Saraias went to petition for the sacred vessels.—Prophecy, or of the embassy to speak (C.) in the king's name. Heb. menucha, was a caution of Benjamin. It means, "rest;" whence some have inferred that he was chamberlain, (Cant. 3:8) or a favourite. Most translate, "chief of the presents," Sept. and Chal. as if they they had read mincha, which he carried as a tribute to Babylon. Jeremias gave him charge of the parcel, perhaps before Baruch had determined to go.

Ver. 64. Sink. The angel did the like; (Apoc. 18:21. C.) and the Phoceans, leaving their country, swore that they would return no more till a piece of red hot iron, which they threw into the sea, should swim. Herod. i. 165.—Thus, &c. was added by the compiler. Sept. omit the sentence, as what relates to Babylon is place C. 28 in their copies. C.—Yet Grabe puts it in a different character. H.—Jeremias wrote a great deal, after the 4th year of Sedecias, v. 59. C.—He here finished his predictions against Babylon. W.—This does not mean that he did not write the next chapter, (M.) as Cappel allows, (Houbig.) though this may still be doubted. H.

JEREMIAS 52

Ver. 1. Sedecias. This is purely historical, taken from 4 K. 24:18, &c. Many doubt with reason the Jeremias inserted it, as he could not well be alive at the time when Joakim was honoured. v. 31. If he had written both this and the Book of Kings, the variations which we here discover would not be seen. It seems, therefore, that Esdras or some other has inserted it, to explain the fall of Jerusalem and the lamentations; as a similar addition has been made to Isaias. C. 36. &c. See Grot. C.—The history occurs more at large, Par. ult. W.

Ver. 3. Revolted, breaking his oath, which greatly offended God.

Ver. 12. Tenth: 4 K. seventh, on which day Nabuzardan set out from Reblatha, according to some. But it was above sixty leagues, or hours journey, distant. C.—He entered the city on the 7th, and put his orders in execution on the 10th. Usher.—Nothing of the king's imprisonment, or of the city poor occurs. 4 K.

Ver. 15. Poor. He took those of the city, and left the poor of the country. v. 16. C.—Sept. Alex. omits this verse, which Grabe inserts: 16. "And the rest of the people, the chief cook or general, left for," &c. H.

Ver. 20. Under the sea the bases, (H.) or bowls, which, &c.

Ver. 23. Hundred; four next the wall were not seen, or were fixed to the chaptrels.

Ver. 24. Second in dignity to the high priest, a chief officer of the temple.

Ver. 25. Seven: 4 K. has five. But this seems more correct, as seven were commonly employed. Est. 1:10. Tob. 12:15. C.—Two might be taken later. H.—A scribe. S. Jerom has Sopher, (4 K.) as if it were a proper name, and not an office.

Ver. 28. Seventh year of Nabuchodonosor, and last of Joakim. 4 K. Sept. Rom. omits this and the next verse, which are found in Theodoret and the Compl. edit. C.—Grabe supplies all from, And Juda, v. 27, to 31. H.—Zuinglius observes that the Sept. have not a fragment of it, and that it has been added by some one to hide the ignominy of the Jews. It is interpolated in the Arab. of the Lond. Polyglot, and seems contrary to the true history. 4 K. 24:14. Kennicott, Diss. 2.

Ver. 31. Joachin. He had been thrown into prison when 18 years old, and continued there 37 years. It is not probable that Jeremias wrote this. Evilmerodach had also been the same in prison.—Five: 4 K. has seven. Probably Nabuchodonosor died on the 25th, and his son then resolved to liberate Joachin; which he did on the 27th.

Ver. 32. Kings, who had been conquered, and kept at court for parade. C.

LAMENTATIONS

THE LAMENTATIONS OF JEREMIAS

INTRODUCTION

In these Jeremias laments in a most pathetic manner the miseries of his people, and the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, in Hebrew verses, beginning with different letters according to the order of the Hebrew alphabet. Ch.—In the first chapter the order is exactly observed, but in the three next phe comes before ain, either for some mystery to us unknown, or by the derangement of transcribers, who perhaps thought that those verses were better connected, as they seem to be, (C.) though this is not very clear. H.—In such pieces the sentiments of a pensive heart are poured out without much connection. W.—The Greeks style this word θρηνοι, and Heb. kinoth, or lamentations. H.—S. Jerom, (2 Par. 35:25) thinks it was the first composition of Jeremias, and sung at the death of Josias. W. S. Jer. in Zac. xii. 11.—The eulogy of the king seems to belong to him rather than to Sedecias. C. 4:20. C.—Yet it might afterwards be applied to the latter, (H.) and to the ruin of Jerusalem. Eccli. 49:8. S. Jer. Pref. Theod. &c.—The city is represented standing, and sometimes in ruins. Chap. 5 seems to have been written after the rest. v. 4, 18. C.—It is not acrostic like them. The prophet alludes to the wretched condition of the Jews, after the murder of their Messiah; and hence the Church makes use of the lamentations on the anniversary of our Saviour's passion, inviting all sinners, both Jews and Gentiles, to repent: "Jerusalem, Jerusalem, be converted to the Lord thy God." W.—Many passages are applicable to a soul fallen into sin, as the commentary under the name of S. Jerom, (H.) compiled by Rabanus, (Du Pin) shews. H.

LAMENTATIONS 1

And, &c. This preface was not written by Jeremias, but added by the seventy interpreters, to give the reader to understand upon what occasion the Lamentations were published. Ch.—The author is not known, (W.) and few assert with Gretser that it is canonical; as it is only a title, (C.) like those prefixed to the Psalms. H.—It is not found in Heb. Chal. Syr. or S. Jerom. C.

Ver. 1. City. David had conquered many. Jerusalem was long considered as the finest city in those parts.—Tributary. It had been so to the Assyrians, Egyptians, and Chaldees. 4 K. 24:1. From this and similar passages, it would seem that the city was still existing: yet in others it appears to have been demolished. Here then the prophet declares what it had been: (C.) unless he wrote part after the death of Josias. H.—The beholders are astonished at the change and misery of the city. W.

Ver. 2. Night; privately, or without ceasing.—Friends, who had made a league with Sedecias. C. 27:3 and 48:26.

Ver. 3. Rest. Many returning to join Godolias. C. 40:7. C.—The Jews who beheld their brethren led away to Babylon, retired into Egypt, but were in misery. W.

Ver. 4. Feast, thrice-a-year. This was the most charming sight, when all the nation met to adore God, and to renew their friendship with one another. C.

Ver. 5. Lords. Lit. “at the head,” (H.) which Moses had threatened. Deut. 26:1 and 13. C.—This would be most cutting. W.

Ver. 6. Beauty; princes’ palaces, but particularly the temple. v. 10. C.—Rams, fleeing from place to place to seek relief. W.

Ver. 7. Of all. She compares her past happiness with her present chastisement.—Sabbaths, or days of rest. The pagans derided them as so much lost time. Ignava et partem vitæ non attigit ullam. Juv. v. Seneca ap. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. vi. 11.—If none of their legislators thought of such an institution, it was because they had not the spirit of Moses: their feasts were dissolute. C.

Ver. 8. Unstable. Heb. also, “removed,” (H.) like a woman unclean. C.—Such were excluded from places of prayer, and were not allowed to touch a sacred book, or to pronounce God’s name. Their husbands could not look at their face, nor give them any thing, but laid it down for them to take. Buxtorf. Syn. 31.—No condition could be more distressing. C.

Ver. 9. End in her prosperity, to avert this misfortune. H.—Idolatry is a spiritual adultery, (W.) and one of the worst species of filth. H.

Ver. 10. Church. Deut. 33:1. Ezech. 44:9. The Chaldees disregarded the ordinance.

Ver. 11–12. O. Heb. of the Masor. “It is.” C.—Prot. “Is it nothing to you, all?” &c. H.—But the Vulg. is much clearer, and approved by many Protestants, lu being often used as an exclamation. Gen. 17:18. C.—Vintage. He has plundered all. v. 22. H.—The king took a great deal, and his general the rest. 4 Kin. 24 and 25. W.

Ver. 13. Bones: fortresses. Theod.—I am like one in a burning fever. Ezech. 24:4. C.—Chastised. Lit. “instructed.” This is the good effect of affliction. H.

Ver. 14. Watched. This metaphor is not too harsh. C. 31:28. The Masorets prefer, (C.) “is bound by his hand.” Prot. But miskad is explained (H.) by the Sept. &c. in the sense of the Vulg. God lays the yoke on my neck suddenly. My iniquities are like bands, and Nabuchodonosor has power over me.

Ver. 15. Mighty. Heb. “magnificent” princes, (Lu. 22:25) or warriors. —Time of vengeance. All in animated. Heb. also, “a troop” of Chaldees. C. 2:22.—Juda. God, as the first cause, punishes the Jews by war.

Ver. 17. Then. They surround the city, to starve the inhabitants. v. 8.

Ver. 19. Me. Egypt attempted to relieve Juda, to no purpose. v. 2. C. —It could not, or at least did not, prove of any service to the Jews. C. 2:18. W.

Ver. 20. Alike, by famine, &c. C. W.—Ubique pavor et plurima mortis imago. Æn. ii.

Ver. 21. Done it. They conclude that I am cast off for ever. But when I shall be comforted, their turn will come; (C.) or rather they will feel the scourge soon after me.—Consolation. Heb. “which thou hast appointed.” H. C. 48:26. &c. Ezech. 25. &c.

Ver. 22. Let. He prays not for their ruin, but predicts it; and wishes rather that they would be converted. C.

LAMENTATIONS 2

Ver. 1. Obscurity. He continues to bewail the misery of Jerusalem.—Heaven, the highest glory. Is. 14:12.—Stool; the temple, and the land. The ark fell not into the hands of the enemy. C.—The punishment which the Lord permits, is justly ascribed to Him. W.

Ver. 2. Unclean, or treated it as such. C.—Sept. “he hath accounted profane the kings.” H.—Joakim, Jechonias, Sedecias, and the royal family, were exposed to the greatest ignominy and sufferings. C.

Ver. 3. Horn: beauty and power, (H.) the two kingdoms, the fortresses, (C.) and all their strength, denoted by horns. W.—Hand; refusing us protection, and aiding the Chaldees.

Ver. 5. Women, suffering them to be abused. C. 5:11. 13.

Ver. 6. Tent: the temple, with the same indifference as if it had been a hut, built to guard the fruit of a garden. Is. 5:5. Ps. 79:13.—Sabbaths. The Jews rested, but could offer no sacrifices in captivity.—Priest. Saraias was slain, and Sedecias imprisoned, &c. C. 52:10. C.

Ver. 7. Cursed, or suffered it to be polluted, (W.) as he looked on it with horror, after it had been profaned by Achaz, &c.—Towers. Sept. “palaces;” βαρεων.—Feast. What a contrast! The temple used to resound with songs of praise and music: the Chaldees fill it with insolent shouts of victory.

Ver. 8. Line, to level it with the ground, (Is. 34:11. C.) or to treat it with just severity. Theod.—Bulwark. Lit. “the first wall,” (H.) or ditch, lined with palisades. Alexander ordered the towers to be levelled, and the horses’ manes to be cut, when Hephæstion died, to denote the general sorrow.

Ver. 9. Among, as slaves, or in prison.—Law has been neglected; and now it cannot be observed, as to the ceremonial part. There are no public instructions.—No vision. When Jeremias was consulted, he had to pray for ten days. C. 42:7.

Ver. 10. Ancients, even magistrates. C.—Canitiem multo deformat pulvere. Æn. x.

Ver. 11. Earth, by an overflowing of the bile, occasioned by grief. Job 16:14. C.

Ver. 13. Sea. This is an hyperbole, to express the greatness of sorrow, as the sea surpasses all other waters. W.

Ver. 14. Revelations. Heb. Masoth, “burdens” for the enemy. This sentence ought to come before and they, &c. as it is in the Vulg. H.

Ver. 16. Mouth, with scorn. Is. 57:4. Ps. 34:21.

Ver. 17. Old, by Moses, (Deut. 28:15. 49. Lev. 26:14.) Micheas, (C. 26:18.) Holda, &c. C.

Ver. 18. Upon. Heb. and Sept. "O wall," &c. v. 8. H.

Ver. 19. Watches. Jerusalem is here represented in the midst of danger and misery. C.

Ver. 20. Dealt. Lit. "gathered grapes." C. 1:12. H.—Long; quite small. Ps. 38:9. This has been denounced, C. 19:9. Deut. 28:53. C. It took place at Samaria, and in the last siege of Jerusalem, (Jos. Bel. vii. and viii. W.) as well as at this time. H.

Ver. 21. Killed. Lit. "stricken" (H.) with unusual severity. W.

Ver. 22. About. The troops of the enemy resemble those multitudes, which come from all parts to Jerusalem. Many kings could not raise such an army. C.

LAMENTATIONS 3

Ver. 1. Man. Jeremias had a share in the common misery, (W.) and bewails his own condition, as a figure of Christ. Ps. 87:16. Is. 53:3. C.—His disciples must expect to suffer. H.

Ver. 2. Led, or driven me with the rod. H.—God employs two. Zac. 11:7. That of rigour was reserved for this prophet; (C. 38) none of them suffered more.

Ver. 4. Old and wrinkled, the effect of misery.

Ver. 5. Gall. Sept. "head." Chal. "he hath seized the chief." Job 16:13. He speaks in the name of the besieged, who had been threatened with this punishment. v. 19. C. 8:14. C.—And labour. Nabuzardan ransacked the city worse than his master, (W.) if the latter was at all present. H.

Ver. 6. Ever indeed. Eccle. 12:5 and Ps. 48:12. Jeremias (38:6) was in imminent danger.

Ver. 8. Prayer. God would not allow him to pray for the people. C. 7:16.

Ver. 9. Stones. There is no passage. Job 19:8.

Ver. 10. Places. This may refer to the prophet or to the people.

Ver. 12. Arrows. Such places were common where shooting was practised. 1 Kin. 20:36. Job 16:11.

Ver. 14. Song. True prophets were derided on account of impostors, and because of their declarations were unpleasant, &c. C. 17:15. Ezech. 12:22.

Ver. 15. Wormwood, or a bitter poisonous herb. C. 9:26. Deut. 29:18.

Ver. 16. One. Heb. “against a stone.” My bread is full of them. Ps. 101:10. C.—He describes his afflictions, as if his teeth had been broken. W.

Ver. 18. End. Heb. “strength.” Sept. “victory.” C.

Ver. 21. Hope. The remembrance fills him with grief and hope. C. 20:12. H.

Ver. 23. New. Novi should be novæ, to agree with miserationes. C.—Chal. “new miracles” occur daily. H.—God’s mercies are ever fresh. W.

Ver. 27. Yoke. Afflictions endured for justice sake ensure a blessing. H.—All may derive great benefit from suffering.

Ver. 28. Himself, with perfect resignation.

Ver. 29. Hope. He does not doubt, but confides with great humility.

Ver. 30. Him. We cannot verify this of the prophet as we can of Christ, (Mat. 26:62. C.) to whom this particularly refers. W.

Ver. 33. Men. He punishes with regret. Ezech. 28:23. Our crimes force him to chastise. v. 36. C.—Yet he seeks our advantage. W.

Ver. 37. Commanded. Heb. “said: It cometh to pass,” as if by chance. There have always been Epicureans. Ezech. 8:12. Ps. 93:7. C.—Those who deny Providence speak. v. 30. W.

Ver. 39. Sins? If all happened by inevitable necessity, or according to the laws of Providence, why should any one complain?

Ver. 41. Up. This posture “is the testimony of a soul naturally Christian.” Tert. Apol.—Our heart must accompany our hands. 1 Tim. 2:8. C.

Ver. 42. Inexorable. Heb. and Sept. “Thou hast not shewn pity.” H.

Ver. 43. Covered thyself, as if not to see our distress.

Ver. 44. Cloud. Is. 59:2. Eccli. 35:21. These expressions are admirable.

Ver. 47. Prophecy. Many would read, vastatio. Heb. “ruin.” Sept. “taking away.” C.—Prot. “Fear and a snare is come upon us, desolation and destruction.” The prophets were continually in danger. H.—The preaching of false prophets has brought these evils upon the people. W.

Ver. 51. Wasted. Lit. “robbed.” H.—I have felt more for my people than they have themselves. Moral writers often product this text, to shew the dangers of an unguarded glance (C.) at women.

Ver. 53. Over me, as if I were buried. H.—Jeremias was in prison (C. 38:6) when he prayed. v. 54. C. 20:7. C.

Ver. 59. Judge what they have judged unjustly. W.

Ver. 62. Lips; or language (Gen. 11:1) thou knowest. v. 60.

Ver. 63. Up, all their conduct.—Song. 5:14.

Ver. 65. Buckler, to cover all the body. They shall be surrounded with misery, (Ps. 108:29) while God will protect his servants. Ps. 5:13. C.—Let sorrow pierce their heart, as thy enemies are treated. W.

LAMENTATIONS 4

Ver. 1. Colour. Heb. “gold.” Sept. “silver;” (H.) denoting the patriarchs, (Theod.) chiefs, (Vatab.) or ornaments of the temple. C.—It had formerly glittered with gold; now there was nothing but smoke and ruins. W.

Ver. 2. Best. Heb. “gold of Phaz,” in Colchis. Gen. 2:11. C.—In Solomon’s reign, they powdered their hair with gold dust. Jos. Ant. viii. 7.—Vessels. Is. 30:14.

Ver. 3. Sea-monsters. Lit. Lamia. Heb. Tannim. H.—The lamia has a face like a woman, and a body like beasts; and is cruel, yet feeds its young. W.—The fabulous lamia is supposed to destroy all children, (Diod. Sic. xx. Ovid. Fast. vi.) and cannot be meant. But the sea dog, though most cruel will not neglect its young ones. C.—Ostrich. Heb. henim, (H.) “swans.” Is. 13:21. Job 29:14. The ostrich is said to break some of its eggs. Elian iv. 37.)—Swans do the like, and devour their young; for which reason they are hated by the Indians. Elian xiv. 3.—Sept. “their young (drajohs) have suckled the daughters of my people, so that they can find no remedy, like,” &c. H.—Though the ostrich has wings it never flies, but dwells in desert places. Such is the condition of the Israelites. Theodoret.—The ostrich forsakes its eggs. W.—All are solicitous for themselves.

Ver. 5. Scarlet. Lit. “yellow;” croceis. H.—Heb. means purple. Those who have been educated in the most delicate manner, are forced to feed on the most disgusting things. 4 K. 6:25 and 18:27. Deut. 28:54.

Ver. 6. In her. Sodom was destroyed by God. Her temporal misery was short. H.—Jerusalem was exposed to greater afflictions (C.) here, (H.) and her ingratitude and abominations were greater. Ezech. 16:46.

Ver. 7. Old ivory. Whiteness shews its age. Pliny iii. 8.—As it grows old it turns yellow, and loses much of its value. But the ancients had the art of dyeing it scarlet. Æneid xii. Iliad iv. Ovid ii. Am. v. C.—Heb. poninim may signify (H.) “pearls,” the shells of which are stained with a delicate red; though the epithet ruddy may mean “shining,” in which sense purpureus is used. Hor. iv. Od. 1.—The complexion of the Nazarites was fair, with a mixture of red. Cant. 5:10. They were probably clothed in white, and were highly respected. 1 Mac. 2:49. Amos 2:11. Num. 6:18. C.

Ver. 8. Coals. Heb. “blackness.” Sept. “soot.” H.—The people were naturally brown. Fasting and distress cause them to turn black. C. 5:10. Joel 2:6. C.—They were so changed, that old acquaintances knew not one another. W.

Ver. 9. For. Lit. “by the barrenness of the earth.” H.—Such a death was, no doubt, more painful than to perish quickly by the sword. C.

Ver. 10. Pitful. So their nature dictates. W.—But hunger made them the reverse. Some think they slew their children, to prevent them being exposed to more cruel torments, (C.) as the people of Colchis do their sick. Chardin.—Sodden: boiled or roasted; coxerunt. v. 5. Deut. 28:55. At the last siege of Jerusalem, this barbarity was manifested. C. Jos. Bel. vii. 8. Gr. 21. See C. 2:20.—Daughter. So cities are styled. W.

Ver. 12. Believed. God had so often protected this city against Sennacherib, Holofernes, &c. H.—It had been also so strongly fortified. 2 K. 5:6. C.

Ver. 13. Priests. They too generally favoured H. the false prophets. C. 2:26. &c. They were judges, and condemned the innocent: or exposed (C.) the citizens to destruction, by not warning them to amend, (H.) and to submit to the Chaldees. C.—Impostors are called prophets, as they have the same outward appearance. W.

Ver. 14. They. Sept. “Her guards have tottered in,” &c.—When. Prot. “so that men could not touch their garments,” as they were defiled. H.—These hypocrites were afraid of touching blood, as they observed external ceremonies, while they disregarded the spirit of religion.

Ver. 15. Depart. They were not ashamed to speak thus to others, or the citizens address the priests contaminated with blood. Even the Chaldees looked upon the Jews with abhorrence, as an abandoned people.—For they. Heb. “but they understood not, and wandered about. They, (C.) the Gentiles, said.” H.

Ver. 16. They, the Jews; or rather the prophet thus describes the Chaldees. C. 5:12. Deut. 28:50.

Ver. 17. Save. The Egyptians attempted it in vain. C. 34:8 and 37:10.

Ver. 18. Streets. There were enemies within as well as without. C.

Ver. 20. Christ, &c. According to the letter, is spoken of their king, who is called the Christ; that is, the anointed of the Lord. But is also relates in the spiritual sense to Christ our Lord, suffering for our sins. Ch. Is. 53:5. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xviii. 33.—It literally speaks of Josias, or of Sedecias. W.—Josias was slain by the Egyptians. S. Jer. in Zac. xxii.—But Sedecias seems chiefly to be meant. The people were much attached to him, though he was wicked; and they expected that he would have rescued them from the power of the Chaldees, as his league with the neighbouring Gentiles (C.) seemed to insure, (H.) if they had proved faithful. C.—But all was useless against the Lord. H.

Ver. 21. Rejoice. Edom had manifested her joy at the misfortunes of Juda. The prophet hints at this with a cutting irony. Ps. 136:7. Abd. 11.—Come, as at a feast. Edom was visited five years after the Jews. C. 49:7.—Naked. Sept. “and shalt pour it out,” (H.) or vomit. C. Grot.

Ver. 22. Accomplished, and sufficiently punished by exile. C. 50:20. Is. 40:2.—Discovered. Gen. 44:16 and 3 K. 17:18. C.—In vain wouldst thou hid them. H.

LAMENTATIONS 5

Ver. 1. The prayer, &c. This title is not in Heb. Sept. &c. Theodoret has passed over the chapter, as if he doubted of its authenticity. It does not follow the order of Heb. letters like the preceding, and seems to be a form of prayer for those who retired into Egypt. C.—Jeremias foresees what would happen, and prays as the people would do. W.

Ver. 2. Aliens. The Idumeans seized and kept possession of the southern parts.

Ver. 3. Father. Many had none surviving, and all had lost their king. W.

Ver. 4. Water. Even this was not given for nothing.

Ver. 6. Hand; engaged to serve Egyptians, Babylonians, (C.) or other nations, to procure sustenance. W.

Ver. 7. Iniquities. This was the usual complaint of the Jews, (C. 31:29) as if they had committed no offence themselves. If any virtuous people were involved in common ruin, they bore it with resignation, and acknowledged that they had deserved it. 1 Esd. 9:6. and 2 Esd. 1:6. Est. 14:6. Dan. 3:29.

Ver. 8. Servants. One had command over another. Mat. 24:45. The Chaldees were like slaves, and the race of Cham was condemned to servitude. Gen. 9:26. C.—The Jews had formerly dominion over Edom, &c. who now treated them so cruelly. M. Lyran.

Ver. 9. Sword. Any one might kill us.

Ver. 11. Oppressed. Heb. “afflicted.” Brutal insolence prevailed. C.

Ver. 12. Hand. Thus Leonidas was treated, after his head was cut off, by Xerxes. Herod. vii. 238.

Ver. 13. Indecently, like the Sodomites. Heb. “they made the young men grind” at the mill, in their prison, (H.) as Samson (Judg. 16:21) and Sedecias (according to the Sept. C. 52:11) were forced to do. To grind is often used in a bad sense; but it is not necessary to adopt it here. C. Amama.—The Chaldees treated their captives without pity or shame. H.—Wood; burdens, or stumbling-blocks, unless they were crucified; or, “roasted,” if we admit a small alteration in the Heb. C. 4:10. C.—They were forced to grind naked, and were beaten with staves. W.

Ver. 14. Gates, where sentence was usually passed. H.—The Jews had judges at Babylon, (Dan. 13:5) but not at first, nor everywhere.

Ver. 16. Crown, used at feasts; (C.) or, we have lost the sovereign power. W.

Ver. 17. Dim, the natural consequence of extreme want. 1 K. 14:27.

Ver. 18. Foxes, which were very common. Judg. 15:4. Thus, Horace says:

Agros atque lares patrios, habitandaque fana
Apris relinquet et edacibus lupis. Epod. 16.

Ver. 21. Convert. Thy grace must work upon our hearts, (C.) before we can expect redress, (H.) and an end of our banishment. T. Grot.—Beginning, when our fathers observed the law. S. Tho. M. See C. 31:18. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. ii. and iv. W.

Ver. 22. Thou hast. We might read with an interrogation, (H.) in Heb. “Hast thou?” &c. The Jews superstitiously repeat the last verse, for fear of ending the book in an ominous manner, as they do at the end of Isaias and Malachias. C.—Having treated us so severely, stop thy hand. W.—But I perceive it will be in vain to beg for redress till the seventy years be expired. M.

BARUCH

THE PROPHECY OF BARUCH

INTRODUCTION

Baruch was a man of noble extraction, and learned in the law, secretary and disciple of the prophet Jeremias, and a sharer in his labours and persecutions; which is the reason why the ancient Fathers have considered this book as a part of the prophecy of Jeremias, and have usually quoted it under his name. Ch.—The frequent Heb. idioms shew it to have been originally in that language. Baruch wrote by inspiration of the Holy Ghost the letter comprising the five first chapters, which he carried to the Jews from their brethren at Babylon. The martyrologies place his death, Dec. 28. The sixth chapter contains a letter of Jeremias, to which allusion is clearly made 2 Mac. 2:2. The Church still recites the works of Baruch under the name of Jeremias. Sab. Pent. proph. 6. C.—Many Fathers did so formerly, though they doubted not but Baruch was the author. See S. Iræn. v. 35. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xviii. 33. &c. Others, with Origen (Prin. ii. 3.) specify the writer; and the Councils of Laodicea, Florence, and Trent, decide that it is canonical. S. Jerom alleged it not against the Jews, as they denied its authority. W.—See Jer. 32:44. H.—In his preface on Jeremias he testifies that “it contains many things relating to Christ and the latter times.” W.—Grotius in vain attempts to represent some parts as interpolated (C. 3:38. &c. C.) and L. Cappellus has left some posthumous notes, which would represent the author as a stupid impostor, though he acknowledges his great learning. Houbigant.

BARUCH 1

Ver. 1. Babylonia. Sept. “Babylon,” where Jechonias was in prison, (H.) now the 5th year. v. 2. Baruch accompanied his brother Saraias. Jer. 51:59. C.—Capel. supposes that the author confounded them together, which is not probable. Houb.

Ver. 2. Month, in which the king was taken. C.—This was the fifth anniversary. H.—Fire: but soon extinguished. Usher—The taking of the city was effected at intervals, (H.) during eleven years, in the fifth of which this book was written. Jerusalem was at last reduced to ashes. As yet there were priests, a temple, &c. v. 7, 14. W. C.

Ver. 3. Jechonias. He was in prison, where the Jews met to hear the words of Jeremias; (51:59. &c. C.) or the king might hear the letter in private. Houbig.

Ver. 4. Sodi. Heb. zud, (H.) means “pride,” and probably denotes the great river Euphrates. C.—Bochart reads Sur, (Houb.) or Sori. The city Sura was there. C.

Ver. 7. Joakim, or Eliacim, high priest under Manasses, &c. Is. 22:20. C.—The text only says that he was priest, and Capellus asserts there was no pontiff then. Houbigant.

Ver. 8. Siven; a Syriac month, corresponding with our May. M.—Vessels; or, “the vessels were of silver.” H.—By retrenching a, which, it would seem that they asked for the golden vessels. Sedecias had made silver ones to supply their place. These also might have been taken away. C.—Baltassar had still those of gold, (Dan. 5:2. M.) or at least some of them. H.—Sedecias, now in favour, only asked for what he had made while a private man. Houbig.

Ver. 9. All. Cunctos should be vinclos, according to the Gr. “prisoners.” C.

Ver. 10. Meat. Lit. “manna,” as Sept. express Heb. monée; (H.) or as it is pointed, mincha; which properly means an “oblation” (Jer. 17:26. M.) of bread, wine, &c. C.—And offerings. Lit. “offer.”—Gr. “has for sin before frankincense. H.

Ver. 11. King. Gratitude and duty prompted them. Jer. 29:7 and 1 Tim. 2:2.—Baltassar. Evilmerodac, his elder brother, was in disgrace. Lyran. Jer. 52:31. C.—Heaven, as long and prosperous as possible. H.—It was a customary salutation to say, O king, live for ever. Dan. 2:4. Ps. 88:30. C.—Cappel. says Baltassar was not yet born. But how does he know this? It might be the title of the heir apparent, (H.) or of the king’s sons. We need not decide in a point of such antiquity. Houbig.

Ver. 12. Eyes, putting an end to our captivity, (Badwell) or causing us to detest our sins. C.—Days. This they knew was God’s decree, and they submit. H.—They prefer serving the Chaldees before other foreign nations. W.

Ver. 14. Proper festival days. C.—Heb. mohed, or muád. They were still observed (H.) in the temple.

Ver. 20. Curses against transgressors. Lev. 26. Dan. 9:11. C.—Day. We feel the effects of sin. The land of Juda was not flourishing, though not yet laid waste. H.

Ver. 22. Serve, or sacrifice unto: (Sanct.) operata Deo: (Tibul.) or to worship. C. 2:21. C.

BARUCH 2

Ver. 2. Heaven. After the death of Josias, the nation was exposed to the greatest misery. Its kings were imprisoned by the Egyptians, and then by the Chaldees; and surprising changes took place, all during the space of eight or nine years.

Ver. 3. Daughter. This is not mentioned in sacred history to have happened when this was written, (C.) except in the siege of Samaria. Some of the captives of Israel might be now at Babylon, as the places to which they had been sent were under the same king; and they confess their common transgressions and chastisements. All distinction of the kingdoms was now at an end. Some might also have been reduced to this extremity, when Joakim or Jechonias were besieged and taken. H.—We should not know that a similar distress prevailed under Sedecias, if it had not been specified Lam. 2:20 and 4:10. This prayer greatly resembles that of Dan. 9:4.

Ver. 4. Kings of Egypt and Babylon, while the Ammonites, &c. derided us.

Ver. 5. Under; a proverbial expression. Deut. 28:13.

Ver. 9. Watched, to punish. When he spares, he seems to slumber. Jer. 44:27. C.

Ver. 12. Justices. So God's law is frequently called, (Ps. 118) because its observance makes us just. W.

Ver. 16. House: the temple, or from heaven. C.

Ver. 17. Justice, &c. they that are in hell shall not give justice to God: that is, they shall not acknowledge and glorify his justice, as penitent sinners do upon earth. Ch.—And all in the grave are incapable of making known God's perfections. An appeal to his glory is thus often made. Is. 38:18. Ps. 113:17. Eccli. 7:24.

Ver. 18. Of evil is not in Greek. A soul which bears grandeur with pain, like Esther, and humbles itself before God, is most graciously received. H.—Fail, by fasting. Such are the dispositions required for prayer. Ps. 68:3.

Ver. 19. Fathers. Gr. adds, "and kings."—Prayers. Gr. "mercy." We boast not of our good works. H.—Mercy may denote prayer or humiliation. Theodoret gives a better sense: (C.) "We trust not in the just works of our fathers, or of ourselves, to receive any pity." H.

Ver. 21. Serve, as Jeremias (25:9 and 27:7 and 28:14) repeatedly admonished.

Ver. 23. Footstep. It shall become a desert. Isa. 33:8. Lam. 1:4.

Ver. 24. Place. The soldiers ransacked the tombs in hopes of plunder. Joakim was left unburied. This would be very affliction to the Jews. Jer. 8:1 and 22:19 and 36:30. C.

Ver. 25. Banishment. Syr. "captivity;" (Theod.) or "by pestilence inflicted by God:" ἀποστολή. Grot. Jer. 32:36.

Ver. 26. Day. Its vessels were taken away, (C. 1:8) and few were left to attend. C.—Grotius answers this difficulty. Houbig.—The prophet foresees the event. W.

Ver. 30. Heart, and be seriously converted, (H.) as the prophets had foretold. Osee 2:7. &c.

Ver. 33. Neck. Lit. “back,” insensible of stripes.

Ver. 34. Thereof. Lit. “of them;” eis. But ei is more (H.) conformable to the Greek. C.

Ver. 35. Another. Gr. “an everlasting covenant,” (H.) by Christ, (Maldon.) prefigured by that which Nehemias renewed. 2 Esd. 9:38. C.—The law of Moses was in force till Christ came. His law continues unto the end. W.

BARUCH 3

Ver. 3. Everlastingly. is such a short-lived creature an object worthy of thy eternal wrath? Job 13:25 and 14:1. Ps. 102:13.

Ver. 4. Dead; banished, (v. 11. Ezech. 37:5) or of the ancient patriarchs. This motive is frequently urged.

Ex. 32:13. Lev. 26:41. Deut. 9:27. Dan. 3:35. Jer. 15:1. C.—People in sin and misery seem dead, (v. 11) yet may revive by grace. W.

Ver. 5. Hand. Save us by thy power, and for thy own name’s sake. Jos. 7:9.

Ver. 8. Offence. Gr. “debt.” Parents might sell their children. Mat. 18:25. God threatens his rebellious people, that they shall be forced to borrow. Deut. 28:44. C.

Ver. 9. Hear. God replies. H.—The Church has long read this has holy scripture, on the eves of Easter and Pentecost. W.—This second part contains an instruction respecting true wisdom; which is to be found in God alone, (C.) in in the people to whom he is pleased to communicate it. H.

Ver. 11. Grown. Houbigant, “growing.” Five years had not elapsed: (Cappel.) yet they knew their captivity would be long.—Dead. Some might yield to idolatry. Dan. 3:7. 12. H.—They were in a manner buried, (Ps. 87:5) and forced to dwell among people where they were exposed to many defilements, as if they had been near a dead body. Lev. 11:25.

Ver. 13. Peace. There is none for the wicked; but only for the observers of the law.—For ever. Many read, “upon the land,” conformably to the Greek.

Ver. 15. Treasures? How few are truly wise and virtuous! The great men of the world have missed their aim. Israel has received the law. Yet where is the fruit of it? This is developed in the sequel.

Ver. 16. Nations of Assyria? &c. They esteemed themselves as lords of nature, and delighted in hunting. The beasts and birds are subject to them. Gen. 1:26. Jer. 27:6. Dan. 2:38. C.

Ver. 18. Unsearchable? Shall they not find the fruit of their works? W.

Ver. 20. Men; heirs of those conquerors, and equally in the dark. C.

Ver. 22. Theman, the capital city of Edom. Ch.—Eliphaz was king. Jer. 49:7.—The Phœnicians, so famous for industry, had no idea of true wisdom, no more than the Ismaelites, &c. C.

Ver. 23. Agar, the mother of the Ismaelites. Ch.—Merrha, probably in Arabia.—Fables. This may be a reproach, or a commendation. Those nations delighted in enigmatical and sententious discourses. 3 K. 10:1. C.—Instructors of mankind deserve praise, not those who devise false gods for lucre. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. vi. 5. &c. W.

Ver. 24. Possession. All the world belongs to him: yet how few partake of his wisdom!

Ver. 26. Giants, before and after the deluge. Gen. 6. Noe and Israel were preferred before them.

Ver. 29. Clouds? No human industry can procure this blessing. God alone is the dispenser of it. Deut. 30:12. C.—His grace makes the discovery easy. Mat. 11:30. W.

Ver. 32. Evermore. Lit. “in the eternal time,” or so long ago; (H.) designed to continue, while kingdoms shall change. Eccle. 1:4.

Ver. 33. Trembling. The sun stops, goes back, or withdraws its light, at his command. Jos. 10:12 and 4 K. 20:9. Mat. 27:45. Job 36:30.

Ver. 34. Watches. They are like his soldiers. Judg. 5:20. Eccli. 43:12. C.

Ver. 38. Earth, &c. by the mystery of the incarnation, by means of which the son of God came visibly amongst us, and conversed with men. The prophets often speak of things to come as if they were past, to express the certainty of the event of the things foretold. Ch. C.—Most of the Fathers prove Christ’s divinity from this text. W. See Tert. c. Prax. 6. S. Cyp. c. Jud. ii. 5. Eus. Dem. vi. 19.—If we explain it of wisdom, it comes to the same purpose, as Christ is the wisdom of God.

1 Cor. 1:30. Compare Prov. 8:30. Eccli. 24:12. Wisd. 9:10 which no one ever suspected to be interpolated. C. Pref.

BARUCH 4

Ver. 1. Ever. True wisdom may be found in the law. It constitutes the happiness of Israel. Deut. 4:7. Christ perfected and fulfilled it. Mat. 5:7.—Life. Moses promised temporal blessings; (C. 3:14. Deut. 30:15) yet the faithful would be rewarded eternally. C.—Wisdom is the law of God. C. 3:12. W.

Ver. 3. Nation. Be faithful, lest another take thy place. This Christians have done. Deut. 32:21. C.

Ver. 5. Memorial. Gr. lit. “O memorable Israel.” H.—Ye are left to support and restore the nation. This part of the letter is for their comfort.

Ver. 6. Sold, like slaves, or people taken in war. C.

Ver. 8. God. Lit. “Him.” Gr. “the Eternal.” H.—This is taken from Deut. 32:15. C.—Nursed you. The city is beautifully personified as a widow. v. 12. H.

Ver. 9. Near. Hebrew would be “daughters of Sion.” v. 14.

Ver. 15. Tongue. So the Chaldees are described, Deut. 28:49. Is. 33:19. C.

Ver. 16. Children. Gr. “daughters.” H.—Many of both sexes were taken with Jechonias. C.—Jerusalem comforts her children, and assures them of God’s mercy. W.

Ver. 20. Peace: the ornaments worn in my prosperity.—Sackcloth, or a rough garment, used by penitents and in times of public distress.

Ver. 25. Neck. Mardochai, Daniel, &c. were governors. Is. 40:14. These predictions were more fully verified when the Gentiles embraced the gospel. C.

Ver. 28. When. Gr. “now ten times as much, being converted, seek him.” H.—The Jews became much more docile and attached to the law.

Ver. 30. Named thee as his servant, spouse, (C.) and intimate friend.

Ver. 31. The. Gr. Δειλαίοι. “wretched those who have injured thee, and rejoiced in thy fall! Wretched the cities,” &c. H.

Ver. 32. She; Babylon. Ch.—Gr. “Wretched she,” &c. H.—Babylon shall fall a prey to Cyrus.

Ver. 35. Fire of war.—Devils. Whether they really dwell in ruins, or the people were of that opinion, (as the common sort are still) is not clear. Jer. 50:39. Is. 34:14.

Ver. 37. East and west. From Babylon and from the islands. Is. 11:11. Zac. 8:7.

BARUCH 5

Ver. 2. Garment. Heb. “cloak,” (Sanct.) such as were worn by people under no disgrace. C. 4:20. Tamar had one very costly. 2 K. 13:18. C.—Justice, or mercy. God is bound to fulfill his gracious promises. W.

Ver. 3. His. Gr. “thy.” Christ, the sun of justice, would effect this. Is. 60:1.

Ver. 4. Piety. Thus shall Jerusalem be distinguished after the captivity; but still more so when Christ shall appear, and give peace to his Church, after the ages of persecution.

Ver. 5. Arise. C. 4:36. Is. 52:2.—God. They remember his law with pleasure.

Ver. 6. Children. Gr. “the throne.” The return of the captives was a triumph. Is. 66:20 and 49:22. They had abundance of horses, &c. 1 Esd. 2:66. Darius gave them a convoy of 1000 horsemen. 3 Esd. 5:2. Jos. Ant. xi. 4.

Ver. 7. Diligently, without stumbling under the pillar of God’s protection. Is. 40:3. C.

Ad vos quâ veniet, tumidi subsidite montes
Et faciles curvis vallibus este viæ. Ovid. Am. 2:16.

Ver. 8. Woods. This is a poetical description. They shall pass through the sands of Arabia, as if they were under a delightful shade.

BARUCH 6

A copy. Sept. place this after the Lamentations, which follow Baruch. H.—Jeremias wrote it before the captives departed. Baruch read it to them at Babylon, and it was sent back to Jerusalem. W.—It might be delivered to the captives at Reblatha. We have it not entire, as another circumstance respecting the ark is mentioned. 2 Mac. 2:5. C.

Ver. 2. Seven generations; that is, seventy years. Ch.—A generation sometimes consisted of seven, ten, fifteen, thirty, thirty-five, fifty, or a hundred years. A. Lap. Menage.—Eighteen years of the seventy had already elapsed. C.—Seven is often put for many, (H.) or a general number, (W.) because so many days form a week. H.—Grotius substitutes δεκαδων for γενεων, “seven decads,” very properly. Houbigant.

Ver. 3. Shoulders. This custom was very ancient, suggested by the avarice of the priests, who begged on such occasions. Menander, ap. Clem. protrep.

Ver. 4. Fear. Worship not such things. H.

Ver. 6. Angel Michael, the conductor of Israel in the desert, &c. Dan. 10:13. Ex. 33:2. C.—He protected them also in Babylon. W.

Ver. 8. Gay. Nothing could be more despicable. C.

Ver. 10. The Harlots. Their hire was rejected by the Lord. But idols suffered themselves to be despoiled or adorned at pleasure. Gr. “But they will give of them even to harlots under the same roof, while they adorn them (idols) like men with garments, gods of gold, silver, and wood.” H.

Ver. 12. Them, of account of the many votaries, v. 16. Arnobius (6) ridicules such gods. C.—Prot. adopt similar arguments against the real presence as if we believed that Christ was hurt when the sacramental species were broken or devoured by vermin. A little more boldness will prompt them to reject the divinity of Christ, who was pleased to give up his body to those who treated him shamefully. Almost every argument which is levelled against Christ’s real presence in the blessed Eucharist, maybe turned against the incarnation; and hence so many now become Socinians, being unwilling to submit their understanding to the mysteries of religion. To apply these texts to holy pictures, would be nugatory. See Is. 40:18. H.—The absurdities here specified, shew how foolish are those who serve idols or take any images to be gods. W.—Calvin represents the pagans as adoring God under the images, as if they used them in the same light as Catholics do; which is contrary to this epistle, &c. T.

Ver. 13. Judge, or ruler. C.—The sceptre and spear were badges of power. Eustath.—Mars had a sword, Hercules a club. We know little of the idols of Babylon.

Ver. 15. Vessel; armour, or any utensil. C.

Ver. 18. Candles. Lit. “lamps.” H.—Some temples in Egypt were famous for their number. Herod. ii. 62.—The Lord prescribed them to be used. But who ever imagined that they stood in need of them to see, as the idolaters supposed their idols did?

Ver. 19. Hearts: the wood is worm-eaten. C.

Ver. 24. Price, foolishly believing that they have divine power. W.

Ver. 26. Gifts. The Chaldees supposed that Bel could eat. Dan. 14.—Dead. Food was placed on the tombs. S. Aug. abolished this custom in Africa.

Ver. 27. Take. Gr. “salt.” They give none to the poor, for fear of their imposture being detected, though they allow even the unclean to eat. v. 28. Lev. 12:2. Deut. 14:29.

Ver. 29. Women. They make gods. C.—Qui rogat, ille facit. Mart. viii. 24.

Ver. 30. Shaven, as in mourning, contrary to the custom of Israel. Lev. 21:10. C.—Heads. The Jewish priests wore mitres or caps.

Ver. 31. Dead, even of Adonis, (H.) whose worship is here ridiculed. C.—At Biblos people bewailed his death, and the next day proclaimed that he was alive. All cut off their hair, as the Egyptians do for Apis, except such as submitted to prostitute themselves to strangers. The hire they consecrated to Venus. Lucian, Dea Syra.—At funerals a feast was usually made, as is still the custom in Syria, (Roger. ii. 14.) and near Bagdad. Chardin. ii. 7.

Ver. 34. Requite. Gr. “brass,” much less gold. H.

Ver. 40. Chaldees. The priests themselves despise the idols most, (C.) and expose them to contempt, by pretending that they work miracles. H.—“Those who first set up representations of the gods, deprived cities of reverential awe, and increased the error,” said Varro; “prudently supposing that gods might easily be contemned, when like stupid images.” In simulacrorum stoliditate. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. iv. 26.

Ver. 41. They. Gr. “he could perceive. And they reflecting on this, cannot still abandon them; for they have no sense.” H.—They are so stupid, that they will not quit such impotent idols. C.

Ver. 42. Women. Aristophanes calls harlots, “corded bodies.” Eccles. Act. 1. The women of Babylon “prostituted themselves once, in honour of Venus, (H. Mylitta. C.) sitting with crowns on their heads in the temple, till some stranger selected them, and took them from their partition, made with cords,” (H.) to some more secret place, where they broke their bands. Herod. i. 199. C.—That some deluded women, led by various desires, should think thus to honour that impure deity, by an action which some modern casuists have not scrupled to rank among simple venial sins, cannot excite our astonishment so much, when we reflect on the tenets of the ancient Gnostics, and of Antinomians at the present day, whom J. Wesley, the last founder of the Methodists, applauded and followed even in the meridian of the gospel light! See Deut. 16:22 and 23:17. Yet these men read and perhaps distributed the Bible!—Stones. Lit. “bones;” (H.) or the refuse of what had been crushed, (πικτυρα. Athen. ii. 14.) to excite impure love. M. T.—Theocritus (Phar.) represents a witch doing the like; and Sanchez tells us, that some were taken in the fact in Spain. C.—Fumigation, used by the Babylonians after marriage, (Herod. i. 198.) may be insinuated. Grotius.

Ver. 45. To be. Is. 44:14. Horace (i. Sat. 8) introduces Priapus thus ridiculously explaining his origin; “I was formerly an useless piece of a fig-tree; when the workman, not knowing whether to make a bench or a Priapus, chose rather that I should be a god. Hence I am a god, the greatest terror of thieves and birds.” Sept. “they are nothing but what the workmen wish to form.” H.

Ver. 51. Them. Gr. has simply, (C.) “Who then knows not that they are no gods?” H.

Ver. 53. Daws. They have no greater influence (C.) than jackdaws.

Ver. 58. Gods. Sept. repeat this after satisfied, or “will use;” and here add, “or a pillar of wood in palaces, than,” &c. H.

Ver. 59. Obedient to God. They were appointed to mark out the seasons, &c. (Gen. 1:14) and if any creature were worthy of adoration, they would. C.—The Babylonians adored them as well as statues, and therefore their proper destination is specified here and by Moses.

Ver. 69. Scarecrow. Priapus answered this glorious purpose. v. 45. H.—When birds become accustomed to such things, they mind them not.

C.

Ver. 71. Scarlet. Gr. “marble” coloured wood. Grotius would substitute μαργαρου, “a pearl,” which decays through age. C.—Gr. also, “From the purple, which also shines upon them rotting, you shall,” &c. Μαρμαρου means, “of marble or shining.”

Ver. 72. Reproach, provided he also avoid the idols of the mind and of the heart. H.

EZECHIEL

THE PROPHECY OF EZECHIEL

INTRODUCTION

Ezekiel, whose name signifies the strength of God, was of the priestly race, and of the number of the captives that were carried away to Babylon with king Joachin. He was contemporary with Jeremias, and prophesied to the same effect in Babylon as Jeremias did in Jerusalem; and is said to have ended his days in like manner, by martyrdom. Ch.—He strove to comfort the captives, who began to repine that they had listened too readily to Jeremias, exhorting them to submit to the king of Babylon. Some think that part of his prophecies is lost, as Josephus mentions two books: but the nine last chapters, regarding the new city and temple, might form the second division. The Jews hesitated whether to allow his works to be canonical, as they seemed to differ from Moses, and from the dimensions given of Solomon’s temple. But the same God might surely suggest some improvements, and the morality of the prophet is most excellent. C.—His style may be compared to that of Homer (Grot.) and Alcæus. Many have thought that (C.) Pythagoras was his disciple; (Eus. præp. xiii.) yet the latter seems to have lived after the prophet, who was led into captivity with Jechonias, A. 3410, and prophesied for twenty years. He dates from this period, (C.) and from the renewal of the covenant under Josias, (C. 1:1. H.) when the captivity was first announced. W.—The Jews allowed none to read the first and the nine (H.) last chapters, nor the beginning of Gen. nor the Cant. before they were thirty years old; and they never attempted to explain the vision nor the building of the temple, supposing it to be above the power of man. St. Jerom.

EZECHIEL 1

Ver. 1. And is either superfluous, as at the beginning of most of the sacred books, (C.) or shews the connection of what is written with what the prophet saw or heard internally. S. Aug. in Ps. iv. S. Greg. W.—Year: either of the age of Ezechiel, or (as others will have it) from the solemn covenant made in the eighteenth year of Josias; (4 K. 23. Ch. W. C.) or he alludes to the era of Nabopolassar, used at Babylon, (M.) or to the last jubilee. See Sanct. The thirtieth year, from the prediction of Holda to Josias, (H.) concurs with the fifth of the prophet's captivity. C. 17:12. Usher, A. 3410.—Fourth of the sacred year, (C.) on Friday, 24th July, (Usher) or in Jan. S. Jer.—Chobar, or Aboras, which runs westward into the Euphrates, above Thapsacus. Strabo.—The captives were in those parts, though not present. C.—Opened, in spirit, (H.) by faith. S. Jerom—The prophet fell prostrate. C. 2:1. H.

Ver. 2. Captivity. Lit. “transmigration,” (H.) which is more agreeable to the Heb. &c. Jechonias delivered himself up. Six years after this, Sedecias was taken. S. Jerom.

Ver. 3. Hand; power, energy of the Holy Spirit. Theod.

Ver. 4. North, denoting the invasion of Judea by the Chaldees. Is. 14:31. Sanct.—The Jews thought the following vision inexplicable, and deliberated about rejecting the book, when Ananias offered to answer every difficulty. They assigned him three hundred barrels of oil to light his lamp, while he performed the task. Rabbins.—This hyperbole shews their idea of its obscurity. C.—Amber, (electri) a compound of four parts of gold and one of silver, (Pliny xxxiii. 4.) more precious than either. S. Jer.—It may also mean orichalchum, or a mixture of gold and brass, (Bochart, anim. 2 b. vi. 16.) which was also preferred before gold alone, as it had the hardness of brass. Lucret. Serv. in xii. Æneid.

—alboque orichalcho
Circumdat lorica humeris.

—Two vessels are mentioned, probably of this composition. 1 Esd. 8:27. C.

Ver. 5. Living creatures. Cherubims, (as appears from Eccles. 49:10) represented to the prophet under these mysterious shapes, as supporting the throne of God, and as it were drawing his chariot. All this chapter appeared so obscure and full of mysteries to the ancient Hebrews, that, as we learn from S. Jerom, (ep. ad Paulin.) they suffered none to read it before they were thirty years old. Ch.—The pagans had many such compound figures as are here represented. Parkhurst, p. 411. H.—Sanchoniathon (ap. Eus. præp. 2.) seems to have borrowed his description from this place.—In them. They stood upright and had some parts of the human figure. C.—Indeed, it seems to have been predominant. H.

Ver. 6. Faces. This sometimes means shapes; and Pererius supposes that the animal had the head of a man, and the breast covered with lions' hair, the feet or round cloven hoofs of an ox, and the wings of an eagle. But it had rather four faces as well as wings, the faces of the man and lion being to the right, and the other two to the left; (C. T.) or the eagle was behind (H.) or above the head of the man, and the lion and ox at his right and left. Corn. a Lapide. M.

Ver. 7. Straight. Heb. “a straight foot.” Prot. prefer “feet.” H.—Of a calf. Aquila reads to the same import hagol, “round,” instead of hegel, (H.) “a calf.” Sym. has “winged feet,” like Mercury. C.—Sept. omit this, says S. Jerom, though we have his version of Sym. as if it belonged to the Sept.; and it occurs in Grabe as genuine.—Brass. Sept. add, “and their feathers were very light.” H.

Ver. 8. Wings. Their arms were covered with feathers, and the hand appeared at the extremity; or they had four arms under the wings. C. 10:8. They all came from the shoulders, so as to correspond with the four faced animal, v. 6. C.—Others believe that each face had four wings, so that the animal would have sixteen. Maldonat.—In Is. 9:2 the cherub has six wings. The form was variable, as there was nothing in nature similar. They were perhaps designed to represent the eternity and dominion of God over the whole creation. v. 28. H.

Ver. 9. Another. Two above were extended so as to support the throne, which seemed to rest on these eight wings connected together. The others were joined so as perfectly to cover what was below the breast. C.—Sept. “And the wings of those four were touching each other, and their faces (Calmet reads with Chal. and Heb. wings) turned not,” &c. H.—The wings did not imitate those of birds, going to and fro, but were constantly in the same direction; or the animals did not change their respective situations: as they had four faces, there was always one of them turned to the opposite quarters of the world. C.—They turned not about, (v. 12) but having faces on every side, were ready to go any way. W.

Ver. 10. Over. This is not specified in Heb. Chal. Sept. or S. Jer. C.—“The face of an eagle for all the four.” It must have been above or behind the man, as the situation of the other two faces is here determined. v. 6. H.

Ver. 11. Faces. Sept. “wings:” and indeed it does not appear how their faces were stretched upwards, (C.) unless they looked earnestly that way; though, out of respect, they covered their faces with two wings.

Ver. 14. Flashes. Heb. Bazak. H.—Theodotion retains the original. His version seems to have been inserted in the Sept. (C.) who omitted this verse, as seeming to contradict v. 9 and 12. S. Jer.—Yet it only signifies that the motion was quick as lightning, though they did not alter their situation with respect to each other.

Ver. 15. Faces. One wheel crossed another at right angles, so that it was ready to move in any direction, (v. 17. C.) like a globe. H.

Ver. 16. Sea: sky blue. Heb. “Tharsis,” which Sym. renders “the hyacinth;” a precious stone. Ex. 28:20. C.—Midst. The evangelists and New Testament agree perfectly with the Old. S. Greg. hom. vi. W.

Ver. 17. Parts. When they went, they went by their four parts. That is, indifferently to any of their sides, either forward or backward, to the right or to the left. Ch.—Their motion was connected with the chariot. v. 20. C.

Ver. 18. Eyes, like Argus, or the tail of a peacock. C.—The eye is sometimes put for a colour. Grot.

Ver. 20. Life. They were moved like the rest by the whirlwind, or by living creatures. They seemed to be animated, as Homer describes Vulcan’s tripods.

Ver. 22. Crystal, or sapphire. v. 26. C. 10:1. This shining sky was like the footstool of the Lord, and rested on eight wings. v. 9, 23.

Ver. 24. Voice. The motion of the wings made a noise like a torrent, or thunder.—God. Heb. “self-sufficient,” as Sept. &c. render it, ikanou. C.—Prot. “like the voice of the Almighty.” H.—Down; or rather ceased to make such a noise. v. 25. C.

Ver. 26. Upon it. This might be omitted, as the Vulg. has only desuper, above. H.—God was pleased to assume the shape of a man, seated on the throne.

Ver. 27. Amber, or orichalcum. v. 4.

Ver. 28. Rainbow, encircling the sky blue throne and the flame. Nothing could be more dazzling, nor better manifest the subjection of man. C.—The prophet saw four visions at once; the whirlwind, (v. 4) the living creatures, (v. 5) the wheels, (v. 15) and the man seated on a throne, in the sky, v. 26. To explain all these mysteries, a large commentary would scarcely suffice. W.—The tempest, cloud, and fire, shew the impending ruin of the Jews. The ministers of God are over ready to execute his orders. The wisdom of Providence is denoted by the name of the cherubim, the connection of causes by the four wheels, &c. M.—God appears in his chariot going to war. He denounces vengeance on the guilty. C. 2 and 43. See Corn. a Lapide. H.

EZECHIEL 2

Ver. 1. Face, to adore God. M.—Son of man. Our Saviour, out of humility, takes this title, which no other gave him; as the angel does commonly to this prophet, who was his figure: few else have received it, (Dan. 8:17) but the reason is not known. W.—God here teaches Ezechiel not to boast of the honour shewn to him, since he must always remember that he is but a feeble mortal. C.

Ver. 2. Spirit of prophecy; (S. Jer. T.) or, I revived, and took courage.

Ver. 3. Israel. His commission was chiefly to them. C.

Ver. 5. Forbear to sin. H.—He thus insinuates free-will. S. Jer.—If they refuse to hear my prophet, they will at least perceive that they are inexcusable. C.

Ver. 6. Scorpions. This people is no less destructive (H.) and hardened. Ps. 117:12.—For might be better rendered, “though.” C.

Ver. 8. Eat. “If we do not eat the open book, we cannot teach.” S. Jer.

Ver. 9. Without. This was only done when the work was long. C.—

Scriptus et in tergo, necdum finitus Orestes. Juv. 1.

—Sept. “past and present things were written in it.” H.—Woe, or the words of the penitent, of the blessed, and of the damned. W.—The canticles were of a mournful nature, and the prophet had sorrows to announce. C.

EZECHIEL 3

Ver. 1. Eat this book, and go speak to the children of Israel. By this eating of the book, was signified the diligent attention and affection with which we are to receive and embrace the word of God; and to let it as it were, sink into our interior by devout meditation. Ch.—The revelation came from God. v. 10. W.

Ver. 2. Book, in spirit; (C.) or in reality, he chewed the volume. H.

Ver. 3. Mouth. I readily accepted the commission, but soon found the difficulties to which it would expose me. v. 12. Jer. 15:16. Apoc. 10:10.

Ver. 6. Unknown. Heb. “heavy.” C.—Prot. “hard.” H.—It is not above thy strength. Deut. 30:12.—To thee. He insinuates that the Gentiles would obey the apostles. S. Jer.—But the time was not yet come. C.—From this text and Mat. 11:21 it appears that “the same grace” is accepted by some and rejected by others, as “more grace is added to the former, which was sufficient before, and by this ... is made effectual” through God’s mercy. Rom. 9. W.—Those who reject the first grace, can blame only themselves, if they receive no more. The same grace falling on a heart better prepared by God, like seed on good soil, is more fruitful.

Ver. 7. Hard. Lit. “rubbed” like a stone, or brass; attritâ. H.—God’s ambassadors (Eph. 6:20. C.) must do their utmost. H.—The success must not puff them up, nor the failure too much depressed them, as all regards God, (Mat. 10:40) who will know how to make things conduce to his own glory. They must only bewail the blindness of sinners. C.—The care of them, and not the cure, will be required at their hands. v. 19. H.

Ver. 8. Harder. If they will not blush, thou shalt not be ashamed to lay their disorders before their eyes, though they be such as ought not to be mentioned, as becomes saints. H. See C. 16 and 22. C.

Ver. 12. Spirit; wind (Hugo) or angel, took me through the air; (Prado.) or, I went willingly. S. Jer.—Commotion, like an earthquake, (Heb. Sept.) occasioned by the motion of the chariot, or the voice of the cherubim. v. 13.

Ver. 14. Spirit, resolved to rebuke (C.) sinners. Sept. “the spirit of the Lord also lifted me ... and I went aloft (like a meteor; μετεωρος) by the impulse of my spirit; for the hand of the Lord upon me was strong; and I went loft, to the captivity, and passed through them ...

conversing in the midst of them." H.

Ver. 15. The heap of new corn. It was the name of a place; in Hebrew, Telabib, (Ch.) as the Chal. leaves it (M.) with the three Greek interpreters. C.—Tel means "a heap," and abib "new corn." H.—There was no new wheat in the fourth month, but rather in May or June. C. 1:1. Ptolemy places Thelda near the Chaboras.—Mourning; or Prot. "astonished," like Job's friends, for people dead in sin. H.—Many suppose that he never spoke. Yet this is not certain, (v. 11. C.) though probable from v. 16. H.

Ver. 17. Watchman: the usual title of those placed over others. C. 33:2. Is. 21:6. Let none perish through thy neglect. C.—"He (the pastor) kills the man whom he delivers up to death by silence." S. Greg. hom. xi. 9.

Ver. 20. Iniquity, for want of thy instruction; (H.) or, if thou neglect to reclaim him, (C.) and he perish, or owe his conversion to another, when duty requires thee to take care of him, thou shalt answer for the possible bad consequences. Thy sin is great, whatever become of him. But if he be damned, though he must blame himself chiefly, yet the blood of his soul shall cry for vengeance more than Abel's. H.—Before him, taking away my grace in punishment of his revolt. W.—If thou neglect to attempt reclaiming him, thou shalt perish with him; (S. Greg.) or if he be exposed to trial, and thou abandon him, (Vat.) of if thou neglect to husband well the precious moments, when I open his eyes, and fill him with apprehensions of his dangerous state, I will require, &c. Orig. S. Jer.—Remembered. Ingratitude caused the fruits of virtue to decay, and former crimes to revive, in some sense. S. Tho. iii. p. q. 88. a. 1. Mat. 5:26. C.

Ver. 21. Warn. It is the duty of a pastor to warn the just as well as sinners. W.—It will not suffice to do this publicly: sometimes we must go from house to house, like S. Paul, and compel those who are in the hedges to enter the marriage feast, by the most persuasive arguments. H.

Ver. 25. Bands. It is uncertain whether by his order, or they supposed he was deranged, as our Saviour's brethren meant to treat him. Mar. 3:21. The Chal. explains it figuratively of God's order, attaching the prophet to his service. C.—But real chains would more forcibly shew the future captivity of Juda (H.) which the prophet declared both by words and actions. C.

Ver. 26. House. "When there is a multitude of sins, (or sinners; peccatorum) the offenders are unworthy of being corrected by the Lord.” S. Jer.—The prophet’s silence might suffice to admonish them. C.—He heard the Lord’s commands to C. 11:24 before he spoke to the people. M.

Ver. 27. Forbeareth. Sept. “disbelieveth, let him disbelieve.” So we read, He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; (Apoc. 22:11) which denotes the most desperate condition. H.—Aquila (2 edit.) has, “he who abandons, shall be abandoned.” S. Jer.—The man who makes good use of grace shall receive more; but he who despises the offers of God, shall be justly deprived of them in his greatest need. C.

EZECHIEL 4

Ver. 1. Tile, very large. C.—Those of Italy were two feet large and one broad. Pallad.—This might be soft clay; (Grot. M.) or the siege might be marked out upon it with chalk or a sharp stile. C.

Ver. 2. Cast up. The ditch would be about three feet deep, and the earth being thrown up, people might approach the town with less danger. W.—The besieged were thus also prevented from going out. 4 K. 25:1. Forts or towers were erected to overlook and clear the walls. —Rams. This is the first time we find them mentioned. Homer is silent about them; (C.) and the ancient sieges lasted so long, because people had not found out the art of demolishing the walls. Diod. ii.

Ver. 3. Pan, or plate, on which bread was usually baked. This was to represent the walls of the city. C.

Ver. 4. Sleep. Heb. “lie down.” M.—He eat at intervals. C.—Iniquities, or punishments. H.

Ver. 5. Three, &c. S. Jerom says some “Vulgate,” (H.) Latin, (C.) or rather incorrect Greek (H.) copies read 100, others 150. See Origen, &c. C.—The Alex. copy has the former, (H.) the Rom. edit. the latter number; and is followed by Theodoret and Maldonat. C.—But the more accurate Sept. agree with the Heb. &c. The captivity of Israel must be dated from Phacee, (4 K. 15:29) to the end of the reign of Darius Memnon, who espoused Esther, and granted liberty “to all the Jews;” or rather from Manathem, (4 K. 15:19) to the 28th of the same king Assuerus. Thus God’s “grace, we think, and we may so speak without arrogance, has enabled us to explain this difficulty, which no other has done.” S. Jer.—Many confound the duration of the iniquity of Israel with that of Juda, forming 430 years; and they explain it of the time during which the nation had prevaricated. But this seems unnatural. We may rather conclude, that the prophet speaks of a separate judgment, and dates from the destruction of Samaria and of Jerusalem. The former city was taken A. 3283. If we add 390 years, we shall find the year 3673 the very year when Alexander overcame Darius, and soon after granted the Jews full liberty to return, or live according to their own laws. This he granted to those in Babylon, and to the Israelites (C.) in Media. Jos. Ant. xi. ult. & c. Ap. i.—Philadelphus afterwards liberated many in Egypt, (Jos. Ant. xii. 2.) as Osee (11:11) had foretold. The chastisement of Juda must be dated from the destruction of Jerusalem under Sedecias, till Darius, the Mede, favoured the Jews about forty years afterwards. C.—S. Jerom only allows forty years to have elapsed from the first of Jechonias till the first of Cyrus. The want of an exact chronology gives rise to many such difficulties. H.—It is very hard to explain how the ten tribes were 390 and the two tribes 40 years in captivity, as it is certain that the latter were seventy year banished from their own country. W.—Perhaps during the last thirty their condition was greatly ameliorated, after the decree of Cyrus, though the liberation was only perfect under Hystaspes and Esther. H.—The iniquity of Israel, from Solomon to Salmanasar, lasted 390 years; and that of Juda, under the reign of Manasses, was most abominable for the space of forty years; (Tournemine) or it continued so long from the 18th of Josias till the 4th, after the city was destroyed, and the land became a desert. Usher, A. 3380 to 3420.—But how shall the reign of the virtuous Josias be included in this period? H.—The action of the prophet lying 430 days, denoted the length of the siege of Jerusalem, during which extreme scarcity should be felt, and also the captivity of the people. Some have thought that he could not remain 390 days on one side, and that all passed in spirit. But what impression would that make upon the people? He was chained down, (C.) to represent their miserable condition. H.—Prædo saw a fool who lay tied in one posture for above fifteen years. C.—The remaining so long in one posture must have been painful to the prophet. T.

Ver. 7. Siege, which shall be most terrible; (H.) 390 days: the pillage shall last other forty. T.—So many years have the people transgressed.—Out. Heb. “naked.” Thus various barbarians fight.—Prophecy, not by words, (C. 8:16) but by actions. M.

Ver. 10. Statens, sicles, each being equal to 9 dwt. 2.57 gr. Eng. The hin contained 1 gal. 2 pints. Arbuthnot. H.—He had an allowance of ten ounces a-day. C. T.

Ver. 12. Barley, the worst or usual food of the poor. H.—Ashes, to denote hurry. C.—Cover with hot ashes, (H.) formed of dry excrements. C.—That of oxen is still used in Egypt, (Val. ep. xi.) and in some parts of England, by the poor people. Hooke.—This was more tolerable, (C.) and God agrees to substitute it. v. 15. Heb. “Thou shalt eat it as barley cakes, and shalt bake,” (Prot.) or “hide it,” &c. Sept. H.—“The law itself, which the Jews read and do not understand, is this ember cake covered with human dung.” Phil. 3:8.—“They adore not idols, but do all for the belly and for earthly goods.” S. Jer.

Ver. 13. Filthy. Israel was less careful to avoid uncleannesses than Juda. Hence the prophet eats only during 390 days. Osee 9:3. C.—While the city was pillage for forty days, the prisoners would procure better food. v. 7. H.

Ver. 14. Ah. He makes the same exclamation as Jeremias. 1:6. Heb. aha. Theodot. “Oh!” Sept. and Sym. “by no means.” H.—God forbid. Excrements make a person legally unclean. Deut. 23:12. C.

Ver. 15. Neats, or “oxen;” boum. Prot. “cow’s dung.” H.—God allows him to bake his bread under such ashes. C.—So great is his condescension towards his friends! T.

Ver. 16. Staff. As this supports the weak, so bread nourishes all men, (W.) particularly the bread of life. S. Jer.—Very little food, (C.) and that of a nauseous kind, (H.) would be found during the siege. C.

Ver. 17. When. Prot. “they may want bread and water, and be astonished one with another, and consume away for their iniquity.” H.

EZECHIEL 5

Ver. 1. That. Heb. “the scissors of clippers.” The same term is used for clipping sheep as for cutting hair. Shaving was not probably then in use.—Beard, as in mourning or for ignominy. 2 K. 10:4. Jer. 47:5.—Balance, to shew that God does nothing unjustly. C.—The hair. Lit. “them.” H.—This was to be done before he lay down. Hew was to burn, cut, and divide the hair as the siege represented on the tile advanced, to denote that some should perish in the city by famine, others by the sword, while a few should be scattered among the nations: yet of these a small number should be gathered round Godolias, and perish with him, or in Egypt, &c. and the rest be thence led captive to Babylon.

Ver. 2. Third. Sept. and Theod. read “a fourth,” as also v. 12. (C.)

thus assigning half to be burnt by death (pestilence) and famine. The other half of the people falls a prey to the sword and to captivity. The pestilence, famine, and the sword, were the three usual scourges left to David's choice, (2 K. 24) which here destroy each a fourth part, while the rest become captives. Yet even of this third or fourth part, many engage in civil broils, and perish. S. Jerom hints that the Sept. is interpolated from Theodotion, v. 12, and that their version only comprised the pentateuch. But the other books went at least under the same title; and there must be some mistake in the words asterisked, since they occur in the Heb. Vulg. &c. third being only substituted for fourth: "And a fourth part of thee shall fall by the sword." The Heb. is rather less degrading to the Jews, as there would be thus at most one-third preserved, instead of a part only of one-fourth. See Deut. 27:4. Jer. 52:28.—Take. Sept. add here, "a fourth part; and shalt burn it in the midst of it; and a fourth thou shalt cut," &c. H.—He was thus to deal with a part of the hair during 390 days, (M.) or at the end of them. R. Salom.—Round, in the cities near Jerusalem, (W.) or round the picture of it. C. 4:1.

Ver. 4. Out of it. Some rose up against Godolias. Jer. 40. &c. C.—The divisions of the Jews brought on the persecution of Epiphanes, (Sanct.) and introduced Pompey. S. Jer. H.

Ver. 5. Midst, distinguished above the rest. Many have supposed that the city was in the exact middle of Palestine, or of the world. Ps. 73:12. C.

Ver. 7. Surpassed. in numbers, (Sym.) or rather in wickedness. Chal. C.—Sept. "because you have been incited by the," &c. H.—Judgments. You have been less attached to my service than the Gentiles have been to their idols. Some think that not is here superfluous, as it is omitted C. 11:12. But it is wrong to imitate the Gentiles, and worse to surpass them in crimes.

Ver. 9. Like. The ruin of Jerusalem by the Chaldees was terrible, (C.) but that by the Romans was more so. S. Jer.—The reasons were different.

Ver. 10. Fathers. This is not specified in history. Famine prevailed, 4 K. 25:3.; and we find something similar, Lam. 4:10. C. Bar. 2. W.—It is probable, therefore, that these threats were realized. Theod. Deut. 28:53.—Scatter. Lit. "winnow." H.—The Jewish nation was never again all together in the promised land.

Ver. 12. Pestilence. Sept. "death;" so they usually denote pestilence. They add, "and a fourth part of thee shall be," &c. v. 2. H.

Ver. 13. Comforted, or revenged. C. 24:14. Is. 1:24.

Ver. 14. And a. Sept. “and thy daughters (dependances. C.) round,” &c. H.

Ver. 15. Scoff. Lit. “blasphemy;” which is here used improperly, to denote derision. W.

Ver. 16. Arrows; inclemency of the seasons, &c. which bring on famine. M.

Ver. 17. Beasts. They usually take possession of abandoned countries. S. Jer.—The Chaldees may also be meant. C. 17:3.

EZECHIEL 6

Ver. 2. Mountains, where idols were chiefly adored. Here their votaries find death. W.—Israel, including all God’s people, as the sacred writers make no distinction (C.) after the destruction of Samaria.

Ver. 4. Idols. Protestant marginal note, “sun-images,” as v. 6. The sun was much worshipped. C. 8:16. H.

Ver. 5. Bones. The Chaldees violated the tombs. Bar. 2:24. Jer. 8:1. C.

Ver. 8. Some. Providence still preserves some faithful or penitent souls. W.

Ver. 9. Broken. Adversity has made them repent.

Ver. 11. Foot, through indignation or pity. C.

Ver. 14. From, or, “more than,” (H.) as Heb. may signify. Deblatha was in the land of Moab. Num. 33:46. C.

EZECHIEL 7

Ver. 2. Israel, or Judea, in all its parts. W.—In five or six years' time all shall be destroyed.

Ver. 3. Set, as accusers, to increase thy confusion.

Ver. 5. One. A second shall not be necessary. Nah. 1:9. C.

Ver. 6. Awaked. Justice seems to have slept. H. See v. 10. Jer. 1:12.

Ver. 7. Destruction, (contritio.) S. Jerom reads “contraction,” as also v. 10. Prot. “the morning.” H.—Chal. “the reign.” C.—Heb. tsephira, is variously rendered. H.—Joy. Heb. “echo or cry” of people in the vintage.

Ver. 10. Budded; figurative expressions, denoting a speedy vengeance. C.—Chal. “the reign is open, the ruler has flourished, the wicked hath appeared.” In this reign of Nabuchodonosor ye shall be chastised. H.—Sept. or rather Theodotion, from whom many things have been supplied according to S. Jerom, (C.) have, “The deceit (or thick foliage; πλοκη) has gone forth, the rod,” &c. H.

Ver. 11. Iniquity. What other fruit could be expected from wickedness? It draws on chastisement.—Noise, or grandees. None will repent, and therefore none shall escape, from the highest to the lowest.

Ver. 13. Sold, as in the year of jubilee. Lev. 25:25. C.—Now there shall be no recovery. W.—They shall be driven from the land.—Although. By supplying the former negation, (C.) we may render “Nor,” &c. (H.) which seems better. C.—It may also mean, “those who are now alive” shall witness these things. H. Back. It is not a mere threat.

Ver. 14. Ready. He describes the vain attempts of the Jews to make resistance.

Ver. 16. Doves, not daring to vent their complaints. C.

Ver. 17. Water; urine, (S. Jer.) sweat, &c. the usual effects of fear.

Ver. 18. Heads. They cut their hair in times of penance and of mourning.

Ver. 19. Iniquity. Riches have fostered their passions: they will not now procure food or liberty. Soph. 1:18. C.—The riches of the idols invited the enemy to plunder. W.

Ver. 20. And. Prot. “As for the beauty of his ornament, he set it in majesty: but they made the,” &c. The sacred ornaments of the temple, appointed by God, (H.) have been converted into idols, and shall be carried to Babylon. v. 21. C.

Ver. 22. Secret: the inward sanctuary, the holy of holies. Ch.—God would guard it no longer. C.

Ver. 23. Shutting up. Heb. “chain,” for imprisonment and captivity. Ch.—Pronounce sentence upon all.

Ver. 24. Sanctuary; the temple of God, or of idols. C. 6:3.

Ver. 25. Distress. When the enemy is before the city, they will see their error; but it will be too late. They shall not obtain peace. Jer. 38:1.

Ver. 26. Ancients. Priests shall afford no consolation, nor counsellors any advice. They shall be all confounded. C.—During the captivity a few only were found to give instruction. Mal. 2. W.

EZECHIEL 8

Ver. 1. Sixth of the prophet’s captivity, (C.) in August, A. 3411. Usher—He had rested on his left or right side, whenever he slept during 430 days, and on the following had this vision. W.—He was stationed in spirit at the northern gate leading to the court of the priests, and beheld the glory of God and the idol of jealousy. He saw the people, men and women, adoring idols, and priests worshipping the sun. C. 9. God rests on the gate of the temple, and orders a man to sign those who were to live, and six others to destroy the rest. The prophet prays. C. 10. God orders the man clothed in linen to take coals from the cherubim, and sprinkle them through the city. The throne goes to receive the Lord. C. 11. Ezechiel prophesies against many, at the eastern gate; and God informs him that the former captives shall return, but that the wicked at Jerusalem shall perish. His chariot then rests on the mountain to the east of the city. Thus his reasons for punishing the people become evident.

Ver. 2. Likeness. Sept. add, “of a man,” as it had appeared C. 1:27.

Ver. 3. Lock, like Habacuc; (Dan. 14:35) or by a bandage, on which parts of the law were written. Heb. C.—Of jealousy; Baal, (S. Jer.) or any other idol, (H.) particularly Adonis. v. 14. He fell a victim to the jealousy of Mars.

Ver. 10. About. This was the council chamber. Jer. 26:10. They durst not publicly adore the Egyptian, &c. idols. C.—They denied Providence. v. 12. H.—The wicked do not regard it, and hence fall into idolatry. W.

Ver. 11. Jezonias. He probably was over the temple, as his father had been. 4 K. 22:3. C.

Ver. 14. Adonis, the favourite of Venus, slain by a wild boar, as feigned by the heathen poets, and which being here represented by an idol, is lamented by the female worshippers of that goddess. In Heb. the name is Tammuz, (Ch.) which means “concealed,” as Adonis signifies “my lord.” This idol, which the Egyptians called Osiris, was placed in a coffin, and bewailed till it was pretended he was come to life, when rejoicings took place. Obscene pictures were carried about; and the more honest pagans were ashamed of these practices, which began in Egypt, and became almost general. Moses alludes to them, Lev. 19:27. Deut. 14:1. C.—David and Solomon say that the image was made of brass, with eyes of lead, which seemed to weep, melting when it was hot. W.—But this is destitute of proof.

Ver. 16. Men. Twelve priests and as many Levites officiated daily. The high priest made the twenty fifth. 1 Par. 24.—Sun. They prayed to God, turning their faces to the west: but here they despised him, and adored the sun. Job 31:26. C.—This posture was common. Illi ad surgentem conversi lumina solum. Æn. xii. Serv.—Christians did the like, though the reason is not ascertained. C.—It might be because Christ is the orient, and not to resemble the Jews. There was no danger of their being taken for idolaters. H.

Ver. 17. Nose, to hide their faces respectfully, (C.) when they look at the sun rising. H.—A thyrsus was used in honour of Bacchus, who is often confounded with the sun. Various improbable versions of this text are given. It may signify Heb. “they threw their instruments down before their faces,” like the twenty-four elders. Apoc. 5:8. C.

EZECHIEL 9

Ver. 2. Upper, leading to the court of the priests. These were six angels, representing the army coming from Babylon. The seventh was an angel of peace. C.—God never abandoned his whole Church. W.

Ver. 3. House; to the holy place, shewing that he abandoned those in the temple. C.

Ver. 4. Mark Thau. Thau, or Tau, is the last letter in the Hebrew alphabet, and signifies a sign or a mark: which is the reason why some translators render this place set a mark, or mark a mark, without specifying what this mark was. But S. Jerom, and other interpreters, conclude it was the form of the letter thau, which, in the ancient Hebrew character, was the form of a cross. Ch.—Of this many inscriptions still extant bear witness. Montfaucon.—Some Rabbins allow that the last letter was used but in honour of “the law,” Thorah. The cross is supposed to be the hieroglyphic of a future life, (Hist. Rufini. ii. 29.) and found frequently in the pictures or (H.) in the tables of Isis. But it rather represents a key. Soldiers who were acquitted received the letter T, and those who were sentenced to die had Θ, (C.) alluding to Θάνατος, “death.” H.—We may, however, suppose that if God designated any letter, it would be some letter of the Heb. alphabet, and accordingly the last had formerly the figure of †. x. though this text may signify “a sign” in general. The virtuous would be discriminated from the guilty, as if they were marked. C.—The door-posts of the Hebrews were stained with blood, in Egypt, to shew that all should be redeemed by that of Christ; and here those who shall be saved, received the mark of his cross. This sign has always been held in veneration among Christians, (W.) and used in conferring baptism, consecrating the blessed Eucharist, &c. S. Chrys. hom. lv. in Mat. and lxxxiv. in Jo. S. Aug. tr. cxviii. in Jo. Ser. ci. de temp. &c.—It appeared to Constantine with this inscription, “In this conquer;” (Eus. vit. i. 22.) and again over Jerusalem; (S. Cyr. ep. ad Constantium.) and will be borne before Christ, at his last coming, (Mat. 24) to the joy of those who have performed their baptismal promises, and to the confusion (W.) of the enemies of the cross of Christ. H.

Ver. 6. Sanctuary. Aquila, “temple,” or people (C.) consecrated to my service, (Sept. T.) particularly (C.) the twenty-five idolaters, the ancients and women. C. C. 8:16.—Judgment beginneth at the house of God, (1 Pet. 4:17) and those (H.) who abuse holy things are justly cut off. W.

Ver. 7. Defile. Sept. “you have defiled.” I regard the place no longer. C.

Ver. 9. Perverseness, in “wresting of judgment.” Prot. marg. What else can be expected, when the judges deny Providence? H.

EZECHIEL 10

Ver. 1. Throne. It was a sky blue crystal or sapphire colour, (C. 1:22, 26) and was now empty. C. 1. The Lord spoke from the temple door. v. 4. H.

Ver. 5. Court of the people.—Speaking in thunder.

Ver. 8. Wings. They would seem to be distinct, or (C.) fingers appeared at the end of the wings. Grot.

Ver. 9. Stone. Heb. Tharsis. Sym. “Hyacinth.” C. 1:16. C.

Ver. 11. By four ways. That is, by any of the four ways, forward, backward, to the right, or to the left. Ch. W.

Ver. 12. Wheels. These, as well as (H.) the cherubim, (Theod.) were full of eyes. C.

Ver. 13. Voluble. That is, rolling wheels: galgal, (Ch.) which means “rolling:” (H.) or “he said to the wheels, Turn around about.” Theodoret.—This is the real import of Heb. C.—Prot. have, “O wheel.” H.

Ver. 14. Cherub, or “ox.” All four seem to have had the resemblance of a man, but one more than the rest, which had respectively the appearance rather of an ox, a lion, or an eagle: (W.) or the ox was predominant in all, as both the head and feet were of it; (C.) which, however, does not constitute the greatest part. C. 1:5. H.

Ver. 15. Creature. What I saw, was properly called cherubim. Charab, in Syr. means “to labour;” (Spencer) or cherubim may imply any composed and unusual figure, or “mixture.” Ex. 25:18. C.—Ezekiel being a priest, saw that the creatures resembled the cherubim of the temple. T.

Ver. 17. Life. They were not mere machines; (H.) or they were pushed forward by an impetuous wind.

Ver. 19. East gate, leading from the city to the court of the people. C.—How unwilling is this good father to leave his house! T.

Ver. 1. Me. The prophet in Chaldea, saw in spirit what was doing at Jerusalem. W.—Men. Magistrates. Prado. T. M.—Jezonias, perhaps mentioned C. 8:11. C.

Ver. 3. Built, &c. These men despised the predictions and threats of the prophets; who declared them to be from God, that the city should be destroyed and the inhabitants carried into captivity: and they made use of this kind of argument against the prophets, that the city so far from being like to be destroyed, had lately be augmented by the building of new houses; from whence they further inferred, by way of a proverb, using the similitude of a cauldron, out of which the flesh is not taken till it is thoroughly boiled and fit to be eaten, that they should not be carried away out of thier city, but there end their days in peace. Ch.—They thought themselves secure, (W.) and laughed at the menaces of Jeremias, 1:15. C.—Heb. “The destruction is not soon coming. Let us build;” (Pagn. M.) or, “It is not time to build.” C.

Ver. 6. Slain, under Manasses, &c. T.

Ver. 7. Cauldron. I will explain the prediction, which you turn to ridicule. Those whom you have slain, are like the flesh (C.) boiled. H.—But you shall be treated still worse, being led captives and slain. C.—They feared wars, but had no dread of captivity. W.

Ver. 10. Israel. They pretended that they should die in peace in Jerusalem: God tells them it should not be so, but that they should be judged and condemned, and fall by the sword in the borders of Israel; viz. in Reblatha, in the land of Emath, where all their chief men were put to death by order of Nabuchodonosor. 4 K. 25 and Jer. 52:10. 27.

Ch.

Ver. 12. But you. Some copies of Sept. have, “neither have you done.” C. 5:7.

Ver. 13. Pheltias, the prince, (v. 1. H.) or false prophet, whose death Ezechiel does not bewail, but fears the great destruction of the people; (W. M.) though, if Pheltias died impenitent, his death might justly call for tears. H.—This happened in a vision. Yet (C.) he probably died suddenly about his time. Lyrar.

Ver. 15. Thy brethren, &c. He speaks of them that had been carried away captives before, who were despised by them that remained in Jerusalem; but, as the prophet here declares to them from God, should be in a more happy condition than they, and after some time return from their captivity. Ch.—David had been insulted in like manner. 1 K. 26:19. C.

Ver. 16. A little. Heb. “for a short time, a sanctuary,” or temple. They shall find all things in me. The Christian Church was never more pure than during the first persecutions, when her children could not assemble freely, or build temples. C.—God will never totally abandon her. Jer. 4:27. &c. W.

Ver. 18. Scandals: idols. They relapsed no more into idolatry, (C.) as a nation, though some fell in the persecution of Epiphanes. H.

Ver. 19. One. Sept. “another.” They have read (C.) acher for echad, “one.” H.

Ver. 21. Head. I will punish them as their crimes deserve. C.

Ver. 23. Mount Olivet, whence he might behold the conflagration of the city, before his ascent into heaven. M.—He leaves his habitation by degrees, to shew how Jerusalem would be treated, and the Jews suffer after the ascension of our Saviour. Theodoret well observes, that the person on the throne represented Him, the upper part of the body being different from the lower, (C. 1:26) to denote the two natures. C.

EZECHIEL 12

Ver. 3. Removing. Lit. “vessels of transmigration,” (H.) or bundles, (C.) and what was requisite for travelling, (W.) or in exile. H.—All this, to C. 20 happened five years before the fall of Jerusalem. C.—See

Ver. 6. Be carried. Sept. S. Jerom reads, “thou shalt carry thy bundles on the shoulder,” as many explain the Heb. (C.) and also v. 7. “I bear it upon my shoulder.” v. 12. Prot. H.—Cover, to denote the blindness of Sedecias, (C.) or his attempt to disguise himself. H.—The faces of criminals were covered. Est. 7. The king and nobles escaped through a breach. Jer. 39:4. C.—Sign. Lit. “a prodigy to,” &c. H.—The actions as well as the words of the prophet indicated what would happen. S. Jer. v. xi.

Ver. 10. Jerusalem. The people regarded not Jeremias. This prediction would be sent to them to confirm what he said, while it would tend to keep up the spirits of those who were in captivity. Theod. C.—Israel. The people, or those of the ten tribes who had retired thither. M.

Ver. 13. Net, as was done in war, and to catch wild beasts. Jer. 16:16. C.—Not see it, because his eyes shall be put out by Nabuchodonosor. Ch.—The false prophets thought they perceived a contradiction here; (W.) and Sedecias, confronting it with Jerem. 38:18 disregarded both. Jos. Ant. x. 10.—This was more pardonable than for Paine to object this as an inconsistency, after the event has so clearly verified the predictions of both, and shewed their consent. H.—The unhappy prince saw too late the true meaning. C.—He was put in a cage, like a wild beast, and conveyed blind to Babylon. S. Jer.

Ver. 14. Them. Many joined Godolias. C. 5:2. H.

Ver. 18. Sorrow. Act like one under great anxiety and distress. C.

Ver. 22. Proverb, or common saying. W.—Prolonged. They took occasion from God’s long suffering to become more wicked, (C.) and even asserted that the prophets told nothing but lies, (Theod.) and spoke of events at a great distance, that they might not be detected. If what they announced came to pass, they attributed it to chance; (C.) if it did not, being only conditional, they ridiculed this idea as a mere subterfuge. H.—As the prophets had long before foretold the captivity, and it had not yet taken place, (W.) in general, though many were already in exile, (H.) they concluded that it would never be realized. Thus heretics deny the general judgment. 1 Pet. 3. W.—Every vision, on this head. v. 28. Many events were revealed that regarded the times of Christ. Dan. 9. &c. H.

Ver. 2. Heart; what pleases them, (H.) without being inspired. There were always such impostors. These deluded the people at Jerusalem, (C.) or at Babylon. v. 9. Sanct.—They might be distinguished by the sincere: yet caused irreparable injury to the ignorant people. H.

Ver. 3. Nothing. Yet would lead the blind, though they are not directed by God.

Ver. 4. Deserts, or ruins. They sought only to gratify themselves.

Ver. 5. Enemy. You do not admonish sinners of their evil ways, nor strive to avert God's indignation, in imitation of true prophets, (Ex. 32:10) but rather undermine the wall like foxes.

Ver. 9. Upon, to punish.—Counsel. They shall not be consulted, or have any credit.—Writing. They shall perish in the city, or in banishment. C.—Their works shall not be accounted canonical. Sixt. Bib. ii. 2.

Ver. 10. Straw. Iniquity ruins my people, (C.) and these do not endeavour to reform their manners. H.—They ought to demolish such a work, and not dab it over. Theod.—One false prophet builds, and another strives to support his authority; (Jun.) or God has given the people his law, but these people corrupt it. S. Jer.—A wall built without proper mortar, will easily be washed down: so vain hopes of security, without amendment, deceive the people. W.

Ver. 11. Hailstones. Lit. “stones,” like those which fell on the enemies of Josue, (10:11. H.) or thunderbolts. Grot. C.—Such will be the fate of all the buildings of the wicked. Mat. 7:27. H.—None can resist the judgments of God, who will employ the Chaldeans. M.

Ver. 14. You. Lit. “it.” But Heb. and Sept. have, “ye.” H.—The wall and the inhabitants shall perish. C.

Ver. 17. Daughters: so false prophets are styled in scorn, (Vat.) or witches; (Rabbins) though it seems rather that there were false prophetesses as well as true ones. Such were Prisca and Maximilla among the Montanists. Women have commonly fostered heresies. C.—These pretended to be illuminated, like Debora and Holda; but flattered the people in their sins, instead of reclaiming them. W.

Ver. 18. Cushions, by making people easy in their sins, and promising them impunity, (Ch.) by disguising the truth, or not admonishing people of their danger. C. 3:17. He alludes to the cushions used on sofas.—Pillows. Sym. “veils;” (Sept. and Kimchi) or “nets” designed “to take” the unwary; as mispachot maybe properly rendered. v. 20, 21. Is.

5:7. C.—Souls. That is, they flattered them with promises of life, peace, and security. Ch. W.—People are often said to do what they only announce. Lev. 13:11. These impostors pretended to save, while they really destroyed. They shewed a cruel mercy, detaining the people in captivity, or rather Heb. “shall you catch?” &c. Do you expect to pass unpunished? C.—We might read the Vulg. “Did they give?” &c. Prot. “Will ye save the souls alive that come unto you?” H.

Ver. 19. Violated me. That is, dishonoured and discredited me. Ch.—Prot. “and will ye pollute?” &c. H.—They employed the name of God to give credit to their lies, for the smallest advantage.—Souls, &c. That is, to sentence souls to death, which are not to die: and to promise life to them who are not to live. Ch.—They contradicted Jeremias, who exhorted the people to surrender. C.

Ver. 20. Catch. Hebrew also, “hunt the souls to make them into gardens, (H.) or flourishing.” Sept. “you gather souls there.” The original seems to be incorrect. v. 18.

Ver. 22. Just. Jeremias, or any other, particularly the more simple, who were easily seduced and filled with apprehensions. You shall therefore die, (v. 23) and your imposture shall be made known. C.

EZECHIEL 14

Ver. 3. Uncleanness. That is, their filthy idols, upon which they have set their hearts: and which are a stumbling-block to their souls. Ch.—They came, it seems, to tempt the prophet, (C.) as God shewed him. Thus worldlings consult Catholic priests; yet are resolved to join with heretics. W.

Ver. 4. According. Heb. “in (C.) the multitude of his idols.” H.—I will still disclose the truth; (Chal.) or a false prophet is here spoken of, whom God will suffer to deceive those who wish to be deluded. He will not have his own prophets speak an untruth. See 3 K. 22:10. Christ evaded the insidious questions of his enemies. Mat. 21:23. C.

Ver. 5. The. Sept. “he may ensnare the house,” (H.) or “to bring” unto repentance. Chal. C.

Ver. 6. Turn. Such people must first be admonished to relinquish idols, heresy, &c. that they may come to God. W.

Ver. 7. By myself, or on my own account. God does not encourage falsehood. C.

Ver. 9. Err. He speaks of false prophets, answering out of their own heads, and according to their own corrupt inclinations.—Deceived, &c. God Almighty deceives false prophets, partly by withdrawing his light from them; and abandoning them to their own corrupt inclinations, which push them on to prophesy such things as are agreeable to those that consult them: and partly by disappointing them, and causing all things to happen contrary to what they have said. Ch.—God permits the deception, to punish both the impostor and his hearers. W.—Thus was Balaam treated. C. Num. 22. H.—He could do nothing of himself. S. Jer. 2 K. xxii. 22. C.—Here also an interrogation might be used (H.) in Heb. “have I?” &c. Feiffer dub. cent. 4. b. lviii.—I have manifested the deceit. C. 13:18.

Ver. 10. Be. They shall be punished alike. C.

Ver. 14. Job. He and Noe were dead, yet undoubtedly interceded for the people, or their names would not here be mentioned. Jer. 15:1. W.—When God is resolved to treat all with rigour, he will save only the just. They shall not be able to protect even their children. But Jerusalem shall not experience such severity. v. 21. C.—Noe could not avert the deluge, nor Job the death of his children, neither could Daniel rescue his people from captivity. S. Jer.—The first denotes pastors, the second fathers of families, and Daniel such as live continent. S. Aug.—All three had been very merciful. S. Chrys. hom. xliii. 1. in Gen.—Job is placed for holy laymen, and Daniel for people of religious orders. S. Greg. Mor. i. 13. W.—Hence perhaps Job is placed last, though cotemporary with Moses, as most people suppose. He is not therefore a fabulous personage. H.

Ver. 19. Pestilence. Sept. “death,” as v. 12. (C.) denoting the plague. C. 5:2. H.

Ver. 22. Left. Pastors will always remain to instruct God’s children. W.—Doings. Their words (C.) and conduct even in captivity, will evince that they have not been punished unjustly. S. Jer.—From them you may judge what sort of men their fathers were; or, as they have been spared for their virtue, you may conclude that the rest would not have perished, if they had been innocent. H.

EZECHIEL 15

Ver. 2. Wood. Small branches or tendrils. The vines of that country were probably small. C.—The wild vine (Sanct.) grows very large, and the wood is durable, so that statues, pillars, and ladders were formed of it. Pliny xiv. 1.—Strabo (ii. and xi.) mentions the trunk of a vine which two men could hardly clasp, and the bunch of grapes was two cubits high. But the prophet speaks of the small branches, which are fit only for the fire. C.—God's Church is often compared to a vine on account of its fruit, and the branches separated from her resemble the useless cuttings. S. Aug. tr. lxxxi. in Jo. W.—See Ward's Tree of Life, where this is set in a very striking light. In every age the Church makes fresh conquests, while heretics leave and persecute her. H.

Ver. 3. Thereon. Is. 22:23. C.—The Turkish lords have no furniture in their rooms, but hang their arms, saddles, &c. upon such pins, or on strings. Roger. ii.

Ver. 4. Ashes. It is not even solid enough for fuel. C.—When a faggot is consumed in the middle, the ends are also put into the fire; so not one shall escape who dies out of the Church. W.—The wicked Jews shall surely suffer. v. 6. H.

Ver. 7. From fire. If they escape one misery they shall fall into another, as the event shewed. C.—They shall be thrown back into the fire. M.

EZECHIEL 16

Ver. 3. Cethite, or "Hethite." These two were probably the most abandoned of Chanaan. Daniel (13:56) give the infamous judges the like appellation; and Isaias (1:10) calls the Jews princes of Sodom. C.—So Dido says to Eneas:

Nec te diva parens, generis nec Dardanus auctor Perfide sed duris genuit te cautibus, &c. Æn. iv. H.

—But we nowhere find such a vehement and continued reprimand. The prophet seems to quit his proper character to make (C.) the abominations of the people known and detested. C. 3:8. H.

Ver. 4. Cut. By this the infant received nourishment in the womb. Now it seems to be exposed by its parents. C.—The Jews in Egypt were abandoned to idolatry and distress. Theod. in Cant.—Health. Many plunged the infant in cold water to brace its nerves, (C.) or to wash it. Salt was also used to dry up the humidity and stop the pores,

(S. Jer.) or it was mixed with water to harden the skin and navel. Avicen. Gall. San. i. 7.—Clouts, to keep the body straight. The negroes who neglect this are stronger and better proportioned, (C.) and too much restraint is known to be detrimental to the tender limbs. H.

Ver. 5. Born, as it were in Egypt. He represents the Jews as a female from her infancy, till she be advanced in years.

Ver. 6. Thy blood, unwashed after being born. v. 4. C.—The Jews were solicitous to increase their numbers, and exposed none. Tacit. Hist. v. —But other nations did, if they thought the child would be troublesome, or a disgrace. C.—The prophet sends this admonition from Chaldea, and shews how God had selected his people from among the barbarous nations, and decorated them with many privileges of the law, sacrifices, &c. W.

Ver. 7. Woman's. Heb. “the ornament of ornaments;” hadaiim instead of harim in Sept. “the city of cities,” (C.) or the highest glory, being arrived at that age when decorations are most sought after.—Fashioned. Lit. “swelling.” Sept. “erect.” H.—Hair, (pilus.) Women are allowed by canon law to marry at twelve. C.

Ver. 8. Lovers. Heb. dodim, “breasts, (H.) or espousals;” (Aq.) “loving.” Sym.—Garment, as a husband. Ruth 3:9. Jer. 2:2.

Ver. 9. Oil, used after bathing, or with perfume. C.

Ver. 10. Embroidery. Lit. “various colours.” H.—But this is the import. Ps. 44:10.—Violet, or dark blue, appropriated to princes.—Linen, or cotton. Ex. 25. Prov. 31:24. C.—Fine. Lit. “thin.” Heb. Mesi, (H.) “silken.” Jarchi. Pagn. &c. Silk was used much later at Rome, (C.) and was reprobated as not covering the body sufficiently.

Cois tibi penè videre est
Ut nudam. Hor. i. Sat. ii.

Sen. Ben. vii. 9.—Sept. τριχαπτω, according to Hesyc. &c. denotes “a silk ribbon for the hair;” (C.) a robe as delicate as hair, (S. Jer.) or a transparent veil for the head. Theod.—Such are still worn in the East. Hair is used in the veil opposite to the eyes, that the ladies may see without being seen. C.

Ver. 12. Forehead. Lit. “mouth.” Heb. “nose.” H.—Women wore rings where spectacles are placed, and had others hung at their noses, so as to touch the mouth. People who are not acquainted with this odd custom, which is still prevalent in Africa and Asia, suppose that the ornament hung upon the forehead, as S. Jerom does. See Gen. 24:22.

C.

Ver. 13. Linen. Heb. mossi. v. 11. H.—Chal. understands these ornaments to pertain to the tabernacle, which was set up in the wilderness.—Oil, enjoying a most fertile country, (C.) and the noblest sacrifices. H.—And wast, &c. The kingdom had subsisted 1500 years. C.—Sept. omit this, for fear of giving umbrage to the Egyptians, according to S. Jerom, as if they could be ignorant of this circumstance. C.—Grabe supplies, “thou wast directed to the kingdom.” H.

Ver. 15. Renown, or name; thus dishonouring me, thy husband. Is. 4:1.

Ver. 16. Places: pavilions, (A. Lap. 4 K. 17:30. C.) or idols stuffed, (S. Jer. Theod.) and outwardly adorned. Such might easily be procured or removed. 1 K. 19:13.—Hereafter, with impunity. The Jews were guilty of greater ingratitude than other nations.

Ver. 17. My gold, for the temple, or thy most precious ornaments, which were sacrificed to gratify thy lubricity, (C.) or to form the golden calf, &c. Ex. 32. H.—Obscene representations were also used in the worship of Osiris. Herod. ii. 48.

Ver. 18. Oil, or perfume. which no man was allowed to use. Ex. 30:9. 38.

Ver. 20. Thy sons: so he calls them to shew his indignation, though he acknowledges them for his, (v. 21) to enhance the crime. Who could have thought that such cruel sacrifices would ever take place! 4 K. 23. C.—Adulteresses bring in the children of others; but the Jews sacrifice their own to idols. 4 K. 16. &c. W.

Ver. 25. Sign; altars of idols. H.—She makes no secret of her apostacy. The Greeks and Romans marked the houses of prostitutes, that honest men might avoid them. “The deemed the profession of such a crime a sufficient punishment to repress impure women.” Tacit. Annal.

Ver. 26. Bodies. Lit. “flesh.” H. Juv. ix. 34. M.—The Egyptians are tall, but meagre. Valle. Ep. xi.—They were the most dissolute in their worship, and corrupted most other nations as well as the Jews. C. 20:8 and 23:3.

Ver. 27. Justification; law, &c. Heb. “thy right,” or allowance. Ex. 21:10.—Hate thee. To be abandoned to the will of a rival, is most dreadful for a woman. The Jews were subjected to the nations which they had despised, as they are still to Christians. Even other less favoured idolaters were astonished (C.) at their apostacy. H.

Ver. 28. Assyrians, adoring the sun, Baal, &c. C.

Ver. 31. Price, before she will yield, (H.) or who follow such practices for a livelihood. C.—Heb. “in that thou scornest hire.” Prot. Sept. “gathering rewards.” The difference consisted in Jerusalem’s sinning through mere wantonness, and even to her loss.

Ver. 34. Fornication unpunished, or comparable with thine. v. 16. H.—All such actions are abominable; but still more so, when the woman solicts. W.

Ver. 36. Money. Lit. “brass,” (H.) to adorn idols. C.—Prot. “thy filthiness;” (H.) virus. Pagn. &c. C.

Ver. 37. Nakedness. Friends and enemies (H.) saw that idols afforded no protection. C. 6:3. Jer. 13:26.

Ver. 38. Judge; punish thee by stoning to death. Lev. 20:10. The walls of the Jews were battered to the ground.

Ver. 39. House; the temple, which thou hast profaned, and the high places. The idols shall be plundered, in which thou hast trusted.

Ver. 41. Women: nations assembled against Jerusalem.

Ver. 42. No more. I will entirely repudiate thee, so as to observe thy conduct no longer, (C.) with the eyes of an husband. H.—This is the most terrible effect of God’s wrath, (C.) when the sinner is left to himself. Osee 4:14. S. Jer.

Ver. 43. Youth, when thou wast destitute, (v. 4) and more grateful for my favours, Jeremias 2:2.—Head. I have punished thee, yet not as thy deeds require. H.

Ver. 44. Daughter. They too commonly (C.) follow bad parents. Juv. vi. 239. and xiv. 25.—Jerusalem is more wicked than the Cethite, (H.) her mother, v. 3. C.—Even this nation had once received the principles of the true religion for the patriarchs, but cast them off to embrace idolatry, and to destroy her children. H.—Jerusalem was formerly and is till wicked. W.

Ver. 46. Right: southward.—Sodom. The city was more ancient than Jerusalem. Hence it here designates Ruben, (H.) and the Jews east of the Jordan; (Prado) or rather Moab and Ammon, (v. 55. C.) and the rest of the Gentiles. H.—Samaria shewed Jerusalem the road to idolatry, and therefore is called her elder sister. The number of the ten tribes was also greater than that of the kingdom of Juda, which became corrupt as Sodom, only by degrees. Theod.

Ver. 47. Ways, but hast done even worse.—Almost. He seems to diminish their crimes, (C.) as if it could hardly be believed that Jerusalem should be more abandoned. Heb. and Sept. “that would be but little: yea, thou hast done more,” &c. H.

Ver. 49. Sodom, &c. That is, these were the steps by which the Sodomites came to fall into those abominations for which they were destroyed. For pride, gluttony, and idleness, are the high road to all kinds of lust; especially when they are accompanied with a neglect of the works of mercy. Ch.—These crimes alone are great enough; (Lu. 16:19) and the prophets never accuse the Jews of unnatural lust. Hence Ezechiel takes no notice of it here, as he probably refers to the manners of the Moabites, &c. who were then living. Is. 16:6. C.—Abundance and idleness produce crimes; temperance and labour bring forth good fruit. W.

Ver. 50. Seen. This would seem to allude to the Israelites beyond the Jordan, who had been led away into Assyria. The Moabites, &c. beheld the downfall of Jerusalem, (H.) and were treated in like manner, only five years later. Jos. Jer. 48. &c.

Ver. 51. Justified, as they are comparatively innocent. S. Aug. c. Faust. xxii. 61.—They had not the like advantages, (Mat. 11:23) nor the example of others’ punishment to open their eyes. Thou hast pleaded for or with them, and hast lost thy cause. C.

Ver. 53. Back, &c. This relates to the conversion of the Gentiles out of all nations, and of many of the Jews, to the Church of Christ. Ch.—Cyrus also liberated the tribes on the east as well as on the west of the Jordan, (H.) and in general all the captive nations. C.—And restore. Heb. “the captivity, even the captivity of Sodom.” Sept. “I will turn away their aversions, the,” &c. I will give them a more docile spirit.

Ver. 54. Them. It affords some consolation to have partners in misery. C.

Ver. 55. Ancient state. That is, to their former state of liberty, and their ancient possessions. In the spiritual sense, to the true liberty and the happy inheritance of the children of God, through faith in Christ. Ch.—All will be treated alike, whether Jew or Gentile. H.—When Sodom or the Gentiles shall have embraced the gospel, then also will the Jews. Rom. 10. W.

Ver. 56. Pride. Thou scornedst to mention her, (Ps. 15:4. C.) or wouldst not take warning. S. Jer.

Ver. 59. Covenant at Sinai, or under Josue. 8. Ex. 19:7.

Ver. 60. Covenant. After punishing thee I will fulfill my promises, as we see was done (C.) after the captivity, and (H.) in the Christian Church. C.—All shall be converted, not by the Jewish but by the evangelical covenant. W.

Ver. 61. Daughters. The countries were conquered by the Machabees. All nations embrace the gospel.—Covenant. It is broken. I will, out of pity, re-establish it, or a better, to last for ever under Christ, free from the servitude and fear of the old law. C.

EZECHIEL 17

Ver. 2. Riddle. Thus the prophets and Christ often delivered their doctrine. C.

Ver. 3. A large eagle. Nabuchodonosor, king of Babylon. Ch.—The multitude of his subjects, and his rapid and cruel conquests, are designated. C.—He spoils the vineyard of Jerusalem, notwithstanding the Jews had applied to another eagle, the king of Egypt. v. 12. W.—Libanus. That is, Jerusalem; (Ch.) or invaded the country, (C.) entering by Libanus. H.—Cedar. King Jechonias Ch. and his nobles, (4 Kin. 24:11) with the most precious effects.

Ver. 4. Twigs. The young king and his officers, who had scarcely got established. C.—Chanaan. This name, which signifies traffic, is not taken here for Palestine, but for Chaldea; and the city of merchants here mentioned is Babylon. Ch.—It was so corrupt as to deserve this appellation, as Rome was afterwards styled Babylon. Its situation was very favourable to traffic, and its dominions were very extensive. C.

Ver. 5. Land. Sedecias, whom he made king. Ch.—He was brother of the dethroned king, and have every prospect of reigning long, if he had proved faithful. C.

Ver. 6. Towards him. Nabuchodonosor, to whom Sedecias swore allegiance. Ch.—Lit. “to it,” eam, the eagle. H.—The dominions of Sedecias were extensive, but weak, and dependant on a foreign king.

Ver. 7. Eagle. The king of Egypt, (Ch.) Vaphres, who came at the request of Sedecias, to oppose the Chaldeans, but was routed; and they returned to the siege of Jerusalem. Jer. 37:4.—Plantation, as the waters of the Nile were conducted to different parts by ditches. Deut. 11:10.

Ver. 9. Prosper. Will God countenance perfidy? C.—“Faith must be kept even with enemies.” S. Jer.—Arm. The conquest did not cost the Chaldeans much. Sedecias fled by night, but was soon taken. 4 K. 25:6. C.

Ver. 12. Shall, or, “hath taken,” &c. Ch. as also (v. 13.) Sedecias was seized five years after. C. 8:1. Jechonias, the princes, mighty warriors, (v. 13) and expert artists, had been taken away six years before, with the prophet. Prot. “is come, ... and hath taken,” &c. H.

Ver. 16. Die. He had sworn fidelity, and was justly punished, dying blind, and in prison. C. 12. W.

Ver. 17. Souls. Some refer this to Pharaoh; others to the enemy. The former did not attempt to surround the besiegers, but after losing a battle retired. C. 30:21. C.

Ver. 18. Hand. Swearing perhaps to both (H.) the Egyptian and to the Chaldean monarch.

Ver. 20. Net. C. 12:13. C.—Judge, punish. H.—His sentence was pronounced at Reblatha. 4 Kin. 25:7. C.

Ver. 22. Cedar. Of the Royal stock of David.—Twig. Jesus Christ, whom God hath planted in Mount Sion, that is, the high mountain of his Church, to which all nations flow. Ch.—The Jews in vain apply this to Zorobabel or to the Machabees. Their power was never great enough to verify these expressions. C.—But Christ has united in his Church all the birds, or those who have strength enough to raise themselves above earthly things. S. Jer. Theod. &c.—The kingdom of Sedecias and that of Nabuchodonosor prospered not, or was soon at an end: Christ remains for ever. W.

Ver. 24. High and green denote Sedecias; low and dry Jechonias, who was exalted at Babylon, while his rival was hurled down from his present high estate. The prophets speak of that as past, which God has decreed. See Jer. 22:30. C.

EZECHIEL 18

Ver. 2. Edge. Those in captivity would not allow that they were punished for their own sins: God convinces them of the contrary. W.—They knew that he often visited the sins of the fathers upon the children, (Ex. 20:5 and 24:5. C.) when they also hated him, (H.) and that many had suffered for their parents' faults, like those of Saul, David, &c. C.—But these were all guilty of original sin at least, and death is not always a real misfortune. H.—God seems to allow that the complaints had hitherto had some grounds, (Jer. 31) but that they should be removed after the captivity, and still more effectually by the death of Christ, who came to redeem sinners, and rejected none. By baptism he cancels original sin, the sour grape, and those who cannot receive it are not innocent. C.—God chastises the body, but not the soul of children, for their parents' faults: (M.) and this conduct is a trial for them, which may increase their glory. H.

Ver. 4. Mine. He insinuates the vocation of the Gentiles and the general redemption. All will be treated according to their works. C.

Ver. 6. Mountains: of the sacrifices there offered to idols; (Ch.) or partaken in their usual feasts. Some irregularly worshipped God in these high places, under many pious kings; and were tolerated, (C.) though condemned for so doing. H.—Woman. The pagans abstained by the light of reason. C.—The contrary practice, “it is said,” would give rise to lepers or monsters, (S. Jer.) as experience evinces. C.—It was forbidden in the Christian Church. S. Aug. q. 64. in Lev. 20:18. S. Greg. resp. 10. ad Aug. C.—But no such questions are now asked. The prophet insists on this no more. v. 11, 15.

Ver. 7. Wronged. Lit. “constristated.” H.—Heb. “oppressed,” maliciously.

Ver. 8. Increase more than what he lent, on any pretext. S. Jer. C.

Ver. 10. Robber. Heb. “breaker;” rude and lawless. Sept. “pestilent.”

Ver. 12. Abomination. This refers to the woman, (v. 6) or to idolatry.

Ver. 13. Him. He alone is answerable, and shall suffer.

Ver. 20. Sinneth. God never acted otherwise, though the Jews seem to have thought so. Temporal afflictions are the source of merit, and generally fall to the share of the saints, particularly under the new law.

Ver. 21. Penance. The end determines all. If a person be then found just or unjust at his departure, he will be treated accordingly. W.

Ver. 23. Will. God sincerely wishes that the sinner should be converted. If he refuse grace, it is only in punishment of former transgressions. S. Aug. ep. 217.—He wills antecedently their salvation, (1 Tim. 2:4) though he has a consequent will to punish them, as they speak in the schools, because they themselves will not be saved. Sanct. C.—God’s absolute will is always fulfilled, not that which is conditional. S. Jo. Dam. (Fide ii. 29.) S. Tho. p. 1. q. 19. a. 6.—He does enough by offering his graces and the death of Christ, to shew that his will is sincere; though by a consequent will his justice punishes the impenitent. Thus a virtuous judge would have all to observe the laws and live: but finding some transgress, so as to become pernicious, he punishes them with death. W.

Ver. 24. Remembered, to procure him pardon; yet he will suffer less than if he had never done any good. C.

Ver. 25. Not right, in thus punishing or rewarding for the last act; (Theod.) or rather, God shews that those who complain are guilty.

Ver. 27. Alive. Mortal sin destroys that life of grace. C.

Ver. 30. Do penance. This is requisite, as well as a change of conduct. W.

Ver. 31. New. We can do no good of ourselves: but we are admonished of our free-will, that we may do what we can, and ask for grace. Trid. Ses. vi. 5. 11. Jam. 1:5 and 2 Cor. 3:5. S. Aug. &c.) C.

EZECHIEL 19

Ver. 1. Princes: sons of Josias, who were so wretched. The latter part of this beautiful canticle, or allegory, (v. 10) regards Sedecias. C.

Ver. 2. Lioness; Jerusalem (Ch.) which made alliances with the lions, or nations. C.

Ver. 3. Whelps; Joachaz, or Sellum, (Ch.) who reigned only three months, like his brother Jechonias. H.—The four last kings were all cruel. W.

Ver. 4. But. Heb. “he was taken in their pit,” (Prot. H.) as also v. 8. Sept. “in his or their corruption.” We do not read that Joachaz fought, (C.) though this passage insinuates as much. Sanct. 4 K. 23:30. &c.

Ver. 5. Lions: Joakim. Ch.—He reigned eleven years; but was such a monster, that the prophet does not speak of him or bewail his fate. 4 K. 23:34. Jer. 22:19. His words are applicable to Jechonias alone; who was cruel and banished to Babylon. v. 8. C.

Ver. 8. Nations: rovers of Chaldea, Syria, &c. 4 K. 24:2. W.—Wounds. Heb. “pit.” He was besieged, (4 K. 24:11. C.) and gave himself up. H.

Ver. 10. Blood. She has given birth to many kings. M.—The original may be inaccurate, and perhaps should be, “a vine-tree or branch:” (C.) cormoc instead of bedammecha. Sept. read kerimmon, “like a rose-flower,” planted, &c. H.—He speaks of Sedecias more obscurely. C.—The kingdom had flourished under David and Solomon. It afterwards lost its splendour under wicked kings, and all the tribes were removed. W.

Ver. 11. Rods. The king had many children, and confided in them, but they were slain.

Ver. 13. Dry; unfit for vine-trees. He speaks of the prison of Babylon. C.—The country was naturally wet. H.

Ver. 14. Fire. Ismael, who slew Godolias, was of the royal family. Jer. 41. &c. C.

EZECHIEL 20

Ver. 1. Month: A. 3411, Aug. 27. Usher.—Ezekiel had prophesied in the fourth year; they was silent a year and two months, or 430 days. He opened his mouth again in the sixth year, (C. 8:1) and now in the seventh year he is ordered not to answer. W.—We know not what the ancients wanted to know; but their design was evil. C.

Ver. 4. Judgeth them; or, if thou wilt enter into the cause, and plead against them. Ch.—Lay before them the iniquities of their fathers, and their own, which bring on the reprobation of the greatest part. God will form his Church out of a few of them and of the Gentiles. The return of a small number from captivity is also insinuated.

Ver. 6. Excelleth. Heb. “is beauty or a desire.” Sept. “honeycomb.” C.

Ver. 7. Scandals, &c. (offensiones) that is, the abominations or idols, to the worship of which they were allured by their eyes. Ch.—Moses found them in this condition in Egypt, and he could not entirely reclaim them. C.—Many still secreted their idols. C. 23:1. Acts 7:42.

H.

Ver. 8. Egypt. Their disorders called for such severity. But God was restrained by the dangers (C.) of blasphemy, &c. to which the faithful and idolaters would thus have been exposed. H.—He saved them as he had promised, though they did not deserve it. W.

Ver. 10. Brought. Lit. “cast,” (H.) as if they had been reluctant.

Ver. 11. Live, and enjoy temporal felicity, which was chief promised, though the faithful observers of the law would obtain an eternal reward.

Ver. 12. Sign, as also to promote piety and instruction.

Ver. 13. Sabbaths. We only read of one man gathering sticks, and the people manna once on those days. Ex. 15 and 16. But Moses does not mention all. C.—Sabbath often denotes the whole law, which they transgressed; and as long as they retained an affection for idols, they could not observe the sabbaths so as to please God.

Ver. 14. But. Lit. “And I did for,” &c. This motive caused me to spare them. H.—I punished only the most guilty adorers of the calf, and murmurers, &c. Num. 14:28. C.—Some were always preserved for a succession. v. 9, 22. W.

Ver. 23. Again, or also. H.—Four times are specified v. 13, 15, 21 which may allude to the adoration of the calf, the graves of concupiscence, the murmuring, and commerce with the women and idols of Moab. Ex. 23. Num. 10 and 14 and 25. C.

Ver. 25. Not good. The laws and ordinances of their enemies: or those imposed upon them by that cruel tyrant the devil, to whose power they were delivered up for their sins; (Ch.) which may be styled the statutes of your fathers, &c. v. 18. H.—God is often said to do what he only permits. C.—He abandoned them to their own perversity. S. Jer. Deut. 32:21. 37.—If God had spoken of the Decalogue, &c. would he say such laws were not good, after he had testified that the observers shall live in them? v. 11. He established the ceremonial law, at the same time. See Kimchi. M. &c. Chal. “I have given them up to their foolish desires. They have established bad statutes and laws which will not give them life.” This seems the best explanation. C.—Heb. “Have I given ... (26) and have I polluted them?” &c. Manasse Ben. Israel. The precepts had also a bad effect, and were given in condescension to the weakness of the people, (Orig.) particularly the ceremonial part. S. Just. S. Chrys. S. Jer. &c.—They did not justify, (S. Aug.) and were not good, compared with those of the new law. S.

Greg. mor. xxviii. 9.—Thus Solon gave the Athenians “the best laws that they would receive,” (Plut.) though others more perfect might have been devised. C.

Ver. 26. I polluted them, &c. That is, I gave them up to such blindness, in punishment of their offences, as to pollute themselves with the blood of all their first-born, whom they offered up to their idols in compliance with their wicked devices. Ch. M. Lev. 18:21 and 4 Kin. 3 ultr. and 21:6. C.—Offered. Prot. “caused to pass through the fire all,” &c. C. 16:21.—For their. Prot. “that I might make them desolate to the end, that,” &c.

Ver. 29. Called high. Heb. “Bamah,” (H.) out of contempt. C.—The Jews were so much attached to the high places, that they called the altar of the Lord by the same name. Thus heretics are convicted by the very names they use, calling sacrifice service, &c. W.

Ver. 32. Stones. This was the secret intention of the ancients, (v. 1. H.) and of many in captivity, who were only praise-worthy compared with those at Jerusalem. C. 11:15.

Ver. 33. Out. I will not allow you to follow idols with impunity. C.

Ver. 35. Of people. That is, a desert, in which there are no people; (Ch.) meaning Judea, to which they should return.

Ver. 37. Covenant of the gospel, by the powerful attractions of grace. Lu. 14:24. Jo. 6:69 and 7:46 and 2 Cor. 10:4.

Ver. 38. Israel. They shall continue in exile; or the rebel Jews who will not believe in Christ, shall be cast off. C.

Ver. 39. Walk, &c. It is not an allowance, much less a commandment to serve idols; but a figure of speech, by which God would have them to understand, that if they would walk after their idols, they must not pretend to serve him at the same time: for that he would by no means suffer such a mixture of worship. Ch. S. Jer.—Continue, if you dare, to serve idols. I will still bring you back. C.—Sept. “take away each your devices; and then if you hear me, (Grabe’s copy adds, not) and defile not my,” &c. H.—God would rather have idolaters leave him wholly, than halt between two, (3 K. 18) neither hot nor cold; (Apoc. 3) for such dishonour God’s name the most. Rom. 2:24. W.

Ver. 40. Mountain. The foregoing verse, to make the sense complete, must be understood so as to condemn and reject that mixture of worship which the Jews then followed. In this verse God promises to the true Israelites, especially to those of the Christian Church, that they should serve him in another manner in his holy mountain, the spiritual Sion, and shall be accepted of by him. Ch.

Ver. 43. Committed. This is a picture of the converts to Christianity. C.

Ver. 46. Of the south. Jerusalem lay towards the south of Babylon, where the prophet then was, and is here called the forest of the south field, and is threatened with utter desolation. Ch. See C. 21. C.—In Jerusalem there were good and bad. W.

Ver. 47. Burned, with war and famine. Jer. 21:14. C.—North, from Egypt to Mesopotamia. Theod.—Nabuchodonosor invaded those parts. H.

Ver. 49. Parables. They were easy enough to understand, but the Jews would not comprehend them no more than our Saviour's words. Jo. 10:24. C.

EZECHIEL 21

Ver. 3. Just. But had not God declared the contrary, C. 18? The time was not yet arrived; or, he rescued the just from death, though he permitted them to experience the other common miseries. C.—He preserved them from eternal death. E.—The just often means those who are so only in appearance. C. 16:51. C.—Temporal afflictions fall upon all; but the just derive benefit from them, while the wicked fall into eternal misery. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 4. North, including all the country belonging to Israel.

Ver. 5. Back, (v. 30) without doing execution. Jer. 50:9. C.

Ver. 6. Bitterness. Sept. "pains," like those of child-bearing. Is. 21:3.

Ver. 7. Melt. Lit. "decay." Jos. 7. &c.—Knee. C. 7:17. H.

Ver. 10. My son. He speaks, according to S. Jerom, to the sword of Nabuchodonosor; which was about to remove the sceptre of Israel, whom God here calls his son. Ch.—This title belonged to all Israel. Ex. 4:22. W.—The Heb. seems to be corrupt, and we may adhere to the Vulg. or to the Sept. (C.) which has, (9,) "Sword be sharp, and raging to slay victims; be sharp to shine, ready for destruction; cut, reduce to nothing, remove all wood." H.—Syr. "be ready to scatter the race of my son," &c. Heb. "Where shall we rejoice, sceptre of my son, thou sword which despisest every tree?" C.—Prot. "It contemneth the rod of my son as every tree?" H.

Ver. 11. Slayer. He had conquered many nations before he attacked Israel. Let none boast of being the scourges of the Lord.

Ver. 12. Fled, with Sedecias, by night.—Thigh, in surprise and grief. v. 17.

Ver. 13. God. Perhaps you will say it is only a trial: but what will be your sentiments, when you behold the king and his people led away? C.—Prot. "Because it is a trial; and what if the sword condemn even the rod? it shall be no more, saith." H.

Ver. 14. Tripled. Let the war be very bloody. Nabuchodonosor often invaded Judea. C.—He raised the siege, but returned. Vat.

Ver. 15. Ready. Lit. "covered," (amicti. H.) in the scabbard, and quite new and sharp.

Ver. 20. Rabbath. They had formed a league with Sedecias, and Nabuchodonosor thought of punishing them first. H.—But they joined his forces. Jer. 12:6 and 27:3.

Ver. 21. Shuffling. Heb. "polishing." Syr. &c. "shooting an arrow upwards." He was undetermined which to attack first, and perhaps wrote Jerusalem on one and Rabbath on another arrow; (S. Jer. &c. C.) or which way the arrow fell the army followed. H.—Many nations have adopted such superstitious practices.—Idols. Heb. Teraphim. Gen. 31:19. C.—Entrails. The Chaldeans taught the Lydians and they the Tuscans. Grot.—At first this was done only to see if the victims were sound. Cic. Div.

Ver. 22. Right of one going by Thapsacus and Damascus, and not through the Desert Arabia, for thus Rabbath would have been to the right. God permitted this divination to succeed in his wrath. The devil pushed the Chaldeans forward, lest the Jews might be converted. C.—If they had attacked Rabbath first, they would probably have succeeded, as they did five years after. But the time of vengeance was come for Jerusalem, (H.) and they were directed to assault it. W.—Voice: the din of war, (H.) or of soldiers, trumpets, &c.

Ver. 23. Vain. They shall think that Nabuchodonosor is wasting his time.—Sabbaths. Heb. "they have people who swear to them;" false prophets, or the Egyptians, on whom they depend. Sept. "and counting the weeks," like Aman. Est. 3:7.—Iniquity, or perfidy of Sedecias. C. 17:15. C.

Ver. 24. Remembered. Heb. “caused ... to be remembered,” (H.) sinning publicly. C.

Ver. 25. Thou profane, &c. He speaks to king Sedecias, who had broken his oath, and was otherwise a wicked prince. Ch.—Heb. “Criminal, (sentenced to die) wicked,” &c. C.

Ver. 26. Diadem, (cidarim.) Some think this was th ornament of the high priest, (S. Jer. Chal.) denoting that he should perish as well as the king. H.—This. The royal crown of Juda had exalted Sedecias from a private state and condition to the sovereign power, as the loss of it brought down Jechonias, &c. Ch.—It shall be given go Godolias. Chal. Heb. “it is not (H.) or shall be no more” the same, or for the posterity of Sedecias. None of the tribe of Juda was truly king after him, till the Messias. Sanct. T. &c. Gen. 49:10. C.

Ver. 27. Iniquity. Or, I will overturn it, viz. the crown of Juda, for the manifold iniquities of the kings: but it shall not be utterly removed till Christ come, whose right it is; and who shall reign in the spiritual house of Jacob (that is, in his Church,) for evermore. Ch.—Heb. also, “sideways.” Thou shalt no more wear the tiara erect, (H.) like a king: (Hesyc.) or rather, thy iniquity or punishment shall be most grievous. —Him; Christ, or (C.) Nabuchodonosor. Vat. M.

Ver. 28. Reproach, by which they had reproached and insulted over the Jews, at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem. Ch. C. 25:6. Soph. 2:8.—They were punished five years later (C.) by the same Babylonians whom they had encouraged. W.

Ver. 30. Sheath. The sword of Babylon, after raging against many nations, was shortly to be judged and destroyed at home by the Medes and Persians. Ch.—After Nabuchodonosor had chastised the nations around for 18 years, after the ruin of Jerusalem, he returned and died in peace. Yet he first became like a beast. v. 31. Dan. 4:30. The rest of the prophecy regards his successors. Cyrus waged war upon them, and Baltassar was slain in a conspiracy. See Is. 47. Jer. 50. C.—At last the sword fell upon Babylon itself. W.

Ver. 31. Brutish, or devoid of sense. H.—Heb. “burning;” smiths. C.

EZECHIEL 22

Ver. 2. Blood. Why dost thou cease to admonish and rebuke the people? W.—Pronounce sentence on Jerusalem, (H.) for her cruelties.

C.

Ver. 6. Hath. Sept. "was mixed with his relations," v. 10. &c. (H.) fighting against them. Theod.

Ver. 8. Sabbaths, by servile works, and by their sinful deportment.

Ver. 9. Slanderers, hateful to all. Lev. 19:16. Prov. 11:13.—Mountains. C. 18:6.

Ver. 10. Father, his widow, their mother-in-law, or one of his wives.

Ver. 12. Increase. C. 18:18. C.—Me. "The remembrance of God excludes all sins." S. Jer.

Ver. 13. Hands, through surprise and sorrow. C.—God wishes the sinner's salvation. Gen. 6:6. W.

Ver. 15. In thee. I will purify thee by violent medicines. C.

Ver. 16. Possess, "as an inheritance:" (Sept. H.) "I will defile:" (Aq.) "wound thee." Sym. Heb. is very different: (C.) "thou hast inherited in thyself," (H.) being no longer willing to be subject.

Ver. 18. Dross. Heb. "a mixture." Sept. "God will purify the silver." Is. 4:4.

Ver. 24. Rained upon, or watered with the instructions of the prophets. C. 20:46.

Ver. 25. Conspiracy. The false prophets defend each other, (C.) while the priests connive at their proceedings, (H.) and set the example of wickedness.

Ver. 28. Without. Sept. "they shall fall, seeing," &c.

Ver. 30. None like Abraham, Moses, &c. C.—The prayers of the just are very powerful; and God wishes them to exert themselves for sinners. S. Jer.om. W.

EZECHIEL 23

Ver. 3. Fornication. That is, idolatry. Ch.—Down. Virgins used the stomacher, or (H.) fascia pectoralis. Is. 3:24. This chapter resembles the 16th. C.

Ver. 4. Oolla and Ooliba. God calls the kingdom of Israel Oolla, which signifies their own habitation, because they separated themselves from his temple; and the kingdom of Juda Ooliba, which signifies his habitation in her, because of his temple among them in Jerusalem. Ch. —The ten tribes first gave way to idolatry, and were more numerous. C.—In Egypt the people were united, yet abandoned to idolatry in their youth, when they were only beginning to increase. Afterwards the ten tribes set up altars for themselves, at Dan and Bethel. W.

Ver. 5. Assyrians. That is, the idols of the Assyrians: for all that is said in this chapter of the fornications of Israel and Juda, is to be understood in a spiritual sense of their disloyalty to the Lord, by worshipping strange gods. Ch. W.—The Assyrians taught the worship of Baal, the high places, &c. The Egyptians also promoted their abominations. C.

Ver. 6. Blue, or purple. This was reserved for the principal nobility.

Ver. 8. Egypt. They always retained an affection for those idols, the calf, Adonis, &c.

Ver. 10. Disgrace: satisfying their passions. v. 29. C.—Women. Having once lost all sense of decorum, they became more abandoned. H.

Ver. 11. This; not chastisement, but dissolution.

Ver. 14. Colours. She was enamoured at the account or picture of these people, without ever having seen them.

Ver. 16. Messengers. Achaz invited the Assyrians, and imitated their altars, &c. 4 K. 16:2. &c. C.—The Chaldeans afterwards possessed the country. H.

Ver. 17. Love. Lit. “of breasts,” as Heb. also signifies. Here it denotes the temples. M.

Ver. 19. Remembering, or “causing to be remembered” by God, who seemed to have forgotten those ancient scenes of wickedness. C. 21:24.

Ver. 20. Asses. He means the Egyptians, (C. 16:26) in whom the kings of Juda trusted. C.

Ver. 22. About. The Philistines, Ammonites, &c. shall join the Chaldees, (H.) and Egypt shall desert the Jews in their greatest need. C.

Ver. 23. Nobles. Prot. “Pekod, and Shoah, and Roa:” (H.) which Junius takes to be the three great divisions of the empire. Others suppose they denote the dignities, though they occur not in Daniel.—Captains. Heb. “Phachat, and Saganim, (v. 6, 12) and Schalischim:” officers mentioned Ex. 14:7 and 2 K. 23:8.—Renowned, called to the assemblies and councils of the princes. Num. 1:16. C.—Horsemen. Prot. “all of them riding upon horses.” H.

Ver. 24. Judgments, at Reblatha. 4 K. 25:6.

Ver. 25. Jealousy, the most violent of passions. C.—So the Chaldees are styled, as Assur is the rod. Is. 10:5. W.—Ears, the punishment of adulteresses: both king and priests suffer. S. Jer.—Thus the captives were probably treated. C. See Sen. Ira. iii. 20.—Fire, by Ismahel. C. 19:14.

Ver. 26. Glory; vanity, or of the temple. C. 16:17. Osee 2:4.

Ver. 31. Cup. Thou shalt be punished like Samaria, dreadfully. 4 K. 17:4. C.

Ver. 34. Fragments, as drunkards sometimes bite (H.) the cup in their rage.—Rend. What had been the occasion of thy fall: (C.) pectori planxi. Ovid ep. 5.

Ver. 36. Deeds. He is thus admonished to condemn them; (C. 20:4) as times and places tended to aggravate their crimes, v. 39. W.

Ver. 40. Paint, with antimony. Sept. See 4 K. 9:3.

Ver. 41. Bed: it seems at table. Amos 2:8. Tob. 2:3.—Ointment; using them for thyself, or presenting them to idols. Ex. 30:23 and 33. C.

Ver. 42. And that. Prot. “Sabeans (marg. and Sept. drunkards) from,” &c. Any were admitted (H.) to the priesthood and to her favours, even the most rustic and deformed. 3 K. 12:32.

Ver. 45. Just, compared with the Jews, whom they shall chastise. C.

Ver. 47. Stones, like adulteresses. C. 16:38. Lev. 20:10. H.—Let the walls be demolished. C.

EZECHIEL 24

Ver. 1. Month; Jan. 30, A. 3414. Usher.—Ezekiel was then in Mesopotamia, when the news of the siege commencing on that very day, should arrive; it would make a great impression upon the people, so that they would have confidence in him, (C.) as the certainty of the prediction would appear. 4 K. 25:1. W.

Ver. 2. Pot, to denote Jerusalem: the flesh boiled and consumed in the fire with the bones, would shew the future dismal condition of its chiefs and inhabitants. H.—The hardened Jews turned such things to ridicule. C. 11:3.

Ver. 4. Choice. Heb. “the choice of the bones,” or the finest pieces separated from the bones, as the Sept. and the sequel seem to require. C.—The bones might serve to burn. v. 5. H. See S. Jer. Vat. &c. C.

Ver. 5. The, &c. Lit. “its boiling has grown hot;” the citizens suffer terribly.—Bones. Heb. hatsamim, (H.) may denote the more solid meat.

Ver. 6. Rust: the inveterate malice of the city. v. 12.—Upon it. Hurl the pieces of meat out of the pot, without any choice. C.—All the people shall feel my indignation, the rich as well as the poor. v. 13. H.

Ver. 7. She hath. Sept. “I have let it corrupt upon. I have not,” &c. (v. 8. H.) as if God spoke. The Jews had committed murder without fear. They had naturally a horror for blood, and the law ordered even that of beasts to be covered. Lev. 17:13. Now innocent blood cries for vengeance. Gen. 4:10. The punishment shall be as visible as the crime. v. 8.

Ver. 10. And the. Heb. “put in the seasoning and the bones,” &c.

Ver. 13. Thy. Heb. “In thy crime there is design,” or malice. This rendered the Jews so hateful (C.) and irreclaimable. H.—God had given them abundant instructions (C.) and graces; but all was contemned. H.—When the fire of tribulation does not amend sinners, they are sentenced to hell fire. W.

Ver. 16. Stroke; pestilence, or sudden death. This would make the loss of a dear wife still more afflicting. Yet such distress will fall upon the whole nation, (C.) and misery shall increase so much, that a private loss will be almost forgotten. H.—Curæ leves loquuntur, graviore silent. Sen. Troad.—When a loss is foreseen, it is more easily borne. Private calamities sink in public ones. W.

Ver. 17. Silence, for such manifold calamities, if thou canst screen thyself from the enemy, who will otherwise take offence, as he has brought them on. H.—Dead. Priests were allowed to mourn only for father or mother, and their unmarried brothers and sisters. Lev. 21:1.

Ezekiel (44:25) adds, Son and daughter. Many think the wife must also be understood, as she is nearer than a brother. The reasons for these prohibitions did not then subsist, as no sacrifice could be offered in Chaldea; and therefore God here specifies what the prophet was not to do, (C.) though lawful on other occasions. Sanct.—Tire. Lit. “crown,” bandage, (C.) or parchment, on which parts of the law were written. Sept. “Let (Rom. ed. adds, not) the hair of thy head be curled (or ruffed; συμπεπλεγμενον) upon thee.” H.—It was usually cut in mourning. S. Jer.—Feet. They were bare, at funerals, and in times of sorrow. 2 K. 15:30.—Face, like David. Heb. “the upper lip,” which mourners and lepers covered. Lev. 13:45. C.—Mourners. Feasts were prepared by the relations, (Jos. Bel. ii. 1.) and friends sent some food, but no delicacies, to those who mourned. Lev. 5:9.

Ver. 21. Profane, or esteem it no more, (H.) but abandon it to the Gentiles. C.—Feareth to lose; or on which it rests. v. 25. H.

Ver. 27. No more, if thou darest to speak before the Chaldeans. v. 17. Reserve thy tears and lamentations for that time. C.

EZECHIEL 25

Ver. 2–3. Ammon. These nations were punished five years after the Jews. C. 21:19. Jer. 27:3. C.—“Egypt, Syria, Phœnicia, and Arabia,” were conquered. Beros.—Hast. God saw their dispositions, which they manifested afterwards. C.—They rejoiced most, and were therefore punished with other nations. W.

Ver. 4. East; the Chaldeans, (Sanct.) who conquered them, (H.) though the Scenite Arabs, who occupied the country after the inhabitants were removed, or the Armenians and Agarens, are rather meant than the Chaldees. W.

Ver. 5. Rabbath, the capital city of the Ammonites: it was afterwards called Philadelphia. Ch.—Flocks. These constituted the riches of those Arabians.

Ver. 7. Lord, and that it was not through impotence that my people became a prey. Ammon and Moab returned after some time. v. 10. C. 16:53. Jer. 49:6.

Ver. 8. Seir; Idumea.—Nations, whose gods could not defend them. C.—Thus they blasphemed the Lord. Theod.

Ver. 9. Shoulder; reduce to slavery, (H.) or take the strong places, (Jer. 48:7. C.) or cities and strength of Moab. W.

Ver. 10. With, or “like thee.” Moab (v. 11) shall be treated like Ammon. H.—Heb. “As for the,” &c. C.

Ver. 12. Revenge; exhorting the Chaldeans to destroy utterly, (Ps. 136:7) and seizing every opportunity of injuring the Jews. 2 Par. 28:18. Amos 1:11.

Ver. 13. South. Heb. “Theman,” a city at one extremity. The Chaldeans laid waste the country, (C. 32:29) but did not remove the people, who seized the southern parts of Juda, till they were forced to submit to the Machabees.

Ver. 15. Enmities. They also watched every moment to injure the Jews, Amos 1:5. But Nabuchodonosor was irritated, because they had assisted Tyre. Jer. 47:4.

Ver. 16. Killers. Heb. “Ceretheans.” David’s guards were of this nation. 2 K. 8:18. They came originally from Crete; and the Sept. have here, “Cretans;” (C.) as Grabe substitutes for “Judges of Sidon.” H.—Chal. “archers.”—Remnant. They deserve not the name of a nation, having been much reduced by Egypt and the Chaldeans. C.

EZECHIEL 26

Ver. 1. Year of the prophet’s captivity. H.—He still dates from the transmigration of Joachin. C. 1. &c. W.—Some think he speaks of the first, fourth, or fifth month. Tyre was not besieged till after the ninth day of the fourth month, when Jerusalem was taken; nor could she express her joy for that event before, unless God allude to her dispositions, &c. C. 25:1. C.

Ver. 2. Gates: places of resort and commerce. The Jews came to Jerusalem frequently from all parts, which increased her beauty and trade. New Tyre expects that more will come to her.

Ver. 3. Up. Nabuchodonosor besieged the city for thirteen years. The profane historians read by S. Jerom took no notice of this; but Josephus quotes several. An. x. 11. and c. Ap. i. C.

Ver. 4. Dust. She shall be demolished, and the rubbish thrown into the sea, to make a road by which New Tyre in the island might be attacked. v. 12. H.

Ver. 5. Sea. S. Jerom explains this of New Tyre; Marsham of the Old. To reconcile the different texts, we only need to suppose that both cities were connected by a road thrown up in the sea by Hiram, and repaired by Nabuchodonosor with great labour, (C. 29:18) after it had been destroyed by the inhabitants of New Tyre, when they saw the old city on the continent fall a prey. S. Jer. C.

Ver. 7. Kings: Nabuchodonosor (4 K. 25:28) or Alexander, who took Tyre. M.

Ver. 8. Daughters. Many towns were subject to Tyre: almost all Phoenicia acknowledged her dominion, as well as (C.) the seas to which her fleets went. v. 15. Selden. Mare i. 6. Curt. iv.—These smaller cities shall fall, and the town shall be of no service except to dry nets. W.

Ver. 9. Engines. Lit. “vine.” H.—A covert was thus made for the soldiers, (Veget. iv. 15.) when they approached the walls. M.

Ver. 10. Destroyed. Old Tyre was taken by storm. It is doubtful whether it was pillaged. C. 29:18. C.

Ver. 11. Statues. The citizens chained the golden statue of Apollo to the altar of Hercules, for fear of its leaving them, when Alexander attacked the town. Curt. iv.—Hiram placed a pillar of gold in the temple of Hercules. Jos. C. Ap. i.—Herodotus (ii. 44.) saw another also of emerald stone, (σμαραγδον) which illuminated the temple in the night. On such the Tyrian might depend; though some render, “the substance or guard of thy strength,” denoting the soldiers (C.) and towers. H.—The gods were treated like the people, and their precious ornaments plundered.

Ver. 14. More, for seventy years. Is. 23:15. The people returned at the same time as the Jews. A. 3468. Soon after, Zacharias (C. 9) speaks of Tyre as then subsisting. It was very strong in Alexander’s time, (who took it with difficulty, as Antigonus did eighteen years later) and had a very extensive commerce when S. Jerom wrote. But all this must be understood of New Tyre. The old city never regained much splendour. C.—It is still in ruins. A modern traveller was struck with the completion of this prophecy, beholding a few miserable fishermen drying their nets on the spot!

Ver. 16. Sea: colonies, or tributary to Tyre. v. 8. H.—Leptis, Utica, Carthage, and Cadiz, were founded by Tyrians. Pliny v. 19.—Some pretend that these cities were attacked by the conquerors, for manifesting their grief. See Jos. Ant. x. Pineda, &c.—But we shall not here follow conjectures.—Astonishment. Heb. “troubles,” or mourning. C.

Ver. 17. Dwellest in. Heb. “of the seas.” Prot. “seafaring men,” (H.) being near the sea, or thence deriving thy riches.

Ver. 18. Because. Heb. “at thy departure.” C.—Sept. “into captivity.” S. Jer.

Ver. 19. Waters; great armies, (v. 3) or when thou art in the regions below. Job 26:5. C.—Tyre was humbled for her pride, but restored after seventy years. Is. 23. Our Saviour retired into those parts. Mat. 15:21. W.

Ver. 20. Everlasting: in the grave, till the day of judgment. Ps. 48:12. Wisd. 12:5.—Living, assigned to Israel, (C. 32:24. C.) where holy people adore the true God, and shall rise to life eternal. M.

Ver. 21. For ever: for a long time, (Theod.) not at all in thy ancient glory. H.—The city subsisted after the days of Nabuchodonosor and of Alexander. C. v. 14.—But the ancient city was reduced to a mere nothing. H.

EZECHIEL 27

Ver. 2. Lamentation. Such canticles were usual, and very poetical.

Ver. 3. Entry, whence merchants may proceed from an excellent harbour to any place.

Ver. 4. Neighbours of Sidon. Jos. 19:29. C.—Sept. “thy children.” Prot. “thy builders.” H.—The description of the Tyrian grandeur, shews their more woeful ruin. W.

Ver. 5. Thee. Heb. “all thy ship-boards.” Sept. Prot. H.—S. Jerom has divided (C.) leuthim, “decks of the sea,” as yam denotes the sea. H.

Ver. 6. Benches. Sept. “temples.”—Italy. Heb. Cetim. Macedonia. Boch. C.—All distant places were styled islands, (H.) when they went by water to them.

Ver. 7. Linen. Cotton, (Ex. 25:4) used for standards. Sept. “for bed coverlets,” or for sails.—Mast. Cleopatra and Caligula were still more sumptuous in their sails.—Elisa, or Elis, famous for purple: yet Tyre was more so.

Ver. 8. Aradians. Sidon and Arad were then subject to Tyre, and supplied rowers.—Pilots. They studied no other science.

Ver. 9. Gebal. Sept. “Biblos,” which is the same. 3 K. 5:18.—Furnished. Heb. “were in thee to repair thy breaches.” Sept. “strengthened thy designs.”

Ver. 10. Lybians. Heb. “Phut.” They had been expelled by the Cyreneans. Tyre had in her pay the most warlike nations of Persia, &c. Cyrus soon after shook off the yoke of the Medes, and conquered the Lydians.—Hung up. v. 11. This was very usual. Cant. 4:4. Is. 22:8. C.

Ver. 11. The Pygmeans. That is, strong and valiant men. In Heb. Gammadim. Ch.—He does not speak of those fabulous men hardly a cubit high. Gomed signifying a “cubit,” has caused them to be styled so here. Sept. “guards;” or Sym. “Medes.” Ezechiel (38:6) speaks of the Gomerim.

Ver. 12. Carthaginians. Heb. “Tharsis,” in Cilicia; (Gen. 10:4. C.) or distant merchants, who came by sea. H.

Ver. 13. Slaves. Those from Greece were much esteemed. C.—Alas! thirty thousand Tyrians were themselves thus sold by Alexander! H.

Ver. 14. Horses. Those of Sarmatia (C.) were in high repute. Pliny viii. 42.

Ver. 15. Dedan. Sept. “Rhodians;” or rather Arabs are meant. v. 20. They might receive ivory from Ethiopia.—Teeth. Heb. “horns or tusks,” which the elephant casts every year. The ivory is less brittle. 3 K. 10:18. C.—Ebony; a hard black wood, like horn. Bochart.

Ver. 16. Syrian: always much addicted to commerce. S. Jer.—Sept. read Adam for Aram, as if the traffic in men was meant: (C.) “ivory, and to those who brought, thou gavest thy rewards. (16) Men of thy traffic,” &c. H.—Linen. Heb. buts, “silk” extracted from the pinna fish. 1 Par. 15:27. Silk. Heb. ramoth, may rather denote unicorns. Job 28:18. C.—Chodchod. It is the Hebrew name for some precious stone, but of what kind in particular, interpreters are not agreed. Ch.—Some say the carbuncle, &c. S. Jerom renders it the jasper. Is. 54:12. W.—Here he confesses he knows not the meaning. C.

Ver. 17. Rosin. Our version generally renders this, balm. H.—It was much used to heal. Jer. 8:22. Gen. 37:25.

Ver. 18. Rich. Heb. Chelbon; perhaps the city Chelba. Jud. 1:31. The kings of Persia used this wine, and planted vines at Damascus on purpose.

Ver. 19. Dan: the citizens of Peneas, the tribe of Dan was in captivity. Grotius places these nations in Zeilan, (C.) or Ceylon. H.

Ver. 20. Seats, such as the Turks still use, or to throw over horses instead of saddles.

Ver. 23. Haran, or Charæ, famous for the residence of Abraham and the defeat of Crassus.—Eden, the province where Paradise was situated.

Ver. 24. Cords, in boxes, which had then no locks.

Ver. 25. Sea. Heb. Tharsis, in Cilicia; or large, and fit for long voyages. Thine were the best. C.

Ver. 26. South. Heb. kodim, (H.) “eastern,” or rather “burning,” here means Nabuchodonosor, who came from the north, (C. 26:7. C.) or east. The fall of Tyre is described as a shipwreck. H.

Ver. 30. Ashes. They followed the same customs as the Jews. C.—The latter were ordered to avoid cutting the hair, like them; yet did so. Deut. 14. Is. 22:22. W.

Ver. 36. Hissed, through pity and astonishment. C.

EZECHIEL 28

Ver. 2. Prince. The Jews say Hiram, (S. Jer.) supposing that he lived a thousand years; though this is not requisite, as he died only four hundred and thirty years before. The idea is childish. The king who was taken and slain, at this siege, was probably (C.) Ithobalos. Jos. Ant. x. 11.—Origen applies this to the angel guardian of Tyre. S. Aug. thinks an allusion is made to the fall of Lucifer. But it may all refer to the king, (C.) though others explain part of him and the rest of the devil. S. Jer. E.

Ver. 3. Than Daniel; viz. in thy own conceit. The wisdom of Daniel was so much celebrated in his days, that it became a proverb among the Chaldees, when any one would express an extraordinary wisdom, to say he was as wise as Daniel. Ch. W.—He was now at court, and had explained the dream of Nabuchodonosor. Dan. 2:27.

Ver. 10. Uncircumcised. The Jews deemed this a disgrace. 1 K. 31:4. The king would be exposed to eternal death, being devoid of faith, &c. C.

Ver. 12. Resemblance. The king of Tyre, by his dignity and his natural perfections, bore in himself a certain resemblance to God, by reason of which he might be called the seal of resemblance, &c. But what is here said to him is commonly understood of Lucifer, the king over all the children of pride. Ch.—A seal is perfect when it represents things exactly. The prophet speaks ironically, to repress the king's vanity.

Ver. 13. Paradise. Thou hadst every thing delightful at Tyre. C.—Covering. Heb. “bandage;” diadem, (H.) or belt. Sept. specify twelve stones. See Ex. 28:17.—Pipes; music used at the coronation, which was celebrated as a birth-day. C.—God give and withdraws power from all kings. As long as they act well, they are a sort of sanctuary. H.

Ver. 14. Stretched out. That is, thy wings extended. This alludes to the figure of the cherubims in the sanctuary, which with stretched out wings covered the ark, (Ch.) on the holy mountain. S. Jer. &c.—Fire. That is, bright and precious stones, which sparkle like fire. Ch.—With these the king's robes glittered, or he walked upon them. Est. 1:6. C.—Calcacabatur onyx. Lucan x.

Ver. 15. Iniquity. Tyre was before wicked; but when the king pretended to be a god, (v. 2) it could no longer be endured. W.

Ver. 17. Beauty. Riches have corrupted thy heart.

Ver. 18. Sanctuaries, or temples, which was a crime (C.) in an idolater, as he took them to be the temples of a real deity. H.

Ver. 22. Sidon. It gave rise to Tyre, yet was now inferior, though independent of it, (Is. 23:4) or subject to Egypt. Diod. ii. 2.—It was now pillaged.

Ver. 24. Bitterness. Jezabel came hence; (3 K. 16:31) and the Phœnicians hemmed in the Israelites as much as possible, and fought against them. C.—Sidon was near Tyre, and imitating her crimes was also punished.

Ver. 25. When. All shall praise God, seeing that he receives his people again after he has justly chastised them. W.

Ver. 1. Eleventh. Heb. “twelfth.” Sept. “first of the twelfth month of the twelfth year.” There are other variations in the versions. S. Jerom reads the first in Heb. as Theodoret does, who says that it and the Syr. have the twelfth year: which is true, if we neglect the points. C.—The prophets do not observe the order of times. What is here delivered, was sooner fulfilled; or Tyre and Sodom lay nearer than Egypt. W.—The three next chapters regard that country.

Ver. 2. Pharao, Ephree. Jer. 44:30. He came to assist Sedecias; but the Chaldeans raised the siege, went to meet him, and defeated his army. After they had subdued the neighbouring nations, Tyre, &c. they fell upon Egypt. A. 3433. C.

Ver. 3. Dragon. Heb. tannin, (H.) whence thunnus may be derived, means any water monster, and seems here put for the crocodile, (C.) which Pharao signifies. Grot.—It was the symbol of Egypt, (C.) and adored by the people. Juv. 15:2.—Rivers; the different branches of the Nile, and the canals.—Myself. I owe my power to no other. C. —“Apries is said to think that no god could deprive him of the kingdom, so well he seemed to have established it.” Herod. ii. 169.—So the ancient Pharao said; I know not the Lord. Ex. 5:2. He boasts of having conducted the waters of the Nile through the land. v. 9. M.—This river was honoured as the greatest of the gods. Heliod. 9.—

Terra suis contenta bonis non indiga mercis
Aut Jovis; in solo tanta est fiducia Nilo. Lucan viii.

Ver. 4. Bridle. The Tentyrians jump upon the crocodile’s back, give it a club to bite at, which they seize with both hands, and bring it to the shore. Pliny viii. 25.—Others throw a hook baited with swine’s flesh, and holding the rope on the shore, make a little pig squeak, with draws the attention of the crocodile; and, as it comes for its prey, it swallows the hook, and its eyes being filled with dust is easily slain. Herod. ii. 70.—Apries sent an army against Cyrene, which being defeated as it was thought by the king’s fault, many of the Egyptians revolted. He sent Amasis to reduce them, but they gave him the crown. Herod. ii. 161. and iv. 159.—Nabuchodonsor taking advantage of these disturbances, and perhaps invited by Amasis, entered Egypt, drove Apries into Higher Egypt, slew many of the inhabitants, and Jews, &c. and left Amasis to govern the wretched remains of the kingdom. Usher, A. 3430. The Scripture, however, seems to say that Pharao was slain; (Jer. 43. &c. C.) which Ctesias assures us was done by Amasis, though Herodotus (ii. 169.) says he was killed by the people, and buried with his fathers. This latter circumstance is not very probable: but the historian followed the account of the priests, who would mention what was most honourable for the nation. He seems to have been left unburied. v. 5. Scales. The people depended on the king and share his fate. C.

Ver. 6. Israel, tempting them to rebel. S. Jer.—He promised more than he was able or strove to perform, though he made a show of giving aid.

Ver. 7. Loins. They fell upon thee, and thou didst wound (C.) or “dissolve” their loins. H.

Ver. 10. Tower; or rather (C.) Heb. and Sept. “from Magdol to Syene.” H.—This was on the frontiers of Ethiopia, below the cataracts. Pliny v. 9.

Ver. 11. Years, till the third of Cyrus, who gave liberty to all the captives at the beginning of his reign. v. 13. C.—Amasis reigned forty-four years in Lower Egypt, (Herod. iii. 10.) over the few whom Nabuchodonosor spared.

Ver. 14. Low. The Jews were not more tempted to apply to them for aid. C.—Amasis strove to shake off the yoke: but Cambyses came and slew many. Psammenites killed himself; (Herod. iii. 9.) or was taken to Susa, and the country laid waste. Ctesias—Egypt has almost ever since been subject to foreign princes, (H.) Persians, Greeks, Romans, Saracens, Mamelukes, and Turks. The trade of Egypt, by caravans, was in a manner destroyed for forty years by Nabuchodonosor, whose victories Megasthenes and Berosus attest 300 years before Christ. Watson.

Ver. 17. Year: fifteen (C.) or seventeen years after the preceding prophecy, (v. 1. W.) but on the same subject.

Ver. 18. Peeled, with carrying machines of war and burdens for thirteen years.—No reward worth the labour. The new city surrendered upon terms, (C.) or the citizens shipped off their most valuable goods, and retired to Carthage, &c. God gives a temporal reward for moral virtues, (S. Jer.) even to infidels. W.—Thus he rewarded the ancient Romans, and the midwives. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. v. 12. and S. Tho. i. 2. q. 114. a. 10.—They had no intention of pleasing God, (C.) or of directing their labours for his service. H.

Ver. 21. Horn: Zorobabel; (S. Jer.) Jechonias, who was honoured by Evil-merodac; (T.) or Daniel and Mardochai, with all the nation.—Month. Thou shalt speak boldly, and they will give credit to thee henceforward. C.

EZECHIEL 30

Ver. 2. Day of vengeance, (C.) when the Lord shall judge, (1 Cor. 5:2) and Egypt shall fall a prey to the most powerful nation of the Chaldees. W.

Ver. 4. Ethiopia. Heb. “Chus,” denoting part of Arabia, or rather Ethiopia.

Ver. 5. Lydia. Heb. “Phut,” near Egypt. C.—These troops were paid. H. —Chub, in Mareotis.—Covenant: the Jews or auxiliaries. Sept. add, “the Persians and Cretans.” C.—There were Persians in Africa who followed Hercules. Pliny v. 8.

Ver. 9. Messengers; the Chaldeans. C.—The Nile was navigable as far as Syene. S. Jer.

Ver. 12. Dry. The canals were obstructed (C.) which rendered cavalry useless. Herod. ii. 108.

Ver. 13. Memphis, the capital of Lower Egypt, (C.) where the idol or bull (H.) Apis was fed. C.—Here Amasis overcame Apries. Herod. ii. 168.—The Chaldees made war on the gods as well as on the people.—Prince Amasis was tributary to Babylon. Some of this probably regards the times of Cambyzes and Ochus. Usher, A. 3478 and 3653. C. See C. 29:14. H.

Ver. 14. Taphnis, or Tanis, famous for the miracles of Moses. C.—Alexandria. In the Heb. No, which was the ancient name of that city, which was afterwards rebuilt by Alexander the Great, and from his name called Alexandria. Ch.—Sept. “Memphis or Diospolis;” (C.) or Thebes, capital of Higher Egypt; (Boch.) though it seems rather a maritime town. Nah. 3:8. C.

Ver. 15. Pelusium. Heb. Sin, (H.) “muddy,” has the same import as πηλος. C.—The place is now called Damietta. H.

Ver. 18. Darkened: war and misery shall ensue.—Sceptres, by dethroning Apries.—Pride; overflowing of the Nile. See Jer. 49:19.

Ver. 20. Year, in which Jerusalem was taken. Pharaoh lost a battle. His country was afterwards invaded, (C.) and his subjects rebelled. v. 21. H.—Part of the kingdom had been already subdued. 4 K. 24:7. W.

EZECHIEL 31

Ver. 1. Year, about a month before the fall of Jerusalem.

Ver. 3. Assyrian. The ruin of this great empire (C.) might have admonished the king of Egypt of his frail condition. H.—About thirty-eight years before (C.) Ninive had been taken, and its king (Sarac or Chinaladan) slain by his own general, Nabopolassar, and by Astyages, of Media. They divided the empire between them, and the father of Nabuchodonosor fixed his residence at Babylon. Usher, A. 3378.—Cedar. Sept. “cypress.”—Top; the king of Ninive. C.—Egypt’s monarch thought himself invincible; yet would fall like the Assyrians. W.

Ver. 4. Roots. Various nations paid tribute to the Assyrians, (S. Jer. C.) while he sent his troops, like rivulets, to keep all in subjection. Theod.

Ver. 11. I have delivered. Here the time past is put for the future; i.e. I shall deliver.—The mighty one, &c. viz. Nabuchodonosor, who conquered both the Assyrians and Egyptians; (Ch.) or rather his father, Nabopolassar, subdued the former. v. 3. H.

Ver. 12. Strangers; revolted Assyrians. See Ps. 17:46.

Ver. 13. Branches. The nations continued, but submitted to another master.

Ver. 14. Pit. The new king would appoint fresh governors.

Ver. 15. Waters, as if they bewailed his fate. C.—Those whom the king of Ninive had exalted, and the people, who wished not to submit to a foreigner, would no doubt lament the slaughtered monarch, now silent (H.) in the grave. Theod.

Ver. 16. Comforted. The ghosts of princes who had been subject to Serac, seeing his fall, bore their own misfortune with greater content. In the grave there is no distinction of master and slave. C.—Surviving princes expected some emolument from the change. H.

Ver. 17. Arm; those in power. Sept. “his seed.” Heb. Zora, (H.) means both.

Ver. 18. Famous king of Assyria, or of Egypt.—Pharao. C.—

—Though Egypt be like the most potent kingdoms, it shall likewise fall. W.

EZECHIEL 32

Ver. 1. Twelfth. He counts from the captivity of Jechonias, as Sedecias reigned only eleven years. W.

Ver. 2. Dragon, or crocodile; two of the most terrible creatures.—With the horn is not expressed in Heb. and the crocodile has nothing like a horn. It has four feet, with which it makes the water muddy. C.

Ver. 3. Net. Sept. “hook.” C. 29:4. C.—Some take the crocodile with a net. v. 3. Elian. Hist. x. 21.

Ver. 5. Corruption. Sept. “blood.” But romuth (H.) means rather “worms.” Syr. C.

Ver. 7–8. Out, like a candle, by death; extinctus. H.—The glory of Egypt was so great, that at its fall the light of heaven seemed diminished. W.—Great desolation is thus intimated.—When, &c. is not in some Latin copies, nor in Heb. &c. C.

Ver. 9. Anger, as they will not know why I have treated thee so severely: or rather, they shall be afraid for themselves. v. 10. C.

Ver. 12. Invincible, when they wield God’s sword. Cyrus easily conquered them. H.—Heb. “strong,.” Sept. “pestiferous.”

Ver. 14. Oil. It is very transparent. It seems the Nile was rendered muddy by cattle, &c.

Ver. 15. Fulness, or all of it shall be desolate.

Ver. 17. Month: probably the twelfth. v. 1.

Ver. 18. Down: announce this catastrophe. C.—Apries was slain by order of Amasis. Diodor. 1. Jer. 44:30.

Ver. 21. Most. Sept. “giants shall say to thee: Remain in the depth of the pit. Whom dost thou excel? descend,” &c. H.—They vary much in this chapter from the Heb. S. Jer.—Helpers; Lybians, &c. C. 30:5. These shall come to compliment the king. C.—After a battle, those of the same nation were buried together. v. 22. Theod.—The Egyptians had tombs like houses, in which there were separate holes or apartments (C.) as in large vaults. H.

Ver. 24. Shame. They are buried without any distinction.

Ver. 27. Not. Some copies of Sept. omit the negation. Others render the Heb. "Have they not slept?" &c. These nations were deprived of military honours, dying like cowards; and therefore their swords were not placed with them in the grave. C.—It was customary to inter such things as the deceased had like the most. Serv. in Æn. x. Arma quibus lætatus habes, &c. Simon (1 Mac. 13:29) placed arms and representations of ships on the pillars at Modin, in honour of his kindred. If Elam, &c. had not received such distinction, why should the Egyptian repine? Were they any better? C.—The country and king of the Elamites, Assyrians, and other infidels, shall be destroyed. W.

Ver. 28. Midst. This threat would make great impression on the Egyptians, who were particularly solicitous to be buried with their fathers.

Ver. 29. Edom. Sept. add, "and all the Assyrian princes." Some copies omit Edom. H.—This nation had laid aside circumcision, which Hircan forced them to resume. They had been present at the siege of Jerusalem. C. 35. C.

Ver. 30. Hunters of men, like Nimrod, the first king of Assyria. H.

Ver. 32. My. Heb. Sept. "his," (C.) alluding to the ravages of Nechao; (Grot.) though the Hebrew may also signify my, as the Jews read Egypt, and Palestine, the land of the living, were filled with terror. After the latter had been chastised, Pharaoh might dread (C.) a worse fate; (H.) and the multitudes slain before him, might afford him some (C.) wretched consolation. H.—It is evident that those nations believed the existence of separate spirits, and had not given in to the errors of the Sadducees, or of the Metempsychosis. C.

EZECHIEL 33

Ver. 2. Take. Before (C. 3:17.) God made the choice, (C.) as he does here, v. 7. He confirms the authority of those who are appointed to govern.—Meanest. Lit. "last," (H.) which seems to denote such as are chosen without regard to their dignity or obscurity in life. Gen. 47:2 and 3 K. 12:31. C.—Pastors are not excused from admonishing the people for fear of danger or despair of reclaiming them, as each one is bound to do his duty. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 6. Iniquity, not regarding the admonitions of his pastor; (C. 3:18. C.) or rather of conscience, when the guide proves faithless and silent, as in this instance. H.—The people were persuaded that none suffered except for some fault. v. 10. Jer. 31:30. Dan. 13:52. Gen. 44:16. The author of the Book of Job takes great pains to remove this mistake. God sometimes sends crosses for a trial, (C.) and to increase the merit of his servants; though it be very true, (H.) “no one is miserable except he deserve it.” S. Aug.

Ver. 8. Surely die a temporal, (Theod.) or rather an eternal death. S. Jer.

Ver. 10. Live? They suppose their case to be desperate, as their fathers had sinned. C. 18. The prophet shews that none are punished except for their own faults, (C.) and that “each one has free-will to be saved or to be lost.” S. Jer.

Ver. 11. Desire. The sinner’s damnation is not an object of God’s pleasure. C. 18:23. C.—He has an antecedent will to save all. He knocks at the door of our heart, (Apoc. 3:20) and if man do what depends on him, nothing will be wanting on the part of God. S. Tho. i. 2. q. 109. and 112. W.

Ver. 12. Hurt him. God effaces all past crimes: yet a relapse makes them as it were revive, and is pardoned with more difficulty. Mat. 18:35. Some read, “In what day the converted sinner groans, he shall be saved,” as if they had taken in part of Is. 30:15.

Ver. 17. Equitable; as we are much more inclined to vice than to virtue. This argumentation is inconclusive, as God owes nothing to man; and what good the latter does, is an effect of His grace. The propensity to evil is no excuse, as man is still free. He is judged according to the dispositions in which he is found at the hour of death; yet we must not infer, that those who have spent their lives in sinning will be no worse treated than the person who dies guilty of a single crime.

Ver. 21. Twelfth. Rom. Sept. “tenth.” Syr. “eleventh year, ... in the twelfth month,” which Theodoret thinks more probable, as the city was taken in the ninth of the fourth month of that year. Yet even so, it is strange that the news should not arrive before. Some think (C.) that the messenger came also to announce what happened after the death of Godolias. Sanct.—Captivity. Here it is evident that the prophet dates from that event. C. 1. &c. H.—As he prophesied on the very day when the city was besieged, (C. 24:2) so (v. 26) he foretold that one should come three years after to inform him of the capture. W.—Then the people would believe him, (ib. v. 27. C.) and he would open his mouth boldly. v. 22. H.

Ver. 24. Places. He has answered those who despaired. v. 10. Now he turns to the presumptuous, who expected to be treated like Abraham, though they did not imitate his virtues. C.—They perhaps entertained these sentiments before the death of Godolias, thinking to establish themselves in the land. Afterwards the prophet Jeremias could not prevail on them to remain, though God promised them security.

Ver. 25. To them. Grabe marks to v. 27. Thus saith, &c. as wanting in the Sept. though not in the Alex. copy. S. Jerom reckons eight verses or lines omitted. H.—The Comp. and Theodoret read them with some variations.—The blood. It must be carefully extracted. Gen. 9:4. Lev. 7:26.—Uncleannesses; idols, in which you trust.

Ver. 26. Swords, thinking to live thereby, (Gen. 27:40) and to be secure. But I will disarm you. The pestilence shall find out those in the rocks. v. 27.

Ver. 30. Walls, the resort of idle people. C.

Ver. 31. In to a religious meeting. Chal. Perhaps they came on the sabbath to his house. Yet they made a just and song of his instructions. C.—They heard them with pleasure, but did not reform their lives. H.

Ver. 33. Coming. The desolation of Jerusalem, (H.) and what I have foretold, hath already taken place; or, the news will presently arrive: as it did the following morning. v. 21. C.

EZECHIEL 34

Ver. 2. Shepherds. That is, princes, magistrates, chief priests, and scribes. Ch.—Shepherds may lawfully take milk, (1 Cor. 9:7) but the sheep and its wool belong to the master. W.—Excellent instructions are here given for all in authority. C.

Ver. 3. Fat. Pastors often disguise the truth to flatter the rich, or the more just souls are ruined by their negligence.

Ver. 4. Healed. God alone can restore to life. But pastors will not be excused by ignorance if they know not the maladies and the remedies of their flock.—Hand. This was blamed in the Pharisees, and is contrary to the spirit of the gospel. Mat. 23:4. 1 Pet. 5:2.

Ver. 5. Field. The people being neglected, followed false prophets and idols. Their teachers were so far from striving to reclaim them, that they perhaps shewed them the example. C.

Ver. 8. No shepherd. Pastors who seek only their temporal advantage, (1 Tim. 6:5. Tit. 1:7. H.) are hirelings; and if they teach false doctrine, they are wolves. John 10. W.

Ver. 10. Cease. Both the leaders and the people were led into captivity.

Ver. 12. Day, in persecution. I will count my sheep, lest any be lost.

Ver. 13. Land. All this cannot be understood of the synagogue alone.

Ver. 16. Preserve, (Sept. Syr.) which seems more natural than Heb. and Chal. “destroy.” I will not eat them, like bad shepherds. v. 3. C.—God and those whom he sends, will take care of the flock. Eph. 4. W.

Ver. 17. Cattle. The crimes of the pastors do not excuse the flock. In it there are people of different dispositions. The rich often destroy, and these are brought to an account. v. 24. C.

Ver. 23. David; Christ, who is of the house of David. C.—That king had been dead long before, so that no Jew or heretic can deny but that the Messiah is here meant, as C. 37:24. &c. W.—He possessed eminently all the virtues of David, and was of his seed. Zorobabel, &c. cannot be understood, as we have no proof that the governors after the captivity were chosen from the tribe of Juda. C. 21:27.

Ver. 25. Peace. Christ pacifies all. Rom. 15:33. Mic. 5:5. Eph. 6:15.—Beasts: those who promote idolatry; or, speaking of Christians, who teach heretical doctrine and persecute the Church. C.

Ver. 26. Make. Lit. “place.” H.—Sept. read not a blessing, which seems superfluous. C.—Yet Chal. has it, and the idea is more complete. H.

Ver. 29. A bud of renown, (germen nominatum.) He speaks of Christ, our Lord, the illustrious bud of the house of David, renowned over all the earth. See Jer. 33:15. Ch.—Sept. Syr. “a plant of peace.” Chal. “established.” C.

Ver. 31. Men. What has been said of sheep (M.) relates to you.—Am the Lord. This is not in Heb. or Prot. H.—But it is found in one Heb. MS. and Sept. as this version is thus frequently confirmed. Kennicott,

EZECHIEL 35

Ver. 2. Face. Address, or speak without fearing any man. W.—Seir: Idumea. He speaks of its devastation, both by Nabuchodonosor on the side of Moab, and by the Machabees in what remained. Jer. 27:7 and 1 Mac. 4:60 and 14:33. C.

Ver. 5. Enemy. God revenges the injuries done to his Church, as if they were done to himself. Acts 9:4. W.—The enmity of Jacob and of Esau seemed to commence in the womb, and was increased by the purchase of the birth-right, till Jacob's prudence disarmed his brother. Their descendants sought every opportunity to injure one another. The Idumeans shewed their ill-will particularly, when the Jews were most distressed. This was a piece of the greatest cruelty.

Ver. 6. Blood. The Machabees sprung from the same stock. Pursue the Idumeans, and force them to receive circumcision. 1 Mac. 4:15.

Ver. 9. Inhabited for a considerable time, as C. 26:20.

Ver. 10. Two. I will add the country of the Jews to my own, or will possess the land belonging to the kingdoms of Juda and of Israel. Their hopes were blasted. They never occupied any thing belonging to the Israelites, and what they had taken from Juda, as far as Hebron, was recovered.—There, witness of these designs, and guardian of his temple, &c.

Ver. 11. Wrath. The Jews shall treat you as you have threatened to do unto them.—By them, my people. Sept. "to thee."

Ver. 13. Derogated. Sept. "bawled;" or Heb. "multiplied your words against me," as if I could not protect my inheritance. H.—You would pretend to judge me, and to fathom my designs.

Ver. 14. Rejoice. After the captivity, the Machabees shall conquer Edom.

Ver. 15. As, &c. is not in the Rom. Sept. S. Jerom says it was marked with an asterisk, being taken from Theodotion. C.—Grabe supplies to thou shalt. His copy has the rest: ... "thou shalt know that I am their Lord." H.

EZECHIEL 36

Ver. 1. Israel. The restoration of the Jews and the redemption of Christ, constitute this fourth division. W.—Edom has seized parts of the country, as if I had abandoned my people for ever.

Ver. 2. Heights. Sept. “deserts.” The mountains are often styled eternal, as being the best symbols of durability. Deut. 33:15.

Ver. 3. Reproach. This God had repeatedly threatened. Deut. 28:37. C. Jer. 24:9.—People talked of their distress. W.

Ver. 8. Israel. Some apply what follows to the captives returning; others, perceiving that the expressions were not then literally verified, have recourse to the reign of 1000 years. Others again explain the whole of Christ’s Church. But some expressions refer to it, and others to the captives; which, though mixed together, induce no confusion, as what belongs to the Jews was a figure of what regarded Christ; and the predictions of the Messiah might be applied to the Jews in a hyperbolical sense. S. Aug. Doct. iii. 34. S. Jer. M. T. C.

Ver. 11. Greater. Sept. “similar.” H.—It would be difficult to shew that the Jews arrived at greater eminence after the captivity than before, (C.) though they were less addicted to idolatry. Their kingdom was not independent: they had no prophets, &c. But the superior numbers and excellence of the Christian Church is manifest.

Ver. 12. Them. Antiochus and the Romans laid waste the country; (C.) and Adrian would not allow the Jews to come near Jerusalem. S. Jer. Eus. iv. 6.—The people were not indeed removed together, as they had been. But all this is verified only in the Church, which in the midst of persecutions always subsists. Theodoret thinks these promises were conditional with respect to the Jews.

Ver. 13. Men. This remark was very ancient. Num. 13:33. Wars had almost always raged in the country. C.

Ver. 15. More. This whole promise principally relates to the Church of Christ, and God’s perpetual protection of her; for to the carnal Jews, they have been removed out of their land these sixteen hundred years. Ch.

Ver. 18. Blood of their own children, and of the innocent. C. 16:36 and 22:2 and 33:25.

Ver. 20. Land. Yet their conduct was no better than that of infidels.

Thus they throw the blame on the law, and upon God himself. Jer. 48:9. &c. C.—The Jews had provoked God to punish them with captivity; and hence the nations took occasion to blaspheme, that he could not protect them.

Ver. 22. Holy, that my attributes of justice and mercy may be confessed. Is. 48:2. Dan. 3:49. Judith 8:24.

Ver. 25. Water. R. David and the Chal. explain this of the remission of sin; and all Christians understand it of baptism in water, remitting all offences. Eph. 5:26. Tit. 3:5. W.—He alludes to the purification of the Jews, which prefigured baptism and penance, in which the blood of Christ is applied to our souls. This of course was only fulfilled in his church.

Ver. 26. Flesh. The Jews at their return fell not so often into the sins of idolatry, &c. of which the prophets complained. But yet they were far from answering this character. Great irregularities prevailed under Nehemias, and in the days of the Machabees the priests publicly worshipped idols. 1 Esd. 9. and 2 Esd. 5. and 8 and 2 Mac. 4 and 5. Christ enables his servants to act with purity unto the end, by the influence of his all-powerful grace. C.

Ver. 27. Do them. Hence the efficacy of grace appears, (S. Aug. H.) and hereby some keep the commandments. W.—God assists our free-will. Theod. A.Lap. C.

Ver. 37. Find. Heb. “seek.” I will cause great multitudes to come to the solemn feast. This was seen still more after the conversion of the Gentiles. C.

EZECHIEL 37

Ver. 1. Spirit, by a divine impulse. He was not really removed. M. C.—Bones. “This passage is very famous.” S. Jer.—It insinuates the liberation of the captives and of the Gentiles, as well as the mystery of the resurrection. W.—If this were not to take place, it would not be adduced as a figure. Tert. S. Jer.

Ver. 5. Spirit. That is, life, soul, and breath. Ch.—At the resurrection, the same souls shall return to their respective bodies.

Ver. 7. Noise of the bones moving, which denotes the wars of Cyrus and the hurry of the nations to which he restored liberty.

Ver. 9. Spirit; wind or soul. The latter animates the body, as the grace (C.) of the Holy Spirit does the soul. H.

Ver. 11. Off, like branches. Notwithstanding these desponding thoughts, God will restore his people, (W.) by means of Cyrus. The grave is often put for punishment and grievous calamities. Osee 6:3.

Ver. 16. Associates. When Jeroboam caused the division, some of Israel adhered to Juda. The prophet glued the pieces of wood together, or engrafted them one into the other, to shew that all the people should be united, and the Jews and Gentiles concur to form one church. C. Rom. 11:17.—Before the latter event took place God united the two kingdoms, to teach us that when we labour for the conversion of heretics, as in England, Catholics must first agree among themselves, that so all may more easily become one fold under one shepherd. W.

Ver. 22. King. The Jews were long without kings, after the captivity; then they were not of the tribe of Juda, and all did not return. Christ fulfils the prediction.

Ver. 23. Idols. The Jews, even many of the priests, worshipped them, under Antiochus. C.—But the Church is never defiled. H.

Ver. 24. David; Christ, the one shepherd, (Jo. 10) over all nations. W.—This cannot refer to Zorobabel, who was never king, nor perhaps even governor; as Sasabasar, who seems to have been a Persian, was appointed by Cyrus. 1 Esd. 1:8.—Shepherd. David have been one. C.—This title is more modest than that of king. S. Jer.

Ver. 25. Ever. Let the Jews shew how this had been accomplished. We know that Christ preserves and rule his Church unto the end.

Ver. 26. Peace. Can this regard the synagogue? Not a century passed without some flagrant misconduct, or chastisement. But our Saviour is the mediator of peace. Phil. 4:7. C.

EZECHIEL 38

Ver. 2. Gog. This name, which signifies hidden, or covered, is taken in this place either for the persecutors of the Church of God in general, or some arch persecutor in particular; such as Antichrist shall be in the latter days. See Apoc. 20:8. And what is said of the punishment of God, is verified by the unhappy end of persecutors.—Magog. Scythia or Tartary, whence the Turks and other enemies of the Church of Christ originally sprung. Ch.—These are supposed to be the princes of some northern and barbarous country, (W.) peopled by the son of Japhet. S. Jer.—S. Aug. (de Civ. Dei. xx. 11.) observes, that as the Church is spread everywhere, so also are persecutors. But Christ will overcome them all. W.—This prophecy is very difficult. It seems literally to refer to Cambyses, who invaded Judea about seventy years after the temple had been destroyed, and perished by the hand of God, at Ecbatana, upon Mount Carmel. It is very usual with the prophets to give fictitious names; as the king of Tyre is called a cherub, and Jerusalem Ooliba. Cambyses ruled over Scythia, in Iberia; styled Gogarene, by Strabo. xi. C.—The proper Scythia withstood all the attempts of his successors, and defeated Darius. H.

Ver. 4. Jaws. Thus Cambyses treated the son of Psammenites. God has the most absolute dominion over all monarchs. v. 7.

Ver. 8. Visited, or rather “shall visit” Judea. Chal. Grot.—Cambyses invaded Egypt twelve years after the Jews had returned, and came upon them two years later, designing to plunder them, at the instigation of their malevolent neighbours. He had sustained great losses in Egypt, and was arrived at Carmel when news was brought that the false Smerdis had declared himself king. See Herod. iii. 61.

Ver. 12. Midst. Lit. “navel.” Heb. “Thabor,” intimating a mountain rising in a plain. Judg. 9:7. C.—Alluding to this intended blunder of the Jews lately returned, he speaks of Antichrist and of all heretics, who seek to pervert or suppress Catholics rescued from the power of the devil, by the sacraments of Christ. W.

Ver. 13. Tharsis. Sept. “Carthage, and all their villages.” The merchants or naval forces of Cambyses spurred him forward, (see Ps. 77:6) as well as the Arabs, Cuthites, &c. 1 Esd. 4:8. C.

Ver. 16. Latter. Cambyses had punished Egypt, his turn came, and all his designs were baffled.

Ver. 17. Prophets. See Is. 14. & 16:21 and 26:1. Jer. 30:3 and 23. Joel 2:30. 3:1. &c.

Ver. 19. Israel. The Jews shall be full of dismay, (v. 20) as the tyrant will vent some threats; (C.) or this commotion was in his own army. H.

Ver. 21. Sword. The Jews were not in a condition to make resistance. C.—Cambyses had his brother Smerdis slain. But another was set on the throne; whereupon, mounting his horse in a fury, he wounded himself with his sword in the thigh, which mortifying, caused his death after twenty days. Herod. iii. 21. &c.—The historian does not mention what became of his army; but it seems to have perished by discord, as was very common among such a collection of nations. See Jud. 7:22. Judith 15:1 and 1 K. 14:20 and 4 K. 2:21. C.—They were now without a head. H.—In the whole universe, God will at last destroy Antichrist and all his adherents. W.

Ver. 22. Pestilence. His wound might be thus described.—Blood. Thus was he punished for shedding that of innocent people. C.

EZECHIEL 39

Ver. 3. Arrows. Cambyes thought himself the most skilful at shooting. This was the usual weapon of the Persians (C.) and Parthians. H.

Ver. 4. Fall. In every part some shall resist Antichrist, who shall be overpowered. W.—Cambyes died at Carmel.

Ver. 6. Islands; in the naval forces, or in the places of his dominion where discord shall prevail. C.—Cambyes resolved to attack Ethiopia, the people near the temple of Ammon, and the Carthaginians: but his troops refused to go against the latter, and many were smothered in the sands, or starved to death in the other expeditions. Just. i. Lucan x. &c.

Ver. 9. Years; for a long time. v. 12. Little fuel is necessary there. Mariana (Hist. xi. 24. A. 1212.) mentions, that the arms of the Moors supplied Spain four years with fuel. C.

Ver. 10. Prey. The Jews relate that Zorobabel went out to oppose these nations, and took so much plunder as to be able to begin the temple. Theod.

Ver. 11. East of the Mediterranean and of Carmel, the high road from Assyria to Egypt, (Gen. 37:2. C.) where the Romans had a station at Legion. Eus.—Called, or shall be. Is. 7:14 and 60:14. C.—Valley. Sept. “Gai, the grave of Gog.” Prot. “the valley of Haman-Gog.” v. 16. H.—Antichrist will not be burnt iwth material fire. But Catholics shall resist him zealously, and gain the victory. W.

Ver. 12. Land, to prevent infection, and to comply with the law. Num. 19:16.

Ver. 13. Day. It does not occur in the calendar. Yet Comestor and the Carthusian mentions Cambysa, the day when Bethulia was delivered. Jud. 16:31. The history of Judith may perhaps relate to the defeat of this prince. The embellishments will not injure the truth. The Jews immediately after his death recommence the building of the temple, (1 Esd. 4. Agg. 1:14) which they are forced to discontinue, till Hystaspes confirmed the decree of Cyrus. This was the grand object of their desires, and therefore the day when Cambyses fell was ever memorable to them. C. Diss.—So will that be for Christians, when Antichrist shall be no more. M.

Ver. 15. Buriers. These might be foreign slaves, or Jews, who followed this employment. C.—They would be habitually (H.) unclean, and their company would be carefully avoided. Those who sought after the dead remains, contracted no uncleanness. C.

Ver. 16. Amona. Heb. hamon, (H.) means “a multitude.” C.—Sept. “a place for many graves:” πολυανδριον. H.—So many would be buried there, that the place might justly receive such a name; though we find no such city in the neighbourhood. C.—Rabbath, of Ammon, was sometimes so called. H.

Ver. 18. That are. Heb. “and of meries, (a species of oxen, in Syria. Bellon. ii. 50.) all of them from Basan,” beyond the Jordan, a most fertile country. Sept. “all calves fattened.”

Ver. 23. Sword. I could as easily have protected them against the Chaldeans as against this prince, if their sins had not been in the way. C.—These bring on the ruin of God’s people more than the power of the enemy. W.

Ver. 25. Israel. All who please may now return. Hystaspes was very favourable to them. He married Esther, raised Mardochai to great power, and sent Esdras into Judea with ample privileges. Many returned under him, Artazerxes, and Alexander.—Jealous. I will restore the people to favour, and will protect them (C.) like a husband. H.

Ver. 28. There, except such as refused to return. They have entire liberty. This and what follows was not fully accomplished till the propagation of the gospel. God wished all to embrace it; and though Israel has been partly blind, they will enter the Church after the Gentiles. Rom. 11:25. C.

Ver. 1. Month; April 30, A. 3430. Usher. C.—In explaining this last most obscure vision: I. The Jews say it was verified after the captivity. But thus the temple would be four miles round, and the city thirty-six, which never was the case. II. Hence more modern Jews assert it will be fulfilled by the Messias. III. Rejecting these errors, Lyrar, &c. suppose that the promise was conditional, and that the sins of the Jews prevented the city and temple from being so large; and that the mystical temple of the Church is also insinuated, into which both Jews and Gentiles shall enter. IV. Though this opinion be probable, it seems better to follow S. Jerom, S. Greg. &c. who cannot apply al to the Old Testament, nor think that such a huge temple and city were indeed promised, but explain some parts of the captives at their return, as a figure of those redeemed by Christ, and brought into his Church, which is adorned with all graces. Yet the greatest part must be understood of the Church triumphant. W.—S. Jerom confesses his ignorance of this subject; and those who have come after him, though they imitate not his modesty, add little to dissipate the mist with which this vision is surrounded. Some have adhered too close to Josephus, while Villalpand has here discovered all the magnificence of Greek and Roman architecture, and has represented the temple six times as large as it really was. It seems that the prophet has described the same temple of Solomon which he had seen, that the dimensions might be preserved, and the hopes of the people kept up; (C.) and that they might comprehend what a loss they actually sustained on account of their sins, (H.) and might strive to come up to this pattern (D.) as “near as they should be able,” the wealth of the people being much less than Solomon’s. Grot.—These arguments do not, however, shew that the buildings were to resemble each other. They vary in many particulars; and the prophet would specify what was to be really executed. He says nothing of the ornamental part, and little of the height, which are the most expensive. Houbigant. Pref.—If some things appear to be too grand for the temple of Solomon, and of Zorobabel, we must reflect that the prophet passes from the figure to the Church of Christ, which is not unusual. M.—Alcasar and Bossuet explain it wholly of the Church, so that the letter requires few notes. D.

Ver. 2. Mountain; Moria, in spirit. On the eastern side, the road to the city was level. Walls were added after the captivity, on the other sides. Jos. Bel. vi. 6.—City, the temple was so large.—South, to one coming from the north, though the temple lay on that side of the town. Ps. 47:2. C.—Sept. read mongod, “over-against,” instead of mongob, “south,” which has perplexed many. Houbig.—Ezekiel was placed on Sion, which was not very high, but here it denotes the Church. Jerusalem was in ruins. W.

Ver. 3. Brass: shining. H.—This angel waited for the prophet at the northern gate, but introduced him by that looking towards the east. v. 16.—Line. It seems never to have been used. C.

Ver. 5. Breadth. Heb. Chal. Sept. “of six cubits, in a cubit and a palm;” imitating that the sacred cubit contained six palms, while the common one had only five, (C. 43:13. W.) being half a yard; (Arbuthnot) or the Hebrew cubit was a hand’s breadth larger than the Babylonian, or about 21½ inches, (C.) which may be styled (M.) the sacred cubit. Arb. H.—Reed. This outer wall (C. M.) was to prevent any from falling down the precipice. It was about four yards nine inches in height and thickness, being so solid in order that the ground might not give way. Josephus describes prodigious walls, (H.) reaching to the bottom of the mountain, three hundred cubits on the south and west; but then the temple was much enlarged. C.

Ver. 6. And. In this verse occurs the first of thirty-four words where the j is allowed by the keri to be omitted in this one chapter, always when it is the sign of the plural number before a suffixed v, and of course by voluntary assimilation. But Camb. MS. 1. has the j regularly in the thirty-two of these words. Kennicott.—Steps. The ground was not quite level, which caused the buildings to rise one above another more elegantly. There were four great gates.

Ver. 7. Chamber, for the porters, (C.) three on each side of the porch. v. 10. H.

Ver. 11. Thirteen, or twenty-six feet high.

Ver. 14. Cubits high, or else the elevation is nowhere specified. C.

Ver. 16. Slanting, or “lattice.” Sept. “dark.” See 3 K. 7:4. H.—They were larger within, to afford light, as in Solomon’s temple, and in castles. Interpreters disagree in their sentiments: but all allow that God here insinuated that he would reward people in the Old Testament with temporal, and those in the New with spiritual blessings; first with grace in this life, and with glory in the next. W.—Yet we must not suppose that the saints of old were deprived of eternal goods. H.—About. The other gates had the like ornaments. C.

Ver. 17. There were chambers. Gazophylacia, so called, because the priests and Levites kept in them the stores and vessels that belonged to the temple. Ch.—They went all round the courts. The women were in the second story. Villalpand and Capel, who are deemed the most accurate, suppose that there were no chambers below, but an open gallery. There seem, however, to have been chambers also. C. 8:7. C.

Ver. 18. Lower. So that there was a step up to the threshold. H.—Marble was used in all places exposed to the weather. Jos. Bel. vi. 14.

Ver. 26. Seven. There were eight to the inner court, (v. 31) shewing that more perfection is now required, and a greater reward given. S. Greg. W.

Ver. 30. Five cubits. The parallel passages would intimate “fifty.” C. Villalp.—But the texts all read five, and Maldonat understands the four vacant spaces between the chambers. v. 7. M.

Ver. 38. Gates. Heb. is very obscure. The holocausts were slain on the north side of the altar. Lev. 1:11.

Ver. 43. Borders, to prevent any thing falling. Chal. &c. have “hooks.”

Ver. 44. North. The singers occupied two wings.

Ver. 45. Watch over the sacred ornaments, perfumes, lamps of the sanctuary, &c. Num. 3:28.

Ver. 46. Altar. Not on actual service, (C. 41:13) but to prepare the victims.

Ver. 48. That side. Sept. add, “and the opening (εὐρος, width) of the gate was 14 cubits, and the breadth (projections, ἐπωμίδες) of the,” &c. (H.) or the wall on each side of the door was three cubits, so that the porch was 20 cubits broad. C.

Ver. 49. Eleven. 3 K. 6 says ten. The exact breadth was ten and a half, (Vill. T.) or what the pavement covered is there specified according to some. Sept. Rom. has “twelve.” But the edition of Basil reads more correctly, ten. C.—Yet both ten and eleven may be right, if this temple be different. H.—Eight. Heb. seems corrupt, a being substituted for á. “They mounted by ten steps,” as the Sept. read. Aquila has eleven; Sym. eight.—Pillars of brass. 3 K. 7:15. C.—As they are not measured, they were like Solomon’s. W.

EZECHIEL 41

Ver. 1. The temple. This plan of a temple, which was here shewn to the prophet in a vision, partly had relation to the material temple, which was to be rebuilt: and partly, in a mystical sense, to the spiritual temple of God, the Church of Christ. Ch.—The description seems grander than Solomon's; and yet Zorobabel's temple was meaner than his. Hence this prophecy, and those of Aggeus and Zacharias, cannot be understood of it, but of the Church. S. Jer. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xviii. 45. W.

Ver. 3. Front, or door-posts. The temple was 20 cubits broad.

Ver. 5. Four. Herein it differed from Solomon's chambers, which were in breadth five, six, and seven cubits, in the three stories, respectively. C.

Ver. 6. One by another, or one over another: literally, side to side, or side upon side. Ch.—The word side is here equivocal, like Heb. tselá, sometimes denoting the boards, and at other times the apartments round the temple, except on the west, over against the sanctuary, which seems to be the case here. It is true, we shall not easily find sixty-six chambers. But the Heb. &c. have only thirty-three. C.—Villalpand rightly translated anterides, (v. 5) but here he substitutes trabes, “beams or thick planks,” to make it agree with 3 K. 7:6 as if the same temple were meant. He also adopts the Vulg. bis.—Twice. Heb. pehamim. Yet he afterwards places in his commentary, pedes, “thirty-three feet, that is twenty-two cubits,” though feet are never used at all as a measure in Scripture. Houbigant.

Ver. 7. Broader, as the wall was not so thick. H.—Midst. The two staircases were round in the hollow of the wall, (M.) at the eastern end of the chambers. Jos. See 3 K. C.

Ver. 9. House. Because these side-chambers were in the very walls of the temple all around: or it may also be rendered, (more agreeably to the Heb.) so as to signify, that the thickness of the wall for the side-chambers within was the same as that of the wall without; that is, equally five cubits. Ch.—Prot. “and that which was left, was the place of the side-chambers that were within.” H.—To manifest a greater respect for God, the apartments of the priests were twenty-five cubits from the temple, (v. 10) and divided by a wall, which Josephus describes as three cubits high. Ant. viii. 2. This wall was at the distance of five cubits from the temple. C.

Ver. 11. Prayer, or “separated;” munnach, (H.) the inner house, v. 9.

Ver. 13. Separate, different from that v. 9. (C. Heb. gizra. H.) between the temple and the priests' apartments, which it may also designate, (

C.) unless it (H.) mean the temple itself, which was divided from the rest, (M.) and set aside for prayer, &c. H.

Ver. 15. Galleries; Ethecas, or as the more correct MSS. of S. Jerom read, Ecthetas, seems to be formed from (C.) Heb. athikim, (H.) which S. Jerom explains a balcony, portico, or gallery.

Ver. 16. About. Thus he intimates the inner temple, which was covered with boards.—Windows. The temple was hidden so far by the chambers; or rather he measured (C.) “the ground and up to the windows, which were” shut up with lattices, affording light over the doors (H.) and apartments, fifteen cubits from the ground.

Ver. 18. Two. Before he describes them with four faces. But they varied, (Ex. 25:18) or the other two might be against the wall. C.—The cherub signified “knowledge,” and the palm-tree victory, to shew that man must be instructed with divine knowledge, and so fight for the victory. The face of man implied that Christ would suffer, and that of a lion announced that he would overcome all his enemies. W.

Ver. 21. The threshold was four-square. That is, the gate of the temple was four-square, and so placed as to answer the gate of the sanctuary within. Ch.—It was not an arch, though not a perfect square. 3 K. 6:34.

Ver. 22. Table, or altar of incense, larger than that of Moses. Ex. 30:1.

Ver. 23. Sanctuary. One folding door opened into it, the other into the temple.

Ver. 24. Other. It was not perhaps necessary to open the large door.

Ver. 26. Sides, (humerulis) or pilasters. Heb. “on the shoulder of the porch, and on the sides of the house, and beams.” C.

EZECHIEL 42

Ver. 1. And. S. Jerom finding the Sept. and others varying in the explanations, gives his own; yet adopts the saying of Socrates, “I know that I am ignorant:” for this also is a part of science. W.—Outward, with respect to the temple. It is styled inner court, with reference to that of the people.—Separate. C. 41:9.

Ver. 3. Triple, one over another, (v. 6) or on a level with the priests’ court.

Ver. 4. One cubit, projecting out perhaps for seats, or for the pilasters.

Ver. 5. Above. The higher stories are not so lofty.

Ver. 6. Fifty cubits. We only allow thirty, as this is not in Heb. &c. The text, v. 10 and 12, seems incorrect. C.

Ver. 13. Holies. Heb. “who are very holy,” and (H.) on duty. See Lev. 6:25.

Ver. 14. People. C. 44:17. Ex. 28:42. Christian priests use their vestments only when they are officiating. Durand and Durant Rit. ii. 9. C.

Ver. 16. Five. Heb. emoth should be meoth, “three hundred, as it is printed (yet not in the Prot. version. H.) thrice just after, and as it is written here in MS. 4. Camb. 1. 2.” Kennicott.—Reeds. Sept. “cubits,” as Heb. S. Jer. &c. insinuate. The mountain was only five hundred paces square, even when it was enlarged in the time of Josephus. Bel. vi. 14. Gr.—We must therefore read cubits. C.—If we retain reeds, (H.) the wall will be twelve thousand cubits, (M.) which seems improbable. Tournemine. See C. 45. H.

Ver. 20. Cubits. This confirms the former correction. v. 16. H.—Heb. has only, “of five hundred.” Maldonat and A. Lapidé would understand reeds, to agree with what goes before. M.—Separation. Josephus mentions a wall three cubits high, on the pillars of which was written in Greek and Latin, that such as entered the temple must be pure, (C.) and no stranger. H.—Into this court all might come. Philo. C.

EZECHIEL 43

Ver. 2. Majesty. The world is enlightened by the preaching of the gospel; and the Church triumphant shall shine in perfection, when that which is sown in corruption shall put on incorruption. 1 Cor. 15. S. Jer.—The blessed Virgin conceiving Jesus Christ may be insinuated. S. Tho. p. 3. q. 27. a. 3. W.

Ver. 3. He came. Heb. “I came to destroy (Sept. to anoint) the city,” marking such as should be spared. C. 9. The glorious chariot entered by the eastern gate, and the prophet followed to the court of the priests., v. 5. 13. C.—The Jews says the second temple was deprived of the Shekinah, or glory of the Lord. Yet it seems here to enter; and Christ himself adorned this second house, more than the first, by his adorable presence. Agg. 2:8. H.

Ver. 7. Said. The Lord spoke, (Chal. Theod.) or the angel, (S. Jer.) in human shape. H.—He addresses the prophet, v. 12 to C. 44:5 though what follows immediately seems to belong to the Lord, (C.) in whose name he speaks.—Name. God hath abandoned the synagogue, but will remain with his Church unto the end. Mat. 23:38 and 28:20. Yet the perfect Church, without spot, is the triumphant; (Eph. 5:27. W.) though the Catholic Church, on earth, is every holy and “the communion of saints.” H.—Carcasses. Idols, according to some; or rather by the kings being buried on Sion. This is nowhere else reprehended; neither is their building too near the temple, which the prophet here condemns. v. 8. C.—It seems, however, that if these things had been blameable, such a number of pious and wise kings would not have acted thus, nor the prophets have neglected to admonish them of their duty. The carcasses and houses here specified may have been vestiges of idolatry; or, in future, the tombs and palaces were to be at a more respectful distance. H.

Ver. 8. Wall. The kings of Juda had a door communicating with the temple, by which they entered on the west. It was guarded by Levites. 1 Par. 26:16. Ezechiel places no door on that side. Yet in Herod’s temple we find one leading to the adjacent palace, and three others into the town. Jos. Ant. xv. 14.

Ver. 9. Carcasses. Lit. “ruins.” H.—The remains of the dead were probably not disturbed; but no more, that we know of, were placed on Sion. C.—Kings may signify idols, Moloc, &c. which they had worshipped, and which some had even placed in the holy place, to the nation’s ruin. H.

Ver. 10. Measure, that they may be convinced of their ingratitude, (M.) which has deprived them of so noble a structure, and put them under the necessity of beginning so great a work again. It required all the exertions of the prophets to make them go forward with it. Agg. 1. H.

Ver. 11. In the whole fabric, (M.) as thou hast described it, (H.) or received from the angel, with all the ceremonies to be observed.

Ver. 12. Border. Nothing but the temple shall be on his mountain. It shall be wholly consecrated to the Lord. This was ill observed. The Asmonean princes erected the famous tower Antonia, at the north side. Jos. See v. 8. The Jews assert that it was unlawful to spit on this ground, &c. but no such thing is specified in Josephus or in Scripture, only we find that none were to go out by the same door at which they had entered, (C. 46:9. C.) except the king.

Ver. 13. By. Heb. “by cubits.” This cubit is a common cubit, &c. The Babylonian, (H.) or sacred one, was a palm longer. W. C. 40:5.—Breadth. It was the same as the depth, being designed to convey the blood by a conduit to the torrent Cedron.—Trench, or bottom aforesaid. Sept. “the height.” H.—Chal. “disposition of the altar,” which seems best.

Ver. 14. Cubit. they were each a cubit broad, but this greater means higher up. Some assert that the priests stood on this base to avoid treading on the altar, when they place the wood or victims. But it would be too low; and steps were made for that purpose. The altar was ten, or rather twelve cubits high, and as many broad. Solomon’s was ten high and twenty broad. Herod’s was a square of forty cubits, raised fifteen from the ground. C.

Ver. 15. The ariel. That is, the altar itself, or rather the highest part of it, upon which the burnt-offerings were laid. In the Heb. it is harel, that is, the mountain of God; but in the following verse haariel, that is, the lion of God; a figure, from its consuming, and as it were devouring the sacrifices as a lion devours its prey. Ch.—Fire descending sometimes from heaven. S. Jer. W.—It also appeared like a little mountain in the court. See Is. 29:1. The altar was probably made of brass, like Solomon’s. Josephus and Philo say that rough stones were used after the captivity: but it seems little attention was paid to the dimensions of the temple, &c. given by Ezechiel. C.—Yet the prophets were present to see the laws of God executed, and never complain of their infringement in these particulars, which were attended with no great difficulty. C. 40:1. H.—It is certain the Jews never thought themselves bound to make their altars of a determinate size.

Ver. 17. Crown, which was usually placed round altars and tables, that nothing might fall down.—Bottom of the altar, or base, mentioned v. 13.—Steps, boarded one each side. Ex. 20:26.

Ver. 19. Levites. Heb. “of the race of Levi, of the family of Sadoc.” He had obtained the dignity under Saul, (C.) and after the deposition of Abiathar, under Solomon, (3 K. 2:26. H.) his posterity always preserved it. C. Diss.—Calf. Thou shalt give it, or make known these rites to the priests. H.—People are often said to do what they only command, as v. 20, &c.

Ver. 21. Sanctuary, out of the precincts of the temple, but on the mountain. Lev. 4:3 and 6:11.

Ver. 22. He-goat. Sept. add, “of the goats,” (hircum caprarum. H.) denoting a young kid, (M.) or one selected (H.) rather from the flock. C.

Ver. 26. Consecrate it. Lit. “fill his hand;” that is, dedicate and apply it to holy service, (Ch.) as the Heb. &c. speak of the altar. Sept. “they shall fill their hands,” seems more natural, (Ex. 28:41) and is adopted by Pagn. Vat. &c. C.

EZECHIEL 44

Ver. 2–3. Opened. No man perfectly understands the Scriptures but the Son of God. Mat. 11:27. S. Jer.—This also insinuates, that Mary ever remained a pure virgin. S. Aug. &c. W.—Shut, even for the prince. Some (H.) kings of Juda claimed the privilege of entering by it at any time, and passed through a part of the court assigned to the priests. 2 Par. 6:12 and 4 K. 16:18. This shall be no longer tolerated. The gate might be opened in the week days if the prince wished to offer sacrifice, but not else, except on the sabbaths. C. 46:1, 12.—Lord, in peace offerings and religious feasts.—Porch. Each had two doors. C. 46:2. C.

Ver. 4. Face. This astonishment and attention (v. 5) intimate the mysteries of the Church, prefigured by the Jewish rites. W.

Ver. 5. Ways, or “the going in,” and all that concerns the temple and sacrifices.

Ver. 7. Flesh. People of this description were not to enter the temple, which is here called the sanctuary, even though they adored God. In some cases pagans were admitted into any part, except the most holy. Epiphanes (C.) and Pompey forced their passage thither, to the great sorrow of the Jews. Jos. Bel. i. 5. See Eccli. 52. Acts 21:28.—During the plundering of the city, the Chaldees did the like; (Lam. 1:10. H.) and while idols were set up, all rules were neglected.—Doings. You observe the exterior, and not the spirit of religion.

Ver. 8. Yourselves, out of ambition, contrary to the regulations of David. C.

Ver. 10. Levites, or priests, (H.) who were seduced by Jeroboam, or offered victims on the high places. 4 K. 23:9. Such lost their privileges and were condemned to serve in the meanest offices. It seems the race of Ithamar was alone guilty, and the threat against his house was now put in execution. 1 K. 2:27. and 3:14. Lev. 21:17 and 2 Esd. 7:64. C.

Ver. 11. Slay. Levites might do this, but the priests poured the blood round the altar. v. 15. They could not well slay all the victims.

Ver. 15. And Levites, of the higher order. H.—No simple Levites were of this family. It enjoyed the high priesthood from the time of Solomon.

Ver. 17. Court; that is to do duty.—Linen. Wool might have been taken from a dead sheep, which would render the person unclean. C.

Ver. 18. Sweat, or so as to make them perspire. Sept. “girded violently.” H.—They must have liberty to move, (S. Jer.) and have the girdle about their breast. Braun.

Ver. 19. Sanctify, by exposing them to the danger of touching the sacred vestments, which none were to touch but they that were sanctified. Ch.—Sanctify here means to defile. Ex. 30:29. C. and 29:37. Holy things must be done in holy places. W.—Divine religion has different clothing for the ministry, from what is used in common life. S. Jer. Ex. 28:40. C.

Ver. 20. Shave, like the priests of Isis. Juv. vi.

Ver. 21. Wine. Lev. 10:9. The priests on duty abstain from wine. Jos. Bel. vi. 15.

Ver. 22. Widow. Moses laid this restraint upon the high priest. Lev. 21:13. C.

Ver. 25. Unclean, attending the funeral, which inferior priests alone might do. Lev. 21:10. M.

Ver. 27. Day, after the seven first, (C.) though this would be a new regulation. M.

Ver. 28. No. This is omitted in Heb. Sept. &c. God was their portion. C.—They had no land but what lay near their cities. H.

EZECHIEL 45

Ver. 1. By lot. MS. 2 reads bogurl; (printed benachala) so the Vulg. sortito. Kennicott.—Heb. “when you shall make the land fall,” which usually implies by lot: yet the partition was not made thus, (C. 48:1) nor at all, (C.) otherwise the prophet might mention how the lots would have fallen to Dan, in the north, &c. H.—The Jews either could not comply, or did not take this to be a command. If they had returned all together, they might probably have put it in execution. But many of them preferred staying where they had gotten a settlement, and the rest only returned in small parties, some not before the reign of Alexander. Those who arrived first, occupied as much as possible their ancient limits. 1 Esd. 3:1. and 2 Esd. 8. and 11. C.—Thousand: reeds, or cubits. Ch.—Many prefer the latter, which is specified v. 2. (H.) as it agrees with the dimensions of the temple. C. 42:16. If reeds or toises were meant, the city would be disproportionate with the rest of the divisions: 50,000 would make 25 leagues, of 2,500 paces each; and if each tribe had as much, the country must have comprised 325 leagues, whereas from Emath to Cadesbarne (C. 47:17) there at not above 150. C.—To form an idea of the proposed partition, we must suppose the country reached from a little north of Emesa, on the Orontes, to Cadesbarne south, and from the Mediterranean to Damascus, or a little farther east, and beyond the sources of Jazer. 1. Dan, 2. Aser, 3. Nephthali, 4. Manasses, 5. Ephraim, 6. Ruben, 7. Juda, had about equal portions with that designed for 8. the temple, the Levites, and prince, whose southern limits reached almost to Accaron and the Dead Sea. 9. Benjamin, 10. Simeon, 11. Issachar, 12. Zabulon, and 13. Gad, had each about half the quantity of the others, though the tribes occupied the whole extent from east to west, their lots being marked out by parallel lines. Between Juda and Benjamin, a square of 500 cubits was assigned for the temple; another square of 4,500, or 18,000 in circuit, lay round the former for the city of the Levites: round this were suburbs 250 cubits broad, walled about, and having three gates on each side. Next them dwelt their lay servants, in a space 5,000 cubits broad, and 25,000 long, from east to west. A plot of ground on the north and south, sufficient to complete this square was to support them with provisions. On the east side of the Jordan, and on the west of this square for the priests and their servants, two portions almost of equal dimensions with it, were appropriated to the prince. His lot was 25,000 cubits long, and 12,500 broad. C. 48:21. See Calmet's plan. H.—About. It couldn ot be alienated to private men, or for any other purpose. W.

Ver. 2. Suburbs. Heb. also, “vacant spaces.”

Ver. 3. Measure, from the centre of the temple; so that the dimensions given must be doubled, (C. 48:10) as also v. 5.

Ver. 4. Place. There the priests shall dwell.

Ver. 5. Chambers for the Levites on duty. Sept. read, “towns.” But only one seems to be specified, 18,000 cubits in circumference.

Ver. 6. According. Heb. “along or (C.) over-against the oblation of the holy portion.” Prot.—Israel, destined to serve the priests. H.

Ver. 7. Border. Two equal lots, one on the east and the other on the west, were assigned the prince, each 20,000 cubits broad, and 12,500 long. C. 48:21. C.—He dwelt near the priests, for their protection; as the people were on both sides of him, that he might sustain no injury. W.

Ver. 8. Rob. Instead of their right, (1 K. 8:11) the source of continual vexations, a certain revenue is specified, v. 13.

Ver. 9. Confines: encroach not. C.—Heb. and Sept. “take away your oppressions;” (H.) Chal. “scandals.” C.

Ver. 11. The ephi and the bate. These measures were of equal capacity; but the bate served for liquids, and the ephi for dry things. Ch. v. 13, 14. W.—Ezechiel specifies the measures, that the people might not use those of Babylon, after their return.

Ver. 12. Sicles. It would be shorter to say, “sixty sicles make a mna.”

Ver. 13. Take, for the prince’s revenue. He had the sixtieth part of corn and of oil; or rather (C.) he had an exact tithe of the latter. v. 14. Chal. M.

Ver. 15. One ram. He shall receive the tithe of sheep, &c. and take one out of two hundred, on condition that he furnish victims. v. 17. C.—The obligation was mutual. S. Jerom explains it of the high priest and people. W.

Ver. 17. Holocaust. This was given before perhaps gratis. 2 Par. 31:3. Solomon and Ezechias shewed great magnificence. After the captivity the people laid on the third of a sicle per head, as this order was not observed. 2 Esd. 10:32.

Ver. 18. Take, or order the priests to do this annually, to prepare for the Passover. v. 21. Moses mentions nothing of this, and it does not appear to have been put in execution. C.—Yet it might be the first year after the dedication of the temple. The prophet does not say it was to be done every year. H.

Ver. 20. Seventh, or so many days before the solemn feast. Sept. “on the first of the seventh month,” the feast of trumpets. Num. 29:1. C.

Ver. 24. Sacrifice. Heb. mincha, flour. Prot. “meat offering.” H.

Ver. 25. Day: the feast of tabernacles, to be observed like the Pasch. Num. 29:12. C.

EZECHIEL 46

Ver. 2. Prince. After the captivity, although the race of David continued in Salathiel, Zorobabel, &c. yet they had not the state of kings. Hence Christians, R. David and other Jews, understand this of the Messiah and the rites of his Church, with a literal allusion to the old law. W.—Without, not proceeding into the court of the priests. C. 44:2.

Ver. 4. Six. Moses only prescribed two lambs for every day. Num. 28:9.

Ver. 5. Sacrifice. See C. 45:24. Flour and oil accompanied the victim. When lambs were presented, this was left to the prince’s devotion (v. 7 and 11. C.) only. If he gave three or four ephies of flour, he must give as many hins of oil. H.

Ver. 6. Calf. Moses orders two, and seven lambs. Num. 28:11. C.—The rams. Heb. “a ram. They shall,” &c. H.

Ver. 9. It, perhaps to avoid confusion, (M.) and turning the back on the temple, (C.) or to exercise their obedience. As many might enter by one gate as by another, and thus the concourse would not be diminished. H.

Ver. 10. Out. The prince went in and out by the same gate, (v. 8) and might order that on the east to be opened when he had to offer a voluntary sacrifice. In other respects he was like a simple Israelite, and was to attend the temple and use the same gates as the rest. Before, the kings had a gate on the west leading to their palace. But this was no longer to subsist, and the palace was to be far removed. C. 48:21.

Ver. 11. Solemnities. Heb. “on feasts and on days of meeting.” C.—Sacrifice: mincha. v. 7, and C. 45:24. H.

Ver. 13. Morning. That for the evening had the same ceremonies. Lev. 6:9.

Ver. 14. By. Cata seems to be taken C. from the Gr. κατα, “according to,” or by. v. 15. H.

Ver. 17. Sons. If any portion of his land was made over to them, it still remained in the family; but if any other had a present of it, the land must revert to the royal family, agreeably to the law. Lev. 25:10. C.—This insinuates that works done by the true children of God, in the state of grace, merit an eternal reward, while moral good works performed in the state of sin, can only have a temporal one. W.

Ver. 19. Gate, on the north. C. 44:4.—West. At this corner was the kitchen for victims, which could only be eaten in the inner court. If they had been brought into that without, the people would have become unclean; as it is equally wrong to touch holy or impure things when they are forbidden. C. 44:19. There were four other kitchens for the people who might choose to eat their peace-offerings. v. 24. C.

Ver. 22. Little. Heb. “courts joined.” Prot. or marg. “made with chimneys,” (H.) or “smoked,” as no chimneys were used. Sept. “little courts,” as they have read differently. C.—Vulg. unites both meanings. H.

Ver. 24. Kitchens. Sept. “porticoes,” or rather (C.) “boiling places;” Prot. and v. 24. H.

EZECHIEL 47

Ver. 1. Waters. These waters are not to be understood literally, (for there were none such that flowed from the temple) but mystically of the baptism of Christ, and of his doctrine and his grace; the trees that grow on the banks are Christian virtues; the fishes are Christians, that spiritually live in and by these holy waters; the fishermen are the apostles, and apostolic preachers; the fenny places, where there is no health, are such as by being out of the Church are separated from these waters of life. Ch.—It is not probable that real water or fishes were found, v. 9. But this must be explained of the Church and of baptism, in a higher and more proper sense. W.—Joel, (3:18) before the captivity, and Zacharias, (14:8) after that event, speak of fountains as still to appear, and of course not in either temple, though Pilate made aqueducts for the purpose, (Jos. Bel. ii. 13.) which Tacitus, (An. v.) Maundrel, (p. 148.) and others mention. But the prophets allude not to them, but to Christ, the fountain of water springing up unto life eternal. John 4:14 and 7:38. C.—Villalpand understands it of waters brought into the temple to wash the victims; but it seems to refer more to the grace and doctrine of Christ. M.

Ver. 2. East. This gate was shut, and therefore he went out at the north gate. C.

Ver. 8. The. Heb. “the east country,” (Prot. H.) or “the frontiers (Gelilah) eastward,” by which some improperly suppose that one rivulet went to the sea of Galilee.—And shall. Heb. “the sea of the going out,” where the Jordan River empties itself into the Dead Sea; or, the second rivulet ran into the Mediterranean. Zac. 14:8. But this passage relates to the Dead Sea alone, (v. 18) and Gelilah is a place near it, where the Israelites erected an altar of union. Jos. 22:10. C.—Healed. No fish can live in the sea of Sodom. Solin xxxviii.—Yet, let the place be ever so noxious, this water shall cure it; (see 4 K. 2:19. C.) which must be taken in a mystical sense. H.

Ver. 10. Engallim, or “the fountain of Gallim,” in the tribe of Benjamin. 1 Sam. 25:44.

Ver. 11. Salt, or bitumen pits. Schismatics and bad Christians, who do not live by the spirit of Christ, are meant.

Ver. 12. First-fruits, or most excellent. H.—S. John saw such W. a tree of life. Apoc. 22. H.—The doctrine of the gospel, and the study of the sacred books, have the most salutary effects; while the very leaves, or the example of the saints, heal the soul. No more shall the deceitful fruits near Sodom be seen (C.) beautiful, but full of nothing but ashes. Tacit. An. v.—Where Christ instructs, a torrent of grace and glory is presently formed. Like the mustard seed growing into a large tree, in which the birds rest, its origin in mean; yet its progress is grand and astonishing.

Ver. 13. Double portion. Lit. “cord.” H.—His two sons would each have a share, as Levi was better provided for. W.—He had no portion of the land assigned to him by Josue, but here one part is appointed (C.) for the sacred ministers and the prince. C. 45:1.

Ver. 14. Brother. The seven tribes to the north have each an equal share, as the five who lay to the south of the Levites had with respect to each other, though their portion must have been only about half of what the former possessed, according to the map. C. 45:1. H.—Under Josue, the numbers of each tribe were considered. The present mysterious equality shews, perhaps, that there is no distinction of Jew or Gentile in the Church, and that Christ would come to redeem all. C.—Lifted. People taking an oath acted in this manner. M.

Ver. 15. Sedada. These places are not well known. They seem to be near the highest mountain specified, (Num. 34:7) west of Emesa.

Ver. 16. Berotha, conquered by David. 2 K. 8:8.

Ver. 17. Emath was about the middle of the northern limits, between the Mediterranean and the Euphrates.

Ver. 18. Auran. Hence a line must be drawn through Damascus over Mount Galaad to the eastern or Dead Sea, to form the eastern borders. C.—The Jordan flowing from Genesareth to Sodom marked out this side, (M.) or rather was in this division; though the land as far as Galaad was to belong to Israel, as it had been before the captivity. Prot. “by Jordan from the border unto,” &c. H.

Ver. 19. Thamar. Engaddi is sometimes understood: but it lay near Jericho, as this (C.) Thamar was to the south of the Dead Sea. Ptolemy.—Torrent, Besor. H.

Ver. 20. Emath, not that it was on the sea: but a line was to be drawn over against this city, eastward from the Mediterranean. Sept. “to opposite the entrance of Emath, as far as its entrance.” But the territory extended farther. Num. 34.

Ver. 22. Strangers. This was never done by the Jews. It signifies that Christ would give an inheritance, in the true land of promise, (C.) to all nations which should practice his religion. Rom. 10:12. H.

EZECHIEL 48

Ver. 1. Dan. This division is very different from that of Josue, and was never literally executed, being rather of a mystical nature. The limits are not marked out, as each lot was equal. C. See C. 45:1 and 47:14. H.—By the twelve tribes all the glorified saints are meant. No cities of refuge occur, because in heaven all are perfect, all secure. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 8. Apart, for the Levitical tribe and the prince. C.—As the first-born and things which spring first, so also the land consecrated to the Lord is called first-fruits. W.—Thousand cubits (C. 45:1 or 12,500 paces, (H.) allowing two cubits for each. This would not reach to the Jordan River. But thrice that space must be reckoned, the king having two of them (C.) on each side of the temple, namely, towards the sea, and on the other side of the Jordan. H.

Ver. 11. Astray, &c. By this we see, that in the worst of times God always preserves some of the priests from going astray; and that the synagogue never fell so universally into idolatry, but that a remnant was still left free from this corruption. Ch.

Ver. 13. Ten. Their city was only 18,000 cubits in circumference. v. 16.

Ver. 15. Profane, where servants of the priests may reside. C.—On the north and south, (H.) 1000 cubits broad and 25,000 long were left for fields, gardens, &c. C.

Ver. 16. Five. Heb. has, “five five hundred:” but one five is properly omitted in several MSS. and in all the ancient versions. Kennicott.—Four thousand five hundred cubits was the length and breadth of the town and temple, which were 18,000 cubits round, (C.) or so many reeds, which would make 36 miles of 1000 paces each. As the earthly Jerusalem was certainly never so large, the modern rabbins assert that the Messias will build it to that extent; but Catholic doctors understand it mystically of the Church. Thus S. John saw the New Jerusalem or Church triumphant. Apoc. 21 and 22 W.

Ver. 17. Suburbs, separating the Levites from laics, different from what is mentioned v. 15.

Ver. 18. As the, &c. They shall not be alienated, as some might infer from its being said to be profane, which term is used because it was the habitation of laymen.

Ver. 19. Israel. People from all parts might serve the Levites. This tribe was not to engage in labourious or sordid employments, being attached to the service of the Lord, and bound to instruct others. But this was more perfectly fulfilled in the Christian Church, where the clergy enjoy great immunities, and are forbidden to exercise any trade or employment which may take them off from their more important spiritual concerns, or render their ministry contemptible. See Ex. 19:6.

Ver. 20. City, where the Levites and their servants, artisans, &c. dwelt. C.

Ver. 21. Thereof. The domains of the prince touched the limits of Juda on the north, and of Benjamin on the south, as the portion of Levi did also. The prince occupied the east and west square of this division. H.

Ver. 28. Inheritance. Heb. nachal, signifies also “torrent;” and S. Jerom seems to prefer this meaning, as he explains it of the torrent which goes by Rhinocorura, and is commonly supposed to be the southern boundary. C.

Ver. 30. Out, or gates. H.—There were three on each of the four sides.

C.

Ver. 35. The Lord is there. This name is here given to the city; that is, the Church of Christ; because the Lord is always with her till the end of the world. Mat. 28:20. Ch.—He always adorns the Church triumphant; (Apoc. 22) but has deserted the synagogue. Mat. 23:38. W.—Jerusalem certainly never bore this name, nor is it requisite that she should, if the prophecy had been literally understood. It would suffice, if she could justly claim such a prerogative. See Is. 7:14 and 2 K. 12:25. The Church of Christ possesses God for ever. C.

DANIEL

THE PROPHECY OF DANIEL

INTRODUCTION

DANIEL, whose name signifies “the judgment of God,” was of the royal blood of the kings of Juda, and one of those that were first of all carried away into captivity. He was so renowned for his wisdom and knowledge, that it became a proverb among the Babylonians, “as wise as Daniel;” (Ezech. 28:3) and his holiness was so great from his very childhood, that at the time when he was as yet but a young man, he is joined by the Spirit of God with Noe and Job, as three persons most eminent for virtue and sanctity. Ezech. 14. He is not commonly numbered by the Hebrews among the prophets, because he lived at court, and in high station in the world: but if we consider his many clear predictions of things to come, we shall find that no one better deserves the name and title of a prophet; which also has been given him by the Son of God himself. Mat. 24. Mark 13. Luke 21.) Ch.—The ancient Jews ranked him among the greatest prophets. Jos. Ant. x. 12. and 1 Mac. 2:59. Those who came after Christ began to make frivolous exceptions, because he so clearly pointed out the coming of our Saviour, (Theod.) that Porphyrius has no other method of evading this authority except by saying, that the book was written under Epiphanes after the event of many of the predictions. S. Jer.—But this assertion is contrary to all antiquity. Some parts have indeed been questioned, which are found only in Greek. They must, however, have sometime existed in Heb. or Chal. else how should we have the version of Theodotion, which the Church has substituted instead of the Sept. as that copy was become very incorrect, and is now lost? C.—Some hopes of its recovery are nevertheless entertained; and its publication, at Rome, has been announced. Kennicott.—In a title, it seems to make the Daniel visited by Habacuc, a priest; but it is abandoned. C.—This version of course proves that the original was formerly known; and the loss of it, at present, is no more decisive against the authenticity of these pieces, than that of S. Matthew's Heb. original, and of the Chaldee of Judith, &c. will evince that their works are spurious. H.—Extracts of (C.) Aquila and Sym. seen by S. Jerom, (W.) are also given in the Hexapla. Origen has answered the objections of Africanus, respecting the history of Susanna; and his arguments are equally cogent, when applied to the other contested works. The Jews and Christians were formerly both divided in their sentiments about these pieces. C. See S. Jer. in Jer. xxix. 12 and xxxii. 44.—But now as the Church (the pillar of truth) has spoken, all farther controversy ought to cease; (H.) and we should follow the precept, Remove not the landmarks which thy fathers have placed. Deut. 19:14. See N. Alex. t. ii. S. Jerom, who sometimes calls these pieces “fables,” explains himself, by observing, that he had delivered “not his own sentiments,” but those of the Jews: quid illi contra nos dicere soleant. C.—If he really denied their authority, his opinion ought not to outweigh that of so many other (H.) Fathers and Councils who receive them. They admit all the parts, as the Council of Trent expressly requires us to do. See S. Cyp. &c. also the observations prefixed to Tobias, (W.) and p. 597. H.—Paine remarks that Daniel and Ezechiel only pretended to have visions, and carried on an enigmatical correspondence relative to the recovery of their country. But this deserves no refutation. By allowing that their works are genuine, he cuts up the very root of his performance. Watson.—Daniel, according to Sir Is. Newton, resembles the Apoc. (as both bring us to the end of the Roman empire) and is “the most distinct in order of time, and easiest to be understood; and therefore, in those things that relate to the last times, he must be made a key to the rest.” Bp. Newton.—Yet there are many difficulties which require a knowledge of history; (S. Jer. W.) and we must reflect on the words of Christ, He that readeth, let him understand. Mat. 24:15. Daniel (H.) is supposed to have died at court, (C.) aged 110, having written many things of Christ. W.—His name is not prefixed to his book, yet as Prideaux observes, he sufficiently shews himself in the sequel to be the author. H.

DANIEL 1

Ver. 1. Third, at the conclusion, so that it is called the fourth. Jer. 25:1. A. Lap. M.—Nabuchodonosor began his expedition into Syria a year before he was king; (Salien, A. 3428. Jos. &c.) or he had the title before his father Nabopolassar's death. Usher, A. 3397.—The following year he took Joakim, with a design to convey him to Babylon; but left him on hard terms, and seized many of the sacred vessels, Daniel, &c. C.—Joakim reigned other eight years. 2 Par. 36:5. W.

Ver. 2. His god; Bel, or Belas, the principal idol of the Chaldeans. Ch.—The king pretended to derive his pedigree from Belus, (Abyd. Eus. præp. 1.) and greatly enriched his temple, (C.) which Xerxes demolished. Arrian.—God. Some part might be kept in the palace. C. 5:10 and 2 Par. 36:7.

Ver. 3. Eunuchs, or chief officers. The Jews assert that Daniel was made an eunuch. Is. 39:7. But he might be so styled on account of his dignity. C.—Princes. Lit. “tyrants.” H.—This name was afterwards only rendered odious by the misconduct of several kings. C.—Heb. parthemim, (H.) seems to be of Greek derivation, alluding to προτιμοι, or προτοι, “the first or most honoured.” Drus.—We find here other Greek words. C.

Ver. 4. Blemish. Deformed people were excluded the throne, or the king's presence. Procop. 1.—Science; well educated, or apt to learn. They were first to be taught the Chaldee letters, which then differed from the Hebrew. C.

Ver. 5. Meat: more exquisite. De Dieu.—All was first served on the king's table. Athen. vi. 14.

Ver. 6. Juda. It is thought all four were of royal blood. C.—Others were also kept at court. M.

Ver. 7. Baltassar, or as Chaldees (C. or Masorets. H.) pronounce, Beltesasar, “the treasurer of Baal.” The names were changed to testify their subjection, (C.) and that they might embrace the manners of the Chaldees. M.—The new names alluded to the sun. C.

Ver. 8. Daniel, as head and nearer the throne, gave good example to the rest. W.—Defiled, either by eating meat forbidden by the law, or which had before been offered to idols. Ch.—It was customary among the pagans to make an offering of some parts to their gods, or throw it into the fire. Theod. C.—These reasons determined the pious youths, (

H.) who desired also to keep free from gluttony and other vices. Theod. W.

Ver. 11. Malassar, another inferior officer. It means also one appointed over the mouth or provisions, (C.) and might be Asphenez. v. 3, 9. H.

Ver. 12. Pulse. That is, pease, beans, and such like. Ch.—S. Basil hence shews the advantages of fasting; and Catholics, who imitate Daniel, may expect the like reward in heaven: and the hope that such a pattern would not displease their dissenting brethren, but rather screen them from their profane sarcasms. H.

Ver. 17. Dreams. He was learned in all the sciences of the country, like Moses. Acts 7:22. C.—They studies these things, in order to refute what was erroneous: discunt ... ut judicent. S. Jer.—The Chaldeans paid great attention to dreams. Daniel acquired the knowledge of such as were sent from heaven by the gift of God, as Joseph had done. To pay any regard to common dreams would be childish (C.) and sinful, if the person depend on them for the knowledge of futurity. H.

Ver. 20. Diviners, or fortune-tellers.—Wise men. Sept. “philosophers.” C.—Heb. Ashaphim, may come from the Gr. sophoi. Grot.—They had been educated three years. v. 5. H.

Ver. 21. Cyrus; and also to the third, (C. 10) and of course during the whole of the captivity. W.—He was maintained in power by the conqueror of Babylon. C. 6:18 and 14:1. He first displayed his sagacity in the cause of Susanna, (C. 13. C.) whose history was placed at the head of the book, in Theodotion, (S. Jer. in Isai. iii. 1) as in its natural order. C.

DANIEL 2

Ver. 1. Year, from the death of his father, Nabopolassar; for he had reigned before as partner with his father, in the empire. Ch.—In that quality he conquered Syria, (A. 3397) took Daniel, &c. in 3399. He succeeded his father. Usher. C.—After he had enlarged his empire by the conquest of Egypt, &c. he had this dream. A. R. 25. W.—Mind. Sept. “his sleep departed from him.” H.—He was restless, recollecting enough to fill him with trouble. When the dream was repeated over, he knew that it was the same. C.

Ver. 2. The Chaldeans. That is, the astrologers, that pretended to divine by stars. Ch.—They dwelt on the banks of the Euphrates, and were highly esteemed. Diod. Sic. i.—They were the most ancient philosophers. Civ. Div. i.

Ver. 3. I know. Heb. also, “to know or understand what,” &c.

Ver. 4. Syriac. It was originally the same as the Chaldee. Daniel understood this language, as well as Heb. and writes in it what concerned the Chaldees, to C. 8. This shews his accuracy, as he makes his speakers use their own tongue. Spinosa ignorantly asserts, that all the seven first chapters are in Chal. and taken from the records of that nation by Judas Macc. How then did Matthatias become acquainted with the contents?

Ver. 5. Put. Chal. “torn to pieces, and your house become infamous places;” (C.) Prot. “a dunghill” H.—Such cruel punishments were not uncommon. 1 Esd. 6:11. C.—Bessus was torn in pieces by the relations of Darius; (Diod. xvii.) and the Persians generally cut off some member of criminals. Brisson ii.

Ver. 8. Gain. Lit. “redeem” H.—S. Paul uses a similar expression, exhorting us to save our souls even at the expense of our temporal interest. C.—The diviners wished to give the king’s fury time to abate, (H.) and to save their lives; (C.) or delay punishment, at least, as much as possible. H.

Ver. 9. Thereof. It is indeed more easy to discover what dream a person has had, than to explain it; since the devil might disclose the former, but he can only guess at what will happen, and herein his agents are often deceived. See Gen. 40. W.—It is not even certain that the devil can know the dreams which we have not divulged, as it is the privilege of God to discern the secrets of the heart. H.

Ver. 11. Men. They acknowledged greater and less gods. Stanley, p. 13. C. i.—They pretend not to have any communication with the superior ones, (C.) and by their answer unguardedly bear testimony to the excellence of the God whom Daniel served. S. Jer.

Ver. 13. Slain. Lit. “were slaughtering;” interficiebantur. H.—Many think that some had already suffered. Geier. M.—They had been perhaps jealous of Daniel, and had not informed him of the matter. S. Jer.

Ver. 14. General. He occupied the same office as Putiphar, in Egypt. Gen. 39:1. It was no disgrace for such a one to execute himself the king’s order, as Banaias slew the brother of Solomon. 3 K. 2.

Ver. 15. Cruel. Chal. also, “precipitate.” C.

Ver. 16. Declare the dream. H.—The Chaldeans had promised only to explain it, and the king knew the superior merit of Daniel. C. 1:19. C.

Ver. 18. Secret. Lit. “sacrament.” Gr. “mystery,” which seems to be derived from (C.) mosthor, “a secret.” H.

Ver. 19. Night, while he was probably asleep, (C.) or praying with his companions. Villet.

Ver. 20. His. He grants them to whom he pleases, and disposes of kingdoms (C.) without control. v. 21.

Ver. 27. Soothsayers. Chal. Gazerin, (H.) who inspect entrails, (Ezec. 21:21. S. Jer.) or tell fortunes by sticks. C. 3:3.

Ver. 28. Times. In the Old Test. this commonly signifies when Christ shall appear; but in the New, it refers to the end of the world. C.

Ver. 29. Begin. By thus telling what thoughts the king had entertained before his dream, he would be heard with greater confidence. W.

Ver. 31. Terrible, or unusual. C.—The statue denoted the four great empires of the Chaldees, Persians, Greeks and Romans. The metals did not mean that the empire of gold was greater than the rest, as that signified by iron was far more powerful; but only that the empire of the Chaldees was then the greatest, and that the Persians would acquire still more power and be surpassed by the Greeks, as they were by the Romans, till the kingdom of Christ should be spread over all the earth. W.

Ver. 37. Of kings. This title was used by the Persians. Nabuchodonosor was at that time the most potent monarch on earth. He conquered many nations, and greatly embellished the city of Babylon, surrounding it with three walls in fifteen days, and building hanging gardens, which were the wonder of the world. See Eus. præp. ix. 41. and x. 42. &c. C.

Ver. 39. Another kingdom; viz. that of the Medes and Persians. Ch.—Inferior; later, of less duration and extent. C.—Third, &c. That of Alexander the Great. Ch.—World. Alexander received ambassadors at Babylon, from the most distant nations, testifying their submission. He conquered beyond the river Indus, &c. Diod. A. 1. Olym. 14. C.

Ver. 40. The fourth kingdom, &c. Some understand this of the successors of Alexander, the kings of Syria and Egypt: others, of the Roman empire and its civil wars. Ch.—The former supposition seems best, though the latter is almost universally received, and will be explained hereafter. C.—The Roman empire did not immediately rise out of Alexander's, and had no relation to the Jews, &c. Grot. L'Empereur.—But it surely swallowed up all that he had left to his generals, and proved the greatest scourge to the Jewish nation; which has been ever since scattered, while the kingdom of Christ gains ground, and will flourish till that of Rome shall be no more. Antichrist will then appear to cast a cloud over, but not destroy it for three years and a half. It is the opinion of many Fathers, &c. that the Roman empire will subsist till that event take place; (see 2 Thes. 2:3. 7.) and thus it may be said, that the fourth empire shall not be given to another people. For antichrist will not strive to exalt a particular nation, but to rule over all. Yet his dominion will be short, and will end in the general dissolution of nature; so that the Roman empire maybe deemed to last for a long time, or even for ever. v. 44. Those who adopt the former system, allow (H.) that the stone designates both the Roman empire and that of Christ; so that some parts of the prediction may refer to one and some to the other. The origin and progress of the Roman empire, might be a figure of the spiritual power of the Church. It is certain that the successors of Alexander owed their dominion to their valour, and established it by the slaughter of many great generals. The kings who followed Seleucus and Ptolemy were remarkable for a mixture of good and bad qualities. Their efforts to preserve their power by intermarriages, proved abortive. The prophet seems also to have had them in view, C. 7:7 and 8:22. C.

Ver. 41. Clay. The iron was in a rude state, mixed with earth. The Roman power was at last partly exercised by consuls and partly by emperors. M.—Florus (l.) compares it to the four states of a man, infancy, childhood, youth, and old age. Its youth may be dated from the conquest of all Italy to Tiberius; afterwards it fell to decay, while the eternal kingdom of Christ was forming. v. 44.

Ver. 43. Man. Pompey and Cæsar, Anthony and Augustus, married each other's relations; but they soon quarrelled, and the race of the Cæsars was extinct in Nero. But this is better understood of the kings of Syria and of Egypt. C.

Ver. 44. Kingdom of Christ, in the Catholic Church, which cannot be destroyed. Ch.—This alone cannot be destroyed. W.—All other empires change. The Catholic Church has stood for seventeen centuries in the midst of persecutions, which gives us an assurance that she will continue for ever. C.—“Then,” says Munster, “was the kingdom of Christ set up, not by arms, ... but by the divine power.” This interpretation arises from the improper version, without hands; whereas the sequel shews that the empire here spoken of, is attended with the like violence as the four others, which it destroys. The Roman empire was in no degree connected with others by marriage. In the following verse, Munster improperly turns to the second coming of our Saviour. Grotius here asserts that the stone alludes to the Roman armies, prefiguring the Son of man, whose gospel is indicated by the progress of the Roman empire, as both sprung from small beginnings. But who informed him that there were such figures in that empire as in the Old Testament? All empires begin in that manner, and types should have some greater resemblance with the reality. The Church meddles not with the temporal powers. It is therefore plain that the prophet speaks of empires which shall succeed each other. Houbigant. perf. Prop. 340.—Kingdoms. That of Rome comprised all the former. The persecuting emperors are forced to yield, and the colossal power of infidelity and vice falls before the gospel. Christ's dominion is spiritual, exercised against wickedness; (C.) is heavenly and eternal. H.—The blood of martyrs was more efficacious in the establishing of Christianity, than fire and sword had been in forming other empires. M.

Ver. 45. Hands. Prot. marg. "mountain, which was not in hand." H.—Christ was born of a virgin; and his kingdom was not established by ambition, like others. Yet it presently became a mountain, and filled the earth. S. Just. dial. S. Aug. tr. 9. in Jo.—God himself sets up this kingdom. C.

Ver. 46. Daniel, taking him for a little god, under the great one, v. 17. W.—Victims. Chal. mincha, (H.) of flour, &c. But the prophet had already declared his sentiments on this head, (v. 28) and abhorred such honours, like S. Paul, (Acts 14:10. C.) though this is not here recorded. M.

Ver. 47. Of gods, above all those of the country for explaining hidden things: yet he did not acknowledge him to be the only true God. C.—He afterwards erected an idol to represent his own greatness. W.

Ver. 48. Provinces, or that of Babylonia, which was the first.—Wise men. This would not engage him in any idolatrous practices.

Ver. 49. Works of agriculture, (C.) which the ancient kings of Persia encouraged with great attention, appointing officers to reward or punish according as their land was cultivated. Xenophon, Cyr. 8. & Œcon.—S. Jerom thinks they were appointed judges, (C.) or assistants of Daniel. Grot.—Palace. Lit. "gates," (H.) as receiver of the taxes, particularly at Susa. C. 8:2. Marsham Egypt. sæc. 18.

DANIEL 3

Ver. 1. Statue. It was the figure of a man, (C.) the dimensions 90 feet high and 9 broad (W.) being disproportionate; though a man might be represented on the pillar. Some take it for Nabolpolassar, (C.) or for the king himself. S. Jer. W.—But he never complains of the injury shewn to his own person, and therefore it probably was meant for Bel, the chief god. C. 4:5 and 14:1. This nation adored statues. Bar. 6:3. The Persians worshipped only the elements. C.—Ochus first set up the statue of the goddess Tanais or Anais. Clem. Protr.—Dura. Sept. “enclosed.” S. Jer.—This happened towards the end of the king’s reign, (v. 98, &c.) of course the three young men might be about fifty years old. C.

Ver. 2. Nobles. Lit. “satraps,” or, “the king’s domestics.” Sept. in 1 Esd. 8:36.—Judges, or “governors of provinces.” ib. Theodotion, &c.—Captains of the soothsayers.—Rulers; “tyrants,” here denoting treasurers. C.—Governors. Lit. “the grandees who were in power;” (H.) counsellors. The original adds, (C.) Thopthia, (H.) “lawyers” and orators. The head of the Turkish religion is called muphti, from the root, (C.) peti, “to teach.” H.

Ver. 5. Symphony. This and several other terms seem taken from the Greek, though the scythara and sambuca came originally from Chaldea. C.—Down. This and offering incense were sometimes considered as marks of idolatry; so being present at the sermons and churches of Protestants was a sign of joining in their communion, being required for that purpose. W.

Ver. 8. Jews: the three children whom they viewed with a jealous eye. Daniel was too much exalted, or was absent with other Jews.

Ver. 15. Hand? Proof of this king’s inconstancy, as he had witnessed the power of God!

Ver. 18. He. Chal. “not” C.—By this modest yet resolute answer, they testified their faith in God’s power, and their determination rather to suffer death (W.) than to go against their conscience. H.—They were ignorant whether God would preserve them from the flames or not, (W.) as he is said to have rescued Abraham from a similar danger. 2 Esd. 9:7.

Ver. 20. Strongest. Chal. “mighty in strength;” (H.) his own guards, the usual executioners.

Ver. 21. Coats, or various coloured bandages for the thighs, used by men and women. Aquila and Th. retain the original term, Σαραβαροίς. Chal. saraballa. C.—Caps: “tiaras.” H.—The king alone wore them upright.

Ver. 22. Slew. They were working still at the furnace, when it burst out and destroyed them, (C.) while the three Jews were praising God below. H. v. 46, 48.

Ver. 24. And, &c. “What follows I have not found in the Heb. volumes.” S. Jer. H.—Here S. Jerom takes notice, that from this verse to v. 91 was not in the Heb. in his time. But as it was in all the Greek Bibles, (which were originally translated from the Hebrew) it is more than probable that it had been formerly in the Hebrew; or rather in the Chaldaic, in which the Book of Daniel was written. But this is certain: that it is and has been of old, received by the Church, and read as canonical Scripture in her liturgy and divine offices. Ch.—See the pref. W.

Ver. 27. True; not fickle, and liable to change. C.—Opera mutas non mutas consilium. S. Aug. Conf. i. 4.—Cappel. argues from this confession, that the piece is not divine, as they would rather have burst out into expressions of admiration, as they do in the canticle below. But they had done so already, (v. 26) and make this confession, (H.) as Daniel does, C. 9; reflecting, that if the nation had not transgressed, they would not thus have been exposed to the fury of the king. Houbigant. v. 40. H.

Ver. 33. Thee. Pagans take occasion to vilify our religion.

Ver. 34. Sake. This disinterested motive is often urged. Jos. 7:9 and 2 Mac. 8:15. C.

Ver. 35. One. Moses used the like terms, and pacified God. Ex. 32. W.

Ver. 38. Thee, in Jerusalem, (H.) or Judea. There were chiefs and judges, (C. 13) as well as prophets, (Ezech. &c.) among the captives. Yet the republic was in disorder. C.—Sedecias was dead, Joakim in prison, so that no Jewish king ruled over the people; nor was there any prophet in the promised land, Jeremias being either dead or in Egypt. W.—Prophets were at least very rare. M.

Ver. 40. Sacrifice of ourselves. H.—They knew not yet whether they would escape. When they beheld the angel they had greater confidence, and broke forth into a hymn of praise. Houbig.—They now offer all they can, a humble heart!

Ver. 43. Name, by rescuing us, that all may confess thy power. C.

Ver. 46. Brimstone. Lit. naphtha, (H.) or bitumen, which was very inflammable.—Tow, besmeared with pitch. C.—Dry (malleolis) “bundles” of sticks, or ropes, covered with pitch. H.—Manipuli spartœi pice contecti. Nonius.

Ver. 48. Furnace. These might be other victims, (H.) or he recapitulates what had been said v. 22, (C.) which is by no means unusual, though Cappel. would hence reject the piece. Houbigant.

Ver. 49. Furnace: so that it destroyed the Chaldeans, while it had no power to hurt God’s servants. The operation of the laws nature was thus only restrained. H.

Ver. 53. Temple; heaven, styled the throne, v. 54. The temple was now in ruins.

Ver. 55. Depths, from whom nothing is hidden.—Cherubims, as on thy chariot.

Ver. 65. Spirits: winds. Angels and men are mentioned elsewhere. C.—They rejoice that the angels always praise God, and wish that all would strive to imitate them. W.

Ver. 67. Heat. Winter and summer. Some copies have, æstas. C.

Ver. 72. Darkness. The privation of light has its use, and invites men to praise. S. Aug. de nat. Boni. 16. W.

Ver. 86. Souls, in a separate state. Angels are invited before. C.

Ver. 88. Ananias, &c. They retain their Hebrew names, despising those imposed by the Chaldeans, with their impious manners. C. 1:7. The inanimate creation is invited to praise God in its way, (Ps. 148) as well as those endued with reason. The former never refuse obedience. H.—Hell: the grave. C.

Ver. 90. And ever. “Hitherto does not occur in Heb.; and what we have written, is translated from the edition of Theodotion.” S. Jer. v. 24.

Ver. 91. Then hearing these praises, and seeing people walking in the fire. Grabe’s edit. after v. 24, has only, “And Nabuchodonosor heard them singing hymns, and was, “&c.

Ver. 92. The son, or rather (H.) “a son;” υἱω. Lowth’s Gram.—He supposed this was some angel or petty god, like Hercules. Carthus.—It was the same angel who descended (W.) with them v. 49. Some have taken him for Jesus Christ. But S. Aug. observes, that most of these apparitions were made by angels, (Trin. iii. 11.) who are often styled "sons of God." Job 1:6. T. C.

Ver. 94. Smell, such as is felt when people, (H.) or their garments, come too near the fire. Pagans have sometimes walked through fire; but they first anointed their feet with certain preservatives, as Servius (in Æn. xi.) remarks from Varro. C.—Here the fire burnt only the bands, (v. 23, 92. H.) God making his creatures afford comfort to his servants, as was the case when the Goths attempted to burn S. Benedict. S. Greg. Dial. iii. 18. W.

Ver. 95. Changed, refusing to comply against their better knowledge. The force of reason extorts this concession from the wicked king. H.

Ver. 96. Destroyed. Chal. "torn limb from limb, (C.) and their houses be made a dunghill." C. 2:5. H.—Manner. One would suppose that he was really converted; but his heart was not changed. C. 4. C.

Ver. 97. Promoted. He granted them greater power: (W.) or Chal. "re-established" them in their former dignities. Rom. Gr. "He elevated them in honour, and judged them worthy to rule over all the Jews in his kingdom." Theod.

Ver. 98. Nabuchodonosor, &c. These three last verses are a kind of preface to the following chapter, which is written in the style of an epistle from the king. Ch.—It was probably published in consequence of this miracle. Here the chap. might properly commence, (C.) as it does in Heb. and Prot. Bibles. H.

DANIEL 4

Ver. 1. Palace. He continues the edict, having subdued all his enemies. C.—Daniel recites his words. The king had the dream in the 34th year of his reign, which continued in all forty-three, including the seven of absence. W.

Ver. 5. Colleague. Chal. also, “another, or afterwards, (H.) or at last.” C.—My god. He says this, because the name of Baltassar, or Belteshazzar, is derived from the name of Bel, the chief god of the Babylonians. Ch.—Gods. He speaks conformably to his false opinion; (S. Jer.) or, being instructed by Daniel, he testifies that the Holy Spirit enlightens the prophet. Theod. Gr. has “god,” which S. Jerom disapproves; though the plural is often used for the true God. Reason evinces that only the Deity can disclose the secrets of futurity. Gen. 41:38. C.

Ver. 6. And the. He is convinced that Daniel could do both, but condescends now to relate his dream. H.

Ver. 7. Tree often denotes princes; (Ezec. 31:3) and according to the false principles (C.) of those who pretend to explain dreams, always (H.) implies some great personage. Achmet. C. 200. Grot.—But nothing is more vain than these pretensions. C.

Ver. 10. A watcher. A vigilant angel, perhaps the guardian of Israel. Ch.—Chal. hir; (H.) whence Iris the messenger of the gods, is derived. S. Jer.—Theodot. retains eir. See S. Jer. in Ps. lxxvi. 4. The Scholiast (Rom. ed.) says: “the Sept. renders it an angel, the rest a watcher.” These supernatural agents H. and saints are represented as judges. v. 14. C.

Ver. 11. Branches, to shew that all (H.) the king’s subjects should abandon him.

Ver. 12. Let it, the tree, representing the king who was confined when he began to shew signs of madness: but he broke loose, and fled away. C.

Ver. 13. Changed, &c. It does not appear, by Scripture, that Nabuchodonosor was changed from human shape, much less that he was changed into an ox, but only that he lost his reason, and became mad; and in this condition remained abroad in the company of beasts, eating grass like an ox, till his hair grew in such a manner as to resemble the feathers of an eagle, and his nails to be like birds' claws. Ch.—Origen represents the whole as an allegorical description of the fall of Lucifer. See S. Jer. But his arguments have made little impression: and it is universally believed that Nabuchodonosor was thus punished for his pride, after a whole year had been allowed him to see if he would repent. The manner of this strange metamorphose has been variously explained. But it seems that he was seized with the species of madness styled Lycanthropy, (C.) as Virgil (Ec. 6:4–8) relates of the daughters of Prætus, who “with mimick'd mooings fill'd the fields.” H.—Thus many fancy they are kings, or horses, (C.) and that they are continually mounting above the clouds, of which we have an instance in a woman still living at Whitby, who in other respects appears to be sufficiently sensible, (H.) as Tertullian and others think Nabuchodonosor was, that he might suffer more. Yet it is commonly supposed he lost his senses for a while, till God was pleased to restore them at the time appointed; when his former humiliating state might make a deep impression upon his mind, as well as upon his subjects, and caution all future generations to guard against the fatal consequences of pride. His son, Evilmerodac, probably ruled during his absence. Most of the Chaldee writings have perished; so that we need not be surprised if they take no notice of this event, which was so disgraceful to the nation. Yet Megasthenes, (in Eus. præp. ix. ultra) seems to hint at it, when he represents the king seized with a divine fury, and crying out: (C. Diss.) “I, the same Nabuchodonosor, foretell unto you, Babylonians, a fatal calamity, which neither my ancestor Belus, nor even the kingdom of Bel, (H. the gods) have power to avert. For a Persian mule (Cyrus. C.) shall come, assisted by your demons, and bring on slavery ... Having uttered this oracle, he suddenly disappeared.” H.—Beast's heart. In his hypochondriac temper he imagined himself (C.) to be an ox, (H.) avoided the society of men, going naked and feeding on grass, upon his hands and feet, till (after seven years) God restored him to his senses and kingdom. W.—The food which he used would tend to purge him, and naturally abate the disorder. Barthol.—Yet none but God could tell precisely when the madness would seize or leave him. —Times. This usually denotes years, in Daniel; (7:25 and 12:7) and of course (C.) we must understand it here in this sense; (W.) though some have explained it of an indeterminate length of time, or of weeks, months, or seasons. Only winter and summer were admitted, so that his period would thus suffice. See Theod. C.

Ver. 14. Over it. Kings are not always of the most noble dispositions. H.—“All honour comes from Jove.” Homer. Ili. 17.—Let the greatest monarchs be humble, (H.) and cast their crowns at the feet of God. C.

Ver. 16. Hour. Chal. shaha, (H.) implies “a little while;” (Grot.) yet of some duration, not precisely like one of the modern hours. The prophet was silent, being troubled by the divine spirit, (C. 10:8) at the view of impending misery; or unwilling to hurt the king’s feelings, till he should urge him to speak. C.—He was sorry to denounce such calamities, yet must speak the truth. W.—Trouble. Theodot. “make thee hurry.” He perceived the prophet’s anxiety, and encouraged him.

Ver. 23. Remain. His son and the nobles should act in his name. v. 13.

Ver. 24. Alms. Chal. “justice,” is often taken in this sense. Syr. &c. 2 Cor. 9:9. C.—The prediction was conditional, and therefore Daniel exhorts the king to strive to obtain pardon by the powerful remedy of alms-deeds; as he did, after enduring some punishment. W.—Yet this is very doubtful. v. 31.

Ver. 25. Came. Daniel informs us of this event, unless the king speak of himself in the third person, from v. 16 to 31, giving an account of what he had heard and experienced. H.—A year of trial was allowed him at first; (Theod.) or he obtained this reprieve by his alms, and lost his former merit by relapsing into pride. S. Jer.

Ver. 27. Answered his own vain thoughts. H.—He was admiring the city, (C.) which he had greatly enlarged and beautified. Berosus &c.

Ver. 31. Heaven: God having looked on me with pity. S. Aug. (ep. 111. C. or 122. W.) seems to think that he was saved; and the author of the B. on Pred. & grace, (c. 15) attributes to him, remarks that his repentance was different from that of Pharaoh. Hence none must despair. S. Jer. ep. vii. to Læta.—See Theod. A. Lap. &c. who maintain that same opinion: but S. Thomas expresses his doubts. Isaias (14:9) seems to condign him to hell; and the king here manifests his adhesion to Bel, (v. 5) and great inconstancy. C. 2:47 and 3:15. His conviction seems therefore to have been only in speculation, (C.) or momentary, like that of the philosophers, (Rom. 1) which would render them more criminal; and we must confess, (H.) that this conversion is very equivocal. Sanctius. v. 24 and 34. H.

Ver. 32. With, or “by the powers (angels. v. 10.) ... as by men.” Grot. —The stars are also frequently thus described. Mat. 24:29. The king probably believed that the God of the Jews was above his gods, the sun, fire, &c. C.

Ver. 33. Shape. He had not assumed that of an ox, (H.) but had greatly neglected his person, (C.) so that he was covered with hair, &c. v. 30. H.

Ver. 34. I, &c. From this place some commentators infer, that this king became a true convert, and dying not long after, was probably saved. Ch. Jos. Ant. 10—This is the last act of his which is recorded. If he had lived much longer, he would probably have restored the Jews. W.—But the time decreed by heaven for their liberation was not yet arrived. H.

DANIEL 5

Ver. 1. Baltassar. He is believed to be the same as Nabonides, the last of the Chaldean kings, grandson to Nabuchodonosor. He is called his son v. 2, 11, &c. according to the style of the Scriptures, because he was a descendant from him. Ch. S. Jer. in Is. xiii. Usher, &c.—Some think that he was brother of Evilmerodac. v. 11. Bar. 1:11. But he seems rather to have been his son. Jer. 27:7. Profane authors place Neriglissor and Laborosoarchod between them. They were not of the royal family, and might be looked upon as usurpers, or reigned in some other place; or they did not meddle with the Jews. C.—It is wonderful that Josephus should prefer these authors; (T.) yet he abandons the dates given by them. Ant. x. 12. & c. Ap. 1. They represent Nabonides as a simple Babylonian raised to the throne, defeated by Cyrus, and suffered to retire into Carmania; whereas, Baltassar was slain. v. 29. C.—The others were of a different lineage, and are mentioned by Eus. &c. Evilmerodac certainly preceded him on the throne, and honoured Joachim in the 37th years of his captivity. W.—Thousand; or, “for his officers over a thousand men.” Theodot.—Every. Chal. “and drank wine before the thousand,” more than any, for this was deemed a great perfection; or he drank in their presence, but apart. C.—The Persian monarchs used to sit in a separate apartment, with a veil before the door, so that they could see the guests without being seen. A great chandelier was before them; (Athen. iv. 10.) probably on the outside, otherwise it would have defeated their purpose. Light sufficient would appear for Baltassar to see the handwriting on his chamber wall. v. 5. H.—According to the order of time, this chapter should be placed after the 7 and 8. C.—But those contain visions. H.

Ver. 6. Loosed, so that he quaked for fear. Ezech. 29:7. C.—He was not so drunk as to be deprived of sense. H.—This happened in the 17th and last year of his reign, when Daniel was about a hundred years old, (W.) though we have no certain account of his age. H.—He might be eighty-two when he died. C.

Ver. 7. Purple. This and the chain were reserved for the highest nobility.—Third, or one of the three great officers. C. 6:1 and 2 K. 23:8. 19.

Ver. 8. Read. It was written in Samaritan characters; or, for want of vowels, could not be read or understood. C.

Ver. 10. The queen. Not his wife, but the mother of the king; (Ch.) Amyit, widow of Nabuchodonosor, and sister of Darius, the Mede; or (C.) Nitocris, the mother of Labynithus, (Herod. i.) whom many confound with Baltassar. C.

Ver. 11. Father. So a grandfather might be styled. Jer. 27:7. W.—Daniel was not perhaps at the head of the wise men. C.—They were too jealous to mention him; and the intoxicated king and courtiers remembered not his merit, till an aged matron suggested that he should be consulted. He was probably (H.) in some office, at Susa, yet happened to be then in Babylon, (C.) which was besieged; and thither he might have retired at the approached of Cyrus.

Ver. 16. Difficult. Lit. “things which are tied,” or perplexing. H.—The Persians still used the like expressions, to imply an intelligent governor. Chardin.

Ver. 17. Another. He does not refuse the offers, but civilly replies that he will give satisfaction without regard to any recompense.

Ver. 19. Slew. He was an absolute monarch, and considered his subjects as so many slaves. C.—Xerxes having called together his nobles, that he might not seem to have resolved on the war with Greece alone, said: “Nevertheless, remember that you have to obey rather than to advise.” V. Max. 9. 5. 2.

Ver. 21. Beasts. His disordered imagination made him dwell with them. W.—It is strange that such an example should have been so soon forgotten, that Daniel is forced to repeat it so explicitly. C. 4:13.

Ver. 23. Vessels. Only part had been returned to Sedecias: (C. 1:2) but they were taken again, and kept in the palace, or in the temple of Bel. H.—Breath, or soul. Gen. 2:7. C.

Ver. 25. Phares. These words consist of three letters, mona, thokol, pros, as we add o merely for pronunciation. Being unconnected and almost destitute of vowels, (H.) it is not easy even for the learned to read these words, or to ascertain their meaning. Thus d b r being placed in a similar situation, it would be impossible to determine the sense; as it may have ten different meanings, according as it is pronounced. v. 8. C.—Mane is twice repeated, to shew the certainty and exactitude of the numbering. M.—Yet in the sequel each word occurs once and unconnected, as it is here in the Vulg.; not Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin, (Prot. H.) “He hath numbered, weighed, and the dividers or the Persians” are upon thee, (T.) as Dalila said to Samson. Only three words (H.) were written. S. Jer.—The rest contain the prophet’s explanation. The Chaldean empire had now attained its utmost height. Its king brought ruin upon himself by his wicked life. H.—He would soon be divided with the sword, and his kingdom shared between the Medes and Persians. S. Jer.

Ver. 28. Persians. Those who confound Baltassar with Nabonides, say that Cyrus made himself master of all the empire. How then was it divided? Darius rather took possession of the greatest part while Cyrus had Persia, (C.) till his uncle’s death. H.

Ver. 29. Third, or over a third part. S. Jer. 5:7. H. The honours wee conferred without delay, and they would have been made public in the morning. But death prevented the king; and Daniel did not enjoy them till they were ratified by Darius, to whom he adhered. C.—The Medes then besieged the city, which they took that night, when most part were drunk. W.—It was a solemn festival. Is. 21. S. Jer.—Cyrus rushed in by the channel of the Euphrates, and two of the king’s guards slew him to revenge themselves. Xenoph. 7. Beros.

Ver. 31. Darius. He is called Cyaxares by the historians, and was the son of Astyages, and uncle to Cyrus (Ch.) as well as to Baltassar, by the mother’s side. He is styled Astyages, (C. 13:65) or Artaxerxes. Sept. C. 6:1. He takes the title of king both of the Medes and Persians. C. 6:8. &c. C.

DANIEL 6

Ver. 1. Kingdom. Josephus, &c. say Darius had returned into Media, where he made these regulations. But if this did not take place at Babylon, it would be rather at Susa. C. 8. Josephus counts 300 or 360 governments, though when the monarchy was increased there were only 127. Est. 1. C.—He may therefore speak here of large towns, which had each a magistrate. Such regulations easily vary. H.—Darius acts as master of the whole empire.

Ver. 3. Princes. Th. “regulators.” Chal. sacecin, (H.) may be put for (C.) scranim, (H.) the usual title (C.) of the highest officers, the surenas

Ver. 4. Kingdom, as prime minister, to whom the three princes should be accountable, as the inferior governors where to them. H.—The king was now advanced in years, and wished to ease himself of part of the burden, (C.) as he could entirely confide in Daniel. H.—He reigned only one year. C. 13:65. W.—King. Chal. “kingdom,” (H.) to accuse him of treason, (Grot.) or to get him removed. C.—This is an old and malignant trick, to call religion treason, and to get laws made for that purpose. W.—In him a great proof of integrity! M.

Ver. 6. Craftily. Chal. “came tumultuously to,” &c. C.—They hoped thus to convince the king, as they were so unanimous. He would not perceive the drift of their petition, and was flattered with the idea of being like a god. Daniel was not consulted, though on other occasions the king reposed such confidence in him, as the deputies so impudently asserted that the wish was universal! So easily are princes deceived! H.

Ver. 8. It, when it is confirmed both by the king and his nobility. Est. 8:8.

Ver. 9. It. Nabuchodonosor of Babylon, and of Ninive, had both pretended to be gods; (C. 3:15. Judith 6:2–9. C.) and Curtius (8) remarks, “that the Persians follow the dictates of prudence as well as of piety, in worshipping their kings among the gods, the majesty of empire being its best protection.” H.

Ver. 10. Before. He did not open the windows that he might be seen, as that would have been rashness; nor did many perceive what he was doing, (v. 11. W.) as it was in an upper room, but only those who rushed in. H.—It was the usual practice of the Jews, (C.) to pray turning towards the temple, as Solomon had directed, (3 K. 8:48. S. Jer. in Ezech. viii. 16.) though it was now in ashes. H.—Daniel observed the third, sixth, and ninth hours, as the Church still does. Acts 2:15 and 10:9. S. Jer.

Ver. 11. Carefully. Chal. “came in a tumultuous manner.” as v. 6. & 15. C.

Ver. 15. Perceiving. Chal. “assembled,” (Prot. H.) or “came quickly in a body.” C.

Ver. 17. Own ring, that none of his enemies might injure Daniel. The nobles also affixed their seal, (H.) that the king might not liberate him. M.—All this shews that aristocracy was mixed with the monarchical form of government. Nothing of importance is done without the nobles.

Ver. 18. Meat. Chal. “music,” (C.) or “incense.” De Dieu.—He was tired of his godship, to which he had unguardedly opened his heart. v. 6. H.

Ver. 22. Offence, as I neglected thy decree to obey a higher Master. C.—The king had sense enough to approve of this distinction. H.

Ver. 23. Believed, or trusted. C.—S. Paul alludes to this miracle. Heb. 11:33. W.

Ver. 24. Accused. They were punished as false witnesses; (C.) and the king justly made them suffer what they would have inflicted on the innocent, being convinced that Daniel had only acted according to his devotion. W.—These wretches deserved to perish, though they had spoken nothing but the truth. H.—Wives. Many examples of such punishments occur, (C.) as it was presumed that children and wives were infected by the bad example, and would imitate it, (Jun.) if they had not concurred already. M.—This must have been the case, to make it just. H. See Jos. 7.—Abominandæ leges, says Ammianus, (23) speaking of the customs of Persia, per quas ob noxam unius omnis propinquitus perit. C.

DANIEL 7

Ver. 1. Baltassar. Chal. a letter is wanting. H.—This Baltassar was slain. C. 5. C.—The two visions happened before that event. W.—The. Prot. “visions of his head, upon his bed. Then he wrote the dream, and told the sum of the matters.” H.

Ver. 2. Winds, to imply the tumults occasioned by fresh kingdoms (W.) in the world. Theod.

Ver. 3. Four great beasts; viz. the Chaldean, Persian, Grecian, and Roman empires. But some rather choose to understand the fourth beast of the successors of Alexander the great, more especially of them that reigned in Asia and Syria, (Ch.) or in Egypt. C. 2:40. H.

Ver. 4. Man. The emperors of Babylon were forced to confess that they were nothing more. C.—Their cruel and rapid conquests (W.) are denoted by this monstrous animal. Its wings shew how the lands were divided between the Medes and Persians. Perhaps Neriglissor, &c. shared a part. C. 5:1. C.

Ver. 5. Bear, which is cruel, and eats what is set before it greedily. W.—Side. Cyrus did not attack the Jews. S. Jer.—He stood ready to attack the Chaldeans.—Three. He ruled over the Medes and Chaldeans, as well as over the Persians. C.—Rows. Gr. “wings or sides” of an animal, (H.) or “bones.” Grot.—Cyrus was always at war; and Justin (1.) says, that Tomyris II. of Scythia, ordered his head to be cut off, and thrown into a vessel full of blood. His troops are styled robbers, Jer. 51:48. The ambition of Cambyses, Hystaspes, &c. are insatiable.

Ver. 6. Leopard, a small spotted beast, may denote the size and disposition of Alexander, as well as his rapid conquests. When he was asked how he had subdued so many, he answered, “by never putting off.” C.—Four. He led his forces on all sides; (H.) and after his death, his empire was divided into four, (W.) Egypt, Syria, Asia, and Macedon, (Theod.) as he had united in his person the empire of the Chaldees, Medes, Persians, and Greeks. C.

Ver. 7. Unlike. It is not named: but shews the incomparable power of the Romans, governed by kings, consuls, tribunes, dictators, emperors, at different times. W.—This in the opinion generally received, which we shall explain. Yet many think that the kingdoms of Syria and Egypt are designated, as C. 2:40. S. Jerom acknowledged that what is understood of antichrist, had been partly verified in Epiphanes, his figure. The beast was to be slain before the coming of the Son of man. v. 11, 26. It would persecute for three years and a half; but God would grant victory to his saints, as he did to the Machabees. Yet they only exhibited a faint idea of what has been done by the Church. The same subject is treated, C. 11. Many things caused the dominion of the successors of Alexander to be unlike that of others. It was never united, and was very destructive to the Jews. C.—Horns. That is, ten kingdoms, (as Apoc. 17:12) among which the empire of the fourth beast shall be parcelled: or ten kings of the number of the successors of Alexander, as figures of such as shall be about the time of antichrist. Ch.—Epiphanes was the eighth king, and Laomedon, Antigonus, and Demetrius, had been governors of Syria before. Most understand this of antichrist, whom Epiphanes foreshewed. Others think that it points out Vespasian, the tenth successor of Cæsar, who made war on the Jews. The same prediction may regard different events, as the abomination (C. 9) may allude to the profanations committed by Epiphanes, by the Romans at the last siege, and by antichrist. Others apply this to the Turkish empire, which may be paving the way for the great antagonist of Christ. C. Dioclesian and Julian may also be meant, as well as other forerunners of the man of sin. H.—He shall overcome many, but his fury shall continue but a short time. v. 25. W.

Ver. 8. Little horn. This is commonly understood of antichrist. It may also be applied to that great persecutor, Antiochus Epiphanes, as a figure of antichrist. Ch.—He was the youngest son of Antiochus the great, and was a hostage of Rome. While he was returning, his elder brother died, and Epiphanes excluded his son Philometor, of Egypt, and the usurper Heliodorus. He also defeated three, Philometor, on the south; Artaxias, king of Armenia, on the east; and the strength, or God's people, v. 24 and C. 8:9.—Man. He gained several at first, by his affability.—Things: blasphemy. 1 Mac. 1:23. 43. C.

Ver. 9. Ancient. The Son is born of the Father, and the Holy Ghost proceeds from both, yet all three are coeternal. W.—Hence the Father is sometimes painted in this manner, though he be a pure spirit. His throne resembled that seen by Ezechiel, C. 1. H.—He takes cognizance of all, and punishes accordingly. C.

Ver. 10. Fire. Ps. 96:3.—Thousands. Gr. implies one million and one hundred millions. M.—The angels are very numerous, particularly the highest, styled assistants. S. Tho. W.

Ver. 11. Spoke. I wished to see how the king would be punished. He felt the hand of God as he was going to destroy all the Jews, when he pretended to repent. 1 Mac. 6 and 2 Mac. 9:4. His successors could not much disturb the Jews. v. 13. C.

Ver. 12. Time. Each of the four empires had its period assigned. That of Rome attracted the prophet's attention most, and is mentioned first. M.

Ver. 13. Heaven. Christ appeared about sixty years after the subversion of the Syrian monarchy. Yet these expressions literally refer to his second coming. Mat. 26:64. C.—He had the form of man, as he had the nature. M.—He is clearly predicted. by his power antichrist is overthrown. W.

Ver. 14. Destroyed. The eternal dominion of Christ could not be expressed in stronger terms. He seems to allude to them, Mat. 28:18. C.

Ver. 17. Earth. The first was on the point of disappearing. C. 5:31. H.

Ver. 18. Most High, (Th.) or rather Chal. "the very high saints of God;" as also v. 22, 25, and 27.

Ver. 21. Saints. The Machabees at last prevailed. Christ will punish the Jews. Mat. 24:30.

Ver. 23. Greater. Chal. “unlike,” as v. 7. Epiphanes was a greater scourge of the Jews than any of the preceding.

Ver. 24. Mightier. Chal. again, “unlike.” Antiochus the great had lost many provinces: but his son was the most implacable enemy of God’s people. He subdued them, Egypt and Armenia; or his three competitors. v. 8.

Ver. 25. Against, or “over against,” like an accuser. Sym. “as if he were God.”—Laws. He did this with regard to the Jews, (1 Mac. 1:41. C.) prohibiting their festivals. Antichrist will do the like, and pretend to work miracles. H.—A time, &c. That is, three years and a half; which is supposed to be the length of the duration of the persecution of antichrist. Ch. Apoc. 11:2 and 12:14.—Josephus (Bel. pref.) says the sacrifices were discontinued so long, or rather this time elapsed from the publishing his edict till the temple was purified. During six months, people offered sacrifice clandestinely. 1 Mac. 4:36. 52.

Ver. 27. Him. The power of the Machabees was too limited, to be here understood. The Church and Christ must be meant.

Ver. 28. Word. The angel spoke no more at this time. C.

DANIEL 8

Ver. 1. Beginning. This vision was to explain what he had seen C. 7 respecting the four monarchies. The conflict of the Persians with Alexander, after two hundred years and twenty years, is here described. W.

Ver. 2. Castle; some read “city.” Here the kings had a palace; and Hystaspes, &c. generally resided in it. Nabuchodonosor seems to have subdued Elam. Cyrus had it for his share; but Darius, the Mede, appears from Eschylus to have plundered Susa again. Daniel probably spent the latter part of his life in this city. C.—Gate, or “stagnant water;” (paludem. v. 3. H.) though most understand the river Euleus, on the side of Susiana. The prophets often sought retired places. C. 10:4. Ezech. 1:1. C.

Ver. 3. A ram. The empire of the Medes and Persians. Ch. W.—Cyrus, the founder, was allied to both.—Higher, denoting the Persians; or Hystaspes, and his posterity, the second branch of the royal family, which reigned to the end: whereas Cambyses was the only one of the race of Cyrus who succeeded to the throne. Others think that he alludes to Codomannus, whom Alexander certainly attacked.—Afterward is not in Heb. S. Jerom supposed that another ram was designated, but it is the same.

Ver. 4. South. Codomannus reigned in peace for two years, when he was invaded. But his predecessors had made war chiefly in Greece, Scythia, and Egypt. The stupendous preparations of Xerxes against Greece only accelerated the fall of his own kingdom, by irritating the two nations. C.

Ver. 5. A he-goat. The empire of the Greeks, or Macedonians.—He touched not the ground. He conquered all before him with so much rapidity, that he seemed rather to fly than to walk upon the earth.—A notable horn. Alexander the great. Ch.—He succeeded his father when only twenty years old, and the next year was chosen generalissimo of the Greeks against Persia, which he invaded at the head of 30,000 foot and 4,000 horses, having only seventy talents of silver and provisions for one month. With this he attacked the most flourishing empire, and conquered it in less than four years' time, when Darius was slain. A. 3674. Alexander survived only six years and ten months, yet subdued so many nations that it is almost incredible that he should have travelled over them. He is the belly of brass and the leopard, C. 2:39 and 7:6. C.—He died in the midst of his prosperity, (H.) when not quite thirty-three years old, (W.) and left no heirs to succeed him. This conqueror would be painted with two horns, to intimate that he was the son of Jupiter Ammon. C.

Ver. 7. Hand. He routed all the forces of his enemy (H.) at the Granicus, at Issus; and at Gaugamela, (C.) or Arbela, Darius escaped, but was slain by his own servants. H.—The clemency of the conqueror towards the fallen royal family is not here specified. C.

Ver. 8. Broken, by death. Usher, A. 3681.—Four. Seleucus, Antigonus, Philip, and Ptolemeus, the successors of Alexander, who divided his empire among them. Ch.—Other generals held out for some time. Philip was only a nominal king; Antipater governed Macedon and Greece. Syria, Asia, and Egypt, formed three other kingdoms. All four marked out by the four heads of the leopard. C. 7:6. But the prophet is intent upon Syria and Egypt, which had most to do with the Jews. C.

Ver. 9. A little horn. Antiochus Epiphanes, a descendant of Seleucus. He grew against the south and the east, by his victories over the kings of Egypt and Armenia; and against the strength, that is, against Jerusalem and the people of God. Ch.—He persecuted God's people, and set up the idol of Jupiter Olympius in the very temple. W.

Ver. 10. Even unto, or against the strength of heaven. So are here called the army of the Jews, the people of God, (Ch.) and particularly the teachers. Many priests gave way to idolatry. 1 Mac. 1:48 and 2 Mac. 4:14. C.

Ver. 11. Strength; the God of armies, (H.) over whom Epiphanes seemed to triumph.

Ver. 12. Strength. Heb. “the army was delivered up to him, for the,” &c. While several contended for the high priesthood, and imitated the manners of the Greeks, the sacrifices were neglected, and then Antiochus prevailed. 2 Mac. 4:7.—Ground. The ambitious pontiffs, as well as the king and his officers, kept not their promises. Onias, the lawful high priest, being displaced, went to seek redress at Antioch, in the asylum at Daphne. Andronicus prevailed on him to come out by treacherous promises, and slew him; whereupon even Epiphanes wept, and ordered the murderer to be punished. 2 Mac. 4:32. The following year he entered Jerusalem, and committed horrible profanations.

Ver. 13. Another. We do not inquire how the angels explained themselves, or whether they instruct each other. This conversation was for the prophet’s information. C.—One angel asked the other a question about futurity. W.

Ver. 14. Days. That is, six years and almost four months; which was the whole time from the beginning of the persecution of Antiochus till his death. Ch.—He began A. 143, and died A. 149, according to the era of Seleucus. H.—The temple was purified in the mean time. 1 Mac. 1:21 and 6:16. W.—Full days are specified. Sacrifice entirely ceased for three years, A. 145. C. 7:25. Sym. has 2,400, others 2,200, as quoted by S. Jerom. We know not whether the solar year of 365 days, or the lunar of 354, be meant.

Ver 16. Between, in an island formed by the river. It was the Son of God, (C.) or S. Michael, (S. Jer.) directing Gabriel to explain the vision.

Ver. 17. Man. So Ezechiel is usually styled, to shew that the human nature is different from that of angels, and would be greatly honoured by Jesus Christ, who takes this appellation. W.—Of the end, or determined. This shall take place, (C.) but the period is distinct. Grot. v. 26.

Ver. 19. Malediction. Hebrew: “wrath” against the people of God, and their enemies. C.

Ver. 21. Is. Heb. “are the kings,” (H.) including all. v. 3.

Ver. 22. Nation, yet not his children. v. 8.

Ver. 23. Shameless. Heb. “hard,” cruel, and impudent, as Epiphanes was. 1 Mac. 1:2. Marcellinus styles him “wrathful and savage.”—Sentences, making use of artifice to seize the estates of his nephew Philometor, and to oppress the Jews. 2 Mac. 5:24. C.—The history speaks of Antiochus: antichrist is also meant, as C. 12 and Mat. 24. W.

Ver. 24. By. Heb. “not to his (Alexander’s) strength.” v. 22. Epiphanes conquered Egypt and the Jews: but the former had an infant king, and the latter were unprovided. He shewed more cunning than prowess.

Ver. 25. Prince: God.—Hand of man. He confessed that he was justly punished. 1 Mac. 6:10. Gr. “He shall raise himself by the ruin of many, (Theod. and some MSS. add, and shall rise up against the prince of princes) and he shall break them like eggs with his hand.”

Ver. 26. Morning of this day, or of what shall happen in certain full days. v. 14.—Seal. When the predictions were to take place, soon they were dated and published. C.—This will remain obscure till after the event. S. Jer.—What regarded the temple, happened in 300 years’ time. But it alludes also to antichrist. S. Greg. Mor. xxx. 12. W.

Ver. 27. Business, at Susa. Nabuchodonosor had given him the province of Babylon.—It. All prophecies have a degree of obscurity before they be accomplished. Heb. may intimate that none could tell the cause of his anxiety. C.

DANIEL 9

Ver. 1. Darius, the Mede. C. 5:31. If his reign had commenced at the same time with that of Cyrus, at Babylon, as it is commonly supposed, Daniel would have been under no anxiety respecting the people’s liberation, as it took place that year, (C.) though perhaps not at the commencement. H.—Cyrus had now ruled over the Persians above two years, so that the first of Darius at Babylon agrees with the third of his reign over his countrymen. C. 10. C.—Assuerus, or Ahasuerus, is not a proper name, but means “a great prince.” W.

Ver. 2. Jerusalem. He read attentively the sacred volumes, particularly the prophecy of Jer. 25:11 and 29:10. Knowing that many predictions were conditional, he was afraid lest this might be so; notwithstanding a part of it seemed to be verified by the death of Baltassar. C.—Darius had reigned in Persia before. He only ruled part of a year, at Babylon, the 70th of the captivity. 2 Par. 36:22. Daniel perceiving that the time of the Jews' deliverance was at hand, prayed with great zeal and confidence. W.

Ver. 4. Covenant. God never breaks it first. C.—Deus suâ gratiâ semel justificatos non deserit, nisi ab eis prius diseratur. Trid. Sess. vi. 11.

Ver. 9. Mercy. Thou art just, (v. 7) and sovereignly merciful. He speaks in the name of all. Some had continued faithful; but the number was comparatively inconsiderable. v. 11.

Ver. 11. Fallen, by drops, (stillavit. Deut. 27:13. &c. H.) like an inundation.

Ver. 13. Truth, in executing thy promises and menaces.

Ver. 16. Against. Heb. “according to.”—Justice. Sept. “mercy.” Let not the enemy boast that he has ruined thy temple, &c. v. 17. C.

Ver. 21. The man Gabriel. The angel Gabriel in the shape of a man. Ch. C. 8:16.—Sacrifice, between the two vespers, (Num. 28:4) after the ninth hour, which was a time of prayer. Acts 3:1. C.

Ver. 23. Desires. His zeal and mortification merit this title. W.—He was an object of God's love. S. Jer. C. x. 11 and xi. 8. C.

Ver. 24. Seventy weeks (viz. of years, or seventy times seven, that is, 490 years) are shortened; that is, fixed and determined, so that the time shall be no longer. Ch.—This is not a conditional prophecy. Daniel was solicitous to know when the seventy years of Jeremias would terminate. But something of far greater consequence is revealed to him, (W.) even the coming and death of the Messiah, four hundred and ninety years after the order for rebuilding the walls should be given, (C.) at which period Christ would redeem the world, (W.) and abolish the sacrifices of the law. C.—Finished, or arrive at its height by the crucifixion of the Son of God; (Theod.) or rather sin shall be forgiven. Heb. “to finish crimes to seal (cover or remit) sins, and to expiate iniquity.”—Anointed. Christ is the great anointed of God, the source of justice, and the end of the law and of the prophets, (Acts 10:38 and 1 Cor. 1:30. Rom. 10:4. C.) as well as the pardoner of crimes. These four characters belong only to Christ. W.

Ver. 25. Word, &c. That is, from the twentieth year of king Artaxerxes, when, by his commandment, Nehemias rebuilt the walls of Jerusalem, 2 Esd. 2. From which time, according to the best chronology, there were just sixty-nine weeks of years, the is 483 years, to the baptism of Christ, when he first began to preach and execute the office of Messiah. Ch.—The prophecy is divided into three periods: the first of forty-nine years, during which the walls were completed; (they had been raised in fifty-two days, (2 Esd. 6:15) but many other fortifications were still requisite) the second of four hundred and thirty-four years, at the end of which Christ was baptized, in the fifteenth of Tiberius, the third of three years and a half, during which Christ preached. In the middle of this last week, the ancient sacrifices became useless, (C.) as the true Lamb of God had been immolated. Theod.—A week of years denotes seven years, as Lev. 25 and thus seventy of these weeks would make four hundred and ninety years. V. Bede. Rat. temp. 6 &c. W.—Origen would understand 4900 years, and dates from the fall of Adam to the ruin of the temple. Marsham begins twenty-one years after the captivity commenced, when Darius took Susa, and ends in the second of Judas, when the temple was purified. This system would destroy the prediction of Christ's coming, and is very uncertain. Hardouin modifies it, and acknowledges that Christ was the end of the prophecy, though it was fulfilled in figure by the death of Onias III. See 1 Mac. 1:19. Senens. Bib. viii. hæ. 12. and Estius. From C. 7 to 12 the changes in the East, till the time of Epiphanes, are variously described. After the angel had here addressed Daniel, the latter was still perplexed; (C. 10:1) and in order to remove his doubts, the angel informs him of the persecution of Epiphanes, as if he had been speaking of the same event. We may, therefore, count forty-nine years from the taking of Jerusalem (when Jeremias spoke, C. 6:19) to Cyrus, the anointed, (Is. 45:1) who was appointed to free God's people. They would still be under the Persians, &c. for other four hundred and thirty-four years, and then Onias should be slain. Many would join the Machabees; the sacrifices should cease in the middle of the seventieth week, and the desolation shall continue to the end of it. Yet, though this system may seem plausible, it is better to stick to the common one, which naturally leads us to the death of Christ, dating from the tenth year of Artaxerxes. C.—He had reigned ten years already with his father. Petau.—All the East was persuaded that a great king should arise about the time; when our Saviour actually appeared, and fulfilled all that had been spoken of the Messiah. C. Diss.—Ferguson says, "We have an astronomical demonstration of the truth of this ancient prophecy, seeing that the prophetic year of the Messiah being cut off was the very same with the astronomical." In a dispute between a Jew and a Christian, at Venice, the Rabbi who presided ... put an end to the business by saying, "Let us shut up our Bibles; for if we proceed in the examination of this prophecy, it will make us all become Christians." Watson, let. 6.—Hence probably the Jews denounce a curse on those who calculate the times, (H.) and they have purposely curtailed their chronology. C.—

Times, &c. (angustia temporum) which may allude both to the difficulties and opposition they met with in building, and to the shortness of the time in which they finished the wall, viz. fifty-two days. Ch.

Ver. 26. Weeks, or four hundred and thirty-eight years, which elapsed from the twentieth of Artaxerxes to the death of Christ, according to the most exact chronologists. C.—Slain. Prot. “cut off, but not for himself, and the people of the prince that,” &c. H.—S. Jerom and some MSS. read, Christus, et non erit ejus. The sense is thus suspended. The Jews lose their prerogative of being God’s people. C.—Christ will not receive them again. S. Jer.—Gr. “the unction shall be destroyed, and there shall not be judgment in him.” The priesthood and royal dignity is taken from the Jews. Theod.—The order of succession among the high priests was quite deranged, while the country was ruled by the Romans, and by Herod, a foreigner. C.—Leader. The Romans under Titus. Ch. C.

Ver. 27. Many. Christ seems to allude to this passage. Mat. 26:28. He died for all; but several of the Jews particularly, would not receive the proffered grace. C.—Of the week, or in the middle of the week, &c. Because Christ preached three years and a half: and then, by his sacrifice upon the cross, abolished all the sacrifices of the law. Ch.—Temple. Heb. “the wing,” (C.) or pinnacle, (H.) the highest part of the temple. C.—Desolation. Some understand this of the profanation of the temple by the crimes of the Jews, and by the bloody faction of the zealots. Others, of the bringing in thither the ensigns and standard of the pagan Romans. Others, in fine, distinguish three different times of desolation: viz. that under Antiochus; that when the temple was destroyed by the Romans; and the last near the end of the world, under antichrist. To all which, as they suppose, this prophecy may have a relation. Ch.—Prot. “For the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even unto the consummation; and that determined, shall be poured upon the desolate.” H.—The ruin shall be entire. C.

DANIEL 10

Ver. 1. Third. This concurs with the first of Darius. Cyrus then reigned in Persia, and the king is here often mentioned, as the vision happened near it, on the banks of the Tigris. Only twenty-one days had elapsed since the former.—Strength. Heb. “warfare,” or determinate time. Job 7:1. This shall surely take place, but not soon. C.—For. Prot. “and had understanding,” &c. H.—He was informed of the meaning, or strove to know what the preceding vision denoted. C.—Pharao and Baltassar were not prophets, as they did not comprehend what they saw. For understanding is requisite, in order that a vision may be prophetical. S. Tho. ii. 2. q. 175 a. 2. W.

Ver. 2. Weeks. Marsham says twenty-one years. But it means only so many days. He began to mourn on the third of Nisan, and continued fasting (v. 4) it seems even on the sabbaths, and on the feast of Passover, till the 24th. C.—He was grieved that the people did not make use of the leave granted by Cyrus; (Theod.) or because the Samaritans had prevailed at court to have the temple forbidden; (Usher, A. 3470, and 1 Esd. 1:1–4.) or rather because he could not fully understand the former visions. C. 9:3. and 12:9. &c. C.

Ver. 5. Linen. Heb. baddim.—Finest. Heb. uphaz, (H.) from Phasis or Ophir.

Ver. 6. Chrysolite. Heb. “Tharsis.” This precious stone was perhaps greenish.

Ver. 10. Hand; the Holy Ghost, or rather the angel Gabriel.

Ver. 11. Desires most amiable. C.—This new title is given to comfort the prophet. W.

Ver. 13. The prince, &c. That is, the angel guardian of Persia: who, according to his office, seeking the spiritual good of the Persians, was desirous that many of the Jews should remain among them. Ch.—S. Jerom, &c. explain it of the angel guardian. W.—Each country has an archangel over it, as individuals have an angel. Others assert that this was an evil angel; for how could a good one oppose so long the will of God? Yet this argument may be retorted, as evil spirits themselves must comply. It seems, therefore, that Cyrus was exhorted by the good angels to invade the Chaldeans, and thus to liberate God’s people. He was afraid of the hazardous attempt, and free-will may resist the inspirations of God.—One, or “prince.” C.—Michael, and the guardian of Daniel, joined their prayers for the liberation of the Jews. v. 20. W.

Ver. 14. Days. It will not soon take place; or, I have many things to tell.

Ver. 20. To thee? He awakens his attention (v. 14. C.) and gratitude. H.—Prince, angel guardian; or Alexander, who would one day rout the Persians. C. 11:2. C.

Ver. 21. Of truth, in the former sealed visions. C.—Your prince. The guardian general of the Church of God, (Ch.) as he was of the synagogue. C.

DANIEL 11

Ver. 1. Confirmed. Gabriel assisted Michael to comply with God's orders. C. 10:21. C.—The angel continues his speech, and informs us that he had prayed for Darius after the fall of Babylon, seeing that he was well-inclined towards the Jews, as his successor Cyrus (who liberated them) was also. W.

Ver. 2. Three, &c. Cambyses, Smerdis magus, and Darius the son of Hystaspes. Ch. W.—Cyrus had been mentioned before. C. 10:13. 20. Smerdis, or Artaxerxes, (1 Esd. 4:7) was the chief of the seven magi, and usurped the throne for six months after the death of Cambyses. C. —He had been declared king before (H.) by Patizites, his own brother. The news excited the fury of Cambyses, who mounting on horseback gave himself a mortal wound in the thigh. Herod. iii. 21. See Ezech. 38:21. H.—Fourth: Xerxes. Ch.—He invaded Greece with an immense army, forcing those on the road to join him. Just. i. 10. Herod. vii. and viii. C.

Ver. 3. A strong king: Alexander. Ch.—The sequel clearly points him out. Before fifteen years had elapsed, his mother, brother, and children were slain. Arideus, his brother, was declared regent till it should be seen what Rozanna should bring forth. After the death of those who might be heirs of Alexander, four general took the title of kings. Others governed in different places, but were destroyed by degrees.

Ver. 4. These four; Ptolemy, Seleucus, Antigonus, and Antipater, kings of Egypt, Syria, Asia, and Greece. C. 7:6 and 8:22. Besides the other generals, (C.) foreigners began to erect new kingdoms in what had formed the empire of Alexander. S. Jer. Livy xlv. C.

Ver. 5. South: Ptolemeus, the son of Lagus, king of Egypt, which lies south of Jerusalem. Ch.—S. Irenæus (iv. 43.) observes, that all prophecies are obscure till they be fulfilled. History shews that this relates to Ptolemy. The kingdoms of Egypt and of Syria are more noticed, as they had much to do with the Jews. W.—Ptolemy took Cyprus (C.) and Jerusalem. Jos. Ant. xii. 12.—His princes (that is, one of Alexander's princes) shall prevail over him; that is, shall be stronger than the king of Egypt. He speaks of Seleucus Nicator, king of Asia and Syria, whose successors are here called the kings of the north, because their dominions lay to the north in respect to Jerusalem. Ch.—Nicator means a “conqueror.” H.—This king was master of all from Media and Babylonia to Jerusalem. Appian, &c. C.—Philadelphus was more powerful than his father. W.

Ver. 6. South. Bernice, daughter of Ptolemeus Philadelphus, given in marriage to Antiochus Theos, grandson of Seleucus, (Ch.) and king of Syria. She brought a great “dowry,” and was therefore styled Phernophoros. Antiochus agreed to repudiate Laodicea; but he soon took her back. Fearing his inconstancy, she poisoned him, and slew his son by Bernice. This lady in a rage mounted her chariot, and having knocked down the cruel minister of such barbarity, trampled upon his body. The rest pretended that the infant was still living, and delivered up a part of the palace to Bernice, yet slew her as soon as they had an opportunity. S. Jer. Usher, A. 3758. V. Max. ix. 10. &c. C.

Ver. 7. A plant, &c. Ptolemeus Evergetes, the son of Philadelphus. Ch.—Three of Bernice’s maids of honour (H.) covered her body, and pretended that she was only wounded, till her brother Evergetes came and seized almost all Asia, Callinicus not daring to give him battle. S. Jer. &c. Vaillant. A. 79. Lagid. C.—He laid waste Syria. W.

Ver. 8. Gods. He took back what Cambyzes had conveyed out of Egypt; and it was on this account that the people styled him “benefactor.” S. Jer. C.—North. Seleucus Callinicus. Ch.—If Evergetes had not been recalled into Egypt by civil broils, he would have seized all the kingdom of Seleucus. Just. xvii.—As he passed by Jerusalem (v. 9) he made great presents, and caused victims of thanksgiving to be offered up. Jos. c. Ap. ii.

Ver. 10. His sons. Seleucus Ceraunius and Antiochus the great, the sons of Callinicus. Ch.—The former was poisoned after three years’ reign, as he marched against Attalus. Just. xxix.—Antiochus the great reconquered many provinces from Egypt, but was beaten at Raphia, on the confines, and lost Cœlo-syria. C.—He shall, &c. Antiochus the great. Ch.—He prosecuted the war, as his brother was prevented by death. W.

Ver. 11. South. Ptolemeus Philopator, son of Evergetes. Ch.—He was an indolent prince; but his generals gained the victory. C.

Ver. 12. Prevail. Many fell on both sides. H.—But Antiochus did not prevail; (W.) or rather Philopator neglected the opportunity of dethroning his rival, (C.) as he might have seized all his dominions, if he had not been too fond of ease. Just. xxx.—He followed the suggestions of his proud heart, when he attempted to enter the most holy place of the temple; and though he was visibly chastised by God, he would have vented his resentment on the Jews, if Providence had not miraculously protected them. 3 Mac. C. See Eccli. 50. H.

Ver. 13. Times, seventeen years after the battle of Raphia. When Philopator was dead, and his son Epiphanes not above five years old, Antiochus and Philip of Macedon basely attempted to divide his dominions. Scopas engaged Antiochus, but lost the battle, and all that Philopator had recovered. C.—Many revolted in Egypt on account of the arrogance of Agathocles, who ruled in the king's name. v. 14. S. Jer.

Ver. 14. Vision. Many Jews, deceived by Onias, erected a temple in Egypt, falsely asserting that they fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiahs, 19:19. W.—This Onias was the son of Onias III. who was slain at Antioch. C. 9:25. H.—The temple of Onion was called after him. All allow that he transgressed the law, by offering sacrifice there after God had pitched upon Jerusalem. But this was done (C.) under Philometor, forty-seven years (Usher) or longer after those times, when Epiphanes fought against Antiochus. The rebellion of the Jews against Egypt may therefore be meant. It was decreed that they should by under Antiochus, that his son might cause them to fall, (C.) and punish them for their crimes. H.

Ver. 15. Cities; Sidon, Gaza, and the citadel of Jerusalem, &c. C.

Ver. 16. Upon him. Antiochus shall come upon the king of the south. —Land: Judea. Ch.—Consumed, or “perfected.” Antiochus was very favourable to the Jews; (C.) invited all to return to Jerusalem, and furnished what was requisite for the sacrifices. Jos. Ant. xii. 3.

Ver. 17. Kingdom, viz. all the kingdom of Ptolemeus Epiphanes, son of Philopator. Ch.—The Romans interrupted Antiochus, who resolved to lull the young prince asleep, till he had subdued these enemies. C.—Of women. That is, a most beautiful woman, viz. his daughter Cleopatra. —It, viz. the kingdom of Epiphanes; but his policy shall not succeed; for Cleopatra shall take more to heart the interest of her husband than that of her father. Ch.—He came with her to Raphia, and gave her Judea, &c. for her dowry, reserving half of the revenues. Heb. and Gr. have, “to corrupt her;” (C.) Vulg. eam; as he wished his daughter to act perfidiously, that he might seize the whole kingdom. H.—Epiphanes and his generals were on their guard, and Cleopatra took part with her husband. S. Jer.

Ver. 18. Islands, near Asia. He also went into Greece, and was master of that country when the Romans declared war against him. C.—Of his reproach. Scipio, the Roman general, called the prince of his reproach, because he overthrew Antiochus, and obliged him to submit to very dishonourable terms, before he would cease from the war. Ch.—Prot. “for a prince for his own behalf shall cause the reproach offered by him to cease, without his own reproach he shall cause it to turn upon him.” H.—Being defeated at Magnesia, he chose the wisest plan of avoiding fresh reproach, by making peace, though (C.) the terms were very hard. Livy xxxvii.—He jokingly observed, that he was obliged to the Romans for contracting his dominions. Cic. pro Dejot.

Ver. 19. Found. Antiochus plundered the temple of the Elymaites to procure money; but they, (S. Jer.) or the neighbouring barbarous nations, rose up and slew him. Just. xxxii.

Ver. 20. One more vile. Seleucus Philopator, who sent Heliodorus to plunder the temple; and was shortly after slain by the same Heliodorus. Ch.—He reigned about twelve years; and had sent his own son, Demetrius, to be a hostage at Rome instead of Epiphanes, whom he designed to place at the head of an army to invade Egypt. Heb. “one who shall cause the exactor to pass over the glory of the kingdom,” the temple. 2 Mac. 3. C.

Ver. 21. One despised; viz. Antiochus Epiphanes, who at first was despised and not received for king. What is here said of this prince, is accommodated by S. Jerom and others to antichrist, of whom this Antiochus was a figure. Ch.—He lived and died basely; as the origin and end of antichrist will be ignominious. W.—All that follows, to the end of C. 12 regards Epiphanes. He had no title to the crown, which he procured by cunning, and held in the most shameful manner. He canvassed for the lowest offices, so that many styled him Epimanes, “the madman.” Diod. in Valesius, p. 305. C.

Ver. 22. Fighter. That is, of them that shall oppose him, and shall fight against him. Ch.—Heliodorus, who had murdered his brother and usurped the throne, and Ptolemy Epiphanes, were discomfited. The latter was making preparations against Seleucus, and said that his riches were in the purses of his friends, upon which they poisoned him. S. Jer. C.—Covenant, or of the league. The chief of them that conspired against him; or the king of Egypt, his most powerful adversary. Ch.—This title belongs to antichrist, who will join the Jews, and be received as their Messiah. S. Iren. v. 25. S. Jer. &c. Jo. 543. W.

Ver. 23. People. Epiphanes pretended to be tutor of Philometor. But the nobles of Egypt distrusted him; whereupon he came to a battle, near Pelusium, and the young king surrendered himself. His uncle thus took possession of Egypt with surprising facility. Yet the people of Alexandria crowned Evergetes, which occasioned a civil war. C.

Ver. 24. Places. Theodot. reads, "Egypt," omitting the b, (H.) which gives a good sense.— C.

Ver. 25. The king. Ptolemeus Philometor. Ch.—Epiphanes came under the pretext of restoring Philometor, and gained a victory over Evergetes; but returned in Syria, that the two brothers might weaken each other, (C.) while the Syrians formed designs against both. H.

Ver. 26. Slain. This was the perfidious policy of Epiphanes, who expected that the two brothers would destroy each other, so that he might easily seize Egypt, of which he kept the key, retaining the city of Pelusium. They were however reconciled, and reigned together. The Scripture often represents that as done which is only intended.

Ver. 27. Two kings: Epiphanes and Philometor.—Time. Epiphanes, vexed that he should thus be duped, returned again into Egypt. v. 29.

Ver. 28. Riches, taken in Egypt (C.) and in Jerusalem. H.—The people had refused to receive Jason; and Epiphanes treated them in the most barbarous manner, profaned the temple, &c. 1 Mac. 1:23 and 2 Mac. 6:21. C.

Ver. 30. Galleys. Heb. "ships of Chittim." H.—The ambassadors probably came in vessels belonging to Macedonia, (C.) which they found at Delos. Livy xliv.—Romans. Popilius and the other Roman ambassadors, who came in galleys, and obliged him to depart from Egypt. Ch.—He was only four or seven miles from Alexandria, and went to meet the ambassadors, who gave him the senate's letter, ordering him to desist from the war. He said he would consult his friends: but Popilius formed a circle round him with his wand, requiring an answer before he went out of it. Hereupon the king withdrew his forces. Polyb. xcii. V. Max. vi. 4.—Succeed. Apollonius massacred many Jews on the sabbath. 1 Mac. 1:30.—Against. Heb. "respecting." Prot. "have intelligence with them," &c. H.—These wretches prompted him to make such edicts, for he was attached to no religion. 2 Mac. 4:9.

Ver. 31. Arms, (brachia) or strong men, Apollonius, Philip, &c. (2 Mac. 6) and likewise the senator from Antioch, who executed his decrees. C.—Abomination. The idol of Jupiter Olympius, which Antiochus ordered to be set up in the sanctuary of the temple, which is here called the sanctuary of strength, from the Almighty that was worshipped there. Ch.—Other idols were set up, and the people were compelled to sacrifice. C.—Yet even in the hottest persecutions some remained faithful. W.

Ver. 32. Dissemble. Thus acted the officers and apostate Jews.—Know. Such were the Assideans, Eleazar, and the Machabees.

Ver. 33. Learned; the priests, Matthathias, &c. Mal. 2:7.

Ver. 34. Help. The victories of the Machabees were miraculous.—Deceitfully, like those who took the spoils of idols, and were slain. Heb. may imply, “secretly.” C.

Ver. 35. Fall, or became martyrs. H.—Such were Eleazar, &c. C.—Another time, after death; (H.) or the perfect deliverance shall take place later, v. 27.

Ver. 36. Every god. “He plundered many (C. or most; πλειστα. H.) temples.” Polyb. Athen. v. 6.—The Samaritans, and even the priests of the Lord, obeyed the impious decree; so that the king looked upon himself as a sort of god.—Accomplished against the Jews, when Epiphanes shall be punished.

Ver. 37. God. He laughed at religion, yet sometimes offered splendid presents and victims, which shewed his inconstancy. C.—Women. He kept many concubines, (Diod.) and committed the greatest obscenities publicly: mimis et scortis. S. Jer.—Heb. may have quite a different sense. He had no regard for the sex, (C.) killing all indiscriminately. Grot.

Ver. 38. The god Maozim. That is, the god of forces or strong holds. Ch.—Mahuzzim denotes “strong ones,” (H.) guardians, &c. Dr. Newton (Diss.) explains, the king (v. 36) of the Roman state; and supposes that here the guardian saints and angels are meant, whose worship he shews “began in the Roman empire, very soon after it became Christian. This exposition seems far preferable to that which interprets” Jupiter or the heavens, and understands the idol set up by Epiphanes. See Univ. Hist. x. Parkhurst.—If these authors speak of the inferior veneration shewn to saints and angels in the Catholic Church, it had a much earlier commencement, being coeval with religion itself. But only the blindest prejudice can represent this as idolatrous, and of course this system must fall to the ground. H.—Others suppose that Mars, Hercules, Azizus, or Jupiter, may be designated. Heb. “He will rise up against all, (38) and against the strong God (of Israel. v. 31. C. 8:10. C.) he will, in his place, worship a strange god, “&c. Jun.—None of the ancestors of Epiphanes had ever adored Jupiter on the altar of holocausts. C.—He and antichrist adore either the great Jupiter or their own strength. W.

Ver. 39. To. Heb. “in the most strong holds, with,” &c. H.—He built a fortress near the temple, styled Maoz, (Ezec. 24:25) on account of its strength. C.—Glory. He shall bestow honours, riches, and lands, upon them that shall worship his god. Ch.—He will entrust the strong places to them.

Ver. 40. Fight. Epiphanes made war on Egypt, till the Romans forced him to desist. The prophet explains his preceding attempts, to which he only alluded. v. 29, 30.

Ver. 41. Land; Egypt, or rather Judea. C.—Ammon. He will not divide his forces. S. Jer.

Ver. 43. Ethiopia. Heb. “the Lubim and Cushim shall be at his steps.” Theodot. reads, “in their fortresses.” He had troops from these nations, or Egypt was guarded by them.

Ver. 44. North. Judas continued victorious. Armenia (C.) and Parthia rebelled. Tacit. v. 8.—Many. Epiphanes left three generals and half his army to destroy the Jews. C.

Ver. 45. Apadno. Some take it for the proper name of a place; others, from the Heb. translate it, his palace. Ch.—He fixed his royal tent between the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea. W.—Porphyrius explains this of the march beyond the Euphrates, which S. Jerom does not disapprove. Apadno may denote Mesopotamia, which is styled Padan Aram.—Glorious. Heb. Zebi, C. or Tsebi, (H.) may allude to Mount Taba, where the king perished, without help. 1 Mac. 6:11 and 2 Mac. 9:9. S. Jerom and many others explain all this of antichrist, and no doubt he was prefigured. The like events will probably take place again towards the end of the world. But as the particulars cannot be ascertained, we have adhered to the history of Antiochus. C.

DANIEL 12

Ver. 1. Michael, “who is like God,” alludes to the name of the Machabees; Who is like unto thee among the gods? The archangel protected the Jews, while Epiphanes was engaged beyond the Euphrates.—Time. The nation was in the utmost distress. Only about seven thousand ill-armed men adhered to Judas: yet these delivered the country by God's decree.—Book. God seemed to keep a register of his friends. C.—Michael, the guardian of the Church, will protect her against antichrist, as her pastors will do visibly. W.

Ver. 2. Many. This shews the great number. All shall rise again. In a figurative sense, the Jews who seemed buried shall appear and fight.—To see. Heb. “everlasting.” C.—S. Jerom has not seen a d (H.) in the word. This text is express for eternal happiness or misery. C.—Some have understood, deraon, “stench,” or contempt, to denote the ignominy of the damned; but the prophet speaks of the times of the Machabees. Houbigant.—All shall rise in their bodies, but all shall not be changed for the better. 1 Cor. 15:51. W.

Ver. 3. Learned in the law of God and true wisdom, which consists in knowing and loving God. Ch.—Heb. “instructors.”—Instruct. Heb. “justify,” in the same sense. The Machabees and other priests, &c. who instructed people in the law, and stood up for its defence, may be meant. C.—“There is as much difference between a learned sanctity and a holy rusticity, as there is between heaven and the stars.” S. Jer.—Teachers, martyrs, and virgins are entitled to an aureola, or accidental reward, besides the essential beatitude. W.—Many. Th. and the Vulg. read, “and of the just many shall be like for an age and after.” S. Jer.

Ver. 4. Shut. The vision will not be understood till the event. C.—It is not to be interpreted by human wit, but by the spirit of God, wherewith the Church is enlightened and governed. S. Jer. in Gal. W.

Ver. 5. Two angels of Persia and Greece, near the Tigris. Maldon.

Ver. 6. I. Heb. “He.” Theod. Syr. and Arab. “they said” to Gabriel. C. 10:5. Angels ask questions of each other. C. 8:13.—Wonders. How long shall this be in the dark, and the misery continue?

Ver. 7. Heaven. He thus shews that he is not God. C.—Time often implies a year. C. 4:13. Hence he means three years and a half. Christ assures us that those days shall be shortened, (Mat. 24:22) and the persecutor shall tarry a short time. Apoc. 17:10 and 12:14. The same period is insinuated by 1290 days, (v. 11) and 1330. v. 12. The two witnesses prophesy 1260 days, during which the Church shall be fed in the wilderness. (Apoc. 12:6.) But the term is most exactly specified by forty-two months. Apoc. 11:2 and 13:5. Hence all the Fathers agree that the last persecution shall continue no longer. W.—How absurdly do some Prot. explain this of years during which, they say, the papacy shall subsist! Whence will they date its origin? But they will readily trifle with the word of God, and admit any one to indulge his fancy, as long as he does not strike at the thirty-nine articles. If he do, he may expect that treatment of poor Stone, (H.) whose death in the King's Bench, aged 75, has been just announced. He pleaded that one article decided, "nothing was to be maintained which could not be proved by Scripture." Yet he was deprived of his living by Dr. Porteus, who at one time was as eager to procure a change in the articles, yet was not prevented by his scruples from mounting the episcopal throne of Chester or of London. Stone had not this discretion. Rock. N. 306. He fell a victim to contradictory articles. He might be in error. But what right had Proteus to throw the first stone at him? or how will Protestants shew that any man is reprehensible for adopting the principles of the Reformation, which was entirely built on private interpretation? The applaud Luther, who established Scripture self-interpreted for the only rule, and they condemn Stone, Wesley, &c. for acting accordingly. If they have such just weights and measures for their own, what wonder then if the rights of Catholics be disregarded? H.—Half a time. The idol of Jupiter remained just three years. Yet the temple was not ready for sacrifices till other ten days had elapsed. They had been interrupted six months before that idol was set up. C.—We must date from the profanation and distress caused by Apollonius. 1 Mac. 4:52. Jos. S. Hypol. Usher, A. 3836. C.—Band. Lit. "hand." H.—When the people shall be destitute of strength, God will miraculously deliver them.

Ver. 8. Understand not. The prophets were obliged to pray, and sometimes to receive a fresh revelation to explain what they had seen. C. 9:2. 1 Pet. 1:11 and 1 Cor. 14:26. What regarded Antiochus and the Church was almost inexplicable before the event, as the times of antichrist are to us. v. 9.

Ver. 10. White, by persecution endured with patience. C. 11:35.—Learned. While the weak Jews will be scandalized at this treatment, the virtuous will reflect that suffering is a trial of God's servants, and a mark of predestination.

Ver. 11. Days: thirteen more than three and a half, as we reckon. The odd number might be neglected. v. 7. The abomination continued three years and ten days, but the sacrifices had been discontinued six months and three days before. See C. 8:14. If Daniel speak of lunar years, as is probable, the difference would only be two days. C.—From the abolishing of the mass as much as possible, and the practice of heresy and abomination, unto the end of antichrist's persecution, 1290 days shall elapse. W.

Ver. 12. Days. After the three years and a half, fifty-eight days will occur before the death of Antiochus, when Judas will disperse the troops of his three generals. C.—Some respite will be granted for forty-five days, during which sinners may repent. M.—It is difficult to say why forty-five days are here added to the former number. We are content to depart with Daniel, (v. 9) without searching any farther into these high mysteries. W.

Ver. 13. Lot. Thou shalt enjoy a glorious resurrection, (M.) and thy dignities till death, for which thou must prepare. C.—Days. “Hitherto,” says S. Jerom, “we read Daniel, in the Heb. volume; what follows, to the end, is translated from Theodotion’s edition.” H.—The history of Susanna is there placed at the beginning. C.—According to the order of time, it should be placed after the first chapter. M.

DANIEL 13

This history of Susanna, in all the ancient Greek and Latin Bibles, was placed in the beginning of the Book of Daniel, till S. Jerom, in his translation, detached it from thence, because he did not find it in the Hebrew; which is also the case of the history of Bel and the dragon. But both the one and the other are received by the Catholic Church, and were from the very beginning a part of the Christian Bible. Ch.—Daniel seems not to have written the history of Susanna, at least in the volume which contains his prophecies, though it be unquestionably canonical. A. Lapidé.—It has been doubted whether it was ever in Heb. C.—But Origen solves the difficulties of Africanus. H.—Susanna means “lily,” and is proposed as a pattern of conjugal chastity. C.—Daniel was about twelve years old when he disclosed the malice of her accusers. S. Aug. ser. 242. de temp. W.

Ver. 5. Judges. The Jews say they were Achab and Sedecias, (Orig.) as this text seems to allude to Jer. 29:21 or 33:14. But how were they burnt? since the Jews appear to have stoned them, unless they were delivered up to the king’s officers. v. 61. C.—The captives under Joakim, were better treated than those who were taken nineteen years afterwards, when all fell into a heavier bondage. W.—The might enjoy possessions, (H.) and have judges of their nation. C.—Cappel. urges this difficulty, and many others, to shew that this account is fabulous. But as the Jews were allowed to follow their religion, the Chaldees would strive to keep them in good order. It is not said that Joakim was one of the captives. He might have settled long before at Babylon, where Helcias probably brought up his daughter in the fear of God. v.

3. The judges might also have had authority before over the Israelites, in Assyria, who were now all under the same government. v. 57.
Houbigant. Pref.

Ver. 7. Noon, at which time the Jews dined, (v. 13. Jos. vita) and the streets were as little frequented as they are at night among us. Hence the judges thought this a fit opportunity. C.

Ver. 9. Mind. They were distracted by love, (H.) and rendered foolish.

Ver. 18. Back door, leading from the house. Strangers came by the other gates. C.—Susanna had not perhaps at first intended to bathe. Cappel. accuses her of imprudence, without reason. He cannot believe that the old judges would be so sottish as they appear to have been.
Houbigant.

Ver. 22. Death of the soul, (S. Jer.) and also of the body, if the adultery were detected. How much does Susanna surpass the famed Lucretia, who slew herself to shew that she had not consented to her violation! Si adultera cur laudata? Si pudica cur occisa? S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. i. 19. S. Amb. de Sp. iii. 3. C.

Ver. 24. Out. so the law ordained, when a woman was assaulted. H.

Ver. 29. People, for greater shew of justice. W.—We here behold the forms.

Ver. 32. Uncovered, pretending that respect for the company required it, or perhaps that they might detect her guilt by her blushes. C.—But their real motive is here disclosed. H.

Ver. 34. Head, saying, “Thy malice brings on this chastisement, and not we.” Lyran.—They appear to discharge their conscience, (Lev. 1:4 and 24:14) no as judges but as accusers. The people pass sentence. v. 41. Adulteresses were stoned. Lev. 20:10. C.

Ver. 41. Death. The multitude approved of this sentence, which the judges pronounced, pretending to act agreeably to the law. Deut. 22. W.

Ver. 45. Boy. He was about twelve years old. S. Ign. ad Magn. Sulpit. ii. Theod.—He might walk out, though he lodged at court. Houbig.—God enabled him to declare that Susanna was innocent. The people had consented to her death, but he stands up in her defence. W.

Ver. 46. Clear. This form is often used. Acts 18:6. Mat. 27:24.

Ver. 48. Truth. They had taken no precautions to ascertain it; which they ought to have done the more, as Susanna had always been highly esteemed. C.—As the witnesses were positive, she must die, except their falsehood could be manifested, which not suspected. Houbig.

Ver. 50. Old men. They speak sarcastically; or rather other senators, who had not been in the plot, address Daniel.

Ver. 55. Two. This punishment was not unusual: yet it is probable that the two old men were stoned to death by the law of retaliation. v. 61. Ex. 19:4. There is an allusion, in Greek, between schinon and schisei, and also between Prinos and prisei; (v. 58, 59) and hence it is concluded that this work was originally in that language. But there might be a similar allusion in Heb. or Chal. or the translator might think it lawful to put one tree for another. C.—We find a tree called shinar, in Persia. Tavern. iv. 6. It would be easy to produce similar allusions in the Latin ilex; thus ilico peribis, &c. M.

Ver. 57. Israel, when you were judges in Assyria. v. 5. H.—Conversed. No one could be alone with women, in the East, without suspicion.

Ver. 61. Neighbour; stoning or strangling them, unless they gave them up to Nabuchodonosor's officers. v. 5. C.

Ver. 64. Forward. By this first prophetical act Daniel acquired fame, (W.) which he retained till the death of Astyages. Maldon. M.

Ver. 65. Astyages, or Darius. C. 5:31. This belongs to the following chapter (C.) or to the 9th. W.—Cyrus. Little is known about his birth or death. Yet all agree that he conquered the Chaldeans. C.

DANIEL 14

Ver. 1. Guest. It seems most probable that the king here spoken of was Evilmerodac, the son and successor of Nabuchodonosor, and a great favourer of the Jews; (Ch. W.) or it might be Darius, (Houbig.) or Cyrus, under whose reign S. Irenæus (iv. 11.) and others place this history. C.—The more correct Greek editions begin with the preceding verse. M.—Sept. read, "Prophecy of Abaum, son of Juda, of the tribe of Levi. There was a priest, Daniel, son of Abda, who was a guest of the king of Babylon," &c. See Pref. H.

Ver. 19. Angry. Cappel thinks the priests would not be so easily caught, or that such an imposture would not be so long concealed. But it was their interest to keep the secret, particularly if the king furnished the provisions; and in the night time they would not perceive the small ashes. Houbig.—The pagans stupidly believed (C.) that the idols eat. Aristoph. Plutus. iii. 2.—All the objections against this history are refuted by Jer. 51:5. Houbigant.—It is wonderful that so learned a man as Cappel should urge so many. H.

Ver. 22. Dragon. The devil had seduced our first parents in the form of a serpent, and caused most nations to adore it. C.—They expected benefit, or to be preserved from harm. Valer. i. 8. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xiv. 11. W.

Ver. 26. Asunder, being choked, and not poisoned. Vales. 81. M.—The throat is narrow. Solin. 43.

Ver. 27. Jew, or “a Jew is king;” Daniel governs all. Grot.

Ver. 28. House. Religion is daring. Darius was weak, and only a sort of viceroy, left by Cyrus. Houbig.

Ver. 30. The den of lions. Daniel was twice cast into the den of lions: once under Darius, the Mede, because he had transgressed the king’s edict, by praying three times a day; and another time under Evilmerodac, by a sedition of the people. This time he remained six days in the lions’ den; the other time only one night. Ch.

Ver. 31. Carcasses: people condemned, (C.) or dead. Houbig.

Ver. 32. Habacuc. The same, as some think, whose prophecy is found among the lesser prophets: but others believe him to be different. Ch.—About twenty years before there was no prophet in Judea. C. 3:38. Habacuc, the eighth of the minor prophets, lived before the Babylonian monarchy was formed. C. 1:6. W.—Yet he might still survive. If this had not been a true history, such an extraordinary mode of conveyance would not have been mentioned. Cappel imagines it was an allusion to Philip, the deacon, and fabricated by some Christian. But Theodotion found it in Heb. (Houbig.) and he was no friend to Christianity when he wrote; though he had once followed Tatian, and the Marcionites. H.

Ver. 39. Seventh. He had not come before, supposing he was dead, till at last a rumour got to his ears, notwithstanding the precautions of the Babylonians, who hoped that Daniel would be starved to death. Houbigant, Proleg. p. 2. p. 425 which end here.

Ver. 40. Daniel. Gr. adds, “besides thee there is no other.” H.

Ver. 41. Den, by the law of retaliation. C. 6:24. M.

Ver. 42. Then, &c. is not in Greek nor in the ancient MSS. of S. Jerom. The verse may be taken from C. 2:26. C.

OSEE

THE PROPHECY OF OSEE

INTRODUCTION

Osee, or Hosea, whose name signifies a saviour, was the first in the order of time among those who are commonly called lesser prophets, because their prophecies are short. He prophesied in the kingdom of Israel, (that is, of the ten tribes) about the same time that Isaias prophesied in the kingdom of Juda. Ch.—The chronological order is not observed in any edition. The Sept. very from the rest. They place the less before the greater prophets, and read some of the names rather differently, as Prot. do also, though they have nothing but novelty to recommend the change. We shall here specify the Prot. names, (H.) in the order in which these prophets appeared: (C.) 1. Hosea, 2. Amos, 3. Jonah, 4. Micah, 5. Nahum, 6. Joel, 7. Zephaniah, 8. Habakkuk, 9. Obadiah, 10. Haggai, 11. Zechariah, 12. Malachi. H. —It is not known who collected them into one volume. but the book of Ecclesiasticus (49:12) speaks of the twelve; and 4 Esd. 1:39 specifies them as they are found in the Sept. Osee, Amos, Micheas, Joel, Abdias, Jonas, Nahum, &c. as in the Vulg. C.—Many other prophets appeared before these, (W.) but Osee is the first of the sixteen whose works are extant. He must have continued his ministry about eighty-five years, and lived above one hundred and ten, if the first verse speaks of him alone. But some take it to regard the whole collection, and may be added by another hand. C.—The style of Osee is sententious and very hard to be understood, (S. Jer.) as but little is known of the last kings of Israel, in whose dominions he lived, and to whom he chiefly refers, though he speaks sometimes of Juda, &c. C.—By taking a wife, and other parables, he shews their criminal conduct and chastisement, and foretells their future deliverance and the benefits to be conferred by Christ. We must observe that the prophets often style the kingdom of the two tribes, Juda, Benjamin, Jerusalem, or the house of David; and that of the ten tribes, Ephraim, Joseph, Samaria, Jezrahel, Bethel, or Bethaven; and often Israel or Jacob till after the captivity of these tribes, when the latter titles refer to Juda, who imitated the virtues of Jacob better than the other kingdom. W.—Then all distinction of this nature was at an end. H.

OSEE 1

Ver. 1. Israel. He reigned forty-one years, till A.M. 3220. Usher.—The prophets usually give the date, that the prediction may be verified. Some Latin MSS. intimate, that “the Jews attribute these titles to Esdras, (who is Malachias) or to the respective prophets, which is more probable.” S. Jer. t. i.—Jeroboam II. died twenty-six years before Ozias, towards the end of whose reign Isaias commenced; so that Osee was more ancient. W.

Ver. 2. Fornications. That is, a wife that hath been given to fornication. This was to represent the Lord’s proceedings with his people Israel, who, by spiritual fornication, were continually offending him. Ch.—The prophet reclaimed her. S. Jer.—She denoted Samaria, abandoned to idolatry. Eze. 16:15. Several such actions were prophetic. Many have supposed that this was only a parable; but the sequel proves the contrary. C.—Of fornications. So called from the character of the mother, if not also from their own wicked dispositions. Ch.—He is ordered to marry a woman who had been of a loose character, and to have children who would resemble her; (W.) or he takes her children to his house; (Grot.) unless the children of the prophet were so styled because the mother had been given to fornication. So the rod of Aaron retains its name when it was become a serpent. Ex. 7:12.—Shall, or rather, “has departed;” and therefore he denounces future chastisements.

Ver. 4. Jezrahel. Jehu slew Joram in this place. He was the instrument of God’s justice, yet acted himself through malice and ambition, and was therefore deservedly punished. Zacharias, the fourth of his family, lost the crown, and was slain by Sellum, at Jezrahel. 4 K. 9 &c. C.—The offspring of Jehu, now on the throne, solicited Jezrahel or the ten tribes to idolatry, which God will revenge. W.

Ver. 6. Without mercy. Lo Ruchamah. Ch.—Some copies of Sept. and S. Paul read, “not beloved.” Rom. 9:25. Samaria shall surely perish. After the death of Jeroboam II. the kingdom was all in confusion, and in sixty-two years time became extinct. It was afterwards blended with Juda.

Ver. 7. Horsemen. Sennacherib was miraculously disconcerted. Juda returned from captivity and became more flourishing, giving birth to the Messias. C.

Ver. 9. Not my people. Lohammi. Ch.—The kingdom of Israel seemed to be quite cast off; and in captivity it was hardly distinguished from other nations. Juda was preserved longer, and at all times was under the divine protection. Ezechiel, Daniel, &c. comforted the people in the worst of their afflictions. C.

Ver. 10. The number, &c. viz. of the true Israelites, the children of the Church of Christ. Ch.—This is the primary sense. Rom. 9:25. Yet the Israelites are here also assured of their return from captivity. C.—God. Among many sinners, some are chosen. W.

Ver. 11. Head; Christ, (Ch.) the head of all the faithful, (W.) consisting both of Jews and Gentiles. Israel and Juda returned under Zorobabel, &c. C.—The prophets blend present and future transactions together. S. Jer. in C. iii.—Jezrahel. That is, of the seed of God; for Jezrahel signifies the seed of God. Ch.—For may also be rendered, “when or though.” The seed of Jehu shall be exterminated. The kingdom, signified by Jezrahel, a great city, shall fall. C.

OSEE 2

Ver. 1. Brethren, &c. Or, call your brethren, My people; and your sister, Her that hath obtained mercy. This is connected with the latter end of the foregoing chapter, and relates to the converts of Israel. Ch.—I seemed to have abandoned them at the great day of carnage; (H.) but I will still receive (C.) this portion of my people, as well as Juda. H.—Disdain not to call them brethren. More of the ten tribes than of the others embraced the faith of Christ, and more Gentiles than Jews became converts. W.

Ver. 2. Your mother: the synagogue. C.—He addresses Juda, (v. 11, 15) or all God’s people. C. 1:11. This vineyard yields no good fruit. Is. 5 Idolatry prevails. Ezech. 16:5 and 23:3.

Ver. 3. Drought. In Egypt the people were plunged into idolatry, and oppressed. C.

Ver. 4. Fornications. They imitate their parents. H.—I will not spare them, as I did some in the wilderness. S. Jer.—Punishment will not cease till people repent. W.

Ver. 5. Lovers: idols, and foreign nations. Ezech. 16:15, 33.

Ver. 6. Paths. The aid which she sought from foreigners shall prove vain.—It is often an effect of mercy, when our wicked plans miscarry. S. Jer.

Ver. 8. Baal: or they formed idols.

Ver. 9. Season. When the harvest is ripe, the loss is more afflicting. God withdraws what proves an occasion of sin.—Liberty. The creature serves unwillingly. Rom. 8:21.

Ver. 10. Folly, or shame. Gen. 34:7. Judg. 19:23.

Ver. 11. Times. This was verified during the captivity.

Ver. 13. Ear. Heb. “nose-ring,” or ornaments hanging from the nose. C.

Ver. 14. I will allure her, &c. After her disloyalties, I will still allure her by my grace, &c. and send her vine-dressers, viz. the apostles, originally her own children, who shall open to her the gates of hope; as heretofore, at her coming into the land of promise, she had all good success after she had satisfied the divine justice by the execution of Achan, in the valley of Achor. Jos. 7. Ch.—Sept. “I will seduce or make her stray;” $\pi\lambda\alpha\nu\omega$. H.—I will permit her to yield to error, in captivity; (Theod.) or will cause her hopes to be frustrated yet in exile I will comfort her. The Jews were not changed till they had seen the vanity of idols, and suffered much. C.—God’s grace prevents sinners, that they may be converted. W.

Ver. 15. Vine. Heb. “vineyards there,” (C.) or “from,” &c. H.—Achor. The environs of Jericho were very enchanting. Is. 65:10.—Sing is better than Sept. “shall be humbled.” Heb. “shall answer,” as people singing alternately. C.

Ver. 16. My husband. In Heb. Ishi.—Baali: my lord. The meaning of this verse is: that, whereas, Ishi and Baali were used indifferently in those days by wives speaking to their husbands, the synagogue, whom God was pleased to consider as his spouse, should call him only Ishi, and abstain from the name of Baali, because of his affinity with the name of the idol Baal. Ch.—The very name shall become obsolete. H.

Ver. 17. Baalim. It is the plural number of Baal; for there were divers idols of Baal. Ch.—The Jews hence styled Esbaal, Isboseth; as boseth means “confusion.” 1 Par. 8:33.

Ver. 18. Beasts. The most savage nations shall receive the gospel, and become mild. Is. 11:6. Theod.—Wild beasts shall not infest the land. Lev. 26:22. C.

Ver. 19. I will espouse thee, &c. This relates to the happy espousals of Christ with his Church, which shall never be dissolved. Ch.—God gives the dowry, justice, &c.

Ver. 20. Faith, the root of all virtues. We shall be true to each other. This has been realized only in the Church of Christ. C.

Ver. 21. Hear the heavens, &c. All shall conspire in favour of the Church, which in the following verse is called Jezrahel, that is, the seed of God. Ch.—Harmony shall subsist between all the parts of the universe. The earth shall receive rain, &c. This happiness was enjoyed in figure by the Jews, after their return, and in reality by Christians. Theod.

Ver. 22. Jezrahel. This most fruitful valley shall again be covered with abundant crops. The whole nation of the Jews shall be happy. C.

Ver. 24. That which is not my people, &c. This relates to the conversion of the Gentiles, (Ch.) as the apostles explain it. 1 Pet. 2:10. Rom. 9. W.

OSEE 3

Ver. 1. Woman. This second woman denotes the penitent Israel, yet not quite reconciled. The people in captivity are separated both from her idols and from God, though the latter still retains an affection for them. Osee does not marry this woman, but gives his word. We must not urge the parable too far. He acts as a figure of the Lord, who had received an outrage. C.—Grace is still offered to sinners, whose persons are never hated by God. W.—Husks. Sept. &c. “cakes made with grapes,” for idols. Theod. S. Jer.

Ver. 2. Core. Sept. “gomor of barley, and for a nebel of wine.” The woman must consequently have been of very mean condition. In the East wives are still, even among Christians, purchased according to their rank, often without being seen or consulted. The parents give part of the price to the bride. C.—The unbelieving Jews, who refrain from idols, receive some temporal advantages; but not thirty pieces of silver, or three cores of wheat, denoting the faith of the blessed Trinity and the observance of the decalogue, whereby they might obtain eternal life. Towards the end of the world they shall be converted. W.

Ver. 3. Man's. After the person was espoused, any infidelity was punished as if she had been married. It does not appear that Osee took this woman to wife. C.—But he signified that the people must wait for God, in captivity. Theod. Sanct. lv.

Ver. 4. Altar. Heb. “statue;” matseba instead of mozbe, as (H.) others agree with S. Jerom, and there seems to have been no variation in his time.—Theraphim. Images or representations, (Ch.) either good or bad. As the other things mentioned were good, such lawful images as were used in the temple must be meant. 3 K. 7:36. W.—S. Jerom explains it of cherubim. Sept. “altar, priesthood, and manifestations (Urim, &c.) being wanting.” H.—Yet some take it in a bad sense. The Jews adhere neither to God nor to idols. Vat. &c.—What misfortune, however, would the latter be? In exile the Jews were deprived of the exercise of their religion, and of their princes. C.—But this was only a figure of what they endured since they rejected Christ. Orig. Philoc. i. S. Jer.—This wretched state will probably continue till they at last embrace the yoke of Christ, the true king of ages. C.

Ver. 5. David, their king. That is, Christ, who is of the house of David. Ch.—After the captivity, the Jews submitted to Zorobabel. Yet this only foreshewed a more sincere conversion to Jesus Christ. In fact, the house of David never regained the throne, (C.) and it is not clear that Zorobabel had any authority over the people. H.—Christ is the literal object of this prediction. C.

OSEE 4

Ver. 1. Israel. They are chiefly addressed, (Chal. S. Jer. C.) or what follows to v. 15, regards all. W.—Judgment. Heb. “a trial.”—Mercy. The want of humanity and of practical knowledge is urged. C.—The knowledge of God includes the observance of the commandments. 1 Jo. 2:4. W.—This science alone is requisite. Jer. 9:3. Is. 5:13. Blind leaders prove their own and other's ruin.

Ver. 2. Blood. The successors of Jeroboam II. were mostly murdered. C.—Incestuous marriages take place. H.

Ver. 3. Together. The waters shall be dried up, or infected. C.—When the people are taken away, beasts will not long remain. Jer. 9:10. Soph. 1:2. H.

Ver. 4. Judge, &c. As if he would say: It is in vain to strive with them, or reprove them, they are so obstinate in evil. Ch.—Priest. Such must be slain. Deut. 17:12. C.—Sept. “my people are like a priest contradicted,” (H.) or degraded. Theod.

Ver. 5. Prophet, both true and false.—Night of tribulation. Heb. and Sept. “I have compared thy mother to the night.”

Ver. 6. Silent. Sept. “like those who had,” &c.—Knowledge. Jeroboam I. had appointed unlawful priests, and some of the house of Aaron went over to him, and were excluded from officiating at Jerusalem, after the captivity. 2 K. 12:31. Eze. 44:10. Knowledge is always expected of priests. Deut. 17:8. Mal. 2:7. Gratian. dist. 38. c. omnes. C.—When the power of sacrificing is withdrawn, all spiritual functions cease, as sacrifice belongs properly to a priest. W.

Ver. 7. Me. A father rejoices in a numerous offspring. But my people take occasion to offend me the more they increase. C.

Ver. 8. Sins: victims. W.—Iniquity; or “they seek for support in their propitiatory offerings,” and lull the people asleep in their sins. The priests of the golden calf imitated the sacred rites of Moses. It would have been too difficult to make the people change altogether.

Ver. 9. Priest. They are equally dissolute, and shall meet the like punishment.—Devices, or thoughts. C.—Cogitatio mali operis pœnas luet. S. Jer.

Ver. 10. Ceased. Heb. “increased.” They have no children living. C.—Sept. “let them not succeed.”

Ver. 11. Understanding. Lit. “heart.” H.—Some sins darken reason more than others; but none so much as spiritual fornication. W.

Ver. 12. Staff. It was customary to use this mode of divination, (Eze. 21:21) and likewise incense. v. 13.—Oak. These terms are variously rendered as the trees and stones mentioned in Scripture, will probably never be ascertained.

Ver. 14. Visit. This is the most dreadful of God’s judgments. He permits those who offend him to receive discontent from their own families.—Effeminate, like the Galli, &c. (S. Jer.) and votaries of Priapus. 3 K. 15:11. Heb. “the consecrated women.” Sept. “initiated,” to honour a lewd idol by prostitution. C.—Beaten. Sept. “adhere to a harlot. But thou, Israel, be not ignorant, and Juda go," &c. H.

Ver. 15. Offend. It was more culpable for Juda to commit idolatry (as they had the temple, &c. of the true God) than for Israel, whom Jeroboam hindered from going to Jerusalem, after he had set up his golden calves. W.—Galgai and Bethaven. Places where idols were worshipped. Bethel, which signifies the house of God, is called by the prophet Bethaven, that is the house of vanity, from Jeroboam's golden calf which was worshipped there. Ch.—Galgai was on the confines of the two kingdoms, and always venerated by the Jews. Idols had been there in ancient times, and probably a sort of oracle. Judg. 3:19. If Israel be thus abandoned, let not Juda imitate them. C.—Lord. Profane not this sacred name by giving it to idols. Theod.—Use not this expression, since you do not worship me. S. Jer.

Ver. 16. Wanton. Sept. "stung," or rendered furious. Thus Israel gives way to ungovernable passions. The people shall be led into captivity, and have room to range about.

Ver. 17. Partaker. Heb. "tied to abominations."—Alone. His case is desperate. C.—Sept. "he has placed stumbling-blocks for himself." H.

Ver. 18. Separated from that allowed to God's people. Deut. 12:12. Heb. "insipid," or spoiled. Chal. "their princes have sought after banquets." Sept. "He has provoked (surpassed) the Chanaanites." These two have not read as we do.—They. Heb. "their shields (chiefs) have loved shame:" dissolute practices, or "presents," which are disgraceful. C.—Sept. "They have loved shame by her rage. (19) A whirlwind shall whistle in," &c. H.

Ver. 19. Wings. They shall be quickly removed hence. C.

OSEE 5

Ver 1. Of priests. What is said of priests in this prophecy is chiefly understood of the priests of the kingdom of Israel; who were not true priests of the race of Aaron, but served the calves at Bethel and Dan. Ch.—They had the name of priests, and pretended to act as such. 3 K. 12. W.—There were some apostates among them. C. 4:6. But they lost all authority.—To them. Lit. "to the watch:" speculationi. Heb. "at Maspha," (H.) in Galaad, where a profane altar was erected. C. 6:8. C.

Ver. 2. Depth, or pits of fire, where victims were sometimes thrown. Iphigen. Grot.—By substituting th for t, we might read, "they have dug pits to take them.” C. 9:9. Jos. 23:13. C.—Idolatry leads to the abyss. H.

Ver. 4. Known. Fornication had darkened their intellect. C.

Ver. 5. Answer. Sept. “be humbled.” It appears openly, so as to deserve condemnation. H.

Ver. 6. Them. He will receive their victims no longer. Is. 1:11. C.—In vain do they expect to escape by this appearance of sanctity, while they continue in sin. H.

Ver. 7. Strangers. That is, aliens from God: and therefore they are threatened with speedy destruction. Ch.—Their offspring is rebellious, and deserves no longer to be called my people. C. 1:9.—Month. Every month the Assyrians shall come upon them; (Chal. S. Jer.) or, in the space of one month, they shall perish. C.—Sept. “the mildew shall eat them and their portions.” H.

Ver. 8. Back. Bethel lay northwest of Benjamin. The two tribes would hear the distress of Israel, that they might beware and avoid the like misconduct. C.—The captivity is here described. W.

Ver. 9. That. Lit. “faith,” (H.) that my word shall come to pass.

Ver. 10. Bound. This was a capital crime, under Numa, and forbidden. Deut. 19:14. C.—Juda hoped to seize what was abandoned. S. Jer.—They deferred doing penance, and removed the boundaries set by their fathers, (Theod. C.) the virtuous patriarchs, whom they would not imitate.

Ver. 11. Oppression. Lit. “calumny.” H. Is. 52:4.—The Assyrians had no just reason for attacking Israel, though their crimes called for punishment (C.) from God. H.

Ver. 13. Avenging. Heb. and Sept. Jareb, (S. Jer.) which some explain of the king of Egypt; others understand the Assyrian; (C. 10:6) while most suppose that Ephraim applied to Phul, and Juda sent to a protecting king, Theglathphalassar. 4 K. 16:7 and 17:4. C.

Ver. 14. Lioness. Heb. and Sept. “panther.” H.—The Assyrians, instead of assisting, proved the ruin of both kingdoms.

Ver. 15. Place; to heaven. I will abandon my temple. C.—Face: “they will seek the absent.” S. Jer.

OSEE 6

Ver. 1. Early, or in haste. All the people will repent. C.

Ver. 2. Cure us. God is always ready to receive penitents. W.

Ver. 3. Third. In a short time the Lord will easily set us free. But the prophet refers more directly to the resurrection of the faithful, and of Christ. Eph. 2:5 and 1 Cor. 15:4. C.—S. Paul mentions the third day according to the Scriptures, which nowhere else so clearly specify it. W. See S. Jer. S. Cyp. Sanct. 9.—Know. Hitherto we have been reproached with voluntary ignorance in adoring idols. C. 4:6. We will amend.—His, Christ's.—Rain. It falls only in autumn and in spring. Deut. 11:14. C.

Ver. 4. Mercy. Heb. chesed, (H.) “piety,” &c. (Grot.) whence the word Assideans is derived. 1 Mac. 2:42. The captives flattered themselves, that as soon as they began to entertain sentiments of repentance, God would relieve them. But he answers that their virtue is inconstant, and that they must suffer in proportion to their crimes.

Ver. 5. Mouth. I have ordered my prophets to denounce death unto them, and to treat them roughly, like a piece of marble designed for a statue. Sept. &c. “I have slain thy prophets,” &c. by Elias, Jehu, &c. The former sense is preferable.—Thy judgments, or condemnation. C.—Heb. “and thy judgments light shall go forth.” H.—Pocock labours hard, but in vain, to explain this; as all the old versions, except the Vulg. have, “my judgments as the light,” &c. Heb. letters may probably have been ill joined, (Kennicott) as Meibomius suspects they have been also. Jer. 23:33. Here umospoti caur, “my judgments as the light,” &c. is exchanged for umishpatec or. This would be very easy when words were written undivided, as in ancient MSS. H.—“Some transcriber upon hearing umishpatecaor, from the person dictating to him, writ umishpateca or instead of umishpate caor. Kennicott, Diss. 1.

Ver. 6. Mercy: sincere piety. v. 4.—Sacrifice. They had offered many. C. 5:6. C.—“My victims are the salvation of the faithful, and the conversion of sinners.” S. Jer.—Knowledge, of a practical nature, which was deficient. C. 4:6 and 6:4. C.

Ver. 7. Adam. A compact was made with him, that if he continued faithful or otherwise, his posterity should be born in original justice or sin. H.—He transgressed, and was expelled from paradise, as the Jews were from their land. Sept. “like a man:” like any who had not been so highly favoured with the law, &c. C.—Adam means “a man,” and sometimes it would be as well rendered in this sense. H.

Ver. 8. Supplanted with blood. That is, undermined and brought to ruin for shedding of blood; and, as it is signified in the following verse, for conspiring with the priests, (of Bethel) like robbers, to murder in the way such as passed out of Sichem to go towards the temple of Jerusalem. Or else supplanted with blood signifies flowing in such a manner with blood, as to suffer none to walk there without embruing the soles of their feet in blood. Ch.—Thus they would become unclean, and might easily slip. H.—Galaad was famous for the treaty between Laban and Jacob; and all such places were chosen for altars in the latter times of the two kingdoms. Maspha or Ramoth were the usual resorts. Theodoret reads, “Galgal.” C. 4:15. C.

Ver. 9. Robbers. Jephte had infested those parts, and the country was noted for murders; whence more cities of refuge were appointed in it. Judg. 11 and Jos. 20:8. The prophet alludes to what had been said to Gad. Gen. 49:19.—Out of, or to Sichem. They were jealous of people going thither, (C.) wishing to receive their offerings themselves. H.

Ver. 11. Harvest. This implies punishment or felicity. The turn of Juda shall come, and he shall be chastised; but after the captivity, he shall enjoy plenty. C. 2:15. Is. 9:3. C.

OSEE 7

Ver. 1. Israel. God divided the kingdom, that by this chastisement the people might be converted. But Jeroboam set up calves, and caused them to grow worse. W.—How often did God send his prophets to reclaim them!—Without. Most of the kings were of this stamp, while foreign nations invaded the land.

Ver. 2. Face. I do not search (C.) into their past lives; they sin publicly, and without ceasing. I have been too indulgent. H.

Ver. 3. Glad, &c. To please Jeroboam and their other kings, they have given themselves up to the worship of idols, which are mere falsehood and lies. Ch.—We do not find one good king of Israel. C.—But Jeroboam principally caused Israel to sin. H.—His infernal policy changed the religion of his subjects.

Ver. 4. Leaven. Jeroboam invited the people simply to a feast, and used no violence to make them adopt his novelties. But they soon prevailed, and brought on ruin. The cake, or whole nation, was burnt,

(v. 8) as well as the princes. v. 7. C.

Ver. 5. Princes. The chief men joined in the schism and idolatry. W.—Mad, with drinking at the king's coronation, or at his coming to the crown. C.—Bacchus presents three cups to the wise; the fourth is the cup of petulance, the fifth of shouts, the sixth of debauchery, &c. Athen. Dipsc. ii. 1. Eccli. 31:38.—Scorners. Sept. “pestilent people,” who turn religion and piety to ridicule. Instead of repressing them, the king admits them to favour.

Ver. 6. Them. Jeroboam seduces the subjects of the house of David, by indulging the passions of the great and small. He may then sleep; the poison gains ground. C.—But soon his own family will feel the direful effects of his policy. H.

Ver. 7. Judges, or rulers. Idolatry proved fatal to all. v. 3.

Ver. 8. Mixed, like oil and flour. Heb.—Ashes. Thin cakes (C.) of this kind are used by the poor, in Spain, (Sanct.) and by the Arabs. Thevenot. Levant. xxxii.—Turned. There was no time allowed by the enemy, who came and took the Israelites away. C.—They became like other nations, and would not repent. W.

Ver. 9. Strangers: kings of Assyria, Damascus, &c.—Hairs. He is grown old in misery, and yet is insensible of it, and sees not that he will shortly cease to be a people. Is. 7:8.

Ver. 10. Humbled. Heb. “answer.” C. 5:5. Pride is visible on his face, though he be so much reduced. C.—For all these sins Israel shall be severely punished. W.

Ver. 11. Decoyed. Heb. “stupid.” C. 4:11. The dove is the only bird which is not grieved at the loss of its young. S. Jer.—It returns to the same nest, though repeatedly robbed, forgetting past dangers. Theod.—Thus Israel is not reclaimed, though idolatry has so often proved its ruin.—Egypt. Jeroboam had returned thither, and at his return brought about a division of the kingdom. 3 K. 11:40. Osee, the last king, applied to Sua, and this provoked the Assyrians to destroy the kingdom. They pretended that it was tributary to them, after Phul had been invited to assist Manahem for a thousand talents. 4 K. 15:19 and 17:4. Thus was a worldly policy confounded.

Ver. 12. Heard the menaces of Moses, (Deut. 27) and of the prophets. 4 K. 17:13. C.—Sept. “I will instruct (or chastise) them by the hearing of their misery,” (H.) when it shall become the subject of conversation throughout the world.

Ver. 13. Lies, attributing their deliverance to the golden calf, (3 K. 12:28. C. Ex. 32:8. M.) and always denying my justice and power.

Ver. 14. Thought: “ruminated.” H.—Heb. “assembled, or been afraid.” Sept. “they were cut,” (C.) in honour of idols, hoping to avert the famine. S. Cyr.

Ver. 15. Arms. I gave them my laws and power to resist the enemy. M.

Ver. 16. Returned, imitating Apis, the folly of Egypt. They have repeatedly followed idols in Egypt, and in the desert, under Jeroboam, Achab, Jehu, &c.—Deceitful. Sept. “bent.” Theodoret reads, “unbent.” It never hits the mark, (C.) but wounds the person who uses it. S. Jer.—Derision. The Egyptians laugh at them; (C.) or thus they acted heretofore, in Egypt. Chal.

OSEE 8

Ver. 1. Eagle. It makes a noise like a trumpet. Pliny x. 3.—Osee denounces judgments on the house of Israel, which, though schismatical, was not entirely abandoned by the Lord. Salmanasar overturned the kingdom, and may be compared to an eagle, as Nabuchodonosor is frequently, Ezechiel 17:3. But he is not here meant. C.—The temple shall be destroyed by him; (S. Jer.) yet not so soon. W.—Sept. “In their bosom like earth appears, like an eagle,” &c. H.

Ver. 2. Know thee. They resemble those to whom our Saviour will reply, Not every one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven. Mat. 7:22. C.

Ver. 3. Him. Sept. “they have pursued the enemy.” But the former sense is better. H.—The Assyrians prevailed. S. Jer.—They carried Israel into captivity, before Juda. v. 9.

Ver. 4. They. Jeroboam and Jehu were assured by the prophets that they should reign, yet this was not a sanction of their right. God condemned their ambition and wicked conduct. The successors of Zarharias had still less pretensions to the throne. God permits such things. The people had not consulted him in these changes. C.—Kings were their own choice. 1 K. 18. Saul rose by their “error.” S. Jer.—Knew, or approved not. v. 2. Mat. 25:12. C.—Perish. This was the effect, though contrary to their intention. H.

Ver. 5. Calf. The idol is broken in pieces, and carried away by the victorious enemy. Thus does the vanity of such gods appear. Their captivity is therefore often foretold. Jer. 43:12.—Cleansed. The physician is disgusted with the obstinacy of the sick. C.—How long will Israel resist the Holy Ghost? Acts 7:51. H.

Ver. 6. Israel. This enhances the crime. Can a people so highly favoured adore the work of an artist?—Webs, such as appear on a fine day in autumn. S. Jerom's master suggested that this was the sense. Interpreters vary. C.—Sept. and Th. "is delusive." Sym. &c. "instable;" shebabim. H.—Some erroneously read v instead of i. "The Lord casts off the calves of heretics, ... and wonders that people should prefer heretical filth before the cleanliness of the Church." S. Jer.

Ver. 7. Whirlwind. They shall be punished for their folly, nor shall they reap any advantage from idols.—In it, or in Israel. The seed which I have sown yields no fruit. If any come up, the mildew destroys it. Yea, though any should come to perfection, which is impossible, it should be given to strangers. My people perform no acts of religion; or at least they render them useless, by adoring idols. C.—He speaks in general terms, as few continued faithful. Yet even in the worst of times, seven thousand were found. 3 K. 19:18. H.

Ver. 8. Vessel. The nations around despised them, after they had applied to the Assyrians, who were looked upon as enemies of all independent states. Israel was not yet in captivity: but this event may be spoken of as if already past.

Ver. 9. Wild ass. It is very jealous of liberty, (Job 11:12) and of its females, so that it prevents the young males from becoming its rivals. Pliny viii. 30. Solin xxx.—If this were true, the species would soon perish. H.—The Israelites disdained subjection to strangers. They even rejected God, their king; for which reason he abandons them to servitude, in a foreign land. They had run furiously after idols, and had given presents to such lovers.

Ver. 10. Princes. Heb. "king of kings." This proud title was afterwards taken by the monarchs of Babylon and Persia. Israel ceased to pay taxes, having nothing left. They shall cease to be a people. C.—Sept. "I will receive them, and they shall cease a little to anoint a king and princes." H.—They had none during the captivity, as they would not consult God before in their appointment. v. 4. He speaks ironically. I will conduct them beyond the Euphrates, where they shall have nothing to pay for some time. C.—This wretched condition was of long continuance; (Tournemine) though short, if compared with their crimes. H.

Ver. 12. Foreign. Shall I give them laws again to despise? Sept. "I shall write down their number." It will be an easy task, they shall be so diminished. "His laws," &c. (C.) or, "I will describe to him a multitude, and his regulations: The beloved altars have been deemed foreign. S. Jerom's and Grabe's edit. H.

Ver. 13. Egypt, to escape the Assyrian. C. 9:3. C.—They have imitated the Egyptian idols. S. Jer.—Osee had applied to their king for aid. 4 K. 17:4.

Ver. 14. Temples, or "palaces." C.—Cities. The two tribes, witnessing the calamities of their brethren, will not avoid a similar conduct, but trust in their fortifications. W.—Fire of war destroys both kingdoms.—Thereof. Sept. of S. Jerom adds, "and among the Assyrians they have eaten unclean things," which may be taken from C. 9:3. H.—It is not found in the present Heb. or Gr. copies. C.

OSEE 9

Ver. 1. Reward, or "present." The kings took the tithe. 1 K. 8:15. Other infidel nations rejoice in their wealth. Israel ought not to do so; and, in punishment of idolatry, it shall be despoiled. After Jeroboam II. all went to ruin.

Ver. 2. Deceive. The grapes shall yield no wine. C.—Spem mentita seges. Hor. ii. ep. 2. and 3. ode 1. and 16.)

Ver. 3. Egypt, through distress. C. 8:13. S. Jer. v. 6. W.—Sua afforded no protection, and the country proved a grave to those who retired thither.—Unclean. The people observed these prescriptions, though they neglected the more important duties. Only some pious souls, like Tobias, Daniel, &c. refrained from such meats in exile. C.—Ezekiel (4:9) foreshewed this by his bread. S. Jer.

Ver. 4. Wine. They shall be at a distance from the temple, and in a country where the wine will not be deemed pure. The Jews will drink none which they have not made; and they usually lift up the cup, and pour out a little in God's honour. This they could not do in Assyria, (C.) not having liberty to do all about the wine.—Sacrifices. The Israelites had long neglected to offer any in the temple, (H.) though they had no hindrance. In exile, the fruits, &c. were all accounted unclean, like meats used in mourning, (C.) which defiled those who partook of them. Deut. 26:14. Num. 19:11. "The sacrifices of heretics are the bread of mourning. They offer them not to God, but to the dead, to wicked heresiarchs." S. Jer.—Soul. They have need enough of it. H.—"Let them gratify their appetite; I love not what is unclean." S. Jer.

Ver. 5. Lord, when he shall punish you. Is. 34:6. H.—Israel did not go to the temple, but they kept the festivals and banquets in their own manner, the privation of which they would feel.

Ver. 6. Gather into the grave. Yet some shall escape. C. 11:11.—Silver, which they buried at the approach of the enemy, hoping to recover it when they should depart. The Arabs do so still, (C.) and the Indians likewise, that they may have something to support them in the next world! Bernier.—Bur. Heb. "thorns." C.

Ver. 7. Mad. Israel shall promise itself all prosperity, not being inspired by God, but full of madness. W.—There were many false prophets. The true ones were often accounted idols. 4 K. 9:11. Ezech. 3:25. C.—"What is said respecting Israel, in this prophet, must be understood of heretics, who being truly mad, utter falsehoods against God. S. Jer.—Sept. "and Israel shall be hurt like the prophet beside himself, the man having (or hurried away by) the spirit." H.

Ver. 8. My God. I am such; but the false prophets strive to seduce you. C.—Jeroboam ought to have restrained the people, and he did the reverse, setting up a calf at Bethel, which proved more ruinous than the crime of Gabaa, (Jud. 19) or the election of Saul. "In ancient records, I cannot find that any have divided the Church but those who were appointed by God, priests and prophets, that is watchmen." S. Jer.—Indeed, almost all heresies owe their rise to the pride or lust of some who have been in high stations.—Madness. Heb. "and hatred in (marg. against) the," &c. Prot. H.—Instead of standing up for the people, he provokes God.

Ver. 9. Sin. As they have imitated the citizens of Gabaa, they may expect a similar fate. C.

Ver. 10. Top. These are the best. H.—The patriarchs were pleasing to God. He chose the Hebrews; but they began to worship Beelphegor or Adonis, even before the death of Moses. This worship was most shameful. What will not passion do when the gods shew the example!

Ver. 11. Conception. Their children, in whom they glory, shall be destroyed (C.) in the very embryo. H.

Ver. 12. When. Sept. Th. "my flesh is taken from them," which Theodoret, Lyran, &c. explain of the incarnation; but Aquila, &c. agree with the Vulg. which is more natural. C.

Ver. 13. Tyre. The kingdom of Israel was no less proud. Ezech. 26. W.—It was in the highest prosperity under Jeroboam II. Osee saw this and the subsequent overthrow. Tyre was a most populous and wealthy city. C.—Other interpreters have, “a rock;” Sept. “a prey.” The latter read d for r. S. Jer. H.—The Vulg. seems best. C.—Tsor denotes, “Tyre and a rock.” H.

Ver. 14. Children, as they have exposed them to the fury of the Assyrians, (C.) or to their idols. Drus.—The prophet appears to demand vengeance through zeal; but it is only a prediction. C.

Ver. 15. Galgal: “heaped together.” H.—When they erected profane altars here, I could spare them no longer. C.—No more, so as to suffer them to pass unpunished. H.—He afterwards restored them to favour. C. 1:10 and 2:14. C.—At Galgal they rejected the Lord’s spiritual and temporal dominion. M.

Ver. 16. Dried up. They are compared to a vine. C. 10:1. C.

OSEE 10

Ver. 1. Branches. Sept. “Wood.” Sym. This is all: it yields no fruit. Prot. “empty.” H.—Heb. “plucked.” The grapes are taken away, as the Israelites were; though they boasted of their numbers. C. 9:16. They are often compared to a vine, the symbol of fecundity. Is. 5:3. Ps. 127:3. C.—The greater benefits of God enhanced their ingratitude. W.—On every noted hill (H.) profane altars were erected.

Ver. 2. Divided between the Lord and idols. 3 K. 18:21. C.—The Jews relate that Osee, the last king of Israel, gave the people leave to go to Jerusalem; (4 K. 17:2) and as they would not take advantage of it, their ruin was decreed. S. Jer.

Ver. 3. No king, in captivity; or they give this title to the golden calf. Manahem had destroyed one, so that they could not but see its vanity. The neighbouring nations looked upon their idols as their kings.

Ver. 4. Covenant with Phul, who seeks only your destruction. 4 K. 15:19. C.—Bitterness. Heb. “poison,” (H.) or a bitter herb. C.

Ver. 5. The kine of Bethaven. The golden calves of Jeroboam, (Ch.) one of which (H.) was set up at Bethel. W.—The feminine cows, is spoken in ridicule; as (C.) O verè Phrygiæ, Æn. ix. Isis was represented with a cow's head. Herod. ii. 41.—Rejoiced. To avoid this apparent contradiction, the Jews relate that the priests had sent a brazen calf to the Assyrians, and secreted the golden one. While they rejoiced at their success, Salmanasar, (Seder. Olam.) or Sennacherib, discovered the cheat, and came to destroy the kingdom. S. Jer.—This has the air of a fable. If (C.) we substitute e for g, in yagilu, (H.) we may give a good sense to the Heb. “The people shouting, or in black, (cemaraiv) have been in sorrow, because their glory is taken from them: so the idol is called. Ps. 105:20. C.

Ver. 6. Itself also is carried, &c. One of the golden calves was given by king Manahem to Phul, king of the Assyrians, to engage him to stand by him. Ch.—Avenging. C. 5:13.—Will, or expectation of aid. C.—He had recourse to this nation, without consulting God. H.

Ver. 7. Pass. Heb. “As for Samaria, it is undone. Its king is like froth, or a bubble,” &c. C. 11:1. The calf; (v. 3.) Zacharias or Osee may be meant.

Ver. 8. Us, as the Jews would do at the last siege, and sinners before the day of judgment. Lu. 23:30. Apoc. 6:14. Too happy, if they could by a speedy death escape eternal torments! C.—People shall be in the utmost consternation at the approach of the Assyrians. H.—They will not think themselves secure enough in their caverns.

Ver. 9. Gabaa. Sept. “high places;” or he alludes to the brutality of the citizens. Judg. 20:13.—Stood. Those of Gabaa were speedily punished by the other tribes. Now, all are perverse. At that time one tribe was guilty, and yet some were spared; but all Israel shall be now led into captivity. C.—From the time that Dan adored Micha's idol, (Jud. 18:14) the evil has spread among the rest of the tribes, which did not punish this transgression. Hence all shall at last suffer. W.

Ver. 10. Their two iniquities. Their two calves; (Ch.) or because they have abandoned God, and followed idols. Jer. 2:13. Many render, “when I shall have tied them, like oxen, in their two furrows.” But the Vulg. is plainer, and adopted by most.

Ver. 11. Neck. I will confine her to harder labour. While the oxen tread out corn, they may eat. Deut. 25:4.—Himself. Juda shall be chastised after the ten tribes; so that none of my people shall escape.

Ver. 12. Mouth. Heb. “in proportion to (C.) your piety.” Sept. “gather a vintage of the fruit of life.” H.—Ground. Reform you conduct. C.—Justice, when Christ shall appear, the source of all our grace and justice. S. Jer. &c. C.—Sept. “Light up for yourselves the light of knowledge, for it is time; seek the Lord, till ye obtain the fruit of justice.”

Ver. 13. Ploughed. Sept. “Why have you concealed impiety,” refusing to confess? H.—Iniquity, or punishment.—Lying. Your hopes are frustrated, and no fruit is seen. C.—Ways: idols. S. Jer.

Ver. 14. Tumult. Heb. shaon; the din of war, (H.) or cry of soldiers. C.—Salmana, king of the Madianites, was destroyed by the house; that is, by the followers of him that judgeth Baal; that is, of Gedeon, who threw down the altar of Baal, and was therefore called Jerobaal. See Judg. 6 and 8. Ch.—Of him. Sept. Rom. “of Jeroboam.” But S. Jer. &c. have, Jerobaal. Theodoret, “in the house of Arbeel.” Heb. “as Salmana ruined the house of Arbela.” There were many places of this name; but none of great note, taken by Salmanasar. Some think that he took it before he was king. Yet this is all uncertain, and the Heb. seems rather changed, so that we should read with the Alex. MS. S. Jer. &c. Jerobaal, who defeated the Madianites, and treated Succoth with great severity. Judg. 8:15. C.

Ver. 15. Bethel. This place, defiled by an idol, shall be the scene of your misery. Sept. “So I will treat you, O house of Israel,” &c. (H.) which is not in Heb. (S. Jer.) but seems as good. H.—Heb. adds here properly, (C.) “Presently, or in the morning, shall the king of Israel be utterly cut off,” which we have in the next chapter.

OSEE 11

Ver. 1. Away. The last kings of Israel lived in the midst of troubles. H.—Osee, though one of the best, brought ruin on the nation. C.—Son: Israel. But as the calling of Israel out of Egypt was a figure of the calling of Christ from thence; therefore this text is also applicable to Christ, as we learn from S. Mat. 2:15. Ch. Julian pretends that the apostle has abused this text. But it speaks of both events. S. Jer.—Eusebius (Dem. ix. 3.) thinks that S. Mat. refers to Balaam; (Num. 24:8) and S. Jerom does not reject this opinion, (in Mat. 2. C.) to avoid “wrangling,” though he repeatedly alleges this text as a proof his version being more accurate than that of the Sept. which has his children. This reading the best editions retain; so that it may seem a matter of surprise, that Fabricius should give this verse as a specimen of Origen’s Hexapla, and still print my son, taking it, as he says, from the Barbarini copy, the London Polyglot, and Cave. Bib. Gr. iii. 12.

The first column has the Heb. text, and the second the same in Greek characters, &c. The reader may form a judgment of this work from the following specimen: 1. Heb. (which we shall express) karathi bani. 2. Gr. καραθι βανι. 3. Aq. εκαλεσα τον υιον μου. 4. Sym. κεκληται υιος μου. 5. Sept. κεκληται υιος μου. 6. Th. και εκαλεσα υιον μου. If any other versions were added, to form Octapla, &c. they were placed after Theodotion, who, though prior to Symmachus, is placed after him, because his version was not so unlike that of the Sept. and the deficiencies were chiefly supplied from him. In the Rom. and Alex. edit. instead of the above we find, μετεκαλεσα τα τεκνα αυτου. "I have recalled his children." H.—This is literally spoken of Israel, (styled God's son, Ex. 4:23) and mystically, (W.) though no less (H.) truly, of Jesus Christ, as the inspired evangelist shews. W.

Ver. 2. They called: viz. Moses and Aaron called: but they went away after other gods, and would not hear. Ch.—Sept. "As I called them back, or (repeatedly; μετεκαλησα. Grabe has, "he called;" meaning any of God's ministers) so they rushed away from my presence." H.—This sense appears preferable to the Heb. C.

Ver. 3. Healed them. My laws were designed to counteract idolatry. H.—I treated them with the utmost tenderness. Deut. 1:31 and 32:11.

Ver. 4. Adam. I placed my people in a sort of paradise, (C.) like the first man; and as they have imitated him, they shall suffer accordingly. Rufin. Haimo.—But Sept. &c. render, "of a man." They shall be treated like the rest. C.—Grace draws man by sweet means. His free-will is not destroyed, nor is he impelled, like beasts, by force or fear, (W.) though the latter is often used for the most salutary purposes.—Yoke, or muzzle, which prevents them from eating. H.—I furnish them with manna. Can it be suspected that I wish to oppress them? C.

Ver. 5. Egypt. Many went, contrary to this prohibition. H.—Yet they did not prosper, as they expected. The Hebrews had also often murmured in the desert, and threatened to return to Egypt.

Ver. 6. Heads. Heb. "counsellors." Civil war desolated the kingdom, and made way for the Assyrians. Sept. "they are devoured on account of their projects." C.—They are at a loss what to do.

Ver. 7. Off, for a long time; and indeed Israel never recovered its former state, after the captivity. H.—Then they became more docile. Heb. is very ambiguous. C.

Ver. 8. Adama, &c. Adama and Seboim were two cities in the neighbourhood of Sodom, and underwent the like destruction. Ch.—

God punishes, like a father, with regret.

Ver. 9. Not man. I am not actuated by the spirit of revenge, nor do I fear lest my enemy escape. C.—I punish in order to reclaim, (S. Jer.) and reserve eternal vengeance only for those who die impenitent.—Holy one. If there be a just man in Israel, I will spare the nation; (Gen. 18:32) or there are some just, like Tobias, and therefore a part shall be reserved; or, (C.) I am the just (H.) God. S. Jer.

Ver. 10. Lion. His power is most terrible, and his commands must be obeyed. C.—All nations shall permit the return of Israel. H.—They shall come from the sea, of from its islands.

Ver. 11. Egypt. Some returned soon; others not before the reign of Alexander, or perhaps later. C. Diss.

Ver. 12. Denials; refusing to adhere to my worship. H.—They wished to unite it with that of idols. 3 K. 18. C.—Saints. The priests and temple are preserved in Juda. Ezechias brought the people to serve God faithfully, while Israel was led captive. Sept. “the house of Israel and Juda with impiety. Now God hath known them lovingly, and it shall be called the holy people of God.” Thus both kingdoms were criminal, and God exercised his mercy towards both. H.—The Jews relate that when their ancestors were pursued by the Egyptians, and the people were desponding, Juda signalized his courage by entering the bed of the sea. S. Jer.—These traditions are suspicious. C.

OSEE 12

Ver. 1. On. Lit. the wind. H.—To trust in men is no less vain. W.—Sept. “Ephraim is an evil spirit,” &c.—Heat. Heb. “eastern or burning wind.” H.—Manahem attempted to engage Egypt on his side, but he was frustrated in his hopes, (4 K. 15. S. Jer.) as Osee was likewise; to which king the sense conducts us better. C. 13:15.—Oil. That of Palestine was very excellent. Ezec. 27:17.

Ver. 2. Judgment. Heb. “trial.” What follows refers to all the people, whose impiety is contrasted with Jacob’s virtue.

Ver. 3. Brother Esau, thus foreshewing what would happen. Gen. 25.—Angel. Sept. “God,” whose place this angel held. Elohim implies both. v. 4. Gen. 32:24.

Ver. 4. Wept. Sept. “they wept, and besought me.” Other interpreters agree with the Vulg.—Us. By changing a vowel point, in Hebrew, it might be, “He spoke to him.” Cap. Grot.—The most magnificent promises were made, at Bethel, regarding the Israelites: this made the profanation of the place more horrible. C.—Sept. “They found me in the house of On, and there the word was addressed to them.”—Bethaven was the name of Bethel, among the pious Jews, in the days of Osee. H.

Ver. 5. Memorial, and the object of worship; or this great Jehovah spoke to Jacob.

Ver. 7. Chanaan. The Phœnicians were so called, and all merchants. Here the title is given reproachfully (C.) to all the posterity of Jacob. H.—None more ignominious could be used. Dan. 13:56. Thus Rome is styled Babylon.

Ver. 8. Idol. Heb. also, “vanity.” Riches are vain, and lead to idolatry when people place their affections on them. Mat. 13:22. Eph. 5:5.—Committed. I am conscious of no injustice. C.—Yet he had used a deceitful balance, and his judgment is equally perverse. H.—“What rich man shall be saved?” Clem. Alex.

Ver. 9. Egypt. At Sinai the covenant between God and Israel was chiefly ratified. The former ceased not to perform the conditions, but the latter repaid him with ingratitude.—Feast. The people shall be brought back, (C.) or they shall again be forced to dwell under tents.

Theod.—“Shall I still cause?” &c. Tournemine.

Ver. 10. Prophets. They have represented me as it were under visible forms, that you cannot plead ignorance. The prophets prefigured Christ, the end of the law, &c. C.

Ver. 11. Idol. That is, if Galaad, with all its idols and sacrifices, be like a mere idol itself, being brought to nothing by Theglathphalassar, how vain is it to expect that the idols worshipped in Galgal shall be of any service to the tribes that remain. Ch.—Will these idols be more powerful? Sept. copies vary. Rom. ed. has Galaad, and Comp. Galgal in both places. But that of S. Jer. and of Theodoret is better.—Heaps of stones. They are in ruins, or very numerous: (C.) yet have not secured the country. H.

Ver. 12. Jacob. The history of the patriarch, and of his posterity, serves to place the ingratitude of the people in the clearest light. W.—The prophet had interrupted the account of Jacob, (v. 4) who had signalized his piety in Galaad. Gen. 31:46.

Ver. 13. Prophet. Josue put the people in possession of the country, and offered sacrifice at Galgal, where the rite of circumcision was performed. This place is now defiled. What perfidy (H.) and ingratitude. C.

Ver. 14. Him. He shall suffer for his crimes. M.—He can blame only himself. C.

OSEE 13

Ver. 1. Spoke. When Jeroboam proposed to erect the golden calves, people were seized with horror; yet they consented, and soon after Baal and other idols were worshipped. W.—Ephraim was one of the greatest tribes, and by its example the rest were drawn into idolatry. Achab principally introduced the worship of Baal, which caused God to decree the misery of his people. 3 K. 16:31.

Ver. 2. Calves. A cutting reproach! Those who could stoop to adore a calf, might be so blind as to sacrifice men! Heb. “sacrifice, ye men who,” &c. Jeroboam issues this edict. C.—Sept. “immolate men; calves are wanting.” H.

Ver. 3. Away. C. 6:4.—Chimney, or hole, at the side or top of the room. C.—Heb. arubba, (H.) means also “a locust,” as the Sept. render it, though here it affords no sense.

Ver. 5. Knew: treated thee with kindness, or tried thee. C.

Ver. 6. Pastures: the more they were indulged. H. Deut. 32:15.

Ver. 7. Lioness. Sept. “panther.” I will pursue them even in their captivity.

Ver. 8. Whelps; with the greatest fury. 2 K. 17:8.—Inner. Heb. “what encloses the heart;” or, I will break their hard heart. C.

Ver. 9. Own. Evils are brought on by the sins of men, which God does not cause. W.—Sept. “who will aid to prevent thy perdition, O Israel.” H.—God alone is the author of salvation. He also punishes, (Amos 3:6) but for man’s amendment in life. W.

Ver. 10. Princes. It was on this pretext that a king was demanded. 1 K. 8:20. Will any now save you? M.

Ver. 11. King; Saul, Jeroboam, or the Assyrian.—Away. Osee, (C.) so that you shall have no more kings of Israel. H.—Sept. alone have, “I took (C.) or had him in,” &c. S. Jer.

Ver. 12. Hidden. He thinks to escape. H.—But I keep it like pieces of silver, bound up in my treasury. S. Jer. C.

Ver. 13. Him. He shall be taken when he least expects it. His fruit shall come forth. Jer. 4:31.—Children. He shall have no share in the division of property, or shall not escape when the father shall bring his children to an account. The Chal. &c. insinuate, that the infant affords no help to come forth, as it would if it had sense. C.

Ver. 14. Death. This must be understood of eternal misery, from which the just are preserved. All must die, and many suffered a violent death from the Assyrians. W.—After denouncing the severest judgments, the prophet promises redress and a sort of resurrection, which was a figure of the real sufferings and rising of Jesus Christ. The apostle applies this text to him, but follows not the Heb. or Sept. 1 Cor. 15:55. C.—Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy victory? O death, where is thy sting? Prot. read, O grave, (marg. hell) instead of the latter death. Heb. ehi has been twice placed for aie, I will be instead of where? (H.) as the Gr. Arab. and Syr. versions, as wll as the context, evince. All the versions prove the same corruption to be. v. 10. Kennicott, Aquila, and the 5. edit. read where? Sym. I will be: (S. Jer.) so that the change probably took place between A. 130 and 200. Sept. “Where is thy cause gained, (in a lawsuit, or thy justice; δίκη. H.)

O death?" &c.—Eyes. I can find no consolation, (S. Jer.) because the people cause dissension by their perseverance in evil. Hebrew also, "repentance," &c. I will utterly destroy Ephraim; or rather, "vengeance ... because he shall flourish," &c. If Ephraim would repent, this should not take place; but now, the Lord will bring Salmanasar, a burning wind. v. 15. C.

Ver. 15. Springs of death; or the sins which Christ, born of a virgin, shall destroy, and liberate the vessels of election from hell. S. Jer. H.

OSEE 14

Ver. 1. Perish, because she hath stirred up her God to bitterness. It is not a curse or imprecation, but a prophecy of what should come to pass (Ch). to Israel, in Assyria. Many such expressions occur. Ps. 68:25. &c. S. Jer.—Sometimes they are the efforts of zeal, conformable to divine justice. Ps. 140:6. W.—Heb. "Samaria has sinned, or shall perish." C.—Bitterness. Sept. "she hath resisted her God." H.

Ver. 3. Words. In captivity, legal victims cannot be offered. C.—But a contrite heart is always acceptable. Ps. 50.—Good. While engaged in sin, (H.) "we can offer thee nothing good."—Calves: victims of praise. S. Jer.—Heb. parim. Sept. omit m, (H.) and render fruit. They are followed by the Arab. and Syr. as well as by the apostle. Heb. 13:15. C.—We will offer what victims we please. E. Ps. 68:23 and 65:13.

Ver. 4. Gods. The Assyrians, instead of protecting, oppress us; while Egypt, famous for horses, sits unconcerned. C.—But the source of all our evils are the idols, which we will follow no more.—In thee: adheres to the true faith in practice. H.—Israel was like an orphan during the captivity. Lam. 1:1. C.

Ver. 5. Breaches, when Israel shall be converted, as some were to Christ, and many will be at the end of the world. W.—Heb. "their return." Sept. "dwellings." They shall be purified.—Freely. I have been forced to chastise, My heart dilates. C.—Sept. "I will love them manifestly." Syr. "accept their free offerings." H.

Ver. 6. Dew. Israel has been like a plant dried up. C. 13:15.—Libanus. The cedars were tall and bulky, being well rooted.

Ver. 7. Glory. Sept. "he shall be as fruitful as the olive-tree."—Libanus, or incense. C.—The term has both meanings. H.

Ver. 8. His. This may refer to the tree, or to God. The captives shall return, and be happy. But in a more sublime sense it refers to the nations which shall embrace the gospel.—Libanus, or fragrant. Such wine was esteemed in which certain odoriferous herbs were infused. Cant. 7:2. C.—Libanus was also famous for generous wines. Siconita 11.

Ver. 9. Idol? or God will no more reproach them, as their conversion is sincere.—Make. Heb. “be to him like,” &c. C.

Ver. 10. Wise. This denotes the obscurity of the prophecy. Theod.—No human wit can explain the prophets: yet the just shall understand as much as shall be necessary. S. Jer. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xviii. 28. W.—Only few will make good use of these admonitions, and share in the promises. C.

JOEL

THE PROPHECY OF JOEL

INTRODUCTION

Joel, whose name, according to S. Jerom, signifies the Lord God, (or, as others say, the coming down of God) prophesied about the same time in the kingdom of Juda as Osee did in the kingdom of Israel. He foretells, under figures, the great evils that were coming upon the people for their sins; earnestly exhorts them to repentance, and comforts them with the promise of a teacher of justice, viz. Christ Jesus, our Lord, and of the coming down of his Holy Spirit (Ch). upon the hundred and twenty faithful assembled in Sion. He describes the land of the twelve tribes made desolate, and the people cast off. S. Jer. ad Paulin.—Yet he speaks chiefly of the kingdom of Juda, and mentions the house of God, sacrifices, &c. W.—S. Jerom infers from his being placed after Osee, without any fresh title, (C.) that he lived in that order of time. W.—But this rule is not general, as Jonas lived before Amos; and Sept. observe not the same disposition of the prophets as we do. The exact time of the famine, when Joel prophesied, cannot be ascertained. It seems he addressed the people in autumn, when a second year's famine was apprehended. He paints every thing with great force and beauty of style. C.

JOEL 1

Ver. 1. Planted. Sept. "Bathuel." He was born in the tribe of Gad, at Bethaven, the town which Herod styles Livias Jos. 13:27. C.

Ver. 2. Men. Magistrates, and all who have children. H. He speaks to Juda, as the kingdom of Israel was ruined. C. 3:2. His principal object is to describe the ravages of locusts, and to exhort the people to repent, promising them better times after the captivity, and under the Messias. C. 2:28 and 3:20. C.

Ver. 3. Generation. Prophecies relate to all future times, that people may see their accomplishment, (W.) and believe. H.

Ver. 4. Left, &c. Some understand this literally of the desolation of the land by these insects: others understand it of the different invasions of the Chaldeans, or other enemies. Ch.—Jerusalem was four times plundered by the Babylonians, and every time worse than before, as these four sorts of destructive things shew. But we shall not enlarge upon these points, nor pursue the mystical sense of the prophets, which may be found in the fathers and Ribera. W.—Others suppose that the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Greeks, (particularly Epiphanes) and Romans, are meant. We explain it simply of the devastation by insects. C.—Four different species of locusts are denoted. Bochart, p. 2. b. iv. 1.—Mildew. Heb. chasil, (H.) is often rendered "a locust," by Sept. (C. 2:25. &c.) and most suppose this is here the sense. The mildew destroys corn chiefly in low damp situations. C.

Ver. 5. Sweet. Heb. "wine, because of the sweet wine," (H.) or liquors extracted from fruit. The things which you have abused, are now taken away.

Ver. 6. Nations. Some understand the Assyrians or Chaldeans. But locusts are here styled a nation. Prov. 30:25.—Lion. Such locusts are described. Apoc. 9:8. C.—"In India they are said to be three feet long, and their legs and thighs are used for saws when dried." Pliny xi. 29. —They were attacked by regular troops in Syria. Ib.

Ver. 8. Youth, whom she espoused first. Such are more tenderly loved, particularly where polygamy prevails. C.—So Dido speaks of Sichæus, Virg. Æn. iv.:

Ille meos primus qui se mihi junxit amores
Abstulit, ille habeat secum servetque sepulchro.

Ver. 9. Lord. No harvest being reaped, the fruits could not be paid. Yet it is thought that what was requisite for sacrifice, would be procured from other countries. C.—When Jerusalem was destroyed, sacrifices ceased. W.

Ver. 12. Withered. The bite of locusts corrupts the juice of plants.

Ver. 13. Go in to the temple, or sleep on sackcloth. Judith 4:9. C.

Ver. 14. Sanctify. Appoint (H.) or proclaim a general fast, as was usual in such emergencies. 3 K. 21:9 and 2 Par. 20:3. Fasting and other good works are calculated to appease God's wrath. W.

Ver. 15. Day. Heb. ahah layom: (H.) "Ah, what a day!"—Mighty. Sept. "destruction." They have read in a different manner. God is about to give sentence, (C.) and to send Nabuchodonosor, (S. Jer.) or to destroy by famine. v. 17.

Ver. 16. God. None can bring the first-fruits. All appear in mourning.

Ver. 17. Dung. Horse-dung dried for bedding, was used in the East instead of straw, (Busb. 3.) as it is still by the Arabs. Darvieux. 11.—Heb. "the seeds are rotten under their clods," (H.) finding no moisture. Sept. "the cows have stamped in their stalls;" or Syr. "remain without food in their cribs." Chal. "the pitchers of wine have been corrupted under their covers," as there was no new wine. C.—Houses. Heb. mammeguroth. Prot. "barns, (H.) or country houses;" which means cabins erected for the season, (Ruth 2:7) the Magaria (C.) or Mopalia of the Africans. S. Jer. pref. Amos.—Sept. "the wine presses." Wine and corn were preserved in pits carefully covered over. Agg. 2:20. These fell to decay, as there was no use for them.

Ver. 19. Places. Heb. "dwellings," or shepherds' huts.—Wilderness, denoting all pasture land unploughed.

Ver. 20. Up, as if to pray for rain. Jer. 14:6. C.—Heb. "cry," (H.) or "pant."—As ... rain is not in Heb. or Sept. C.

JOEL 2

Ver. 1. Blow. The prophets often ordered, to signify what will take place. W.—The people were gathered by the sound of trumpets. The danger from the locusts was imminent; and all are exhorted to avert it, by praying in the temple, &c.—Tremble at the sound. Amos 3:6. C.—Extemplò turbati. Virgil, Æneid viii.—Lord. That is, the time when he will execute justice on sinners, (Ch.) and suffer affliction to fall upon them. W. C. 1:15.

Ver. 2. Darkness. This implies great misery. v. 10. C.—People. The Assyrians or Chaldeans. Others understand all this of the army of locusts laying waste the land. Ch.—Morning; unexpectedly, (C.) and soon. H.—No human force can prevent the ravages of the locusts—Beginning, in Palestine. Moses says the same; but speaks of Egypt. Ex. 10:14.

Ver. 3. Flame. They destroy all by their bite. C. 1:12. C. Theod.—Pleasure. Heb. “Eden.” So luxuriant was Palestine.

Ver. 4. Horsemen. The head of a locust bears some resemblance with that of a horse, and its flight is rapid. Apoc. 9:7. C.

Ver. 5. Mountains. “The beat their wings so loudly, that they may be taken for other birds.” Pliny xi. 29.—They are much larger in hot climates, (C. 1:6. H.) and may be heard at the distance of two miles, (Bochart) darkening the air for the space of four leagues. Yet this description is poetical, and perhaps an allegory is nowhere better kept up.

Ver. 6. Kettle. The Jews were naturally of a dark complexion. Fear causing the blood to retire, would make them black. Is. 13:8. Lam. 4:8 and 5:10. C.

Ver. 7. Ranks. Locusts march like a regular army. Theod.—No fortification can keep them out. H.

Ver. 8. Brother. S. Jerom saw a cloud of them in Judea. They were not “a finger-nail’s breadth from each other.” C.—The Arabs discover the military art in them. Bochart.—They invested France (A. 874) with all the skill of an army, the chiefs marking out the place for the camp the night before. Sigebert.—Windows. They eat the wood, (H.) and the windows were simple lattices or curtains. C.—Heb. “they fall upon the sword, and shall not be hurt.” Sept. “consumed or filled.” H.—They are never satisfied. Theod.

Ver. 10. Shining. The cloud of locusts intercepts the light; or, people in distress think all nature is in confusion. S. Jer. Ezec. xxxii. Jer. iv. 23. —Aloysius (13) saw locusts in the air for the space of twelve miles; and among the Cossacks, clouds of them may be found six leagues in length and three in breadth. They frequently occasion a famine in Ethiopia. C.

Ver. 11. Voice; thunder, (H.) or the noise of locusts. v. 5. C.

Ver. 12. Mourning. For moving the heart to repentance these external works are requisite, at least in will: if they be wilfully omitted, it is a sure sign that the heart is not moved. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 13. Garments, as was customary in great distress. God will not be satisfied with mere external proofs of repentance. C.—Evil. He will forego his threats if we do penance. S. Jer.—He punishes unwillingly. Is. 28:21.

Ver. 14. Who knoweth. Confidence in God and repentance must accompany prayer.—Blessing; plentiful crops, so that the usual sacrifices may be performed again. C. 1:9.

Ver. 15. Trumpet. Thus were festivals announced. Num. 10:7.

Ver. 16. Sanctify. Let all make themselves ready to appear.—Ones. Their cries would make an impression on men, and prevail on God to shew mercy. Judith 4:9.

Ver. 17. Altar of holocausts. They turned towards the holy place, lying prostrate. 1 Esd. 10:1 and 2 Mac. 10:26. C.—Hither the victim of expiation was brought, and the high priest confessed. Maimon.—Over them, as they might easily have done during the famine.

Ver. 18. Zealous. Indignation is excited when a person perceives any thing contemned which he loves. So God resented the injuries done maliciously by the Gentiles towards his people; though he often punished them for their correction or greater merit. W.—He will resent the blasphemies uttered by infidels against his holy name, and will restore fertility to the land. C.

Ver. 19. Nations. This did not take place till after the seventy years captivity, nor then fully. It is verified in true believers, and after death in the glory of the saints. W.

Ver. 20. The northern enemy. Some understand this of Holofernes and his army, others of the locusts. Ch.—Prot. “the northern army.” Heb. may denote (H.) wind. This often drives away locusts. Those here spoken of were drowned in the Mediterranean and Dead Seas. C.—This occasioned a pestilence, (S. Jer. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. iv. 31.) to prevent which the locusts were to be speedily buried. Is. 33:4.—Proudly. Heb. “great things.” God, or the locusts are meant.

Ver. 22. Strength; fruit, as formerly.

Ver. 23. Teacher; Joel, &c. or rather the Messiah. John 1:9. Mat. 23:8. Some translate Heb. "rain." Sept. "meat," (C.) sufficient for the people. Theod.

Ver. 24. Presses, or subterraneous reservoirs.

Ver. 25. Host. God could have hurled his thunderbolts, or mountains, to destroy all mankind; but he chooses to shew their insignificance, (C.) by employing the vilest insects, which they cannot withstand. S. Jer.

Ver. 28. After. From this verse to the end the prophet speaks of the times succeeding the captivity, and more especially of the propagation of the gospel. The enemies of God's people shall be destroyed, (C. 3:1) which seems to refer to Cambyeses. Ezec. 38. C.—My spirit. This plainly foretells the coming of the Holy Ghost. Acts 2. W.—The Jews never had such a multitude of prophets after the captivity as the Church had. 1 Cor. 14:24. What relates to them was only a shadow of what would befall true believers.

Ver. 29. Handmaids. Sept. of S. Jer. and S. Peter read, my handmaids. "My," is omitted in both places in Complut. and Heb. and the latter word in the Rom. Sept.

Ver. 30. Wonders. Many prodigies preceded the persecution of Epiphanes, the death of Christ, the ruin of the temple, and more will be seen before the day of judgment. Though we cannot prove the same with respect to Cambyeses, it suffices that the people were thrown into the utmost consternation (v. 2. 11) when he forebade the building of the temple, (1 Esd. 4:6) and designed to plunder them. Ezechiel (38:11) speaks of the same event, as the Jews assert. Ctesias also mentions that when he offered sacrifice, the victims would not bleed; and that his wife, Roxana, brought forth a child without a head, implying, according to the magi, that he should have no heir. His mother also frequently appeared, and reproached him with the murder of his brother. See C. 3:15. Ezec. 38:22.

Ver. 32. Call. Amid these fears, those who trust in the Lord shall have nothing to suffer. Cambyeses could not execute his designs. But the prophet here alludes still more to the conversion of the Gentiles. Acts 2:21. Rom. 10:13. Some returned from Babylon, as a figure of this great event. Only a few Jews embraced the faith. C.—Salvation. Sept. "shall be saved, as the Lord hath spoken, and the person preaching the gospel, whom the Lord hath called." H.

JOEL 3

Ver. 1. Back. The people were just returned when the nations around fell upon them, and were miraculously defeated. Theod.—We shall follow the system respecting God, given Ezech. 38. C.—Most people, with S. Jerom, suppose that the general judgment is described, though some explain it of the captives delivered from their enemies. W.

Ver. 2. Josaphat, “the judgment of the Lord,” (H.) marks the place where the Judge will sit, on the east of Jerusalem, between the temple and Olivet, whence our Lord ascended into heaven. W.—There also had been seized and treated contumeliously. H.—But many of the Fathers assert that the whole world will be the scene of judgment, and the first author who determines the situation of Josaphat, is one in the works of V. Bede. Here it may denote the great plain reaching from Carmel to the Jordan, where the army of Cambyzes perished with its chief. People of almost all nations were there. Ezech. 38.—Land. The Chaldees, now governed by a Persian, had scattered the Jews, and the Idumeans had seized part of their land.

Ver. 3. Boy, to gratify their brutal passions; (Lam. 5) or, they have exchanged such for harlots, (C.) and paid the latter with captive boys. Sept. H.

Ver. 4. Me. These cities and nations had rejoiced at the ruin of the Jews. Ezech. 25. C.—Coast. Sept. “Galilee of strangers.” H.

Ver. 5. Temples, or palaces. The Chaldeans had done so, and perhaps had sold some to others.

Ver. 6. Greeks: the Ionians carried on such a traffic. Ezech. 27:13. Tyre and the Philistines were ready to sell. ib. 26:2 and 25:15.

Ver. 7. Them, particularly under Hystaspes and Artaxerxes.

Ver. 8. Sabeans; probably at the bottom of Arabia. C.—Thirty thousand Tyreans were sold by Alexander. Arrian ii.—The Jews would not fail to purchase. C.

Ver. 9. Prepare. Lit. “sanctify.” H.—God sends Cambyzes to chastise Egypt. His turn will then come.

Ver. 11. Down. Many perished in Egypt, the rest in Judea. v. 2.

Ver. 11. Valley, at Jezrahel, the valley of destruction. v. 14.

Ver. 13. Harvest, the time of vengeance. Mat. 13:30. Apoc. 14:15. C.

Ver. 14. Nations. Heb. hamonim, “multitudes.” H.—This alludes to the place Amona, where God was buried. Ezech. 30:15. 18. C.—Sept. “sounds have been heard in the vale of justice,” where sentence has been pronounced and executed. H.—The repetition of peoples and destruction, shews the crowds (H.) which shall be judged and cut in pieces like fuel for the fire. Ps. 128:4. W.

Ver. 15. Shining. All shall be amazed at the fall of Cambyses. C. 2:30. Ezech. 28:18. A storm shall overwhelm his army. C.

Ver. 16. Roar, in thunder. Jer. 25:30. Amos 1:2. H.

Ver. 17. No more, for a long time. Antiochus and the Romans again profaned the temple. But the Church of Christ is always holy.

Ver. 18. Sweetness; oil and honey. C.—Fountain, &c. viz. the fountain of grace in the Church militant, and of glory in the Church triumphant; which shall water the torrent or valley of thorns, that is, the souls that before, like barren ground, brought forth nothing but thorns, or that were afflicted with the thorns of crosses and tribulations. Ch.—Sept. have, “bands.” Heb. shittim. H.—Abundance shall ensue after the death of Cambyses, as a figure of the graces which shall be granted to Christians. Ezech. 47:2.

Ver. 19. Desolation. Cambyses laid it waste for three years, as Ochus did afterwards.—Edom. Judas and Hican punished them for their former barbarity. Ps. 136:7 and 2 Mac. 10:16. Ezechiel 25:12. C.

Ver. 20. Judea and Jerusalem. That is, the spiritual Jerusalem, viz. the Church of Christ. Ch.—Judea was unmolested for a considerable time.

Ver. 21. Which must be supplied in Hebrew. The Idumeans had been spared for a long time. But they shall not escape. Chal. &c. C.—The rites of the law could not purify, as the sacraments of Christ do. S. Jer.—God will cleanse his people, and will chastise the Ammonites, &c. who had injured them. Sept. “I will seek (or avenge) their blood, and will not pronounce innocent;” αθωωσω. H.—Sion, in heaven, (M.) and in the tabernacles of the Catholic Church, from the beginning of the world unto eternity. H.

THE PROPHECY OF AMOS

INTRODUCTION

Amos prophesied in Israel about the same time as Osee, and was called from following the cattle to denounce God's judgments to the people of Israel and the neighbouring nations, for their repeated crimes, in which they continued with repentance. Ch.—The kingdom was then almost free from idolatry, except that of the calves, yet dissolute and flourishing under Jeroboam II. The prophet spoke at Bethel, (C. 7) till the idolatrous priest, Amasias, forced him to flee to Thecua, four leagues south of Jerusalem, where he continued to prophesy against the various nations of Damascus, Juda, &c. but particularly against Israel. C. 1. &c. How long he continued is uncertain. S. Jerom and others account his style rustic; but S. Aug. (Doct. iv. 7.) as good a judge, pronounces that it was eloquent, and like that of the other inspired writers, suited to the speakers. C.—Amos means “one carrying,” or “a people torn away.” S. Jer. in Joel. H.—He deals in metaphors agreeably to his pastoral education, but is profound in sense. Id. ep. ad Paulin.—After denouncing judgments on different nations, he foretells the coming of Christ and abundance of grace. W.

AMOS 1

Ver. 1. Herdsmen. S. Jerom's MSS. after Aquila, have “pastorals,” (H.) pastoralibus. C.—Theodotion retains Nokedim. Sept. read Accarim, (H.) substituting r for d, (S. Jer.) and perhaps a for n. H.—They have also “Jerusalem,” for Israel, though the prophecy regard the latter. The country south of Thecua has no towns, and is solely for pasture. S. Jer.—Amos might have many flocks, like Mesa and king Dejotarus. 4 K. 3:4. C.—David was taken from the flocks to be king, and Amos to be a prophet. W.—King. These two lived long in prosperity. C.—Earthquake. Many understand this of a great earthquake, which, they say, was felt at the time that king Ozias attempted to offer incense in the temple. But the best chronologists prove that the earthquake here spoken of must have been before that time: because Jeroboam the second, under whom Amos prophesied, was dead long before that attempt of Ozias. Ch.—This is asserted by Usher. Yet his arguments are not conclusive.

If the attempt and earthquake happened in the 23d year of Ozias, Amos might commence A. 3215, six years before the death of Jeroboam. 4 K. 15:5. Zac. 11:15. C.—Josephus (ix. 1.) fixes upon the former period. Jeroboam, however, died in the 38th of Ozias, who was deposed 14 years later. W.

Ver. 2. Carmel. “God’s vineyard,” may denote any fruitful mountain. Amos refers to pastoral affairs. C.

Ver. 3. Three-four. That is, for their many unrepented of crimes. Ch.—three is the first number of which we can say “many or all.” Four denotes excess. Thus God forgives many sins, yet punishes when they become excessive. W.—Thus profane authors say, (C.)

Terque quaterque pectus percussa decorum. Æn. iv.

—Convert it. That is, I will not spare them, nor turn away the punishments I design to inflict upon them. Ch.—My decree is absolute. —Wains, designed to make the corn come out, (C.) or to cut the straw. S. Jer.—Such instruments were sometimes trailed over men. Sept. “they have sawed the pregnant women,” &c. This circumstance is borrowed from 4 K. 8. Damascus was often at war with Israel. But Jeroboam punished it as Theglathphalassar did afterwards, v. 5 and 4 K. 16:9. Amos might witness the ravages of the former. C.—Azael, or Hazael, who slew his master, Benadad. H.

Ver. 5. Plain. The city “Bikhath—Aven,” or the latter word, probably denotes Baal, as the Syrians style Baal-Bek, the city which the Greeks call Heliopolis. The valley between the two mountains extending northward, is still called Bucca.—Pleasure. Heb. “Beth Heden.” We find Eden in a delightful part of Libanus.—Cyrene, not in Africa, but on the river Cyrus, in Albania. 4 K. 15:29.

Ver. 6. Edom. the Philistines and Tyrians (v. 9) exercised this inhumanity on the Idomeans, probably before they had thrown off the yoke of Juda, under Joram, (4 K. 8:21) as the Lord seems concerned for them; (C.) or they sold the captive Israelites to Edom, to increase their misery. S. Jer.—Sept. “the captivity of Solomon,” or the subjects of that monarch. But the Heb. word means also perfect, (H.) or absolute, (Jer. 13:19. C.) or “pacific,” seizing the citizens in times of peace. H.

Ver. 7. Gaza. Ozias, Ezechias, and Psammetichus, ravaged the country. 2 Par. 26:6 and 4 K. 18:8. Is. 14:29. The Philistines recovered strength; but Nabuchodonosor, Alexander, and the Machabees conquered them again.

Ver. 9. Brethren; for Edom and the Jews sprung from the same stock. Some think that he alludes to the alliance of the king of Tyre and David. But that had long ceased, and was not agreeable to the law; (Ex. 22:23. and 3 K. 9:13. C.) at least when it was attended with much danger. H.

Ver. 10. Thereof. Salmanasar besieged it five years (Menander) and Nabuchodonosor thirteen, when he destroyed Tyre. Ezech. 26.

Ver. 11. Sword. Edom was subdued by David, and remained tributary till Joram. It attempted to recover its liberty under Josaphat, though the Heb. text have improperly Aram. 2 Par. 20:2, 23. The two nations were often at variance. C.—Cast off. Sept. “violated the womb, or the mother on the earth.”

Ver. 12. Houses, &c. Sept. “its foundations,” (H.) or the fortified country. S. Jer.—Bosor lay towards Philadelphia, in the ancient territory of Edom. Their strong places were seized by Ozias, by the Chaldeans, and by the Machabees.

Ver. 13. Border. They pretended that Galaad belonged to them. Judg. 11:12. David subdued Ammon; but after the division of the kingdom, they recovered their independence, and took occasion to commit these cruelties, while Israel had to contend with Syria. Jeremias (49:1) speaks of a later period.

Ver. 14. Babba, the capital, called also Philadelphia. Ozias and Joatham attacked the people with advantage. C.

Ver. 15. Melchom, the god or idol of the Ammonites, otherwise called Moloch, and Melech; which, in Heb. signifies a king, or Melchom their king. Ch.—He assumed the title of “their king.” Judg. 11:14. Jer. 49:3. H.—Blind people, who could not see the vanity of such impotent gods! C.—Both he. Sept. “and their priests.” H.

AMOS 2

Ver. 1. Ashes. Some think that he alludes to 4 K. 3:27 or rather to some war, the ashes of the dead were disturbed. C.—Both these acts of inhumanity deserved severe punishment. W.

Ver. 2. Fire: war under Ozias. C.—Carioth. Sept. “the cities.” Carioth has this meaning, but is was also the name of a great city. Jer. 48:24. H.

Ver. 3. Judge, ruler, or head, shall be no more.

Ver. 4. Walked. After Solomon, scarcely a good prince appeared, till the days of Amos. Juda imitated the idolatry of Israel, hoping thus to find assistance. C.—His crime was the more grievous, as they had the law. W.

Ver. 5. Fire. Under Joathan, Rasin, &c. invaded the country. Achaz increased the misery, by applying to the Assyrians. C.

Ver. 6. Just man. Joseph, (Rupert) or our Saviour, (Sanct.) or any other. The expression is proverbial. Ezec. 13:19. C.—Israel contemned the law, and adopted the abominations of all. W.

Ver. 7. Humble, provoking him to anger.—Name. Such incests caused infidels to blaspheme. Lev. 18:8. C.—They must be punished with severity. W.

Ver. 8. Altar. Herein they offended doubly, (Ex. 22:26) as they used the garments of others to hide their shameful actions. 4 K. 23:7. C.—Sept. “and tying up their garments with cords, they made veils touching the altar, and drank wine procured by calumnies,” (H.) or “rapine,” &c. Chal.—Condemned by them unjustly, though some think that a very delicious and intoxicating wine is meant, such as was given to people in grief. Prov. 31:6. Mark 15:23. Helena learnt in Egypt how to compose such wine. Odys. iv.—Feasting in temples on carpets was an ancient custom.

Ver. 9. Beneath. The Israelites seemed like locusts in comparison. Num. 13:34.

Ver. 11. Nazarites. Some went secretly to Jerusalem for this purpose; or perhaps they performed these rites illegally at Bethel: for many parts of the law were observed, though not perfectly. C. 4:4. The Nazarites were in high estimation. Lam. 4:7. But the dissolute Israelites (C.) derided them as well as the prophets, (H.) and attempted to make them transgress. C.

Ver. 13. I will screek. Unable to bear any longer the enormous load of your sins, &c. The Spirit of God, as S. Jerom takes notice, accommodates itself to the education of the prophet, and inspires him with encouragements taken from country affairs. Ch.—Sept. “I am overturned.” Heb. “pressed.” C.

Ver. 14. Swift. Jeroboam I. Other kings are described afterwards. S. Jer.—In the latter times all was in confusion. C.

AMOS 3

Ver. 1. Family, including all the posterity of Jacob. W.—He afterwards addresses the ten tribes in particular. S. Jer. C.

Ver. 2. Known, with love, (H.) and favoured with the law, &c. Above all, styling you my people. Ex. 19:6. Ezec. 20:5. C.—Visit. That is, punish. Ch.—I will treat you like my children, that I may spare you in eternity. C.

Ver. 3. Agreed? As t hey cannot do this well, so neither can man be acceptable to God, unless he keep his laws. W.—The prophet here proves his mission, intimating that if he were not inspired, he would soon be open to detection. He had been banished from Bethel. C. 7. By many similes, he shows that the event will prove the sincerity of his character, and that he cannot resist the holy spirit which is in him.

Ver. 4. Nothing? Thus, shall I inveigh against your crimes, if there were no need?

Ver. 5. Somewhat? When the prophet speaks, has he no reason? God shews that he has sent him, by inflicting the punishments which he denounces.

Ver. 6. Afraid. Yet you can hear these terrible truths without consternation! Will you therefore escape? C.—Evil. He speaks of the evil of sin, of which God is not the author. Ch.—All evil of punishment is sent by God, either to reclaim sinners or to be the beginning of sorrows, if they die impenitent. W.—You know that He rewards or punishes. If, therefore, what I foretell come to pass, do not blame me.

Ver. 7. Prophets. In vain then would you silence them. C. 2:12, and 7:12. He always tends to the conclusion. v. 8. C.

Ver. 9. Azotus. Sept. “Assyrians.”—Follies. Sept. “wonders.” Let your greatest enemies know what crimes you commit against yourselves (H.) and others.

Ver. 11. About, As oxen tread out corn, going round a tree. C.—Sept. “Tyre even all round, thy land shall be a desert.” Tsar means “Tyre and tribulation,” according to S. Jerom’s master. H.

Ver. 12. Ear: things of small value. Thus few even of the poor will escape the Assyrians. M.—Damascus. Some render “couch side.” But there is no proof of this being accurate. Jeroboam II. subdued Damascus, and reigned in prosperity. Who would then have thought that Israel should so soon be removed into Media? C.—Sept. “over-against the tribe of Juda, and in Damascus, priests hear,” &c. They probably left hares, (H.) “couches,” (Aquila) untranslated, and some person has substituted “priests.” S. Jer.—Only the miserable M. or fugitives escape the enemy. H.

Ver. 14. Bethel. Manahem seems to have sent one of the calves to engage Phul to come to his assistance. Osee 10:5 and 4 K. 15:19. Salmanasar had both. Osee 8:5. Josias afterwards defiled the profane altars. 4 K. 23:15.—Horns, made of brass, which the Assyrians carried off. C.—The fairest possessions of sinners will at last perish. W.

Ver. 15. Winter. Sept. “winged house,” to keep off cold, (S. Jer.) or to give air. C.—Summer-house. The noblemen had such is cooler regions. M.—The kings of Persia passed the summer at Ecbatana. Xen. Cyr. viii.—Palladius (1:12) orders that the summer apartments must look to the north.—Ivory. Many ornaments of this nature appeared in them, (C.) whence Achab’s palace was so called. 3 K. 22:39. H.

AMOS 4

Ver. 1. Fat kine. He means the great ones that lived in plenty and wealth, (Ch.) and without restraint, (Is. 15:5. Jer. 46:20. C.) having no compassion for the poor. W.—The women who had too great an ascendancy over their husbands, like Jezabel, may also be meant. Theod. Grot.—In many parts of the East the women affect being fat.

Ver. 2. Holiness. He has none but himself to swear by. Heb. 6:13. His word is infallible; but he condescends to use an oath to make a deeper impression on man.—Pikes; spits, or large shields. Heb. also, “They will lead you away with hooks, (in the nose, Is. 37:29) and your children with fish-hooks,” or pots. You shall be treated like victims, being either roasted or boiled. No part shall be left.

Ver. 3. Breaches of the city. C.—Sept. “naked.” Heb. “apart.” H.—The victors shall divide you among them. C.—Armon, a foreign country; some understand it of Armenia, (Ch.) and this is the general opinion. M.—Sept. “on Mount Remmon.” Theodot. “Mona.” Israel was removed into Armenia, “the mountain of Menni.” Jer. 51:27.

Ver. 4. Galgol. Thither the people went of their own accord, as to a place of devotion. Osee 4:15. Amos ironically tells them to proceed, as Christ addressed the Jews. Mat. 23:32. C.—After many admonitions have proved fruitless, God suffers infidels to act as they please. W.—This is the most dreadful of his judgments. H.—Morning, with haste.—Three days. This also may denote the false exactitude of the Israelites to perform what God did not require, while they neglected the most essential duties, like the Pharisees. It may also imply the giving tithes every third year, (Deut. 14:28) or presenting themselves at the three great festivals. Ex. 23:14. The schismatics observed parts of the law, and had a devotion of their own choice. C.

Ver. 5. With. Heb. mechamets, (H.) also “without leaven.” It was expressly forbidden, (Lev. 2:11) though not in the first fruits. Lev. 23:17.—It, to beg that God would remember you. Num. 10:10. Hence the Pharisees did so when they gave alms, (Mat. 6:2. C.) but out of ostentation. H.—Sept. “And they read the law of their own invention, (Theod.) or of God, out of the land, (which the Jews were not to do. S. Chrys. or. 3. c. Jud. Const. Apost. vi. 24.) and proclaimed praise or confession.” H.—These interpreters read inaccurately, (C.) krau méuts thure, &c. yet S. Jerom explains their words of heretics reading the Scriptures out of the true Church, and misapplying them.

Ver. 6. Dulness, (stuporem) as when the teeth have bitten at a stone (H.) and are edged. Jer. 31:29. Sept. “gnashing.” Heb. “cleanness,” through want of food. Eliseus foretold a famine under Achab. 4 K. 8:1. That of Joel (1) seems to have happened later than this. C.—God sent these afflictions for their amendment. W.

Ver. 7. Months. The latter rain falls in April. See Deut. 11:14. C.—Harvest. Sept. have as usual, “vintage.” But this is less accurate, as it never rains in the preceding summer months. S. Jer.

Ver. 9. Wind. Prot. “blasting.” H.—“Pestilential air,” (Sept. Sym. &c.) which destroys the corn (C.) and men. H.

Ver. 10. Egypt, as I published the Egyptians, (C.) or the Hebrews, when they came thence, and wished to return. Chal. S. Cyr.—Horses. I have deprived you of them, (H.) under Achab and Joachaz. 4 K. 6 and 13.—Nostrils. Hazael slew many subjects of Jehu. 4 K. 10:32. C.—The stench of their carcasses and of the locusts caused death or the plague. H.

Ver. 11. Burning. This comparison shews the condition of Israel. Hardly any escaped. Zac. 3:2 and 1 Cor. 3:15. C.

Ver. 12. These. He mentions not what, to keep them in greater suspense and dread; (S. Jer.) or he will put in execution what he had threatened before. v. 2.—Meet. Sept. “beseech.” Aq. “oppose,” or to receive the Messias. S. Jer.—Prepare by repentance to find mercy. C.—After long captivity, Christ will save some. W.

Ver. 13. Wind. Sept. “the Spirit, and announcing to man his Christ,” (H.) or Cyrus. Theod.—But this version has read improperly. C.—Some hence brought an argument against the divinity of the Holy Spirit. S. Jer.—Mist. Sept. “the morning and the cloud,” spreading light or darkness over man.—Earth, on the wings of the wind. Ps. 17:11. C.

AMOS 5

Ver. 1. Lamentation. Such canticles were usual. Is. 14.—Israel. It no longer formed a separate kingdom. C.—When the people fear no evil, God laments for them. W.

Ver. 3. City, before (C.) or after the captivity. It required a long time to fill the cities as they had been. H.—When the Assyrians invaded the country, it was greatly reduced. C.

Ver. 5. Bethel, ... Galgal, ... Bersabee. The places where they worshipped their idols. Ch.—They had all been honoured by the patriarchs. Bersabee had belonged to Juda under Achab. 3 K. 19:3. But it was originally in the tribe of Simeon, and Jeroboam II. recovered all that had been lost. 4 K. 14:25. C.—Unprofitable. Heb. leaven, “for vanity,” (H.) Bethaven.

Ver. 6. Joseph. His two grandchildren gave name to the principle tribes of the kingdom.—Bethel. Sept. “Israel,” which seems preferable. C.—Yet Bethel may stand, as it denotes the apostate Israelites.

Ver. 7. You. Sept. “the Lord, [God] who does judgment on high, and has placed justice on the earth; (8) who maketh and transformeth all things, and turneth,” &c. H.—Heb. agrees with the Vulg. C.

Ver. 8. Arcturus and Orion. Arcturus is a bright star in the north, Orion a beautiful constellation in the south. Ch.—Shepherds in Arabia and Spain are well acquainted with the stars. C.—We have examined the meaning of cima and cesil, Job 9:9 and 38:31. S. Jerom’s master asserts that the latter means “effluence.” Cima is rendered the Pleiades by Aquila and Th.; “the seven stars,” by Prot. H.—When such allusions to the heathen mythology occur, they give no sanction to it, but serve to explain what is meant. S. Jer.—Morning, affording comfort. C. 4:13.—Earth, by floods (C.) or rain. S. Jer.

Ver. 9. With a smile. That is, with all ease, and without making any effort. Ch.—Aquila has “grinning,” to shew displeasure. S. Jer.—Heb. “he strengthens the oppressor against the strong,” so that those whom he pleases to chastise cannot escape.

Ver. 10. They, the wicked, could not endure Amos, (C. 7:12) nor those who rebuked them.

Ver. 12. Grievous. Heb. also, “numerous.”

Ver. 13. Time. It is to no purpose speaking to the deaf, (Eccli. 32:9) or throwing pearls before swine. Mat. 7:6. Amos was silent for a while, till God opened his mouth again. C. 3:8 and 7:12.

Ver. 14. Said. Probably Amaias took occasion, from the flourishing state of the kingdom, to assert that the Lord approved of their conduct. C.

Ver. 15. May be. God will not be wanting on his side. But this implies that man may find a difficulty in seeking good, and neglect to do it, though he may if he please, with God’s assistance. W.—Remnant. Posterity. C.

Ver. 16. Lament. Such hired mourners often seemed more grieved than those who were really affected. Hor. art. All were invited to join in the common sorrow. Jer. 9:17 and 48:31.

Ver. 18. The day. Some imprudently laughed at the prophets. Is. 5:19. Jer. 17:15. Others wished for the coming of the Lord, not reflecting that he would punish their guilt. C.—Thus, many through impatience, desire to die. We must rather, repent, and leave our lives at God’s disposal. S. Jer.

Ver. 19. Serpent. All his attempts would thus proved abortive. The Israelites were not ruined by Phul, or by Theglathphalassar. But the serpent, (H.) Salmanasar, came and took them in their own houses. 4 K. 17:7. C.

Ver. 21. Festivities. Some were still observed. C. 4:4.

Ver. 22. Vows. Heb. “peace-offerings of your mercies;” a sort of oxen. 2 K. 6:13 and 3 K. 1:9. Sept. “the salvation of your appearance,” or what you offer for your welfare.

Ver. 23. Harp. Praise ill becomes the sinner. Eccli. 15:9. Ps. 49:17.

Ver. 24. Mighty. Heb. “Ethan.” Let your virtue appear, or the greatest miseries will shortly overwhelm you. C.

Ver. 25. Did you offer, &c. Except the sacrifices that were offered at the first, in the dedication of the tabernacle, the Israelites offered no sacrifices in the desert. Ch.—They ceased after the beginning of the second year. S. Aug. q. 47 in Ex. Lev. 7. &c. W.—God did not require sacrifices when the people came out of Egypt. Jer. 7:22. Deut. 12:8. They were not performed so regularly in the desert, (C.) and the people still bore a secret affection for idols, (v. 26) which rendered all their victims useless. H.

Ver. 26. A tabernacle, &c. All this alludes to the idolatry which they committed, when they were drawn away by the daughters of Moab to the worship of their gods. Num. 25. Ch.—They imitated the superstitions of Egypt, and bore the image of Osiris, adorned with a star and crescent, on a sort of base, under a canopy. Heb. “You carried the tents of your king and the base of your statues, the star of your gods, which you have made for yourselves.” Sept. by changing (C.) chiun in Rephan, or ραιφαν, (H.) have caused great confusion among commentators. If any change were requisite, (C.) cima (H.) would be preferable. v. 8. Job 9:9. Yet the Heb. seems to be correct, and chiun denotes a pedestal rather than an idol. Some read Kevan, the Saturn of the Arabs, &c. and think that Rephan has been mistaken for it. The only difficulty is the authority of S. Stephen, who follows the Sept. Acts 7:43. Yet he probably spoke in Syriac, and might pronounce Chevan; though S. Luke might adopt the Sept. in a matter of so little consequence. C. Diss.—This decision may not probably give satisfaction to those who reflect that both these authors were under the immediate influence of the Holy Ghost, and that if an error had crept into the copy of the Sept. he would have corrected it. Truth is always of sufficient consequence. See Kennicott, Diss. ii. p. 344. H.—Chiun and Rephan are “expressive of the same” god or idol, representing the machine of the heavens. The people of Peru worshipped Choun. Parkhurst, p. 137.—Remvan may be Remmon, (4 K. 6:18) or Saturn. Grot.—In a Coptic alphabet of the planets it is thus explained: (De Dieu. Collier. Dict. Sept. and Acts) “You have taken the tabernacle of Moloch, and the star of your Rempham, figures,” &c. Prot. marg. “the Siccuth, your king, and Chiun, your images, the star,” &c. H.

Ver. 27. Damascus, or Babylon, (Acts 7) into Mesopotamia, &c. The sense is the same. C.—When the apostles quote passages, “they do not consider the words but the sense.” S. Jer.—One Greek copy, however, has Damascus in the Acts. H.

AMOS 6

Ver. 1. Wealthy. Sept. Syr. and Arab. “despisers of Sion.” Heb. also, “who hate Sion.” The prophecy wholly regards Israel. C.—It is a great crime for the rich to neglect the poor; but still more so, when wealthy clergymen shew no compassion for the spiritual or corporal wants of their neighbours. W.—State. Heb. “to whom the house of Israel comes” for judgment.

Ver. 2. Chalane. Ctesiphon (C.) was built on its ruins. Gen. 10:10. H.—Why do you imitate these cities? or, has their greatness protected them? Phul probably took Chanane, and Jeroboam II. the other cities. v. 15 and 4 K. 14:25. At that time there was no appearance of the kingdom being destroyed; yet Amos composes a funeral canticle, to shew the certainty of the event.

Ver. 3. Separated. Heb. “remove the evil day,” as if it would not overtake you. Ezec. 12:22. Sept. “who are praying (C.) or coming (Grabe) to the evil day, approaching and touching false sabbaths.” H.—They pray to be delivered, while they continue (C.) their false worship. H.

Ver. 4. Ivory, with which the beds for eating were adorned. v. 7. C.—Wanton. Heb. “stretch themselves out upon their,” &c. H.

Ver. 5. David. They think they excel him in music; but he consecrated his talent to a better purpose. C.—Sept. “they deemed them stable, and not fugitive things.” H.—They have placed their chief good in such pleasures. Theod. C.

Ver. 6. In bowels. Sept. “refined,” (H.) or cleared of the dregs.—Joseph, of their brethren, or they seem to have no share in the sufferings of mankind. Ps. 72:5.

Ver. 7. Luxurious. Heb. “the feast of those who stretch themselves out, shall,” &c. Sept. “the neighing shall be removed from Ephraim.” His lusts shall be punished. Jer. 5:8.—Some translate Heb. “the mourning of those who stretch themselves on their beds is at hand.” Others, “their funeral feast is distant.” None shall bewail their death. So ambiguous is the original. C.

Ver. 8. Jacob. God loved the humility of the patriarch, and hated the pride of his posterity. W.

Ver. 9. Die. Their numbers will not protect them from the plague.

Ver. 10. Burn. After the captivity, it was more common to bury or to embalm the dead. C.

Ver. 11. Lord. He has done it. Do not repine. Theod. S. Cyr.—Heb. “Be silent, and not to remember the,” &c. He will offer comfort. C.—Still, none will return to the Lord. S. Jer.

Ver. 12. Clefts. All shall perish, (C.) both Israel and Juda. Chal. Grot. —But he speaks only of the former.

Ver. 13. Buffles, which cannot be tamed. Heb. “with oxen.” We must understand, on rocks. C.—Sept. “Shall they be silent when they are with females?” H.—To turn the works of justice into sins, is no less unnatural than to plough with wild buffles. W.

Ver. 14. Naught: in your idols, which are nothing, (1 Cor. 8:4) or in your own strength, fortifications, or allies.—Horns: glory and power. C.—Pa rata tollo cornua. Hor. epod. 6.

Ver. 15. Nation; the Assyrians.—Desert, commonly called Bezor, (C.) between Damietta and Rhinocorura. S. Jer.—The whole territory of Israel, reaching so far, (v. 2) shall be laid waste. C.

AMOS 7

Ver. 1. The locust, &c. These judgments by locusts and fire, which by the prophet's intercession were moderated, signify the former invasions of the Assyrians under Phul and Theglathphalassar, before the utter desolation of Israel by Salmanasar. Ch.—Locusts denoted the Assyrian invaders. 4 K. 18. W.—Formed. Lit. “the maker of the locust, in the beginning of the herbs shooting,” &c. (H.) in spring. S. Jer.—They pasture in our January: yet the grass of autumn may be meant. The king took the best which grows in summer. C.—Sept. “and lo, a swarm of locusts coming in the morning; and lo, one bruchus, Gog, the king,” (H.) or “against king Gog.” C.—Aquila has, “of the king of Gaza.” He probably left the original term, (S. Jer.) gizze. H.—The invasion of the Assyrians, Chaldeans, and Scythians is insinuated. Theod.—The latter came the year after the earthquake. C. 1. Pezron.—This was the first vision of Amos. C.—He saw the first and last inroads of the Assyrians, as well as the prosperity of Jeroboam. M.

Ver. 2. When. Sept. “If it shall eat up,” &c. H.—Little. After Jeroboam II. the kingdom fell to decay, when Manahem called in the Assyrians. C.

Ver. 3. The. Sept. "Repent, O Lord, on this head, and this shall," &c.—Not be: the grass shall not be totally devoured. H.—The king of the Assyrians invaded Juda in vain. 4 K. 19. W.

Ver. 4. Part of the land, if the prophet had not interposed; (v. 6. C.) or rather civil wars desolated a great part of the kingdom, before the Lord was appeased. H.—The fire foreshewed the captivity of the two tribes. 4 K. 24. W.

Ver. 6. The. Sept. as v. 3. H.—We read not of locusts being sent, v. 1. But fire of war certainly raged before the final catastrophe of Jehu's family, when Sellum slew Zacharias. 4 K. 15:8. C.

Ver. 7. Plastered. Heb. "wall, made by a plumb-line, with a plumb-line in his hand." Prot. H.—But Sept. Syr. &c. seem more literal, (C.) "on a wall of adamant, and a diamond in his hand." Heb. anac, (H.) whence a diamond was called anactites, (Orpheus) or anachites. Pliny xxxvii. 4. —Saturn had a scythe of adamant, and walls of this kind were deemed impervious even to the inhabitants of heaven. Thus Virgil describes the gates of hell:

*Porta adversa ingens solidoque adamante columnæ,
Vis ut nulla virum non ipsi excindere ferro
Cœlicolæ valeant.* Æn. vi.

—God appearing on such a wall, intimated that the separation between him and his people was complete. C.—Hic murus aheneus esto. Hor. i. ep. 1.

Ver. 8. Plaster. Sept. "I will no more pass over it," the adamantine wall. I will hide their faults no longer. H.—this third vision alluded to the distress of the ten tribes. 4 K. 15:20. W.

Ver. 9. Idol. Heb. "Isaac." C.—Sept. "laughter." H.—Isaac had resided for some time at Bersabee, which was place frequented by idolaters. C. 5:5 and 8:14. Josias overthrew (4 K. 13:8. C.) the profane "altars." H. —Sword. His son Zacharias was slain after six months reign. v. 6. 11.

Ver. 10. Words. Nothing could be more unfounded. Amos had indeed denounced many judgments; but he was not wanting in respect to the king. C.

Ver. 11. Sword. the prophet did not say this, but that the Lord would rise up against the house of Jeroboam with the sword; which was verified when Zacharias, the son and successor of Jeroboam, was slain by the sword. 4 K. 15:10. Ch.—The false prophet was therefore guilty of a lie. They accuse the preachers of truth as traitors. W.—Thus many missionary priests have been traduced in England. H.

Ver. 12. Seer. This was the ancient title of prophets; (1 K. 9:9. C.) but it is here used contumeliously. H.—We know not whether Amasias acted by the king's order or not. He was less afraid of the predictions than of losing his employment. C.

Ver. 13. Sanctuary, or “palace.” Kimchi.—The kings resided commonly in Samaria; but they came hither to practise their religion, and had a palace. C.—The king's choice was all that Amasias regarded, as many seem still to do, without examining whether the religion be true or false! Will the king screen them from the indignation of the just Judge at the hour of death? H.

Ver. 14. I am not a prophet. That is, I am not a prophet by education: nor is prophesying my calling or profession: but I am a herdsman, whom God was pleased to send hither to prophesy to Israel. Ch.—He speaks with the like humility as the baptist, John 1:21. Lu. 7:26. It seems the prophets usually left their trade, and applied to meditation. Zac. 8:5. Sept. “I was not a prophet, nor,” &c.—Plucking. Sept. (Th.) “pricking.” C.—This was requisite to make the fruit ripen in four days' time. Pliny xiii. 7. and xvi. 27.—Wild fig-trees have three sorts of fruits. The flies which proceed from some of them, prick the sweet figs, and make them ripen. Tourefort i. let. 8.—Amos probably conveyed such wild figs to be near those of the garden, while at other times he fed his cattle.

Ver. 16. Drop. menaces. Ezech. 20:46. Sept. “thou shalt not disturb (C.) or threaten the house of Jacob.” S. Jer.—Idol; the calf, worshipped in Bethel. Ch.—Heb. “Isaac,” as v. 9. H.

Ver. 17. Play. Symmachus has better, “shall be treated as a harlot.” A “husband would rather hear that his wife had been slain than defiled.” S. Jer.—Line, and divided among strangers.—Land, out of Palestine. All other countries were deemed unclean. Amasias was probably exiled, or led captive by Theglathphalassar, as Salmanasar did not come till sixty-two years after the death of Jeroboam. We know no more of the history of Amasias. The martyrologies say he slew Amos. C.—His name means “rigid,” and he was a true image of a heretic. “All that he possesses shall fall to the share of devils.” S. Jer.

AMOS 8

Ver. 1. Hook. Heb. "basket of summer fruit." Sept. "bird cage or net." H.—Israel was ripe for destruction. v. 2. C. 7:8. C.—Not only those who were near, (4 K. 15:29) but the rest also were taken, (4 K. 17:6) as we pull with a hook the fruit when we cannot reach otherwise. W.

Ver. 3. Temple, when God comes like a mighty warrior; or when the profane temples shall be pillaged. C. 9:1. Heb. also, "the canticles of the temple or palace shall be changed into lamentations."—Place. Heb. "a multitude of dead bodies shall be cast in every place. Keep silence." C.

Ver. 5. Mouth: the first day was observed as a festival. Num. 10:10. H.—At the expiration of the month usurers demanded their money. Hor. i. sat. 3. Aristoph. Nub. ii. 1.—Corn, to sell after the sabbatical year, when it was dearest. Sabbath also denotes all "festivals." These misers think that there are too many.—Sicle. Having a large measure to buy, and a small one to sell again. Deut. 25:13. Prov. 20:10.

Ver. 6. Shoes, for almost nothing. Thus they forced the poor to serve, or to sell their effects.

Ver. 7. Jacob, because the rich despise the poor. It may also mean, that he swore by heaven, or the temple, (Lev. 26:19) or that he would destroy the high places. C.

Ver. 8. Altogether. Sept. "its total ruin shall rise as a river."—Egypt. The whole land shall be visited with misery, as Egypt is by the Nile. H.—The enemy shall retire with the booty. The Nile overflows in summer, and covers Egypt for six weeks, carrying much earth with its impetuous waves. Is. 18:2.

Ver. 9. Light. Usher (A. 3213.) explains this of an eclipse, at Pentecost. The Fathers generally understand that which accompanied the death of Christ; but it only implies great desolation and terror. Jer. 15:9. Joel 3:11. S. Jer. &c. C.—In their greatest prosperity, calamities shall unexpectedly fall upon them. W.

Ver. 10. Baldness, the hair being cut in mourning. Job 1:20.—Son, most afflicted. Zac. 12:10. Jer. 6:26. C.

Ver. 11. Lord. During the siege provisions were wanting, but instruction still more so. W.—Israel had banished Amos. They would be left destitute. We find no prophet among the during the captivity, except Tobias. C. 13:3. We may apply this to the state of the Jews since the death of Christ. They have no guides. C.—They read incessantly, and do not understand (S. Jer. Mercer.) the Bible, which non will ever penetrate who refuse to receive the key from the Church. H.

Ver. 12. Sea to sea: from west to south, or to the ocean; in whatever part of the world they may be. C.

Ver. 14. Sin. Sept. “propitiation,” which the pagans deemed requisite; (Hor. i. ode 2.) or worship (H.) of Baal, (4 K. 17:16. C.) and all the other superstitions. H.—Way. Sept. “thy God,” or religion, (Acts 9:2) or pilgrimage to Bersabee. C. 5:5. Perhaps the true God was here adored; but it was in a manner which he condemned. C.—In vain do those pretend to honour Him, who follow the traditions of unbelieving men. H.

AMOS 9

Ver. 1. Altar, in Jerusalem. C. 8:3 and 1:2. God is going to punish Israel, (C.) or the two tribes. Chal. S. Jer.—The ruin of the altar and temple, imply the abolishing of sacrifices during the captivity, at Babylon. W.—But Amos speaks rather of Israel. C.—Sword. The princes and people are all guilty. Sept. “strike or cut on the heads of all.” H.

Ver. 2. Hell; to the deepest caves, where they used to flee. Ps. 138:8.

Ver. 3. Top, in woods, or caverns.—Serpent. Fishes and sea monsters are so called.

Ver. 5. A river. Sept. “the river of Egypt.” C. 8:8. and 5:24. C.—Grabe’s ed. has “its consummation (or utter ruin) shall rise up as a river.” H.

Ver. 6. Ascension, or his high throne. Ch.—Sept. “the ascent, and hath founded the declarations (H.) or promise upon,” &c. which must be explained in a moral sense. C.—Bundle. That is, his Church, bound up together by the bands of one faith and communion, (Ch.) which God will protect, and punish sinners. W.—Heb. “his apartments in heaven, and his assembly (or footstool) on earth.”—Sea, by floods, or rather by rain. C. 5:8. C.

Ver. 7. Ethiopians. That is, as black as they, by your iniquities. Ch.—Chus was father of the Scythians, Arabs, &c. Yet none of these nations were under the peculiar protection of God. The Israelites depended too much on this prerogative, (C.) which they deserved to lose by their sins. H.—God brought them out of Egypt. But he also took the Philistines from Caphtor, (C.) and enabled them to settle in the country. H.—Cappadocia. Cyprus, (Gen. 10:14) or rather Crete. 1 K. C.—Cyrene, (Sym.) “wall,” (Th.) or “pit.” Sept. Theglathphalassar took Aram or the people of Damascus into captivity. C.—Their future return is represented as already past. Vat. Mercer.

Ver. 9. Ground, to be mixed with the good corn.—Israel shall be purified in captivity. C.—Though many perished, God still preserved his Church. W.

Ver. 10. Us. Such infidels delayed repentance, (H.) or laughed at the menaces of impending ruin. C. 5:18. C.

Ver. 11. David. S. James, after S. Peter, explains this of the vocation of the Gentiles. Acts 15:15. W.—After the fall of Israel, Juda still flourished: but this cannot be meant. The prosperity after the return from Babylon, or rather under Jesus Christ, must fulfil the prediction. Zorobabel had a very precarious authority, and the Machabees were not of the tribe of Juda, nor was their kingdom so flourishing or durable. C.

Ver. 12. Edom, subdued by Hircan, with the surrounding nations. The same letters may be read Adam, “man,” as the Sept. have, agreeably to Acts 15:17. C.—“That the rest of men might seek the Lord, (Grabe substitutes me) and all the nations upon whom my,” &c. Edom and all mankind shall receive the glad tidings of salvation. H.

Ver. 13. Shall overtake, &c. By this is meant the great abundance of spiritual blessings; which, as it were, by a constant succession, shall enrich the Church of Christ. Ch.—Munster, and his imitator, Clarius, see nothing but an allegory in this abundance and return, v. 14. Yet the literal sense ought to be adopted, when it involves no contradiction. Houbigant, pref. p. 297.—God promised a succession of crops to the faithful Israelites, (Lev. 26:5) and the return of the ten tribes is frequently specified. C.

ABDIAS

THE PROPHECY OF ABDIAS

INTRODUCTION

Abdias, whose name is interpreted the servant of the Lord, is believed to have prophesied about the same time as Osee, Joel, and Amos: though some of the Hebrews, who believe him to be the same with Achab's steward, make him much more ancient. his prophecy is the shortest of any in number of words, but yields to none, says S. Jerom, in the sublimity of mysteries. It contains but one chapter. Ch.—He foretells the destruction of Edom, for its pride and enmity against the Jews: whose return and the redemption of mankind are also announced. W.—Abdias seems to have prophesied after the destruction of Jerusalem, and before Nabuchodonosor attacked Edom, &c. which took place within five years. C.

ABDIAS 1

Ver. 1. Edom. The Jews understand this of the Romans; others apply it to themselves; but it seems to speak of the Idumeans.—Ambassador, prophet, or angel; or God has suffered the passions of men to act. All is here animated. God appears leading on the various nations. C.—He directed their thoughts to unite against Edom. W.—Yet he did not approve of their ambition. H.

Ver. 2. Contemptible. The nations of Chaldea, &c. were far more potent. Yet Edom must be brought still lower.

Ver. 3. Rocks. Heb. “Selah,” or Petra, the capital. C.—People dwell in caverns from Eleutheropolis to Ailath. S. Jer.

Ver. 4. Down. Job 20:6. How vain is all human power!

Ver. 5. Cluster. Jer. 49:9. The Chaldeans take all, and remove the people. v. 7.

Ver. 7. Peace. The enemy had used their services against the Jews; but now they invade their confederates. C.—Of this the Idumeans were not aware. H.

Ver. 8. Esau. Job and Eliphaz were both from this country.

Ver. 9. South. Heb. “Theman,” (C.) where the Romans kept a garrison, fifteen miles south of Petra. S. Jer.

Ver. 10. Slaughter. They invaded the dominions of Achaz, and incited the enemy to destroy all. 2 Par. 28:17. Ps. 136:7.

Ver. 11. Captive. He alludes to the taking of Sedecias.—Lots, for the booty, or whether they should burn the city or not. All was regulated by lots. C.

Ver. 12. Thou shalt not look, &c. or thou shouldst not, &c. It is a reprehension for what they had done, and at the same time a declaration that these things should not pass unpunished. Ch.—God admonishes, and at the same time insinuates that the Idumeans would act quite the reverse. W.—Magnify. Literally, thou shalt not speak arrogantly against the children of Juda, as insulting them in their distress, (Ch.) like people mocking. When they shall be themselves afflicted, they shall cease to upbraid the Jews. C.

Ver. 13. Army. Heb. also, “goods.” Sept. “thou wilt not join their army in the day of ruin.” H.—Thou wilt have other things to think about.

Ver. 14. Flee. The Idumeans might easily have concealed the fugitives. But they were so inhuman as to fall upon them, (C.) or drive them back.

Ver. 15. Nations around. H.—Josephus (x. 11.) does not specify Edom. But the prophets had announced their destruction, effected by Nabuchodonosor, while the main part of his army besieged Tyre. C.

Ver. 16. Drink. They shall rejoice at your fall, as you did at that of Juda; (S. Jer.) or, as my people has not been spared, can you expect to escape? Jer. 49:12.—Not. These nations and the Chaldeans themselves were brought low, while the Jews regained the regal power. The cup denotes vengeance. Ps. 74:9. Plautus uses the same expression: ut senex hoc eodem poculo, quo ego bibi, biberet. Casina. C.

Ver. 17. Sion. This prosperity, in the historical sense, was promised to the Jews, after their return; and they enjoyed as much of it as their sins did not hinder; the rest was fulfilled in Christ. S. Jer. ad Dard. W.—Holy. Providence watched over the Jews in a particular manner, while the neighbouring nations fell a prey to the Persians, to Alexander, &c. The persecution of Epiphanes was sharp, but of short duration; and it gave occasion to the Jews to regain their liberty, and to have kings C.) little (H.) inferior to those of old.—Them. Heb. “its goods.” The Jews obtained all Palestine. C.—Christ extends his dominion over the world. Theod.

Ver. 18. Stubble. The Jews often attacked Edom, and at last forced them to submit to the law of circumcision.—Remains. Sept. cop. vary; “corn fire or carrier.” H.—Those who escaped alone from battle had the former title. Hesyc. πυρφορος. C.—Priests went with fire before the armies engaged. If they were slain, it was a sign, that no quarter was given, as these were accounted sacred. Grabe. Prol. H.

Ver. 19. Plains. Sephala. Jos. 10:40.—Samaria, which the Cutheans had occupied, till Alexander subjected them to the Jews, and Hircan asserted his authority. Jos. Ant. xiii. 18.—Galaad, east of the Jordan. Benjamin alone did not occupy this country.

Ver. 20. Sarepta. This was accomplished after the persecution of Epiphanes.—Bosphorus. So S. Jerom's master interpreted Bispharad. But it seems rather to mean a part of Mesopotamia. Sippara stands above, where the Euphrates divides its streams.

Ver. 21. Saviours, the Machabees, as figures of Christ. The temporal power of the Jews ended thirty-seven years after his resurrection. C.—The rest of this prophecy (v. 19) regards Christ's kingdom over all nations, which believe in him, and receive the remission of their sins. Acts 10:43. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xviii. 31. W.

JONAS

THE PROPHECY OF JONAS

INTRODUCTION

Jonas prophesied in the reign of Jeroboam II. as we learn from 4 K. 14:25 to whom also he foretold his success in restoring all the borders of Israel. He was of Geth—Opher, in the tribe of Zabulon, and consequently of Galilee; which confutes that assertion of the Pharisees, (John 7:52) that no prophet ever arose out of Galilee. He prophesied and prefigured in his own person the death and resurrection of Christ, and was the only one among the prophets who was sent to preach to the Gentiles. Ch.—The most incredible mystery in our religion, and the vocation of the Gentiles, are thus insinuated. C.—The latter shall be saved if they repent, like Ninive. W.—Paine's supposition, that this book was written by a pagan "to satirise the malignant character of a predicting priest," requires no refutation. H. Watson.

JONAS 1

Ver. 2. Ninive, the capital city of the Assyrian empire. Ch.—It was 150 stadia long and 90 broad, (Diod. ii.) on the western bank of the Tigris. Pliny vi. 13.—Mosul, which some mistake for it, stands on the northern side. See Gen. 10:10. At the time when Jonas preached, Ninive would contain about 600,000. C. 4:11. They were people less favoured by God, (Acts 14:15. C.) but not abandoned. Theod.—God took sufficient care of all his creatures, and foretold many things relating to foreign nations. C.—Rom. 3:29. W.—For the. Sept. add, "cry of." Gen. 4 and 18. H.

Ver. 3. Tharsis. Which some take to be Tharsus of Cilicia, others to be Tartessus of Spain, others to be Carthage. Ch.—Joppe, now Jaffa, (M.) a miserable seaport. H.—It was formerly the best near Jerusalem, (2 Par. 2:16) though very dangerous. Jos. Bel. iii. 15. or 29.—It is said to have been built before "the inundation" of the world, (Mela. i. 11) and was famous for the adventure of Andromeda, rescued by Perseus from a sea monster. Pliny v. 13. C.—Lord. He feared being accounted a false prophet, (W.) knowing how much God was inclined to shew mercy, (C. 4:2) and being disheartened at the difficulty of the undertaking, like Moses and Gedeon. C.—He might also think that if the Ninivites repented, it would be a reflection on the obstinacy of the Jews. S.

Ver. 4. Broken. Seeing no natural cause of such a sudden tempest, they concluded (W.) that some on board must be guilty; as the sailors argued (H.) when the noted atheist, Diagoras, was in similar circumstances. C.—They had recourse to lots, and the prophet consented by God’s inspiration, (W.) though this is not written, (H.) and the lots were superstitious. M.—The oriental writers add many things to this sufficiently marvellous account. Lyrar. D’Herbelot. C.

Ver. 5. God. They were idolaters. v. 6.—Wares, which is commonly done in storms. C.—This loss was in punishment of their sins; though they seem not devoid of some fear of God and man. H.—Sleep. This is a lively image of the insensibility of sinners, fleeing from God, and threatened on every side with his judgments; and yet sleeping as if they were secure. Ch.—Yet Jonas was sleeping through grief. S. Jer. Mat. 26:40. C.

Ver. 9. Fear, and therefore fly from the face of the Lord. v. 3, 10. H.—He knew that God is every where, v. 3. Ps. 33:8. C.—Sept. “I worship.” Fear is often taken in this sense. H.

Ver. 12. Cast me. God intimates that he required this sacrifice. M.

Ver. 13. Hard. They were unwilling to destroy the prophet, (C.) fearing to incur fresh guilt by thus treating one who had intrusted his life to them. Jos. Ant. ix. 11.

Ver. 14. Blood. We act thus by his direction, and through necessity.

Ver. 16. Lord. They were converted by this prodigy, and offered sacrifice immediately, or (C.) when they came to port. M.—All know by the light of reason that sacrifice and vows are acceptable to the Lord. W.

JONAS 2

Ver. 1. Fish. Heb. dag: afterwards daga occurs, v. 2; (H.) on which Leusden observes, the Jews infer that Jonas was first swallowed up by male and then by a female fish, which being full of young he was much straitened, and prayed from the belly of that (hadaga) female fish! He alludes to R. Jarchi. H.—Thus nar, puer, is put for a girl, to imply that Rebecca was prudent and Dina rambling. Buxt. Tib. 13. See Kennicott, Dis. 2. p. 417 and 552.—Noble discoveries! Many suppose (

H.) that this fish was a whale, as it does not live on flesh; (C.) but its throat being so narrow, as hardly to suffer a man's arm to pass, it is more probable that it was the sea-dog, lamia or canis chariarias, (Bartolin 14.) which may easily contain a man. Aldrovandus iii. 32. M.—This sea-dog, or shark, has five rows of teeth in each jaw. Human bodies have been found entire in the stomach. Button.—Our Saviour calls the fish a whale, Mat. 12:40. W.—But that term is given to any great sea monster. Yet it is not of much importance what species of fish be meant, provided the miracle be admitted. C.—The pagans ridiculed it. S. Aug. ep. 102. q. 6. 30.—Yet they believed many of a similar nature, alleging the omnipotence of God. S. Jer.—This reason accounts for all the miracles recorded in Scripture. But might not God have chosen some easier expedient? We must not dive into his reasons. The impression which such a fact would make on the Ninivites, and the prefiguring of Christ's burial, might suffice. Jonas was not a type of his death, as some have imagined, Q. ad Orthodox. C.—Nights, or as long as our Saviour was in the monument, (M.) which was about thirty-four hours. C. Dis.

Ver. 2. Prayed. He entertained these sentiments. Sanct. xiv.—He afterwards wrote them down. C.

Ver. 3. I cried. These five verses (H.) express his thoughts while he was in the sea, (S. Jer. C.) or in the fish. H.—He doubtless prayed before, when he was cast into the sea, and also in the whale's belly, having then greater confidence that he should arrive safely on dry land, (v. 5) and therefore vowing sacrifices of thanks, v. 10. W.—Hell; the whale's belly, (Theod. &c.) or rather the depth of the sea. It may denote any imminent danger.

Ver. 5. Eyes, in a sort of despair, like the psalmist, 30:23. Yet he presently resumes fresh confidence in God, notwithstanding the greatness of his offences.—Temple. He went to Jerusalem, like other good Israelites.

Ver. 6. Soul, so that I was in danger of being suffocated. Ps. 68:2. C.—Sea. Heb. "weeds entangled," &c. H.—The Mediterranean has a great deal of sea weed. He speaks of the time before he was swallowed up by the fish.

Ver. 7. Lowest. Heb. and Sept. "clefts."—Bars, or prisons, in the abyss, (C.) farthest from the heights. W.

Ver. 8. Me, at the last gasp, (C.) and oppressed with grief. M.

Ver. 9. Mercy. He alludes to the sailors. Theodoret—Heb. also, "let them forsake their worship,” (Drus. Lev. 20:17) or they are guilty of impiety. They neglect their vows. v. 10. C. 1:16. C.

Ver. 11. Spoke to the fish. God’s speaking to the fish was nothing else but his will, which all things obey. Ch. W.—Land. Josephus says near the Euxine Sea. But thus it must have travelled 800 leagues. Others fix upon different places, without any proof. C.

JONAS 3

Ver. 2. Bid thee before, or when thou shalt be there. C.—He seems to have retired to Jerusalem. M.

Ver. 3. Journey. By the computation of some ancient historians, Ninive was about fifty miles round: so that to go through all the chief streets and public places, was three days’ journey. Ch.—Diodorus (iii. 1.) says Ninive was 150 stadia or furlongs in length. It must have been therefore 480 round; and as each furlong contains 125 paces of 5 ft. each, the compass would be “60 Italian miles, (about 50 Eng.)” which would employ a person three days to go through the principal streets. W.—Ninive “was much larger than Babylon.” Strabo xvi.—Heb. “a great city of God,” &c. denoting its stupendous size.

Ver. 4. Journey. He records what he said the first day, though he seems to have preached many (Theod.) even during forty days, after which time (H.) he expected the city would fall, and therefore retired out of the walls. C. 4.—Forty. Sept. three. S. Justin, (dial.) “three, or forty-three.” Theodoret thinks that the mistake was made by some ancient transcriber, and has since prevailed in all the copies of the Sept. All the rest have forty. S. Aug. (de civ. Dei. xviii. 44.) believes the Sept. placed three for a mysterious reason. Origen (hom. xvi. Num.) suggests that the prophet determined the number, and hence God did not execute the threat. C.—This and many other menaces are conditional. If men repent, God will change his sentence. S. Chrys. S. Greg. Mor. xvi. 18. W.

Ver. 5. God. They were convinced that he had wrought such wonders in the person of Jonas, with a desire of their welfare, particularly as he allowed them some delay. Accordingly they did penance for about forty days, and their conversion was so sincere, that Christ proposes it to his disciples. Mat. 12:41. C.—Thus “the city was overturned in its perverse manners.” S. Aug. de civ. Dei. xxi. 24. and Ps. 50.—They were at an end, and the city was renovated. H.

Ver. 6. King Sardanapalus, (Salien, A. 3216) or rather his father, Phul, whom Strabo calls Anacyndaraxes, (C.) and who died in the year 3237, (Usher) four years after he had invaded Palestine. 4 K. 15:19.

Ver. 7. Princes. Their consent was requisite, to form an irrevocable edict. Dan. 6:8.—Men. Even infants, according to the Fathers. Joel 2:16. S. Basil adds also, the young of cattle. This was done to excite rational beings to repentance. Theod.—We do not find that cattle were deprived of food on such occasions among the Jews. But Virgil specifies that this was the case at the death of Cæsar, (Ecl. 5) as it was in droughts among some nations of America. Horn ii. 13. C.—When people are greatly moved by repentance, they exceed in austerity; but if this be not indiscreet, God accepts of their good intention. W.

Ver. 10. Mercy. Heb. “repented,” as some copies of the Sept. read, while others have, “was comforted.” H.—God suspended the stroke. But as the people soon relapsed, Sardanapalus burnt himself to death, and the city was taken, (S. Jer.) thirty-seven years after Jeroboam. A. 3257. Usher.—Yet this was only a prelude to its future ruin, foretold by Tobias, (14:5. in Gr.) and effected by Nabopolassar and Astyages. C. A. 3378. Usher.—The vestiges did not appear in the days of Lucian, (Charon. C.) soon after Christ. H.

JONAS 4

Ver. 1. Troubled. His concern was lest he should pass for a false prophet; or rather lest God’s word, by this occasion might come to be slighted and disbelieved. Ch.—He conjectured that God would spare the penitent Ninivites, and feared lest prophecies should be deemed uncertain. But this doubt is solved by observing that some are conditional, (C. 3:4. Jer. 18:8) as it proved here. When the people relapsed, they were afterwards destroyed. Nah. 1. &c. W. C. 3:10.—The conversion of Ninive was an earnest of that of the Gentiles. C.—This being so intimately connected with the reprobation of the Jews, (H.) the prophet was grieved at the misery of the latter, (S. Jer.) which our Saviour and S. Paul bewailed. Acts 11:2. Rom. 10:19. Lu. 19. &c. Yet Jonas seems to have considered himself rather too much.

Ver. 5. Went, or “had gone,” waiting for the city’s ruin. C.

Ver. 6. The Lord God prepared an ivy. Hederam. In the Heb. it is kikajon, which some render a gourd; others a palmerist, or palma Christi. Ch.—This latter is now the common opinion. S. Jerom explains it of a shrub growing very fast in the sandy places of Palestine. He did not pretend (C.) that hedera, or ivy, as Aquila translates, (H.) was the precise import; but he found no Latin term more resembling, (C.) as he observes here and in his letter to S. Aug. who had informed him that a certain bishop of Africa having read his version publicly, the audience was surprised at the change; and the Jews, “either through ignorance or malice,” decided in favour of the old Greek and Latin version of gourd, which Prot. retain. H.—But this does not grow so soon no more than the ivy. The palma Christi, or ricinus, does. The Egyptians call it kiki, and the Greeks selicy prion. See Pliny xv. 7. Its foliage is thick, and its trunk hollow. C.—But how came S. Jerom to be unacquainted with this plant? or why did he substitute one false name for another?

Ver. 8. Hot. Heb. also, “eastern and sultry,” (H.) or silent, (C.) which instead of refreshing, served only to increase the heat, (H.) and to raise dust. Sept. Syr. &c. agree with the Vulg.

Ver. 9. Death. The spirit of prophecy changes not the temper. C.—Jonas had reason to be grieved, and so had God to shew mercy. In this history and prediction, who would have thought that Jonas had been a figure of our Saviour’s death and resurrection, if he himself had not declared it? Mat. 12. W.—The prophet comes out of the fish alive, as Christ does from the tomb. He was cast into the sea to save those on board; Christ dies for the redemption of mankind. Jonas had been ordered to preach, but did not comply till after his escape; thus the gospel was designed to be preached to the Gentiles, yet Christ would not have it done till he had risen. Mat. 15:26. The prophet’s grief intimates the jealousy of the Jews; as his shade destroyed, points out the law, which leaves them in the greatest distress. The very name fish, ἰχθυς, is a monogram of “Jesus Christ, the Son of God, a Saviour, (C.) or crucified.” H. S. Paulinus, ep. 33.—Hence Jonas most strikingly foreshowed Christ. S. Aug. de civ. Dei. xviii. 30.

MICHEAS

THE PROPHECY OF MICHEAS

INTRODUCTION

Micheas, of Morasti, a little town in the tribe of Juda, was cotemporary with the prophet Isaias, whom he resembles both in his spirit and his style. He is different from the prophet Micheas, mentioned in the Third Book of Kings, (C. 22) for that Micheas lived in the days of king Achab, one hundred and fifty years before the time of Ezechias, under whom this Micheas prophesied, (Ch.) as he did in the two preceding reigns. H.—He addresses both Israel and Juda, and predicts the happiness of the Jews after the captivity, as a figure of what the church should enjoy. C.—The Jews shall embrace the faith at last, after the Gentiles. W.—We have only a small part of the predictions of Micheas, though he may have written no more. His style is obscure, like that of Osee. C.—His name signifies “humility,” or “who is like.” S. Jer.

MICHEAS 1

Ver. 1. Morasthite, “of Maresa,” (Chal. C. 1:14. C.) a village near Eleutheropolis. S. Jer.—Kings. They reigned about sixty years. C.

Ver. 2. Witness. Deut. 32. Is. 1 and 6. The prophet discharges his duty, and will not be blameable, if people die in their sins. Jer. 3:18. W.—This sublime address shews the importance of the subject, and how deep an impression the sins of Israel had made in his breast.

Ver. 3. Earth, to subdue the rebels. Amos 4:13. Hab. 3:3. C.

Ver. 4. Meltd. Sept. “moved.” H.—Cleft, as it was to swallow up Core, (Num. 16:31) with the greatest ease.

Ver. 5. Jerusalem. High places were left there under Joathan. 4 K. 15:35. Achab had introduced the worship of Baal into Samaria, and though the family of Jehu repressed this worship, it gained ground when Micheas appeared. C.—This conduct excited God’s indignation. H.—He came to punish the most guilty. C.

Ver. 6. Heap. Sept. “hut to keep the fruit.” Heb. “hillock of the field,” (H.) to be cultivated. Grot.—Bare, by Salmanasar. 4 K. 17:6. It was afterwards rebuilt, (C.) but completely levelled by Hircan. Jos. Ant. xiii. 18.

Ver. 7. Her wages. That is, her donaries or presents offered to her idols; or the hire of all her traffic and labour. Ch.—Samaria had trafficked with infidels, and thus grew rich, but imitated their idolatry; (W.) and therefore was ruined, and her citizens and riches H. removed into Assyria. W.—Harlot. They were gathered together by one idolatrous city, viz. Samaria: and they shall be carried away to another idolatrous city, viz. Ninive. Ch.—The hire of prostitution was not to be received in God's temple, (Deut. 23:18) which prohibition shews the antiquity of this abominable custom. Bar. 6:9. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. iv. 10. C.

Ver. 8. Naked. Ill clothed, (H.) to shew the approaching calamity of the Israelites. Is. 20. M.—Sept. and Chal. explain all of the people, (C.) or of Samaria. “Therefore shall she lament and howl, go barefoot and naked, bewail like,” &c. H.—Dragons, when they are crushed by the elephant. Solin xxxviii. M.—Tannim means also (H.) whales, &c. which make a horrible noise.—Ostriches, or swans. Is. 13:21. Both have a mournful note. C.

Ver. 9. Gate. That is, the destruction of Samaria shall be followed by the invasion of my people of Juda, and the Assyrian shall come and lay all waste even to the confines of Jerusalem. Ch.—Juda received the worship of Baal from Israel. It shared in the punishment of that kingdom. The prophet alludes to the ravages of Sennacherib, v. 13. Yet Juda was much afflicted by Razin and Phacee, before that invasion: which caused Achaz to call in the aid of Theglathphalassar. 2 Par. 28 and 4 K. 16. C.

Ver. 10. Geth. Amongst the Philistines, lest they rejoice at your calamity. Ch. 2 K. 1:20. Amos 3:9. C.—Tell not these calamities, which I foresee, among your enemies, lest they rejoice. But lament in your own houses, which shall be filled with dust. S. Jerom prays for the light of the Holy Ghost to understand this passage. W.—Weep ye not. Keep in your tears, that you may not give your enemies an occasion of exulting over you: but in your own houses, or in your house of dust, your earthly habitation, sprinkle yourselves with dust, and put on the habit of penitents. Some take the house of dust (in Hebrew Haphra) to be the proper name of a city. Ch.—With tears. Heb. “at all,” (Prot. H.) “in Acco,” or Ptolemais, (Reland) or Bochim, (H.) a place near Jerusalem. Judg. 2:1. But no reference to this place, or to “the Enakim,” (who appear in some copies of the Sept.) seems to be made. —Of dust. Samaria. v. 6. C.

Ver. 11. Place. In Samaria. In the Hebrew, the beautiful place is expressed by the word Shaphir, which some take for the proper name of a city. Ch.—It is thought that S. Jerom has given the sense of several proper names, (C.) or this has been done since in the Vulg. by some other. In the edit. of his works, (A.D. 1533) we read, "The dwelling of Saphir passes from you: she hath not come out who inhabits Sennan. The house of Asel shall receive," &c. H.—Saphir or Diocesarea was a strong place (Jos. Bel. ii. 37.) of Galilee, where Saanan was also situated. Judg. 4:11. Haetsel may denote "the vicinity." C.—People shall not attempt to comfort their neighbours, being themselves under the greatest alarms. H.—Forth. That is, they that dwelt in the confines came not forth, but kept themselves within, for fear.—Adjoining, viz. Judea and Jerusalem, neighbours to Samaria, and partners in her sins, shall share also in her mourning and calamity: though they had pretended to stand by themselves, trusting in their strength. Ch.—All the inhabitants shall be led into captivity naked. H.

Ver. 12. Weak, &c. Jerusalem is become weak unto any good; because she dwells in the bitterness of sin. Ch.—Prot. "the inhabitant of Maroth waited carefully for good." H.—We know not of any place called Maroth. Grotius would substitute Ramoth. C.—Bitterness. S. Jer. "Maroth." Sym. "provoking to bitterness." They are unable to defend their possessions. H.

Ver. 13. Lachis, when Sennacherib came to besiege it. 4 K. 18:13. C.—Beginning. That is, Lachis was the first city of Juda that learnt from Samaria the worship of idols, and communicated it to Jerusalem. Ch.—This is not very probable. We may translate, "this is the source of sin," or of chastisement; or the imitation of Israel, is the chief of the crimes of Sion. C.

Ver. 14. Send. Lachis shall send to Geth for help; but in vain: for Geth, instead of helping, shall be found to be a house of lying and deceit to Israel. Ch.—Inheritance. Some translate rather "Moreseth (or Morasthi) of Geth, the houses of Acsib," &c. Both these towns were near Geth, and perhaps at this time subject to it. 2 Par. 28:18. Achaz sent to ask for aid against the king of Israel, v. 9. C.—Prot. "therefore shalt thou give presents to Moresheth-Gath, the houses of Achzib shall be a lie to the," &c. H.—There is an allusion between Acsib and a lie, as also between Maresa and an heir, (v. 15. C.) as the terms have those senses. H.

Ver. 15. Heir. Maresa (which was the name of a city of Juda) signifies inheritance: but here God by his prophet tells the Jews, that he will bring them an heir to take possession of their inheritance: and that the glory of Israel shall be obliged to give place, and to retire even to Odollam, a city in the extremity of their dominions. And therefore he exhorts them to penance in the following verse. Ch.—Maresa shall fall a prey to the king of Assyria. Micheas was a native of this town, and he ironically addresses his countrymen. C.—Glory. Thus he denotes “the misery” of Israel, which shall be extended to the last town in Juda. W.—Heb. means also “burden.” Odolla was taken by Sennacherib, (C.) with the other towns around Jerusalem. H.

Ver. 16. Eagle. When it loses its feathers, it becomes languid. Theod. —This verse should be joined with the next chapter, which regards the kingdom of Israel. C.

MICHEAS 2

Ver. 1. Evil. Sept. “labours.” Heb. “vanity, or an idol.” H.—That is called unprofitable, which is very detrimental. W.—Morning, suddenly and with zeal. C.—Is. Heb. “has power,” (Chal.) “they have not raised their hands to God.” Sept. Arab.

Ver. 2. Oppressed. Lit. “calumniated,” (H.) as Jezabel did Naboth. 3 K. 21:13.

Ver. 3. Time. It was very near. Micheas saw the ruin of Samaria, under Theglathphalassar and Salmanasar.

Ver. 4. Say. The Israelites sing this mournful canticle to v. 7 which the prophet composes for them, to shew the certainty of the event. It is very difficult. C.—The whole synagogue speaks. M.—Depart. How do you pretend to say that the Assyrian is departing, when indeed he is coming to divide our lands amongst his subjects? Ch.—The Cutheans were sent into the country. 4 K. 17:24. C.—Sept. “and there was none to hinder him from returning, our lands were divided.” H.

Ver. 5. None. Thou shalt have no longer any lot or inheritance in the land of the people of the Lord. Ch.—Strangers had taken possession. C. —Virgil has the like affecting thoughts. Ec. 1. Impius hæc tam culta novalia miles habebit? H.

Ver. 6. Drop. That is, the prophecy shall not come upon these. Such were the sentiments of the people that were unwilling to believe the threats of the prophets. Ch.—The princes order the prophets not to inculcate so many miseries. W.—Heb. “Make it not rain: they will make it rain: they will cause no rain like this: confusion shall not cease.” The people beg that the prophets would not announce such judgments: but, (C.) correcting themselves, they bid them to say what they please, (H.) as nothing can befall them more terrible. Here the canticle ends. C.—Sept. “shed no tears, nor let them weep for these things, for she will not cast away reproaches, who says the house of Jacob has provoked the spirit,” &c. H.

Ver. 7. Straitened. Is he inclined to danger? The prophet replies, if God punishes, it is because the people will not repent. C.—His mercy is extended to penitents, as well as to the just. W.

Ver. 8. Away. You have often stripped people of their necessary garments; and have treated such as were innocently passing on the way, as if they were at war with you. Ch.—He alludes to Israel attacking Juda without cause, and killing 120,000 at once, while they took 200,000 women and children (v. 9) captives, whom Oded indeed persuaded them to release. 2 Par. 28:6. Sept. are very obscure in this chapter. C.

Ver. 9. Cast out, &c. Either by depriving them of their houses; or, by your crimes, giving occasion to their being carried away captives, and their children, by that means, never learning to praise the Lord. Ch.—The Jews accustomed them to sing God’s praises early, while they were still innocent. Ps. 8:2. Misery might cause them to complain of Providence. Perhaps the prophet alludes to the custom of divorces. Mal. 2:15.

Ver. 10. Corruption. Your sins will not permit you to remain any longer, and strangers shall defile this land. C.

Ver. 11. Would God, &c. The prophet could have wished, out of his love to his people, that he might be deceived in denouncing to them these evils that were to fall upon them: but by conforming himself to the will of God, he declares to them that he is sent to prophesy, literally to let drop upon them, the wine of God’s indignation, with which they should be made drunk; that is, stupified and cast down. Ch.—Prot. “If a man, walking in the spirit of falsehood, do lie, saying, I will prophesy unto thee of wine and strong drink, he shall even be a prophet of this people.” But I cannot thus deceive you. H.

Ver. 12. Assemble. God shews his mercy, in gathering his Church out of all nations. W.—At least the Jews shall be converted, (Rom. 11:25. S. Jer. Eus. Dem. ii. 50.) or they shall be butchered by the Assyrians. Sanct.—Men. The country was very populous when the Romans destroyed the Jews. They had returned by degrees. C.

Ver. 13. Open. Heb. “break down.” H.—Divide. Heb. “make a breach.” They shall return boldly, and in triumph. C.

MICHEAS 3

Ver. 1. I. Heb. and Sept. “He, the Lord, said;” or, Micheas addressed the princes of both kingdoms, under Ezechias. v. 12. Jer. 26:18.—To know and practice. Osee 6:3. C.—Both rich and poor strove to extort from each other. W.

Ver. 2. Skins. When some exhorted Tiberius to lay on more taxes, he replied: “a good shepherd must shear the flock, and not tear off the skin.” Suet. xxxii.

Ver. 5. Peace. They pretend goodness, while they do the greatest mischief.—Prepare. Lit. “sanctify,” (H.) or denounce war. C.—False prophets seek their private lucre. W.

Ver. 6. Vision. Impostors shall skulk through fear, when the people shall see that they were not sent. v. 7.

Ver. 8. Spirit. I am no impostor. C. 2:11.

Ver. 10. Iniquity. You offer victims unjustly procured, or build your palaces with what belongs to the poor.

Ver. 11. Hire. It is not lawful to refuse instruction to those who have nothing; nor must priests act solely for a temporal reward, though reason shews that they should be supported by those whom they have to teach. Mat. 10:8, 10. Gal. 6:6 and 1 Tim. 5:18. C.—The judges grew rich by other people’s quarrels; and, as all ranks offended, they were justly involved in ruin. v. 12. W.

Ver. 12. Forests, after its destruction by Nabuchodonosor. C.—In the space of three years’ neglect, shrubs were growing in the courts of the temple. 1 Mac. 4:38. H.—Rufus ploughed up the spot where the temple had stood, after the Romans had burnt it down. S. Jer. Jos. Bel. vii. 20.—This prediction made a deep impression on the minds of the people. It caused them to refrain from killing Jeremias. v. 1. C.

MICHEAS 4

Ver. 1. Last days. This sometimes means after this. Is. 9:1. But here it denotes the time which shall elapse from Christ till the day of eternity. The Jews allow that this prediction regards the Messias, though they will not explain it of Jesus Christ. Their exceptions are well refuted by Ribera. W.—It is plain that it can be verified nowhere else, but in the Church of Christ; though some expressions may, as usual, refer to the return of the captives. Isaias, (2:2.) &c. had already used the like terms under Ozias. Juda is here comforted, after its ruin had been denounced.

Ver. 2. Jerusalem. No other nation ever embraced the Jewish law. But all received the gospel, (C.) which was first preached at, Jerusalem, by people of that country. H.—“We are of yesterday, and we fill all your places.” Tert.

Ver. 3. Judge, or “rule” (Judg. 8:22) as Christ does over all. C.—Plough-shares. Heb. “scythes,” (H.) or “coulters.” W. Mart. xiv. 34. C.—Learn, &c. The law of Christ is a law of peace; and all his true subjects, as much as lies in them, love and keep peace with all the world. Ch.—They will sustain injuries meekly. 1 Cor. 6. W.—When Christ appeared, the Roman empire enjoyed peace. C.—Aspera tum positis mitescent sæcula bellis, &c. Æn. i.

Ver. 4. Fig-tree. Such a happiness would not suit the ambitious. Zac. 3:10.

Ver. 5. And ever. After the captivity the Gentiles continued to worship idols, and the Jews had a greater aversion for them; but when the gospel was propagated, idols fell into contempt, and the Jewish law was at an end, while heretics were varying continually. The Church alone is stable, and built upon the rock. C.—All such quiet people as walk in the name of the Lord, will keep peace even with those who hate it, (Ps. 119) suffering persecution with joy. Heb. 10:34. S. Iræn. iv. 67. S. Cyr. &c. W.

Ver. 6. Halteth, as the synagogue did, (3 K. 18:21) bringing nothing to perfection, (Heb. 7:19) while the Gentiles were abandoned to idolatry. From both Christ chose his Church. Acts 21:20. &c. C.—The Jews will be at last converted. W.

Ver. 7. Remnant, or numerous progeny.—Afflicted. Heb. and Sept. “repudiated,” (C.) or “cast off.” H.

Ver. 8. Cloudy. Hebrew.” fortress, or opheh,” a tower or wall near the temple. 2 Esd. 3:27.—Flock. Jerusalem was no better, after the Chaldeans had destroyed it. 4 K. 17:9. Yet there Zorobabel, the Machabees, and Christ displayed their power. It was the cradle of the Church. Some take this to refer to Bethlehem, as C. 5:2. C.—Shall it come. Sept. add, “from Babylon.” After the captivity the Jews shall flourish, as the Church shall prove victorious over all her persecutors.

H.

Ver. 9. No king, after Sedecias was taken. C.—The two tribes shall be led into captivity and released. v. 12. W.

Ver. 11. Sion. Let us enter the sanctuary and plunder it. Cambyes was instigated to fall upon the Jews lately returned. Ezech. 38:11. His rapacious designs were frustrated, as those of persecutors will be. C.

Ver. 12. Hay. Prot. “sheaves.” H.—People were thus often trodden to death by oxen. Athen. xii. 5.

Ver. 13. Brass. Fear nothing. The Jews did not attack the army of Cambyes, (Ezech. 38:21 and 39:10. C.) at least at first. H.—But what God did for them is attributed to them. C.—Immolate. Sept. “devote to the Lord their multitude, and,” &c. Prot. “gain,” (H.) or what spoils they have taken. C.

MICHEAS 5

Ver. 1. Robber. Some understand this of Babylon, which robbed and pillaged the temple of God; others understand it of Jerusalem, by reason of the many rapines and oppressions committed there. Ch.—Heb. “now assemble, O daughter of troops;” Babylon, famous H. for soldiers, who will seize Sedecias; (Jer. 39:6. C.) or Jerusalem, noted for rapine. C. 3. Thou shalt be spoiled, yet restored till Bethlehem bring forth Christ, the ruler of the world. W.

Ver. 2. Ephrata. This was the ancient name (H.) of Bethlehem, (Gen. 35:16) though some think that it was so called after Caleb’s wife. 1 Par. 2:19.—Art, or “art thou?” &c. which makes it agree with Mat. 2:4.—Little. Heb. tsahir, (H.) is often rendered “considerable.” Chal.—Thousands: capital cities. Zac. 9:7. Bethlehem seemed too mean to send forth a ruler over the rest. The ancient Jews clearly understood this of the Messias. The moderns explain it of Zorobabel: but the expressions are too grand for him. C.—S. Jerom accuses the Jews of having designedly omitted some cities, (Jos. 15:60) because Bethlehem Ephrata is one. It is nowhere else thus described. Kennicott.—The priests substituted land of Juda instead of Ephrata. Mat. 2. H.—The evangelist recites their words, to shew their negligence in quoting Scripture. “Yet some assert, that in almost all quotations from the Old Test. the order or words are changed, and sometimes the sense, ... as the apostles did not write out of a book, but trusted to memory, which is sometimes fallacious." S. Jer.—This principle would be very dangerous, (Simon. Crit. i. 17.) and we should attribute the variation to other causes, as the sacred penman could not mistake. H.—Bethlehem, though a little town, was rendered more illustrious than many others by the birth of Christ. W.—Forth. That is, he who as man shall be born in thee, as God was born of his Father from all eternity. Ch.—His coming was also long before announced. Orig. c. Cels. i.—But the former sense is preferable. C.—Eternity. These expressions singly imply a long time; (Ex. 21:6. Ps. 13:7) but when doubled, sæculum sæculi, &c. they must be understood of an absolute eternity, which Christ enjoyed with the Father and the Holy Ghost; though, in his human nature, he was born in time. W.

Ver. 3. Forth, till Babylon let them go; (Sanct.) or the Jews shall enjoy the land till Christ come; (S. Jer. exp. ii.) or he will leave them in their blindness till the nations shall have received the gospel, when there shall be one fold. Jo. 10:16. Rom. 9:25.

Ver. 4. Earth, Christ shall be glorified, governing his Church. The Jews shall be respected as a people singularly favoured.

Ver. 5. Peace. This regards Christ and not Zorobabel. C.—Assyrian. That is, the persecutors of the Church; who are here called Assyrians by the prophet, because the Assyrians were at that time the chief enemies and persecutors of the people of God. Ch.—The Persians held the empire which had belonged to Babylon and to Assyria, and was founded by Nemrod. Gen. 10:8. C.—Seven, &c. The pastors of God's Church, and the defenders of the faith. The number seven, in Scripture; is taken to signify many; and when eight is joined with it, we are to understand that the number will be very great. Ch.—See Eccle. 11:2. Ruth 4:16. C.—Christ always preserves a great number, not withstanding the attacks of persecutors enabling bishops to feed them with a power which the people must revere. Heb. 13. W.—Eight. Eschylus places Artaphanes between Smerdis and Hystaspes, the former of whom was one of the seven magi, and the latter one of the seven conspirators, (C.) or rather chief princes, who attacked the usurper. H.—They always retained great privileges, so that they seemed all to govern. V. Max. ix. 2. Herod. iii. 65. See 1 Esd. 4:7. Est. 1:14 where we find that the kings did nothing of importance without their seven counsellors. C.—Principal. Sept. "bites (Sym. Christ's) of men," or people of the old as well as of the new law. S. Jer.

Ver. 6. They. Hystaspes first laid a tax of money on the Persians, who hence styled him a merchant. Herod. iii. 89.—He was severe, and often at war. C.—Feed. They shall make spiritual conquests in the lands of their persecutors, with the sword of the Spirit which is the word of God. Eph. 6:17. Ch.—With, &c. Sept. “in the ditch.” Th. &c. “gates,” where sentence was given.—Borders. Seven or eight princes have taken the place of Cambyses, who had invaded Judea. v. 5. C.

Ver. 7. Jacob; viz. the apostles, and the first preachers of the Jewish nation, whose doctrine, like dew, shall make the plants of the converted Gentiles grow up, without waiting for any man to cultivate them by human learning. Ch.—Under Hystaspes, the husband of Esther, the Jews enjoyed rest, and Providence protected them. C.

Ver. 8. Lion. This denotes the fortitude of these first preachers, and their success in their spiritual enterprises. Ch.—The Jews, by leave of Assuerus, defended themselves; and the Machabees became terrible. Est. 9 and 1 Mac. 3:4. The power of the latter was established, while the efforts of Eupator and of other Syrian persecutors for sixty years, down to Zebina, proved fruitless or destructive to themselves. C.

Ver. 10. Horses. Some understand this, and all that follows to the end of the chapter, as addressed to the enemies of the Church. But it may as well be understood of the converts to the Church, who should no longer put their trust in any of these things. Ch.—God will protect his people, so that horses and fortifications will be unnecessary.

Ver. 11. Sorceries. The Jews after their return abstained more from such things; but not like the Church of Christ, in which idols and dealings with the devil have never been tolerated.

Ver. 14. Ear, to the admonitions of the prophets. Hence Egypt, &c. were justly punished.

MICHEAS 6

Ver. 1. The mountains, &c. That is, the princes, the great ones of the people. Ch.—But Heb. intimates real mountains, which had witnessed the impiety of the people, (C.) and had been defiled with their altars, &c. Prot. “Contend thou before the,” &c. (H.) as God’s advocate. He condescends to justify his conduct towards Israel. Is. 3:13. C.—He had shewn them great favours, but they were ungrateful. Off. for good Frid. W.

Ver. 4. Slaves. Their prison, in Algiers, &c. is dreadful. C.—Mary. She taught the women. Chal. Theod.—She was a figure of Christ’s mother, as Moses and Aaron were of himself. W.

Ver. 5. From Setim to Galgal. He puts them in mind of the favour he did them, in not suffering them to be quite destroyed by the evil purpose of Balach and the wicked counsel of Balaam; and then gives them a hint of the wonders he wrought in order to bring them into the land of promise, by stopping the course of the Jordan, in their march from Setim to Galgal. Ch.—Galgala, “limits,” may denote those of the Jordan, between which river and Setim Israel was encamped. Num. 22 and 25.—Justices. Sym. “mercies.” C.

Ver. 6. What shall I offer, &c. This is spoken in the person of the people, desiring to be informed what they are to do to please God. Ch.—They can answer nothing in their own defence.

Ver. 7. Fat. Heb. “torrents of oil.”—First-born, like Jephthe, or the king of Moab. Jud. 11 and 4 K. 3:27. Saturn taught the Phœnicians this impiety. Eus. præp. iv. 16. C.

Ver. 8. Sollicitous. Heb. also, “humbly.” H.—This was preferable to all other sacrifices of the old law, (W.) and was frequently inculcated. Deut. 10:12. Ps. 49:9. Is. 1:11. Yet the carnal Jews always made perfection consist in exterior ceremonies.

Ver 9. City, to all mankind.—Salvation. Heb. “wisdom shall consider thy name.” Syr. “doctrine to those who fear his name.”—It? Who will attend? C.

Ver 10. Full of wrath, &c. That is, highly provoking in the sight of God. Ch.—False weights are often condemned. Deut. 25:13. C.

Ver. 14. And thy. Sept. “I will cast thee away into thyself.” H.—Hold of some fruit. C.—Thy wife shall miscarry; (Vat. &c.) or if she bring forth, the children shall perish by the sword.

Ver 15. New. Sept. “grave.” H.—“It is good for thee, when thou knowest thy error, to have no disciples.” S. Jer.

Ver. 16. The statutes of Amri, &c. The wicked ways of Amri and Achab, idolatrous kings. Ch.—They were the most infamous of Israel. 3 K. 16:25. 30. W.—Heb. “the statutes of Amri are kept.” Sept. “The precepts (ámi) of my people shall parish” H.—You, rich men. C.—Sept. “you shall receive the reproach of people.” H.

Ver. 1. Figs, which are the worst. S. Jer. S. Amb. in Lu. vii. 3. Yet they were eagerly sought after, before the other figs came to maturity. They had escaped the rigours of winter. Such Christ (C.) seemed to expect. Mark 11:13.

Ver. 2. Holy man. Heb. chasid, (H.) “the pious” Assidean. 2 Mac. 14:6. The disorder of Israel was great, though some were religious. C.—Such expressions only mean that few could be found, and that the far greatest number rejected the prophet’s advice. W.

Ver. 3. Giving. Sept. “speaks words of peace.” He flatters the prince, (H.) and dares not oppose the unjust. Syr. “he says, bring presents.”—Troubled it; or, “have thy?” &c. Heb. “they confirm it.”

Ver. 4. Brier. Heb. chedek, or “thorn.” Sept. “a consuming moth.”—Inspection, or of thy chiefs (H.) and prophets. C.

Ver. 5. Bosom. In times of general distress, even domestics are not trusted; because all are solicitous for themselves, even to the prejudice of others. W.—Before the ruin of Israel civil wars raged. 4 K. 15. Our Saviour alludes to this passage. Mat. 10:35. Lu. 12:52 and 21:16. People will rise up to oppress true believers; and these must abandon their nearest relations, when they prove an obstacle to salvation. Thus is the moral, and the other the literal sense. C.

Ver. 10. She; Babylon, my enemy. Ch.—It was taken by the Medes and Persians, who set the Jews at liberty, to the great mortification of their enemies. W.—God thus displayed his justice or mercy, rescuing his people from the nigh of misery.—Streets. Cyrus treated the fallen city with contempt. It stood for some time afterwards. C.

Ver. 11. Law of thy enemies, who have tyrannized over thee. Ch.—The walls of Jerusalem are ordered to be rebuilt. Agg. i.

Ver. 12. Fortified. Heb. also, “Egypt, and from Egypt to the river Euphrates,” &c. The Jews shall occupy their ancient limits. Amos 8:12. C.—The fenced cities may be Pelusium, Gaza, Tyre, &c. From all parts the captives shall return. H.—They were very numerous under the Machabees, and in the time of Christ. C.

Ver. 13. Land of Babylon, (Ch.) or “the land of Judea (H.) has been,” &c. It might also be again made desolate, because the captives built houses for themselves, and neglected the temple. Agg. 1:10.

Ver. 14. Alone: destitute of all things, or in full security. Jer. 15:17. Num. 23:9. God will feed his people (C.) in the most fertile places, designated by Carmel and Basan. H.—A pastor must maintain sound doctrine and discipline. W.

Ver. 15. Wonders. The prophets speaking of the return, have Christ and his religion in view; so that they seem not to find terms sufficiently magnificent. Is. 9:15 and 43:16. Zac. 10:11. We know from Esdras that nothing so surprising attended the liberation of the people. C.

Ver. 16. Strength, because they cannot overcome the Hebrews or Christians. M.—Deaf, being astonished. Job 21:5.

Ver. 17. Serpents, (Gen. 3:14) out of respect or rage. C.—Converts shall humbly apply to the ministers of Christ to receive baptism and confirmation. Theod. Sanct. lxvii.

Ver. 18. No more, for past offences. Yet, if they transgress again, they must not expect impunity. The Jews still bleed for the murder of the Messias. C.

Ver. 19. Away. Prot. “subdue,” (H.) or trample upon. C.

Ver. 20. Truth, performing what he had promised out of mercy to Abraham. W.

NAHUM

THE PROPHECY OF NAHUM

INTRODUCTION

Nahum, whose name signifies a comforter, was a native of Elcesai, or Elcesai, supposed to be a little town in Galilee. He prophesied after the ten tribes were carried into captivity, and foretold the utter destruction of Ninive by the Babylonians and Medes; which happened in the reign of Josias, (Ch.) in the sixteenth year, when the father of Nabuchodonosor and the grandfather of Cyrus entirely ruined Ninive, and divided the empire between them, (C.) A. 3378. Usher. Tob. 14:16.—Nahum was probably on the spot when he proclaimed this beautiful prediction, which yields not to any work of profane authors.

He might have been carried captive by Salmanasar, as he alludes to the captivity of Israel and to the blasphemies of Sennacherib. We cannot, therefore, place his prophecy before the fifteenth year of Ezechias. C.—He appeared about fifty years after Jonas, when the Ninivites had relapsed, and were destroyed in the space of one hundred and thirty-five years, as a figure of the subversion of idolatry by Christ's preaching the gospel of peace. W.

NAHUM 1

Ver. 1. Burden, or threat. W.—Sept. “assumption,” (H.) when the prophet saw in spirit the impending ruin. Theod.—Allegorically, Nahum is “the comforter” of the just, shewing that God will avenge their cause against Ninive, “the beautiful,” and destroy the world, (kosmos, which also means “beautiful,”) after which the saints shall reign in eternal glory. W.—We have describe Ninive. Jonas 1. C.—It was overturned first A. 3257, and again A. 3378. Usher.—Elcesite. Some think that Elcesai was the father of Nahum; but most suppose that it was a village Galilee. C.

Ver. 2. The Lord. The six following verses (H.) tend to excite attention. C.

Ver. 3. Cleanse. Literally, cleansing, he will not make innocent.” H.—The same expression is rendered, No man of himself is innocent before thee. Ex. 34:7. C.—Sept. “the innocent he will not deem innocent.” H.—No man is perfect in God's sight, (C.) though they may appear to be such to others. H.—None can escape punishment, if he be treated with rigour. De Dieu translates, “he will not utterly evacuate,” or destroy, which seems very correct. Jer. 30:11. Num. 14:18.—Dust. He walks upon them as we do on dry land.

Ver. 4. Desert, as at the Red Sea. Ps. 105:9.—Languisheth. The most fruitful places produce nothing, when God is angry.

Ver. 5. Made. Sept. “shaken.”—Quaked. Heb. and Sept. “risen.” C.

Ver. 6. Like fire. Sept. “melts kingdoms.”

Ver. 7. Hope. Sept. “fear.” He approves of his faithful servants. H.

Ver. 8. Thereof; viz. of Ninive. Ch.—This is connected with v. 1. H.—Ninive was taken by the waters of the Tigris overflowing, at the first siege. Diod. ii. Athen. xii.—The like might happen at the second, though profane authors be silent. C.—Many think that the flood means great armies. Is. 8:7. Forer. Vat.—Sept. “He will utterly destroy: those who rise up and his enemies, darkness,” &c. H.—Chal. The. and Aq. adopt the same sense, but Sym. &c. agree with us. C.

Ver. 9. Affliction. Sept. add, “for the same thing, or together.” H.—Many hence infer, that those who have been slain by God, like the Sodomites, &c. will not be condemned to hell. Orig. i. Ezech. S. Jer. S. Th. 3. p. q. 59. a. 5.—But this principle cannot be always correct. C.—Their temporal suffering might usher in eternal ones. S. Greg. Mor. xviii. 12.—Ninive shall perish; so that a second blow will not be requisite. 1 K. 26:8. Drus. C.

Ver. 10. Dry. The Assyrians, feasting in the hopes that they would speedily become masters of Jerusalem, were cut off in one night. W.—God’s enemies cannot escape; as when a thorn bush has taken fire, all must perish. Ps. 57:10. Is. 9:18. C.

Ver. 11. Forth. Some understand this of Sennacherib. But as his attempt against the people seems to have been prior to the prophecy of Nahum, we may better understand it of Holofernes. Ch.—One. Sept. “a most wicked thought against the Lord, devising opposition.” H.—We may render, “hath come,” &c. alluding to Sennacherib and Rabsaces. Is. 36:18 and 37:23. C.

Ver. 12. Perfect. That is, however strong or numerous their forces may be, they shall be cut off, and their prince or leader shall pass away and disappear. Ch.—If there were many just at Ninive, or among the Jews, (C.) a moderate chastisement would suffice. H.—The latter have been afflicted; now their enemies shall suffer. Sept. have read otherwise: (C.) “the Lord, reigning over the great waters; thus shall they be divided, and thou shalt be heard of no more.” H.

Ver. 13. Asunder. Ezechias was tributary to Assyria. 4 K. 18:14. After the fall of Ninive, its yoke was removed. C.

Ver. 14. Commandment. That is, a decree concerning thee, O king of Ninive, thy seed shall fail, &c. Ch.—His son Asarhaddon succeeded; but soon the line was extinct. W.—No alarm shall be spread by thee.—Grave. Sennacherib was slain in the temple: (Is. 37:38. C.) or the idols were deemed unclean by the victors. Eurip. Troad. H.

Ver. 15. Peace. Sentinels were established on the hills.—Festivals. S. Jerom quotes the B. of Paral. as saying (C.) that the Jews could not observe the Passover in the first month. But they did it in the second, after they knew that Sennacherib was slain. 2 Par. 32. H.—This passage does not, however, appear at present in Scripture, and it could not speak of the second month (C.) following Nisan, (H.) as the king was slain forty-five days (Tob. 1:22. Gr. 5) after his return to Ninive; and some time must have elapsed before he could get thither, and the news arrive in Judea. C.—Belial; the wicked one, viz. the Assyrian. Ch.

NAHUM 2

Ver. 1. Face, O Juda. Sept. “who blows on thy face, (Gen. 2:7) freeing from misery.” Here S. Jerom’s Gr. copy ends the chap. H.—Watch. Behold Nabopolassar is about to attack thy enemies. Some think that Nahum addresses Ninive ironically. C.—Nabuchodonosor wasted all the environs, and then took the city (W.) after his other conquests. C.—But his father is here denoted. H.

Ver. 2. Pride, &c. He hath punished Jacob for his pride; and therefore Ninive must not expect to escape. Or else, rendering the pride of Jacob means rewarding, that is, punishing Ninive for the pride they exercised against Jacob. Ch.—After the Assyrians had seized the ten tribes, they became more insolent, and are therefore punished. W.—The haughty Phul, &c. had invaded the Israelites, and had taken them into captivity. This God will now resent, (C.) though he justly chastised his people by them. H.

Ver. 3. Mighty men. He speaks of the Chaldeans and Medes sent to destroy the Ninivites. Ch.—This is the common opinion. Yet it seems rather that the Ninivites are designated, as they were asleep and stumbled, &c. C.—Stupified. That is, they drive on furiously, like men intoxicated with wine. Ch.—Heb. “the fir-tree shall be shaken,” or poisoned. Ps. 119:4. Sept. read better, (C.) “their horsemen shall be in a hurry, or in confusion.” H.—The armour was kept very shining, and the soldiers of Cyrus were clothed in purple, like himself. Xen. iii.—Yet this availed nothing, while the men were asleep or confounded. C.

Ver. 4. Streets. The Ninivites are disordered at the enemy’s approach. S. Jer.

Ver. 5. Muster. Lit. “remember” (H.) the ancient heroes, Salmanasar, &c. C.—Stumble, by running hastily on. Ch.—Prepared to defend the city. H.—All this represents a city surprised. It attempts to defend itself; but God renders all efforts vain. C.

Ver. 6. Gates; floodgates or channel of the Tigris overflowing. C. 1:8.

—Temple. Sept. “palace.”

Ver. 7. Soldier. Heb. hutsab, (H.) “the station” or guard; the queen, or the statue of the idol, with the women (C.) who prostituted themselves in its honour. Sanct. xxxi.—Ninive and its dependances are taken. Grot.

Ver. 8. Waters: multitudes, (Apoc. 17:15) and riches; (C.) or the flood bursting upon them makes them flee. H.—The citizens run away when the enemy had made a breach, as water does when the dam is broken down; and though some more valiant will exhort them to tarry, they will not succeed, nor save the city. W.

Ver. 10. Kettle. In mourning they blacken their face. Tav. Perse.

Ver. 11. Lions. The kings of Assyria had plundered various nations, (H.) and had brought the spoils to Ninive. But all shall be lost. W.—These princes followed no law but their own will.—The lion, Nabopolassar, or his son: though it seems rather to relate to the Assyrian monarchs. C.

Ver. 13. Chariots. Sept. “multitude.” Some wild beasts were thus suffocated in their dens. Theod.—More, like that of the impious Rabsaces. 4 K. 18:17. C.

NAHUM 3

Ver. 1. Blood. Nemrod established his power by shedding blood. Gen. 10. Ninus, who built Ninive, and his successors were also bloody. After 1200 years the empire decayed under Sardanapalus, as historians agree. Yet it continued longer, according to the Scriptures and Ribera, till the Chaldees destroyed it, when it had subsisted about 1440 years. It was even possessed of great power after the return of the Jews from Babylon, as Eus. S. Aug. V. Bede, &c. write. W.—Depart. Sept. “be touched.” H.—He continues the metaphor of the lion seizing its prey. Here the last chapter should end.

Ver. 2. The noise. He has described the forces of Ninive, now he specifies those of Cyaxares and Nabopolassar.

Ver. 4. Harlot. Ninive is cruel and impure, engaging others in idolatry and witchcraft. C.—Sold, forcing them to adopt her manners. Rom. 7:14.

Ver. 7. Bemoan. Lit. “shake his head.” the latter words are not in Heb. H.—Some supply, move his lips: but head will answer as well. This is a sign of derision or of pity. Job 42:11. Mat. 27:39. C.

Ver. 8. Populous Alexandria. No-Amon. A populous city of Egypt, destroyed by the Chaldeans, and afterwards rebuilt by Alexander, and called Alexandria. Others suppose No-Amon to be the same as Diospolis. Ch.—This seems preferable, as it was amidst waters and near the Mediterranean. Profane historians take little notice of it, as it was greatly reduced. Bochart fixes upon Memphis, others upon the temple of Ammon. But these were too remote from the sea. C.—The former was however near the Nile, (H.) which is sometimes called a sea. C.—S. Jerom thinks that Alexandria stood on the ruins of No. W.—Yet of this we have no proof. It is thought that Nahum alludes to the devastation caused by Nabuchodonosor. As Juda however was still in his kingdom, it seems rather that Assaraddon, (Is. 20) or his predecessor, Sennacherib, (C.) laid waste this city. 4 K. 18:21. Usher, A. 3292.

Ver. 9. Ethiopia; Chus, in Arabia, not far from Diospolis.

Ver. 10. Captivity. It was afterwards re-established and taken by Nabuchodonosor. C.—Fetters, or stocks. H.

Ver. 11. Drunk, and be chastised by God. Ezech. 23:32.—From, to escape.

Ver. 14. Water. This was a necessary precaution. 2 Par. 32:3.—Brick, to repair the breaches.

Ver. 15. Locust. Yet all will be in vain. Thy numbers will be cut off as easily as locusts.

Ver. 16. Away. Thus did the merchants, at the approach of the enemy.

Ver. 17. Guards. Heb. “crowned” princes.—Little. Heb. “satraps are like great locusts, which,” &c. S. Jerom has read (C.) toppic instead of taphseraic, (H.) which Sept. neglect. Thapsar denotes an officer. Jer. 51:27. C.—Of locusts. The young locusts. Ch. Ver. 18. Slumbered. They have not guarded the flock. C.

Ver. 19. Hidden. Heb. and Sept. “irremediable.” H.—No one pities thy wound. Chal. C.

HABACUC

THE PROPHECY OF HABACUC

INTRODUCTION

Habacuc was a native of Bezocher, and prophesied in Juda some time before the invasion of the Chaldeans, which he foretold. He lived to see this prophecy fulfilled, and for many years after, according to the general opinion, which supposes him to be the same that was brought by the angel to Daniel, in Babylon. Dan. 14. Ch.—He might very well live to see the captives return, as only sixty-six years elapsed from the first of Joakim, when he began to prophesy, till that event. He retired at the approach of the Chaldees, and afterwards employed himself in agricultural pursuits. C.—The sins of Juda, the coming of the Chaldees, and the relaxation of the captivity are specified; and in the canticle, the appearance of Christ, the last judgment and eternity, (W.) are mentioned in the most sublime style. H.

HABACUC 1

Ver. 1. Burden. Such prophecies more especially are called burdens, as threaten grievous evils and punishments. Ch.—He says not against whom, because the menace is directed to persecutors in general. W.

Ver. 2. Save. Some think that he expresses the sentiments of the weak, like David, (Ps. 72:2) or what he had formerly entertained. The language of the prophets is very bold. Ex. 32:32. Job 3:3. Jer. 20:14. Jon. 4:8. C.

Ver. 3. Opposition. Sept. “the judge receives” bribes. H.—Such was the state of Juda after Josias. Jer. 21:12.

Ver. 5. Among. Sept. ye despisers. S. Paul nearly agrees with this version. Acts 13:41. The copies vary, as the Heb. has done. C.—The apostle gives the mystical sense; the literal is very obscure. W.—God answers the prophet’s complaints, and shews that the Chaldees shall punish the guilty, and afterwards be themselves chastised.

Ver. 6. Chaldeans. Nabuchodonosor was the first of this nation who attacked Joakim, and having conquered all as far as the Nile, returned to succeed Nabopolassar. He afterwards came upon Jechonias and Sedecias, &c. The prophet might have all this in view, particularly the first invasion. C.—Bitter; warlike, as all the Gr. historians remark. S. Jer.—The Chaldees were not yet arrived at such greatness, and of course this is not the Habacuc specified Dan. 14. W.—Yet the same prophet might foresee it. H.

Ver. 7. Proceed. They admit no authority but their own. C.—This pride will prove their ruin. H.

Ver. 8. Leopards: the swiftest quadrupeds. C.—The horses near the Euphrates were swift and warlike. Oppian.—Swifter. Heb. “sharper” (H.) in seeing, even when there is no moon. Elian x. 26.—Evening. Sept. “Arabian.” H.—It may denote the hyena of that country, which is most terrible. Guevar.

Ver. 9. Burning. Heb. also, “eastern,” which is hot, and raises the sand of Arabia so as to be very detrimental. C.—Out of 2,000 travellers from Mecca to Aleppo, only twenty-nine escaped such a storm, or kamsin, in that vast desert, Aug. 23, 1813. Rock. 312. H.—Sand, from various countries. Is. 20:4. Beros. cited c. Ap. i.

Ver. 10. Prince, or “it,” the nation. v. 10. Heb. “They,” &c.—Laughingstock, (ridicule.) Nabuchodonosor raised or deposed princes as in jest. H.—Sennacherib’s officers were or had been kings. Is. 10:8.—Mount. Thus cities were chiefly taken. Ezec. 4:1. C.

Ver. 11. Spirit; viz. the spirit of the king of Babylon. It alludes to the judgment of God upon Nabuchodonosor, recorded Dan. 4 and to the speedy fall of the Chaldean empire. Ch.—It shall yield to the Medes, &c. after conquering the Assyrians. W.—Fall. Heb. “sin.” Sept. “obtain pardon.”—God: “idol.” Chal. “This is the strength of my God.” Sept. God forced the proud king to confess that his great exploits were not to be attributed to himself or to idols. H.

Ver. 12. Die? We hope that this scourge will not entirely ruin us.—Correction, like Pharaoh. Ex. 9:16.

Ver. 13. Look, with approbation (C.) or connivance.

Ver. 14. Ruler. People are subdued by Nabuchodonosor. H.—They make little resistance. C.

Ver. 16. Drag, adorning his own arms and prowess, (Sanct.) like Mezentius and Capaneus:

Dextra mihi Deus, (Æn. x.)

Te voco, te solum, superum contemptor, adoro. Stat. x.

—Guevare thinks fishes were adored, as they were among the Syrians. Nabuchodonosor attributed all to his own genius, or to Bel, whose statue he set up. Dan. 3. C.—Victorious nations thus honour themselves and not God.

Ver. 17. Nations, of every country. W.—Few have been so much addicted to war as Nabuchodonosor. C.

HABACUC 2

Ver. 1. Will stand, &c. Waiting to see what the Lord will answer to my complaint, viz. that the Chaldeans, who are worse than the Jews, and who attribute all their success to their own strength, or to their idols, should nevertheless prevail over the people of the Lord. The Lord's answer is, that the prophet must wait with patience and faith; that all should be set right in due time; and the enemies of God and his people punished according to their deserts. Ch.—The prophet speaks, waiting for a further revelation, (W.) not seeing before the reasons of Providence in permitting the wicked to prosper. H. Ps. 72:17.—He is informed that the kings of Babylon, (v. 5. 8.) Juda, (v. 11) Tyre, (v. 14) and Egypt, (v. 18) and all who trust in idols, shall suffer. v. 19. Hereupon the judgments of God are pronounced just. C.—Tower. Aq. &c. “circle.” The ancient Jews say Habacuc formed a circle, out of which he would not stir till he was satisfied, (Kimchi) as Popilius did. V. Max. vi. 4. Dan. 11:29. C.

Ver. 2. Over it. It shall be so legible (H.) anyone may hear or take a copy. C.

Ver. 3. Slack. That which happens at the time fixed is not. W.—Heb. “the vision is for an appointed time.” Habacuc might live to see the conquest and downfall of Nabuchodonosor. Many think that the first and second coming of Christ (Heb. 10:36. Rom. 1:17) are here insinuated, as the dominion of the aforesaid king represented the slavery of mankind under the devil, and the liberty granted by Cyrus was a type of their redemption. The felicity of the Jews is the last event which the prophet specifies, and this is here the literal sense. S. Cyr. C.

Ver. 4. Unbelieving. Prot. “lifted up.” H.—The king's vain projects shall fail. Sept. Rom. "If he withdraw himself, my soul shall not have pleasure in him. But my just man shall live by my faith." Others read with S. Paul, "my just man shall live by faith." Heb. 10:38. C.—The source of content arises from faith, (without which this life would be a sort of death, as the apostle and S. Aug. Trin. xiv. 12. &c. observe) because it is the beginning of life by grace, which the works of the law could not otherwise confer. Gal. 3. W.—The Heb. will admit the sense of the Sept. and we ought rather to shew this in passages which the authors of the New Testament quote, than to excuse them. Here their version seems preferable to that given by moderns, ecce elata est, non recta anima ejus in eo, the drift of which who can guess? Beza has acted unfairly, "at si quis se subduxerit non est gratum animo meo;" whereas the text speaks of the "just man," as Theophylactus observes. "Hence all who know his theological opinions, may see how suspicious his translation must be accounted." Pearson. pref. Sept. H.

Ver. 5. As wine deceiveth, &c. viz. by affording only a short passing pleasure, followed by the evils and disgrace that are the usual consequences of drunkenness: so shall it be with the proud enemies of the people of God, whose success affordeth them only a momentary pleasure, followed by innumerable and everlasting evils. Ch.—Heb. "but as the proud man prevaricates in wine, he shall not succeed." Baltassar's reign was short. Vat. De Dieu.—Nabuchodonosor saw himself reduced to the meanest condition.—Hell. He is insatiable. Prov. 30:16. C.—Æstuat infelix (Alex.) augusto limite mundi. Juv. x.

Ver. 6. Parable. Lit. "marvel," or wonderful speech; parabolam.—Dark. Prot. "a taunting proverb;" (H.) when Nabuchodonosor became like a beast, and his empire was soon after divided. C.—Clay. Ill-gotten goods, that like mire both burden and defile the soul. Ch.—Gold and silver are only a sort of earth. Job 28:16. Zac. 9:2. Habacuc does not even name riches, out of contempt. Some think (C.) that he alludes to the grave. People prayed for their deceased friend: Sit tibi terra levis. Drus.

Ver. 7. Bile, like worms in the grave. Cyrus will overturn the kingdom. The Rabbins pretend that Evilmerodac caused his father's body to be cut in pieces for the crows, lest he should return again. C.

Ver. 8. Blood. For cruelty, avarice, &c. the Chaldees shall be ruined. W.—City, different from that land of the Arabs, who dwell under tents. This city may denote Jerusalem, Babylon, &c.

Ver. 9. Wo. This is commonly understood of Nabuchodonosor; but it seems rather to designate Joakim, (Jer. 22:13) whose injustice scandalized the prophet. C.

Ver. 10. House. Thinking to establish thy family for ever, thou hast proved its ruin by avarice, &c. W.—This is applied to Nabuchodonosor, but may be as well explained of Joakim, who oppressed his people, and was cast out like an ass. C.

Ver. 11. Timber. Heb. “caphis (Sept. the insect καυθαρος) from the wood shall answer.” H.—The signification of the Heb. term is unknown. It was customary to place beams of wood after some courses of stone, to strengthen the building. 3 K. 6:36. C.—The crimes were so crying, that if men were silent the very stones would publish them. M.

Ver. 12. Wo. This might be explained of Nabuchodonosor; but we rather understand the king of Tyre, whose pride was intolerable. Ezech. 28. It seems useless to repeat so often the same threats against one king. C.

Ver. 13. Things, &c. That is, shall not these punishments that are here recorded come from the Lord upon him that is guilty of such crimes? Ch. or, are not these riches from the Lord? The king of Tyre thought himself a god. Ezech. 28:2. C.—People; enemies of God’s people. Ch.—The riches of the Tyrians shall perish, so that the troops of Nabuchodonosor shall find nothing worth their trouble. Thus all were justly punished.

Ver. 14. Sea. The land and naval forces attacked Tyre. C.—Vast multitudes came against Babylon. M.—The punishment of the wicked will cause many to adore and to fear the Lord. H.

Ver. 15. Wo. All this may refer to the king of Egypt, who deceived Joakim, Sedecias, &c. C.—Sept. “O, he who giveth drink to his neighbour, a cruel overthrow, and who maketh,” &c.—Nakedness. Sept. “caverns;” deluding him, so that his places of retreat become useless. H.—The Jews relate that Sedecias was intoxicated, and then acted with indecency. S. Jer.—But these accounts deserve little credit.

Ver. 16. Glory. Egypt shall suffer at last. Is. 19:14. Jer. 43. &c. It was customary to hand the cup about. Jer. 25:17. Mat. 26:27. C.

Ver. 17. Libanus. That is, the iniquity committed by the Chaldees against the temple of God, signified here by the name of Libanus. Ch.—Egypt had persuaded the governor of Coelosyria and the Jews to revolt, and then abandoned them.—Beasts, which were adored in Egypt. Those who explain all of the Chaldees are much perplexed, understanding the army of Cyrus, or the oppressed nations, or subjects to be meant. C.—And of. Heb. “land of the city,” as v. 8.

Ver. 18. Thing, Prot. falsely, “image.” H.—This is addressed to all idolaters.

Ver. 20. Temple. Heb. “palace,” or heaven. House is generally put for the temple.—Silence, out of respect, &c. The guards of the eastern princes observe the utmost silence and modesty. God is very different from idols. He is the arbiter of life and death. C.—Silence often denotes subjection. 1 Mac. 1:3. M.

HABACUC 3

Ver. 1. For ignorances. That is, for the sins of his people. In the Hebrew it is shignoth: which some take to signify a musical instrument, or tune, with which this sublime prayer and canticle was to be sung. Ch.—The term is omitted in several Latin MSS. The precise import cannot be ascertained; yet it seems to imply a song of comfort. C.—Sept. “with a canticle.” H.—S. Jerom follows Aq. Sym. and the 5. edit. Theodot. has, “for voluntary” transgressions. C.—All sins proceed in some degree from ignorance, (W.) and are all the effects of free-will. H.—The prophet prays to be freed from sin, and foretells the coming of Christ, &c. W.—The: Fathers apply this canticle to Him, as the Church herself does in her office. We cannot go astray, following such guides. Yet some think that an allusion is made to the return from captivity, and from Egypt, which were noble figures of the world’s redemption. The prophet concludes with adoring the ways of God, (C.) which at first he had not comprehended. H.—He is astonished at God’s mercy, in becoming incarnate for man’s sake. W.

Ver. 2. Thy hearing, &c. That is, thy oracles, the great and wonderful things thou hast revealed to me: and I was struck with a reverential fear and awe. Ch.—I saw that the unjust would not escape. C.—Work. The great work of the redemption of man, which thou wilt bring to life and light in the midst of the years, when our calamities and miseries shall be at their height. Ch.—Years, at the time appointed. W.—Sept. read, “Lord, I considered thy works, and was astonished; in the midst of two living creatures, or lives, thou shalt be known,” (H.) or found, between an ox and an ass, as the Church has it. Nat. and and Circumc. W.—Christ appeared when the world was most dissolute. M.—The tradition of two animals being near the crib where he was born, is not of earlier date than about the fifth century. Some explain this of the Father between the Son and the Holy Ghost; others of Christ between the thieves, or the two testaments, or collecting his Church from Jews and Gentiles, &c. Sanct. C.—Moderns agree with S. Jerom's version. The prophet begs that God would perform his ancient miracles in his days, (C.) by relieving the captives, as he had formerly delivered their ancestors. H.—Make. Heb. and Sept. "when the years approach, thou shalt be made known; when the time shall come, thou shalt be manifested; when my soul shall be troubled, in wrath thou," &c. H.—God never shuts the gate of mercy to the penitent. Nah. 1:3. C.

Ver. 3. South. God himself will come to give us his law, and to conduct us into the true land of promise: as heretofore he came from the south, (in the Heb. Teman) and from Mount Pharan, to give his law to his people in the desert. See Deut. 33:2. Ch.—Sept. render, "the shady and thick mount, Diapsalma." S. Jerom, Pharan semper. Heb. Sela. Ps. 9. W.—The term seems to denote a pause. There might be many in the same canticle, (C.) as we find three here, (v. 9. 13) and many placed at irregular distances in the Psalms. H.—The Hebrews had long sojourned in the Stony Arabia, under the guidance of the Lord. We should render in the past time to v. 16. C.—Christ was born (H.) at Bethlehem, to the south of Jerusalem, (W.) and had given the law, as a Jew interpreted this passage to S. Jerom. He was probably a convert. H.

Ver. 4. Horns, &c. That is, strength and power, which by a Heb. phrase are called horns: or beams of light, which come forth from his hands: or it may allude to the cross, in the horns of which the hands of Christ were fastened, where his strength was hidden, by which he overcame the world, and drove out death and the devil. Ch.—Horns may also designate the nails, the prints of which remained in our Saviour's hands after his glorious resurrection. H.—God appeared hurling his thunderbolts (v. 11. Ps. 17:16. C.) with a fiery law in his right hand, all shining with glory. Ex. 19:18 and 34:29. Deut. 5:22. H.—Sinai seemed to be all on fire. Nothing can resist lightning. C.—Fulmine terres. Æn. i.—Hid, Sept. "and he has placed the strong love of his power," (H.) Jesus Christ, who has given his life for us. C.

Ver. 5. Death, &c. Both death and the devil shall be the executioners of his justice against his enemies; as they were heretofore against the Egyptians and Chanaanites. Ch.—Heb. daber, (H.) according to the different pronounciation, is rendered "the word" by the Sept. and Theo.; "the plague," by Aquila, &c. After Christ was baptized, the devil came to tempt him. S. Jer.—Devil. Heb. resheph, (H.) or "bird," (Sym. &c.) means "creeping on the belly," as is explained by the Jews of the devil, who tempted our first parents. S. Jer.—Moderns (H.) follow the Chal. and understand the carbuncle. C.—Prot. "burning coals:" marg. "diseases," (H.) resembling the pestilence. God destroyed his enemies and the murmuring Hebrews. C.—Sept. “and it (the word) shall go out into the fields behind his feet.” God’s will shall be published in the field of the world, (H.) when the gospel shall be preached to the Gentiles.

Ver. 6. Measured. Sept. “the earth was troubled,” C. or shaken. H.—He beheld. One look of his eye is enough to melt all the nations, and to reduce them to nothing. For all heaven and earth disappear when they come before his light. Apoc. 20:11. Ch.—The Chanaanites were dismayed at the approach of God’s people. He routed the nations, and determined the portion which he had chosen for Israel. Jos. 2:9. C.—Mountains. By the mountains and hills are signified the great ones of the world, that persecute the Church, whose power was quickly crushed by the Almighty. Ch.—The roughest roads in the wilderness were made smooth. God is poetically described at the head of his people. Deut. 8:4 and 33:15. Ps. 75:5. C.

Ver. 7. Ethiopia, the land of the Blacks, and Madian, are here taken for the enemies of God and his people, who shall perish for their iniquity. Ch.—Chus peopled that part of Arabia. H.—Heb. has Chusan, perhaps to rhyme with Madian; though some think that Chusan (defeated by Othoniel) and Madian (over whom Gedeon gained a complete victory) are designated, Judges 2 and 6. When the Hebrews had crossed the Red Sea, the Arabs and Madianites removed their tents in great trepidation. C.—These nations dwelt chiefly under tents, or skins, which would be removed in time of war. W.

Ver. 8. With the rivers, &c. He alludes to the wonders wrought heretofore by the Lord in favour of his people Israel, when the waters of the rivers, viz. of Arnon and Jordan, and of the Red Sea, retired before their face; when he came as it were with his horses and chariots to save them; when he took up his bow for their defence, in consequence of the oath he had made to their tribes; when the mountains trembled, and the deep stood with its waves raised up in a heap, as with hands lifted up to heaven; when the sun and moon stood still at his command, &c. to comply with his anger, not against the rivers and sea, but against the enemies of his people. How much more will he do in favour of his Son, and against the enemies of his Church! Ch.—Horses: the ark of the covenant. C.

Ver. 9. Take. Sept. bend thy bow over the sceptres, says the Lord, Dinpsalma.” Sela is neglected by the Vulg. or (H.) by S. Jerome, as having no meaning. C.—Yet we find in the edition of his works he renders it, for ever; and here observes, that the Lord “always dwells with his saints,” and attacks vices by their mouths.—Rivers. Sept. “the earth shall be cut by rivers." H.—Greek historians mention several rivers which have appeared or ceased to flow in consequence of earthquakes. The apostles, moved by Christ, water the world and form the Church. S. Jer.

Ver. 10. Grieved. They seemed full of surprise, as in labour, (Heb.) and the abyss spoke in its manner, (C.) obeying thy voice, and letting the Israelites pass. H. Ps. 73:15 and 113:3. Num. 21:13. C.—“Earth, sea, and rocks quake at the sight of God.” Æschyl. H.—Sept. are obscure, (C.) “Peoples shall behold thee, and grieve, (or be in labour: ωδινησουσι has both meanings. S. Jer.) dividing the waters of the passage, the abyss,” &c. Other cop. read, “Thou, Lord, wilt divide,” which S. Jerome explains of heresies, which soon disappear. H.

Ver. 11. Go. The five kings shall flee at the descent of Bethoron; or the heavenly body shall proceed at thy command, at the signal given by thunder. Jos. 10:11.

Ver. 13. Christ. This may well be explained of the incarnation. God was touched at the miseries of his people, and rescued them by Moses. C.—Theodotion and Symmachus, “Ebionite, half Christians,” give a Jewish interpretation, “to save thy Christ.” Aquila, though a Jew, and the 5th edit. agree with us; but the 6th edit. best explains the mystery, “through Jesus, thy Christ.” S. Jer.—Head, &c. Such was Pharaoh heretofore; such shall antichrist be hereafter. Ch.—It may also be understood of Nabuchodonosor and of all persecutors. H.—Cyrus cut off Baltassar; Christ will destroy antichrist, (2 Thess. 2. M.) the head of the wicked congregation. Is. 11:4. W.—Neck, or root. Pharaoh’s eldest son perished. Ex. 14:17. C.

Ver. 14. Sceptres. The nobles were drowned (H.) with their king, (C.) when they expected an easy prey. Ex. 13:9. H.—Heb. “thou hast pierced the chief of their troops in the midst of tribes,” or sticks, as the Egyptians perhaps slew each other. C.

Ver. 15. Sea, &c. to deliver thy people from the Egyptian bondage; and thou shalt work the like wonders, in the spiritual way, to rescue the children of thy Church from their enemies. Ch.—The waters stood up like mountains, while God seemed to pass in his triumphal car. C.

Ver. 16. I have heard, &c. viz. the evils that are now coming upon the Israelites for their sins; and that shall come hereafter upon all impenitent sinners: and the foresight that I have of these miseries makes me willing to die, that I may be at rest, before this general tribulation comes, in which all good things shall be withdrawn from the wicked. Ch.—The five woes denounced C. 2 make the deepest impression upon me. H.—I fear lest I should sin. S. Jer.—The thought of so many wonders makes me speechless. C.—Me. Let me find rest in the grave, like Job. H.—I trust that God will raise me up. C.—Heb. “rottenness hath entered, ... and I trembled in myself.” Sept. (15) “horses, troubling many waters: (16) I watched, and my belly was filled with fear at the voice of the prayer of my lips, and trembling entered my bones, and under me my strength (or frame, ἐξίς; some read ἰσχυς) was troubled. I shall rest in the day of my tribulation, to go up to the people of my parish,” or neighbourhood; παροικίας. H.—People, &c. That I may join the happy company in the bosom of Abraham, that are girded; that is, prepared for their journey, by which they shall attend their Lord, when he shall ascend into heaven. To which high and happy place, my Jesus, that is, my Saviour, the great conqueror of death and hell, shall one day conduct me rejoicing and singing psalms of praise. v. 18 and 19. Ch.—Girded. Heb. “transmigration or desolation.” Habacuc was mercifully allowed by Providence to dwell in Juda, when almost all were led away. He was transported through the air to feed Daniel, (14:32) where he might see his brethren, as he here insinuates, having relied on God’s mercy. v. 2. C.—Prot. “when he cometh up unto the people, he will invade them with his troops; (marg. “cut them in pieces”) 17. Although the,” &c. When all shall be ravaged, I will still hope. H.—All must be patiently endured, that we may rest at last. W.

Ver. 17. Fail. Lit. “lie,” (H.) or frustrate our expectations. C.—Spem mentita seges. Hor. i. ep. 7.—Fold. Sept. “food.”

Ver. 18. Jesus. Heb. yishi, “my (H.) salvation.” C.—Sept. “saviour.” Chal. “redeemer.” H.—Jesus was the desire of all nations, and he imparts true joy to the faithful. John 8:56. C.—At the last day, plagues similar to those of Egypt will occur; but the elect shall rejoice. S. Jer.

Ver. 19. Places. I shall escape the fury of the Chaldeans, and sing a hymn of thanksgiving. C.—“The conqueror singing psalms” may be unconnected with the rest, (H.) and designed to shew that the hymn was intended for religious meetings. It may signify, “To the chief over the female musicians.” C.—Lamnatseach binginothai. Prot. “to the chief singer on my stringed instruments.” Marg. “Neginoth.” Sept. “He will order my feet unto perfection. He will establish me upon the heights, to gain the victory in his canticle.” H.—I shall exchange my former complaints for songs of praise, and be crowned by Jesus. S. Jer.

SOPHONIAS

THE PROPHECY OF SOPHONIAS

INTRODUCTION

Sophonias, whose name, saith S. Jerom, signifies “the watchman of the Lord,” or “the hidden of the Lord,” prophesied in the beginning of the reign of Josias. He was a native of Sarabatha, and of the tribe of Simeon, according to the more general opinion. He prophesied the punishments of the Jews, for their idolatry and other crimes; also the punishments that were to come on divers nations; the coming of Christ, the conversion of the Gentiles, the blindness of the Jews, and their conversion towards the end of the world. Ch.—Some editions read, Ezechias. H.—But this opinion is not well grounded no more than that of the Jews, who assert (C.) that all the ancestors mentioned by the prophets were endued with the prophetic spirit, for which reason Amos specifies none, as he was not the son of a prophet. C. 7:14. S. Jer.—Sophonias appeared a little before Jeremias, Ezec. Bar. and Daniel, foretelling the captivity and return of the two tribes, the destruction of various nations, the conversion of the Gentiles, and of the Jews also towards the end of the world. W.—Many of the promises regard only the Christian Church. C.

SOPHONIAS 1

Ver. 1. Lord. Thus the prophets insinuate that they are not the authors but the ministers of God’s word. W.

Ver. 2. Gather, &c. That is, I will assuredly take away and wholly consume, either by captivity or death, both men and beasts out of this land. Ch.—To gather commonly implies a benefit, but the sequel shews that the contrary is here meant. W.—It often signifies to kill or bury. Jer. 8:2. The whole country round Judea to Babylon, shall be a sepulchre for men and beasts. Osee 4:3. C.

Ver. 3. Sea: the waters and air shall be pestilential. H.—S. Jerom frequently observes that when a country is depopulated, as the Roman empire was in his days, the most fertile regions were soon abandoned even by beasts and birds.—Meet. Sept. “be weak.” Heb. “I will gather (

C. Prot. "consume." H.) scandals (or idols) with the wicked." Sym.

Ver. 4. Baal. Josias had not yet begun his reformation. 4 K. 23:4. C.—At least he had not brought it to perfection, though from his infancy he had encouraged religion. H.—Wardens of the temples of the idols. Ædituos, in Hebrew, the Cemanim, that is such as kindle the fires or burn incense. Ch.—Lit. "the blacks, (H.) or those in black," whether it alludes to their clothes or to the colour of their bodies, in consequence of their going almost naked. Camilli, which may be derived from this root, (C.) cemanim, (H.) in Tuscan, signifies priests, or rather (C.) children who went naked before them. Macrob. iii. 8.—The priests of Baal appeared in this manner, and cut themselves, (3 K. 18:28) committing great indecencies, while God ordered his ministers to be clothed in white with the utmost gravity. C.—The very remembrance of such idols and priests shall be abolished. Osee 2:16. They were designed for the worship of fire. Baal was the sun. H.

Ver. 5. Houses. The roofs were flat. Josias afterwards reformed this abuse. 4 K. 23:5. C.—It continued among the Arabs. Strabo xvii.—Melchom. The idol of the Ammonites. Ch.—Those who join idols with God do not worship Him indeed. W.—Swearing was an act of religion. Mat. 5:33. God will not allow his glory to be given to another. Such lame worship or divided hearts he rejects. 3 K. 18:21. C.

Ver. 7. Silent. Heb. has, (H.) an interjection, (S. Jer.) like our hush. H.—This denotes the importance of what he is going to say.—Guests. The blood of the wicked is his victim. Jer. 46:10. Ezech. 39:17. C.—The day of punishment is commonly styled the day of the Lord. Is. 2 and 1 Cor. 3. W.

Ver. 8. Victim. Heb. "sacrifice." But MS. 1. Camb. has, "in that day, says the Lord," eeva nam being substituted for zebach, (H.) which is "a very remarkable variation." In v. 7 it has Jehovah Elohim printed Adonai Jehovah. Kennicott.—Princes. After the death of Josias all fell to ruin. His sons were deposed, and led into captivity with the chief nobility and priests, who were richly adorned, and imitated the manners of idolaters, or kept the garments of the poor. Ex. 22:26. Deut. 22:5. 11. &c. C.—All the posterity of Josias was afflicted. Joachaz died in Egypt; Joakim was harassed and put to death; Sedezias taken, and his eyes put out, when his children had been slain. Jechonias, or Joachin, was detained in prison at Babylon for a long time. W.

Ver. 9. Entereth the temple, as if to shew themselves. Amos 6:1. Heb. "jumpeth over," &c. denoting the Philistines. Chal. 1 K. 5:5. C.—Sept. "I will take vengeance on all openly before the gate in that day," (H.)

on all who have cast themselves out of the Church. S. Jer.—Lord. Heb. “of their masters with,” &c. This may relate to the Philistines, (C.) or to those who made the house of God a place of traffic, (Matt. 21:13) and offered victims unjustly acquired. H.

Ver. 10. Gate, looking towards Joppe. S. Jer.—The news of the defeat at Mageddo came this way, or the cries of the Philistines were heard. C.—Second. A part of the city so called, (Ch.) built by Manasses on the same side of the city, 2 Par. 33:14. C.

Ver. 11. The Morter: (Maktesh) a valley in or near Jerusalem. Ch.—All the people shall suffer in the city. Sanct. T.—Mactes was rendered famous by Samson, (Judg. 15:19) and was in or near the country of the Philistines, who seem to be designated. The original is variously interpreted. C.—Sept. “of the city cut in pieces, because all the people resemble Chanaan.” H.—Chanaan. So he calls the Jews, from their following the wicked ways of the Chanaanites. Ch.—The merchants (Grot.) are confounded, or (H.) the Philistines are still meant. C.

Ver. 12. Lamps, with the utmost diligence, (Lu. 15:8) so that none shall escape even in the most filthy places. C.—The Romans found many Jews in the common sewers. Jos. Bel. vii. 16. 20. and 26.—Lees. That is, the wealthy, and such as live at their ease, resting upon their riches, like wine upon the lees. Ch.—Evil, denying Providence. C.

Ver. 13. Strength. Children or riches. H.

Ver. 14. Near. When all these miseries shall overtake the wicked, (W.) after the death of Josias. 4 K. 21:14. C.—The mighty. Sept. “and dreadful, powerful is the day of,” &c.—Meet. Prot. “cry bitterly.” H.

Ver. 15. Day, is a day. The repetition elegantly describes the great danger. W.

Ver. 16. Trumpet, when Nachao came and deposed Joachas.

Ver. 17. Blind. Not knowing what course to take. Deut. 28:29. Is. 59:10. C.—Such will be the horror preceding judgment. H.

Ver. 18. Gold. Ezek. 7:19. Thus the Medes despised riches. Is. 13:17. C.—Jealousy. God regarded the synagogue as his spouse. M.—“If he loved not the soul of man, he would not be jealous of it.” S. Jer. H.

SOPHONIAS 2

Ver. 1. Together, in love. S. Jer.—Heb. “gather” the wood or chaff, (C.) your wicked deeds, lest they prove the fuel of fire. C. 1:18. H.—He addresses the Jews and all their neighbours. C.—Though you deserve no love, God will receive the penitent. W.

Ver. 2. The day. Heb. “to-day.” C.—Sept. “before you become as a passing flower.” Prot. “before the day pass as the chaff.” H.

Ver. 3. Just. Heb. “justice.” C.—Sept. “righteousness, and answer the same.” H.—Scarcely the innocent will escape. M.—The prophet does not specify the crimes of the Philistines, as Ezechiel (25:15) does. C.

Ver. 4. Shall be, or “is.” The prophets often represent future things as past, to shew the certainty of the event. The destruction of other cities by the Chaldees, gave the Jews to understand what they had to expect, as all sin must be punished sooner or later. W.—Psammetichus, and his son, Nachao, probably fell upon these cities. C.—The former besieged Azotus for twenty-nine years. Herod. ii. 157.—Afterwards Nabuchodonosor reduced the country, beginning with the house of God. Jer. 47:4. Ezech. 25:15, &c. C.

Ver. 5. Coast. Lit. “line,” (H.) with which land was measured. C.—Reprobates. Heb. cerethim, (H.) or Cerethi, of whom David’s guards were formed. C.—Sept. “people sprung the Cretans,” whence some (Theod.) of the Philistines came, perhaps rather than from Cyprus, as was conjectured. Gen. 10:14.—Chanaan. So the Philistines are styled contemptuously. They adored the same idols. Wisd. 12:23.

Ver. 6. Shepherds. Merchants shall come no longer, the country being subdued by Nabuchodonosor, and by the Machabees. v. 7.—Alexander ruined Gaza. Curt. iv.

Ver. 8. Borders, helping the Chaldeans. This brought on their ruin. S. Jer.—They were always disposed to seize the country.

Ver. 9. Dryness. Sept. “Damascus shall be abandoned as a heap on the barn-floor, and disappearing for an age.” H.—This city is threatened with the rest. Is. 17:1. C.—Ever. Sept. refer this to Damascus, others to Ammon, &c. H.—The latter nations were in desolation for a long time; but had re-established themselves, when the Machabees reduced them again. Jer. 48 and 1 Mac. 5:6.

Ver. 11. Own place. The Jewish religion could be practised only at Jerusalem, so that this is one of the most striking predictions of the conversion of the world. The Jews in vain attempt to restrain it to the captives returning. See S. Jer. C.—They shall inform many of the truth, and be the means of their conversion. H.—But God shall be adored in every place. M.

Ver. 12. Ethiopians. Heb. Cushim, denotes also the Arabs, &c. who fell a prey to the Chaldeans. C.

Ver. 13. The beautiful city. Ninive, which was destroyed soon after this, viz. in the sixteenth year of the reign of Josias. Ch. A. 3378.—Heb. “he shall make Ninive desolate.” H.—This famous and potent city was at last destroyed. W. See Jonas 3:4. C.

Ver. 14. Bittern and the urchin. Heb. kaath and kippod, are terms to us (H.) unknown.—Threshold. Heb. “the pomegranates,” supposed to be an ornament of the doors.—Raven. Sept. also read arb better than choreb, “the desolation or the sword.” See Is. 34:11. C.—Chereb has both meanings, “a raven, or sword.” S. Jer.—I will. Heb. “he has uncovered her cedar,” (C.) her fine palaces and apartments. Sept. “for the cedar is its height, (or pride) this is the city given to evils, that,” &c. H.

Ver. 15. Beside, or equal. This was true. Jonas 1:2. C.—The founder intended that no city should ever equal it. Diod. ii. S. Jerom applies what is here said of Ninive to the Church in the times of antichrist, (Rondet.) or to a fallen soul. Any nation may abandon the faith: but the whole Church cannot fail. H.

SOPHONIAS 3

Ver. 1. Dove. Jerusalem is upbraided, and then comforted. She had been treated like a spouse, a dove; and yet proved faithless. C.—Heb. “Wo to the famous, and defiled, and oppressing city.” Sept. agree with us, if we only exchange famous for provoking. H.—After being redeemed from Egypt, the Jews ungratefully followed idols. Osee 7:11. M.—Jerusalem having been freely chosen and favoured above other places, and still provoking God, cannot escape a severe chastisement. W.

Ver. 2. Lord. She had recourse rather to the princes of Assyria and of Egypt, which proved her ruin.

Ver. 3. Evening. Sept. “Arabian.” Hab. 1:8. Such was the state of the kingdom before the reform of Josias. C.

Ver. 4. Senseless. Prot. “light,” or (H.) windy and inconstant. There were too many false prophets (C.) during the minority of Josias. C.

Ver. 5. Morning. Speedily he will punish the guilty before all.—Shame. He is hardened. C.—Sept. “and not injustice for victory.” Grabe substitutes contention. God is just, (H.) even when he takes vengeance. C.

Ver. 6. Towers. Lit. “angles,” (H.) the chiefs, or to the very last. Job 38:6. Zac. 10:4. The nations have been punished for an example. But you do not take warning. C.

Ver. 7. But. Sept. “be prepared, rise early, all their grapes are corrupt.” H.—I had reason to expect an amendment, when so many nations had perished before their eyes. C.—They however sinned out of malice, and strove to provoke me in all their ways.

Ver. 8. To come. Sept. “for a witness.” H.—About forty years after Christ’s resurrection, the Jews for the most part continuing obstinate, Titus ruined their city; which is a figure of the world’s destruction, and of the eternal punishment of the wicked. W.—After the resurrection, the Church was to be gathered from all nations. Christ will rise again at the last day to judge all. God threatens his rebellious people with captivity, and then promises to shew mercy. v. 9. Thus the prophets often subjoin promises to threats.

Ver. 9. Chosen. Sym. “pure.” C.—Idols shall not be mentioned. Theod. —All people shall know and adore the Lord, which was verified only after Christ’s coming. C.—Sept. “for then I will change again for the peoples, language to its own kind,” (H.) which Origen, (c. Cels. viii.) and the Jews in S. Jerom, explain of the days of the Messias, when the confusion of Babel shall cease. But this is forced: it suffices that people unite in faith and obey the Church.—Shoulder, like people carrying a burden. Sept. “under one yoke.” After the captivity the Jews were more obedient and faithful, as the more corrupt remained behind the Euphrates, or were cut off in the last wars. Yet the synagogue was never so pure as the Christian Church, even in the worst times. C.—All nations shall worship God in unity of faith, and courageously submit to the gospel. W.

Ver. 10. Ethiopia. The Nile arises in that country, and runs through Egypt and Arabia, which is often styled Ethiopia or Cush. Is. 18:1. The Jews came from Egypt to adore at Jerusalem, even after the building of Onion. Yet this literally regard’s Christ’s Church.—Offering. The Jews performed this after the captivity, coming or sending the half sicle to Jerusalem annually, from all quarters of the world. Num. 3:46. Mat. 17:23. C.

Ver. 11. Doings. Lit. “inventions,” of religion of thy own choice. H.—

Thy past offenses shall be obliterated, and thou shalt commit nothing of the kind any more. Those proud spirits who caused thee to dislike my law, and who set up idols in my temple shall disappear.—

Mountain. The temple shall be destroyed, that all may know that I am attached to virtue alone, (C.) and not to any edifice or place. H.—They trusted too much to the temple. Jer. 7:4. M.

Ver. 12. Poor in spirit. H.—Heb. “meek and extenuated,” who trust not in themselves. This is the character of true Christians. The few Jews who remained in the country, or who returned from Babylon, might well represent them, being poor and dependent. The disciples of Christ contemned riches, and were resolute only where virtue was at stake. C.—They were instructed by poor fishermen taught by God. M.

Ver. 13. Israel. They shall be more submissive, and afraid of yielding to idolatry. Yet the synagogue was far from the perfection of the primitive Christianity, or even from that of many pious souls in these days of relaxation.—Afraid. The Jews were not much molested till the time of Epiphanes, nor was the country ravaged as it had been. Mic. 2:12. This peace is however of a spiritual nature, granted by Christ to those who fight against their passions. John 14:27. C.—They shall feed on the word of God and on the blessed Eucharist. M.

Ver. 15. Judgment, or “condemnation.” Sept. “iniquities,” (C.) nailing to the cross the handwriting that was against thee. H.—God does not treat thee with rigour. He will be thy king. The Jews had no king for a long time. But the true Israel, of whom the prophet speaks, is continually ruled and fed by Jesus Christ, who imparts his graces abundantly. C.

Ver. 17. Silent; constant. M.—He will accuse thee no more. Can this be understood of the Jews, who have been cast off till the fulness of the Gentiles enter the Church? To the latter all this must be applied. Few prophets inveighed against the crimes of the captives after their return. C.—But this must be deemed a punishment, unless the crimes were also removed. H.

Ver. 18. Triflers. Lit. “trifles;” nugas. Heb. nugi, (H.) which is almost Latin. S. Jer.—These vain nothings, (C.) men who were of light dispositions, scoffers at Christ, shall be converted and honour him. W.—Sept. 17. “he will renew thee in his love, and will exult over thee in joy, as on a festival day: (18) and I will bring back thy bruised ones. Wo to him that has reproached her.” Aquila likewise renders by woe, or ēju, oh, oi, using it as an exclamation, though not of sorrow. Yet the term signifies, they were. S. Jer. H.—Heb. lit. “I have gathered those who were in grief for a time. They were of thee. Shame was upon them like a heavy load;" or, "they were grieved on account of the festivals disused. They were like an offering rejected," with disgrace. C.—They lamented that they could no longer observe the solemn festivals, and this was to the pious a most intolerable burden, while libertines seem to feel as great a misery in the observance.

Ver. 19. Cut. Sept. "do in thee, for thy sake at," &c. H.—Halteth, and have no children, (Mic. 4:7) denoting the Gentiles. C.—Sept. "squeezed out," like grapes, being in distress. S. Jer.—Where. Sept. "and they shall be ashamed at," &c.

Ver. 20. Bring. Sept. "do good to you." H.—Praise. All shall speak well of you who have been lately dishonoured, when I shall take both Gentiles and Jews for my spouse after the captivity, which seems present, (C.) it is so certain. H.—Captivity, under satan and sin. M.

AGGEUS

THE PROPHECY OF AGGEUS

INTRODUCTION

Aggeus was one of those that returned from the captivity of Babylon, in the first year of the reign of king Cyrus. He was sent by the Lord in the second year of the reign of Darius, the son of Hystaspes, to exhort Zorobabel, the prince of Juda, and Jesus, the high priest, to the building of the temple; which they had begun, but left off again through opposition of the Samaritans. In consequence of this exhortation, they proceeded in the building, and finished the temple. And the prophet was commissioned by the Lord to assure them that this second temple should be more glorious than the former, because the Messiah should honour it with his presence; signifying, withal, how much the Church of the new testament should excel that of the old testament. Ch.—The glory of the Catholic Church hence appears. W.—We know little of the life of Aggeus. It is thought that he was born in captivity. C.—He came into Judea eighteen years after its termination, (W.) in the second year of Hystaspes, when the seventy years of the temple's desolation ended. Zac. 1:12 and 1 Esd. 5. The people had courage to obey the word of the prophets rather than the king's edict. Aggeus means feasting, (S. Jer.) or pleasant. He brings joyful tidings, after rebuking the people for preferring their own convenience before the house of God. H.

AGGEUS 1

Ver. 1. Darius Hystaspes. C.—When the Jews had no king, the prophets dated from the reign of the monarch on whom they were dependent. Theod.—Sixth; Elul, the last of the civil year, corresponding with our September. The harvest had been bad, and Aggeus assigns the reason. C.—Governor. Lit. “duke,” or captain. Sept. “of the tribe of Juda.” H.—He descended from the kings of Juda, and was now chief governor by leave of Darius. W.—Yet Cyrus had appointed Sarasar, (1 Esd. 1:8) who perhaps, after the death of Cambyses, fled; Zorobabel and Jesus are designated judges, and a crown is made for them. C. 2:24. Zac. 3 and 6:11. Still Thartanai, governor beyond the Euphrates, took cognizance of the Jewish affairs. 1 Esd. 5:3. The prince of Juda was therefore under him. Zorobabel was son or grandson of Salathiel, (1 Par. 3:17) or was adopted by him, being born of Phadaia. C.—Josedec, who was led into captivity. 1 Par. 6:15.

Ver. 2. Yet come. God's service must be restored without delay, and manners reformed; as otherwise many will be lost eternally. W.—The Jews refrained from commencing the temple till the time marked out by Jeremias, 25:11. Zac. 1:7. C.—From the beginning of the last siege sixty-nine years had elapsed. Usher, A. 3485.—Others, reflecting on the obstacles placed by Cyrus and Cambyses, thought it was not yet time to work at the temple: but these were only pretexts. The kingdom was now held by another family, and the former decrees abolished. Fear of labour, therefore, was the only impediment.

Ver. 4. Ceiled: superbly adorned. Heb. “covered.” You are not content with what is merely necessary, while the temple lies in ruins. C.

Ver. 5. Ways. Sound the real motives of your neglect. H.—See if your misfortunes do not originate in this cause, and if God does not require you to build the temple. v. 9. C.

Ver. 6. Filled. Lit. “inebriated,” (H.) so as to become cheerful. S. Jer.

Ver. 8. The mountain Libanus. Wood had been purchased before, but had been used for other purposes. 1 Esd. 3:7. Now the people went to procure more. The following year Darius confirmed the decree of Cyrus, which was a change plainly effected by Providence. C.

Ver. 11. Drought. Heb. choreb, (H.) is rendered the sword, by the Sept. and may best signify “a burning wind,” according to the different pronunciation. S. Jer.—This was not then determined by the vowel points (C.) of the Masora. Soph. 2:14. H.

Ver. 13. Messenger. To excite the people’s attention, Aggeus declares that he is sent by God, (W.) like the prophets of old. Some Jews have asserted (C.) that he, Malachias, the Baptist, and Jacob, were angels incarnate. But let us leave (S. Jer.) these learned dreams. C.—They have no better foundation than the ambiguity of malac, which signifies “an angel, or a messenger.” H.—With you. This is often repeated, to encourage the dejected people. M.

Ver. 14. Work. Sept. “works.” H.—They prepared materials, and began the temple on the 24th of the ninth month. C. 2:16. 19. M.

AGGEUS 2

Ver. 1. In, &c. This should be joined with the preceding chapter. C.—They began the new work at this time, and on the 21st of the seventh month the prophet had a fresh revelation. W.

Ver. 4. Glory. The temple had been destroyed sixty-nine years before, so that many might have seen it. When the second temple was dedicated, (C.) or founded, (H.) two years after the captivity, cries of grief and of joy were heard. 1 Esd. 3:12.

Ver. 7. Little. Christ was born 515 years afterwards. The world had been disturbed by Alexander and by the Romans, yet peace then prevailed. All nature acknowledged the power of Jesus Christ, and the world was reformed. Another commotion will take place at his second coming. C.

Ver. 8. Desired. Jacob styles him the expectation of nations, (Gen. 49) because He was wanting, and always necessary for all. W.—Thus the sick desire a remedy, though they know not what it is. The Gentiles were ignorant of the Messiah; yet he was still desirable and most lovely. Cant. 5:16. C.—Many also, like Job, had a lively expectation of their Redeemer’s coming from the tradition of the patriarchs. H.—Heb. “the desires of all nations shall come.” (H.)

venient. Sept. “the chosen things,” &c. Christ shall come for all, (C.) and the elect shall meet him with eagerness. H.—In vain do the Jews attempt to contest this prediction. Was not the Messias to be desired? and has not Jesus Christ procured the greatest advantages for mankind?

Ver. 10. Peace: another title of the Messias. His presence ennobles this temple (C.) more than precious ornaments of gold and silver (v. 9) did that of Solomon. H.—Some have pretended that the second temple, repaired by Herod, was more spacious and magnificent than the former. It also subsisted a longer time. But this circumstance adds no superior value, unless the structure was better finished. What Josephus relates of Herod’s repairs, is denied by several respectable modern authors. Salien, A. 4035, &c.—Yet as the fact was so recent, it seems it had some foundation, though the account may be greatly exaggerated. Josephus was not always exact. C.—The Jews all agree that the temple of Zorobabel and of Herod was the same. Lempereur. —It is almost certain that this edifice was never honoured with the ark, &c. like that of Solomon; so that if it be not on account of the Messias, no good reason appears for giving it the preference. H.—The ancients who had seen the former, wept (W.) when that of Zorobabel was founded, confessing its inferiority (H.) both in size and elegance. It was only 60 cubits high and broad, while the former was 120, built of polished stone and covered with cedar. Zorobabel had rough stones. 1 Esd. 5:8. and 6:3 and 2 Par. 3:4 and 3 K. 6:7. As for the same temple, enlarged and adorned by Herod, it continued not long in that state; and its chief glory consisted of our Saviour’s presence, when he was received in the arms of Simeon, and often preached there. Hence S. Aug. (de civ. Dei. xviii. 45.) shews that the prophet foretells the glory of Christ’s mystical temple, the faithful of all nations, in whom he dwells by the grace of the new testament, as in living stones, far more gloriously than in any temple erected by Solomon or after the captivity. W.

Ver. 12. The law. “He who knows it not, shews himself to be no priest of the Lord.” Deut. 17. S. Jer.

Ver. 13. No, conformably to Lev. 6:27. M.—What the linen covered could not render other things sacred. The victim must come in immediate contact with them, to have this effect. H.—Those who had touched the dead, rendered both holy and common things unclean for others. There were two sorts of sanctified meat: the victims for sin, which the priests on duty alone could eat, (Lev. 7:1, 6.) and the peace-offerings, of which all who were clean might partake. ib. 19. The former alone sanctified what they touched. Both must be burnt if they touched any thing unclean, while ordinary food in the same predicament might be consumed by people in mourning, &c. C.—That which touched a holy things was sanctified, (Lev. 6:18) but that thing did not sanctify others; so the people, by touching the sacrifices, were only legally holy, and therefore their victims were not acceptable to the Lord as long as they did not comply with their duty of building his temple. W.

Ver. 14. By occasion of a soul. That is, by having touched the dead: in which case, according to the prescription of the law, (Num. 19:13. 22) a person not only became unclean himself, but made everything that he touched unclean. The prophet applies all this to the people, whose souls remained unclean by neglecting the temple of God; and therefore were not sanctified by the flesh they offered in sacrifice, but rather defiled their sacrifices by approaching to them in the state of uncleanness. Ch.

Ver. 15. So. He makes the application of the second answer given, v. 14. All your victims have hitherto been contaminated. I redressed not your miseries. But now, as you have begun to work at my temple, I will remove the scourge. It is easy to apply the first answer, v. 13. Your victims have purified you no more than holy flesh wrapped up in a garment would sanctify it, (C.) or other things which it does not immediately touch. H.—Your bad dispositions render them useless. Jer. 11:15. The victims were also bad. Mal. 1:6. C.

Ver. 16. Day, the 24th of the ninth month, when you began to build. v. 19. Henceforward your crops shall be abundant. M.—I judge not from natural appearances, as the corn is still in the granary. v. 20. C. —Upon a stone. The foundations had been laid the year after the Jews returned, and an altar set up. 1 Esd. 3. Nothing more of consequence was done till the second year of Darius. The temple was finished and dedicated in the sixth. Ib. 6:15. Hence Aggeus speaks of the stones to be used hereafter. Those in the foundation were to be laid afresh, (v. 19) or were not seen or noticed. In the same sense our Saviour predicts, that a stone shall not be left upon a stone in the temple, which the Romans should destroy before that generation had passed away. Mat. 24:2. 34. This was verified within forty years. Yet A. Rutter observes it was more fully accomplished when the Jews dug up the foundations, by order of Julian, who wished to falsify the prediction. H.

Ver. 17. Bushels. Heb. specifies nothing. Sept. “when you put a basket (or vase) twenty sata of barley.” He speaks of such as was not yet winnowed.

Ver. 20. Sprung up. Heb. “in the granary,” or cave, magura, whence the African mangaria, or huts, are derived. Chal. and Sept. “barn floor,” as it was commonly adjoining to these huts. Some have, “in blade.” But this seems to be the sense: the corn is not yet sown, nor the trees in blossom, yet I announce great fertility next year. He spoke in November, during which and the following month the seed was committed to the earth, in Palestine, as (C.) it was in Egypt, the wheat ripening in seven months, (Pliny xviii. 7.) and being cut towards the end of June. S. Jer.—Aggeus probably composed the Ps. 64 to thank God for this fertility.

Ver. 22. Earth. Some great event is denoted. Nothing occurs in history after the second year of Darius, to shew that Zorobabel signalized himself. Theodoret thinks that the irruption of the Scythians, or of Gog, is meant. Others believe (C.) that the prophecy relates to Christ, at his first (S. Cyr.) or second coming. S. Jer.—But the Heb. speaks of something past, and we doubt not but the attempt of Cambyzes, three years before, is the subject. Ezech. 38. “I have overcome the throne of kings,” Cambyzes, and the magi, and have given the kingdom to another family. The enemy has destroyed himself. Then I kept thee as a seal, with the greatest care. Jer. 22:24. Thou art no longer oppressed by the Persian king of his governor. Hystaspes has declared in thy favour. Nothing could more enhance the authority of Zorobabel than an action so recent, which God seemed to have permitted on his account, and for his glory. C.—While all other kingdoms perish, the Church of Christ remains. W.

Ver. 24. O Zorobabel. This promise principally relates to Christ, who was of the race of Zorobabel. Ch.

ZACHARIAS

THE PROPHECY OF ZACHARIAS

INTRODUCTION

Zacharias began to prophesy in the same year as Aggeus, and upon the same occasion. His prophecy is full of mysterious figures and promises of blessings, partly relating to the synagogue and partly to the Church of Christ. Ch.—He is the “most obscure and longest of the twelve;” (S. Jer.) though Osee wrote the same number of chapters. H.—Zacharias has been confounded with many others of the same name. Little is known concerning his life. Some have asserted that the ninth and two following chapters were written by Jeremias, in whose name C. 11:12 is quoted Mat. 27:9. But that is more probably a mistake of transcribers. Zacharias speaks more plainly of the Messiah and of the last siege of Jerusalem than the rest, as he live nearer those times. C.—His name signifies, “the memory of the Lord.” S. Jer.—He appeared only two months after Aggeus, and shewed that the Church should flourish in the synagogue, and much more after the coming of Christ, who would select his first preachers from among the Jews. Yet few of them shall embrace the gospel, in comparison with the Gentiles, though they shall at last be converted. S. Jer. ad Paulin. W.

ZACHARIAS 1

Ver. 1. Barachias adopted him, (1 Esd. 5:1) or rather Addo was his grandfather.

Ver. 2. Angry, as he has severely chastised them. C.

Ver. 3. Turn ye. Such expressions admonish us of our free-will, and when we answer, convert us, &c. (Lam. 5:11. C.) we confess that God’s grace preventeth us. Trid. Sess. vi. 5. W.—We may resist the Holy Spirit, (H.) and reject his graces. The prophet exhorts the people to lay aside all former negligence, (C.) and proceed with the temple. H.—It had been commenced about two months before. Agg. 2:1 16.

Ver. 5. Always. He seems to hint, that after Malachias prophets would be sent no more till Christ should appear; or, that God’s word should be fulfilled (v. 6) though the prophets were dead. C.

Ver. 6. Fathers. They felt their effects. H.—Returned; being converted by the sight of God’s judgments. Osee 4:1 and 2 Esd. 1:6.

Ver. 7. Sabbath. These names were brought from Chaldea. The month was lunar, and corresponded sometimes with parts of our December and January, at other times with January, or with that and the following month. C.

Ver. 8. A man. An angel in the shape of a man. It was probably S. Michael, the guardian angel of the Church of God. Ch.—It is plain that he was an ange. v. 11. W.—He appears in obscurity, to shew the distress of the nation. C.—Among. Sept. “between two shady mountains.” H.

Ver. 10. These are they, &c. The guardian angels of provinces and nations. Ch.—The Jews believed that each nation had such an angel, who had to give an account to one in higher authority. God proportions his revelation to their ideas.

Ver. 11. Rest. All the country under Michael’s care enjoyed peace, (C.) in the second year of Darius. H.—The red horse implies slaughter. Apoc. 6:4. It was now repressed. Tournemine.

Ver. 12. The seventieth year; viz. from the beginning of the siege of Jerusalem, in the ninth year of king Sedecias, to the second year of king Darius. These seventy years of the desolation of Jerusalem and the cities of Juda, are different from the seventy years of captivity foretold by Jeremias; which began in the fourth year of Joakim, and ended in the first year of king Cyrus. Ch.—Of these Daniel (9) speaks. The temple had also been destroyed now seventy years, (W.) and the angel prays, (H.) while the prophet begs that the people may be inspired to rebuild it. W.—Michael takes occasion from the angels’ report, to beseech the Lord to perfect what had been so well begun. He speaks not expressly of the temple, as Aggeus had prevailed on the people to commence that edifice. They had excused themselves that the time was not come, as they probably dated from the burning of the temple; though its desolation began with the siege, thirty months before. See Jer. 25:11 and 29:10. C.

Ver. 13. Answered. We have here a proof of the intercession of angel, and of its good effects. H.—In me; revealing God’s will. S. Jer.—Yet it seems to be S. Michael. C. iv. 1. Chal. Theod. C.

Ver. 14. Zeal. I will again treat her as my spouse. H.

Ver. 15. Nations, represented as four horns, v. 18, 19.—Evil, through malice, and thus deserved themselves to be punished. Osee 1:4.

Ver. 16. Line. Soon after Nehemias came to rebuild the city. C.

Ver. 18–20. Four horns, ... four smiths. The four horns represent the empires, or kingdoms, that persecute and oppress the people of God: the four smiths or carpenters (for faber may signify either) represent those whom God makes his instruments in bringing to nothing the power of persecutors. Ch.—The Ammonites, &c. on the east, the Philistines on the west, the Idumeans and Egyptians on the south, and the Assyrians and Chaldees on the north, had much molested God’s people, and were therefore punished. W.—The princes of Assyria and of Babylon, the kings of Persia and of Egypt, had all treated them ill; and these four empires have or will be destroyed by four chariots, (C. 6:1.) Nabopolassar, Cyrus, Alexander, and Antiochus. Dan. 7:1. &c. S. Jerom, and many who usually follow him, understand the empires of the Chaldeans, Persians, Greeks, and Romans, to be designated by the horns, as the workmen mean the angels who have chastised those nations.

Ver. 21. Every. Heb. “at pleasure; none shall lift,” &c. These kingdoms shall no longer prove formidable. C.—Fray, or “terrify.” Sept. “to sharpen them in their hands. The horns are nations,” &c. H.

ZACHARIAS 2

Ver. 3. Another. The angel who measured spoke to Michael. C.

Ver. 4. Walls. This must be understood of the spiritual Jerusalem, the Church of Christ. Ch.—According to S. Aug. (in Ps. lxxi.) when the literal sense cannot be verified, we must have recourse to the thing prefigured; and thus what is here written, must be explained of the Church rather than of Jerusalem. W.—A little before the fall of the latter, it was become so populous that the houses which had been built without the walls were enclosed. Jos. Bel. vi. 6.—this multitude was a sort of pledge or figure of the crowds which should embrace the gospel.

Ver. 5. Fire, to enlighten and protect it. Arms will be unnecessary. Mic. 5:10. Is. 2:4. The Church shall enjoy peace.

Ver. 6. North. Many Jews had not yet returned, Esther, &c.—Winds. Ezec. 5:2, 12. C.—Gentiles, and ye children of Sion, flee from Babylon and from sin into the true Church. W.

Ver. 8. Glory. After restoring you to your own country, and rebuilding your cities, I will punish your enemies. C.—After they have enjoyed prosperity, they shall feel the reverse. Heb. Cabod, (H.) means also “a burden.”

Ver. 9. Prey. Two years after this (C.) the Assyrians revolted, and seized Babylon. Justin i.—They slew the useless women: but Zopyrus betrayed the place to Darius, who hung 3,000 of the principal inhabitants, and demolished the walls. Herod. iii. 150. Usher, A. 3489.

Ver. 11. Nations. We know of none who embrace the Jewish law. But both the old and the new world submits to Christ.—Dwell. S. Michael represents the Messias. The latter preached and wrought miracles among the Jews, which rendered them inexcusable. John 15:24. C.

Ver. 13. Silent: obey with reverence. H. See Hab. 2:20 and 1 Mac. 1:3. C.—Habitation, becoming man. M.

ZACHARIAS 3

Ver. 1. Jesus, or Josue, the son of Josedec, the high priest of that time. Ch.—To him this literally refers. W.—As high priest, he represented the nation, whom several calumniated to Darius. 1 Esd. 4. &c. God represses the adversary and adorns his people. It seems something has been done amiss. v. 4. C.—The high priest, (S. Jer.) or rather his sons, have married strangers. Chal. 1 Esd. 10:18. Many Fathers take Jesus for a figure of the Messias, covered with the sins of mankind. C.—But the Orient (v. 8) would not thus be promised unto him, (S. Jer.) unless we consider him also as high priest.—Satan. Sept. “the devil;” the accuser and calumniator. Apoc. 12:10.

Ver. 2. The Lord said. This may refer to the angel, or to the Father and the Son. Ps. 109. Both are styled Jehovah.—Bread, alluding to the nation, or to Jesus. Have not the suffered enough? Amos 4:11. C.

Ver. 3. Garments. Negligences and sins. Ch.—Jesus had neglected to urge the building of the temple, or to repress unlawful marriages. 1 Esd. 8. W.

Ver. 4. Change, such as were worn on festivals. This shewed that the people should exchange adversity for joy.

Ver. 5. Mitre, (cydarim) the pontiff’s tiara, of byssus. Ex. 28:4.

Ver. 7. Judge. The high priests were at the head till the Machabees. Jos. Ant. xi. 4. and xx. 8.—Yet the nation was, (C.) till Simon, (H.) always dependent; and the judges were under foreign kings or governors. C.—Give thee, &c. Angels to attend and assist thee. Ch.—They are promised to help the pastors of the Church. W.—They shall give information. v. 9. Ex. 23:20. C.—Of them. Sept. “who shall converse in the midst of these who stand;” (H.) thy children shall succeed in the pontificate. Theod.

Ver. 8. Portending men. That is, men who by words and actions are to foreshew wonders that are to come; (Ch.) or rather they require prodigies before they will take courage to build the temple; or they understand how to explain such things. C.—Orient; Christ, who according to his humanity is the servant of God, is called the Orient, from his rising like the sun in the east to enlighten the world. Ch.—S. Luke explains this of Christ, (W.) recording the words of Zacharias. H.—Christ's birth was most pure. He gave light to the world. Some would explain this of Zorobabel; but as he was already present, it would seem more applicable to Nehemias. Yet both were only figures of Christ, and could not efface the iniquity of Juda, &c. The Messiah is styled the Bud, C. 6:12. Is. 4:2. &c. C.—Tsemach signifies either "the bud or the orient." H.

Ver. 9. The stone. Another emblem of Christ, the rock, foundation, and corner-stone of his Church.—Eyes. The manifold providence of Christ over his Church, or the seven gifts of the Spirit of God. Ch.—The Jews were lately returned from a country where seven chief officers were styled "the king's eyes," having to inform him of the conduct of governors, &c. Zorobabel shall build the temple, as a figure of Christ establishing his Church. C. 4:10.—Grave. Sept. "dig a pit." The rest agree with us. Christ adorns and instructs his Church. C.—Day. The day of the passion of Christ, the source of all our good: when this precious stone shall be graved, that is cut and pierced with whips, thorns, nails, and spear. Ch.

Ver. 10. Tree. All shall be peace and concord. H.—They shall communicate to each other spiritual goods, abounding in the Church. M.

ZACHARIAS 4

Ver. 1. Again. He had been with Jesus. C. 3. C.

Ver. 2. A candlestick, &c. The temple of God that was then in building; and in a more sublime sense, the Church of Christ. Ch.—Some, with the Jews, apply this to the synagogue: but most explain it of the Church, the lamp denoting Christ, and the seven lights all his pastors; the two olives, Enoch and Elias. Apoc. 11. W.—The angel explains the latter of Jesus and Zorobabel. v. 14. The lights are the same with the angels, (v. 10) and eyes, (C. 3:9) subservient to these great men. Perhaps no candlestick of this description ever existed, though it alludes to that of Moses in some respects. Ex. 37. C.—Lamp. Heb. gullah, (H.) a round vessel for oil. M.—It was filled from the two olive-trees, and supplied the seven lights by tubes. H.

Ver. 5. Are? Thou art a prophet, and art thou ignorant? M.

Ver. 6. To Zorobabel. This vision was in favour of Zorobabel, to assure him of success in the building of the temple, which he had begun, signified by the candlestick; the lamp of which, without any other industry, was supplied with oil dropping from the two olive-trees, and distributed by the seven funnels or pipes, to maintain the seven lights. Ch.—Zorobabel might thus be comforted with the assurance that God would protect his Church. W.—Spirit, represented by the eyes. The Messiah would receive the fulness of this spirit. Is. 11:2.

Ver. 7. Great mountain. So he calls the opposition made by the enemies of God's people; which, nevertheless, without any army or might on their side, was quashed by divine Providence. Ch.—It may also mean Sion covered with ruins.—Chief; either the first or the last stone. C.—Equal grace. Shall add grace to grace, or beauty to beauty. Ch.—He shall greatly adorn it. Heb. “when they shall lift it (the stone) up, they will exclaim: Let it be agreeable and loved.” C.—Prot. “He shall bring forth the head-stone thereof with shouting, crying: Grace, grace unto it.” The people filled the air with their cries, when the temple was founded fourteen years before. H.—This second attempt shall be more successful. The temple was finished in four years. 1 Esd. 5:16. and 6:16. C.

Ver. 10. Little days. That is, these small and feeble beginnings of the temple of God. Ch.—Ye of little faith shall rejoice when you shall behold Zorobabel surmounting all difficulties. C.—Plummet. Lit. “the stone of tin.” He means the builder's plummet, which Zorobabel shall hold in his hand for the finishing the building. Ch.—The Hebrew style all weights stones, Deut. 25:13. C.—Eyes. The providence of God, that oversees and orders all things; (Ch.) or the assistance of the seven chief angels. Tob. 12:15. Apoc. 1:4. C.

Ver. 12. Branches: the divine and human nature in Christ. W.—They are the same with the two trees, v. 11. C.

Ver. 14. Two sons of oil. That is, the two anointed ones of the Lord; viz. Jesus, the high priest, and Zorobabel, the prince. Ch.—The Hebrews have not many adjectives. Thus they say, the son of perdition, for the lost son. Sept. “sons of fatness.” Aq. and Th. “of splendour,” two illustrious personages. H.—One was head in religious, the other in civil matters. C.—Both were appointed by God, and co-operated for the welfare of the people, as the church and state ought to act for the common good, and assist each other. H.—Jesus and Zorobabel were to repair the damage done by the Chaldeans. They were assisted by the seven administering spirits. Heb. 1:14. C.

ZACHARIAS 5

Ver. 1. Eyes of the soul. M.—Volume. That is, a parchment, according to the form of the ancient books, which, from begin rolled up, were called volumes. Ch.—Such are still used in the synagogues. They were usually written only on one side. C.—Sept. have read e at the end of megilla, and render “a scythe,” (H.) indicating chastisement. Aquila and Th. have Diphtherea, and Sym. Kephalis. S. Jer.—The latter denotes the roller H. to which the parchment was sewed. M.—The former signifies a book written on vellum, particularly that in which the poets say Jupiter marks the sins and punishments of mankind. The prophet saw a volume of this nature. C.—The sins of the people, and the punishment designed for them, were described. It appeared flying, to shew that the decree came from heaven. S. Chrys. Il. xxvii. ad pop. W.

Ver. 2. Cubits, alluding to Judea, which was twice as long as it was broad. M.—Many explain this vision and that of the woman, (v. 7) of the Jews, (C.) after S. Jerom. H.—But it seems rather to denote the Chaldeans, whose sentence had been long pronounced, and who were punished by the Persians, and by the Greeks, as by two women. If we understand the Jews, their iniquity was chastised by the Assyrians and Chaldeans. C.

Ver. 3. In like. Prot. “shall cut off as on that side standing to it.” H.

Ver. 4. Thief. Nabuchodonosor is often so styled. S. Jer. iv. 7. This title comprises all the injuries done to man, as he that sweareth falsely refers to those where God’s honour is concerned (C.) more immediately. H.

Ver. 6. Vessel. Heb. epha. C.—Eye. This is what they fix their eye upon, or this is a resemblance and figure of them, viz. of sinners. Ch.—Prot. “resemblance.” H.—This is their picture. C.—Sept. “wickedness;” aunom. H.—U is often mistaken for i. S. Jer. Yet here the Sept. seems equally intelligible, v. 8. H.

Ver. 7. Talent, or weight, (H.) called a stone, v. 8.—Vessel, like the idol Canopus.

Ver. 8. He cast. Heb. (C.) according to Theodot. (S. Jer.) “She cast herself into the epha,” &c. H.

Ver. 9. Women. They often represent nations; and here the Jews understand the Medes and Greeks, who punished the Chaldees. S. Jerom rather thinks that the Assyrians and Chaldeans are meant, carrying away Israel and Juda. Yet the former supposition seems preferable, as the woman in the vessel signified the wickedness of Babylon.—Kite. Moderns have, “stork:” the true sense is uncertain. C.—The Jews became blind and hardened on account of their avarice and perjuries. W.

Ver. 11. the land of Sennaar, where Babel or Babylon was built; (Gen. 9) where note that Babylon, in holy writ, is often taken for the city of the devil, (that is, for the whole congregation of the wicked) as Jerusalem is taken for the city and people of God. Ch.—Antichrist will begin his reign at Babylon. W.—Yet this is not clear. H.—The Chaldeans are driven from the countries which they had seized, and confined to their own territory, by the Persians and Greeks; or, if we explain it of the Jews, many of them remained at Babylon, and did not return to defile their own country. Only those whose hearts were touched by God returned. 1 Esd. 1:5. C.—Sennaar means “excussion.” The Jews have been driven by the Chaldees and Romans into all parts. M.

ZACHARIAS 6

Ver. 1. Four chariots. The four great empires of the Chaldeans, Persians, Greeks, and Romans; or, perhaps, by the fourth chariot are represented the kings of Egypt and of Asia, the descendants of Ptolemeus and Seleucus. Ch. See Dan. 2. W.—The chariots seem to represent the same thing as the four horns, (C. 1:18) namely, the punishment of the four empires. The angel says nothing of the first chariot, as the Chaldeans, who overthrew the Assyrians, were now devoid of power.—Brass, or hard; signifying that the chariots were designed to bruise nations. C.—Empires depend on the decrees of God. M.—The two mountains may denote the passes of Cilicia, through which the conquerors must pass from Egypt and Syria to Babylon. Tournemine.

Ver. 2. Red. The Chaldeans were bloody towards the Jews, and clothed in red. Nah. 2:3. M.

Ver. 3. Strong; (Prot. marg.) the text has “bay.” H.—Some Greek copies read erroneously, red. S. Jer.—Others have, variegated, as v. 7. H.

Ver. 5. Winds. These angels go throughout the world to punish. Dan. 10:13. We commonly suppose the tutelar angels to be for the defence of their kingdoms. C.—But they may often promote our real welfare by chastisements. H.—The four monarchies fight like the winds, and soon disappear. M.

Ver. 6. North. So Babylon is called, because it lay to the north in respect of Jerusalem. The black horses, that is, the Medes and Persians, and after them Alexander and his Greeks, signified by the white horses, went thither because they conquered Babylon, executed upon it the judgments of God, which is signified v. 8 by the expression of quieting his spirit. Ch.—The Persians are black, afflicting the Jews under Assuerus, and hindering the temple. M.—Cambyses meditated their utter ruin. C. 2:2. H.—White. Alexander was of a beneficent temper when he was not intoxicated. He fought for glory, and was kind to the Jews. C.—South: Egypt, which lay to the south of Jerusalem, and was occupied first by Ptolemeus, and then by the Romans. Ch.—The Lagides were some good and some very bad princes, represented by the grisly colour. C.

Ver. 7. Strong. Sept. “variegated;” ψαροι, (H.) sturnini. S. Jer.—Earth. This well describes the ambition and power of the Seleucides, particularly of Antiochus the great, (C.) or of the Roman generals down to Cæsar. M.

Ver. 8. Spirit. Sept. “wrath or fury.” H.—Nabopolassar overcame the Assyrians, Cyrus the Chaldeans, as Alexander would shortly treat the Persians.

Ver. 10. Holdai, &c. They had brought presents for the temple, which are to be used to make crowns for Jesus and Zorobabel. v. 13. C.—The names are interpreted by the Sept. “of the princes and of its useful things, and of those who have known it, (captivity) and thou,” &c. H.—Helem and Hem are afterwards mentioned instead of Holdai. v. 14. S. Jer.

Ver. 11. Crowns. Chal. “a great crown.” Sept. v. 14. “a crown;” perhaps like the pope’s M.—Jesus. When the prophet set the crown on the high priest’s head, in order to shew that it did not belong to him, except as a figure of the Messias, he added, behold a man, who is also God, called Orient, or “raising up,” and establishing the kingdom, which was promised to David. S. Jer. W.

Ver. 12. Orient. Prot. “the branch, and he shall grow up out of his place.” H.—Heb. “under or from himself.” This alludes to the miraculous birth of Christ, (Is. 11:1) whom the prophet had principally in view; though his hearers might naturally understand (C.) Zorobabel, who was to preserve the royal family and build the temple. Theod. S. Jer.—Yet he was only a shadow of the Messias. C. 3:8. C.

Ver. 13. Glory. Sept. “virtue,” or “receive strength” and courage, ἀρετήν; (H.) or one of the crowns, as prince of Juda. v. 10. C.—Both. That is, he shall unite in himself the two offices or dignities of king and priest. Ch.—Zorobabel and Jesus shall act in concert. H.

Ver. 14. Helem. Sept. “the crown shall be for those who expect him.” H.—Hem. Sept. “for grace.” Heb. chen. S. Jer.—Thus proper names are frequently interpreted. H.—The crowns were not to be worn, but to be deposited in the temple. 1 Mac. 1:23. C.—The names of those four who had contributed towards their making, were to be inscribed upon them. Helem and Hem are the same with Holdai and Josias. M.—The Jews say Hem or Daniel, and his three companions, brought gifts. S. Jer.

Ver. 15. Off. Many Jews now assisted in the building, coming from all parts. The temple was thus finished in four years time; whereas Solomon, with all his riches and workmen, spent seven in building one. C.

ZACHARIAS 7

Ver. 1. Casleu, in our November or December. C.

Ver. 2. And. Sept. from; (S. Jer.) or, “to Bethel sent Sarasar and Arbесesar, the king and his men, to render the face of the Lord propitious.” H.—These were Persian governors under Darius, (S. Jer.) or Cutheans, (Theod.) or Jews, at a distance from the temple, though in the country. M.—But they seem rather to be some who had not returned. C.

Ver. 3. The fifth month. They fasted on the tenth day of the fifth month; because on that day the temple was burnt. Therefore they inquire whether they are to continue that fast after the temple is rebuilt. See this query answered v. 19 of the following chapter. Ch.—The third of the seventh month (v. 5) was also a fast, on account of the death of Godolias, (C.) during the captivity. 4 K. 25:8. 25. W.—Sept. “Has the sanctification entered hither in the fifth month, as they (or I) have done?” &c. H.—Fasting and lamentation are styled sanctification, because they promote it; curatos quoque sanctificat; (S. Jer.) if the proper conditions be observed. H.

Ver. 5. Years, from the ruin of the temple till the fourth of Darius.—Unto me? Did you grieve for the injury done to me; or was your sorrow caused by your own loss? The prophet gives not a direct answer; but sufficiently shews that exterior works of themselves are of little value. Whether the Jews entered into his sentiments or not, they still observe these fasts, though he said they should be changed into days of rejoicing. C. 8:19. C.—The fast was good, but imperfect, wanting works of charity. S. Greg. W.

Ver. 6. Yourselves, to gratify the senses more than from necessity, and without doing it for God's glory. H.

Ver. 7. Prophets. He alludes to Is. 58:3. See also Jer. 14:12. Joel 2:12. The Jews were always too much attached to the letter, without minding the spirit of the law, being zealous for corporal rather than for spiritual works.—South. Several of these cities were occupied by the Idumeans.—Plain, or Sephala, which afterwards became flourishing and populous. C.

Ver. 9. Judgment. Avoid sinning, when you fast. W.

Ver. 10. Devise. Sept. "wickedly remember in your hearts each one the evil of his brother." H.

Ver. 11. Depart, so to leave the burden on their partner. Heb. C.—Lit. "giving way;" recedentem. Sixt. V. recedentes. Sept. "they gave a contemptuous back," (H.) like a slave, whom the whip cannot correct.

Ver. 12. As, &c. Heb. "of Samir;" a stone used to polish jewels. Sept. "disobedient."

Ver. 13. So shall. It seems the past time would be preferable; as Theodoret, S. Cyr. &c. understand it. C.—Yet the Jews, whom the prophet addressed, were also reprehensible; and they or their posterity felt the effects of God's indignation, when he scattered them throughout the world, as we see at present. Sept. have the future; but Prot. the past tense, "they cried," &c. H.

ZACHARIAS 8

Ver. 2. Jealous for her, treating her as a spouse, (C.) and not neglecting her as one incorrigible. H.

Ver. 3. Truth. Idols and infidelity shall reign there no more. The Jews were more faithful after the captivity. But the Church of Christ is alone perfectly chaste. C.

Ver. 6. Days. If no prospect of such happiness now appear, is any thing difficult to Omnipotence? H. Lu. 1:37.

Ver. 7. Sun, from Chaldea and the islands. This chiefly regards the Christian Church. C.—Assyria and Chaldea lay to the north. The promises are too great for the synagogue. W.

Ver. 8. Justice. I will fulfil my promises, if they adhere to virtue. C.

Ver. 10. Hire, or “reward;” merces. H.—All their toils proved useless: (C.) the land would not yield her fruit. H. See Agg. 2:16.—The temple had now been building two years, and then God sent his prophets and many blessings.—Neighbour. Civil broils and the enemy rendered all wretched. 1 Esd. 4.

Ver. 13. Blessing. As the nations could wish no greater curse than what you have experienced, so you shall now be regarded as a most happy people.

Ver. 16. Of peace, or perfect. Shew no partiality.

Ver. 17. Friend means every neighbour, or all mankind. Lu. 10:27. 36. Even thoughts must be guarded. C.

Ver. 19. Fast. They fasted on the ninth day of the fourth month, because on that day Nabuchodonosor took Jerusalem. Jer. 52:6. On the tenth day of the fifth month, because on that day the temple was burnt. Jer. 52:12. On the third day of the seventh month, for the murder of Godolias. Jer. 41:2. And on the tenth day of the tenth month, because on that day the Chaldeans began to besiege Jerusalem. 4 K. 25:1. All these fasts, if they will be obedient for the future, shall be changed (as is here promised) into joyful solemnities. Ch.—They had only inquired about the fasts of the fifth and seventh months but the two others were also to be omitted in times of joy. W.—The Jews still observe all four. Basnage v. 16.—They fast on the seventeenth of the fourth month, because the breach was then made in the walls, (C.) and Moses broke the tables of the law, according to the Jews, in S. Jer. The ninth of the fifth month is also kept instead of the tenth, on which day the city was taken by the Chaldees; (C.) and the Romans burnt the temple in the same month, as the Israelites had then formerly been sentenced to wander in the desert. S. Jer.—It would be difficult for the Jews to prove all these assertions.

Ver. 22. Lord. Many were converted in the days of Esther, (8:17) and the Pharisees were eager to make proselytes in all parts, when Christ preached. Mat. 23:15. Acts 2:11. Yet we must go to the Church to see this fully accomplished. C.

Ver. 23. Ten men, &c. Many of the Gentiles became proselytes to the Jewish religion before Christ; but many more were converted to Christ by the apostles and other preachers of the Jewish nation. Ch.—Skirt, or hem, by which the Jews were distinguished. Num. 15:38. Mat. 9:20. C.

ZACHARIAS 9

Ver. 1. Burden. Preaching of the truth is disagreeable to infidels, and light to the faithful. W.—Hadrach; Syria, (Ch.) or a city near Damascus, on which it rested. The victories of Alexander and of the Machabees are here described. The former defeated the Arabs near Damascus, (which was betrayed to Parmenio) and having gained the victory at Issus, became master of Celosyria, of which he made Parmenio governor. C.—Rest. Sept. “his sacrifice, for the Lord looks on men and on all the tribes of Israel.” H.—He wished for the conversion of all, and those who turn to him are not rejected. S. Jer.

Ver. 2. Emath, or Emesa, not far from Damascus. C.—It shall also fall a prey to Alexander. H.—Tyre was become again very rich and strong, (C.) and gloried in its wisdom; yet was taken after a long and obstinate resistance (H.) of seven months, when the inhabitants were slain or sold, the city demolished, and the ships sunk. Curt. iv. Usher, A. 3672.—Sidon made no resistance, as it hated the Persians. Yet Strabo was forced to resign the throne to Abdolonymus, (Arian ii. Just. xi.) which indicates some opposition. C.

Ver. 5. Ascalon was ruined. The other cities opened their gates, as Jerusalem did. Jos. Ant. xi. ult.—Batis alone resolved to defend Gaza. He was dragged round the city when it was taken, after a siege of two months; the inhabitants were slaughtered or sold, and others brought in their stead. Curt. iv. Diod. Oly. cxii.

Ver. 6. Divider. Heb. mamzer; “bastard,” or rather “stranger.” It is reported that Alexander was the illegitimate son of Nestabanes, whom Olympius took for Jupiter. Plut. Just. xi.—But these might be popular reports. The sequel seems to shew that the Jews, &c. occupied the towns of the Philistines under the Machabees. Chal. Grot. C.—The divider may denote any conqueror. M.

Ver. 7. His blood. It is spoken of the Philistines, and particularly of Azotus, (where the temple of Dagon was) and contains a prophecy of the conversion of that people from their bloody sacrifices and abominations to the worship of the true God. Ch.—Many pagans devoured the victims raw, and drank the blood of their enemies. These marks of cruelty and superstition shall cease when they adopt the law of Moses. Gen. 9:4. Lev. 7:26 and 17:11.—Governor, or city of a thousand: (C.) Heb. alup. Mic. 5:2. H.—Jebusite. They probably embraced the faith with Areuna. 2 K. 24:16. The city was formerly styled Jebus. The towns of the Philistines shall not be distinguished from the rest, under the dominion of Juda. See 1 Mac. 5:66 and 10:78. C.

Ver. 8. War; the Machabees. Ch.—They stood up like a wall for the people and the temple. C.—Heb. “my house, on account of those going,” &c. I will protect it better than an army. H.—After the Machabees, God preserved the temple from profanation till he abandoned it after the death of Christ. C.—Yet Pompey penetrated into the most holy place, and Crassus plundered the treasury. Both felt the effects of their impiety, and had no farther success.—Oppressor; tax-gatherer, (H.) sent by foreign tyrants. M.—Till the Machabees, particularly Hircan, (C.) or Simon, his father, (H.) threw off the yoke, the Jews were always subject (C.) either to the Persians, to Syria, or to Egypt. H.—Hircan’s son, Aristobulus, took the title king, and governed in peace. C.

Ver. 9. King. Christ often came to Jerusalem; but his last entrance, to die for man’s redemption, was most excellent. W.—If the Jews had not wilfully blinded themselves, they could not mistake Him, as he is here so minutely described, possessing the most humble and the noblest qualities. Not knowing how to reconcile them, they feign one Messias glorious and another poor and despised; while others admit only of one, and reject either the abject or the exalted things which the prophets have spoken of him. The Church alone can reconcile these apparent contradictions in our Saviour’s character. After predicting what would befall the Jews till about one hundred years before the birth of Christ, the prophet turns to Him who was the desire and comfort of the nation. C.—Saviour. Heb. Noshah, (H.) or Jesus. S. Jer. —Poor; or meek, as S. Matthew quotes it, after the Sept. and Chal. M. —They have read v for i, as hani (H.) means poor. C.—Prot. “lowly,” which may signify devoid of riches, or of pride.—Ass. Sept. “yoked animal, and upon a young foal." H.—The former denotes the Jews.

Ver. 10. Chariot. Arms shall be useless. Mic. 5:10.—Earth. This can be understood only of Christ's kingdom, (C.) though it alludes to the greatest limits of the promised land. H.

Ver. 11. Water; from limbo, (S. Jer. &c. W. S. Tho. iii. p. q. 52. a. 1. C.) and purgatory. See S. Aug. de Gen. xii. 23. & ep. 99. M.—Christ delivered the ancient patriarchs by virtue of his covenant, just sealed with his blood. Heb. at present reads, "and as for thee, Sion, by the blood of thy covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners," &c. delivering the Hebrews out of Egypt by the paschal lamb. Chal. But this text is suspected, as S. Jerom remarks no variation.

Ver. 12. Hold. Return ye, who stay behind, to Jerusalem. God will make good all that you abandon; or come, Judas has procured liberty for the people. 1 Mac. 4:36. C.—Embrace the gospel, and enter the Church. M.

Ver. 13. Juda: the Machabees. S. Jer.—Filled, or stretched the bow of Ephraim. C.—The people shall act with vigour and union. H.—Sons; viz. the apostles, who, in the spiritual way, conquered the Greeks, and subdued them to Christ. Ch.—The Machabees repressed the insolence of the Seleucides, who were of Greek extraction.

Ver. 14. Seen. God miraculously interposed in favour of the Machabees, and his angels appeared at their head. 1 Mac. 2:22 and 5:2. and 10:29. and 11:8. and 15:15. A handful of men thus routed vast armies, and asserted their independence, avenging religion and the state, which they restored to greater splendour.—South, whence storms usually arise in that country. Job 37:9. The angels confounded the enemy. 1 Mac. 10:30.

Ver. 15. Sling. At first the Machabees had no other weapon. 1 Mac. 4:6. The sling was much used. Judg. 20:16.—Wine. They will shed blood of the enemy so abundantly, and be all besmeared with it. They would never drink it, like the pagans. Lev. 17:10. C.

Ver. 16. Holy stones; the apostles, who shall be as pillars and monuments in the Church. Ch.—The Machabees are like a wall. They restore the altar of holocausts, built of fresh stones. 1 Mac. 4. C.

Ver. 17. The corn, &c. His most excellent gift is the blessed Eucharist, called here the corn, that is, the bread of the elect, and the wine springing forth virgins, that is, maketh virgins to bud, or spring forth as it were like flowers among thorns, because it has a wonderful efficacy to give and preserve purity. Ch.—It enables the weak to despise all things for the sake of virtue, and makes them fruitful and eloquent, as the original implies. C.—Sept. “a fragrant wine for virgins.” H.—Christ is the grain of wheat, which dying, brings forth much fruit, (Jo. 12) and “of this wheat that bread is made which came from heaven.” Jo. 6. S. Jer. W.—“How shall not they have joy, who being inebriated with the cup of our Saviour, are made virgins?” This was partly verified in the days of the Machabees, to whom plenty was granted. S. Jer. H.—Those who partake worthily of the blessed Eucharist, become strong and pure. M.—Prot. “corn shall make the young men cheerful, (marginal note: grow, or speak) and new wine the maids.” H.

ZACHARIAS 10

Ver. 1. Snows. Prot. “Bright clouds,” or “lightnings.” H.—God will presently grant your requests, after the persecution of Epiphanes. C.—The latter season is when fruit ripens, the acceptable time to sue for grace. W.

Ver. 2. Vanity. Jason prevailed on many to imitate the Gentiles. 1 Mac. 1:12.

Ver. 3. Goats; the leaders of the people. Jer. 50:8. C.—Vir gregis ipse caper. Virg. Ec. 7.—Jason died in exile, Lysimachus was slain in the temple, Alcimus perished miserably, and Menelaus was hurled among ashes. 2 Mac. 5:5 and 4:39. and 13:4. and 1 Mac. 9:54.—Battle. The apostates have suffered: God will not abandon his flock, but raises up Mathathias, &c.

Ver. 4. Corner, to connect the building. The Machabees were not of the tribe of Juda; but it was the chief, and gave name to the rest. Judas was also a figure of Christ, the chief corner-stone, and he should be born of that tribe.—Pin, to fasten down the tent, or to hang things upon. These comparisons were not deemed mean, 1 Esd. 9:8. and Is. 22:23.—Exactor. The term may have a good as well as a bad sense. Taxes must be paid for the support of lawful governments. Judas forced other nations to pay tribute. C.—The same term in Ethiopia, means “a king.” De Dieu.

Ver. 5. Riders. The Syrians, with (H.) all their cavalry, were routed by a few ill-armed infantry. C.

Ver. 6. Joseph. All the tribes shall embrace the gospel at last. W.—Back, from the caverns to which they had fled.

Ver. 7. Valiant. Ephraim was a powerful and valiant tribe. Deut. 33:17. C.

Ver. 8. Whistle. Christians are sweetly drawn by inspirations, without clamorous words. S. Cyr. W.—This expression shews the sovereign dominion of God. C.—Sept. “I will give them a sign.” H.

Ver. 9. Me. The Jews were spread throughout the world, and adhered to their own customs. Philo. See Acts 2:8.—While they enjoyed the greatest prosperity, they kept together in a small territory. It is wonderful how they have since increased.

Ver. 10. For them. They returned from the places to which they had been dispersed during former wars, when Judas had liberated his country. C.

Ver. 11. Sea. The Jews pretend that the Bosphorus’ straits were dried up, to afford them a passage. S. Jer.—But they must produce some stronger text to prove such a miracle. No obstacles shall be able to retard God’s people. Is. 11:16.—Assyria. After Epiphanes, the kingdom subsisted only about seventy years.—Egypt. The Ptolemies excluded the natural princes, who have never regained the throne. They who had so often disturbed the Jews, were deprived of their power over them by the Syrians, and never could prevail there again after the Machabees. C.—When the faithful are confirmed in their religion, the enemy cannot hurt them. W.

ZACHARIAS 11

Ver. 1. Gates. Josephus (Bel. vii. 12.) relates, that the heavy eastern gates flew open at midnight: and the priests officiating at Pentecost, heard a multitude crying, “Let us go hence.” See Tacit. Hist. v. Johanan then declared, “O temple, I know thou wilt so be destroyed,” as Zac. foretold, Open, &c. Kimchi, Lyr. &c. C.—Libanus. So Jerusalem, and more particularly the temple, is called by the prophets, from its height, and from its being built of the cedars of Libanus. Ch. Is. 10:34. Ezech. 17. S. Jer.—The destruction of both by Titus is predicted. W.—Cedars. Thy princes and chief men. Ch. W.

Ver. 2. Fir and oak may signify the cities and towns of the Jews.—Fenced. Sept. “well planted,” (C.) or “forest, planted all at once.” H.—“The temple was like a fortress.” Tacit.

Ver. 3. Pride, or farther banks, covered with shrubs, among which lions dwelt. Jer. 50:44. C.

Ver. 4. Feed, thou Zacharias; (M.) or the prophet announces what God will do.—Slaughter, whom Herod and his successors, the Zealots, Eleazar, Simon, and John, so cruelly oppressed and brought to ruin. C.

Ver. 6. Hand. This alludes to the last siege of Jerusalem, in which the different factions of the Jews destroyed one another, and they that remained fell into the hands of their king, (that is, of the Roman emperor) of whom they had said, (Jo. 14:15.) We have no king but Cæsar. Ch.—The besieged slew each other daily, so that Vespasian did not hurry. Jos. Bel. v. 2. and vi. 1.

Ver. 7. For this. Christ came to feed his flock. C.—But the Jews would not receive him. H.—Sept. read (C.) locnani, as v. 11, “of slaughter into Chanaan, and I,” &c. H.—Two rods, or shepherds’ staves, meaning the different ways of God’s dealing with his people; the one by sweet means, called the rod of Beauty, the other by bands and punishments, called the Cord. And where both these rods are made of no use or effect by the obstinacy of sinners, the rods are broken, and such sinners are given up to a reprobate sense, as the Jews were. Ch.—The first denotes God’s general providence, as it is most seemly that all should be under him; the second means his particular care of the Jews. W.—God uses both the crook and the whip, employing both severity and tenderness. Now all proves in vain.

Ver. 8. Month. That is, in a very short time. By these three shepherds probably are meant the latter princes and high priests of the Jews, whose reign was short. Ch.—Ismael, Joseph, and Ananus, all obtained the dignity in one year; and as they and their predecessors were actuated by avarice, they could not fail being displeasing to God. Galba, Otho, and Vitellius were likewise cut off in little more than a year, when Vespasian succeeded, and his son took Jerusalem. C.—The Jews pretend that Moses, Aaron, and Mary are here meant. S. Jer.—But what reference can the prophet have to them?

Ver. 9. Not feed. This is the final sentence. God allowed them thirty-seven years to repent, after the death of Christ.

Ver. 10. All people. Hereupon all fell upon the Jews.

Ver. 11. Poor converted to Christ, (C.) who retired to Pella, (Eus. Hist. iv. 5.) as they had been warned of the impending storm. Mat. 24:1. Lu. 21:20.

Ver. 12. Pieces. Sicles are usually understood. About fifty-one livres. The Jews bought the life of Christ for this sum; (C.) thirty pieces. W.

Ver. 13. The statuary. The Heb. word signifies also a potter, (Ch.) and this seems to be the true meaning. Mat. 27:3. The prophet is ordered to bring, thus to indicate what should be done by the traitor. C.—Sept. “cast them into the crucible to see if it (the metal) be good, as I have been tried by them.” H.

Ver. 14. Israel. The latter remained obstinate, (C.) while Juda, the real “confessor,” (H.) embraced the gospel. After the destruction of the temple, the Jewish ceremonies were no longer (C.) observed or tolerated in the Church, as they had been, in order that the synagogue might be buried with honour. S. Aug. H.—The Jews are rejected. W.

Ver. 15. A foolish shepherd. This was to represent the foolish, that is, the wicked princes and priests that should rule the people, before their utter destruction. Ch.—Caligula, Claudius, or Nero, monsters of stupidity, may also be meant. To such the Jews preferred to submit: but they soon found out their mistake, when it was too late. Caligula and Nero would be adored in the temple!

Ver. 16. Hoofs, with excessive travelling. C.—They shew no pity, but are wholly intent on their own pleasures. H.

Ver. 17. Shepherd. Sept. “ye who feed foolish things, forsaking,” &c. H.—Heb. “shepherd of nothing.”—Darkened. Caligula was slain, and had not sense to know what was for this real interest. His wife and only daughter were murdered. See Jos. Ant. xix. 1. Suet.—His maxim was, “Let them hate, provided they fear;” and he wished the Romans had “all but one neck,” that he might cut it off. C.—Antichrist, the destroyer, shall perish. W.

ZACHARIAS 12

Ver. 2. A lintel of surfeiting. That is, a door into which they shall seek to enter, to glut themselves with blood: but they shall stumble, and fall like men stupified with wine. It seems to allude to the times of Antiochus, and to the victories of the Machabees. Ch.—Yet it indirectly relates to the last siege of Jerusalem, and to Jesus Christ establishing his Church. Heb. “a cup of drowsiness,” or trembling. C.—Sept. “as courts (or thresholds; προθυρα) shaken.” H.—Jerusalem first drank the cup herself; and then under the Machabees, made others suffer.—Juda. Never before Epiphanes had the Jews fought against their brethren. Then the apostates became most terrible. 1 Mac. 1:55 and 2:7, 19. C.—Thus none persecute the Catholic faith more than those who have perfidiously abandoned it. H.—When the gospel began to be preached, the obstinate Jews opposed it. Acts 4. &c. W.

Ver. 3. Stone. It was customary to have such huge stones for people to try their strength. S. Jer.—Ruptures and wounds were frequently the consequence. Eccli. 6:22. The nations which attacked God's people, paid dear for their victory. C.—All fight against the Church; (M.) yet she prevails. H.

Ver. 4. Blindness. The cavalry of the Syrians proved useless against a few (C.) champions under God's protection. H.

Ver. 5. Let. Sept. "We shall find for us the inhabitants of Jerusalem, in the Lord Almighty, their God." H.—Judas always exhorted his men to trust in the Lord. 1 Mac. 3:18. C.—Mocbai, the initials of "who is like thee among the strong, (Alim) O Lord," (Ex. 15:11. H.) is supposed to have been his motto, (C.) written on his banners; and some assert, that it occasioned the appellation of Machabee. H.—"Strengthen for me." Aquila.

Ver. 6. Furnace. Sept. "firebrand among wood, and as a burning lamp amid straw." H.—Left. The Samaritans shall fall as well as the Idumeans.—Place. The temple and city had been deserted, while the troops of Epiphanes occupied the citadel. 1 Mac. 3:45 and 4:38.

Ver. 7. David. The Machabees were not of this family, but Levites, born at Modin, in Ephraim. C.

Ver. 8. Hath. Sept. "is weak."—Offended. Such shall repent and be pardoned, like David. H.—They shall imitate his valour. The posterity of David shall no more cause the people to go stray.—Of God. He seems to allude to Christ's birth. David's offspring shall not ascend the throne; but their virtue shall be conspicuous; they shall give birth to Jesus, Mary, and Joseph. C.

Ver. 10. Prayers. Sept. and Chal. "pity." H.—After the Machabees more synagogues were erected, and the people were more faithful; yet this chiefly regards the new law, in which the spirit prays with us ineffably. Rom. 8:26. C.—Me. So far the prophet speaks in Christ's name. He afterwards relates how the people will grieve for him, beating their breasts. Lu. 23:48. This was clearly verified in Christ. John 19:31. M.—But in the gospel we read, him whom they have pierced, as the context seems here to require. H.—Some Hebrew copies read in like manner, (C.) the Erfurth MS. 2. having aliu, "on him," though Michaelis remarks not this important variation. The Jewish transcriber would not alter his text to make it conformable to the New Testament. Kennicott—Sept. “they shall look upon me for having insulted,” or skipped. C.—Yet “S. John did not much regard what the Greek contained, but interpreted word for word as he had read in Hebrew,” as the other sacred writers did when there was any material difference. S. Jerom, quoted by Kennicott. Dis. ii. p. 347, &c. H.—Adopting this reading, we may explain this of Judas, whom the people greatly bewailed. 1 Mac. 9:20. He was a figure of Christ, whom the prophet had chiefly in view. All the Jews who embraced the faith verify this prediction, (C.) as those particularly did who had been instrumental to the death of our Saviour, and afterwards entered into themselves. Acts 2:37. Both Jews and Gentiles have all contributed by their sins to crucifying their Lord; and, at the last day, all shall look on him as their judge or as their deliverer.—Pierced. Heb. dakaru. H.—Sept. have transposed d and r, which are very similar, and read rokdu, “have danced,” or derided. S. Jer.—The original implies, have outraged or blasphemed, as well as pierced. They shall henceforward cease to despise God and his law. C.

Ver. 11. Adadremmon. A place near Mageddon, where the good king Josias was slain, and much lamented by his people. Ch.—It was not far from Jezrahel. 2 Par. 35. The lamentation for Josias represents that of impenitent sinners at the day of judgment. S. Jer. W.—Sept. translate the proper names, “of the pomegranate which is cut down in the field.” H.—All from v. 8 may be explained of Judas.

Ver. 12. Apart. Bands of men and of women mourning, went with musical instruments separately through the streets, and into the country; as they still do in the East. C.—On such occasions, as well as in times of prayer, continence is observed. S. Jer.

Ver. 13. Nathan. Zorobabel was his descendant.—Semei, the son of Gershom. 1 Par. 6:16. C.—“From this tribe the doctors are chosen.” S. Jer.—The pious of all ranks bewail the death of Christ, and the share which they had in it. H.—He had done good to many; and therefore we may presume that many would grieve in every tribe. M.

ZACHARIAS 13

Ver. 1. Fountain. In the New Testament Christ is made an open fountain by his incarnation. John 4:13. S. Greg. xx. in Ezech. i. 6. ep. 186. W.—His baptism and other sacraments have the most surprising effects, to which the prophet refers more than to those waters which were brought by pipes into the temple to cleanse the victims. Ezech. 47:1. C.—The washing. Sept. “change and sprinkling.” Grabe substitutes χωρισμὸν, “separation,” and marks the verse with an asterisk. The legal impurities shall be effaced. H.

Ver. 2. No more. After the Machabees, the people were free from idolatry, and magical arts were repressed. Osee 2:16. Ezech. 37:22. C.—“Idolatry and heresy are punishable by death, in the law of Christ.” W.—To judge in these matters belongs only to the Church. H.

Ver. 3. Not live. The law condemned those prophets to death, who attempted to lead the people into idolatry. Deut. 13:1. People shall be so zealous for God’s honour, that the parents of the seducer shall themselves (C.) bring him to judgment. H.—Through, or make some mark upon him, as fugitive slaves, &c. were stigmatized. C.—Sept. “shall shackle.” H.—These before interpreted dakar, danced, or insulted. The others have in both places, “pierced.” S. Jer.—The person was not slain. v. 6.

Ver. 4. Vision. They shall have no appearance of truth.—Sackcloth. Heb. “hairy skin;” adereth. Such were used by kings. Jon. 3:6. The people shall not be deceived by such appearances, so that these garments will not be used. The Jews have always been ready to receive impostors. Mat. 7:15. Yet they shall not be so frequent, or dangerous. The prophets used coarse hairy garments. 4 K. 1:8.

Ver. 5. Husbandman. Worldly occupations were incompatible with the office of prophets. 3 K. 19:20. Amos 7:15. Mat. 4:20. The (C.) false (H.) prophets will become so odious, that people will excuse themselves from taking up the calling.—Example. I am condemned like him to labour. Gen. 3:17. Sept. “a man begot me.” Heb. “taught, or bought me, (C.) or caused me to work.” De Dieu.

Ver. 6. Loved me. My parents marked me thus. v. 3. C.—Some have understood this of Jesus Christ. Rupert. S. Tho.—But the context excludes this interpretation, which would be injurious to him. C.—The false prophet is reformed by his parents' correction, so that he applies to agriculture, and owns that he had been justly punished. S. Jer. H.

Ver. 7. Sword. This address rouses attention. C.—The sword implies all the torments which Christ endured. W.—He explains this of himself; only instead of strike, he says I will strike, (Mat. 26:31) as the sword was directed by God. H.—Patris voluntate percussus est. S. Jer.—Cleaveth. Heb. hamithi, “my amiable one;” (H.) “of the same tribe with me;” (Aq.) “of my people.” Sym. S. Jerom observes, that Sept. and Th. have read v for the last i, and render “his neighbour,” or citizen. Yet some editions of the Sept. retain “my fellow-citizen.” H.—Little ones. Sept. Arab. &c. “shepherds,” (C.) which “many ill apply to the Jewish princes.” S. Jer.—Tsoharim means also “the little.” Mic. 5:2. Christ takes care of his little flock, (Lu. 12:32. H.) and is always one with the Father. Jo. 8:29 and 10:30. C.—He recalled the flying apostles, and gave them courage. W.

Ver. 8. Third. The greatest part of mankind will be lost. H.—The few Jews who embrace the faith will be absorbed in the Gentile converts, and suffered to live, though proved by persecutions, while the rest shall be exterminated. Both shall lose their name, and be styled Christians. C.—Those who adhere to Judaism, or to paganism, cannot be saved. This is the privilege only of Christian Catholics, who live piously, and are selected by God's grace. W.

Ver. 9. Fire. The Church was persecuted during the first centuries; but always became more pure, and the blood of martyrs increased her numbers. C.—She faithfully adhered to God. H.—The Jews say this will not take place at last: “but we assert that it is already accomplished.” S. Jer.

ZACHARIAS 14

Ver. 1. Midst. The obstinate Jews shall be destroyed. They became their own enemies. C.—The Zealots committed the greatest excesses during the siege. Jos. Bel. v. 1.—Tacitus also refers to these transactions, having written thirty volumes on the Cæsars, from Augustus to Domitian's death.” S. Jer.

Ver. 2. I will gather, &c. This seems to be a prophecy of what was done by Antiochus, (Ch.) or of the last siege, (W.) by the Romans. S. Jer. Theod. Eus. Dem. vi. 18. C.—Vespasian collected numerous forces. Jos. Bel. iii. 1.—Titus had six legions and many auxiliaries, Arabs, &c.

Tacit. Hist. v.—Various nations composed their army. W.—Rifled, or demolished. None was left standing. Jos. B. vii. 6. Heges. v. 49.—S. Jerom and others think that the city on Sion was spared, (C.) and 40,000 were permitted to dwell where they had a mind. Jos. B. vii. 15.—But it is not said that they continued at Jerusalem. Half the Jews therefore perished, and those who maintained the siege found a grave in the city. Theod.—Half only denotes a considerable part, as v. 8. Those who followed our Saviour's admonition, retired before, and were safe (C.) at Pella. C. 10:11. Sept. "the rest of my people shall not be destroyed out of the city."

Ver. 3. Shall. Sept. "will stand in battle array among," &c. (παραιταζεται εν) though he will one day punish the victorious Romans. H.—Now he fought with them as Heb. may signify. C.—Various prodigies made this clear: (Jos. B. vii. 12. 16.) so that Titus would not receive the crown which was presented to him, as he looked upon himself only as the instrument employed by divine justice. Philost. vi. 14.—This sense is given by S. Cyr. &c. C.—In the days of Epiphanes, God defeated his projects. H.

Ver. 4. Olives. Here the tenth legion was stationed, (Jos. B. vi. 3.) on the spot where Christ had denounced this judgment, and ascended into heaven. Lu. 19:41. Acts 1:12.—South. We cannot shew the literal accomplishment. If it regard the latter times, this must be hidden. But it suffices that some great earthquake should take place, according to most interpreters; or rather, (C.) the Romans removed vast quantities of earth and stone. Jos. B. vi. 12. Grot.—Olivet has three tops; the southern one is the lowest. But whether this was caused by an earthquake we know not. The rocks are said to split, &c. when God displays his power and affords some miraculous assistance. Ps. 17:8. Is. 24:8. Hab. 3:10.

Ver. 5. Flee. While the siege was forming many escaped, according to Josephus. Heb. Sept. &c. "The vale of my mountain shall be filled up, for," &c. C.—Yet Prot. agree with us. H.—Those should be "my." Ribera. M.—The next. Prot. and Sept. "reach unto Azal." H.—You shall. Sept. &c. "and it shall be filled, as it was filled at the earthquake," &c. C.—The Romans had to raise many works in the vale of Cedron, so that the trees all round were cut down, and the garden walls removed thither. Jos. B. vi. 4. 14.—Ozias, when he attempted to offer incense. Jos. Ant. ix. 11. Amos 1:1 and 4 K. 15:15.—Yet the earthquake is not specified in the sacred historical books. W.—On that occasion, the people retired into the vale formed by the separation of Olivet; or, if we follow the Sept. part of that mountain fell into the valley of Cedron, which we find nowhere else specified. C.—With him. Prot.

“thee.” H.—God is attended by his angels; though the Romans may be called his saints, or people destined to execute his decrees in this war. Is. 13:3. Soph. 1:7. Deut. 33:3. Joel 3:1. C.

Ver. 6. No light; viz. in that dismal time of the persecution of Antiochus, when it was neither day nor night, (v. 7) because they neither had the comfortable light of the day, nor the repose of the night. Ch.—Darkness denotes distress. The citizens shall be in despair. Mat. 24:29. Ezech. 22:8. Joel 2:2. Apoc. 11:2. Heb. seems to be corrupt: “no precious light, but thick,” or a cloud. C.

Ver. 7. In the time of the evening there shall be light. An unexpected light shall arise by the means of the Machabees, when things shall seem to be at the worst. Ch.—At one period of the last siege, it was dubious what would be the event, particularly (C.) when Titus was separated from almost all his attendants, and when the besieged burned the works of the enemy. Jos. B. vi. 2. and 12.

Ver. 8. Living waters; viz. the gospel of Christ. Ch.—Last: Mediterranean. H.—The prophet now turns to the figurative Jerusalem. The earthly city was not well supplied with water. C.—It was in the most dry and barren part of the country. S. Jer. in Is. xlix. —As much as the Mediterranean excels the Dead Sea, so much do the Gentiles surpass the Jewish converts in numbers. See C. 13:1. C.—The true faith is Catholic in all places, and at all times. W.

Ver. 9. One Lord. The apostles justly gave this title to Christ. Jo. 13:14. He is possessed of all power. Mat. 28:18. Phil. 2:10. Pastors are all subject to him. C.—The Pope styles himself, “servant of the servants of God,” since S. Gregory’s time. H.

Ver. 10. Return. This in some measure was verified by means of the Machabees; but is rather to be taken in a spiritual sense, as relating to the propagation of the Church and kingdom of Christ, the true Jerusalem, which alone shall never fall under the anathema of destruction, or God’s curse. Ch.—The limits of Jerusalem were never so extensive.—Hill, or Gabaa to Remmon,” or the pomegranate. The situation is not ascertained.

Ver. 11. Anathema. It shall not be sentenced to utter ruin. The Church may suffer losses, but cannot perish. C.

Ver. 12. Consume. Such judgments as these have often fallen upon the persecutors of God’s Church, as appears by many instances in history. Ch.—This has partly been verified in persecuting emperors, (S. Jer.) and in others, and will befall the wicked when the day of judgment shall draw near. W.—Herod, who made war on Christ, and Agrippa, who attacked his Church, (C.) were both devoured by worms. Jos. Ant. xvii. 9. and xix. 7. Acts 12:13.—Nero slew himself; Maximian was eaten to death by an inward ulcer; and his colleague's (Maximinus) eyes fell from his head. Eus. in Constant. i. 57. and 59.—It would seem as if Zacharias beheld them. He may also speak of the attempts of God, and of Epiphanes. C. 2:8 and 12:9.

Ver. 13. Them. The Church shall be alarmed at these wars, seeing enemies on all sides. But those days shall be shortened. Mat. 24:21.—Hand. Christians shall assist each other; or rather the nearest relations will persecute them. Mat. 10:21. 36. C.

Ver. 14. Even Juda, &c. The carnal Jews, and other false brothers, shall join in persecuting the Church. Ch.—The Jews shewed themselves the most virulent. 2 Cor. 11:24. Acts 8. &c. They insisted on the death of S. Polycarp.—Riches. Converts shewed their generosity so much, (C.) that Julian and Felix, apostates, complained of this profusion in sacred vessels. Theod. Hist. ii. 11. 12.

Ver. 15. Shall be like this destruction. That is, the beasts shall be destroyed as well as the men; the common soldiers as well as their leaders. Ch.—History does not specify the death of cattle, (C.) though in plagues this would inevitably follow; and the pagans complained that they were become more common since the propagation of the gospel. H.—The reverses which the troops of Dioclesian, &c. sustained, were to punish their enmity to religion. C.

Ver. 16. Left. That is, many of them that persecuted the Church shall be converted to its faith and communion, (Ch.) particularly after Constantine. C.—Tabernacles. This feast was kept by the Jews, in memory of their sojourning forty years in the desert, in their way to the land of promise. And in the spiritual sense, is duly kept by all such Christians as in their earthly pilgrimage are continually advancing towards their true home, the heavenly Jerusalem, by the help of the sacraments and sacrifice of the Church. And they that neglect this, must not look for the kind showers of divine grace to give fruitfulness to their souls. Ch.—Out of the Church there is no salvation. C.—Other things may be obtained. S. Cyp. H.—The converts shall celebrate the Christian festivals, and merit great rewards, while infidels shall remain barren and devoid of eternal happiness. W.—We have no solemnity of tabernacles; but Gentiles keep the Epiphany in thanksgiving for their vocation to God's admirable light. 1 Pet 2:9. C.

Ver. 17. There. Sept. "these shall also be added to them" who perish. H.

Ver. 19. Sin, or punishment. Formerly various nations were excluded from the religion or assemblies of Israel. Lev. 22:25. Deut. 23:1. Now all are invited and compelled to enter the Church, so that they can have no excuse. Lu. 14:24. C.—Those rejected by the Jews might still have true faith. H.

Ver. 20. Bridle. The golden ornaments of the bridle, &c. shall be turned into offerings in the house of God. And there shall be an abundance of cauldrons and phials for the sacrifices of the temple; by which is meant, under a figure, the great resort there shall be to the temple, that is, to the Church of Christ, and her sacrifice. Ch.—It is of a different nature, being the body and blood of Christ. But it shall not be confined to one place, nor the priesthood to one family. v. 21. Heb. “they shall inscribe on the stables, Holy,” &c. The most filthy places shall be purified and changed into temples; or, “what is upon the little bells for horses shall be sanctified;” or, on these “bells shall be inscribed, sacred to the Lord.” C.—Metsilloth may signify a bell or bridle, &c. H.—The bits were often of gold. Æn. vii. and viii. C.—S. Jerom’s master said the word should be motsiluth, “trappings” and armour. H.

Ver. 21. Merchant; or, as some render it, the Chanaanite shall be no more, &c. that is, the profane and unbelievers shall have no title to be in the house of the Lord; or, there shall be no occasion for buyers or sellers of oxen, or sheep, or doves, in the house of God, such as Jesus Christ cast out of the temple. Ch. John 2:16.—All former distinction of Jew and Gentile shall cease in the Church. Past faults shall be forgotten. C.

MALACHIAS

THE PROPHECY OF MALACHIAS

INTRODUCTION

Malachias, whose name signifies “the angel of the Lord,” was contemporary with Nehemias, and by some is believed to have been the same person with Esdras. He was the last of the prophets, in the order of time, and flourished about four hundred years before Christ. He foretells the coming of Christ; the reprobation of the Jews and their sacrifices; and the calling of the Gentiles, who shall offer up to God in every place an acceptable sacrifice. Ch.—He also clearly speaks of the twofold coming of Christ, preceded by the Baptist and by Elias. Nothing is known for certain respecting this prophet. He inveighs against the same crimes as Nehemias, to whose covenant he alludes, C. 2:4. None was afterwards recognized for a prophet till the Baptist appeared. C.—Both priests and people are here reprov'd, and the Jewish law yields to that of Christ. W.—No date is prefixed no more than to the works of Jonas, Nahum, &c. S. Jerom seems to fix on the seventh year of Artaxerxes, when Esdras came to Jerusalem. Liber ejus pro titulo sit. H.

MALACHIAS 1

Ver. 1. Malachias, “the angel of the Lord.” S. Jerom always reads Malachi, “my angel.” Sept. “his angel;” whence Origen infers, that this was an angel incarnate. C.

Ver. 2. Loved us. So they thought, (Theod.) and perhaps spoke. H.—Jacob. I have preferred his posterity, to make them my chosen people, and to load them with my blessings, without any merit on their part, and though they have been always ungrateful; whilst I have rejected Esau, and executed severe judgments upon his posterity. Not that God punished Esau or his posterity beyond their deserts, but that by his free election and grace he loved Jacob, and favoured his posterity above their deserts. See the annotations upon Rom. 9. Ch.—Neither deserved any thing. God’s choice was gratuitous, both with respect to the fathers and their offspring. W.

Ver. 3. Esau, perceiving the evil which was already in him, and would appear afterwards; (S. Jer. and Theod.) or rather he was a figure of the reprobate, though not of course one himself. S. Aug.—A person is said to hate what he loves less. Esau’s privileges were transferred to his brother, who enjoyed a much finer country, and was chosen for God’s peculiar inheritance. C.—Temporal blessings are here specified. —Dragons. Sept. “houses;” so that they shall be deserted. H.—Edom was ravaged by Nabuchodonosor. The people retired into the cities, from which the Jews were driven. Yet afterwards they rebuilt their own habitations.

Ver. 4. Down, by the Machabees, who forced the people to receive circumcision. 1 Mac. 5:3. C.—At that time the Jews were more pious, and glorified God. H.—Ever. God's gratuitous love appears in his leaving Edom in captivity, and restoring the Jews. W.

Ver. 6. Father. God sometimes took this title. Ex. 4:31. But he was oftener represented as a master; and the old law was a law of fear. C.—Servant et mertiunt jus. Juv. xiv.

Ver. 7. Bread, including all the victims, &c. Lev. 3:11. Num. 28:2. C.—By vile presents they shew their contempt of God. W.

Ver. 8. Lame. The victims must be without defect. Lev. 22:21. Those of the Jews were also rendered inadmissible by their evil dispositions. Agg. 2:14. It is surprising, that after such scourges they should not have been more upon their guard. The negligence of the sacred ministers, is a sure sign of faith being extinct. C.—Pagans often thus treated thier idols. Clem. Strom. vi.—Prince: the governor sent by the Persians. If you dare not make such presents to men of eminence, how shall I accept them? C.—How dare you offer them to me? W.

Ver. 10. Gratis? Are you not well paid? Why then perform you not your duty exactly? C.—Sept. "Wherefore also among you shall the doors be shut, and my altar is not enkindled for nought," (H.) as if God menaced the Jews with the rejection of the temple, as the sequel does. C.—Pleasure. Many other prophets had foretold the reprobation of the synagogue, but none more plainly. The reason is also assigned, viz. the ingratitude and repeated sins of the people, on which account the Gentiles of all countries shall be chosen. W.

Ver. 11. Sacrifice. Prot. "incense." H.—Clean oblation. The precious body and blood of Christ in the eucharistic sacrifice. Ch.—This is denoted by the very word mincha, the offering of flour and wine. C. See S. Just. dial. S. Iræn. iv. 32. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xviii. 35.—"We pollute this bread, that is the body of Christ, when we approach the altar unworthily." S. Jer. v. 7.—This sacrifice is clean. Trid. xxii. C. i. M.—It is offered daily throughout the world. The Jews see the completion of this prediction, and are vexed; they strive to elude its force. Though enemies, they bear about these proofs of our faith, and of their own condemnation. C.—God not only changed his people, but instituted a better sacrifice. Instead of the former needy elements, (Gal. 4) which were often defiled by the sins of the offerers, He instituted the sacrifice of his own Body and Blood, under the appearance of bread and wine, as S. Chrys. (in Ps. 95.) Theod. &c. prove against all opponents. A sacrifice different from any offered as many have demonstrated. W.—Christ's bloody sacrifice on the cross was performed on Calvary, and not among the Gentiles. What sacrifice can Protestants now produce? H.

Ver. 12. It. The priests complain that Il is burnt, (Grot.) or rather they treat sacred things with contempt. C.—They falsely pretend that they give their best, being poor. M.

Ver. 13. Behold of our labour, &c. You pretended labour and weariness, when you brought your offering; and so made it of no value, by offering it with an evil mind. Moreover, what you offered was both defective in itself, and gotten by rapine and extortion. Ch.—These were two defects. W.—Heb. “what fatigue, or if we change one letter, and read (C.) mothlaé, (H.) it stinks, and you.” &c. Some copies of Sept. Arab. &c. “I blew them away,” with disgust.—Rapine. Eccli. 34:24.—Offering. Mincha, v. 11. C.—Such victims and presents as are lame or strange, are rejected. Pliny viii. 45.

Ver. 14. Male. So better things are styled mascula thura. Virg. Pliny xii. 14.—It was unlawful to offer a female by vow, but not out of devotion. Lev. 22:18. 23. C.—King. So the Persian monarchs were called.—Dreadful. Gr. “Epiphanes.” H.

MALACHIAS 2

Ver. 1. Priests. Such, hoarding up riches, dishonour God and his sacraments, as if they were temporal things to be purchased, and so they scandalize the weak. It would be well for them if they were reduced to poverty, (v. 2) and would repent, as they will otherwise be deprived of eternal goods, having received their wages in this world, like hirelings. John 10. W.

Ver. 2. Blessings, riches. The priests also blessed the people. Num. 6:23. C.

Ver. 3. Shoulder. I will cast away the shoulder, which in the law was appointed to be your portion, and fling it at you in my anger: and will reject both you and your festivals like dung. Ch.—Heb. now reads for shoulder, zerah, “grain,” or seed. C.—“I will menace you with the shoulder, and will spread dirt on your faces, even the dirt of your feasts,” (Aquila) or “the ventricle of your festivals.” Sept. H.

Ver. 4. Levi. When this tribe was chosen does not appear. Some think that he alludes to the renewing of the covenant under Nehemias, which seems best. 2 Esd. 9:1. 38. I then promised you life, &c. C.

Ver. 7. The angel, viz. the minister and messenger. Ch.—Priests must administer the sacraments, and likewise instruct the people, being God’s messengers. W.—The Jews were well acquainted with the law. Jer. 18:18.—The priests had to decide most intricate cases. Deut. 17:9 and 33:9. C.—The sentence of the high priest was received like that of an angel. Diod. Sic. xl. apud Phol.—If such science was required under the old law, how much more is necessary in Christian priests, whose mysteries and duties are so much more important! C.—Ignoratio scripturarum ignoratio Christi est. S. Jer. in Is. & hic.

Ver. 9. People. If priests comply not with these high functions, they are despicable here, and condemned to eternal torments. Jude 11. W.—Accepted. Heb. “raised up faces,” instead of reproving the guilty. Deut. 1:10. Lev. 19:15.

Ver. 10. Brother, in distress. 2 Esd. 5:1. S. Jerom mentions the tradition of the Jews, which supposed that the captives at their return dismissed their wives, and married young ones, though strangers. v. 11. But this is not probable. Such women were ordered to be dismissed. 1 Esd. 9:1. and 2 Esd. 13:23. C.

Ver. 11. God, or one addicted to idol-worship, (H.) which was contrary to the law. Deut. 7:3. C.—Sept. “the holy things of the Lord, by what he has loved and done for strange gods.” H.

Ver. 12. Master. Heb. “the watcher, and him who answers,” on guard. C.—Sept. “doth such things, till he be tumbled out,” &c.—Him. Sept. “and out of those who offer a sacrifice to,” &c. Such people shall be excluded from the society of God’s servants. H.

Ver. 13. With tears; viz. by occasion of your wives, whom you have put away, and who came to weep and lament before the altar. Ch.—Though divorces were tolerated, (Mat. 19:6) the more virtuous did not approve of them, particularly when a wife is put away who had been married in youth. See v. 10. Perhaps this corruption had crept in, like others, (C.) owing to the people’s commerce with strangers. Diod. in Photius.

Ver. 14. Covenant. The order established at first. Gen. 2:24. Prov. 2:17. The parties promised fidelity to each other.

Ver. 15. His spirit. Eve received a soul from God, like Adam. Heb. “One (Abraham, Chal. styled one, Ezec. 33:24) did it not, and he had the,” &c. Sept. vary. The text is very obscure. C. See Cap. Crit. iv. p. 317. Grabe prol.—A strange god did not make women. The human race is best propagated, where polygamy and divorces are rejected. H.

Ver. 16. Garment; viz. of every man that putteth away his wife without just cause; notwithstanding that God permitted it in the law, to prevent the evil of murder. Ch.—The original may receive this sense; or the woman must blame herself if she were hateful, (Deut. 24:1) and the man acted not treacherously. C.—Sept. “iniquity shall cover your thoughts.” H.—It should be “garments,” ενδυματα, though S. Jerom and the printed edit. read ενθυμηματα, (C.) “thoughts.” The first part contains the objection, and the second God’s reply. S. Jer. H.

Ver. 17. Judgment. Being scandalized at the prosperity of the wicked, (H.) they deny Providence. Ps. 72. Jer. 12. C.—Yet the wicked are left for wise purposes, either for their amendment, or for the trial of the just. S. Aug. Ps. liv.—Those who are offended at their present success, (H.) think not of judgment nor of eternal goods. S. Jer.

MALACHIAS 3

Ver. 1. My angel, viz. John the Baptist, the messenger of God, and forerunner of Christ. Ch.—His purity and office procure him this title. W.—Afterwards Christ himself shall come, for the ruin and for the resurrection of many. Lu. 2:34. Hence threats and promises are intermixed. The evangelists read his face, making the Father speak, whereas the Son is introduced by the prophet, who however presently changes the person. It is all the same which person of the blessed Trinity speaks, as all act together. C.—Testament. The Messias, the mediator of the covenant with mankind, (W.) with Abraham, and Moses. The latter calls him the prophet; (Deut. 18:18) and Zacharias, alluding to this text, explains angel in the same sense. Lu. 1:76.—Temple. The ancient Jews were convinced that the Messias would come to the temple of Zorobabel, and be its chief glory. Agg. 2:8. C.—Their descendants put off the coming for some long time, though the prophet says presently, or on a sudden. S. Jer. Basnage vi. 26.—Some take this temple to be the womb of the bless Virgin. S. Cyr. S. Aug. de Civ. Dei. xviii. 35. C.—The Baptist was conceived, born, and preached first; and shortly after Christ appeared. W.

Ver. 2. Coming. This may be explained of the Baptist, (Lu. 3:7) or of the second coming of Christ; though his first coming shewed the hypocrisy of the Jews. They would not acknowledge him, but sought his death, and brought on their own condemnation. C.—Fuller’s. Sept. “washers’ herb.” Borith is found in all the low places of Palestine, (S. Jer.) and probably denotes soda, (Jer. 2:22. C.) or fullers’ earth. H.—

Christ purified the religion of the Jews, or did what was requisite for that purpose. The people would not obey. Yet he established his Church in all purity.

Ver. 3. Justice. This is spoken of the Christian priesthood, which far excels that of Levi, Heb. 5 and 7. &c. C.—Many Jewish priests embraced the gospel. Acts 6:7. H.

Ver. 4. Years. So in the mass we beg that God would receive the sacrifice, “as he received the presents of Abel.” M.

Ver. 5. Judgment. He has answered (v. 1, 2) the complaint of the Jews. C. 2:17. H.—This he does here (M.) more pointedly. H.—Christ condemned the world, as his spirit did likewise. Jo. 16:8. He made an example of Jerusalem, which shewed that he would not leave crimes unpunished. We may also understand this of his last coming. C.—God threatens to punish even secret sins, which are know to him alone. W.

Ver. 6. Change. Heb. also, (H.) “hate or recommence.” I do not strike the fallen. Did I spare Sennacherib? &c. Have I not protected the posterity of Jacob? How then can you say that I am indifferent about human affairs? C.—Consumed. Sept. “you depart not from the sins of your fathers. You have rejected my,” &c.

Ver. 8. Afflict. Lit. “pierce.” Sept. “supplant,” (H.) or kick at. 1 K. 2:29. But the term applied to Heli is different. Here it signifies to nail or irritate. C.—Tithes: the payment is most strictly commanded. W.

Ver. 9. Want. Heb. “malediction.” S. Jerom specifies the kind. C.—Sept. “and you obstinately turn away your eyes, and supplant me,” &c. H.

Ver. 10. Heaven; copious showers.—Blessing; fertility.

Ver. 11. Devour; locusts and other vermin. M.—Malachias came later than Aggeus, and probably speaks of a different famine, to which the Jews were exposed for neglecting to pay tithes. C.—How many now work on holydays, as if all depended on their labour and not on God’s blessing! H.

Ver. 14. Vain. Murmuring against God is blasphemous and unsufferable. When the Jews were punished by famine, for neglecting to pay tithes, they laid the blame on God, as if he took more care of other nations which had abundance. W.—Sorrowful: “humbled.” Chal. “in mourning.” Jun.—But it seems to denote downcast countenances, which our Saviour orders his disciples not to affect. Mat. 6:16. C.

Ver. 15. Proud. Sept. “strange.” H.—Z has been take for u.—Built up: have a numerous family, (C.) and abundance.—Tempted. Sept. “resisted.”

Ver. 16. Then. Grabe changes ταυτα, these things, into τότε, then. The Sept. make the pious express the former sentiments. H.—David, Jeremias, &c. had experienced such anxiety. Ps. 72:2. C.—According to the Heb. &c. the just hearing such blasphemies, doubt not but God will mark them in the book (H.) of his justice, and punish them.

Ver. 17. Possession; (peculium) the property of a slave. C.—Such look upon the smallest things with eagerness. Heb. segula, (H.) means some precious thing. C.—Spare. Sept. “chose,” &c. H.

MALACHIAS 4

Ver. 1. Furnace. At the day of judgment, the difference between the just and the wicked will plainly appear. W.—This sense is most generally given, as well as to those words where our Saviour speaks of the signs of the destruction of Jerusalem and of the end of the world together. Mat. 24:3. Lu. 21:5. Yet the prophet may also allude to the punishment of the Jews by the Romans, when all were assembled at the Passover, (C.) a scourge which the Christians escaped by retiring to Pella. Eus. Hist iii. 5.—Proud. Sept. “strangers.” C.—Branch. No hope shall remain. M.

Ver. 2. Wings. The sun is represented with wings, to imply celerity. The appearance of the Lord will be most acceptable to the virtuous. C.—Look up, for your redemption is at hand. Lu. 21:28.—Herd. Prot. “stall.” Heb. marbek, (H.) “fattened;” though some explain it of oxen treading out corn: they would not however leap, nor fatten so much. C.

Ver. 3. Ashes, burnt in Jerusalem. H.—Christians rejoiced in the execution of divine justice. The Jews were not allowed to approach the new city, Elia. S. Jer.

Ver. 4. Law. This must be your guide and comfort. No more prophets shall appear before the Baptist. C.

Ver. 5. Elias. Sept. add, “the Thesbite;” and S. Jerom (in Mat. xvii.) says, that Elias shall indeed come and restore all things.—Dreadful. Christ’s first coming was in all meekness; but he will judge in terror. Hence the prophet’s meaning is not that S. John, but that Elias shall come before the great day of the Lord. W.—Yet we may understand it of Christ coming into the world to preach, and again to judge. His first coming proved terrible to the perfidious Jews, whose ruin presently ensued. The destruction of Jerusalem was a figure of that which the world shall experience. C.—This shall be preceded by the preaching of Elias. N. Alex. Diss.vi.—This interpretation seems very striking and natural, though the prophet may have had the first coming of Christ and the ruin of the city chiefly in view. Our Saviour testifies that the Elias whom the Jews expected was already come. Mat. 11:14 and 17:11. Lu. 9:8. C.

Ver. 6. Heart, &c. By bringing over the Jews to the faith of Christ, he shall reconcile them to their fathers, viz. the patriarchs and prophets, whose hearts for many ages have been turned away from them, because of their refusing to believe in Christ. C.—The antipathy of Jews and Gentiles shall cease. Both shall enter the Church of Christ. Is. 11:13. The Baptist strove to ameliorate the manners of the people, and to bring all to Christ, who reconciles all seeming contradictions in the Scriptures. He came to put an end to all dissensions. C.—Yet the wicked will still have war. Mat. 10:35. H.—Christ will convert those Jews at last, (Rom. 11:26. C.) who have not yet opened their eyes. Their fathers, the apostles and first converts, have long ago shewn them the example. H.—Anathema. In the Hebrew, cherem, that is, utter destruction. Ch.—Sept. “entirely,” (C.) or “suddenly,” ἀρδην. S. Jer. Deut. 7:26.—This passage intimates that the ruin of Jerusalem is threatened. If people should be converted, would that stop the general conflagration? C.—Some of our crafty adversaries have inferred from the above explanation of anathema, that the Church means heretics to be destroyed: but her kingdom is not of this world: she speaks only of the soul, and exercises a spiritual power. H.

1 MACHABEES

THE FIRST BOOK OF MACHABEES

INTRODUCTION

These Books are so called, because they contain the history of the people of God under the command of Judas Machabeus and his brethren; and he, as some will have it, was surnamed Machabeus from carrying on his ensigns, or standards, those words of Exodus 15:11. "Who is like to thee among the strong, O Lord;" in which the initial letters, in the Hebrew, are M. C. B. E. I. It is not known who was the author of these books. But as to their authority, though they are not received by the Jews, saith S. Augustine, (l. xviii. de civ. Dei. c. xxxvi.) they are received by the Church; who, in settling her canon of the Scriptures, chose rather to be directed by the tradition she had received from the apostles of Christ, than by that of the Scribes and Pharisees. And as the Church has declared these two books canonical, even in two general councils, viz. Florence and Trent, there can be no doubt of their authenticity. Ch.—The most ancient Father, Clem. (Strom. i.) S. Cyprian, (1 ep. iii. ad. Cornel.) S. Ambrose, (Off. i. 41. &c.) quote them as divine; and the third Council of Carthage, Trent, &c. have inserted them in the canon. Though (W.) S. Jerom did not translate (C.) or urge them against the Jews, he had a great regard for them. In Dan. 1 and 11. &c. The texts to which Protestants object, will be explained. They are not more difficult than many which occur in the Books of Kings and Paralipomenon. Other books have been formerly contested, which they now admit. The author of the second books seems to have designed at first only to insert two supplements. He then resolved to abridge the work of Jason, and hence added a preface, (C. ii. 20.) which may be first perused. He then gives an account of some who had suffered death for the truth; and in the eighth and following chapters, the victories of the Machabees, which had been partly recorded in the first book, are specified, with some fresh circumstances. Judas was styled the Machabee for his strength and valour, (W.) being "the scourge" of God, (H.) or because he was an exterminator. M.—Yet the etymology is not well ascertained. That given above, (Zac. 12:5. H.) or M. C. B. I. (Buxt. Prideaux, &c.) seems to be overthrown, by the Syriac having always k instead of c, which is the case in two Chaldee MSS. These may not contain a truer history, but they rectify several mistakes in the printed copies. Kennicott.—S. Jerom found the first of these books in Heb. the second in Greek. Ep. 106. We have a third also in Greek, in the Comp. Bible; as well as a fourth, mentioned by Sixtus, (Bib. i. W.) "on the administration of Hircan," (C.) to which reference seems to be made 1 Mac. 15:24. (W.) though what is extant be a work of no authority. "The empire of reason," falsely attributed to Josephus, and printed among his works, is more probably the fourth book, known to the ancients. Neither of these latter were ever deemed canonical by any authentic decree. W.—Many have indeed ranked the with the other contested works: but now it is generally agreed that they belong not to the sacred Scriptures, as the two former do. On these (C.) indeed, as almost on all the sacred books, (H.) authors have varied: but the most respectable and the most numerous declare in their favour. To arrange the four books in chronological order, we must make the first and third exchange places. This last can obtain its title only inasmuch as the Jews of Alexandria, who were persecuted by Philopator, and miraculously delivered, were animated with the same sentiments of piety and heroism as the rest of the Machabees. C. See Ecclesiasticus 50:1. 21. 23. H.—The authors of the first and second books relate many of the same events; yet seem not to have seen each other's works. The latter follows the Greek chronology, dating from Tisri, Sept. and October, (C.) A. 3828 to 3843, (H.) while the former dates from Nisan, (C.) our March or April, A. 3829 to 3869. The third book gives an account of Philopator's persecution in Egypt, A. 3787. The fourth, A. 3869 to 3698, (H.) is little known among the Latins. Calmet gives two copies, the one regarding Hircan and the other "the government of reason," or the martyrdom of the Machabees, A. 3837; (H.) the author of which last seems to have been a Stoic. C.—We shall pass them over, with Protestants, as they are not received by the Catholic Church. H.

1 MACHABEES 1

Ver. 1. Now. Lit. "And." H.—Thus many Heb. books commence, as Ex. Jos. Bar. &c. C.—Greece, over the whole. He was chosen generalissimo. H.—He conquered many of the Greeks, and overthrew Darius Codomanus, A. 3674. C.—His dominion in Syria may be meant. Grot.—Alexander was the first who reigned in that great monarchy, which he founded. W.

Ver. 2. Holds. He was never defeated. Just. xii.

Ver. 3. Earth, even to India, beyond which the ancients knew of nothing.—Quiet, or silent; depopulated, (Is. 14:7) and obedient. Hab. 2:20.

Ver. 4. Up. He was spoiled by prosperity, (C.) and would pass for a god, and be styled "king of the world." Just. xii.

Ver. 6. Bed. Some suppose through poison, (Diod. xvii. S. Jer. ad Lætam.) or excess of wine. Athen. x. 11.—This was enough. H.—So perished the man who would claim divine honours! C.

Ver. 7. Servants. On the ninth day of sickness which preceded his death, he admitted all his soldiers to kiss his hand. Then he asked his friends, if they thought they should find such another king? As they were silent, he predicted what bloodshed would ensue, and told them to bury him in the temple of Ammon. When they asked to whom he left the throne, he said, "to the most worthy." He gave his ring to Perdiccas; whence all inferred, that he should be regent till the proper heirs came of age. Perdiccas desired to know when he would have divine honours: to which Alexander replied with these his last words, "when you are happy:" (Just. xii. Diod. xvii.) as much as to say, never. H.—This seems contrary to the sacred historian. But his authority is far superior. C.—Kingdom. This is otherwise by Q. Curtius; though he acknowledges that divers were of that opinion, and that it had been delivered by some authors. l. x. But here we find from the sacred text that he was in error. Ch.—By delivering his ring to Perdiccas, Alexander gave him authority to make this division. W.—Many assert, that he gave him directions in his last will. This was observed for some time. v. 10.

Ver. 8. Twelve. Jos. &c. Some add, a few months. He was about thirty-three years old.

Ver. 10. Death, twelve years being expired, when all the posterity of Alexander were dead. His generals gradually destroyed each other, and four took the diadem at the same time: Ptolemy, in Egypt; Seleucus, in Syria; Cassander, in Macedonia; and Lysimachus, in Thrace. Just. xiii. and xv. C.—Those who choose to read in order, may, after the preface 2 B. 2:20 read the above, then 2 B. 3:1. W.

Ver. 11. Antiochus the illustrious; Epiphanes, the younger son of Antiochus the great, who usurped the kingdom, to the prejudice of his nephew Demetrius, son of his elder brother, Seleucus Philopater. Ch.—Epiphanes means "renowed." W.—He took this title, particularly after the Samaritans had offered it to him. Jos. 12. Vaillant. A. 145.—His medals have always God prefixed, "the god appearing;" as he came opportunity, like a god, to defend the kingdom against the Egyptians, after he had been fourteen years a hostage at Rome. C.—Nothing could be more abject than his character. S. Jer. in Dan. viii. and ix. Athen. v. 4. and x. 12.—Greeks, counting not from the beginning of the reign of Alexander, but from the first year of Seleucus Nicator. Ch.—The era of the Seleucides began in spring or autumn, A. 3692, B.C. 312, though the Chaldees and Ptolemy date from the following spring. C.—The Grecian monarchy had then stood twenty years. Eus. W.

Ver. 12. Men. Jason attempted to supplant Onias III. and introduced pagan customs, when he was dead. Menelaus treated him in like manner. Being cited to pay what he had promised, he left Lysimachus in his place, who was slain in the temple, which he was robbing. 2 Mac. 4.—Us. Thus the Jews complained in the days of Jeremias, (44:18) and the Christian religion was blamed for all the miseries which fell upon the Roman empire. C.—S. Aug. proves in his City of God, that this accusation was false. H.

Ver. 15. Exercise, to wrestle (C.) and teach. Lyran.

Ver. 16. Made. S. Jerom thinks the attempt useless. But the Jews discovered the art. S. Epip. Pond. xvi. Bartol. 1 Cor. 7:18.—Sold to the devil, becoming his instruments. 3 K. 21:25. Rom. 7:14. C.—Go to 2 Mac. 4:7.

Ver. 17. Egypt. He coveted this kingdom, having Syria already. W.—He was not very fit for war: but Egypt was not under Philometor a child, and Ephphanes made an easy conquest. This was his second visit to that country. While he besieged Alexandria, a report of his death was spread; and as he was informed that the Jews rejoiced at it, he fell upon them. v. 21. C.—After v. 20, read 2 B. 4:21. W.

Ver. 23. Sanctuary. Josephus (xii. 6.) writes that Antiochus slew such as opposed his entrance into the city, and afterwards those who opened the gates, but would have prevented his plundering the temple. W.—Menelaus conducted the king. 2 Mac. 5:15. Profane authors condemn this conduct of the king towards a city subject to him. Jos. c. App. 2.—Diodorus relates several fables on this occasion. C.

Ver. 30. The chief collector, &c. Apollonius. Ch. 2 Mac. 5:24. W.—He basely fell upon the unsuspecting citizens on a sabbath day. H.

Ver. 33. Fire, thus destroying a great part. Jos. Ant. xii. 7.

Ver. 35. The city of David. That is, the castle of Sion. Ch.—In it was placed a garrison of Macedonians. W.—This castle had been occupied by Syrians before. It was now enlarged. 2 Mac. 4:27 and 5:5.

Ver. 38. Sanctuary, to pillage all who came to the temple. C.—An evil devil. Literally, an adversary, watching constantly to do harm, as the evil spirit is always watching and seeking whom he could devour. Ch.

Ver. 40. Fled with Judas, &c. 2 Mac. 5. Josephus (xii. 7.) assures us that the Samaritans flattered Epiphanes, and begged their temple might be consecrated to Jupiter, &c. The pretended that they were of Sidonian extraction.

Ver. 43. Be one. This reason herself teaches. But the king wished to establish a false religion, or rather he desired to root out all religion, and to shew his authority. H.—Demere superstitionem & mores Græcorum dare adnixus. Tacit. v.—He was not content with plunder, unless he ruined souls. W.

Ver. 45. Service, or worship, (C.) introduced by Epiphanes. H.

Ver. 49. People. He forced them to eat forbidden meat.

Ver. 57. Fifteenth. In all other places the 25th, whence this may be incorrect, (C.) or the altar was now set up, (H.) though sacrifices were not yet offered. C.—Idol. The statue of Jupiter Olympius, (Ch.) as Daniel (9) had foretold, as a figure of what antichrist would do, (Mat. 24. W.) as well as the Romans, when they took Jerusalem.

Ver. 58. Doors, to Trivia. Isai. 57:8. C.

Ver. 59. Law, and all the sacred writings. Jos. Sulpit. ii.—The pious Jews secreted what they could, and Judas took care to collect them. 2 B. 1:14 and 3:38. C.

Ver. 61. After month. The officers took an account of the slain, (Grot.) or the dedication of the statue was renewed, or rather the king's nativity was kept. 2 B. 6:7. C.—But this would only occur once a-year. People were compelled to sacrifice on the same day of each month on which the statue had been dedicated. v. 62.

Ver. 62. Over-against, or (H.) “upon,” ἐπι. The Greek altars were of a smaller size.

Ver. 65. Many. Eleazar, and the seven Machabees, &c. C.

Ver. 67. Wrath. God seemed displeased, as he was with too many. The pious were exposed to various trials, and to the fury of persecutors. H.—Read 2 B. 5:11. W.

1 MACHABEES 2

Ver. 1. Joarib. This family was the most distinguished, as Josephus, who sprung from it, asserts, (H.) being the first of the twenty-four families of priests. 1 Par. 24:7. 19. M.—Mathathias was probably a descendant of Phinees, (v. 54.) and was officiating when the impious orders arrived. Whereupon he retired to Modin, (C.) near Diospolis. S. Jer.—Many say he was chosen high priest; and therefore decided the question about fighting on the sabbath. But any other, in similar emergencies, might have given that decision. C.—Judas was chosen, (Josephus) and Jonathas exercised the functions. Ant. xx. 8.—To verify the prediction of Jacob, some have concluded that the Machabees were allied to the tribe of Juda by the mother's side. S. Jer. S. Aug. c. Faust. i. 72.—Yet this is not proved, nor requisite. They were called Asmoneans, either from the town of Asamon, (Jos. 15:27) or from Assamoneus, great grandfather of Mathathias. Jos. Ant. xii. 8.—This family ruled till Herod, 128 years. C.—Here an account is given of their wars, and more fully in the eight last chapters of the second Book. W.—Perhaps John, Mathathias, &c. were chosen high priests by the people, while the king sent others. Selden.

Ver. 2. Gaddis, “a troop, fortunate, or a heap of wheat.” C.

Ver. 3. Thasi, in Syr. “ardent,” or feeble, (C.) or a destroyer. Pagn.

Ver. 4. Machabeus. The common etymology has been given. H.—But Judas had then no banners, and there is no proof that the Jews used such abbreviations, (C.) though moderns write Rambam, for “R. Moses, son of Maimon,” Moce-bie, (H.) “conquering in God,” (equivalent to Nicator, the title of Sedeucus) seems better, particularly as the word is written Machabee. C.—Yet this is liable to the objection of c being placed instead of k, which occurs invariably in the Chal. and Syr. H.

Ver. 5. Abaron, “passing,” undaunted, (C.) or “potent.”—Apphus, “the wrath or flying of counsel,” (Pagn.) “fainting, abundant, or dissipating.” C.—This small help, of great importance, was foretold by Daniel, 11:34. W.

Ver. 7. Ruin. S. Polycarp used a similar expression. Eus. v. 19.

Ver. 14. Lamentation. By voluntary mortification, he sought to appease God's indignation. M.

Ver. 18. They. Josephus mentions Apelles. Persecutors have thus frequently attempted to delude the faithful; first by flattery, and then by torments.

Ver. 21. Profitable. But quite the reverse both for this world and for the next. It is a dreadful crime.

Ver. 22. Way. Gr. “to the right or to the left.” H.

Ver. 24. Law. Deut. 11:6. M. and 13:9. Those who attempted to introduce the worship of idols, were to be slain without farther trial. C.—Mathathias was then judge and high priest. W.—He acted not though private revenge. S. Cyp. exhort. 5. S. Bern. ep. 158. W.

Ver. 29. And justice. The ceremonial and moral law, (C.) or to live piously. M.

Ver. 34. Sabbath. By sacrificing to idols, or by coming forth to fight. H.—They were of opinion that the latter was unlawful, and their ignorance might be excused. M.

Ver. 37. Innocency. Lit. “simplicity,” has often this sense. Their piety was not, however, enlightened, as the ceremonial law gives way on such occasions. C.—Their simplicity is commended by S. Ambrose, Of. i. 40. Yet they had not the prudence of serpents, which is also requisite. The Church remains. W.

Ver. 41. Come up. They say not that they will attack. C.—Pompey perceived this, and made his advances and works on the sabbath, without opposition. Jos. Bel. i. 5.—Pompey I had thus taken Jerusalem. Jos. Ant. xii. 1.—The Samaritans will not more on that day. Ex. 16:29 ep. 2. ad Scaliger—The Jews now take care of the sick, but will not help a beast out of the ditch on the sabbath, though in our Saviour’s time they did just the reverse. Lu. 14:5. The law has thus been variously explained. The Machabees judged with prudence. Yet superstition had again gained ground, when Josephus (vita) would not fight or assemble his forces on the sabbath, as being contrary to the law. In a storm, a Jewish pilot abandoned the helm till the danger was evident. Synes. ep. iv.

Ver. 42. The Assideans. A set of men that led a religious life; and were zealous for the law and worship of God. Ch.—They fought like the knights of Malta. A. Lapide—Esidim (H.) means “the pious.” Eccli. 44:10. Many think they were the same with the Cinites, Rechabites, and Essenes. From them spring the Pharisees. C.—The society was intent on adorning the temple, (Scal.) by which they swore. Mat. 23:6. C.—They were like monks in the old law. Simon. M.—These Essenes followed piety, avoiding the hypocrisy and error of the Pharisees and Sadducees. W. Jos. Bel. ii. 12.

Ver. 44. Sinners. Apostate Jews. C.

Ver. 48. Horn. That is, they suffered not the power of Antiochus, that man of sin, to abolish the law and religion of God. Ch.

Ver. 53. Lord, next to the king. Gen. 41:40.

Ver. 54. Everlasting, as long as the old law should subsist. C.

Ver. 55. Jesus; i.e. Josue. Ch.—He and Caleb alone gave a true relation. H.

Ver. 57. Mercy. This virtue was characteristic. C.

Ver. 66. People. Order is peculiarly requisite in all things, so here the proper persons are chosen, to whom each must submit in their sphere. W.—Mathathias speaks as chief of the nation. C.—Judas was his eldest son, and Simon the fourth. Jos. seder. &c.

Ver. 70. Year. Not of his age, but of the Greeks, (M.) after being at the head about twelve months. A. 3838. C.

1 MACHABEES 3

Ver. 1. Judas, the eldest. Jos. Bel. i. 1.—His skill and valour also entitled him to this post. C.—He did not claim this honour, but received it from his father, and was obeyed by the virtuous people. W.

Ver. 7. Kings. Epiphanes, Eupator, and Demetrius, with their generals. C.—Judas gained four great battles against Apollonius, Seron, Gorgias, and Lysias. C. 4:1, 28. W.

Ver. 8. Wrath. Making the enemy retire, (H.) and purifying the temple, &c.

Ver. 9. Perishing. So the Jews style the miserable. C.—Go to 2 B. 8:1. W.

Ver. 10. Apollonius, who had pillaged Jerusalem. 2 Mac. 5:24.

Ver. 15. Wicked apostates. C.—They are the most virulent. H.

Ver. 16. Bethoron, seven leagues north of Jerusalem.

Ver. 17. Fasting. Judas thus laudably prepared for battle. C.—Human frailty fears to engage a strong enemy. But true confidence in God gives courage and victory. W.

Ver. 25. Them. Philip wrote from Jerusalem to Ptolemy, to send aid. He immediately despatched Nicanor and Gorgias, who doubted not of success, so that they brought the merchants to buy the Jews. 2 Mac. 8.

Ver. 29. Land. He formerly received three hundred talents from Judea; now he was forced to send money thither. Sulp. ii. C.—Times. He not only disturbed the Jews, but other nations, which rebelled. W.—Though he had plundered the temple, he was still poor: the usual fate of wicked princes. M.—Sacrilege seldom prospers. When Henry VIII. took the revenues of monasteries, he was still needy. They had amply provided for the poor. Soon after, however, the poor rates commenced; and in the 39th Eliz. no less than eleven bills were brought into Parliament for their relief. Dugdale. See Hist. of Prot. Ch. H.

Ver. 30. Liberal. Epiphanes left many vestiges of his magnificence. Vaillant.—The very year when Apollonius was defeated, (Usher, A. 3838. C.) he exhibited most costly games at Daphne, near Antioch, to excel those of P. Emilius, at Amphipolis. Yet he disgusted the company with his apeish conduct. Athen. v. 4.

Ver. 31. Persia. The Arab. (2 Mac. 7) says the king had revolted. C.

Ver. 37. Countries, and took Artaxias, king of Armenia. S. Jer.

Ver. 38. Ptolomee. He had been governor of Cyprus, under Philometor, and gave him the revenue only when he was capable of acting for himself. Polyb.—He afterwards betrayed the island to Epiphanes. 2 B. 8.

Ver. 40. Emmaus, two leagues west of Jerusalem, (C.) different from that mentioned in S. Luke. Reland.

Ver. 41. Servants. Josephus (xii. 11.) adds “chains,” which were all turned against them by Judas. Nicanor had promised ninety Jews for a talent. 2 Mac. 8:10. C.

Ver. 44. Pray. This, with fasting and other penitential works, is the best armour in holy wars of religion.

Ver. 46. Maspha. Silo had been, and Jerusalem was afterwards, the place for public prayer. W.—As the Jews could not go to Jerusalem, they performed their duty as well as they could at Maspha, where Israel had often met. Judg. 20 and 21 and 1 K. 7:5 and 10:17.

Ver. 48. In which. The Greek text seems corrupt. By a small change we might render, “while.” C.—From some passages abused, the pagans sought to establish their religion. Salien.—For. Many Greek copies add, “to inscribe,” (M.) or “draw upon them the likenesses of their idols.” H.—Thus they wished to defile the books, as they had done the temple, (M.) and render them useless to the Jews. H.—Syr. “law, before the sanctuary on account of the Gentiles, who wished to make them imitate their idolatry.” C.—The sacred books would be a good preservative. H.

Ver. 49. Ornaments, which they had rescued from plunder. It seems they had also set up a sort of tabernacle, and had some ornament from the sanctuary.—Days. They ought then to offer victims, which was now impossible.

Ver. 54. Trumpets. Protection seemed to be promised. Num. 10:9.

Ver. 56. Law. Deut. 20:5. C.—Yet his forces were already few. H.

Ver. 60. Done. This godly resolution inspired them with courage, and procured the victory. W.

1 MACHABEES 4

Ver. 2. Guides. Several were apostates Judas was at or near Maspha. C.

Ver. 3. Rose up. The vigilance of rulers and pastors preserves from the devil’s stratagems. W.

Ver. 4. Camp, foraging, as they despised the forces of Judas, and supposed he was in the camp, or engaged with Gorgias.

Ver. 6. Three. We find seven thousand elsewhere. He was at the head of three thousand, and set his three brothers over fifteen hundred each.—Who. Some copies read, “because.” He could arm no more completely.—Swords. This is added in Greek and in some Latin copies. Having already gained two victories, they must have had some swords, with which they slew the fugitives. v. 15. C.—They were ill armed, through poverty (Jos.) chiefly, (H.) using slings. Zac. 9:15. C.—Confidence in God procureth his assistance, v. 8. W.

Ver. 13. Trumpet. There were many priests in the army.

Ver. 15. Gezeron, or Gazera, near Emmaus.—Idumea. Alex. MS. reads “Judea,” which seems more probable. The enemy fled on all sides, some among the Philistines; (C.) others to the southern parts of Juda, occupied by Edom. H.

Ver. 23. Sea. This sort of purple was most esteemed. The art of dying it is now lost. The merchants’ goods fell into the hands of the Jews. The pursuit was interrupted by the sabbath. At various times Bacchides and Timothy lost above 20,000; Phylarchus and Callisthenese perished; and Nicanor saved himself by flight. The booty was laid up in places of security. 2 B. 8:25. 30.

Ver. 24. For ever. This was the chorus of Ps. 135 which was sung; (C.) or the 117 might be used on this occasion. H.

Ver. 27. Commanded. See what followed, 2 Mac. 8:8 to the end. W.

Ver. 32. Destruction. Let them perish, or fall upon each other.

Ver. 38. Burnt by Callisthenes, whom the Jews burnt in a house. 2 B. 8. C.—Chambers; (pastophoria. Sept.) places for beds, veils, &c. H.—S. Jerom commonly prefers “the treasury,” with Aquila, or “beds,” as Sym. translates. Chambers for the officers of the temple were common both among pagans and Christians. Rufin, Hist. ii. 23. Com. Apost. ii. 57. Clem. pæd. iii. 2. C.—As it was the chief design of Judas to defend religion, so he presently purifies the temple. W.

Ver. 41. Fight, or to be ready, if the garrison should offer to molest them (C.) from the higher part of Sion, while they were performing what religion required of them. H.

Ver. 42. Blemish. Legal uncleanness or immorality. C.

Ver. 43. Defiled. Altars, temples, and statues of false gods made of stone, and set up in the temple, (C. 1:50. W.) and before the houses, (2 B. 10:1) were now demolished and thrown into the vale of Cedron. 2 Par. 29:16.

Ver. 44. Profaned with impure victims, and with the altar of Jupiter erected above it. C. 1:23.

Ver. 46. Stones; rough, and covered with brass: (Ex. 20:25) though this latter circumstances is not certain with respect to the altar built by the captives.—Prophet. None was recognized after Malachias, as God prepared his people to pay more attention to the Messias.

Ver. 47. Law. Nothing was specified. The altar in the desert was of wood. At Sinai and Hebal, turf or rough stones were used; whence unhewed stones were judged most proper.

Ver. 48. Up, or repaired the temple chambers, &c.

Ver. 51. Veils, at the entrance of the holy of holies. C.

Ver. 52. Year. The temple was purified a little more than two years after it had been profaned. A. 145. W.—The sacrifices had been interrupted just three years. The Second Book (10:3) specifies two years; whence some infer, that the temple was twice dedicated. But these two years most probably refer to the administration of Judas. S. Tho. or some other com. Usher, A. 3840. T. C. Salien. M.

Ver. 57. Excuteheons, or bucklers of gold, taken from the soldiers of Antiochus. C. 6:39. Such ornaments were placed in temples, to testify the gratitude of the people. They wished to restore as much as possible when had been taken away. C. 1:23. On this occasion the Jews carried branches in memory of what they had suffered in desert places for three years. Hence they style it the feast of tabernacles of Casleu. 2 B. 1:9 and 10:6. C.

Ver. 59. Decreed. Our Saviour observed this festival, which was appointed so long after Moses. John 10:22. W.—It was styled Encœnia, and kept in winter while Solomon's temple was dedicated in Tisri, and Zorobabel's in Adar. The Jews light lamps, (C.) to testify their joy. Jos. Ant. xii. 11.—The Rabbins add, that a small bottle of oil had been preserved by the high priest, which multiplied so as to supply the lamps during the whole octave. Hence they still have lights at their windows on this festival. Seld. Syn. iii. 13.

Ver. 61. Bethsura, which might receive reinforcements from Sion; or rather, (C.) Gr. they “fortified Bethsura to keep it, (Sion) that,” &c. Grot. Vat.—Idumea. The people of that country had seized many cities of Juda. C.—Read 2 B. 10:1. W.

1 MACHABEES 5

Ver. 1. Nations. They were always ready to oppress the Jews. Thus God punished or tried his people. C.—Judas, or his brethren, here gains eight victories over them. W.

Ver. 3. Idumea. Alexandrian MS. has, “Judea.” Both may be right. The country had been wrested from Juda by the Idumeans.—Acrabathane is “the ascent of scorpions,” (hakrabim) which were probably numerous, to the south of the Dead Sea. Num. 34:4. Deut. 8:15.

Ver. 4. Bean; perhaps Beon, near the sea of Sodom, (C.) or Bathaner, beyond the Jordan. Serar.

Ver. 5. Destruction. Sometimes the people were spared. All depended on the wording of the vow. Lev. 27:28. Num. 21:1. See other particulars, 2 B. 10:16 to 23. C.

Ver. 8. Gazer, in Ephraim. But Jazer, in the tribe of Gad, seems to be meant, as the Greek expresses it. M.—Towns. Lit. “daughters,” or dependant (H.) villages. W.—Afterwards Judas returned and defeated Timotheus. 2 B. 10:24.

Ver. 9. Galaad. Most of the towns had been seized by the Ammonites, &c. After the return of the captives, they were probably driven out. They attempted to regain possession, when Epiphanes declared against the Jews.—Datheman; Petra, (C.) or perhaps Rathma. Num. 33:18. Drus.

Ver. 11. Timotheus. Another of this name had been slain the preceding year, 3840, at Gazara. 2 B. 10:37.

Ver. 13. Tubin, or Tob, to the south of Gad. Judg. 11:3. C.

Ver. 15. Is filled. Gr. Alex. “All Galilee of the Gentiles to destroy us.” H.—This part of Galilee was occupied by pagans, who were excited by Epiphanes to fall upon the Jews. 2 B. 6:8.

Ver. 23. Arbatis. Arboth means “deserts” uncultivated, here probably denoting the valley of Jezrahel. Simon wisely concentrated the people, as Judas did in Galaad. v. 45.

Ver. 24. Desert; probably from Bethsan to Bosor, marching with all secrecy.

Ver. 25. Nabutheans; descendants of Ismael’s eldest son, whose capital was Petra. They continued friends to the Jews.

Ver. 26. Barasa; probably the Bozra of Moab. Gr. “Bosorra.” Jos.—Bosor means a fortress. It is not wonderful that there should be many places of this name in Arabia, to defend the people from robbers.—Alima; Elim, or Almon. Is. 15:8.—Casphor, or rather Casbon, (v. 36.) the famous Hesebon. Num. 21:26. C.—Mageth, or Machati; (Grot.) though it seems too far off. Deut. 3:14.—Carnaim, “horns,” being sacred to the moon, (C.) called Astaroth. Gen. 14:5. H.—Strabo styles it Carna.

Ver. 29. Fortress of Datheman. v. 9.

Ver. 36. Bosor, or Bosra. v. 26. Bosor was taken before. v. 28.

Ver. 37. After. Judas had in the mean time defeated Lysias. 2 B. 11:1. &c. C.—Raphon, or Raphana; (Grot.) or as that was too remote, probably Saphon. Num. 32:35. C.

Ver. 41. Afraid. He interpreted the delay in this sense, which was very precarious, (H.) as nothing could be more superstitious. Jonathan begged for a similar proof of God's favour. But Timotheus consulted only himself. 1 K. 14:9. C.

Ver. 42. Scribes; tribunes, who kept a register of the soldiers. M.—They were officers of great power.

Ver. 44. Temple of Atergata, or Astarte. Judas slew 55,000. Timotheus was spared. 2 B. 12:20. 26.

Ver. 46. Ephron, beyond the Jordan. The situation is unknown. With regard to the right which Judas had to treat it with such severity, see Num. 20:18. Judg. 8:5. C.—It probably belonged to God's people, and was unjustly detained. H.

Ver. 52. Plain, extending beyond Jezrahel.

Ver. 53. Hindmost: the place of danger. C.—A good general takes care of the weakest, and exhorts all to behave valiantly. W.

Ver. 54. Not one. The 12,000 who defeated the Madianites, were preserved by God in like manner. Num. 31:49. H.

Ver. 56. And Azarias. These two are known only for the disobedience and misconduct. In holy wars, God does not favour those who are actuated by base motives. v. 18. 60. C.—Men who depend on themselves, and who are not properly authorized, receive not assistance from above; so these failed, as they were not chosen like those who were to save Israel, (W.) of the family of the Machabees. M.

Ver. 58. Jamnia, a maritime city of the Philistines near Joppe. Gorgias, an experienced warrior, had retired thither. C. 4:5. and 2 B. 8:9. C.

Ver. 62. Israel. The late Rev. Robert Bannister applied this to Protestant writers of sermons, to dissuade young divines from applying to such authors as Tillotson, &c. It may also shew the reason why heretics succeed so ill in their foreign missions. H.—They know how to pervert Catholics, not how to convert infidels. Tert.

Ver. 63. Men. Gr. "man, Judas, and his brethren were," &c. H.—See a similar expression Ex. 14:3 respecting Moses.

Ver. 65. Chebron, or Hebron, which the Idumeans had seized. Judas retook it after he had defeated Gorgias. 2 B. 12:32.

Ver. 66. Aliens; Philistines, v. 68.—Samaria. This seems too remote.

Some substitute Saraia; (Jos. 15:35) others Maresa, (2 B. 12:35.) Marissa, (Jos.) the same as Ressa. Num. 33:21.

Ver. 67. Desiring. They were only too brave. This quality was not incompatible with the priesthood. Gr. Alex. has, "while he (Judas) was desiring," &c. Others have, "priests of the cities, while they," &c. The Rom. edit. agrees with us, (C.) and Grabe prints accordingly. H.

1 MACHABEES 6

Ver. 1. Higher, beyond the Euphrates. C. 3:30. 37. C.—The city. Gr. Alex. &c. "a city in Elymais," &c. The Rom. copy, Syr. Jos. style the place Elymais, where the temple was. C.—Profane authors agree that this temple was very rich, and that Epiphanes attempted to plunder it. S. Jer. in Dan. xi.—Nanea. Venus or Diana was the deity there adored, whom the king pretended he would marry. 2 Mac. 1:13 and 9:2. C.—The account of the death of Epiphanes is given to v. 16 and 2 B. 9. W.

Ver. 4. Battle. it is not known whether Elymais belonged to the king. Strabo (xvi) observes it was very jealous of its liberty, which it maintained against the Persians and the successors of Alexander. C.—Babylonia. At last he returned toward the country of Babylon. But before he arrived, the news of his generals' bad success in Judea filled him with vexation, and brought on desperate diseases. v. 8, and 2 B. 9:5. W.—He intended to pass by the country or city of Babylon, but was prevented by illness on the mountains which dived it from Persia.

Ver. 5. Persia, at Ecbatana. He expired at Tabis, having fallen from his chariot, &c. 2 B. 9. C.

Ver. 12. Evils. All this repentance was fictitious. 2 B. 9. W.

Ver. 14. Friends, educated with him. He appointed him regent instead of Lysias. C.—His son Eupator was only nine years old. Appian.—He made him appear and be recognized by the army. Eupator means one "born of a good father." C.

Ver. 16. Nine. He began his persecution A. 143, so that it lasted six years and almost four months, or 2300 days, (Dan. 8:14) during which time Judas purified the temple, some months before the death of Epiphanes. W.

Ver. 20. Fifty. How then was peace made in 148, as we read 2 B. 11:21.? Usher (3841) supposes the ear was reckoned according to the Chaldee custom, which defers is six months. Basnage (ii. 1.) rather thins that the letter is placed out of its proper order, and should occur at the beginning of Eupator's reign. See 2 B. 10.—Slings, or to thrown stones, &c. ballistas. H.—The Gr. and Josephus rather indicate terraces, or towers where the machines were placed.

Ver. 30. Hundred. The 2 B. 11:2 specifies 80,000. But it speaks of a subsequent action.

Ver. 31. Idumea. The passes on the north were probably occupied.—Bethsura lay to the south of Jerusalem. C.

Ver. 32. Bethzacharam, a defile (Jos.) between the city and Bethsura. Judas abandoned the siege of the castle on Sion. C.

Ver. 34. Blood of grapes, wine, (Deut. 32:14) and the juice of mulberries incite elephants to fight, as the smell of some sorts of blood causes dogs to hunt. Vales. Phil. lxxxii. W.—This might be done to accustom the elephants to the sight of blood. C.—White colours irritate them most, as red do bulls. Plut. de Fort. Alex.—Sometimes wine and spirits were given them to drink, when they were to trample on criminals: but it was only shewn them when going to battle, as by drinking they lose their strength. Elian, Hist. ii. 40. and xiii. 8. and 3 Mac. 5:30.

Ver. 37. Thirty-two. Bochart looks upon this and other such accounts as fabulous. He does not determine how many might fight in these towers; but allows that there must have been above two or three, as some would correct the Gr. text, "two or three strong men fighting with darts upon them." An elephant has been known to carry above 5000 pounds, and thirty-two men would weigh no more than 4800. Pliny (viii. 7.) observes that sixty people have been seen upon an elephant. Eupator probably had his from India, where they are larger than in Africa. A person of that country was deemed fittest to manage them.

Ver. 38. Trumpets. It would seem as if the infantry had none. Yet this does not appear probable. The Greek reads in a different manner. Some copies have "to stir up and enclose them in the defiles," which seems useless; or "to keep them together in the phalanxes," (MS. Alex. C.) as the Vulg. has read. M.

Ver. 39. Gold. The Argyraspides of Alexander had "shields of silver." His successors might surpass this magnificence; or the officers might have golden and the soldiers brazen bucklers.

Ver. 42. Six, &c. before the exploit of Eleazer. Others fell afterwards.

2 B. 11:11 specifies 11,000 foot, and 600 horse. Josephus says 1000 of the van guard.

Ver. 43. Saura. Gr. "Avaron," (C.) Alex. "the Sauaran." H.—He is styled Abaron, (C. 2:5) the brother of Judas. C. Jos. Sa. M.—Arab. says "his servant." This feat is attributed to Judas, (2 B. 13:15) as he was general, and approved of, or "commanded" Eleazer to act thus, according to Ben. Gorion, (iii. 20.) and the Arab.—Harness, for greater security. The skin is very hard, except under the belly. C.—Elephants in the army of Antiochus the great, or rather "the coward," were richly adorned. Flor. ii. 8.—Porus, king of India, rode on one covered with gold. Curt. viii.

Ver. 44. Name. This motive has made some condemn the exploit. But surely a person may seek to acquire fame, even by exposing himself to danger. Eleazar might well hope that the beast would not fall so suddenly. The other motive specified is truly noble and virtuous, and we cannot condemn this hero without stronger proofs. S. Gregory (Mor. xix. 13.) represents him as a figure of the proud: but he might not therefore be one of the number, (C.) no more than Esau, who was a type of the reprobate. Mal. 1:3. H.—S. Ambrose (Off. i. 40.) highly commends the fortitude of this soldier exposing himself to the danger of death for a religion. W.—This is the general sentiment. See Serar. M. T. Grot. jure. iii. 4. a. 18.

Ver. 46. Under it. The rhinoceros attacks the elephant in that most vulnerable part. Pliny 20.

Ver. 47. Them. Judas thought proper to retire to the temple, which alone was fortified, and in his power. The citadel of Sion held for the king, and the city was defenceless. Only what lay to the north of Bethsura was then called Judea. The Idumeans occupied the rest. Eupator blockaded the temple, and besieged Bethsura, which he took. v. 51. This siege is related more at length. 2 B. 12:19. It cost the king a great deal. C.

Ver. 51. Battering slings. Lit. balistas. H. See v. 20.—Fire, or the long javelin, falarica, mentioned by Livy xxi.

Incita sulcatum tremulâ secat aera flamma. Silius.

—Pieces. Lit. "scorpions," (H.) a sort of pointed dart, (C.) filled with poison, virus qua figit effundit. Tert. scorp.

Ver. 55. King. Lysias had thus been displaced. v. 14. C.—Providence permitted that he should seek his own interest, and thus deliver Judas from the most imminent danger.

Ver. 58. Come. Lit. “give our right hands,” (H.) the sign of the most inviolable engagements among the Persians. Jos. Ant. xvii. ult.

Ver. 59. Before, by leave of Cyrus, Alex. &c.—Despising. Gr. “abolished.” They had made the attempt.

Ver. 62. Oath. Eupator was not above ten years old, (v. 14. 20.) so that Lysias must bear the greatest blame. He seems to have prepossessed the king against Philip, the regent. H.

Ver. 63. City, and slew Philip. Jos. Ant. xii. 15.) C.—Read 2 B. 13:1. W.

1 MACHABEES 7

Ver. 1. Rome. He had been a hostage instead of Epiphanes, who usurped his throne. C. 1:11. After the death of the latter, the senate sent three legates to administer the kingdom, during the minority of Eupator. One of them was slain. The king and Lysias sent to exculpate themselves, but received no satisfactory answer. Demetrius thought this a proper opportunity for regaining the throne. He consulted the historian, Polybius, who advised him to depart privately. He, however, addressed the senate for leave, and being refused, fled with eight attendants to Tripoli, and thence to Apamea. His rivals durst not attack him, as he pretended to be sent by the Romans. The army of Eupator seized their king and Lysias, and put them to death. Polyb. cxiv. and cxxii. Jos. C.—Seleucus and Epiphanes were brothers; and of course Demetrius was cousin to Eupator, (W.) and the lawful heir of Seleucus. H.

Ver. 5. Alcimus. He occupied the place of Menalaus, and would be high priest, but that office was held by the Machabees. W.—Eupator had slain Menalaus, as being too turbulent. Onias IV. ought to have been recognized; (C.) but he fled into Egypt, and there built a temple. Lysias advised the king to select one from a family of less power. Alcimus was such, though of the posterity of Aaron. v. 14. Jos. Ant. xii. 5. and xiii. 6. and xx. 8.—He had fallen under Epiphanes, and the Jews would not receive him.

Ver. 6. Thy friends, and the apostates, who obeyed the decree of the king’s uncle. This was true, and the glory of Judas. See 2 B. 14:3. C.—They gained the king’s favour by presents, and falsely accused Judas and the people. W.

Ver. 8. River, as governor of Mesopotamia, (Jos. Usher. C.) instead of Heraclides and Timarchus, who had abused their power. Hence Demetrius obtained the title of Soter, or “saviour.” Appian.—Faithful. The chief man under the king. H.

Ver. 12. Scribes. They were both civil and military officers. C.

Ver. 13. Assideans. These were first consulted, as being most learned and pious. C. 2:42. W.—They held no office. C.—Alcimus deceived them, and cruelly murdered 60, (W.) some scribes.

Ver. 17. Them. The Ps. 78 alludes to the Assideans, (v. 2.) and is explained by many, as relating to this massacre.

Ver. 19. Bethzecha. Gr. “Beseth,” or Bethsetta, near the great plain. Hence Bacchides intended to return.

Ver. 25. Crimes. He made the king some presents, of what he had probably stolen from the temple, and after waiting for some time in silence, began to accuse the people. 2 B. 14. C.—See what is there related to v. 12.

Ver. 26. Enemy. He was one of the most terrible: yet Judas at last slew him. v. 43 and 2 Mac. 15:28. W.—Nicanor was high in the king’s favour, and had fled with him from Rome. Jos. Ant. xii. 17.—He first sent three ambassadors to Judas, in answer to what Simon had proposed; and peace was concluded. Alcimus hereupon accused Nicanor, and the king sent him an order to seize Judas. While he was endeavouring to comply, Judas escaped. He was again much exposed; (v. 29.) and therefore collected his army, and fought near Jerusalem. 2 B. 14:15. Usher, A. 3842. C.

Ver. 31. Capharsalama, “the field of peace,” concluded perhaps with Eupator, (C. 6:62. H.) near Jerusalem.

Ver. 32. Thousand. Some Gr. copies have “hundred.” Others think that these were Jews: but the contrary seems to be the case, though Judas was again (C. 6:47) forced to retreat to the temple, which he left shortly after. 2 B. 14:31.

Ver. 33. King. The Jews observed the laudable custom of praying for their rulers, as Christians do. C. 12:11. Bar. 1:10 and 1 Tim. 2:1. C.—Sacrificamus pro salute Imperatoris sed Deo nostro et ipsius. Tert. ad Scap. ii.

Ver. 34. Abused. Lit. “polluted them,” or grated their ears (H.) with his “blasphemies.” Jos.—On such occasions, the Jews stopped their ears. Acts 7:56. C.

Ver. 38. Longer. Read 2 B. 14:11. The last battle with Nicanor is described, C. 15. and here. v. 39. W.

Ver. 40. Adarsa, in Ephraim, four miles from the lower Bethoron.

Ver. 41. Sennacherib. Some copies omit this name.

Ver. 45. Gazara, distant a day's journey from Adarsa. v. 40. C. 5:8.—Signals, to admonish all. Gr. "with the trumpets for signals," used for that purpose by the priests.

Ver. 46. Horns, like bulls, (C.) or they surrounded them with the wings of the army. Grot. Judith 15:6.

Ver. 47. Jerusalem, and the temple, without the walls. His tongue was given to the birds. 2 B. 15:33. C.

Ver. 49. Thirteenth. The day before the feast of Purim, (H.) or "lots." It was observed in the time of Josephus. C.

Ver. 50. Time. While Judas settles religious matters, Demetrius prepares for war. Read 2 B. 15:1. W.

1 MACHABEES 8

Ver. 1. Romans. Many historians, Livy, Plutarch, &c. record the same. W.—Things. Gr. "people who join them." H.—They comply with their just requests. M.—The Scripture speaks of the fine times of the republic and gives this temporal reward to the virtues of the Romans, which they so greatly sought, and to which alone they were entitled. C.—"Hitherto, says Florus, the Roman people were beautiful, noble, pious, holy, and magnificent." The Jews, first among the eastern nations, employed their friendship to secure their liberty. Facile tunc Romanis de alieno lagrientibus, Just. xxxvi.

Ver. 2. They heard, &c. What is here set down of the history and character of the ancient Romans, is not an assertion, or affirmation of the sacred writer; but only a relation of what Judas had heard of them. Ch.—Fame generally magnifies.—Galatia, over which Volso triumphed. Livy xxxviii. C.—The Gauls near Narbonne were then tributary to the Romans. Harduin.

Ver. 3. Mines, for which Spain was most famous. Pliny iii. 3. Strabo iii.—The place, or every place in the world. M.

Ver. 4. Earth, little known to the Jews, like Syphax, &c.

Ver. 5. Ceteans. That is, the Macedonians. Ch.—Flaminius subdued the former, and P. Emilius the latter.

Ver. 6. Twenty. Livy mentions only fifty-four. Florus allows that elephants were on both sides of the army, consisting of 300,000 foot. Appian admits but 70,000 men. C.—Polybius (5.) asserts that Antiochus had 102 elephants against Ptolemy. In this war he might well have 120. W.

Ver. 7. Alive. He was forced to submit to conditions, as hard as if he had been prisoner. C.—He was present with the ambassadors at Lysimachia, to see the conditions put in execution. Polyd. xvii.—Tribute. He had to pay all the expenses of the war, 15,000 talents of Eubæa, 350 to Eumenes, and 127 for wheat. Twenty hostages were required to be exchanged every three years.—Upon. Gr. “the division,” (C.) or all Europe, and from Halys as far as Mount Taurus. All his elephants at Apamea, and his ships of war, were also ceded. Livy xxxviii.

Ver. 8. Indians. So the Ionians and Carians might be styled, from the Indus or Kalbit, which flows through their country. The Midæi dwelt in those regions. Harduin.—Some think the Ionians and Mysians should be put for the Indians and Medes, (Grot.) as they were given up to Eumenes. Livy—Yet the name of Indian was very vague, and denoted the Ethiopians, Arabs, &c. C.—Eumedes. King of Pergamus. Ch.

Ver. 9. Greece, in league with Antiochus, (Grot.) or the Etolians, whom Glabrio conquered, may be meant. Salien.

Ver. 13. Reigned, like Masinissa, Prusias, Eumenes, Eupator, and Phiolmetor.

Ver. 14. Crown, after the expulsion of the Tarquins.

Ver. 15. Twenty. These latter were people in office, the two consuls, pretors, and questors, the four ediles, and ten tribunes. After Sylla the number of senators was augmented from 300 to 1000. Alex. Genial iv. 11. C.

Ver. 16. To one man. There were two consuls; but one only ruled at one time, each in his day. Ch.—Of this we have an example in the battle of Cannæ. The first of the consuls wore the ornaments. Livy—It would have been more dreadful to have two than one ruler. W.—One of them governed at home; the other in the armies, and this latter alone was known to the Jews. They might also be falsely informed that a dictator was chosen every year. This was only done on great emergencies. C.—No envy, &c. So Judas had heard; and it was so far true, with regard to the ancient Romans: that as yet no envy or jealousy had divided them into such open factions and civil wars, as they afterwards experienced in the time of Marius and Sylla, &c. Ch.—Before they seemed all bent on promoting the public good. Sallust. Catiline.

Ver. 21. Sight. The Romans expected they should soon be at war with Demetrius, and had heard of the exploits of Judas.

Ver. 26. Shall they. The Jews and Romans shall pay their own forces. T. M.—Grotius explains it, as if the former were to give no aid to the enemies of Rome.

Ver. 28. To them. Grotius adds, “to the enemies and to them,” &c. which is the sense of the Syr. and Arab. and the most natural.

Ver. 31. Jews. He and his predecessors had abused their power. Yet Rupert and Peter of Blois (ep. 146.) disapprove of the Jews having recourse to the Romans: they might flee away. It is not lawful to take arms against the sovereign. God had, however, sufficiently evinced by miracles that the conduct of the Machabees was pleasing to him. 2 B. 15:12. C.—The Jews were not properly subjects, though tributary to foreign kings, whose design was to exterminate them. C. 3:39. Self-preservation dictated that they should call in the aid of others. H.—To die for religion was a great blessing. C.—But God would not have his people thus entirely destroyed. The obligations of rulers and of the people are reciprocal. All nations have asserted their right to seek redress under oppression. Yet few have been treated so ill as the Jews. Few have acted with equal zeal and justice. H.

1 MACHABEES 9

Ver. 1. Time. About a year after Nicanor’s death, (C. 7:50. and 2 B. 15:38. W.) or in the same year, A. 3843; (C.) so that the Romans had not time to send Judas assistance. H.—Josephus (xii. 17.) erroneously supposes that Alcimus was dead, and Judas his successor, while Simon was the civil ruler and general. He afterwards (B. xx. 8.) asserts that Jonathas was next high priest to Alcimus, who certainly officiated after the death of Judas. v. 54.—Bacchides had been already in Judea. C. 7:8. Now the right wing, composed of the best troops, and usually commanded by the prince when he was present, is entrusted to him.

Ver. 2. Galgal ... in Arbella, or the Galilee, in the flat country, Araboth. C. 5:23.—Masaloth, or Masal, was in the tribe of Asher. Jos. xvi. 30.—S. Jerom speaks of Arbela, nine miles from Legion. See Osee 10:14.

Ver. 4. Berea, or Beroth, in Benjamin, not far from Laisa, or Lesen, (Jos. 18:25) where Judas was encamped, (C.) with 3000 (Gorion); Josephus says 1000; Rufin translates 2000.

Ver. 7. Down. The strongest are not free from the first emotions of trouble; but trusting in God, they are assured either of a temporal or eternal victory. W.

Ver. 10. Stain. Lit. “bring a crime.” H.—He seems to have thought God required him now to fight, and he was convinced that he could save by means of a few, which excuses him from rashness. The Church adopts his words, (Dom. iii. Oct. Mat.) and S. Ambrose (Of. i. 41.) highly extols his bravery, in “preferring death before slavery and shame.”

Ver. 12. Legion. So the Vulg. commonly renders Greek “phalanx,” (C.) a compact body of 8000 men, used by the Macedonians. The Roman legion consisted of 6726, (Veget.) or 6666. The two phalanxes were in each wing supported by cavalry, which endeavoured to surround Judas.

Ver. 15. Azotus. Not belonging to the Philistines, but some place unknown, which Josephus styles Asa.

Ver. 18. Slain. Gorionides relates that the sight of Judas made Bacchides flee towards Azotus. He lost 15,000, when the rest of the army came upon Judas now fatigued; and as Bacchides returned to the charge, the hero fell upon heaps of the slain. Thus died this great man who saved Israel. v. 21. C.—Gloriosorem triumphis mortem invenit. The most mighty in the sight of men may fall; but the fortitude of Judas, proved by former heroic actions and by success, was now rendered perfect by this most glorious death. S. Amb. Of. i. 41. W.—Never was there a more accomplished and virtuous champion. He had all the qualities of a holy priest and a valiant soldier, as well as of a religious prince, always bent on promoting the glory of his people. C. 3:3. He was an admirable copy of Jesus Christ, the great original of all the saints. In the most dismal times he was chosen to save religion and the people. Almost alone, and wandering from place to place, he gains the most signal victories, forms a league with Gentiles, purifies the temple, acts both as high priest and as prince of the nation, and at last gives his life for his brethren. Thus Christ by his life and death unites all in one Church, and procures the remission of sin. C.

Ver. 19. Modin. Their remains were seen there long after. Eus.—It is wonderful that they should be shewn at Antioch. S. Jer. loc.—But these were the relics of the seven brothers. 2 B. 7:1. C.

Ver. 22. Many. Thus only some of our Saviour's actions are recorded, for the same reason. John ult. H.

Ver. 24. All. Josephus says, "Many." We find some (C.) joining Jonathan, v. 28. H.—When the people are without a ruler, they fall. Prov. 11:14. W.

Ver. 26. Abused them, and "afterwards slew them all." Jos. Ant. xiii. 1.

Ver. 27. No prophet since the days of Malachi, (C.) or the return from captivity. Jos.

Ver. 28. Jonathan, or (H.) Jonathas, was the third general captain of this family, and succeeded Judas in the pontificate, though Alcimus still usurped the dignity (C. 9:9) as in the lifetime of Judas. W.

Ver. 33. Thecua, seven miles south of Bethlehem. S. Jer. pref. in Amos.—Asphar, or "asphaltite lake" (Gorion) of Sodom; so called on account of the bitumen, or asphalte. C.

Ver. 34. Sabbath, out of contempt, like Nicanor; (2 B. 15) or thinking that the Jews would not then fight. M.

Ver. 35. Lend. Some copies read, "to entrust unto them." They wished not to be embarrassed with useless baggage. It all fell into the hands of Jambri, (C.) who slew John. W.

Ver. 37. Madaba. Gr. "Nadabath." Jos. "Gabatha." It seems, as the sons of Jamri lived at Madaba, the spouse would not be conducted out of that place, (C.) unless they might reside sometimes in the country. H.—Chanaan, or "Arabia." Jos.—Chanaan denotes any infidel. C.

Ver. 42. Revenge. To punish faults with moderation and justice, is a virtue. Children and subjects are sometimes exposed to temporal chastisements, for the faults of their parents or leaders; yet this is for their own advancement in piety, or in punishment for the share they have had in the crime, or to prevent them from imitating it. S. Tho. ii. 2. q. 108. W.

Ver. 44. Before, when we were in the desert of Thecua, and could decline fighting; (M.) or, notwithstanding the sabbath, we must engage. C. 2:41.

Ver. 48. To them. Jonathas swam to another place on the same side, otherwise there would have been no battle. W.—But this had taken place, when a thousand were slain; though Bacchides fled from Jonathan, v. 47. 49. H.—The Greek and Josephus seem more full: (C.) “Swam over, and they (the enemies) did not cross the Jordan after them.” H.—Bacchides did not pursue the Jews. M.—Prot. marg. quotes Josephus, (xiii. 1.) who says two thousand were slain. H.

Ver. 50. Thopo, or Taphua. The two last were in Ephraim.

Ver. 53. Castle, on the highest part of Sion. v. 52. C. 1:35.—Custody, without doing them any farther injury. C.

Ver. 54. Alcimus. Josephus (xii. 17.) confesses that Judas was high priest. But he mistakes when he says he succeeded Alcimus, who it hence appears survived him a year, (v. 3, 18.) and was only an usurper. He should therefore be corrected by this book, rather than it should be rejected because it differs from him, or any such authors. W. v. 1, 28. H.—Walls, before the most holy place, (Jos. Lyr.) or between the priests and people, (Salien. M.) or which separated the Jews from the Gentiles, as if to remove all distinction. Grot.—It is probable that he removed the wall which went round the inner temple and the altar of holocausts, (C.) which Alexander restored. Jos. Ant. xiii. 21.—Prophets. Aggeus and Zac. had been as it were the architects and directors of the temple. C.

Ver. 55. House. He could not make his will.

Ver. 61. He. Jonathas slew those who had given information.

Ver. 62. Bethbessen, in the desert of Jericho, (M.) the same with Bethagla. Jos. “Bethalaga.”

Ver. 66. Odares, people of the country who adhered to Bacchides.—Increase, or shew himself in the field with a large army, (C.) or to penetrate the army of the enemy. Syr. Jos. Grot.

Ver. 69. Slew. Evil counsel is prejudicial to the giver. W.

Ver. 73. Machmas. The capital of Sion was still in the hands of the enemy. Jonathas made good use of the alliance with the Romans, and began to lay the foundations of the national independence, and to act like the ancient judges. C.

1 MACHABEES 10

Ver. 1. Illustrious. He falsely asserted that he was the son of Epiphanes, being of very mean birth. Just. xxxv. W.—Others say that he was illegitimate, and styled Ballas after his mother Bala, though the name in Syriac may denote “a worthless person.” In his medals he styles himself Deopator Euergetes, as if “God were his father,” and himself “beneficent.” C. Usher, A. 3851.—At any rate the Romans and Egyptians acknowledged him, being glad to find a rival for Demetrius, who was become odious likewise to the Jews and Syrians. Heraclides had been deprived of his government (C.) by the king, (C. 7:8) and in revenge (H.) took Alexander, and Laodicea, daughter of Epiphanes, to Rome, where he gained over many of the senators, who agreed to help them to recover the kingdom. Heraclides then levied forces at Ephesus, and Ptolemais was delivered up to Alexander, whence he wrote to Jonathan. Nothing contributed more than these divisions to secure the liberty of the Jews.

Ver. 3. Magnify, “extol,” or grant him fresh dignities. Soter wished to gain over Janathas, to prevent his rival from receiving supplies from Egypt. C.

Ver. 8. Fear. The Syrians in the castle would fear, while the Jews would rejoice, and particularly the hostages. C. 9:53. H.

Ver. 11. Did. The wall built by Judas had been demolished. C. 4:60. and 6:62.

Ver. 18. Brother; the style used between kings, (3 K. 9:13) governors, (2 B. 11:1) and friends. C.

Ver. 20. Make. The king could not make him high priest, as he was that already: but he acknowledged the title. W.—Crown: both the badges of kings, or granted by them. v. 62. Dan. 5:29.

Ver. 21. Vestment, at the feast of tabernacles, A. 3852, seven years after the death of Alcimus, and nine since Judas fell. It is not clear from Josephus, (xiii. 5. and xx. 7.) whether the people chose him high priest, or they rather pressed him to accept the king’s offer. C.

Ver. 23. Prevented, by sending presents. Demetrius had sent a letter and liberated the hostages, whom Jonathan might justly receive without declaring for the king. M.

Ver. 25. Jews. He perhaps wished to set them at variance with Jonathan, to alone Alexander had addressed his letter. H.

Ver. 26. Heard. He scruples not to tell a lie, for he had been informed of the contrary. v. 22. W.—“He prudently chose rather to appear to find them innocent, than to make them so,” (Grot.) by granting them pardon.

Ver. 29. Salt, of which there were pits in the country. C. 11:35.—Crowns. Antiochus the great had before granted this exemption to the ministers of the temple. Jos. Ant. xii. 3. C.—The Jews, after its ruin, used to present such to their patriarchs. But the Roman emperors claimed them. Grot.

Ver. 30. Cities, or cantons. Gr. “nomes,” specified C. 11:34.

Ver. 31. Free; “an asylum” (Jos.) without any foreign troops, like Delphi. Grotius—Tyre was also “a sacred asylum.” Vaillant, A. 174.

Ver. 32. Castle. Yet Jonathas was afterwards forced to besiege it. C.

Ver. 33. Cattle, so that they shall not be forced to work for the public. Jos.

Ver. 34. Appointed “of lots,” Judith, the dedication, &c. These days were privileged, that the people might go to the temple without being molested, and carry what they would free of all taxes.

Ver. 36. Let. This is not required, but a proof of confidence. C.—Great king. He assumes the titles of the Persian monarchs. H.

Ver. 37. Trust, to guard the king, (Jos.) or be in the treasury. T.—Laws. He revokes the impious edicts of Epiphanes.

Ver. 39. Ptolemais. This was not a great present, as it was in the hands of his rival. But he wished the Jews to retake it.

Ver. 41. Above. He was not in a condition to force the payment of these arrears, and is liberal of what he does not possess. C.

Ver. 42. They: former kings. H.—Bagoses exacted fifty drachmas for every lamb, before the daily sacrifice could be offered. Jos. Ant. xi. 7.

Ver. 43. Free. Their persons and goods are protected in this asylum. Even the king’s debtors are not excluded. C.

Ver. 46. No credit. Thus would all prudent people judge. W.—Alexander had moreover made the first offers, and was supported by the Romans. The Jews had not to examine his title, which was admitted by many in Syria.

Ver. 50. Day. A. 3853. C.—The left wing proved stronger. But the right, where Demetrius fought in person, was forced to yield; and the king plunging with horse into a bog, was pierced with arrows, fighting bravely. He had reigned twelve years, and fell a victim to the surrounding kings, whom he had not conciliated. Jos. Just. xxxv. &c.

Ver. 51. Ptolemee, surnamed Philometor, (Ch.) by whose aid Alexander had obtained the victory. C.—This Philometor decided in favour of the Jews against the Samaritans, because the succession of priests was preserved among the former. Jos. Ant. xiii. 6.—Our Saviour also judged their cause preferable. John 4:22. W.

Ver. 61. Pestilent. So the impious are styled. Ps. 1:1. &c. C.

Ver. 64. Away. When calumniators see the innocent honoured, they are afraid to persecute them. W.

Ver. 65. Dominion. General of his armies, (Vat.) or in Judea. Sacy. M.

Ver. 67. Son. The king had sent his two sons, this Nicator and Sidetes, to Cnidus, that they might be out of danger. The eldest being informed that Alexander had given himself up to debauchery, put himself at the head of an army which Lasthenes of Crete had raised.

Ver. 69. Apollonius, who had deserted Alexander, A. 3856, though appointed governor of Coelosyria by him.

Ver. 70. Mountains. I seem to be fighting with them. Come out, and shew your valour.

Ver. 72. Twice. He alludes perhaps to the defeat of Azarias, and to that where Judas was slain. C.—This captain had also twice thought proper to retreat. C. 6:47. and 7:32. H.

Ver. 77. Army. Josephus says eight thousand foot, &c.

Ver. 80. Army. Lit. “camp,” which the Vulg. puts for an army chiefly of foot. Josephus intimates that Jonathas drew up his forces in the shape “of a tile,” or phalanx, and ordered them to face about on every side. C.—Thus the enemy could only throw darts, but could not penetrate. W.

Ver. 81. Fatigued. In the evening, Simon seeing the enemy’s cavalry tired, fell upon the infantry.

Ver. 83. And. Et qui seems to be mistaken for equi, “the horsemen,” as the Gr. Syr. and Jos. read.—Bethdagon, “the house of Dagon.”—Temple. This is the sense of the Greek. C.—Vulg. has literally, “their idols.” See Judg. 16:23. H.

Ver. 89. Buckle, to be worn on the shoulder. S. Isid.—This honour was very extraordinary. 2 B. 11:35. Alex. Genial. ii. 29.—Blood. Lit. “relations of kings.” H.—The highest officers of the court of Persia bore this title. C. 11:31. Est. 16:11. Xen. Cyr. viii.

1 MACHABEES 11

Ver. 1. Shore. By this hyperbole, used in Scripture, we are given to understand that the army was greater than could be easily numbered or conceived. W.—Philometor had assisted Alexander, with a treacherous design of seizing the kingdom when it should be weakened. H.—He had given him his daughter for the same purpose; and now, when Demetrius asserted his claims, he pretended that he would defend his son-in-law, and was thus admitted into all the towns. At Ptolemais he declared his real design, still pretending that Alexander had laid snares for him. While the latter was raising forces in Cilicia, he took Antioch, where he placed two diadems on his head; slew the cruel Ammonius, who had chiefly irritated the people against his master; gave the wife of Alexander to Demetrius; and, in conjunction with him, went to attack Alexander near the river Œnoparas. Here he received some mortal wounds; though Alexander was routed, and soon after slain in Arabia. Livy lii. Usher, A. 3859.

Ver. 4. Way. This was done to irritate him against Jonathas, but he had now something else to do.

Ver. 7. Eleutherus, about eighty leagues. Some place this river between Tyre and Sidon, but it ran to the north of Libanus. C. 12:24. Pliny, &c.

Ver. 8. Seleucia. Lit. “of the cities to Seleucia, on the sea shore,” (H.) at the mouth of the Orontes, (C.) or Belus. Ptolemy.

Ver. 9. Hath. To what measure will not ambition stoop! These kings made light of adultery; and Cleopatra was still more dissolute, and married a third. H.

Ver. 10. Kill me. Josephus thinks this was true: but it seems only a pretext.

Ver. 13. Antioch. The whole province rebelled on account of the cruelties of Ammonius, who put on women’s clothes, but could not escape. Philometor was proclaimed king, yet besought the people to forget the injuries of Soter, and receive his son, as for his part he was content with Egypt. Just. xxxv. Jos. C.—Perhaps he saw that the time was not come for his annexing Syria to his dominions, though that was his real and primary intention. H.

Ver. 14. Places of Syria, (C.) and the parts adjoining to Cilicia, (H.) which always continued faithful. C.

Ver. 17. Zabdiel, “God’s dowry,” or Diocles, “the glory of God,” (H.) prince of Arabia. Diod. xxxii.—Only five accompanied Alexander. His generals sought to make their peace with his rival, and slew him. Usher.—Exalted. Alas! to become the victim of death in the space of a week! H.

Ver. 18. After. He had been mortally wounded in the battle, and remained insensible four days. When the head of Alexander was brought, he came to himself; but died three days after, while the physicians were trepanning him.—Camp. The Egyptians loudly complained of this ingratitude of Demetrius. Jos. C.—Perhaps he saw through the perfidy of Philometor, who had designed to keep the kingdom. H.

Ver. 20. Castle. Soter’s offers had not been accepted. C. 10:22. Jonathan thought himself independent of his son. C.

Ver. 21. Nations, by their actions. They wished to be free from the restraint of the law. H.—When pastors seek to extirpate sin, the wicked represented this to princes as dangerous to the state. W.

Ver. 23. Priests. These would testify that what he said in his defence was true. M.—Zealous men will not cease to repress wickedness, as God’s word is not tied. 2 Tim. 2. W.

Ver. 27. Friends. Gr. “he set him at the head of his first friends,” (H.) treating him with the greatest distinction. C.—Wise kings will always esteem zealous ministers, knowing that their fidelity to God is an assurance that they will also be faithful to their sovereign. W.

Ver. 28. Governments, (toparchias) or “principalities.” These had already been given, and are now enriched with immunities, like the rest of Judea and Samaria. W.—The latter was not one of the governments, but they were taken from the country and from Galilee. Jonathas redeems all taxes.

Ver. 31. Parent. Lasthenes had procured his troops, and was made prime minister. But abusing his power, threw his master into many difficulties. C.

Ver. 34. Apherema. This city is specified in Gr. H.—Syriac styles it

Aphrem: probably a town of Ephraim; (John 11:54) perhaps Ephra, where Gedeon was born. Judg. 6:11.—Lyda, or Dospolis. C.

Ver. 35. Of them. He remits only the arrears, (Grot.) or all future claims, which are given up to the priests. H.—Pans, or “lakes.” Some would substitute (C.) τιμας, “dues,” but without necessity. H.—The lake of Sodom furnished salt of a sharper and more digestive nature than the other. Galien iv. 19. See C. 10:29.

Ver. 38. Nations, particularly Crete. This most pernicious counsel was probably given by Lasthenes. C.—All people dislike foreigners to be trusted more than natural born subjects. H.

Ver. 39. Tryphon, styled Diodotus before he mounted the throne. C.

Ver. 46. Fight. The king attempted to disarm the citizens of Antioch; but they revolted, and would have slain him in his palace, (Diod. Valesii.) had not the Jews in the country, and those sent by Jonathas, come to his aid. He did not, however, give them a suitable reward. C.—Three thousand faithful slew 100,000 infidels; (W.) or the were joined by others who were already in the king’s army, (H.) or in the neighbourhood, (C.) as well as by the rest of the foreign troops, though the Jews were the most active and numerous. H.

Ver. 54. Diadem, A. 3860. C.—He took the title of Theos Epiphanes, “God appearing;” and that of Nicephorus, “the victorious,” when he took Antioch. Diod. Excerpt. Vales, p. 346. Vaillant

Ver. 56. Elephants. Lit. “beasts;” θηρια. H.

Ver. 57. Four. The three specified, (v. 34.) and probably Ptolemais. C. 10:39.

Ver. 58. In gold. Kings alone had or granted this privilege, (C.) as well as to wear purple or a chain of gold, (W.) or buckle. C. 10:89. H.

Ver. 59. Tyre. Eupator had given only as far as Ptolemais. 2 B. 13:24. This Antiochus gave the two brothers, the highest marks of esteem, making them governors of Phenicia and of Palestine.

Ver. 60. River Jordan. He was then joined by the Syrian forces, and established the power of Antiochus as far as Damascus. Then he proceeded by the sea shore, and took Gaza. C.

Ver. 62. Hand, or made peace by this usual ceremony.

Ver. 63. Treacherously is not specified in Greek.—Cades, a strong city in Galilee.

Ver. 67. Asor, near lake Semechon. Jos. 11:1. Gr. “Nasor,” erroneously. C.—The n is superfluous. H.

Ver. 70. Army. Gr. “captains of the army of the forces.” H.—Only these two captains remained; but there were some soldiers. Josephus says about fifty. Three men would hardly have made a fresh attack. v. 72. W.—Yet feats equally incredible have been performed by Samson and by some of the Romans. H.—The little band of fifty-three entirely defeated the enemy. C.—The two captains and their men alone stood firm.

Ver. 72. Fought. Gr. “fled.” M.—Three thousand. Josephus says two thousand were slain. Ant. xiii. 9. C.

1 MACHABEES 12

Ver. 1. Served, Syria being so much divided. Hence Jonathas went to the two most famous republics of the world, and probably to the Jews beyond the Euphrates, to the Nabutheans, &c. v. 2. C.

Ver. 2. Spartans. The city was also called Lacedemon and Theramne. W.

Ver. 6. People. The Jewish state then greatly resembled those of Rome and of Sparta. The high priest and senate ruled, yet not without the participation of the people.—Brethren, proceeding from the same stock. This was the received opinion in both countries, though without foundation, that we can discover. C. Diss.—The proofs might be known to those who were more concerned. H.—The Spartans, whom Josephus, &c. style Lacedemonians, sprung from Abraham, (v. 21.) and were long ago in league with the Jews. W.

Ver. 7. Onias the third, between the years 3805 and 3829.—Arius. Gr. and Syr. erroneously write, Darius. See v. 20. Jos. Ant. xii. 5.

Ver. 9. Things; the letters of Arius, as the sacred books testified the same. Gr. Jos. Grot.—This sense appears to be the most natural; or we are not interested in make the present application.

Ver. 11. Observances. Gr. Syr. “supplications.” The Vulg. had probably at first, obsecrationibus. The Jews prayed for their allies, &c. to beg for their temporal prosperity, and for their conversion. C. 7:33.

Ver. 13. Kings. Ever since the time of Onias, wars had been waged against Epiphanes, Eupator, Soter, and Nicator. C.

Ver. 19. Letter. Arius wrote before Onias, though the letter be placed later. W.—Josephus give it rather in different words. The answer to Jonathan was sent to Simon, A. 3861. C. 14:22. C.

Ver. 21. Spartans. They had probably some old genealogies. Jos. xii. 5. and xiii. 9. W.—Yet they might not be true. Few nations can ascertain their origin; and most run into fabulous accounts, if we except the Jews. C. See v. 6. H. Salien, A. 3821.—There is nothing certain. Rep. Heb. 1:2. M.

Ver. 23. Back. It would hence appear that the Jews wrote first which does not seem to be the case from Josephus, &c. C.

Ver. 24. Demetrius. He resided at Laodicea, feasting, (Diod.) while his generals attempted to detach Jonathas from Antiochus, but without success. They fled at his approach beyond the river Eleutherus, from which Laodicea was not remote. C.

Ver. 29. Burning. They had been left to conceal the flight. M.—Grabe supplies, “and they departed,” at the end of v. 28. H.

Ver. 31. Zabadeans. No nation of this name is known; whence most people read “Nabatheans,” after Josephus. They had been allies of the Jews, but perhaps took part with Demetrius. C.

Ver. 33. Of it, as it was designing to revolt. Jonathas had possession before. C. 10:73. M.

Ver. 36. Mount. Lit. “height,” (H.) or wall, to prevent the garrison from receiving supplies. C.

Ver. 37. For. Gr. “he approached,” which Grabe substitutes instead of “was fallen down.” H.

Ver. 38. Adiada, or Addus, (C. 13:13) in the plain west of the mountains of Juda. C.

Ver. 39. Tryphon. In a moral sense, Tryphon represents the practice of the devil, who seeks first to deceive pastors. For, as S. Gregory (hom. xxxviii.) teaches, if the pastor’s life be corrupt, his doctrine will be contemned. W.

Ver. 40. Bathsán, or Scythopolis, below the lake of Genesareth. Tryphon was not content with governing under the young Antiochus. He was afraid lest Jonathas should oppose his measures, (C.) knowing that he was a man of probity, to whom the king had shewn favour.

Ver. 49. Plain of Esdrelon, or Mageddo, (M.) styled also the vale of Jezrahel, and perhaps Arboth. C. 5:23. and 9:2.

Ver. 50. Slain. So it was reported, though falsely. C.

1 MACHABEES 13

Ver. 1. Simon, the fourth high priest and prince of his family, who was judged by his father to be the most prudent. C. 2:65. He endeavoured to defend the nation. W.

Ver. 11. Jonathan, his friend, (Jos.) brother of Mathathias, mentioned C. 11:70.

Ver. 12. Custody: tied to a soldier, like S. Paul. Acts 18:16.

Ver. 13. Plain; Sephala, (C. 12:38) above Eleutheropolis, by which road Jerusalem wa most easily attacked. C. 6:31. C.

Ver. 19. Talents. If he had refused, he might have been suspected of avarice or of ambition. M.—Jonathan would most probably have been slain, and the people would have revolted. S. Tho. W.

Ver. 20. Ador, called Adoraim, (2 Par. 2:9) near Marissa; or perhaps Eder, a southern city of Juda, may be meant. Tryphon attempted in vain to cross the mountains. C.

Ver. 22. But. Gr. “and that very night there was very much snow; and he came not on account of the snow; and he rose, and went into,” &c. H.—He gave this out, or intended to go, but went back along the Jordan.

Ver. 23. Bascama; perhaps Besech. 1 K. 11:8. C.

Ver. 28. Pyramids. In such the kings of Egypt were buried. Lucan viii. 998.—Simon enclosed the pyramids with porticoes, supported by pillars all of one piece of marble. Josephus and S. Jerom saw the sepulchres. C.—One was probably designed by Simon for himself. H.

Ver. 29. Arms, to denote their victories or solicitude for the people’s welfare both by sea and land. The Machabees had repaired the port of Joppe, by which they traded with the Mediterranean. C. 10:75. and 14:5. Trophies of arms, in reality or in sculpture, were commonly placed on the tombs of great generals. Ezec. 32:27. Virg. C.—Simon promoted not vain but true glory, exciting others to imitate the virtuous. W.—The humble desire honour in God; proud men will be honoured more than God. S. Aug. c. Secund. xvii.—How many epitaphs record the ambition and vices of men! Those which praise real virtues extend the glory of God, who is the author of them all. W.

Ver. 31. Slew him. He hired surgeons to cut him, pretending it was for the stone. Epit. Liv. lv. Just. xxxvi.—Antiochus was only ten years old. A. 3861.

Ver. 32. Crown. The soldiers declared for him, in hopes of great rewards which he had promised. He assumed the name of Tryphon, “wearing a helmet,” or “addicted to pleasure.” His medals have always a helmet; and the tyrant styles himself, (C.) “king Tryphon, the autocrat,” (H.) or generalissimo. He sent a golden statue of victory to Rome, but the senate inscribed the name of the young Antiochus upon it. The first conquest of Tryphon was Apamea, where he was born.

Ver. 34. Demetrius, who still possessed a great part of Syria. Jonathas adhered to his competitor. But Simon preferred him before Tryphon, on condition that he granted the immunities which Soter had promised. C. 10:29.

Ver. 37. Palm; bahem, “a precious chain.” W.—Gr. bainen, which Grotius thinks is derived from bais, a palm branch. C. John 12:13.—It was probably of gold, (M.) like that offered by Alcimus. 2 B. 14:4. Some suppose that a collar or garment, adorned with gold and representations of palm branches, may be meant; such as that which was presented by the Romans to Masinissa. Livy iii. B. x.—Syriac translates, “a robe.”

Ver. 38. Force. He grants all Simon’s requests, which he had offered to do at the beginning of his reign. C. 11:37.

Ver. 39. Oversight. All sins in some sense proceed from ignorance.

Ver. 41. Israel, A. 3861, B.C. 143. C.—Thus, after a hard struggle, the independence of the Jews was acknowledged. H.

Ver. 42. Public. Gr. “contracts.” M.—This became a new era. H.

Ver. 43. Gaza. It had revolted. C. 11:61.—Engines. Gr. ἐλεπο λεις, denoting engines of a great size, invented by Demetrius at the siege of Rhodes, who was thence styled “the city taker.” C.—Its top was covered with mortar, (Marcellin xxiii. 9.) and the sides with raw hides and iron bars, so that fire or stones made no impression upon it, while people within moved it to batter the walls by means of wheels. When a breach was made, they jumped into the city, v. 44. See Vitruv. x. 22.

Ver. 47. Idols, of a domestic kind. The city had been assigned to Juda, and must be purified. Jos. 15:47. Deut. 7:25. C.—Mercy is most pleasing to God and men, provided justice and religion be not injured. W.

Ver. 48. Habitation sometimes, to guard against Egypt.

Ver. 50. Castle. It had been occupied by the Syrians, from A. 3836 to 3861.

Ver. 52. Days; the octave, or the 23rd of the second month, annually. H.—This was like one of the days appointed. C. 10:34. The festival was observed perhaps only during his reign. Josephus takes no notice of it; but informs us (C.) that Simon reflecting on the miseries inflicted on the city by this castle, and fearing lest it should fall again into the hands of the enemy, advised the people to level it to the ground; which they did in the space of three years. Ant. xiii. 11. They did not commence immediately, as Sidetes reclaimed it three years hence. C.

Ver. 53. Fortified. This work employed them six years. Jos.

Ver. 54. John. Hyrcan, who defended the country, (C. 16. W.) and succeeded Simon.—Gazara; perhaps Gadara, (C.) which the Jews seized, (Strabo xvi.) or Gaza. M.

1 MACHABEES 14

Ver. 1. Two. It is not easy to conceive why Josephus and Grotius place this expedition before the death of young Antiochus. C. 13:31. 41. Demetrius was become contemptible, and had a mine to regain his reputation by attacking the Parthians, who had taken many provinces under the prudent conduct of Mithridates. The Greeks were impatient of this yoke. Many []ked to Demetrius, and he gained several victories; but after two years, was perfidiously taken by a general of the Parthians while treating of peace. Mithridates took him for a warning through the places which seemed favourable to him; but afterwards he sent him into Hyrcania, gave him his daughter in marriage, with the badges of royalty, and promises of restoring him to his kingdom.—Tryphon. After the misfortune of Demetrius, he abandoned himself to his pleasures; and his adherents put themselves under Cleopatra, the wife of his rival, who resided at Seleucia, upon the Orontes. Usher, A. 3863. Just. xxxvi. and xxxviii. C.

Ver. 2. Arsaces. This was the common title of the Parthians kings, after the founder of that powerful monarchy. Just. xli.

Ver. 4. Days. Few princes have obtained such a character: for how shall they give content to all? C.—Simon had governed two years in troubles, but henceforward enjoyed peace, till Sidetes disturbed it. W.

Ver. 5. Sea, or to all places which they went by water. The port was however very indifferent.

Ver. 7. Captives, taken from the enemy; (C.) or he liberated many Jews. W.—Gazara, or Gadara. C.

Ver. 9. Land. The judges (H.) strove to promote peace.—Robes. Spoils which they had taken; (C.) or they were ever ready to defend the country, though peace now prevailed.

Ver. 10. Ammunition: provisions and engines of war. C.—Earth: Judea and the environs. H.

Ver. 12. Fig-tree: a picture of perfect peace. 3 K. 4:25.

Ver. 20. Princes. Cleomenes, the last king, died in Egypt, A. 3784, and the tyrant Nabis perished long before this time. Grot.—Cities. Many depended on Sparta, the metropolis. W.

Ver. 23. Public. Lit. “in the distinct books of the people.” Gr. “open for inspection;” ἀποδεδειγμένοις. H.—Patentibus seu publicis. Vat.—The substance of the letter is here given.

Ver. 24. Of Rome is not in Gr. or Syr. and it is allowed that the sequel seems rather to express the gratitude of the Jews to Simon. C.—When peace was established, and friendship with the Romans and Lacedemonians renewed, the whole nation in gratitude to Simon, who now remained alone of all the sons of Mathathias, confirm him in the office of high priest for ever, or during his life; and decree that his progeny shall enjoy the same. v. 41. 49. W.—They should not be deposed, like Onias III. &c.

Ver. 26. He. Gr. “He has established: (Syr. “acted valiantly.” C.) He, his brethren, and his father’s house, and they have routed the,” &c. as C. 16:2. H.

Ver. 27. Elul, the last of the civil year, A. 3863.—At. Lit. “in Asaramel,” (H.) “the court of Mello,” (C.) or “the prince of God,” (Serar.) as if it were another Hebrew title of Simon. Prot. “At Saramel.” Marg. “or Jerusalem, peradventure, ... or the common hall,” &c. H.

Ver. 34. Gazara, or Gadara. C. 13:51.—Reparation. Lit. “correction.” H.—But correctionem would agree better with the Gr. than correptionem.

Ver. 36. Purify, (castitati.) Syr. “the sanctuary.” Grot. divine “worship.”

Ver. 39. Things. Gr. joins this with the preceding verse. Some copies have, “all things.” He confirmed him in all his rights.

Ver. 41. Prophet. This limitation was proper, as the people had chosen this family. The Jews expected the faithful prophet shortly. C. 4:46. Mal. 3:1. Agg. 2:7. God was pleased that none should appear for some time before that event. C.—The high priesthood continued in this family till Herod began to sell it,—soon after which Christ appeared. W.—The sceptre seemed to belong to Juda. Yet they consent to be governed by Levites, till God signify his will by some prophet. M.—This consent of the nation, in which Juda was most powerful, shews that the sceptre was not departed from his thigh. H.

1 MACHABEES 15

Ver. 1. Demetrius. Soter, and brother of Nicator, (C.) now a captive. W.—When the latter went beyond the Euphrates, he wandered for fear of Tryphon, till he found rest at Rhodes, where he heard of his brother's misfortune, and was invited by his wife to marry her. He therefore took the title of king, when he wrote to Simon from the isle of Rhodes. Soon after he landed (C.) at Seleucia, and married Cleopatra, who was indignant that her husband had taken to wife the daughter of Mithridates. Just. xxxvi.—Tryphon's adherents flocked to him: exolescente favore recentis imperii. Trog. xxxix. Eusebius—Demetrius was styled Sidetes, either because he came from Side, in Pamphylia, or because he was fond of “hunting.” Yet his medals have, “Euergetes.” Vaillant, Usher, A. 3864. C.—Prince. Gr. “Ethnarch.” H.—Josephus often uses this title for an independent prince, beneath the dignity of a king. C.

Ver. 2. And to. Gr. properly adds, “and Ethnarch, and to,” &c.

Ver. 3. Pestilent; disturbers of the peace, (H.) like Alexander, Antiochus, and Tryphon.

Ver. 5. Oblations, such as were presented to the Lord, or remittances. He is very liberal of what he could not get back.

Ver. 6. Money. He supposed that Simon would have his own image on it. But we find no human figure on the coins which he sent out during the first four years, but only vessels, trees, inscriptions, &c. Afterwards he seems to have desisted, either (as some suppose) because it was not conformable to the law, or because he found it brought no profit to the state.

Ver. 11. Dora, to the south of Carmel Tryphon had first tried the fortune of a battle. C.

Ver. 15. Numenius. He had been sent to Rome almost two years before, and now brought letters not only to the Jews, but to various kings and nations on their behalf. W.

Ver. 16. Lucius, Calvus, or Philus, (Drus. Grot.) or Piso, (Usher. Sal. M.) whose colleague Lenas, went against Numantia. C.—Ptolemee, surnamed Physcon, brother and successor of Philometor, (Ch.) in Egypt. H.

Ver. 22. Attalus, &c. Attalus was king of Pergamus, Ariarethes was king of Cappadocia, and Arsaces was king of the Parthians. Ch.—Demetrius was prisoner of the latter.

Ver. 23. Lampsacus, in Mysia, a free city.—Delus, an island of great trade after the fall of Carthage.—Myndus, a port in Caria.—Sicyon, another in Achaia.—Samus, and independent and powerful island near Asia Minor.—Pamphylia, in Cilicia, beyond Taurus.—Lycia had been freed from the Rhodians, by the Romans.—Alicarnassus, an ancient town of Caria, opposite to the isle of Coo.—Side, in Pamphylia. v. 1. Grotius conjectures we should read, “Sidon.”—Aradus, near the coasts of Syria.—Rhodes, famous for its Colossus.—Phaselis, a maritime town near Lycia.—Gortyna, a city of Crete, which was then an independent island.—Gnidus, an island near Rhodes.—Cyrene, a province of Egypt. It must then have been partly free, and in alliance with Rome.

Ver. 24. Simon, that he might know what they had done for him, and to whom he might apply for aid.

Ver. 25. Second. He had interrupted the siege, or made a fresh wall or attack.

Ver. 27. Not. Josephus seems to assert the contrary; observing that the king applied for aid, which was readily granted. Yet he soon forgot the favour, and sent Cendebeus against the Jews. He passed over the embassy of Athenobius. v. 28.

Ver. 28. Gazara. The edit. of Basle properly reads, “Gadara.”

Ver. 30. Taken, such as Joppe, the three governments, &c. C.

Ver. 35. Talents. Simon subdued these two towns, because they attacked his country; but as they did not otherwise belong to him, he paid (W.) or offered to pay something for them. H.—Those of Joppe drowned two hundred Jews. 2 B. 12. What Gazara had done we know not. W.

Ver. 37. Orthosias, in Phœnicia, opposite to Aradus. Hence he fled to Apamea, (C.) strewing silver in the way to stop his pursuers. Front. ii. 13.—The city was however besieged, and he slew himself, (Strabo xiv.) or was slain after a reign of five years. Jos. Vaillant.

Ver. 38. Coast. This government was granted to Simon by young Antiochus. C. 11:59.

Ver. 39. Gedor, near Jamnia. Gr. “Cedron,” (C.) as also v. 40 formerly (H.) in the Vulg. A city was here repaired on the river Cedron. W.—

Syr. "Hebron."—Fortify. Lit. "to block up." H.—But this is the import of the Greek. C.—Alex. MS. "to fortify cities." H.—Gates, or defiles. Grot.

1 MACHABEES 16

Ver. 1. John. He was afterwards surnamed Hircanus, and succeeded his father in both his dignities of high priest and prince. He conquered the Edomites, and obliged them to a conformity with the Jews in religion; and destroyed the schismatical temple of the Samaritans. Ch.—He was the eldest son and successor of Simon. W.—Gazara, the same with Gaza, (M.) or Gadara, where John resided. He came to announce the ravages of the enemy.

Ver. 3. Be you. Gr. and Syr. "you, by mercy of God, are of a proper age. Be you instead of me and my brother; (Jonathas, with whom Simon had governed. C.) and going out, fight valiantly for," &c. H.

Ver. 4. Horsemen. This is the first time we find them in the army. Judas had only infantry, as more conformable to the law; (Deut. 17. Tournem.) or he had not been able to procure any. H.

Ver. 6. He, John. Ch.—A leader must be ever ready to set his men a pattern, which they will be ashamed not to follow. H.

Ver. 8. Holy. Rom. edit. expresses this word, (C.) which Grabe supplies. H.—The priests sounded, (C.) and God fulfilled his promise of victory. Num. 10:9. M.—Hold: Gedor. C.

Ver. 9. Cedron, otherwise called Gedor, the city that Cendebeus was fortifying. Ch.—The same mistake, (C.) if it be one, (H.) is made in Greek, C. 15:39.

Ver. 10. Towers of wood, (C.) erected for sentinels. Grot.

Ver. 14. Sabbath, now called Sebeth, corresponding to January and February. C.

Ver. 15. Doch or duk, (H.) in Syr. means "a watch tower." Grot.—Josephus styles it Dagon. It was not far from Jericho, over which Ptolemee governed. He wished to rule over all the country, by calling in the Syrians. C.

Ver. 16. Plentifully. Lit. "were inebriated." But this expression often denotes no more than taking a moderate sufficiency, (H.) or making good cheer, (Gen. 43:34. John 2:10. Lyr. T. C.) without any excess. Ps. 64:10. S. Aug. q. 144. Gen.—The first and last years of Simon were disturbed; the rest were spent in peace. He began A. 170. C. 13:41. W.—Nothing can be added to the praise bestowed upon this great man. C. 14:4. &c. Josephus (C.) and the author of 4 Mac. 1. (or xx. Arab. H.) give a fabulous account of the siege of Doch. Ant. xiii. 14. and Bel. i. 2. See Salien, A. 3919. and Usher, 3869.

Ver. 17. Treachery. Syr. “crime.” Gr. also, “revolt.” It seems that king Antiochus participated in this murder, and had promised the government of the country for a reward.

Ver. 24. Father. Such annals were kept; and from these Josephus has collected his account of the latter times. C.—Some think that the Fourth B. of Mac. contains an extract of the work here mentioned. Six. Bib. i. Read 2 B. 1:1. W.—What is preserved in the seven middle chapters in the Arabic version is given by Calmet who omits the 19 first and 32 last chapters. The whole has been published by Desprez. It differs in many points from Josephus, in the history of Hircan. A. 3869, Sidetes besieged the new governor in Jerusalem, and after granting him a truce, during the octave of tabernacles, makes peace on very hard terms. Hircan takes money from the tomb of David, or rather from the secret treasures of the kings of Juda, and attends the king in his expedition into Persia, where Sidetes is slain, and the Macedonian yoke is entirely thrown off. A. 3874. The pontiff obliges the Idumeans to receive circumcision the following year. In 3877, he renews the alliance with the Romans. 4 B. 3. Soon after, the Jews write to their brethren in Alexandria. 2 B. 1:10. In 3894, Hircan undertakes the siege of Samaria, which his two sons continue. They defeat Antiochus of Cizicum, while Hircan puts Lathyrus to flight, and Samaria is razed to the ground. After a reign of twenty-nine years, Hircan dies. A. 3898. Eus. Dem. viii. 2. C.—Aristobulus, Alex. and Hircan, his children, succeed in order. Alexander Janneus, the son of the last, reigns prosperously, and his widow is afterwards regent for nine years. Her eldest son, Hircan, being opposed by Aristobulus, the interference of Pompey is desired. He takes the latter prisoner to Rome, A. 3955, when Augustus came into the world.—Cæsar being made dictator, liberated Aristobulus, who was now pontiff; but Pompey caused him, and Alex. his son, to be slain. Antipater, who had adhered to Hircan, procures Phasaël and Herod, his sons, to be made governors of Judea and Galilee. The latter married Mariamne, daughter of Hircan, and the last of the Asmonean family, whom he afterwards put to death. He wrests the kingdom from Aristobolus; and having offended the people by some heathenish structures in compliment to Augustus, endeavours to please them by rebuilding the temple, A. 3982. Not long after, Christ appeared; and thus we are brought to the more happy days of the gospel. H.

2 MACHABEES

THE SECOND BOOK OF MACHABEES

INTRODUCTION

This Second Book of Machabees is not a continuation of the history contained in the First; nor does it come down so low as the First does, but relates many of the same facts more at large, and adds other remarkable particulars, omitted in the First Book, relating to the state of the Jews as well before as under the persecution of Antiochus. The author, who is not the same with that of the First Book, has given (as we learn from C. 2:20. &c.) a short abstract of what Jason, of Cyrene, had written in the five volumes, concerning Judas and his brethren. He wrote in Greek, and begins with two letters, sent by the Jews of Jerusalem to their brethren in Egypt. Ch.—Hence the whole book has been considered by some as an epistle. Cotel. Can. Ap. p. 338.—But it is easy to distinguish the letter from the history, (C.) to which a preface is prefixed. C. 2:20. Yet the Alex. copy has at the end, “A letter concerning the acts of Judas Mach.” H.—The appendix of two epistles was added to the First Book by him who wrote the second, (W.) abridging the work of Jason. H.

2 MACHABEES 1

Ver. 1. Egypt. They are invited to worship at Jerusalem. M.—It seems these were most considered; perhaps being more numerous. C.—They had also a schismatical temple. H.

Ver. 7. Demetrius Nicator. The date refer to what goes before.—Nine. This author dates from autumn, whereas the preceding begins the era of Seleucides, in spring, which accounts for the apparent contradictions. C.—Trouble. As they had written when in distress, so they now testify their joy and gratitude to God, begging their brethren to keep the dedication of the new altar. W.—This first letter, sent during the heat of the persecution raised by Epiphanes, is lost.—Kingdom. Judea was then tributary to Egypt; yet Jason applied to the Syrian monarch, and instead of waiting for the death of Onias III. wished to purchase his dignity, and to change the manners of the people. Josephus gives contradictory accounts of these affairs, (C.) if he be really the author of 4 Mac. H.

Ver. 8. Flour, (mincha) including corn, &c. After Judas had purified the temple, the usual sacrifices were offered. C.

Ver. 9. Scenopegia; viz. the encenia, or feast of the dedication of the altar, called here scenopegia, or feast of the tabernacles, from being celebrated with the like solemnity. Ch. C. 10:6.—The real feast occurs in the month of Tisri. C.

Ver. 10. Eight. Thus the preceding letter is dated, according to many, (M.) as there was no Judas or Aristobolus known at this time. But Judas, the Essene prophet, (C. 2:14. W.) must have flourished about that period; (Jos. Ant. xiii. 19. C.) and one Aristobolus wrote something in the Scripture for Philometor. Clem. Strom. v. Eus. Hist. ii. 17.—After Philadelphus, the kings of Egypt had commonly Jews among their preceptors. Rupert, Vict. x. 15.—This person is supposed to have instructed Physcon. C.

Ver. 11. King. Antiochus Sidetes, who began to make war upon the Jews, while Simon was yet alive; (1 Mac. 15:39) and afterwards besieged Jerusalem, under John Hircanus. So that the Judas here mentioned (v. 10.) is not Judas Machabeus, who was dead long before the year 188 of the kingdom of the Greeks, for he died in the year 146 of that epoch; (see above, 1 Mac. c. 2, v. 70, also the note on chap. 1, v. 2.) but either Judas, the eldest son of John Hircanus, or Judas the Essene, renowned for the gift of prophecy, who flourished about that time. Ch.—Epiphanes may as well be meant. The ancestors of those who wrote resisted him.

Ver. 12. Persia. This country is not specified in the Rom. and Alex. Sept. Other copies have, “He God made them who attacked the holy city flee in swarms to Persia.” Syr. Vat.—the name of Persia now comprised all the dominions of Antiochus; Rupert understands Sidetes. C.

Ver. 13. Nanea. A Persian goddess, which some have taken for Diana, others for Venus. Ch.—Her temple at Ecbatana was renowned. 1 B.

Ver. 14. Dowry. Thus the pagans played with religion. M.—Anthony having espoused the Minerva of Athens, required the city to give him 1000 talents for her portion. Dion. Seneca, suasov. 1.—Heliogabalus and Caligula pretended to marry the celestial Venus or the moon. C.

Ver. 16. Slew. Lit. “struck.” Gr. “stoned.” Yet Epiphanes escaped. (C. 10:9. and 1 B. 6) having received some wounds. But a fall from his chariot, and vexation, hastened his death. H.—Some of his followers, who had advanced farther into the temple, perished. C.

Ver. 18. Scenopegia. The dedication was observed by the people bearing branches, in memory of their late forlorn condition on the mountains. H.—See v. 2.—Fire. This feast occurred in Tisri. 2 Esd. 8:1. 14. C.

Ver. 19. Persia. Babylonia, called here Persia, from being afterwards a part of the Persian empire. Ch.—Thus S. Chrys. (H. 6. in Mat.) says, the Jews were delivered from “the Persian captivity.” W.—All beyond the Euphrates was now called Persia.—Valley of Topheth, where (C.) it is still shewn. Doubdan.—The miraculous pit was enclosed by Artaxerxes. C. 5:23. H.—Four miracles occurred respecting this fire. v. 20. 22. 32. W.

Ver. 21. The priest. Gr. “Nehemias ordered the priests to sprinkle with the water both,” &c. H.—Modern Jews say the sacred fire was not in the second temple. But Gorionides and 4 Mac. admit this fact. C.—Elias obtained fire upon his sacrifice nearly in the same manner. H.

Ver. 23. Jonathan, one of the chief priests; perhaps Joiada, Eliasib’s son. C.

Ver. 29. Spoken, promising these favours. Deut. 30:3. H.

Ver. 32. Altar. This second flame came immediately from heaven, and overpowered that proceeding from the mud. C.

Ver. 34. A temple. That is, an enclosure or a wall round about the place where the fire was hid, to separate it from profane uses, to the end that it might be respected as a holy place. Ch.—Such open enclosures are often styled temples. C.—Gr. “But the king enclosing it, made it sacred, (ιερον) having examined the fact.” H.

Ver. 35. Hand. The copies vary much. La Haye.

Ver. 36. Nephthar, or rather Necphar. Grot.—Nephi. Greek has the former word. Rom. copy and Syr. Naphtai; may be derived from Chal.

phetir, “pure, unmixed.” C.—Nephthar may signify “deliverance,” as sacred things are rescued from common use. W.

2 MACHABEES 2

Ver. 1. The descriptions. That is, the records or memoirs of Jeremias, a work that is now lost. Ch.—It was extant, B.C. 142. C.—S. Ambrose (Of. iii. 14.) writes at large concerning this miracle. W.

Ver. 2. Of them. He alludes to his epistle, (C.) Bar. 6:11. W.

Ver. 4. And the ark. These were not taken by the Chaldeans. Jer. 52. M.—Whether they were removed before or after the capture of the city, is disputed. Salien, A. 3446.—Besides the authority of this book, it is most probabe that Jeremias should have preserved them, as he was high in favour. Jer. 39:11. W.—Hence most believe that Nabuzardan granted him leave. C.—Eupolemus says Nabuchodonosor did this after he took the city. Eus. præp. ix. 39.—Others think the prophet removed them under Joakim, having informed only a few of the priests. N. Alex.—Mountain; Nebo. Deut. 32:49.

Ver. 7. Mercy. Whether the ark, &c. were in the second temple, as this seems to insinuate, has been much debated. The negative seems best established and these promises refer to the Messias, prefigured by the ark. God wished to withdraw the Jews by degrees from their attachment to these sensible things, and to raise their minds to those of a more spiritual nature. S. Amb. Rupert, &c. C. Diss.—Salien (A. 3609) proves at large, that the ark was discovered at the same time as the sacred fire. M.—Yet Josephus (Bel. vi. 6.) testifies, that nothing was found in the holy of holies when the Romans took it. Hence others think that the ark will be produced to the Jews by Enoch and Elias. Ribera in Agg. i. Tournem.—The first opinion gives most satisfaction. When Christ collected his disciples, he received testimony from the Father and from the Holy Ghost in a bright cloud. The figures of the law are at an end, and there will be no need of restoring them at the consummation of all things. H.

Ver. 9. Treated. Gr. “He was manifested, and like one possessing wisdom, he,” &c. H.—On this occasion, Solomon chiefly displayed his wisdom, praying aloud.

Ver. 10. As. Both dedications lasted eight days, and fire descended. Lev. 9:23 and 2 Par. 7:1.

Ver. 11. Consumed. He alludes to what Moses said after the death of Nadab. Lev. 10:16. C.—Fire consumed the sin-offering as well as the rest.

Ver. 13. Set down. Gr. “explained.”—Books. The Scriptures were not lost. M.—Perhaps before this time no complete collection of them had been made. Esdras would point out and help to discover what had been written. C.—The senate of the nation was also present. Simon Crit. i. 1.—David: the psalms. All the other books may be designated under the name of prophets. H.—Kings; Cyrus, &c. 1 Esd. 6:3. &c. Josephus has inserted many such letters in his work. They were like the title-deeds of the nation. C.—And. Gr. “regarding the presents;” ἀναθεμάτων. H.

Ver. 14. Judas. This seems to be the Essene, who with others wrote this epistle; (C. 1:10. W.) or rather (H.) the Machabee, who was as solicitous to preserve the sacred books as Antiochus was to destroy them. 1 B. 1:59 and 2:48. It is said that another assembly met to admit such books into the canon as had been written since the days of Nehemias.

Ver. 15. Things, collected by Judas. The Bible had been translated into Greek before. But some records might still be wanted by the Jews in Egypt. C.

Ver. 16. The purification. This is the feast of the purifying or cleansing of the temple, (Ch.) the 25th of Casleu. C. 1:9. 18.

Ver. 18. Place. They had now liberty to return. What, therefore, can they mean but the coming of the Messias, who was shortly expected? C.—Many Jews at this time were scattered in other countries, and did not chose to return, like those of Egypt. The people of Judea wish all would live together, as they had done under Solomon. H.

Ver. 19. Place. Read C. 15:38. After the author had written this appendix to the former book, he resolved to add an epitome of the history. Hence in this preface he informs us of the subject, method, reason, and diligence of his short work. v. 20, 24, 5, 6, 9. W.—This piece is very elegant, and contains several rules for writing history. The author was a Jew as well as Jason. v. 24.

Ver. 22. Manifestations: heavenly apparitions. C. 3:25. and 5:2. C.

Ver. 25. Multitude. Gr. also, “confusion of numbers, and the difficulty attending those who wish to dive into εἰσκυκλεισθᾶν, (H.) or to include much (C.) historical relations on account of the quantity of matter.” H.

Ver. 27. No easy task, &c. The spirit of God, that assists the sacred penman, does not exempt them from labour in seeking out the matter which they are to treat of, and the order and manner in which they are to deliver it. So S. Luke wrote the gospel, having diligently attained to all things. Lu. 1:3. Ch.—This evangelist had to inquire of others. W.—Inspiration preserves from all danger of mistake. When something future is revealed, there is less difficulty, as God must then dictate the very words. Hence Jeremias wrote with the utmost ease, as Baruch testified. Jer. 36:18. 32. H.—The prophets had, therefore, only to write or speak from the mouth of God. Others were excited by him to treat of history, &c. and were preserved from error, but not from labour. Bellar. Verb. i. 15.—In vain then do our adversaries attempt to prove that this book is not inspired. M.

Ver. 28. Others. Gr. “have no easy task, so,” &c. H.—He alludes to the custom of choosing a master of the feast, who had to strive to give general satisfaction. Eccli. 32:1. Est. 1:8. C.

Ver. 29. Authors. Gr. “the writer.” H.—Jason resembles an excellent painter, of whose work we desire to give a copy (C.) in miniature, (H.) relying entirely on his veracity. Sa.—Yet as the Church esteems this work to be canonical, what is extracted must be true, and inspired, though the writer seems not to have known that he had such a privilege. God might still guide his pen. M.—The original might also be the work of a sacred writer, as many such appear to have been lost. If it were not, what is here selected cannot be questioned. S. Paul quotes some passages even from heathen poets, which in those cases were true, and thus became part of the word of God. H.

Ver. 30. Master. Such is Jason. I only paint some parts. C.—Paint. Gr. “to burn in and represent to the life, must,” &c. H.—The ancients painted the walls, preparing them by fire, &c. Vitruv. vii. 5. Jos. Ant. xvii. 12. C.

Ver. 32. Nice. Gr. ἐξεργαστικόν, “elaborate disquisitions.” Both must equally seek the truth: but long details are not expected in abridgments as they are in a full history. H.

Ver. 33. Itself. The account of Alex. should be read next, 1 B. 1. W.

2 MACHABEES 3

Ver. 1. City. Three things contribute to the well ordering of a state:

first, the agreement of the principal men; secondly, the observance of the laws; and thirdly, the eminent virtue of the ruler. While three other things disturb it: first, the obstinacy of transgressors who refuse correction; secondly, their malice, seeking revenge against superiors; and thirdly, the avarice of princes, endeavouring to rob the public treasury. v. 4. W.—Onias III. son of Simon II. C. 15:12. C.

Ver. 2. Place; city. H.—See the letter of Antiochus the great. Jos. Ant. xii. 3. C.

Ver. 3. Seleucus, son of Antiochus the great, and elder brother of Antiochus Epiphanes. Ch.—His sending Heliodorus has tarnished his memory.

Ver. 4. Overseer for repairs, which laics might be; (2 Par. 34:8. C.) or Simon was advocate, (Grot.) like the Church defenders, so often mentioned in the councils. C.—To bring. Gr. “about disorder in the city.” H.

Ver. 5. Apollonius, whom Jonathas defeated. 1 B. 10:69.

Ver. 6. Store. He knew that the king provided victims. As Philopator was then in want of money, to pay the tribute imposed by the Romans on his father, he easily persuaded himself that he might seize such a common stock, the state requiring (C.) that individuals or cities (H.) should not be too rich.

Ver. 7. Affairs. Gr. Rom. Some copies read “effects,” or money. All this is related of Apollonius. 4 Mac. 1.

Ver. 10. And provisions is not in Gr. or Syr. C.—Something was to be given for such feasts; (Deut. 14:23. Lyr. M.) or people deposited in the temple their treasures; as all nations have judged that they would be there most secure. Grot. T. C.

Ver. 11. Tobias, or rather “son of Joseph and grandson of Tobias.” Jos. Ant. xii. 4.

Ver. 12. Done. It was contrary to justice.

Ver. 19. Shut up. Hence they were styled alamoth, “hidden,” till they were married. Nothing could give a better idea of the distress of the city. C.—These virgins remained in places near the temple, spending their time in prayer, fasting, and works of piety, till they were espoused. 1 K. 2:22. S. Amb. virg. 1. S. Nys. or Nativ. S. Damas iv. 13. W.—There also pious widows dwelt.—Walls of the temple, which they were not allowed to pass. M.—The city seemed to be taken by an enemy. C.

Ver. 21. Expectation. Gr. “prostration.” H.—It was not unusual to see the Jews fall prostrate on such occasions, to move God or the enemy to pity, v. 15. Judith 4:9. C.

Ver. 24. Obey. Gr. “attend.” They designed to plunder, but in vain. H.

Ver. 25. Horse. Fiery horses took Elias from the earth, (4 K. 2:11) and the mountain where Eliseus was seemed full of such, (Ib. 6:17) which is not less wonderful than what we read here. See S. Amb. (Of. i. 29.) treating of this history. W.

Ver. 39. Visiter. Gr. “epopt,” (H.) or inspector. C.—So those who had the care of a thing were styled. M.

2 MACHABEES 4

Ver. 1. Evils. Thus traitors generally calumniate good governors. The best remedy on such occasions is to apply to those in higher power, rather than to the people, who are but too often prone to favour the factious. W.

Ver. 2. To the. Gr. “of the affairs, who was the benefactor of the city.” H.

Ver. 3. Friends. He had gone to Apollonius.

Ver. 4. King. Philopator, (M.) who knew the real state of the matter.

Ver. 7. Antiochus Epiphanes, who usurped the crown. C. 1:11.

Ver. 8. Sixty. We find 3660 in 4 Mac. which sum is quite exorbitant.

Ver. 9. Youth, under fourteen, to exercise. Vitruv. v. 11.—Men did the like naked in the gymnasium, as women did apart at Lacedemon. Jason wished to make his countrymen adopt the pagan customs, which tended to corrupt their morals. v. 12. C.—Antiochians, to please the vanity of Antiochus, (Serar.) or that they might enjoy the like privileges. Salien. M.

Ver. 10. Rule, as high priest. v. 21 and 50.

Ver. 11. Alliance, afterwards under Judas. 1 B. 8:17. C.—John had procured real advantages for the city. M.

Ver. 12. Houses. Gr. "he led them under the cap;" petasus, sacred to Mercury, or rather to Bacchus, and the emblem of liberty. C.

Ver. 13. Now. Gr. "Thus it was the height of hellenism, and the increase of foreign customs through," &c.—No priest. He did not deserve the title, though he was really a descendant of Aaron. Gr. "not high priest." H.

Ver. 14. Temple. Where true religion is abolished, most people follow none; but rather apply themselves to vanity and worse sins. W.—Allowance. They contributed money, (Grot.) or rather strove to obtain the prize. C.—Discus: "a round stone, with a hole in the middle." Prot. marg. H.—People threw it as high or as far as they could, having one foot up and the other under something resembling a pine-apple. This game was very ancient. Odys. θ. Metam. x.—Gr. "after the invitation of the discus:" the prize was placed in the midst to excite emulation.

Ver. 15. Glories; the honour of being gymnasiarch, or agonothete. C.—They sought after corruptible crowns, while many pay no regard to heaven. 1 Cor. 9:25. H.

Ver. 16. Dangerous. Gr. "misery, and those whose institutes they zealously adopted, and whom in all they wished to resemble, the same they found their enemies and chastisers." H.—God thus punished (C.) their perfidy. H.

Ver. 18. Fifth; perhaps in imitation of the Olympic games, (M.) first instituted at Elea, and afterwards at Alexandria, Athens, &c. Grot. C.

Ver. 19. Sinful. Gr. "spectators, being Antiochians, to carry 300 drachmas. H.—Didrachmas, or double drachmas of Alexandria, which amount only to one Roman. Hence Greek interpreters generally express thus the half sicle.—Silver, or money; (C.) gold. M.—Thus the value would be fourteen times greater. C.—In a MS. of Arundel, 3300 occurs, (Usher.) as well as in the Syr. C.—Necessary. Lit. and Gr. "proper." Grabe supplies this as far as but, v. 20. H.

Ver. 20. Galleys, or adorning them for the sports. The deputies were ashamed to comply with Jason's order; or they judged this use of the money more agreeable to the king. C.—Go to 1 B. 1:17. W.

Ver. 21. Treat. Gr. "when king Ptolemy Philometor ascended the throne;" πρωτοκλισια. H.—Grotius would substitute πρωτοκουρια, "the first hair cutting," which was a great festival, the hair being presented to some deity. Apollonius was sent under the pretence of honouring Philometor, but in reality to sound the dispositions of the nobility respecting the claims of Epiphanes to be the king's tutor.

Cleopatra died this year, A. 3831. The regents of Egypt demanded Celosyria, her portion, and war commenced. C.—Epiphanes pretended to defend Philometor against his younger brother, (Liv. xlv.) but he wished to seize the kingdom. 1 B. 1:17. W.

Ver. 22. Lights, usual in testimony of joy. C.—The roofs at Athens were all illuminated when Anthony entered; (Plut.) and Cæsar ascended the capitol, while forty elephants on each side bore torches. Sueton. xxxvii.

Ver. 23. Brother, and of course a Benjamite, so that the usurpation was doubly criminal. T.—But S. Tho. Petau, &c. suppose that he resembled Simon in guilt, or was his brother-in-law. Josephus informs us that Menelaus was brother of Onias and of Jason; though his authority is not great, as he contradicts himself, (Ant. xii. 6. and xv. see C. 1:7. C.) though not in this point. H.—By the law, those of the tribe of Benjamin could not be priests. Thus the succession was broken and restored in Mathathias. 1 B. 2. W.

Ver. 29. Succeeding to the high priesthood, (Gr. H.) after the death of Menelaus. Jos.—Yet some think he was only his “vicar,” διαδοχον, (Grot. Usher) and he seems never to have been recognised. C.—Was. Gr. “left Crates, who was over the Cyprians,” to act for him, while he sent to arraign Menelaus, or to testify that he had demanded the money in vain. H.

Ver. 30. Mallos, in Cilicia. The Greek cities were more delicate in this respect than those of Persia, which were frequently given to the king’s wives or friends.

Ver. 32. Temple. He was no longer there, but Lysimachus complied with his orders, (C.) v. 39 or Menelaus had taken the vessels with him. H.

Ver. 33. Daphne. This was a famous asylum, to which Onias retreated without worshipping Apollo. He had gone to Antioch to answer the calumnies of Simon; and though Jason got his place, (C.) the king could not help respecting him, (H.) and wept at his death. This is the highest praise of Onias, as even such a monster acknowledged his merit. C.—Cæsar wept when the head of Pompey was shewn to him. V. Max. i. 5.

Ver. 35. Man. The people, (W.) and even the king, admired his solid piety. Thus (H.) the Tyrians buried the innocent. v. 49. W.

Ver. 40. Tyrannus. One of this name occurs Acts 19:9. Gr. “Auransu,” (H.) or one from Auran, near Damascus.

Ver. 41. Ashes. Gr. adds, “lying there,” (H.) in the temple, near the altar, or in the place assigned for them. Lev. 1:16. C.

Ver. 45. Ptolemee, the son of Dorymenus, a favourite of the king, (Ch.) whose perfidy had procured him the government of Celosyria. C. 10:3. and 1 B. 3:38.

Ver. 46. Court. Gr. “peristyle,” or gallery supported by pillars. C.

2 MACHABEES 5

Ver. 1. Second. After he had sent Apollonius, he proceeded no farther then Joppe and Jerusalem; being perhaps afraid of the Romans. C. 4:21. Three years after, as the regents of Egypt demanded Celosyria, he went to meet them in their own country. A. 3834.

Ver. 2. Days. These things were not seen only by people inclined to superstition, or for a short time. There must be true prodigies, as so many false ones have been published. Josephus records what happened before the last siege of Jerusalem, de Bel. vii. 12. C.—Miraculous visions foreshew the wrath of God against sinners, and admonish all to repent, as the emperor Charlemagne interpreted the appearance of a great comet. Fascic. rerum. W.—Yet such things are sometimes only natural effects, which the ignorant misapply. This was not here the case. H.

Ver. 5. Dead. This rumour caused much evil to the Jews. Antiochus was informed that they had rejoiced at the news, and therefore fell upon the city.

Ver. 6. Evil, as the numbers are thus lessened. Thus Tacitus, speaking of the civil wars between Otho and Vitellius, says, detestanda vota, inter duos quorum bello solum id scires deteriorem fore qui vicisset.

Ver. 8. Shut up in prison, out of which he escaped to Egypt; (M.) or he was hard pressed, (C.) or accused. Grot.

Ver. 9. Lacedemon. Lit. “the Lacedemonians,” (H.) who served in the army of Philometor. Grot.—It is certain that this nation was then part of the Achean league, in alliance with Egypt. Polyb. C.—Kindred. The Spartans sprung from Abraham. 1 B. 12:2. (W.) 21. C.

Ver. 10. Burial. Such as was not refused to strangers. The thirty pieces of silver purchased ground for that purpose. Mat. 27:7. C.

Ver. 11. Alliance with him, or refuse to submit. H.—The enterprise of Jason, and the account of their rejoicing, made him form this judgment.—Arms. Josephus (B. i. 1. and vi. p. 929) says the Jews came to meet him, and that he besieged and took the city. But (Ant. xii. 7.) he asserts that his partisans opened the gates without fighting. How shall we reconcile these things!

Ver. 14. Slain, or sold, the latter amounting to one-half of the 80,000.

Ver. 19. Place. Temples and victims are for our own advantage. Is. 1:11. Jer. 6:20 and 3 K. 8:27. God has often suffered sacred places to be profaned, when piety had been disregarded. C.—All religious rites are designed for God's glory and men's welfare; and hence, when they cease to serve God, they holy things are destroyed or taken away. W.

Ver. 21. Foot. These are hyperbolical expressions, denoting the extravagance of Epiphanes after victory. Thus Xerxes made a bridge to join Asia and Europe together; and Caligula made one on the Lucrine lake, that he might have the pleasure of riding upon it. Just. 2. Sueton.—Epiphanes had met with little resistance, so that he had no reason to boast.

Ver. 23. Garizim, or the country of Samaria, over which Andronicus alone was governor.—Who bore. Gr. and Syr. read in the singular, as this regards Menelaus.

Ver. 24. He. Syr. "Epiphanes."—Hateful. Gr. μισαρχην, (H.) "prince of Mysia," (Grot.) or of sinners. H.

Ver. 26. To see, or celebrate the festival. 1 Mac. 1:30. &c. C.

Ver. 27. Was the tenth. That is, he had nine others in his company. Ch.—He was the tenth lawful pontiff, under the Greeks. W.—Judas is specified, because he was the most renowned. His father and five sons, joined by four others retired into desert places, and eat what they could find. C.—These ten dwelt in the mountains. Salien.—They were conducted to battle by Judas, (H.) the Decurio. M.

2 MACHABEES 6

Ver. 1. After, A. 3837.—Old, or senator. Gr. "Atheneus," or "an Athenian senator."

Ver. 2. Olympius. They thought this idol agreed best with the idea of the God of heaven, changing the names of the deities, where they had dominion. Other nations made no resistance: but the Jews knew better. C.—Garizim; viz. the temple of the Samaritans. And as they were originally strangers, the name of Hospitalis (which signifies of or belonging to strangers) was applicable to the idol set up in their temple. Ch.—The Samaritans in time of danger, denied that they had anything to do with the Jews, pretending to be of Sidonian extraction. They even requested that their temple might be dedicated to the Greek Jupiter. Jos. Ant. xii. 7.—Yet Epiphanes chose “the Hospitaller.” C.—Sannaballat procured this temple to be erected in the days of Alexander; and Ananias built another in Egypt, under Philometor. Both were schismatical. Jos. Ant. xi. 8. and xv. 6. W.

Ver. 4. Lewd. Priests on duty were not even allowed to approach to their wives, and the most pure women had no right to go into the interior of the temple. C.—And. Gr. “in the courts, and also bringing in improper things.” H.

Ver. 6. Jew. None did this except he were legally questioned. It would have unnecessarily brought on a persecution. H.—The very name was become criminal, as that of Christian was afterwards. C.

Ver. 7. Sacrifices. Gr. “each month, to the sacrifice (and feast) of entrails,” (H.) which were given back to him who presented the victim. Grot.—The eastern kings celebrated their birth-days; Epiphanes did it every month. 1 B. 1:61. Mat. 14:6.—About. Gr. “to follow the march;” πομπευειν. C.—Prot. “to go in procession to Bacchus, carrying ivy.” Ward (Err. p. 114) reads πομπαδουειν, and refers the reader to the lexicon to see if there be anything in it like the Catholic processions, or whether it signify so much as “to go about,” as other Prot. Bibles translate it. These interpreters frequently use Catholic terms, where they might render them odious. Id. H.

Ver. 8. Ptolemeans, who resided at Ptolemais. C.—Most Gr. copies have Ptolemee. C. 4:45. H.—We find that many of the neighbouring nations invaded the Jews, but were repressed by Judas. 1 B. 5:15.

Ver. 10. Women. See 1 Mac. 1:64. &c. C.—Besides the former massacres, (C. 5) four great martyrdoms are here recorded: first, of two women, with the children; second, of others keeping the sabbath; third, of Eleazar, ninety years old; and fourthly, of the seven brethren, with their mother. C. 7. W.

Ver. 11. Philip, the governor of Jerusalem. Ch.—C. 5:22. H.—See 1 B. 2:31. C.

Ver. 12. Now. A necessary caution for the weak in times of persecution. W.—See C. 7:32. Judith 8:22 and 1 B. 2:52.

Ver. 13. Punished, lest they should become incorrigible. When God neglects to do this, his anger is most terrible. Ezec. 16:42. C.

Ver. 14. Sins. God seems at present to take no notice of the crimes of the Gentiles, or he exterminates them at once, as he did the Chanaanites, Sodom, &c. But the Jews he corrects for their amendment and trial. The sages of paganism never inculcated such excellent maxims.

Ver. 18. Scribes; a priest. S. Amb.—He suffered at Antioch, before the king. C. 7:1. Joseph. l. 2.—The Fathers highly extol his fortitude and virtue, styling him the father of the seven brothers, and the protomartyr of the old law. C.—Yet we find others unnamed suffering before him. v. 10. H.—Eleazar was learned in the Scriptures, and in all divine and human knowledge. W.

Ver. 19. Hateful. Gr. “criminal life, and went first of his own accord to be bastinated;” τυμπανιζεσθαι. H.—S. Paul probably alluded to this torment, Heb. 11:35. It was used among the Jews. C. Diss.

Ver. 20. Life. He would not eat swine’s flesh to save it. Gr. “But spitting it out, (as those ought to come forward who expect to be tortured; or avenged. αμυνεσθαι) of which things it is not lawful to taste through love of life.” H.

Ver. 21. Wicked pity. Their pity was wicked, in as much as it suggested that wicked proposal of saving his life by dissimulation. Ch.—To feign or make outward shew of consenting to a false religion, is never lawful. W.—Gr. “They were set over that wicked feast or sacrifice,” σπλαγχνισμῳ, (H.) in which the entrails were eaten. C.—In this sense the term is used v. 7 and 8 by the Vulg. Here Pity is preferred, as the man seemed to be actuated by it. H.—This generous martyr would not scandalize the weak, by doing a thing in itself lawful, which would have been deemed a prevarication. He was guided by those excellent maxims which Christ, S. Paul, and S. Saba (Mart. Ap. xii.) have inculcated and practised. Mat. 18:7. Rom. 14:14 and 1 Cor. 8:4. 10. C.

Ver. 23. The other. Lit. “hell,” or the grave. H.—Under the old law the saints could not enter heaven, but at their departure were detained in limbo. W.—Some holy doctors have declared that they would rather go to hell than commit a sin. S. Ans.—They understand by hell the torments of that place, but not the opposition to God’s will, which is found in the damned, and constitutes one of the greatest of their pains. H.

Ver. 24. Age. “Old age ought to be the haven, not the shipwreck, of a former life.” S. Amb. de Jacob. W.

Ver. 26. Dead. Nothing could be more express for the torments after death. As the time of the Messias drew near, these truths were more developed. C. 7:9. Wisd. 5:16. Ps. 1:6. C. Grot. Mat. 12:32.

Ver. 30. Pains. Some of the martyrs seem not to have felt their torments. God made them suffer no more than they could bear. H.

2 MACHABEES 7

Ver. 1. Scourges, made of leather thongs; taureis. H.—These brethren are styled Machabees; as Judas rendered this name so famous, that all who suffered or fought valiantly for religion in those times, went by this appellation. Josephus has much embellished this history, and Erasmus still more. The tombs of these martyrs were shewn at Antioch. C.—Their names are not known. H.—Those who wish to see more, may consult the large discourse of Josephus on the Machabees, (W.) though this work be contested, and S. Cyp. iv. ep. 6. S. Amb. i. of. 40. S. Chrys. Aug. Leo, &c. W.

Ver. 6. Pleasure. Lit. “be comforted,” as the Sept. translate, (H.) Deut. 32:36. It may imply that God will avenge or chastise his servants, and then restore them to favour. This latter sense is here adopted. v. 35.

Ver. 8. Language. The Jews have always been very attentive to their own language, though they be forced to learn others for the sake of commerce, and to hold conversation with those among whom they live. This young man, no doubt, understood Greek, in which language his brother had probably spoken. The mother addressed her children in the Hebrew or Syriac tongue. v. 21. 27. C.

Ver. 9. Most wicked. The martyrs have sometimes been inspired by God to speak in harsh language to magistrates; though their office generally commands respect. H.—Life. The resurrection is clearly specified in all these answers. The Redeemer was near at hand. C.—Christiani fuerunt ... factis. S. Aug. ser. i. 2.

Ver. 16. Power. Nothing could be more free than this answer, which greatly resembles that of Christ. John 19:11. C.

Ver. 20. Seven. the last was not yet dead: but he was before this was written, so that the mother's praise was perfect. H.

Ver. 22. Womb. This has always astonished the learned, the infant being formed often against the woman's desire. Job 10:10. Wisd. 7:2. S. Aug. anima i. 15. C.

Ver. 24. Despising. Lit. "despising the voice of the insulter." Gr. "fearing or perceiving that the speech was reproachful." H.—Syr. "turned aside not to hear the reproaches," &c. He did not understand Hebrew; but perceiving the constancy of the young men, he thought that their mother exhorted them to refuse compliance. C.—Happy. This is beyond the power of riches or of any king. H.

Ver. 26. Promised. A promise regards something good; so that if a person should even bind himself by an oath to do evil, he must refrain, as to comply would be another sin. W.—This woman promised to counsel, but not as the king wished, (H.) to gain a prolongation of life and worldly honours for her son. M.—Such an equivocation was lawful. W.—The king might blame himself if he was deceived. H.

Ver. 27. Three years. So long physicians judged it best for children to suck, till they could take solid meat. Vales. lxxxiii. Gen. 21:8. C. —"Chrysippus assigns three years for the nurse." Quint. i. 1.

Ver. 28. Nothing, not out of pre-existent and eternal matter. S. Aug. Nat. boni xxvi. Rom. 4:17.—So God can reduce all to nothing. C. 8:18.

Ver. 29. Mercy, in eternity of bliss. v. 23. Syr. C.

Ver. 36. Life. Gr. "short labour of eternal life, are fallen under the covenant of God." H.—They enjoy that life which God promised.

Ver. 37. God. This was accomplished, v. 17. C. 9:15.

Ver. 38. Cease. The persecution was severe, but short. Judas the next year (A. 3838. C.) began to liberate the nation, (H.) by God's mercy. C. 8:5, 27.

Ver. 40. Undeified, by idolatry. We read 4 Mac. that he threw himself into a boiling cauldron; (C.) and Josephus says his mother "jumped into the fire that she might not be touched by any." But this is uncertain. The Church honours S. Apollonia, who acted thus; (Feb. ix.) it is supposed by divine inspiration. H.

Ver. 41. Consumed. Gr. "died" (H.) of joy: (Sixth. Bib. v. Victoria) she place herself amid the dead bodies, and begged of God to release her soul; which was granted. Arab. Gorion.—But most believe that she suffered martyrdom immediately after her children. Jos. &c.—The Church honoured these martyrs from the earliest ages, and before any other of the Old Testament. We may justly style them the martyrs of the resurrection, as none at that time had spoken of it so distinctly. SS. Naz. Max. of Turin, Gaudentius, &c. have pronounced panegyrics upon them.

Ver. 42. Sacrifices. Gr. σπλάγχνισμους. C. 6:21. H.—Read 1 B. 2:1 where the wars begun by Mathathias, and persecuted by Judas, are recorded. W.

2 MACHABEES 8

Ver. 1. Towns. Lit. “castles.” Gr. “villages.” It also means a town or village; and at this time, Judas chiefly dwelt in the deserts. H.—Many particulars of this war are found 1 B. 3.

Ver. 2. Lord. Prayer is particularly requisite before battle. W.

Ver. 3. Blood of the Jews justly slain. M.—The voice of Abel’s and of Christ’s blood is very different. Gen. 4:10. Heb. 12:24.

Ver. 8. Philip seeing, &c. The governor of Jerusalem found himself unable to contend with Judas, especially after the victories he had obtained over Apollonius and Seron. 1 Mac. 3. Ch.—He was left two years before (C.) to afflict the Jews. W.

Ver. 9. Twenty thousand. The whole number of the forces sent at that time into Judea, was 40,000 footmen and 7,000 horsemen; (1 Mac. 3:30) but only 20,000 are here taken notice of, because there were no more with Nicanor at that time of the battle. Ch.

Ver. 10. Talents. So much the king was in arrear, owing to his prodigality. For which reason he was gone beyond the Euphrates to raise money. His father had to pay the Romans 15,000 talents in twelve years.

Ver. 11. Ninety. Often (C.) a talent was paid for one slave. Jos. Ant. xii. 4.

Ver. 13. Justice. Gr. δίκην, “vengeance” (H.) against the enemies. C.

Ver. 15. Covenant. A just and religious cause is the best help in war. W.

Ver. 16. Seven thousand. In the Greek it is six thousand. But then three thousand of them had no arms. 1 Mac. 4:6. Ch.—If the army was divided into four companies of 1,500, there would be only 6,000. But if Judas had with him 3,000, it would consist of 7,500. C.—Reconciled. Gr. “consternated at,” &c. H.

Ver. 20. Galatians. That is, the Gauls, who having ravaged Italy and Greece, poured themselves in upon Asia in immense multitudes, where also they founded the kingdom of Galatia, or Gallo—Græcia. Ch.—This battle is no where else recorded in Scripture. But it seems to allude to the aid given to Soter by the Jews, (W.) when he repulsed the Galatians. Appian.—Antiochus the great rewarded them for their valour shewn in behalf of his father. Joseph. xii. 3. W.—Six. Gr. “8,000.”—When. Gr. “with 4,000 Macedonians; when the Macedonians being at a stand, the 6,000 (Grabe substitutes 8,000) slew twelve myriads,” &c. H.—Historians have not specified this irruption, as it had no farther consequences. The Galatians were very powerful under Antiochus the great, and sided with him. The consul, Manlius, made them promise to keep within their own territories. But they did not observe this agreement, since they attacked Eumenes while Epiphanes persecuted the Jews. It is not agreed when they made the invasion of Babylonia, then defended by Jewish and Macedonian troops under the king of Syria.

Ver. 22. Joseph; perhaps the same with John Gaddis, or simply a relation.

Ver. 23. Esdras. Gr. and Syr. “Eleazar;” probably the brother of Judas. Grotius thinks that the latter read the account of the death of Eleazar, which must be understood of the martyr, (C. 5) as the brother of Judas was slain under Eupator. Perhaps the law regarding people going to fight was read; (Deut. 20:6 and 1 B. 3:56) or as Judas prepared for battle by prayer and fasting, some portions of Scripture might be selected while they were at Maspha.—Help. So he specifies the victory of God. C. 13:15. C.

Ver. 24. Above nine thousand, viz. including the three thousand slain in the pursuit. Ch.—Three thousand fell on the field of battle. 1 B. 4:15.

Ver. 26. Time. They wished to be in the camp before the sabbath, having designed to collect the spoils.

Ver. 28. Widows. Judas follows the spirit rather than the letter of the law. Num. 31:27. Deut. 14:29.

Ver. 30. Timotheus. C. 10:24. The particulars of this war are not given. It seems to have taken place after the temple was purified. v. 31. We must distinguish this first war from another mentioned. C. 10:24. and 1 B. 5:5. Judas defeated another Timotheus beyond the Jordan. C. 12:10. and 1 Mac. 5:11. 34. 37.

Ver. 31. Jerusalem. They had taken all but the citadel. C. 10:1.

Ver. 35. Apparel, as a general. C.—Fleeing. Gr. “like a fugitive, having rendered himself destitute, he came through the midland country to Antioch above all being fortunate himself in,” &c. H.—He was too happy in having escaped. The Rom. ed. and Syr. agree with us, “being very unhappy,” &c. (C.) which is substituted by Grabe. H.

2 MACHABEES 9

Ver. 1. At. Read 1 B. 4:28. W.—Time, A. 3840. The motives and ill success of this journey are given 1 B. 3:31 and 6:1. C.

Ver. 2. Persepolis; otherwise called Elymais, (Ch.) a chief (W.) “city of Persia.” Hence Elymais may be called Persepolis. H.—The famous city of this name, where Cyrus had built a palace to the astonishment of the world, had been (C.) burnt by Alexander when intoxicated, and urged on by a harlot. Curt. v. 15.—Noble ruins still remain on the Araxes.

Ver. 3. Ecbatana, capital of Media. C.—See C. 1:16. H.

Ver. 4. Forward. He felt a violent fit of the cholera.

Ver. 8. Man. He seems to have claimed divine honours, v. 12. C. 5:21. and 9:8. Dan. 11:36. Arab. C.

Ver. 13. Not like. Because his repentance was not for the offence committed against God, but barely on account of his present sufferings. Ch.—For these he really grieved. 1 B. 6:11. Yet was not sorry for the offence against God and men. So the damned acknowledge that their punishments are inflicted on account of their sins, yet have not true repentance. W.—In like manner Esau repented for the loss of his birthright. Heb. 12:17. M.—Epiphanes had abandoned God, who now laughs at him, (Prov. 1:26) as some of the Machabees had threatened. C. 7:14. 7. 9. 31. 2. 5. 6. He is the model of false penitents, who are actuated by servile fear.

Ver. 14. Free and independent, (C.) like Antioch. Pliny v. 21.

Ver. 15. Athenians. This seems to have been put for Antiochians, C. 4:9. in Greek; which name would suit better here, as Epiphanes had no power over Athens. Grot. C.—Yet it was highly privileged (H.) above all the cities of Greece. M.—Jason had obtained for the citizens of Jerusalem to be called Antiochians. C. 6:1. But this grant had been revoked, or not carried into effect since the late troubles. C.—Here the privilege is to be extended to all the Jews. H.—Ptolemais and Calliroe enjoyed the same. Harduin.

Ver. 16. Sacrifices, as Darius, Philometor, and afterwards (1 B. 10:39.) Nicator did. 1 Esd. 6:9. C.

Ver. 19. Subjects. Lit. “citizens.” H.—Similar addresses (v. 20.) were sent by the emperors to the Romans; and by Cæsar and Anthony to their allies. Jos. Ant. xiv. 17. and 22. Tull. Epist.

Ver. 23. Father: Antiochus the great. The Persian monarchs generally took this precaution.—Countries. So profane authors style the provinces beyond the Euphrates. Diodorus, S. Jerom (in Dan. 11.) and others, inform us that Antiochus attempted to plunder the temple of Belus, at Elymais, and took off a vast sum of money under pretext of paying the tribute to the Romans. But the neighbouring nations fell upon him, and cut him with his army to pieces. Philopator succeeded to the throne.

Ver. 25. Antiochus Eupator, nine years old.—Below. This is lost.

Ver. 26. Favours. He must have been deranged. C.

Ver. 28. Mountains, at Tabes, (Polyb.) in Patacene. Curt. v.—Historians relate that he lost his senses, (daimonesas) being terrified by a demon, on account of his criminal attempt against the temple of Diana. Polyb. excerpt. Vales. S. Jer.—This was a real crime in him, as he took the idol for a deity. But his conduct towards the temple and nation of the Jews would probably weigh heavier upon his conscience. C.—S. Cyprian (exhort.) styles him “an inveterate enemy to all good; nay, in Antiochus antichrist is expressed.” W.

Ver. 29. That was. Syr. “son of his nurse,” appointed regent.—Philometor Lysias asserted his title to the regency, and had the young king, so that Philip applied to the Egyptians to help in the execution of the last will of the deceased. C.—Read 1 B. 6:17. W.

2 MACHABEES 10

Ver. 1. City. He had done both before the death of Epiphanes, (C.) after the fourth battle against Lysias. 1 B. 4. W.—The author has given the journey and death of Antiochus together, and now returns to his subject.

Ver. 2. Altars. Such were erected before the houses. 1 B. 1:50. Jer. 11:13.

Ver. 3. Stones; “heated,” (Gr. Syr. Serar.) or by miracle, (Arab. Gorion. T.) or striking fire with a flint upon tinder. In this manner the Church still renews fire on Holy Saturday. The Jews could not use profane fire in the temple. Lev. 10:1. God restored the sacred fire by miracle. C. 1:18. &c. Pagans have had many superstitious customs with regard to fire. C.

Adde quod arcanâ fieri novus ignis in æde Dicitur et vires flamma reflecta capit. Ovid, Fast. iii.

—They obtained fire by means of a burning glass. C.—If the vestal suffered it to go out, she was scourged by the pontiff. Sextus.—Two, dating from the administration of Judas, and three since the temple was defiled. Usher, A. 3840.

Ver. 6. Manner, with the like ceremonies and solemnity. C.—Green branches might be procured in November and December, as those months in Palestine are as fine as our spring. Roger.

Ver. 7. Green. Gr. “beautiful;” probably the orange tree. Lev. 23:40. See diss. on mandrakes. C. H.

Ver. 8. Days. Beza allows that Christ complied. Jo. 10. It is wonderful then that Prot. should reject this book.

Ver. 9. Illustrious. Go to 1 B. 5:1. W.

Ver. 11. Appointed. So Lysias gave out. C. 9:29. He had been governor before the journey of Epiphanes. 1 B. 3:32.

Ver. 12. Macer, “lean.” Gr. makros, “tall.” See C. 4:45. and 8:8. Polybius styles him “a prudent and active man.” C.

Ver. 13. Revolted. So they interpreted (H.) his disapprobation of the cruelties exercised upon the Jews. C.—Gr. “had not yet any honourable place of power entrusted to him, being dispirited, he,” &c. H.—It is never a proof of fortitude, but of pusillanimity, to kill oneself to get rid of temporal misery. But it is very heroical to die willingly for God's glory.

Ver. 14. Gorgias, who had been defeated. 1 B. 4. W.—He was an experienced captain in Idumea, and the country south of Carmel. C.—Fought. Gr. “prolonged the war.” Grot.

Ver. 15. The Jews, &c. He speaks of them that had fallen from their religion, and were enemies of their country, who joining with the Idumeans or Edomites, kept possession of the strong holds, and from thence annoyed their countrymen. Ch.—Gr. and Syr. “Idumeans,” who appear in the sequel.

Ver. 18. Some; probably the sons of Bean. 1 B. 5:4.

Ver. 23. Holds; strong places, defended with towers. Some Judas burnt. C.

Ver. 24. Timotheus, who had been defeated (1 B. 8:30. W.) soon after Nicanor.

Ver. 26. Altar, between it and the porch. Joel 2:17.—Law. Ex. 23:22. Lev. 26:7. Deut. 7:15. C.

Ver. 32. Gazara, different from Gaza, which is so called elsewhere. M.—This Gazara was a fortress against the inroads of the Idumeans.—Chereas, brother of Timotheus. C.

Ver. 35. Men. Gorionides (3:13) says they were Assideans, mentioned before 1 B. 2:42 and 7:13. W.—Got. Gr. “slew every one they met.” H.

Ver. 36. After. Gr. “by a back way (H. undefended, περισπασμω. Grot.) to those within, burnt the towers, and kindling fires burnt the blasphemers alive. But these cut down the gates; and giving entrance to the rest of the army, took the city and killed Timotheus, who had hidden in a hole,” (H.) or cistern; λακκω. C.—Vulg. had perhaps lacu. Sa. M.

2 MACHABEES 11

Ver. 1. Cousin. He was of the blood royal and governor, (v. 22 and 1 B. 11:18) having supplanted Philip. C.—Lysias had been vanquished already. 1 B. 4:28. W. C.

Ver. 3. Temple, as of a farm, by selling offices and requiring money of those who offered victims. 1 B. 10:42. C.

Ver. 5. Narrow. Gr. "secure." Prot. "strong town."—Furlongs. Gr. "schoenus," (H.) 625 paces. Yet Eusebius and S. Jerom say it was twenty miles distant, towards Hebron, (Jos. 15:58) which seems more accurate. C.—Some figure may easily have been changed. H.

Ver. 6. Angel. Knowing that the patriarchs and Moses had often received such aid, the Machabees prayed that their good cause might be espoused by the angels; and their request was granted, though they were forced to co-operate. Sometimes God gave victory without the interference of men. Ex. 14 and 4 K. 19. W.

Ver. 8. Horseman, in appearance, but really (H.) an angel, as five came before. C. 10:29.

Ver. 17. Delivering; (Syr.) but Gr. has, "seeing the oracle subscribed, (or underwritten) made a petition concerning the things declared in it." H.—Kings' decrees were often styled oracles; and this might contain leave for Lysias to treat with the Jews, (Grot.) or the last injunction of Epiphanes, (C. 9:19) or the resolution of Judas. C.

Ver. 21. In the year one hundred and forty-eight; viz. according to the computation of the Greeks, which was different from that of the Hebrews, followed by the writer of the first book of Machabees. However by this date, as well as by other circumstances, it appears that the expedition of Lysias, mentioned in this chapter, is different from that recorded 1 Mac. 6:16. Ch.—Dioscorus. Syr. "the last of Tisri." Gr. "Jupiter of Corinth," which is more unintelligible. There was no month called Dioscorus among the Greeks. C.—It might be put for Dius, (Grot.) or Distrus, (Serar. T.) or it was an intercalary month, between March and April, (Salien) or the Macedonians had two names for some months. H.

Ver. 22. Brother. So he is styled for honour. v. 35. M.

Ver. 23. Gods. This impious custom began in the East, and was abolished by Christianity. C.—Epiphanes had affected to be a god, but at last saw his folly. C. 9. H.

Ver. 25. Restored. It was already occupied by the Jews, but they were much disturbed by the garrison. Now their rights are admitted.

Ver. 27. Senate. The constitution was aristocratical.

Ver. 29. Menelaus. He was at Antioch, and was reputed high priest, being established by the king. But the Jews would not receive him, having chosen Judas. C.

Ver. 30. Day, or for fifteen days. v. 33. M.

Ver. 31. Ignorance. He excuses them, and grants an amnesty. 1 B. 13:39. C.

Ver. 34. Romans. Others were sent soon after to burn the ships and maim the elephants, which Eupator had more than had been agreed upon. Usher, A. 3841.—They undertake to promote the welfare of their allies. Yet the peace was of short duration, and perhaps never ratified.

2 MACHABEES 12

Ver. 2. Timotheus and Apollonius. Others of the same name were slain before. C. 10:37. and 1 B. 3:11. W. C.

Ver. 8. Designed. The heart is the source of sin, and God thus punished the intentions of the Jamnites. H.

Ver. 9. Off, or ten leagues. Jerusalem was on elevated ground. C.—A furlong is about the eighth of a mile, (others say the fifth, or a thousand feet) so that the fire was seen at the distance of thirty or forty-eight miles. W.

Ver. 11. Rest. Gr. “the Nomades,” (H.) who dwelt in tents, and lived on plunder, (Strabo xvi.) like Ismael. Gen. 16:12.

Ver. 13. Casphin; Chasbon, or Hesebon. 1 B. 5:26. Num. 21:25. It was famous for its waters.

Ver. 14. Spoken. The enemy generally reviled the Jews.

Ver. 15. World. Thus setting a pattern to virtuous generals.

Ver. 17. Characa, or Carcar. Judg. 8:10 and 11:3. C.—Tubianites, “religiously good;” probably the Assideans, (1 B. 2:42. W.) or inhabitants of Tob. H.

Ver. 18. Things. The Jews had retired to Characa or Dathema, so that he ravaged the country and left garrisons, which were cut in pieces. Judas soon after with 6000 routed Timotheus, though he had 122,500 men. 1 B. 5:8. 37, 43.

Ver. 21. Carnion, or Asteroth Carnaim.

Ver. 24. Deceived. Gr. “if they slew him, would not be regarded,” (H.) but slain without mercy. C.

Ver. 26. Carnion. Gr. adds, “and the temple of Astergata,” (H.) the idol Astarte, or Derceto of the Philistines.

Ver. 29. Scythopolis. Formerly called Bethsan, (Ch.) near the lake of Tiberias.

Ver. 31. Weeks of Pentecost, celebrated seven weeks after the Passover. Lev. 23:15. C.

Ver. 32. Gorgias, who had been twice defeated. C. 10:14. and 1 B. 4:1. W.—Idumea. Grotius would read Jamnia. But he might govern the southern parts of Juda, (C.) then occupied by the Idumeans. H.

Ver. 35. Maresa. Syr. “Samaria,” as the Vulg. has. 1 B. 5:66.

Ver. 38. Place. Probably without the walls. Num. 19:2. 17 and 31:19.

Ver. 39. Following, on Saturday evening, or on Sunday.—Fathers, with those of the same nation.

Ver. 40. Of the donaries, &c. That is, of the votive offerings, which had been hung up in the temples of the idols, which they had taken away when they burnt the port of Jamnia, (v. 9.) contrary to the prohibition of the law. Deut. 7:25. Ch.—All such things should have been destroyed, (Jos. 7 and 1 K. 15. W.) or melted down. Perhaps the soldiers intended to bring them to Judas. He excused them charitably, and hoped that their temporal chastisement might have served to expiate their fault.

Ver. 42. Forgotten. Syr. “imperfect.” Gr. “effaced.” C.—Some copies, “that they might not, on account of the sin committed, be entirely blotted out.” Ald. Usher.—They were convinced that some sins might be forgiven in the other world, particularly when the living interceded. C.—The Jews began to pray for the dead after the captivity, (Grot.) when the prophets had more clearly explained what took place after death. C.—Yet the doctrine and practice might still be as ancient as the world. H.—If it had not prevailed before, Judas would never have entertained such sentiments. W.—The Jews admit a sort of purgatory for “the prevaricators of Israel,” which differs from hell only in duration. They assert that the damned of their nation are exempt from suffering on the sabbath. Bartolocci. Leo v. 10. T. E.—Some Christians have supposed that the sin here specified was mortal, and the deceased in hell, yet prayer might be of service to them. Origen (Prin. iii. 6.) thought that even the devils would one day be liberated. S. Augustine (Ench. cx. 29.) says prayers “are of service, either that the remission may be entire, or surely that damnation itself may be more tolerable.” Most understand this of purgatory: but several explain it of the damned. Rrot. Bened.—A mass was formerly composed for this purpose, tolerabilia fiant ipsa tormenta: and some monks prayed for certain robbers slain, “that their pains might be diminished by the severe judge.” Aldrev. xxi. Excommunication might be taken off from the deceased. S. Greg. Dial. ii. 29.—Purgatory is for venial sins. Ib. iv. 39. This doctrine is proved beyond reply by various controvertists. C.

Ver. 43. Twelve. Gr. “two.” Syr. “three.” S. Prosper. reads “12,000 talents.” Sacrifices for the dead were not enjoined, but the practice was then established, and this author take every opportunity of proving the resurrection against the Sadducees, who then began to appear. The Church of Christ has adopted the same practice. See Bellarm. Serar. &c. Our adversaries confess that such was the opinion of the Jews, and of the ancient doctors of the Church. But they declare it superstitious, and deny the authority of these books, which has been sufficiently established. Could such holy personages authorize superstition? Would Christ and his apostles have tolerated it? S. Paul prayed for Onesiphorus after his decease. 2 Tim. 1:16. See Mat. 12:33. Lu. 16:9 and 1 Cor. 3:13 and 15:29. Eus. Vita Const. iv. S. Epip. hæ. lxxv. S. Cyp. i. ep. 9. Tert. &c. C.

Ver. 45. With godliness. Judas hoped that these men who died fighting for the cause of God and religion, might find mercy; either because they might be excused from mortal sin by ignorance, or might have repented of their sin at least at their death. Ch.—Charity requires us to judge thus, when there are no positive proofs to the contrary. C.—Pope John VIII. answered the bishops of France, that those who died fighting against infidels were saved. Mabil. T. iii. An. Ben.—Judas might entertain the like hopes, though they are not always well grounded. H.

Ver. 46. Holy. This text is so clear, that our adversaries judge it best to deny the book to be canonical. As that has been authentically proved, (Pref.) we shall only add that the Greek version, though differing in many points, is here as express as the Vulg. (W.) 45. “considering that the best grace is laid up for those who sleep in piety. Holy and pious is the thought. (H.) Wherefore he made reconciliation (or expiation) for the dead, that they might be delivered from sin,” or punishment due to it. W.—Sin is often taken for the punishment; and this effect of mortal sin may be remitted in purgatory, when the person has sincerely repented in this life. H.—To pass over other proofs, we will only mention S. Aug. (hær. liii.) and S. Bernard, (Cant. lxvi.) who plainly account those “heretics,” who deny purgatory. It is also worthy of notice that Judas, who acted thus charitably, was the high priest and defender of the true faith; and that the Jews still pray for the dead, as the book Mahzor, published by Genebrard, 1569, evinces. There they say, “Let him rest in peace,” and “ye angels of peace come forth to meet him.” But this is acknowledged by Munster and Fagius, (in Deut. 14) and by Whitaker.—Sins. Go to 1 B. 6:18. W.

2 MACHABEES 13

Ver. 1. Eupator. Several of his generals had been already defeated. He therefore comes in person. 1 B. 6:28. C.—He was not above ten years old. But Lysias thought that his presence would animate the soldiers. H.

Ver. 2. A hundred and ten thousand, &c. The difference between the numbers here set down and those recorded 1 Mac. 4 is easily accounted for, if we consider that such armies as these are liable to be at one time more numerous than at another, either by sending away large detachments, or being diminished by sickness, or increased by receiving fresh supplies of troops, according to different exigencies or occurrences. Ch.—There are many such difficulties in the Books of Kings, &c. Only some of the troops were permanent. W.—Most were auxiliaries, so that the number might often vary. Nothing is said of the chariots. 1 B. 6:30.

Ver. 3. Country. He had continued at Antioch, as the Jews would not receive him. C. 4:24. C.—Yet now he pretended to be solicitous for their welfare, (H.) only that he might obtain power.

Ver. 4. Evils. The ambition of Jason and of Menelaus had brought on all these disturbances. C. 4:7. &c. and 1 B. 1:12.—Place. It would seem on the journey to Judea: but Josephus says he was slain after the king's return, at Antioch. The sacred historian relates what concerns him together. C.—In the. Gr. “conducting him to Berea.” H.

Ver. 5. Down. A beam was laid across the walls, on which the criminal, having been well regaled with wine, was placed till he fell among the ashes. V. Max. ix. 2.—Hystaspes invented this punishment. C.—Prospect. Gr. “organ, (or round instrument)” (Prot.) like a wheel, (C.) “hanging (or whirling a person) on all sides headlong over the ashes. Thence all pushed him who was guilty of sacrilege, or of other crimes, forward to ruin." H.—Syr. passes over v. 5 and 6. C.

Ver. 9. With. Gr. "rendered barbarous by his designs," (H.) intending to punish the Jews worse than his father.

Ver. 13. Ancients. The people were not convoked. C.

Ver. 15. Watchword that night. W.—He usually gave some pious sentence. C. 7:23.—Quarter. Lit. "hall," (H.) a prætorium, or tent.—Four. Some Gr. and Lat. copies have "two." Syr. "three," though the old edit. of the Vulg. read, 14,000.—Greatest, carrying thirty-two men. 1 B. 6:37. Gr. also, "the chief over the elephants, with all his troops in the house," (H.) or the servants. C.—Prot. "will all that were upon him." H.—This office was very considerable. C. 14:12. Grot. C.

Ver. 21. Prison. This traitor was either in the camp or at Bethsura. C.

Ver. 22. Away. Cæsar said in the same laconic style, Veni, vidi, vici. H.

Ver. 23. Overcome. Hence Eleazar signalized himself. 1 B. 6:43.—Rebelled. Lysias persuaded him to treat the just exertions of Philip in this light. He was himself the usurper of the regency. He easily persuaded the young prince that peace was now most expedient; and conditions were granted to the Jews, which would have been very advantageous if they had been observed. But the king having offered sacrifice by the hands of the priests, and seeing the strength of the wall round Sion, ordered them to be demolished. C.

Ver. 24. Gerrenians. Gerrus was on the frontiers of Egypt. Ptol.—It was formerly called Gerara. Gen. 20:1. The successors of Judas afterwards possessed this government. C.—Gr. "He made Hegemonides governor from," &c. Usher, A. 3841.

Ver. 25. Of the. They disliked a Jewish governor, being always bitter against that nation. C. 6:8. and 1 B. 5:15 and 12:48. C.—Gr. "they or he raged, because they would break the agreements" (H.) with the Jews, (C.) or would revolt. Syr. Grot.

2 MACHABEES 14

Ver. 1. But. Read 1 B. 7:1. W.—Years of Eupator's reign, or dating from the purification of the temple.—Demetrius, to whom the crown belonged. 1 B. 7:1.

Ver. 3. Priest, after Menelaus, (1 B. 7:5) but never recognized, as Judas was then pontiff. He had, moreover, voluntarily defiled himself during the times of persecution; or, according to most Gr. copies, (C.) when there was “no mixture” of Gentiles in the land to instigate him. H.—Though he was of Aaron’s stock, this apostacy rendered him ineligible; Mathathias was chosen, being also descended from Aaron, and more sincere in religion. W.

Ver. 4. Fifty, according to the Chaldee reckoning. C. 2:21. M.—Boughs; probably (H.) of gold, (W.) or adorned with leaves of that metal. People presented what they thought proper to the temple. The apostles admired these gifts, as well as the stones of the fabric. Lu. 21:5.

Ver. 6–11. Assideans: the most zealous defenders of the faith. Alcimus had slain sixty of them. 1 B. 7:12. 19. C.—This description, given by enemies through malice, serves to shew the zeal and sincerity of these people in promoting God’s law and virtue.—Him. See 1 B. 7:26. W.—Alcimus was guilty of much falsehood. He was not of the family to which the high priesthood belonged, and he had rendered himself unworthy of it. v. 3, 7.

Ver. 12. Nicanor; perhaps the same who had been defeated, C. 8:21. and 1 B. 4:8.

Ver. 13. Great temple. Such was the pagan’s idea of it. v. 31.

Ver. 14. Gentiles and apostate Jews. C.—Such people and politicians advanced themselves by pillaging the faithful. W.

Ver. 17. Coming. Gr. “silence,” (Bodwell) fearing some stratagem.

Ver. 20. Captain. Judas laid the proposals before all the people.

Ver. 24. From the heart; sincerely. C.—Gr. “he had Judas always in sight.” H.—His love was only apparent. T.—Yet this is contrary to the text, (H.) and to the common opinion.

Ver. 26. His successor, so as to keep Alcimus out of his office. C.

Ver. 29. The king. Nicanor was a worldly politician, like Pilate and other judges who have no zeal for religion, (W.) or for justice, being disposed to sacrifice all to their own interest. H.

Ver. 30. A few. Gr. and Syr. “not a few.” H.—Nicanor attacked him, and lost 5000 men. 1 B. 12:27. C.

Ver. 32. Knew not. This was true, and they would not seek for him (W.) if it had been required.

Ver. 33. Bacchus: a very suitable temple, when beaten to the ground! H.—He is styled Liber, and accounted the inventor of wine: hence drunkards dedicate temples to him. W.

Ver. 37. Jews. No crime could be laid to his charge, but his love for religion and his country.

Ver. 38. Had held. Gr. “when they were unmixed, had been judged for Judaism; (H.) or been brought to judgment for keeping others from idolatry. Syr. C.

Ver. 41. He struck himself, &c. S. Augustine (Epist. lxi. ad Dulcitium et lib. 2. cap. 23. ad Epist. 2. Gaud.) discussing this fact of Razias, says that the holy Scripture relates it, but doth not praise it, as to be admired or imitated, and that it was not well done by him, or at least not proper in this time of grace. Ch.—Whether he was thus inspired or not, we dare not decide. The Jews infer from the conduct of Samson, Saul, and Razias, that suicide is lawful when a person fears being overcome by torments, or giving occasion to other’s blasphemy. But Christianity lays down better maxims; (Rom. 3:8) and S. Aug. (c. Gaud. i. 31. and ep. 61 or 204) S. Thomas (ii. 2. q. 64. a. 5.) and others, disapprove of this action, observing that it is recorded and not praised, though other virtues of Razias be commended. C.—It was either not well done, or not to be imitated in this time of grace. S. Aug. ii. 23. contra ep. 2. Gaud. W.—Yet this holy doctor excuses Samson and some Christian virgins, by saying that they acted by the direction of the Holy Spirit. Sup. et de Civ Dei. i. 21. H. Lyran. Tirinius—This seems to be here the case, as the fact appears to be commended. M.

Ver. 44. Neck. Venit per medium cervicem.—In the Greek it is κενεωνα, which signifies a void place, where there is no building; (Ch. Grot.) and also “the belly,” which accounts for his not being killed on the spot. G.

2 MACHABEES 15

Ver. 1. But. Read here 1 B. 7:39. W.—Samaria. Arab. “Sebaste,” which is the same. Yet Judas was at Adarsa, in the tribe of Ephraim. C.—Sabbath. The profane take advantage of people’s tender consciences. But Judas being well-informed, fought on the sabbath. 1 B. 3:40.

Ver. 5. Earth. O Luciferian blasphemy! W.—He seems to place himself above the Lord of heaven. C.

Ver. 6. Public. Gr. “common trophy over all the men of Judas.” H.—Syr. “he fortified himself exceedingly.” A trophy consisted of the trunk of a tree hung round with arms.

Ver. 10. Oaths, of which Eupator had lately given an instance. Apollonius and the people of Joppe had acted perfidiously. C.

Ver. 11. Not with, not only, or so much with, &c. H.—Dream. He knew it was supernatural (C.) by God’s light, as S. Joseph did. Mat. 1:20. W.

Ver. 12. Onias III. who had been slain (C.) at Daphne. C. 4:34. H.—The Jewish and Christian Churches never doubted that the saints interceded in the other world for the living, in whose concerns they take part. C.—Prot. evade this text by denying the canonicity of the book. Yet the same is proved Gen. 48. Ex. 32. Jer. 15. Lu. 16. Apoc. 5:6. 8 and 2 Pet. 1 and we have a right to produce the authority of this book, as Origen, (18 in Jo.) S. Bern. (76 in Cant. & ser. 3. Nat. &c.) have done. Onias and Jeremias, in limbo, interested themselves for the faithful on earth, and no doubt the saints in glory will do as much. W.

Ver. 15. Gold, such as kings and chief officers of Persia used. C.—Jeremias (38:17) had formerly dissuaded war: now he encourages it; as it also has a time. Eccle. 3:8. W.

Ver. 17. Fight. Gr. “not to fortify the camp,” (C.) or “remain there:” (H.) μη στρατοπηδευσθαι. C.—Grabe reads στρατευεσθαι, “to act as soldiers.” H.—Syr. “not to trust in troops set in array, but to take courage, and to expose their lives, in this extremity, for their country and for the temple.”

Ver. 25. Songs. Gr. “pean,” sung in honour of Apollo. C.—Before battle his aid was thus invoked, and he was thanked with songs after a victory. Grot.

Ver. 27. Five. Josephus has only 30,000. Ant. xii. 17. C.—Presence. He had granted them victory. M.

Ver. 28. Armour, at the beginning of the battle. 1 B. 7:44.

Ver. 29. Language, composing a canticle in Heb. or using such as had been written (C.) by David, &c. H.

Ver. 30. Shoulder. Thus his bust was set up. But the right arm was hung over-against the temple. v. 33 and 1 B. 7:47. C.

Ver. 34. Blessed. Gr. “raising their voices, (M.) or looking towards heaven, praised the Lord, who had made himself manifest:” ἐπὶ φωνῇ κυρίου. H.

Ver. 37. Adar; our February and March. The 13th was the feast, “of lots.” Est. 9:23. C.

Ver. 38. So. Read 1 B. 8:1 where more on this subject is written. After other persecutors were overcome, the land was at rest, and the author adds this general conclusion. W.

Ver. 39. So. Gr. “if in a frugal and middling style, this is as well as I was able.” H.—Perfectly. This is not said with regard to the truth of the narration, but with regard to the style and manner of writing, which in the sacred penmen is not always the most accurate. See S. Paul, 2 Cor. 11:6. Ch.—The style was frequently left to their choice. H.—Inspiration did not exclude natural acquirements. C.—The author is not afraid of having said any thing erroneous, though he might be less polished, like S. Paul: imperitus sermone sed non scientia. But we, having now come to the end of the Old Testament, must crave pardon for any mistakes into which we may have fallen, in the execution of this work, which is dedicated to the English (W.) and to all his majesty’s Catholic subjects, for whose benefit chiefly and for the sake of religion it has been undertaken. The many things hard to understood, which we did not wish to pass over, have swelled this work to a larger volume than was at first intended; larger, perhaps, than the purses of the poor and middle ranks, in the late hard times, could bear. But now the prospect is more cheering; and it is hoped that this profusion on a subject of such vast importance will be pardoned, particularly as we had also to comply with the desires of the more affluent, who repeatedly requested that the notes might be rather “more ample.” As they that prepare a feast, and seek to satisfy the will of others, so we, for the sake of many, willingly undergo the labour. C. 2:28. The variety of matter and of style may well be compared to a mixture of wine and water. v. 40. Yet our aim has not been merely to please, but rather to counteract the baneful influences of heresy and infidelity. T. Paine (Age of Reason, part 2nd) having touched upon a few difficulties in some of the books of Scripture, says exultingly: “I have gone through the Bible as a man would go through a wood, with an axe on his shoulders, and fell trees; here they lie, and the priests, if they can, may replant them. They may perhaps stick them in the ground, but they will never grow.” Yes, they will grow, and brave the fury of tempests, because they have been planted not by priest, but by the hand of God. The Scriptures and the Church will stand and support each other till time shall be no more. The true faith has been preserved from Adam through all succeeding generations, and antichrist himself will not be able to destroy it. My WORD shall not pass away, says our divine Master. As we have repeatedly proved this assertion in the foregoing notes, which are already perhaps too copious, we shall refer the more inquisitive reader to the remarks of Dr. Worthington on the six ages, in the Douay Bible.

Ver. 40. Always. Gr. “only.” H.—Readers delight in variety. A middle style is adopted. C.—But. Gr. “But as wine mixed with water is pleasant, and affords delight, so the preparation (or style) of a discourse pleases the ears of those who read what is collected. But here shall be an end.” H.

N.B. The Third and Fourth Book of Machabees, as also the Third and Fourth Book of Esdras, (which some call the First and Second of Esdras) and the Prayer of Manasses, are here omitted, because they have never been received by the Church. Ch.

HAYDOCK CATHOLIC BIBLE COMMENTARY (New Testament)

This Catholic commentary on the New Testament, following the Douay-Rheims Bible text, was originally compiled by Catholic priest and biblical scholar Rev. George Leo Haydock (1774–1849). This transcription is based on Haydock’s notes as they appear in the 1859 edition of Haydock’s Catholic Family Bible and Commentary printed by Edward Dunigan and Brother, New York, New York.

MATTHEW

THE

HOLY GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST,

ACCORDING TO S. MATTHEW

INTRODUCTION

This and other titles, with the names of those that wrote the Gospels, are not the words of the Evangelists themselves. The Scripture itself nowhere teacheth us, which books or writings are to be received as true and canonical Scriptures. It is only by the channel of unwritten traditions, and by the testimony and authority of the Catholic Church, that we know and believe that this gospel, for example of S. Matthew, with all contained in it, and that the other books and parts of the Old or New Testament, are of divine authority, or written by divine inspiration; which made S. Augustine say, I should not believe the gospel, were I not moved thereunto by the authority of the Catholic Church:

Ego evangelio non crederem, nisi me Ecclesiæ Catholicæ commoveret auctoritas. Lib. con. Epist. Manichæi, quam vocant fundamenti. tom. viii. c. 5, p. 154. A. Ed. Ben. Wi.

S. Matthew, author of the gospel that we have under his name, was a Galilean, the son of Alpheus, a Jew, and a tax-gatherer; he was known also by the name of Levi. His vocation happened in the second year of the public ministry of Christ; who, soon after forming the college of his apostles, adopted him into that holy family of the spiritual princes and founders of his Church. Before his departure from Judea, to preach the gospel to distant countries, he yielded to the solicitations of the faithful; and about the eighth year after our Saviour's resurrection, the forty-first of the vulgar era, he began to write his gospel: i.e., the good tidings of salvation to man, through Christ Jesus, our Lord. Of the hagiographers, S. Matthew was the first in the New, as Moses was the first in the Old Testament. And as Moses opened his work with the generation of the heavens and the earth, so S. Matthew begins with the generation of Him, who, in the fulness of time, took upon himself our human nature, to free us from the curse we had brought upon ourselves, and under which the whole creation was groaning. A.—This holy apostle, after having reaped a great harvest of souls in Judea, preached the faith to the barbarous nations of the East. He was much devoted to heavenly contemplation, and led an austere life; for he eat no flesh, satisfying nature with herbs, roots, seeds, and berries, as Clement of Alexandria assures us, Pædag. l. ii. c. 1. S. Ambrose says, that God opened to him the country of the Persians. Rufinus and Socrates tell us, that he carried the gospel into Ethiopia, meaning probably the southern or eastern parts of Asia. S. Paulinus informs us, that he ended his course in Parthia; and Venantius Fortunatus says, by martyrdom.—See Butler's Saints' Lives, Sept. 21st.

MATTHEW 1

Ver. 1. The first English Testament, divided into verses, was that printed at Geneva, by Conrad Badius, in the year 1557. A.—“The book of the Generation,” is not referred to the whole gospel, but to the beginning, as in Gen. 5. “This is the book of the generation of Adam.” E.—The book of the ^[1] Generation, i.e. the genealogy or pedigree, which is here set down in the first sixteen verses. In the style of the Scriptures any short schedule or roll is called a book, as the bill or short writing of a divorce, is called a little book. Matt. 5:31. Wi.—Jesus, in Hebrew Jesuah, is the proper name of Him, who was born of the Virgin Mary, who was also the Son of God, “a name given by the angel before he was conceived in the womb.” Luke 2. It signifies Saviour, “because he was to save his people from their sins.” He was also called Christ, which signifies anointed; for though in the Old Testament kings, priests, and prophets were anointed, and though many were then designated by the name of Jesus, properly, and by an invariable custom of the New Testament, that person is exclusively signified, who, on account of the union of the divine and human nature, was anointed by the Holy Ghost above all his fellows. Ps. 44 and Heb. 1:9. Whence in this turn the hypostasis is understood, in which the two natures, the divine and human, meet. E.

Ver. 2. He begins with Abraham, the father of the faithful, because to him the promise was made, that all generations should be blessed in his seed. Theophylactus.

Ver. 3. See Gen. 38, v. 6 & dein. and Zara of Thamar, her daughter-in-law. A.

Ver. 5. See Josue. c. 2 & dein. We nowhere else find the marriage of Salmon with Rahab; but this event might have been known by tradition, the truth of which the divinely inspired evangelist here confirms. Bible de Vence. Rahab was a debauched woman, preserved in the pillage of Jericho, where she had been born. In this genealogy only four women are mentioned, of which two are Gentiles, and two adulteresses. Here the greatest sinners may find grounds for confidence in the mercies of Jesus Christ, and hopes of pardon, when they observed how the Lord of life and glory, to cure our pride, not only humbled himself by taking upon himself the likeness of sinful flesh, but by deriving his descent from sinners, and inspiring the holy evangelist to record the same to all posterity. A.

Ver. 6. Extract from S. Chrysostom's first Homil. upon the first chapter of S. Matthew: "How, you say, does it appear that Christ descended from David? For if he be born not of man, but of a virgin, concerning whose genealogy nothing is said, how shall we know that he is of the family of David? We have here two difficulties to explain. Why is the genealogy of the Virgin passed over in silence, and why is Joseph's mentioned, as Christ did not descend from him?... How shall we know that the Virgin is descended from David? Hear the words of the Almighty addressed to the archangel Gabriel: 'Go to a virgin espoused to a man, whose name is Joseph, of the house and family of David.' What could you wish plainer that this, when you hear that the Virgin is of the family of David? Hence it also appears that Joseph was of the same house, for there was a law which commanded them not to marry any one but of the same tribe.... But whether these words, of the house and family of David, be applied to the Virgin or to Joseph, the argument is equally strong. For if he was of the family of David, he did not take a wife but out of the same tribe, from which he had descended. Perhaps you will say he transgressed this law. But the evangelist has prevented such a suspicion, by testifying beforehand that Joseph was a just man. Beware how you attach crime to him, whose virtue is thus publicly acknowledged.... It was not the custom among the Hebrews to keep the genealogies of women. The evangelist conformed to this custom, that he might not at the very beginning of the gospel offend by transgressing ancient rites, and introducing novelty."

Ver. 8. Joram begot Ozias, three generations are omitted, as we find 2 Paralip. 22; for there, Joram begot Ochozias, and Ochozias begot Joas, and Joas begot Amazias, and Amazias begot Ozias. This omission is not material, the design of S. Matthew being only to shew the Jews that Jesus, their Messiah, was of the family of David; and he is equally the son, or the descendent of David, though the said three generations be left out: for Ozias may be called the son of Joram, though Joram was his great-grandfather. Wi.—It is thought that S. Matt. omitted these three kings, Ochozias, Joas, and Amazias, to preserve the distribution of his genealogy into three parts, each of fourteen generations; and, perhaps, also on account of their impiety, or rather on account of the sentence pronounced against the house of Achab, from which they were descended by their mother Athalia. 3 Kings 21:21. C.

Ver. 11. Josias begot ^[2] Jechonias, &c. The genealogy of Christ, as it appears by the 17th verse, is divided by the evangelist into thrice fourteen generations, and so it is to contain 42 persons. The first class of fourteen begins with Abraham, and ends with David. The second class begins with Solomon, and ends with Jechonias. The third class is supposed to begin with Salathiel, and to end, says S. Jerom, with our Saviour Christ. But thus we shall only find in the third class thirteen generations, and in all only forty-one, instead of forty-two. Not to mention in these short notes other interpretations, the conjecture of S. Epiphanius seems the most probable, that we are to understand two Jechonias's, the father and the son, who had the same name. So that the true reading should be, Josias begot Jechonias and his brethren, and Jechonias begot Jechonias, and Jechonias begot Salathiel. Thus Jechonias named in the 12th verse is not the same, but the son of him that was named in the 11th verse; and from Jechonias the son, begins the third class, and so Christ himself will be the last or 14th person in that last series or class. There are several difficulties about reconciling this genealogy in S. Matthew with that in S. Luke, c. 3. But without insisting on all the particulars in these short notes, I hope it may suffice to take notice, that no one can reasonably doubt but that both the evangelists copied out the genealogical tables, as they were then extant, and carefully preserved by the Jews, and especially by those families that were of the tribe of Juda, and of the family of David, of which the Messiah was to be born. For if the evangelists had either falsified, or made any mistake as to these genealogies, the Jews undoubtedly would have objected this against their gospels, which they never did. Wi.—The difficulties here are: 1. Why does S. Matt. give the genealogy of Joseph and not of Mary? 2. How is it inferred that Jesus is descended from David and Solomon, because Joseph is the son of David? 3. How can Joseph have two men for his father, Jacob of the race of Solomon, and Heli of the race of Nathan? To the 1st it is generally answered, that it was not customary with the Jews to draw out the genealogies of women; to the 2nd, that Jesus being the son of Joseph, either by adoption, or simply as the son of Mary his wife, he entered by that circumstance into all the rights of the family of Joseph; moreover, Mary was of the same tribe and family of Joseph, and thus the heir of the branch of Solomon marrying with the heiress of the branch of Nathan, the rights of the two families united in Joseph and Mary, were transmitted through them to Jesus, their son and heir; to the 3rd, that Jacob was the father of Joseph according to nature, and Heli his father according to law; or that Joseph was the son of the latter by adoption, and of the former by nature. A.—In the transmigration, ^[3] or transportation to Babylon; i.e. about the time the Jews were carried away captives to Babylon. For Josias died before their transportation. See 4 K. 24. Wi.—Some think we are to read: Josias begot Joakim and his brethren; and Joakim begot Joachim, or Jechonias. Jechonias was son to Joakim, and grandson to Josias. The brothers of Jechonias are not known, but those of Joakim are known. 1 Par. 3:15, 16. Besides this reading gives the number 14. A.—S.

Jerom says that Jechonias, the son of Josias, is a different person from Jechonias who begot Salathiel, for the latter was son of the former; see Paralip. 3. where it is said that Zorobabel was son of Phadaia; but Phadaia is the same as Salatheil. E.—Mat. Polus affirms that every one the least conversant in Jewish story, must know that several genealogies which appear to contradict each other, do not in reality. Synop. Crit. v. 4, p. 12.

Ver. 12. By the text of the first book of Paral. 3:17, 19 it appears that Zorobabel was grandson to Salathiel. In comparing the present genealogy with that of S. Luke, (C. 3) we find that in this last part S. Matthew has suppressed many generations, to bring the list to the number 14; for there are a greater number from Zorobabel to Jesus Christ in S. Luke, but in a different branch. V.—The evangelist was well aware that the suppressed names could be easily supplied from the Jewish records; and that every person could reply most satisfactorily to any objection on that head, who was the least acquainted with the Jewish tables. In the first fourteen of these generations, we see the family of David rising to the throne; in the second, a race of kings descending from him; in the last, the royal family descending to a poor carpenter. Yet, when every human appearance of restoring the kingdom to David's house was at an end, Jesus arose to sit on his father's throne, (Luke 1:32) and of his kingdom there shall be no end. A.

Ver. 16. The husband of Mary. The evangelist gives us rather the pedigree of S. Joseph, than that of the blessed Virgin, to conform to the custom of the Hebrews, who in their genealogies took no notice of women: but as they were near akin, the pedigree of the one sheweth that of the other. Ch.—Joseph the husband of Mary. ^[4] So he is again called, v. 19: but in v. 18, we read, when Mary his mother was espoused to Joseph. These different expressions of being husband, and being espoused, have occasioned different interpretations. Some think that Joseph and the blessed Virgin were truly married at the time of Christ's conception: others, that they were only then espoused, or engaged by a promise to marry afterwards. S. Jerom says, when you hear the name of husband, do not from thence imagine them to be married, but remember the custom of the Scriptures, according to which, they who are espoused only, are called husbands and wives. Wi.—That Jesus, who is called Christ, was of the seed of David, is also evident, as S. Augustine affirms from various texts of the holy Scriptures, as in the epistle to the Romans, where S. Paul, (c. 1) speaking of the Son of God, says, who was made to Him of the seed of David, according to the flesh. See also the promises made to David, 2 K. 7 Ps. 88 and 131 and spoken of Solomon, as a figure of Jesus Christ. E.

Ver. 18. The account of the birth of Jesus Christ follows his genealogy. From these words, “before they came together,” Helvidius and others have started objections, which have been answered long ago by S. Jerom, where he shews in many examples from Scripture, that the words before and until do not signify what happened afterwards; for that point is left indefinite, but only what was done before, or not done. Thus when it is said, Sit thou at my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool, Ps. 109, by no means signifies, that after the subjection of his enemies, the Son of God is no longer to sit at the right hand of his Father. In common conversation, when we say that a man died before he reached his 30th year, we do not mean that he afterwards attained it. Or, should we say that Helvidius died before he did penance, we cannot mean that he afterwards did penance: the same conclusion should be deduced from the words, “before they came together,” the end being accomplished by the power of the operation of the Holy Ghost, without their going together. If we should advance, that such a man was cured before he went to a physician, the natural inference would be, that he did not go to a physician at all. Thus also in the language of Scripture, the word first-begotten does not mean after whom others were born, but before whom no one was born, whether there were further issue or not. And the reason is, because the law required that a sacrifice should be offered for the first-born, and that he should be redeemed very soon after his birth; nor did it allow the parents to wait and see if any other son should be born. E.—True and perfect marriage, and continual living in the same, without knowing each other. S. Aug. l. ii. Consen. Evang. c. i. B.

Ver. 19. And Joseph her husband, knowing her strict virtue, was surprised at this her pregnancy, but “being a just man,” and not willing to expose her, by denouncing her, or giving her a bill of divorce, he had a mind to dismiss her privately, committing the whole cause to God. Let us learn from Joseph to be ever tender of our neighbour’s reputation, and never to entertain any injurious thoughts, or any suspicions to his prejudice. A.

Ver. 20. Fear not to take, &c. i.e., fear not to marry her, if we suppose them not yet married, or if married already, the sense is, fear not to keep and remain with thy chaste wife; lay aside all thoughts of dismissing and leaving her. Wi.—As the incarnation of the Son of God was effected by the whole blessed Trinity, it may be asked why this operation is peculiarly attributed to the Holy Ghost, not only here, but in Luke 2, and in the apostles’ creed? The answer is, because as power is attributed to the Father, wisdom to the Son, so goodness is attributed to the Holy Ghost, and the gifts of grace which proceed from it. Estius in diff. loca.

Ver. 21. Jesus ... he shall save, &c. The characteristic name of Saviour was peculiar to the Messias, by which he was distinguished, as well as by the adorable name of Jesus. The expectations of both Jew and Gentile looked forward to a saviour. S. Augustine, in the 18th book, 23d chapter, de Civitate Dei, introduces a curious anecdote. He mentions there, that he received from the eloquent and learned Proconsul Flactianus, a book containing in Greek the verses of one of the Sybils, which related to the coming of Christ. The substance of them is much the same as occurs in the prophecies of Isaiah, from which Virgil has likewise copied into his Pollio, many of the sublime thoughts which we find in that beautiful eclogue. It is remarkable that of the initials of these verses, S. Augustine had formed an acrostic to the following import, Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς Θεοῦ υἱὸς σωτῆρ; that is, Jesus Christ, the Son of God, Saviour. A.

Ver. 22. The Greeks in general, after S. John Chrysostom, look upon this as a continuation of the angel's speech to S. Joseph. The other Fathers and commentators think it a reflection of the evangelist.

Ver. 23. Behold a virgin, ^[5] &c. The Jews sometimes objected, as we see in S. Justin's dialogue with Tryphon, that the Hebrew word alma, in the prophet Isaías, signified no more than a young woman. But S. Jerom tells us that alma signifies a virgin kept close up. Let the Jews, says he, shew me any place in which the Hebrew word alma, is applied to any one that is not a virgin, and I will own my ignorance. Besides the very circumstances in the text of the prophet, are more than a sufficient confutation of this Jewish exposition; for there a sign, or miracle, is promised to Achaz; and what miracle would it be for a young woman to have a child, when she had ceased to be a virgin? Wi.—How happens it that nowhere in the gospels, or in any other part, do we find Christ called Emmanuel? I answer, that in the Greek expression the name is given for the thing signified; and the meaning is: He shall be a true Emmanuel, i.e. a God with us, true God and true man. E.—The text says, they shall call, i.e. all men shall look upon Him as an Emmanuel. Again, his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty, the Prince of peace, &c. i.e. He shall be all these, not so much nominally, as really and in effect. A.

Ver. 24. The heretic Helvidius argues from this text, and from what we read in the gospel of Christ's brethren, that Christ had brothers, and Mary other sons. But it is evident that in the style of the Scriptures, they who were no more than cousins were called brothers and sisters. 18.—S. Jerom assures us, that S. Joseph always preserved his virginal chastity. It is "of faith" that nothing contrary thereto ever took place with his chaste spouse, the blessed Virgin Mary. S. Joseph was given her by heaven to be the protector of her chastity, to secure her from calumnies in the birth of the Son of God, to assist her in her flight into Egypt, &c. &c. We cannot sufficiently admire the modest reserve of both parties. Mary does not venture to explain to her troubled husband the mystery of her pregnancy; and Joseph is afraid of mentioning his uneasiness and doubts, for fear of troubling her delicate mind and wounding her exquisite feelings. So great modesty, reserve and silence, are sure to be approved by heaven; and God sends an angel to Joseph in his sleep, to dissipate his doubts, and to expound to him the mystery of the incarnation. A.
